During the three months following her retirement, Commissioner Dobbs completed none of these cases. The court eventually retrieved all of the files she had taken home. Several judicial officers were required to review and complete Commissioner Dobb's undecided cases. Mistrials were declared in at least 15 cases. Some cases were decided based upon the reporter's transcript of previous proceedings before Commissioner Dobbs; however, a number of cases had to be retried.

In the commission's view, Judge Schnider's failure to properly discharge his duty to supervise Commissioner Dobbs resulted in significant financial and emotional harm to family law litigants and seriously undermined the integrity of the judiciary. Delays in family law matters can be particularly prejudicial to the parties. The commission concludes that Judge Schnider was seriously derelict in discharging his duty to supervise Commissioner Dobbs and demonstrated a disregard for the concerns of litigants who complained about their delayed cases.

The vote of the commission for the imposition of a public admonishment was 9 ayes and 2 noes. Commission members Hon. Judith D. McConnell, Mr. Peter E. Flores, Mr. Marshall B. Grossman, Mr. Samuel A. Hardage, Hon. Frederick P. Horn, Ms. Barbara Schraeger, Ms. Maya Dillard Smith, Ms. Sandra Talcott and Mr. Nathaniel Trives voted for a public admonishment. Commission members Hon. Katherine Feinstein and Mr. Lawrence Simi voted against imposing a public admonishment and would have imposed a private admonishment.

PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE ROBERT C. COATES

The Commission on Judicial Performance has ordered Judge Robert C. Coates publicly admonished pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution and commission rule 115, as set forth in the following statement of facts and reasons found by the commission:

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

Judge Coates has been a judge of the San Diego County Superior Court since 1982. His current term began in January 2005.

Judge Coates has persisted in a pattern of abuse of the prestige of his judicial office and misuse of court resources in connection with personal and non-court matters, notwithstanding his prior discipline by the commission for similar conduct, notwithstanding direction from his presiding judges that he cease such conduct, and notwithstanding advice he received from the California Judges Association (CJA) Ethics Committee to avoid such conduct. His conduct reflects a repeated refusal to comply with canon 2B(2), which prohibits judges from using the prestige of judicial office to advance the personal or pecuniary interests of the judge or others. Judge Coates' recalcitrance manifests indifference towards the erosion of public confidence in the judiciary that results from irresponsible behavior by judges. This repeated ethical indifference warrants another public rebuke.

I. Judge Coates' Prior Discipline and Guidance

In 2000, Judge Coates received a public admonishment addressing multiple acts of misconduct. The admonishment recounted that from 1993 to 1998, Judge Coates engaged in a pattern of abuse of the prestige of judicial office and misuse of court resources in connection with personal matters. The commission found that the judge's extensive use of court secretaries and other court resources to prepare more than 100 personal documents was inconsistent with canon 2A of the California Code of Judicial Ethics, which requires judges to act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary.

In addition, Judge Coates received an advisory letter in 2000 regarding his use of court resources to prepare and send documents, many on court letterhead, connected to the judge's personal involvement in civic activities. The commission emphasized that the judge's involvement with such civic activities was not improper but the judge's extensive use of court resources in connection with these activities was improper.

In 2005, Judge John Einhorn, then Presiding Judge of the San Diego County Superior Court, requested that Judge Coates stop using the court's fax machine, employees and time to receive and/or send personal, non-court related material. Judge Coates responded that he would purchase a facsimile machine for use at home, sending personal items to his personal secretary. In 2006, Judge Janis Sammartino, then Presiding Judge, advised Judge Coates that court computers should be used only to conduct court business and all communications should promote public confidence in the impartiality of the judiciary; and that a communication he had sent could be seen as an inappropriate endorsement. Judge Coates responded that he was "heartily sorry" and that he would be "much more careful." In 2008, Assistant Presiding Judge Kevin A. Enright met with Judge Coates regarding his use of court email. Judge Coates stated to Judge Enright that he was not aware that he had done anything wrong but that he then understood.

In his correspondence to the commission in this matter, Judge Coates stated that he has asked the CJA Ethics Committee for opinions several times each year to avoid problems with improper use of court resources. The commission requested that Judge Coates provide copies of these opinions. The documents provided by Judge Coates show that while he was advised that minimal use of court resources for personal purposes under normal circumstances might be considered permissible, the judge was repeatedly advised that as he was being carefully scrutinized by his presiding judge he should avoid the use of court resources for anything other than strict judicial business.

II. Judge Coates' Abuse of the Prestige of Judicial Office and Misuse of Court Resources

Notwithstanding his prior discipline, counseling, and warnings from his presiding judges and cautionary advice from the judges' association, Judge Coates abused the prestige of office and misused court resources as follows:

A. Personal Letters to Health Insurance Company and Financial Institution

On May 28, 2007, Judge Coates wrote a note to his judicial secretary asking her to type a letter he had handwritten and send it via facsimile to his health insurance company. The judge's two-page letter, supported by 14 pages of attachments, sought the company's approval of a medical procedure he had scheduled, and addressed his personal medical condition. His secretary prepared the letter, using plain paper and home address as directed, and sent it via facsimile on May 29, 2007.

On or about July 9, 2008, Judge Coates had his judicial secretary prepare and send a letter on judicial stationery (in addition to indicating it was from the Superior Court of the State of California, San Diego, the letter was from the "Chambers of Robert C. Coates"), as "Judge of the Superior Court," to the judge's financial institution, complaining of long wait times he had experienced when attempting to call to determine why a wire transfer he was expecting had not been deposited into his account.

These letters involved the misuse of court resources for personal purposes in violation of canon 2A. The judge's letter to his financial institution, which was on court letterhead and refers to the judge by his judicial title, was also in violation of canon 2B(2), which prohibits judges from lending the prestige of their judicial office to advance the pecuniary or personal interests of the judge or others.

B. Memorandum to Undersheriff

On November 21, 2008, Judge Coates sent an email to his judicial secretary stating that "I'd like you to do, TODAY a Memo to our SD Co. Undersheriff, [Bill] Gore," and providing the text of that memorandum. The judge's email directed that the signature block for the memorandum should be as follows: "ROBERT C. COATES, Judge." The judge's secretary prepared and sent the memorandum via facsimile to William Gore, Undersheriff of the San Diego County Sheriff's Department. The judge's memorandum, prepared on court stationery, addressed his concerns regarding the field training of the judge's former courtroom bailiff, who the judge stated "served me as my Departmental Bailiff, for over a year," and "left here to follow his dream of serving 'in the field', but, as you see, this dream is about to be dashed." The judge stated in his memorandum that, "given a good chance," the deputy "will make a superb field Deputy," and "just maybe, this is the occasion for you to take a harder look at what has gone on, and what might be going on, in your training function." The memorandum was signed "Robert C. Coates, Judge of the Superior Court," and provided the judge's chambers phone number. Judge Coates attached to his memorandum email correspondence from another deputy sheriff related to the issue. The memorandum was sent under a San Diego County Superior Court facsimile cover sheet, indicating that the facsimile was from "Judge Coates."

Judge Coates contends that he was merely providing a letter of recommendation, permitted activity under canon 2B(2)(e). However, such recommendations must be based on a judge's personal knowledge. The judge's memorandum went beyond expressing the judge's personal observations as to his former bailiff's qualifications, as the memorandum suggested that there were problems with the sheriff department's training function and incorporated into the memorandum attached emails from another deputy sheriff expressing that deputy's views. In addition, the judge's memorandum was not written in connection with a job application, but evidently in connection with the sheriff department's decision as to whether to keep the former bailiff in the field training program.

C. Letter From Judge Coates as President of an Organization with Court Address and Title

On or about December 10, 2008, Judge Coates sent a letter regarding global warming and climate change on plain paper to the director of a non-governmental organization. The judge described himself in the letter as President of Understanding Climate Change, Ltd., "a Project of the Mission Valley Rotary Club." The address provided in the letter for Understanding Climate Change is "220 W. Broadway, Dept. 45," Judge Coates' department in the San Diego County Superior Court. Below his title as President of Understanding Climate Change appeared his judicial title, "Judge, San Diego Superior Court," and his chambers telephone number.

Judge Coates contends this letter was most likely prepared by his personal secretary, that he has no recollection of instructing his personal secretary to insert the address of the court, and that he does not recall noticing that the court address had been used. However, the judge signed this letter and directed his judicial secretary to send it via facsimile. Judge Coates' use of the court as the address for the judge's project makes it appear that the judge is using his court as the office for a private organization, and the use of the judge's title in the letter gives the appearance that the judge is lending the prestige of his office to advance the personal interests of others.

Judge Coates' conduct described above evidences a serious disregard of the principles of conduct embodied in the California Code of Judicial Ethics, including improper lending of the prestige of his judicial office and using his judicial title to advance his and others' pecuniary or personal interests (canon 2B(2)); and a failure to act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary (canon 2A). Judge Coates' conduct was, at a minimum, improper action pursuant to article VI, section 18(d)(3) of the California Constitution.

In determining that a public admonishment was appropriate, the commission noted that Judge Coates has been the subject of prior discipline, including his related 2000 public admonishment and advisory letter, discussed above. The judge's 2000 public admonishment for similar conduct also addressed Judge Coates' pattern of demeaning and discourteous conduct toward court staff and persons appearing before him, in violation of canon 3B(4). The commission found that such conduct was exemplified by five incidents. In one such incident, Judge Coates yelled at a court administrative analyst, who had not yet forwarded the judge's materials to a state assemblyman because the analyst thought that the proper procedure was to meet first with the presiding judge and chair of a court committee. Judge Coates made statements to the effect of "[y]ou haven't done a goddamned thing for this court and cannot analyze legislation," "I'm going to get this in your personnel file," and "[l]et me tell you what another judge said to me about you. You are a piece of shit." The judge's prior discipline also includes an advisory letter he received in 1988 for shouting and screaming at a litigant in a TRO proceeding, and a private admonishment he received in 1991 for sentencing a defendant on a speeding case based on his subjective diagnosis that the defendant was "addicted to something," and for calling a "hearing" and requiring the attendance of several attorneys to inquire into the operation of the Alternate Defender's Office.

Commission members Hon. Judith D. McConnell, Hon. Katherine Feinstein, Hon. Frederick P. Horn, Mr. Marshall B. Grossman, Ms. Barbara Schraeger, Mr. Lawrence J. Simi, Ms. Sandra Talcott and Mr. Nathaniel Trives voted to impose a public admonishment. Commission members Mr. Peter E. Flores, Mr. Samuel A. Hardage and Ms. Maya Dillard Smith did not participate.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA

| IN THE MATTER CONCERNING JUDGE ANTHONY C. EDWARDS | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT |
|---|---|

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge Anthony C. Edwards, a judge of the Trinity County Superior Court. Judge Edwards and his attorneys, Joseph P. McMonigle and Kathleen M. Ewins, appeared before the commission on March 18, 2010, to contest the imposition of a public admonishment, pursuant to rule 116 of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance. Having considered the written and oral objections and argument submitted by Judge Edwards and his counsel, and good cause appearing, the Commission on Judicial Performance issues this public admonishment pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution, based on the following statement of facts and reasons.

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

Judge Edwards has been a judge of the Trinity County Superior Court since 1998. His current term began in January 2007. Judge Edwards was elected as a justice court judge in Trinity County in 1994; he took the bench in January 1995 as a municipal court judge, pursuant to a constitutional amendment converting justice courts to municipal courts.

The matters addressed here concern acting while disqualified (Floris, Castellanos), improper dismissal (Brown, Dunn), decisional delay, the staffing of the Hayfork court, a discourteous comment regarding the Office of the District Attorney, and courtroom decorum.

1. People v. Floris, No. 08F032

On March 19, 2008, defendant Corrie Floris was charged with a felony violation of Penal Code section 245(a)(1) (assault with a deadly weapon) for stabbing her boyfriend on March 12, 2008. Judge Edwards and his wife Cynthia Edwards, an attorney, have a personal relationship with defendant Floris and her family. Her parents are longtime Weaverville residents, her grandfather is a priest at the church Judge Edwards and his wife attend, and the judge and his wife are the godparents of Floris's child.

Shortly after the March 12 incident for which she was charged, defendant Floris arrived at the judge's house as he was leaving for work. She looked like she had been involved in a physical altercation. The judge escorted her inside to his wife and went to work. Later that day, the sheriff called Mrs. Edwards and told her that Floris's boyfriend was in the hospital with a knife wound. Mrs. Edwards advised the sheriff that Floris was at her house. Mrs. Edwards subsequently drove Floris to Redding and checked her into a motel. Floris later left the area.

On March 20, 2008, Judge Edwards and Judge Woodward, the other Trinity County Superior Court judge, signed separate minute orders recusing themselves from the Floris case. The minute order as to Judge Edwards states that the recusal was based on "his acquaintanceship with the parties and counsel for defendant," by which he was referring to his wife.

Defendant Floris was arrested in Riverside County on April 3, 2008. She was transported to the Trinity County jail on the afternoon of April 9, 2008.

On April 10, 2008, defendant Floris appeared before Judge Edwards in custody for arraignment. The judge's wife was present. She stood-up when Floris's case was called. Judge Edwards asked his wife what should be done next, or words to that effect. Mrs. Edwards replied that Floris should have the public defender. Judge

Edwards then arraigned Floris, appointed the public defender (who was present), set bail and set the matter for bail review and preliminary hearing on April 18.

As Judge Edwards walked out of the courtroom after arraigning defendant Floris, he walked by the jury box where she was sitting and hugged her. Another in-custody defendant was also sitting in the jury box, and several people were present in the audience. Court staff and attorneys also were present.

The April 10 minute order provides that Judge Edwards and Judge Woodward were "previously disqualified pursuant to CCP 170.1," and that "Court to attempt to get Visiting Judge." Later on April 10, a visiting judge from Siskiyou County was assigned by the Judicial Council; he presided over a telephonic bail review hearing on April 11.

It was improper for Judge Edwards to preside over proceedings involving defendant Floris, including an inquiry to his spouse, when he was already disqualified and where his disqualification was required by law. His actions exceed the scope of that permitted by Code of Civil Procedure section 170.4. In his response to the preliminary investigation, Judge Edwards contends that it was appropriate for him to preside over the arraignment because the only other judge in Trinity County was also disqualified, and the law requires that a felony defendant be arraigned within 48 hours of arrest. (Pen. Code § 825 [defendant to be taken before magistrate within 48 hours after arrest excluding Sundays and holidays]; see Pen. Code § 821 [pertaining to arrest in another county].) At his appearance before the commission, Judge Edwards argued that he was authorized to conduct the arraignment pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure section 170.4 which permits a disqualified judge to take any action necessary to maintain the jurisdiction of the court pending the assignment to another judge not disqualified. Judge Edwards explained that because of the difficulty in finding a judge from another county to conduct an arraignment on short notice, he believed he needed to conduct the arraignment to maintain jurisdiction. Judge Edwards has not provided any information as to what, if any, specific efforts were made to get a visiting judge to conduct the arraignment before he presided over the matter. The minute order of the arraignment states, "Court to attempt to get Visiting Judge." (Italics added.) Even assuming attempts had been made and an arraignment could not be conducted within the time prescribed by law by another judge, the court would not have lost jurisdiction. (People v. Wilson (1963) 60 Cal.2d 139; People v. Valenzuela (1978) 86 Cal.App.3d 427 [A violation of a defendant's right to be arraigned within the time specified by law does not require dismissal of the charges or reversal after conviction unless the defendant shows that through such wrongful conduct he was deprived of a fair trial or otherwise suffered prejudice as a result thereof.].) Judge Edwards also suggests that presiding over the arraignment was necessary to prevent the release of a person accused of a felony. However, at his appearance Judge Edwards acknowledged that in his county a person charged with a felony not arraigned within the time prescribed by law is not released to the community because, upon release, the Sheriff's office immediately re-arrests the defendant at the jail.

Further, hugging Floris in open court created the appearance of bias and otherwise created the appearance of impropriety. The judge's conduct was contrary to the Code of Judicial Ethics, canon 1 (judge shall observe high standards of conduct), canons 2 and 2A (judge shall avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety, shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary) and canon 3E(1) (judge shall disqualify himself in any proceeding in which disqualification is required by law).

2. People v. Castellanos, No. 8M167

In April 2008, Roberto Castellanos, who lives in Hayfork, was cited by the sheriff for two misdemeanors (DUI and failing to have a license in possession) and instructed to appear in Weaverville for arraignment on May 15, 2008. A complaint was thereafter filed by the district attorney for the same incident, charging Castellanos with three misdemeanors (DUI, being under the influence of methamphetamine in violation of Health and Safety Code section 11550, and failing to have a driver's license in possession).

On May 15, 2008, defendant Castellanos failed to appear for arraignment. The district attorney had filed a peremptory challenge against Judge Edwards on May 13, pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure section 170.6. On May 15, Judge Edwards recused himself, but also ordered that the matter be set for arraignment on June 6 in Hayfork, a calendar that he knew he would be handling. The May 15 minute order also provides that the defendant was to be brought back to Weaverville before Judge Woodward, on an unspecified date.

A case against defendant's brother, Alfonso Castellanos, had previously been transferred to the June 6 Hayfork calendar. Judge Edwards knew that defendant Roberto Castellanos had accompanied his brother Alfonso and other family members to a hearing in Hayfork shortly before May 15. The judge set the Roberto Castellanos matter on the June 6 Hayfork calendar in order to tell defendant Roberto Castellanos that he must appear in Weaverville.

Defendant Roberto Castellanos appeared before Judge Edwards on June 6 in Hayfork. Proceedings were not reported; the minute order states that the matter was set for further arraignment before Judge Woodward in Weaverville on June 24.

It was improper for Judge Edwards to set the Roberto Castellanos matter before himself after he was recused. It exceeded the scope of action permitted after disqualification under Code of Civil Procedure section 170.4, and the apparent purpose for this irregular procedure was to help a defendant who had failed to appear, which at a minimum reflects the appearance of preferential treatment. The judge's conduct violates canons 2A and 3E(1).

3. Dismissing Cases

Judge Edwards has abused his authority by dismissing certain infractions and misdemeanors on the basis that the defendants live in Hayfork and were cited by law enforcement to appear in Weaverville rather than in Hayfork, and by threatening to do so in all such cases. There is no court order or legal requirement that a Hayfork resident's initial court appearance be in Hayfork, and the judge's decision to dismiss rather than transfer cases creates an appearance of impropriety and appearance of bias against the prosecution, in violation of canons 2 and 2A.

This conduct is exemplified by People v. Brown, No. 08M321 and People v. Dunn, No. 08M524. In Brown, defendant John Brown, a Hayfork resident, was cited by the California Highway Patrol on July 8, 2008, to appear in Weaverville on August 14, 2008, for the misdemeanor of being an unlicensed driver and the infraction of not having a license in possession. The defendant was on parole. When he appeared in Weaverville for arraignment on August 14, Judge Edwards dismissed the case.

In Dunn, defendant John Dunn, a Hayfork resident, was cited by the California Highway Patrol on November 15, 2008, to appear in Weaverville on December 18, 2008, for the misdemeanor of driving on a suspended license. On December 4, the People filed a complaint alleging two prior convictions for driving on a suspended license. On December 18, Dunn failed to appear in Weaverville for arraignment and Judge Edwards dismissed the case. The People appealed. On October 6, 2009, the appellate division of the Trinity County Superior Court set aside the dismissal, ruling that it was an abuse of discretion.

Judge Edwards contends that his only error was failing to put on the record the factors pertaining to court administration he considered in dismissing Dunn. He maintains that the setting of misdemeanor matters in Hayfork recognizes the reality that Hayfork residents are generally impoverished and without transportation. The appellate division ruling directly addressed this issue. The decision observes that the record does not demonstrate any detriment to the defendant in having the charges filed in Weaverville since the defendant did not even appear. With respect to issues concerning court administration, the appellate decision states that court convenience and issues of court administration "are issues external to the case and, therefore, cannot be grounds for dismissal pursuant to Penal Code § 1385."

4. Decisional Delay

The two judges of the Trinity County Superior Court have approximately a half-time caseload, which they supplement by presiding over calendars in other jurisdictions. Despite the light caseload in Trinity County, Judge Edwards has sometimes unreasonably delayed ruling on submitted matters. Under California law, judges are expected to decide matters submitted to them within 90 days of submission, and are prohibited from receiving their salaries during times when they have undecided matters under submission for more than 90 days. (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 19; Mardikian v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1985) 40 Cal.3d 473, 477, fn. 4.) To implement this provision, the Government Code requires judges to regularly execute affidavits declaring they are in compliance with the law and entitled to receive a salary. (Gov. Code, § 68210.)

Between 2005 and 2008, Judge Edwards decided at least four matters that had been submitted for over 90 days before a decision was issued: (1) People v. Brown, No. 03F0119A/People v. Floyd, No. 03F0119B, decided June 16, 2005, at 119 days; (2) Colburn v. Colburn, No. 03FL0078, decided September 8, 2005, at 91 days; (3) Young v. Brusatore, No. 07SC006, decided July 18, 2007, at 99 days; and (4) Katz v. Rolff, No. 03CV0109, decided on September 11, 2007, at 91 days. The salary affidavit executed by Judge Edwards on May 26, 2005, was false, as the Brown/Floyd matter was over 90 days; however, the judge apparently was not aware of that fact when he signed the affidavit.

Unreasonable delay in deciding submitted matters is contrary to canon 3B(8), which provides that a judge shall decide matters fairly, promptly and efficiently. Submitting a false salary affidavit, even if not done intentionally, undermines public confidence in the judiciary and violates canons 1 and 2A.

5. Hayfork Absence

Court proceedings are held in Hayfork one Friday per month. The calendar typically is completed in the morning. After the calendar is concluded, the judge leaves for the day and the clerk remains in Hayfork until 4:00 p.m. to handle walk-in matters, with a lunch break between noon and 1:00 p.m. On Friday, June 8, 2007, the Hayfork calendar was handled by Judge Woodward.

Around noon on June 8, 2007, Judge Edwards flew to Hayfork and took the clerk and deputy marshal to lunch in his plane. They flew to the coast but did not locate an open restaurant, then returned to Hayfork and ate lunch at a restaurant there. The clerk did not return to the Hayfork court facility until approximately 2:45 p.m. to 3:00 p.m., during which time she was with Judge Edwards. The Hayfork court was locked during the clerk's absence.

Judge Edwards did not contact anyone at the court in Weaverville regarding the clerk's whereabouts during the interruption in the hours that the Hayfork court would normally be open to the public, and did not attempt to arrange for other court employees to staff the Hayfork courthouse during the extended lunch. (Cell phone service apparently was not available to Judge Edwards during this period; however, he did not attempt to call the Weaverville court using a land line.)

Judge Edwards had a few matters calendared in Weaverville at 1:30 p.m. on June 8, 2007. He did not return to Weaverville until approximately 3:30 p.m. and did not contact the court regarding his absence before then. His brief calendar was handled around 3:00 p.m. by Judge Woodward.

Court Executive Officer Donna Hanover spoke with the clerk very briefly on June 8, 2007. She later asked the clerk to meet with her on June 18 regarding the events of June 8. On June 19, Judge Edwards wrote a memo to CEO Hanover that stated as follows:

> You were informed previously by [the clerk], on the 8th of June, that she and [the deputy marshal] were with me for what turned out to be an unattended [sic] extended lunch. It was also explained to you that the cell phone service was down on Friday.... If for some strange reason it is not absolutely clear, I am the one and the only one responsible for getting [the clerk] back to work by 1:00 p.m. The delay was unintentional but it doesn't really matter because I can take an employee to lunch, even an extended lunch, because I am the employer and I can do that. As soon as you found out on the 8th that [the deputy marshal] and [the > clerk] were with me, that should have been the end of it. You cannot place a letter in the personnel file because the individual went to lunch with their boss. It seems that should be painfully obvious. You are hereby directed to take anything having to do with June 8th out of [the clerk's] file and you are also directed to pay her overtime for calling her into your office last night past work hours.

Judge Edwards's conduct on June 8 reflects a disregard of the court's obligation to the public, undermines confidence in the integrity of the judiciary, and creates the appearance of favoritism, in violation of canons 1 and 2A. The June 19 letter to the CEO did not comport with canon 3B(4) (a judge shall be patient, dignified and courteous to litigants, jurors, witnesses, lawyers and others with whom the judge deals in an official capacity) and likewise creates an appearance of favoritism.

6. Comment

During an arraignment calendar in the second half of 2008, Judge Edwards commented in a crowded courtroom that a certain misdemeanor "was just another example of the DA overcharging." A deputy district attorney was appearing on the calendar and the district attorney was observing proceedings. The comment violates canon 3B(4) and creates an appearance that Judge Edwards is biased against the district attorney's office.

7. Potential Juror with Tinfoil on Head

On October 21, 2008, a potential juror, whom Judge Edwards knows socially, reported for jury duty with a tinfoil hat on his head. (Several months before receiving the summons for jury duty, during a group conversation at which Judge Edwards was present, the potential juror had suggested that appearing for jury duty with tinfoil on his head would be a way to get out of jury duty. As the potential juror recalls, the judge responded "I dare you," not in a jovial or encouraging fashion, but in a discouraging manner that the potential juror believed was intended to convey disapproval of such action.)

The jury panel waited outside the courtroom. After the case settled, the panel was brought into Judge Edwards's courtroom and dismissed by the judge. The potential juror was still wearing the tinfoil hat. Judge Edwards saw the potential juror with the tinfoil hat on his head, but did not acknowledge him or ask him to remove the hat. It reflects a lack of decorum for Judge Edwards to have allowed the potential juror, who he knew was joking, to leave the tinfoil hat on his head during court proceedings. The judge's conduct is contrary to canon 3B(3) (judge shall require order and decorum in proceedings before the judge).

The commission determined that the conduct of Judge Edwards in these matters was, at a minimum, improper action.

Commission members Hon. Judith D. McConnell, Hon. Frederick P. Horn, Hon. Katherine Feinstein, Mr. Marshall B. Grossman, Ms. Barbara Schraeger, Mr. Lawrence Simi, Ms. Sandra Talcott and Mr. Nathaniel Trives voted for a public admonishment. Commission member Mr. Peter E. Flores, Jr. was recused. Commission members Mr. Samuel A. Hardage and Ms. Maya Dillard Smith did not participate.

PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE JOHN T. DOYLE

The Commission on Judicial Performance has ordered Judge John T. Doyle publicly admonished pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution and commission rule 115, as set forth in the following statement of facts and reasons found by the commission:

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

Judge Doyle has been a judge of the Los Angeles County Superior Court since 2001. Prior to 2001, Judge Doyle served as a court commissioner in the Los Angeles courts. Judge Doyle's current term began in 2009.

On July 2, 2009, at approximately 10:45 p.m., Judge Doyle caused a traffic collision while driving his vehicle under the influence of alcohol in Los Angeles. After breath tests showed that Judge Doyle had blood-alcohol levels of .21 and .20 percent, the judge was arrested for driving under the influence of alcohol in violation of Vehicle Code section 23152, subdivision (a). On July 27, 2009, Judge Doyle was charged with violations of Vehicle Code section 23152, subdivisions (a) and (b). (Case No. 9MP08210.) On October 6, 2009, following a plea of nolo contendere, Judge Doyle was convicted in the Los Angeles County Superior Court of driving with a blood-alcohol level of .08% or more, in violation of Vehicle Code section 23152, subdivision (b).

Judge Doyle's unlawful action described above evidences a serious disregard of the principles of personal and official conduct embodied in the California Code of Judicial Ethics, including failure to observe high standards of conduct so that the integrity and independence of the judiciary will be preserved (canon 1) and failure to respect and comply with the law and act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity of the judiciary (canon 2A). "Public confidence in the judiciary is eroded by irresponsible or improper conduct by judges." (Canon 2A advisory committee commentary.) Judge Doyle's unlawful conduct was also prejudicial to the administration of justice and brought the judicial office into disrepute within the meaning of article VI, section 18, subdivision (d) of the California Constitution.

Commission members Hon. Judith D. McConnell, Hon. Katherine Feinstein, Mr. Anthony P. Capozzi, Mr. Peter E. Flores, Mr. Samuel A. Hardage, Hon. Frederick P. Horn, Ms. Barbara Schraeger, Mr. Lawrence Simi, Ms. Maya Dillard Smith, Ms. Sandra Talcott and Mr. Nathaniel Trives voted to impose a public admonishment.

PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE JOHN B. GIBSON

The Commission on Judicial Performance has ordered Judge John B. Gibson publicly admonished pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution and commission rule 115, as set forth in the following statement of facts and reasons found by the commission:

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

Judge John B. Gibson was appointed to the Municipal Court of San Bernardino County in 1990, and elevated to the San Bernardino County Superior Court in 1998 upon unification of the trial courts. His current term began in January 2007.

Based on the facts below, the commission found that Judge Gibson failed to maintain high standards of conduct, failed to act in a manner that promotes public confidence in the judiciary, and failed to be dignified, patient and courteous to those with whom he deals in an official capacity.

1. On May 12, 2010, the People v. Nelson case was sent to Judge Gibson's courtroom for assignment to a trial department. A female attorney representing the defendant had an appearance in another courtroom that morning and sent a male attorney from her office to appear before Judge Gibson on the Nelson case in her place. When Judge Gibson called the Nelson case, the male attorney announced that the defense was ready for trial but that the defense witnesses had not been subpoenaed to appear until the following week. Judge Gibson displayed irritation, impatience and sarcasm with the defense attorney because the defense witnesses had been subpoenaed for the following week.

Later the same day, the female attorney representing Mr. Nelson appeared before Judge Gibson and explained why the defense witnesses had been subpoenaed for the following week. Although Judge Gibson told the female attorney that she was probably right in her reasoning, he also displayed sarcasm and annoyance toward her in open court.

Later the same day, Judge Gibson ordered the female attorney and another attorney from the same office into his chambers, where he made rude, insensitive and inappropriate remarks to the female attorney about the male attorney who had appeared on her behalf earlier that day. Judge Gibson exhibited irritation toward the female attorney and said to her words to the effect of, "He was incompetent and just stood in the courtroom scratching his balls and picking his nose," or "He was incompetent and just stood in the courtroom scratching his ass and picking his nose." Judge Gibson accompanied this remark with gestures indicating the aforementioned actions.

2. In early 2010, Judge Gibson and one male attorney and one female attorney were standing in the hallway beside the judge's chambers, where he told them a story about when he was a young defense attorney and a prosecutor verbally intimidated him while they were both standing at a urinal. While telling the story, Judge Gibson gestured in front of his groin as if he were using a urinal.

3. On another occasion, Judge Gibson referred to a tall, thin female attorney with short hair who appeared before him as a "Q-tip."

The commission found that Judge Gibson's conduct constituted a violation of canons 1 and 2A of the Canons of Judicial Ethics (judges are to maintain high standards of conduct and to act in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity of the judiciary) and a violation of canon 3B(4) (judges shall be dignified, patient and courteous to those with whom they deal in an official capacity).

Judge Gibson's conduct in the matter described above was, at a minimum, improper action.

In imposing this discipline, the commission took into account Judge Gibson's public admonishment in 2000 for similar insensitive and inappropriate conduct involving individuals with whom he dealt in an official capacity. The judge's prior public admonishment was for inappropriate acts toward a female employee that included making sexually suggestive comments, writing and sending a sexually suggestive memo, writing and delivering another memo that was intended as humorous about putting the employee to death, and sticking his finger out of his robe while saying, "Say hello to Mr. Bobo," as well as for grabbing and kissing a female probation officer on the lips in the courtroom.

Commission members Justice Judith D. McConnell, Judge Katherine Feinstein, Mr. Anthony P. Capozzi, Mr. Peter E. Flores, Jr., Judge Frederick P. Horn, Ms. Barbara Schraeger, Mr. Lawrence Simi, Ms. Maya Dillard Smith, Ms Sandra Talcott, and Mr. Nathaniel Trives voted for the public admonishment. Mr. Samuel A. Hardage did not participate.

PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE MELISSA N. WIDDIFIELD

The Commission on Judicial Performance has ordered Judge Melissa N. Widdifield publicly admonished pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution and commission rule 115, as set forth in the following statement of facts and reasons found by the commission:

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

Judge Widdifield has been a judge of the Los Angeles County Superior Court since August 2007. She was a court commissioner for five years before her appointment as a superior court judge.

On November 18, 2009, at approximately 1:00 a.m., Judge Widdifield drove her vehicle in a reckless manner while under the influence of alcohol, and with a blood alcohol level of approximately .09 percent. On January 19, 2010, the judge was charged with driving under the influence of alcohol, a violation of Vehicle Code section 23152(a), and driving while having a .08 percent or higher blood alcohol level, a violation of Vehicle Code section 23152(b). On May 14, 2010, the judge entered a plea of nolo contendere to reckless driving, a violation of Vehicle Code section 23103(a), pursuant to Vehicle Code section 23103.5.

Judge Widdifield's unlawful action described above evidences a serious disregard of the principles of personal and official conduct embodied in the California Code of Judicial Ethics, including failure to observe high standards of conduct so that the integrity and independence of the judiciary will be preserved (canon 1) and failure to respect and comply with the law and act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity of the judiciary (canon 2A). "Public confidence in the judiciary is eroded by irresponsible or improper conduct by judges." (Canon 2A advisory committee commentary.) Judge Widdifield's conduct was also prejudicial to the administration of justice and brought the judicial office into disrepute within the meaning of article VI, section 18, subdivision (d) of the California Constitution.

Commission members Hon. Judith D. McConnell, Hon. Katherine Feinstein, Hon. Frederick P. Horn, Mr. Anthony P. Capozzi, Mr. Peter E. Flores, Jr., Ms. Barbara Schraeger, Mr. Lawrence Simi, Ms. Maya Dillard Smith and Mr. Nathaniel Trives voted to impose a public admonishment. Commission member Ms. Sandra Talcott was recused from this matter. Commission member Mr. Samuel A. Hardage did not participate.

PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE HARVEY GISS

The Commission on Judicial Performance has ordered Judge Harvey Giss publicly admonished pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution and commission rule 115, as set forth in the following statement of facts and reasons found by the commission:

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

Judge Giss has been a judge of the Los Angeles County Superior Court since April 2001. His current term began in January 2009.

A criminal case was transferred to Judge Giss for trial in July 2010. The prosecutor and counsel for the co-defendants appeared in Judge Giss's courtroom. Counsel were discussing, off the record, the prospects for a plea agreement. The defendants were in a holding cell but a family member of one of the defendants was present in the courtroom.

According to Judge Giss, he perceived that counsel wished him to intercede and explain the potential benefits of the plea offer to the defendants, which the judge did not believe he could do. Judge Giss made a remark to the effect that he guessed that the only thing that would make the defendants plead was for the judge to come out in a white sheet and a pointy white hat, which the judge indicated he would not do. His remark referenced the Ku Klux Klan and the fact that both defendants were African-American.

Two days later, the defense requested that Judge Giss recuse from the case on the basis of his remark and the defendants' concern regarding his impartiality. While conceding it was a "bad statement," the judge also remarked: "People don't have a sense of humor anymore." The judge's comment referencing the Ku Klux Klan eventually resulted in his recusal from the case.

Judge Giss should have known that his insensitive courtroom reference to a history of violence towards persons of the defendants' ancestry, whether intended to make a valid point regarding his role as a judge or in jest, was offensive and inappropriate. A judge's "subjective intent is not at issue," "[a]s a judge he is charged with the obligation to conduct himself at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence and esteem for the judiciary." (Gonzalez v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1983), 33 Cal.3d 359, 376.)

The commission determined that the judge's remark constituted a failure to refrain from speech that would reasonably be perceived as bias or prejudice, as required by canon 3B(5) of the California Code of Judicial Ethics; a failure to be dignified and courteous to litigants, lawyers and others with whom the judge deals in an official capacity, as required by canon 3B(4); and a failure to avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety, and act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the impartiality of the judiciary, as required by canon 2.

Judge Giss's conduct described above was, at a minimum, improper action pursuant to article VI, section 18(d)(3) of the California Constitution.

Commission members Hon. Judith D. McConnell, Hon. Frederick P. Horn, Mr. Anthony P. Capozzi, Mr. Peter E. Flores, Jr., Ms. Barbara Schraeger, Mr. Lawrence Simi, Ms. Maya Dillard Smith, Ms. Sandra Talcott, Mr. Nathaniel Trives, and Hon. Erica R. Yew voted to impose a public admonishment. Commission member Mr. Samuel A. Hardage did not participate.

PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE NANCY POLLARD

The Commission on Judicial Performance has ordered Judge Nancy Pollard publicly admonished pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution and commission rule 115, as set forth in the following statement of facts and reasons found by the commission:

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

Judge Pollard has been a judge of the Orange County Superior Court since 1997. Her current term began in January 2009.

1. *Forline v. Chenier

On April 30, 2009, Judge Pollard presided over a hearing on a petition for a restraining order filed by Kathy Forline against her former boyfriend, Blake Chenier. Forline alleged in her petition that Chenier had engaged in acts of violence during their relationship such as throwing rocks at her, spitting on her, choking her, and throwing protein powder, and that he had destroyed some of her property. The defense position was that Forline had fabricated the allegations and filed the petition because she was angry with Chenier for breaking up with her, and for being intimate with her roommate in her house after their relationship had ended.

The hearing began with testimony by Forline, who was questioned by Judge Pollard (with her counsel's consent) about some of the allegations in her declaration. Shortly after this questioning began, Judge Pollard addressed Chenier's attorney as follows:

> The Court: You know, Counsel, I have a question. [¶] May I address your client?
> Mr. English: Sure.
> The Court: Where were you born?
> Mr. Chenier: Newport Beach, California.
> The Court: I'm concerned about the throwing of the rocks and the spitting. I've been doing domestic violence now for 14 years. Usually that is the kind of behavior I see in Middle Eastern clients, but almost -- if I read a declaration where they say, "He spit on me, he threw rocks at me," almost always it's a Middle Eastern client. If the declaration says, "He drags me around the house by the hair," it's almost always a Hispanic client.

A little later, when Forline was being cross-examined by Chenier's attorney but before Chenier testified or presented any testimony on his own behalf, Judge Pollard asked the attorney to explain the relevance of a question about how long Forline and Chenier had been broken up as of the night of the specific incident (an altercation involving Chenier, Forline, and Forline's roommate) giving rise to the petition. This exchange followed:

> Mr. English: I think she is angry my client broke up with her is what I think.
> The Court: She very (sic) may be. That is not the issue. The issue is he spit on her, he choked her, he pushed her, he threw protein powder all over the room, and he destroyed a lot of expensive property.
> Mr. English: It goes to bias, Your Honor, for filing this order. It goes to credibility, absolutely.
> The Court: Well, for whatever reason she has -- and she certainly may feel betrayed in her love life, but that doesn't mean that that gives him the right to destroy the property, to choke her, to throw powder all over her room.
> Mr. English: Of course not. It goes to her bias for filing this petition.

(R.T. 24:4-20, bold added.)

After Forline's attorney interjected that it was "harassment" for Chenier to come into Forline's house and be intimate with another woman there, the following occurred:

> The Court: Well, I don't even consider that. He can sleep with anybody he wants. He can sleep with anybody in her family. The point is he does not get to choke her. He does not get to spit on her. He doesn't get to threaten her.
> Mr. English: Of course not.
> The Court: He doesn't need to destroy property.

(R.T. 25:4-11, bold added.)

Following these remarks, the attorney commented, "By the way, that didn't happen. I'll be clear when I question my client." (R.T. 25.)

At the end of the hearing Judge Pollard issued a five-year restraining order and ordered Chenier to pay restitution of more than $4,500.

Chenier appealed. In an unpublished opinion filed in August 2010, the Court of Appeal affirmed Judge Pollard's orders, finding that her "inappropriate statement concerning Middle Eastern and Hispanic males did not evidence a bias against Chenier," since he is neither Middle Eastern nor Hispanic, and that there was no evidence that the judge was generally biased against males.

Although the appellate court rejected Chenier's claim of bias, it took the opportunity, in a separate section of its opinion entitled "Warning," to "caution the trial judge to be more thoughtful in her comments concerning her previous cases and statements concerning her perceptions of race, ethnicity, or gender." The court continued:

> Such comments suggest ethnic stereotyping that is inconsistent with the fair, impartial, and dispassionate administration of justice. As we explain above, the trial judge's statements did not evidence a bias against Chenier. But in the future, the trial judge's statements about ethnic propensities of past litigants could compel the conclusion that the judge prejudged a case based on ethnicity. A trial judge should refrain from comments that suggest he or she has decided a credibility contest based on some matter outside the record. Such statements do not inspire public trust and confidence in our courts.

The Court of Appeal went on to find that the trial court properly excluded evidence that Chenier broke up with Forline and started dating her roommate, citing evidence that the termination of the relationship was mutual and testimony by Forline that she was relieved that Chenier was no longer in her life; the appellate court also stated that evidence about "when they terminated their relationship and who he was currently dating was of no relevance" to the issue of whether Chenier posed a threat to Forline. Finally, the Court of Appeal rejected Chenier's claim that the evidence was insufficient to support issuance of the five-year restraining order.

The commission found that Judge Pollard's remarks about Hispanic and Middle Eastern men were contrary to canon 3B(5), which provides, in pertinent part: "A judge shall perform judicial duties without bias or prejudice. A judge shall not, in the performance of judicial duties, engage in speech, … or other conduct that would reasonably be perceived as (1) bias or prejudice, including but not limited to bias or prejudice based upon race … [or] national origin… ." Judge Pollard's remarks articulated stereotypes about two ethnic groups and their propensity to engage in certain types of domestic violence. As the Court of Appeal pointed out, these comments suggest ethnic stereotyping that is inconsistent with the fair, impartial and dispassionate administration of justice; the remarks do not inspire public trust and confidence in the courts. (See In re Stevens (1982) 31 Cal.3d 403, 404-405.) Judge Pollard has admitted that her remarks were inappropriate.

The commission also found that Judge Pollard made statements suggesting that she had prejudged the facts before she heard any testimony offered by respondent Chenier, contrary to canons 2A and 3B(5). The judge's comments during the cross-examination of Forline, quoted above, gave the appearance that she had already accepted Forline's version of events before hearing any testimony offered by Chenier, despite the fact that this was a hearing at which both sides were entitled to present evidence before a decision was made.

2. *Blumenthal v. Blumenthal

On November 18, 2005, Judge Pollard declared a mistrial in the family law case of Blumenthal v. Blumenthal, which had been pending before her for approximately four years, because the trial did not end within a five-hour period she had set for its completion and she was to be transferred from a family law assignment to a domestic violence assignment about six weeks later; she took this action although only a few more hours of anticipated testimony remained.

According to a chronology provided by Judge Pollard, the petition for dissolution in Blumenthal was filed in November 1999. The case was designated a long-cause matter in January 2000, following the filing by petitioner's counsel of an at-issue memorandum giving a trial estimate of two days. After the parties entered into a written stipulation, and a partial judgment settling the majority of the issues was entered, the case was assigned to Judge Pollard around October 2001.

In November 2001, Judge Pollard set the case for trial on March 19 and 20, 2002. She subsequently denied a motion filed by respondent to set aside the previously entered partial judgment, and continued the trial to July 11 and 12, 2002. On July 11, 2002, the judge continued the trial to allow the petitioner to consider a settlement offer, and because the respondent had failed to provide certain financial information. The judge also appointed an expert to determine respondent's controllable cash flow. She ordered the parties to cooperate with the expert and return in September 2002. In September, the matter was continued to November 2002 because the expert had not completed his evaluation. In November, the trial was continued to February 19, 2003 because the respondent had not given necessary documents to the expert; a mandatory settlement conference was set for January 30, 2003.

On January 30, 2003, Judge Pollard reset the mandatory settlement conference for February 19, 2003 and continued the trial to May 6, 2003. When she called the case on May 6, 2003, the judge said she had received notice that respondent had filed a lawsuit against the court's expert for breach of contract and malpractice, and expressed concern that he had filed this suit to delay the proceedings. The judge continued the trial because counsel had not received the expert's report ten days before the trial date. In choosing a new date for trial, Judge Pollard asked counsel to give a time estimate; after the attorneys said that the testimony of the three witnesses (the court's expert and the two parties) could be heard within three to four hours, the trial was continued to August 20, 2003.

On August 20, 2003, Judge Pollard called the case for trial and for a hearing on an order to show cause regarding support that had been filed by the petitioner. After the two parties were sworn in as witnesses, respondent's counsel asked to continue the trial because the court's expert had prepared an updated report that had not been provided ten days before the trial date. Judge Pollard suggested a date the next week, but the petitioner was scheduled to have surgery, so trial was continued to January 14, 2004. A temporary support order was made.

On January 14, 2004, the case was called for trial. The court's expert testified. Because respondent's counsel had not completed cross-examination of the expert, Judge Pollard ordered the parties to return on April 30, 2004. However, due to the court's unavailability, the trial date was continued to August 17 and 18, 2004. The court's expert was ill on August 17, so trial was continued to January 11 and 12, 2005.

On January 10, 2005, respondent moved ex parte to continue the trial date due to the unavailability of an expert he had retained. Judge Pollard granted the request, reset trial for May 10, 2005, and made orders concerning the report of respondent's expert. On May 10, 2005, the trial date was continued again, at respondent's request. Trial was reset for October 25 and 31, 2005.

On October 25, 2005, Judge Pollard called the case for trial. After discussion between the judge and counsel, it was determined that trial would continue on October 31, 2005. On that date, the court's expert and the petitioner testified. Since trial had not been completed, Judge Pollard set the matter to continue from 9:00 a.m. to 3:00 p.m. on November 18, 2005, stating "we will finish," "we are getting done," and "the very last important question is going to be asked and answered at three o'clock."

On November 18, 2005, respondent's expert testified. When he finished testifying, Judge Pollard expressed concern that the trial would not be completed that day. Respondent's counsel said that her client needed to testify, and that his testimony would probably take several hours. Judge Pollard said that the case would be mistried. She explained that she was going to the domestic violence department at the end of the year, and did not have a couple of hours on her calendar before the end of the year. The judge opined that the parties had "spent more time on $101,165 than is worth $101,165," and expressed the view that there had been "an inordinate amount of objections." A mistrial was declared.

A writ petition was filed in the Court of Appeal. The appellate court ultimately issued the writ and set the matter for completion of trial back before Judge Pollard, regardless of her reassignment to a different court. (Blumenthal v. Superior Court (2006) 137 Cal.App.4th 672.) The appellate court noted that neither party had requested the mistrial, which was ordered over the objection of both parties "for reasons peculiar to the judge's own calendar." The appellate court stated, "The abuse of discretion in granting this mistrial is manifest." (Id. at 685, 687.)

In the commission's investigation, Judge Pollard expressed the view that the Court of Appeal's decision was based on incomplete information, because the petitioner did not provide the appellate court a copy of the transcript of the May 2003 hearing at which counsel gave an estimate of three to four hours to complete the trial. Judge Pollard argued that the case was converted from a long-cause matter to a short-cause matter when the attorneys, at a hearing that took place more than two years before the mistrial was declared, gave an estimate of three to four hours to complete the trial, and that she therefore had discretion to declare a mistrial when they did not finish within that period. In addition, Judge Pollard reported that she was specifically instructed by her supervising judge not to keep the matter when she transferred to her domestic violence assignment. She expressed the view that if the Court of Appeal had known about this, the impression that her action was arbitrary and capricious would not have been created.

The commission found that even assuming that a long-cause matter can be converted to a short-cause matter when the attorneys, at some point during the proceedings, give an estimate of five hours or less to complete the trial, the records of the Blumenthal case show that the estimate of three to four hours was superseded by later events, and that the court and counsel continued to treat the case as a long-cause matter. On four occasions after May 6, 2003, the court set the trial to take place on two days: it was set for August 17 and 18, 2004; for January 11 and 12, 2005; for May 10 and 11, 2005; and for October 25 and 31, 2005. A minute order issued May 10, 2005, setting the matter along with an order to show cause filed by petitioner for two days in October, and a minute order issued October 25, 2005, both designate the matter as "trial-long cause non-jury." Moreover, the transcript of the hearing held January 14, 2004, where the court's expert testified, shows that the judge asked counsel to identify "the reserved issues on the long cause trial." (R.T. 68.) At the end of this hearing, respondent's counsel, when asked for a time estimate, said that it would take about another half hour to finish her cross-examination of the court's expert, and that an expert for respondent (who had not been retained in May 2003) would testify, for "probably as much time as it took to examine [the court's expert]." (R.T. 132:21 – 133:2.) The judge and the parties thus were aware that the previous estimate of three to four hours, which was based on the assumption that only the court's expert and the parties would be testifying, was obsolete.

Since the court records of events subsequent to May 6, 2003 show that the Blumenthal case remained a long cause case and that the estimate of three to four hours to complete the trial was no longer valid, it appears that the transcript of the hearing held May 6, 2003, would not have given the appellate court a basis to conclude that the matter had been converted to a short-cause case. Even assuming the Court of Appeal agreed with Judge Pollard that a long-cause matter can be converted to a short-cause matter when attorneys provide an estimate of less than five hours to complete a trial, and that this gives the trial judge discretion to declare a mistrial if the estimate is exceeded, there were no grounds for finding that Blumenthal had become a short-cause case.

Regarding Judge Pollard's argument that she properly followed the instructions of her supervising judge, and that the Court of Appeal would not have found her actions arbitrary and capricious if it had known that her supervising judge had instructed her not to take the case with her to her domestic violence assignment, the commission noted that the supervising judge stated, in a declaration submitted by Judge Pollard, that she had represented to him that Blumenthal "started the trial with an estimate of about three hours." The commission also noted that in his declaration, the supervising judge described his actions as "suggesting" that Judge Pollard declare a mistrial. Even assuming that the supervising judge's discussions with Judge Pollard about how she might handle the Blumenthal case could be considered instructions, it does not appear that such instructions would legitimize Judge Pollard's actions if they were based on incorrect information she had given to the supervising judge.

The commission found that Judge Pollard's conduct in declaring a mistrial in Blumenthal constituted an abuse of authority and failure to hear and decide a matter assigned to her, contrary to canon 3B(1).

The commission concluded that Judge Pollard's conduct in the matters above was, at a minimum, improper action and dereliction of duty.

Commission members Hon. Judith D. McConnell, Mr. Anthony P. Capozzi, Ms. Nanci E. Nishimura, Mr. Lawrence Simi, Ms. Maya Dillard Smith, Ms. Sandra Talcott, Mr. Adam N. Torres, Mr. Nathaniel Trives, and Hon. Erica R. Yew voted to impose a public admonishment. Commission member Hon. Frederick P. Horn was recused from this matter. Commission member Ms. Barbara Schraeger did not participate.

PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE JOAN COMPARET-CASSANI

The Commission on Judicial Performance has ordered Judge Joan Comparet-Cassani publicly admonished pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution and commission rule 115, as set forth in the following statement of facts and reasons found by the commission:

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

Judge Comparet-Cassani became a judge of the Los Angeles County Municipal Court in 1995. In 2000, she became a judge of the Los Angeles County Superior Court. The judge's current term began in January 2011.

The judge presided over the matter of People v. Evan Perkins, No. NA083318, which involved felony charges of theft and drug possession. Perkins was initially represented in this matter by appointed counsel.

On January 22, 2010, the judge granted Perkins's motion to proceed in pro per and relieved his court-appointed attorney.

On April 13, 2010, Perkins appeared before the judge for a pretrial hearing and submitted two motions, a Pitchess motion and a Brady motion.[1] Upon receiving the Pitchess motion, the judge stated that she did not believe that Perkins had prepared the motion himself. Perkins responded that he had prepared the motion himself and that he had someone else type it. The judge proceeded to question Perkins about the motion and repeatedly stated that she did not believe he had prepared it despite Perkins's insistence that he had. The judge ultimately concluded that Perkins was lying to the court about not having received legal assistance in connection with the preparation of the motion and on that basis she revoked his pro per status and appointed a bar panel attorney to represent him. The following colloquy occurred during the hearing:

> THE CLERK: Here's the Pitchess. There's (sic) the other motions he filed this morning.
> THE COURT: Did you give [Deputy District Attorney] Recana copies?
> THE DEFENDANT: Yes, Your Honor.
> MR. RECANA: I just received it right now in my hand.

[1] In a Pitchess motion, a defendant whose defense entails proving violent or other improper conduct by a law enforcement officer seeks discovery of complaints by other people against the officer in order to attempt to show a pattern of improper behavior. (Pitchess v. Superior Court (1974) 11 Cal.3d 531.) In a Brady motion, a defendant seeks disclosure by the prosecution of information that is exculpatory and material. (Brady v. Maryland (1963) 373 U.S. 83.)

THE COURT: Okay. Who did you get this form from?

THE DEFENDANT: I did it myself, Your Honor.

THE COURT: I don't believe that.

THE DEFENDANT: Well, I had somebody -- I wrote it and I had somebody type it for me.

THE COURT: But it -- parts are added in, so it's a proforma form.

THE DEFENDANT: Excuse me?

THE COURT: I said, parts are added, so it looks proforma to me. You got this from somebody.

THE DEFENDANT: I wrote it in handwriting, and I had somebody type it up for me.

THE COURT: No, I don't believe you.

THE DEFENDANT: I did, Your Honor. That's the truth.

THE COURT: But you copied it from something.

THE BAILIFF: Ma'am, if you continue to react, you'll be in the hallway.

THE DEFENDANT: I have a piece of discovery right here that --

THE COURT: Excuse me. I'm reading this. You gave it to me.

(A Pause in the Proceedings.)

THE COURT: You did not draft this. There's no way.

THE DEFENDANT: I did, Your Honor. That's the honest truth.

THE COURT: No, there's no way.

THE DEFENDANT: I did, Your Honor.

THE COURT: I don't believe you; it's that simple. I don't believe you. You did not draft this. [¶] What is People v. Memro about?

THE DEFENDANT: I don't know, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Well, you cite it.

THE DEFENDANT: Well, I got it off the computer in the law library, Your Honor.

THE COURT: You cite it for a proposition. What does it stand for?

THE DEFENDANT: I don't know off the top --

THE COURT: You don't know. [¶] And what does People v. Harris stand for?

THE DEFENDANT: People v. who?

THE COURT: v. Harris. You cite it.

THE DEFENDANT: People versus Harris?

THE COURT: Yeah.

THE DEFENDANT: I haven't researched it, Your Honor.

THE COURT: You cite it.

THE DEFENDANT: It's the correct authority, Your Honor.

THE COURT: What?

THE DEFENDANT: It's the correct authority, Your Honor.

THE COURT: For what?

THE DEFENDANT: For my Pitchess.

THE COURT: For what proposition? For what rule of law?

THE DEFENDANT: I don't know, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Uh-huh. What about People v. Wheeler; what does that stand for?

THE DEFENDANT: Moral turpitude.

THE COURT: With respect to what?

THE DEFENDANT: To peace officers.

THE COURT: With respect to what?

THE DEFENDANT: Their conduct, Your Honor.

THE COURT: No, you're wrong. That isn't what you cite it for either.

THE DEFENDANT: Well, Your Honor, I'm not --

THE COURT: You cite Wheeler; tell me what it stands for. [¶] No, I'm asking you. Don't read it to me. Tell me what it stands for. You wrote this, you claim. Tell me what it stands for.

THE DEFENDANT: I did, Your Honor, I drafted it. I got it off the computer.

THE COURT: Get your hand away from your mouth.

THE DEFENDANT: I got it off the computer, Your Honor.

THE COURT: You got it off the computer from where?

THE DEFENDANT: From the law library.

THE COURT: You didn't write this. [¶] What are you giving me these subpoenas for? I don't have anything to do with your subpoenas. [¶] Give it back to him. [¶] You didn't write that. You're lying to the court.

THE DEFENDANT: I drafted it up, Your Honor.

THE COURT: You drafted it up copying something or somebody giving it to you. You did not write that. [¶] You're getting legal assistance, and that's improper if you're pro per.

THE DEFENDANT: I'm not allowed to have legal assistance, Your Honor?

THE COURT: No.

THE DEFENDANT: Why is that?

THE COURT: Because you're pro per.

THE DEFENDANT: I know that, Your Honor, but the D.A.'s (sic) get legal assistance all the time. They have --

THE COURT: Don't argue with me. You cannot have an attorney helping you.

THE DEFENDANT: I'm not having an attorney help me, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Well, you did not write that.

THE DEFENDANT: I put it together from, you know, stuff from the law library, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Absolutely not. Absolutely not. [¶] It says at the bottom, notice of motion for pretrial. That is somebody's proforma Pitchess motion, and you're getting legal assistance.

THE DEFENDANT: I wrote it on paper and had somebody type it for me, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Nope. You're lying to the court. [¶] I'm revoking your pro per status.

THE DEFENDANT: Objection, Your Honor.

THE COURT: I don't care. We're gonna (sic) have counsel. [¶] Who represented him before, Luis?

THE CLERK: Let me check, Judge.

MR. RECANA: Mr. Perry, I believe, Your Honor. Robin Perry.

THE CLERK: Robin Perry. I can contact his office. I can have the bar panel stand in for Mr. Perry today, if you'd like.

THE DEFENDANT: Your Honor, there's a conflict of interest with me and Robin Perry, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Let me see first from the beginning, was he ever represented by the P.D.'s office?

THE DEFENDANT: There's a conflict.

MR. RECANA: No. Even from as early as September, a conflict was declared, and Robin Perry was the counsel.

THE COURT: By whom, the P.D.?

MR. RECANA: I'm sorry?

THE COURT: A conflict by whom, the P.D.?

MR. RECANA: It was originally, since this was a three defendant case, it was the P.D. for Ms. Mobley, and then the A.P.D. for Ms. Duran.

THE COURT: All right. We need ICDA.

THE CLERK: Yes. I'm calling Department J.

THE DEFENDANT: Your Honor.

THE COURT: And I'm revoking his pro per status because he's lying to the court.

THE DEFENDANT: Your Honor.

THE COURT: And he's obstructing justice by using the assistance of counsel when he's not allowed to.

THE CLERK: Mr. Frisco is the duty person today.

THE COURT: All right. We'll put this over until we can get him down.

(R.T. 2:10 – 7:26.)

On May 12, 2010, Perkins filed a petition for writ of mandate with the Court of Appeal seeking to have the judge's April 13, 2010 order vacated and his pro per status restored.

On May 25, 2010, the district attorney's office filed a preliminary response to the petition wherein it was conceded that the judge had wrongly revoked Perkins's pro per status.

On May 27, 2010, the Court of Appeal issued a notice of intention to grant the writ and temporary stay order. The notice stated that the appellate court was considering granting the writ in the first instance "on the ground that it was a clear abuse of the superior court's discretion to revoke petitioner's pro per status on the basis of the court's speculation that he was 'lying' about the independent preparation of a pretrial motion."

Thereafter, at a pretrial hearing on June 2, 2010, Judge Comparet-Cassani ordered Perkins's pro per status reinstated. The writ petition was subsequently dismissed as moot.

A criminal defendant has the right under the Sixth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution to represent himself or herself. (Faretta v. California (1975) 422 U.S. 806, 835.) However, the right to self-representation is not absolute and may be terminated by a trial judge when a defendant deliberately engages in serious and obstructionist misconduct. (Id. at p. 834, fn. 46.) In short, a trial court retains jurisdiction to determine whether a defendant has become so disruptive, obstreperous, disobedient, disrespectful or obstructionist in his or her conduct as to preclude the exercise of the right to self-representation. (People v. Welch (1999) 20 Cal.4th 701, 735.)

In her response to the commission's preliminary investigation letter, Judge Comparet-Cassani admitted that she violated Perkins's Sixth Amendment right to self-representation. She also admitted that the fact that a pro per defendant did not prepare motions submitted to the court "is not a ground for a status change." The judge asserted that her actions were motivated out of concern that Perkins was filing motions solely to delay the proceeding.

The commission noted the absence in the record to any reference that Perkins was trying to delay or obstruct the proceeding. In the commission's view, the record establishes that the judge's decision to revoke Perkins's pro per status was based on two factors: (1) her belief that Perkins had received legal assistance in connection with the Pitchess motion; and (2) her belief that Perkins was lying about whether he had received legal assistance. Neither of these factors, if true, provided a legal basis for the judge's decision. The commission found that the judge's conduct constituted abuse of authority, disregard for Perkins's Sixth Amendment rights, and intentional disregard of the law. (See Inquiry Concerning O'Flaherty (2004) 49 Cal.4th CJP Supp 1, 20-21 [serious lack of awareness or concern that consequences of judge's conduct runs afoul of law constitutes intentional disregard of law].) The judge's conduct violated canon 2A (judge shall respect and comply with the law and act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary) and canon 3B(2) (judge shall maintain professional competence in the law).

The commission further found that the judge's demeanor toward Perkins during the hearing was improper. The judge spoke to Perkins in a harsh manner, repeatedly stated that she did not believe him, grilled him on cases cited in his motion, and stated three times that he was lying to the court. In contrast, the record reflects that Perkins remained respectful toward the judge throughout the hearing. The judge's conduct violated canon 2A and canon 3B(4) (judge shall be patient, dignified, and courteous to those persons with whom the judge deals in an official capacity).

The commission concluded that Judge Comparet-Cassani's conduct as described above constituted, at a minimum, improper action.

In reaching its decision, the commission viewed as aggravating factors two prior matters in which Judge Comparet-Cassani was disciplined for misconduct similar to that at issue here, namely, abuse of authority with regard to a pro per criminal defendant and poor demeanor. In 2000, the judge was privately admonished, in part, for ordering a sheriff's deputy to activate an electronic stun belt being worn by a pro per criminal defendant that was designed to deliver a 50,000 volt electric shock for approximately eight seconds. The judge ordered the belt activated during a hearing not to prevent courtroom violence, but because of the defendant's verbal interruptions. The admonishment also included two prior incidents, one involving the defendant who was shocked and one involving another defendant, in which the judge threatened the use of the belt as a means of controlling non-violent courtroom behavior. In 2006, the judge received an advisory letter for making demeaning remarks in open court to a criminal defense attorney in the presence of the attorney's client. The judge questioned the attorney about where and when she went to law school, when she passed the bar, and whether she was "up to" handling the case.

Commission members Hon. Judith D. McConnell, Hon. Frederick P. Horn, Mr. Anthony P. Capozzi, Ms. Nanci E. Nishimura, Ms. Barbara Schraeger Mr. Lawrence Simi, Ms. Maya Dillard Smith, Ms. Sandra Talcott, Mr. Nathaniel Trives, and Hon. Erica R. Yew voted to impose a public admonishment. Commission member Adam N. Torres did not participate.

| IN THE MATTER CONCERNING JUDGE JAMES R. WAGONER | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT |

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge James R. Wagoner, a judge of the El Dorado County Superior Court. Judge Wagoner and his attorney, James A. Murphy, appeared before the commission on August 31, 2011, to contest the imposition of a public admonishment, pursuant to rule 116 of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance. Having considered the written and oral objections and argument submitted by Judge Wagoner and his counsel, and good cause appearing, the Commission on Judicial Performance issues this public admonishment pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution, based on the following statement of facts and reasons.

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

Judge James R. Wagoner has been a judge of the El Dorado County Superior Court since 2003. His current term began in January 2009.

On the morning of Friday, July 16, 2010, Judge Wagoner was on the bench presiding over the calendar in department 1 on the second floor of the Main Street Courthouse in Placerville. At approximately 8:45 a.m., the judge received a report concerning the conduct of a member of the public named Penny Arnold, who was reportedly in the courthouse lobby using her cell phone to take pictures or videos of people in the lobby who were involved in dependency court proceedings in department 5 on the first floor. (Ms. Arnold was present for a proceeding in department 5 that morning.) The judge recessed the proceedings in his court, removed his robe, and proceeded to the lobby with two bailiffs to contact Ms. Arnold about her reported conduct.

When Judge Wagoner contacted Ms. Arnold in the lobby, he ordered her to immediately report to his courtroom for a hearing concerning her conduct in the courthouse that morning. Ms. Arnold, who was not involved in any matter pending before Judge Wagoner, did not comply with the judge's order and asked to speak with her attorney. The judge repeated his order to Ms. Arnold and warned her that if she continued to refuse to comply she would be cited for contempt of court. Ms. Arnold did not comply with the order and consequently the judge directed the bailiffs to arrest her for contempt. Ms. Arnold was handcuffed and escorted to a jury room on the second floor. Her phone and an audio recording device in her possession were confiscated. Ms. Arnold was held in the jury room for approximately 40 minutes. She was then transported to jail pursuant to a jail remand order issued by the judge. The remand order stated that Ms. Arnold was charged with contempt of court, that the matter was set for arraignment in the judge's court on Monday, July 19, 2010, and that bail was set at $5000. Ms. Arnold was in jail for approximately three hours before she was able to post bail.

On July 16, after Ms. Arnold was arrested, Judge Wagoner issued an order to show cause re contempt in In re the Matter of Penny Arnold, No. PC20100441. The OSC stated that Ms. Arnold was cited for contempt for willfully disobeying a court order in contravention of Code of Civil Procedure section 1209(a)(5), which provides that "disobedience of any lawful judgment, order, or process of the court" constitutes contempt. The OSC included the judge's declaration, which states in pertinent part:

> 2. On July 16, 2010 in the immediate view and presence of the court, the alleged contemnor did the following: The court was made aware by staff that the alleged contemnor was photographing and/or recording private parties in the lobby of the courthouse at 495 Main Street, Placerville, California. This included parties to confidential juvenile matters. [¶] This bench officer proceeded to the lobby to direct the alleged contemnor to the court room (sic) for a hearing on this matter, as this was disruptive to the court proceedings and could possibly involve criminal conduct. The alleged contemnor refused to proceed to the court room (sic) for the hearing despite repeated warnings that she could be held in contempt and was subject to arrest pending a hearing on contempt charges and despite advice that her attorney, whom she requested, would be available in the court room (sic) for consultation. [¶] The conduct was disruptive to the business of the court and the parties involved. Further, it appeared that she was attempting to either continue her surreptitious recording or erase and/or destroy evidence of her conduct. When she was taken into custody, it was also learned that she had a recorder secreted on her person that appeared to be operating.

On July 19, 2010, Ms. Arnold entered a not guilty plea and the matter was set for trial before Judge Wagoner on August 3, 2010.

On August 3, Ms. Arnold appeared with counsel for trial on the contempt charge. At the outset of the hearing, Ms. Arnold apologized to the court. Ms. Arnold stated that she did not purposely cause a disruption and denied that she was taking pictures. She further stated, "I meant no disrespect for you, I was just asking for my lawyer. I didn't know what was going on." Following the apology, Ms. Arnold's attorney stated that on the morning of the subject incident his client had been sitting in direct proximity to bailiffs at the metal detector, yet nothing she did caused them to respond or to speak to her. No other witnesses testified at the hearing. Judge Wagoner found Ms. Arnold guilty of direct contempt of court and sentenced her to five days in jail, giving her credit for one day served and staying the other four days for one year on the condition that she "obey all laws and all lawful orders and directives of this court."

The commission determined that Judge Wagoner's actions constituted abuse of the contempt power and violated Ms. Arnold's due process rights. First, the commission found that the judge's order that Ms. Arnold immediately report to his courtroom was not a valid order on which a contempt charge could be based. Because Ms. Arnold's conduct did not occur in the judge's courtroom and did not involve a proceeding pending in his court, the judge was without jurisdiction over her and could not lawfully order her to attend a hearing in his courtroom. Courthouse security issues are properly handled by sheriff's deputies, who could have warned or arrested Ms. Arnold if her conduct that morning had been improper. By intervening in this matter and ordering Ms. Arnold to attend a hearing "on the issue that she was creating a disturbance in the courthouse," Judge Wagoner also gave the appearance of having assumed a law enforcement role contrary to canon 2A of the Code of Judicial Ethics.

Judge Wagoner maintains that he had authority to order Ms. Arnold to his courtroom for a hearing concerning her conduct in the courthouse lobby pursuant to the court's statutory (Code Civ. Proc., § 128) and inherent powers. The commission, however, disagreed that a court's statutory or inherent powers to preserve order could be used to order a citizen to attend a hearing concerning conduct occurring outside the courtroom and that had no connection to a pending proceeding. By statute, a court has power to enforce order "in its immediate presence," and "in the proceedings before it." (Code Civ. Proc., § 128 (a)(1)(2).)

Further, a court's authority to order a person in contempt for disorderly conduct is limited to conduct "toward the judge while holding the court, tending to interrupt the due course of a trial or other judicial proceeding." (CCP §1209(a)(1).) Judge Wagoner cited no case authority that supports the extension of these powers to the circumstances here.

In his written response to the commission and at his appearance, Judge Wagoner asserted that his actions were based not only on Ms. Arnold's reported conduct in the courthouse lobby that day, but on prior reports he had received alleging disruptive conduct in the courthouse involving Arnold. Reports of disruptive conduct on prior occasions did not give Judge Wagoner authority to order Ms. Arnold to report to his courtroom or to have her arrested for contempt.

Second, the commission found that Judge Wagoner failed to comply with the proper contempt procedures by remanding Ms. Arnold to jail without a hearing. It is misconduct for a judge to use the contempt power to incarcerate someone without following the correct contempt procedures, which include notice and the opportunity to be heard. (See Ryan v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1988) 45 Cal.3d 518, 533.) Judge Wagoner does not dispute that he remanded Ms. Arnold without a hearing. The judge asserts that he understood that a hearing was required, but because they were not in a courtroom and no court reporter was present he felt the better procedure was the one he followed. Judge Wagoner, who was a judge for seven years at the time of the incident, was obligated to know or research the proper contempt procedures.

Third, the commission found that Judge Wagoner wrongly adjudicated the matter as one of direct contempt and wrongly found Ms. Arnold guilty of that charge. Direct contempt concerns conduct that occurs in open court or in chambers. (Cal. Judges Benchbook: Civil Proceedings Before Trial (CJER 2008) Sanctions and Contempt, § 17.78, p. 440, italics added.) Because the conduct for which Ms. Arnold was cited did not occur in the judge's courtroom or chambers, it constituted, if anything, indirect contempt.

Fourth, the commission found that the conditions Judge Wagoner placed on Ms. Arnold's contempt sentence – that she obey all laws and all directives of the court for one year – were not authorized by law. Punishment for contempt is governed by Code of Civil Procedure section 1218(a), which provides that a person found guilty of contempt may be fined up to $1,000, or imprisoned for up to five days, or both. However, there is no provision in section 1218(a) that gives a judge the authority to impose conditions on a contempt sentence such as those imposed by Judge Wagoner, which effectively placed Ms. Arnold on court probation for one year and continued the court's jurisdiction over her.

Fifth, the commission found that after adjudicating the contempt charge, Judge Wagoner failed to comply with the proper contempt procedures by failing to issue an order that recited the evidentiary facts supporting the contempt finding. (Koehler v. Superior Court (2010) 181 Cal.App.4th 1153, 1169; In re Jones (1975) 47 Cal.App.3d, 879, 881.)

The California Supreme Court and the commission have stressed that "[t]he contempt power, which permits a single official to deprive a person of his fundamental liberty interest without all of the procedural safeguards normally accompanying such deprivation, must be used with great prudence and caution," and that "[i]t is essential that judges know and follow proper procedures in exercising this power." (Public Admonishment of Judge Lisa Guy-Schall (1999), citing Ryan v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 45 Cal.3d at p. 533; Furey v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1987) 43 Cal.3d 1297, 1314; Cannon v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1975) 14 Cal.3d 678, 694.) Ignorance of proper contempt procedures, without more, constitutes bad faith. (Cannon v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications, supra, 14 Cal.3d at p. 694.)

In determining the level of discipline, the commission found that Judge Wagoner's conduct in this matter was aggravated by the fact that he used the contempt power to incarcerate someone over whom he had no jurisdiction. (See Kloepfer v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1989) 49 Cal.3d 826, 857 ["Ordering a person to appear in court when no matter requiring his attendance is pending constitutes serious misuse of the judicial office"].) The judge's conduct was also aggravated by the fact that he received an advisory letter in 2009 for abusing his authority with regard to individuals who were not before him. He wrote a letter to a married couple, who had submitted information to the grand jury, ordering them to "cease and desist" contact with the grand jury about matters which they had been advised the grand jury no longer desired contact. He improperly threatened to enforce the order with sanctions such as contempt.

The commission concluded that Judge Wagoner's conduct as described above constituted, at a minimum, improper action.

Commission members Hon. Judith D. McConnell, Hon. Frederick P. Horn, Nanci E. Nishimura, Esq., Ms. Barbara Schraeger, Mr. Lawrence Simi, Ms. Maya Dillard Smith, Ms. Sandra Talcott, Mr. Adam N. Torres, Mr. Nathaniel Trives, and Hon. Erica R. Yew voted for a public admonishment. Commission member Anthony P. Capozzi did not participate.

| IN THE MATTER CONCERNING FORMER JUDGE PAUL E. ZELLERBACH | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT |

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge Paul E. Zellerbach, a former judge of the Riverside County Superior Court. Judge Zellerbach and his attorney, Edith Matthai, appeared before the commission on October 19, 2011, to object to the imposition of a public admonishment, pursuant to rule 116 of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance. Having considered the written and oral objections and argument submitted by Judge Zellerbach and his counsel, and good cause appearing, the Commission on Judicial Performance issues this public admonishment pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution, based on the following statement of facts and conclusions.

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND CONCLUSIONS

Judge Zellerbach was a judge of the Riverside County Superior Court from 2000 until January 2011. His last term began in January 2007.

1. On March 18, 2009, Judge Zellerbach heard a discovery motion in the case of People v. Holly Ann Gunnette, No. RIF-136890, over which he had presided since July 2007. The defendant, who had served as treasurer for District Attorney Rod Pacheco's campaign for California State Assembly in 1996, was requesting that the district attorney's office produce documents, including those from Mr. Pacheco's 1996 Assembly campaign, concerning his alleged conflict of interest in prosecuting the case. During the hearing on the discovery motion, Judge Zellerbach made statements that would reasonably be perceived as bias or prejudice against District Attorney Pacheco and his office, as follows.

Judge Zellerbach discussed how he, as a prosecutor, would have handled a particular discovery issue. Supervising Deputy District Attorney Michael Silverman stated that "what you may want to have done as a prosecutor isn't what is necessarily required of me." Judge Zellerbach responded: "I know. I am faced with that issue all the time in the DA's office unfortunately these days." Mr. Silverman replied: "What do you mean by 'unfortunately,' Your Honor?" Judge Zellerbach responded: "Not doing their job properly."

In his written objections to the notice of intended public admonishment and at his appearance, Judge Zellerbach acknowledged that these comments should not have been made, but asked the commission to consider that they were inspired by Mr. Silverman's failure to locate a box of documents which were required to be turned over to the defendant as part of the discovery process. The judge's comments, however, were not limited to the deputy district attorney's conduct in this case but were directed at the entire district attorney's office.

Judge Zellerbach later stated that he was not going to require the district attorney to interview all of his campaign workers from 1996, "though a lot of them still work in the DA's office in his PR firm." (The judge was referring to the District Attorney's Executive Division.) Mr. Silverman responded: "We don't have a PR firm, Your Honor." Judge Zellerbach replied, "Oh, yeah, you do."

Judge Zellerbach states that the "PR firm" label was not his creation but had been used by a local newspaper in reference to the executive division of the district attorney's office under Mr. Pacheco's management. Even so, this does not justify the judge's use of the disparaging label in reference to a party appearing before the judge.

Judge Zellerbach urges the commission to consider all his comments in light of the critical backlog facing Riverside County Superior Court at the time, which he attributes to Mr. Pacheco's policies as district attorney. He notes that there was much public discussion and criticism of Mr. Pacheco's policies within the legal community. The commission does not question the judge's concerns and frustrations over problems facing the courts in his county. Nevertheless, a judge must stay above the fray of political discord in the performance of judicial duties.

The judge's comments about the district attorney's office created an appearance of bias and were disparaging, undignified, and discourteous. The judge's conduct violated canons 1, 2A, 3B(4), and 3B(5). Canon 1 requires judges to observe high standards of conduct so that the integrity and independence of the judiciary is preserved. Canon 2A requires judges to act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary. Canon 3B(4) requires judges to be patient, dignified, and courteous to lawyers and others with whom they deal in an official capacity. Canon 3B(5) prohibits judges, in the performance of judicial duties, from engaging in speech or other conduct that would reasonably be perceived as bias or prejudice.

2. While presiding over the March 18, 2009 discovery hearing in People v. Gunnette, supra, Judge Zellerbach failed to disclose on the record the fact that he was actively considering running for district attorney against Mr. Pacheco. Six days before the hearing, the judge asked a representative of the Riverside City Firefighters' Association political action committee whom the association was going to endorse, and said that he might run for district attorney. This information was reasonably relevant to the question of the judge's disqualification under Code of Civil Procedure section 170.1, subdivision (a)(6)(A)(iii), which provides that a judge is disqualified if, for any reason, "[a] person aware of the facts might reasonably entertain a doubt that the judge would be able to be impartial."

The judge's failure to disclose violated canons 1, 2A, and 3E(2). Canon 3E(2) provides that "[i]n all trial court proceedings, a judge shall disclose on the record information that is reasonably relevant to the question of disqualification under Code of Civil Procedure section 170.1, even if the judge believes there is no actual basis for disqualification."

Although Judge Zellerbach was not necessarily required to disclose the above information in all criminal cases, disclosure was required in Gunnette because it involved issues concerning Mr. Pacheco. The defense alleged that Mr. Pacheco had a conflict of interest in prosecuting the case based on disputes between Mr. Pacheco and Ms. Gunnette in connection with Mr. Pacheco's 1996 campaign for State Assembly during which Ms. Gunnette served as campaign treasurer. Under these circumstances, a person knowing that Judge Zellerbach was actively considering a run against Mr. Pacheco might reasonably entertain a doubt concerning the judge's ability to remain impartial.

3. On March 26, 2009, Judge Zellerbach addressed a gathering of the Riverside County Deputy District Attorneys Association (RCDDAA) on the subject of its endorsement of a candidate for district attorney in the June 2010 election. During his presentation, Judge Zellerbach recommended that the members of the association wait to see who, besides Rod Pacheco, might run for district attorney before deciding whom to endorse. The judge referred to recent public criticism of the district attorney's office due to certain policies allegedly adopted by Mr. Pacheco and the policies' impact on the court. Judge Zellerbach repeatedly referenced what had been written about the district attorney's office in the local press, discussed his time with the district attorney's office, and described how the office used to run when he worked there as compared to how the office was reportedly being run at that time.

By recommending that the RCDDAA delay its endorsement decision, Judge Zellerbach engaged in political activity that may have created the appearance of political bias or impropriety, and gave the appearance that he was opposing a candidate for nonjudicial office. The judge's conduct violated canons 1, 2A, 5, and 5A(2). Canon 5 requires judges to avoid political activity that may create the appearance of political bias or impropriety. Canon 5A(2) prevents judges from publicly opposing candidates for nonjudicial office.

4. On January 30, 2010, Judge Zellerbach told Thomas Hunt, Vice-President of the Riverside Unified School District Board of Education, that he had decided to run for district attorney and would "love" Mr. Hunt's endorsement, or words to that effect. Judge Zellerbach continued to preside over criminal cases being handled by the district attorney's office until at least February 11, 2010, without disclosing on the record that he had decided to run or was seeking endorsements or other support for a campaign. Such information was reasonably relevant to the question of the judge's disqualification because a person aware of the judge's intention to run for district attorney might reasonably entertain a doubt that he would be impartial in criminal cases. (Code of Civ. Proc. § 170.1, subdivision (a)(6)(A)(iii).)

Judge Zellerbach maintains that he continued to be open-minded in all criminal cases after seeking Mr. Hunt's endorsement and after he decided to run. However, disclosure of information is required if "reasonably relevant to the question of disqualification under Code of Civil Procedure section 170.1, even if the judge believes there is no actual basis for disqualification." (Canon 3E(2).)

The judge's failure to disclose violated canons 1, 2A, and 3E(2).

5. Judge Zellerbach was on leave of absence from judicial office from February 25, 2010 until June 9, 2010. On June 8, 2010, Judge Zellerbach was elected Riverside County District Attorney. At the time he ended his leave of absence, the judge's campaign had an outstanding debt of over $200,000, including $50,000 in loans from Judge Zellerbach. After his leave of absence ended, and while he was still a judge, Judge Zellerbach allowed his judicial title to be used to solicit money from individuals to advance his interests in retiring the debt from his campaign for district attorney, as follows.

On August 3, 2010, the campaign solicited contributions in an e-mail sent to employees of the Riverside County District Attorney's Office. The e-mail, from news@judgezellerbach4da.com, had a picture of Judge Zellerbach in a black robe and invited the recipient to "join Judge Paul Zellerbach our District Attorney Elect for the Retire the Debt Fundraiser" on August 4, 2010. The e-mail contained five other references to "Judge Zellerbach" or "Judge Paul Zellerbach" and displayed a judge's gavel in the logo.

Between August 4 and October 28, 2010, Judge Zellerbach attended and spoke at four fundraisers to raise money to retire his campaign debt. The invitations to each fundraiser instructed potential donors who wished to pay by credit card to contribute online at www.judgezellerbach4da.com. A contribution form enclosed with the invitation to at least one fundraiser had the heading "Judge Paul Zellerbach for District Attorney" with a judge's gavel in the logo. The invitations to at least two fundraisers were accompanied by return envelopes addressed to "Judge Zellerbach for District Attorney" or "Judge Paul Zellerbach for District Attorney." At least three of the fundraising events were advertised on Facebook by "Judge Paul Zellerbach for District Attorney." The Facebook entries referred persons to the campaign website, www.judgezellerbach4da.com, which advertised each of the fundraising events and invited individuals to donate to the judge's campaign, while listing Judge Zellerbach's judicial title multiple times and maintaining a judge's gavel in the logo.

Judge Zellerbach was allowed to use his judicial title in his campaign while he was on a leave of absence. (Canon 6H.) However, once Judge Zellerbach returned to the bench, he was bound by the provisions of canon 2B(2) which prevent a judge from using the judicial title to advance the pecuniary or personal interests of the judge or others. By allowing his judicial title to be used to raise money to retire his debt from a campaign for nonjudicial office, Judge Zellerbach violated canons 1, 2A, and 2B(2).

Judge Zellerbach explains that his campaign organization did not consult with him before utilizing his judicial title in connection with the fundraising events. However, as the judge acknowledges, ensuring that his campaign activities complied with this ethical obligations under the canons was ultimately his responsibility.

Judge Zellerbach's conduct described above was, at a minimum, improper action pursuant to article VI, section 18, subdivision (d)(3) of the California Constitution.

DISCIPLINE

In deciding to impose a public admonishment, the commission took into account the number of incidents of misconduct and Judge Zellerbach's history of discipline. In 2006, the judge received a public admonishment for attending a baseball game while a jury was deliberating in a murder case, without having arranged for another judge to take the verdict. When informed that the jury had reached a verdict, Judge Zellerbach was unwilling to allow another judge to take the verdict and did not return from the game to take the verdict himself. The commission found that this was a serious dereliction of judicial duty, and that the judge failed to give his judicial duties precedence over all other activities as required by the Code of Judicial Ethics. In 2003, Judge Zellerbach received an advisory letter for making harsh comments to a doctor who was late to court, and threatening to hold him in contempt. In the present case, the judge also made harsh remarks to a person appearing before him. In addition, the judge engaged in a pattern of misconduct involving his failure to properly consider his ethical obligations while actively considering a run for nonjudicial office and in connection with his campaign for nonjudicial office.

For the foregoing reasons, and to preserve public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary, the commission has determined to issue this public admonishment.

The vote of the commission to impose a public admonishment was 9 ayes and one no. Commission members Hon. Judith D. McConnell, Ms. Mary Lou Aranguren, Anthony P. Capozzi, Esq., Hon. Frederick P. Horn, Nanci E. Nishimura, Esq., Mr. Lawrence Simi, Ms. Maya Dillard Smith, Mr. Nathaniel Trives, and Hon. Erica R. Yew voted for a public admonishment. Commission member Ms. Sandra Talcott would have issued a private admonishment. Commission member Adam N. Torres was recused.

PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE ANTHONY C. EDWARDS

The Commission on Judicial Performance has ordered Judge Anthony C. Edwards publicly admonished pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California constitution and commission rule 115, as set forth in the following statement of facts and reasons found by the commission:

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

Judge Edwards has been a judge of the Trinity County Superior Court since 1998. His current term began in January 2007. Judge Edwards was elected as a justice court judge in Trinity County in 1994; he took the bench in January 1995 as a municipal court judge, pursuant to a constitutional amendment converting justice courts to municipal courts.

On July 7, 2010, defendant Andrew Howard Hall appeared with counsel before Trinity County Superior Court Judge James Woodward, pled not guilty to charges that included attempted murder, and demanded a preliminary examination within statutory time limits. (Case No. 10F095.) Pursuant to Penal Code section 859b, the preliminary examination needed to be held within 10 court days, or by July 21. Judge Woodward set the preliminary examination to take place on July 19, 2010, and directed the court reporter (who was going to be on vacation that week) to make arrangements for another court reporter to be present.

On July 9, 2010, Judge Edwards, who was presiding judge of the court in 2010, set a second preliminary examination to be heard by Judge Woodward on July 19, 2010. On July 12, 2010, Judge Woodward set a third preliminary examination to take place in his department on July 19, 2010. On July 7, 12, and 13, 2010, respectively, Judge Woodward also set three other felony matters to be heard in his department on July 19.

On July 13, 2010, when Judge Edwards knew that at least two preliminary examinations, as well as other matters, had been set for July 19 in Judge Woodward's department, he sent Judge Woodward an e-mail advising him that > there is no need for a reporter [on July 19]. If we can cancel that court reporter today without incurring a claim tell me why we shouldn't. If I don't hear from you I will presume you agree and I will have [Acting Court Executive Officer] L. Wills call her off.

After Judge Woodward responded by e-mail that he had a "number of matters set on the 19th that require a court reporter," including the preliminary hearings, Judge Edwards cancelled the court reporter. On July 14, 2010, Judge Edwards sent Judge Woodward an e-mail informing him that the court reporter had been cancelled because none of the cases set for July 19 required one. Judge Edwards claims (through counsel) that he cancelled the court reporter in an effort to "prompt Judge Woodward to engage in a dialogue about court expenses."

Under Code of Civil Procedure section 269, subdivision (a), an official reporter shall take down proceedings in felony cases on the order of the court or at the request of the prosecution, the defendant or the defendant's counsel. With respect to preliminary hearings, Penal Code section 869 expressly provides that the court may appoint a court reporter in the absence of a request by the parties.

In addition, the Superior Court of Trinity County, Local Rules, rule 1.4(b), provides that "proceedings in felony criminal cases (except initial arraignments prior to the preliminary hearing) are to be reported."

Judge Edwards contends that his cancellation of the court reporter was necessitated by his responsibility as presiding judge "to actively manage the [c]ourt's financial situation." While presiding judges do have responsibility under California Rules of Court, rule 10.603, for management of the court, which includes the allocation of resources and the establishment of budget priorities, this does not extend to intruding on another judge's case-related authority by countermanding that judge's case-related orders. Judge Edwards's purported desire to prompt Judge Woodward to engage in a dialogue about court expenses was not a valid justification for cancellation of the court reporter in Judge Woodward's cases and was for a purpose other than the faithful discharge of judicial duties.

The commission concluded that by cancelling the court reporter, Judge Edwards abused his authority and violated his duties under canons 2A and 3B(2), respectively, to "respect and comply with the law" and to "be faithful to the law…." The commission determined that the conduct of Judge Edwards was, at a minimum, improper action.

In determining to issue a public admonishment, the commission noted that Judge Edwards was previously publicly admonished by the commission in April 2010, shortly before the conduct on Judge Edwards's part that is the subject of this admonishment. That discipline included the judge's abuse of authority by dismissing certain infractions and misdemeanors on the basis that the defendants lived in Hayfork and were cited by law enforcement to appear in Weaverville, and by threatening to do so in all cases. There was no court order or legal requirement that a Hayfork resident's initial court appearance be in Hayfork. (Public Admonishment of Judge Anthony C. Edwards (2010).)

| IN THE MATTER CONCERNING COMMISSIONER ALAN FRIEDENTHAL | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT |

This disciplinary matter concerns Commissioner Alan Friedenthal, a commissioner of the Los Angeles County Superior Court. Commissioner Friedenthal and his attorney, Edith Matthai, appeared before the commission on March 20, 2012, to object to the imposition of a public admonishment, pursuant to rule 116 of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance. Having considered the written and oral objections and argument submitted by Commissioner Friedenthal and his counsel, and good cause appearing, the Commission on Judicial Performance issues this public admonishment pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution, based on the following statement of facts and conclusions.

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND CONCLUSIONS

Commissioner Friedenthal has been a commissioner of the Los Angeles County Superior Court since 2005.

The commission has determined that Commissioner Friedenthal should be severely publicly admonished for committing misconduct and violating the California Code of Judicial Ethics in five family law cases over which he presided between June 2007 and January 2009, as described below. In February 2009, the Los Angeles County Superior Court reassigned Commissioner Friedenthal to a department where he no longer presides over family law matters.

Commissioner Friedenthal's misconduct included making discourteous, undignified, gratuitous and denigrating remarks to litigants, attorneys and related parties, and attempting to engage in humor at the expense of litigants; engaging in conduct that reflected embroilment and conveyed the appearance of bias; engaging in improper ex parte communications; and failing to disclose on the record information that was reasonably relevant to the question of disqualification.

The commission stated the following in the Inquiry Concerning Judge Bruce Van Voorhis, 48 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 257 (2003):

> When a judge lashes out in anger or frustration or personally attacks an attorney or becomes embroiled in a matter, the judge abandons his or her judicial role. This is not to suggest that judges do not become frustrated or angry. The California Code of Judicial Ethics, however, restrains the way a judge may manifest anger or frustration. For example, canon 2A states that a judge "shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary," and canon 3B(4) provides that a judge "shall be" patient, dignified and courteous. Although any evaluation of a judge's conduct should consider the context in which the conduct took place, the canons apply even when a judge is angry or frustrated. (48 Cal.4th CJP Supp. at p. 274.)
> The public looks to judges to set the tone of judicial proceedings. When a judge mistreats staff, belittles counsel or gives vent to his or her anger or frustration, the audience is not only concerned about the result in the specific matter before the court, but worries that other parties, lawyers, jurors and employees will be subjected to similar mistreatment. (48 Cal.4th CJP Supp. at pp. 312-313.)

The commission recognizes that the family law matters described herein were highly contentious and that some of the litigants were challenging. Nevertheless, Commissioner Friedenthal was required to comport himself at all times in accordance with the Code of Judicial Ethics.

Commissioner Friedenthal's misconduct also includes repeated remarks during court proceedings about complaint letters from litigants or a family member of a litigant sent to the supervising family law judge. Such comments not only reflect embroilment, but may inappropriately discourage a litigant from exercising the right to file a complaint against a commissioner with the superior court and give the appearance that the commissioner will be biased against the litigant who filed the complaint in future rulings.

I. T.R. v. A.J.[1]

This case involved two teenage parents, T.R. and A.J., and their child, C.R. The child's father, T.R., lived at home with his mother and her boyfriend (who became T.R.'s stepfather during the proceedings), R.A. The child's mother, A.J., lived at home with her mother, T.J.

Around March 2008, attorney Carol Sternberg began representing the child's father T.R. She appeared by telephone on March 28, 2008, and in court on April 18, 2008. Commissioner Friedenthal failed to disclose at either proceeding that he had provided character testimony on behalf of Ms. Sternberg at a 2007 State Bar proceeding and that he had attended her husband's funeral in 2007.

In his written objections to the imposition of a public admonishment, Commissioner Friendenthal contends the fact that he was subpoenaed to testify at the State Bar proceedings by Ms. Sternberg's counsel is relevant to his duty to disclose. The commission disagrees. A judge may testify as a character witness, "provided the judge does so only when subpoenaed." (Canon 2B(2)(a).) Canon 2B(2)(c) provides a judge may provide factual information in State Bar disciplinary proceedings and "shall provide information responsive to a subpoena." Thus, the commissioner could only offer character testimony pursuant to a subpoena. Most importantly, disclosure was required because the commissioner testified on Ms. Sternberg's behalf, regardless of whether the testimony was pursuant to subpoena. Commissioner Friedenthal's failure to disclose this information violated canon 3E(2), which requires judicial officers to disclose on the record information that is reasonably relevant to the question of disqualification, even if the judge believes there is no actual basis for disqualification.

On May 29, 2008, Commissioner Friedenthal presided over a hearing at which A.J.'s mother, T.J., was not present. Attorney Alan Goldberg represented A.J. who was seeking a change of custody. After Commissioner Friedenthal referred to complaints T.J. had made about him to the supervising family law judge, Commissioner Friedenthal made a number of improper remarks about T.J., including the following:

> THE COURT: Now I want to interject something else for the record. It's been my understanding or my view or perception that, number one, notwithstanding the involvement of maternal grandmother, who to this day is still not a guardian ad litem for [A.J.], okay – there's a compliment coming there that Mr. Goldberg has always been, at least in court – and you're adding to that – he's always been helpful in resolving these out-of-court issues, and Mr. Goldberg has always been a calming influence in the middle of Hurricane [T.J.], and I don't mean that pejoratively. I think the record in this case supports my using that term.

> THE COURT: And again, I am going to make a statement on the record. Please make sure whichever one is your client orders a copy of the transcript for the next letter she's going to write. That the person stirring the pot is consistently [T.J.], not [A.J.], and certainly not Mr. Goldberg.

(R.T. 7:4-9, italics added.)

THE COURT: Much has been made of this in the April 24th, 2008, letter in an attempt to get me to go off this case, and I am going to tell you, Mr. Goldberg, it's never going to happen.

THE COURT: Finally, I want to make a record I was advised at the last hearing by my staff that one [D.V.] [T.J.'s boyfriend] obtained a copy – I'm not sure if it was a transcript or final decision from the State Bar Court [regarding Ms. Sternberg], though I don't agree with that decision – and was parading that and shoving that in Ms. Sternberg's face, and I'm using the word "shove" more figuratively than literally because if it was shoved, I would hope she'd get a restraining order, which I think is inappropriate contact, and feel free to share that with [D.V.], and if he comes to further hearings, I will exclude him. He is not a guardian ad litem. [¶] ... [¶] I just think that is conduct unbecoming an officer, and if it doesn't stop, then maybe with that very language someone will write a letter to the [police] department for which he works.

... I'm convinced ... that [A.J.]'s an empty vessel and that Mom is a marionette manipulator, and that [A.J.] is one of her marionettes ... .

(R.T. 18:24-28, italics added.)

> ... [T.J.]'s relationship with veracity and truth is severely impaired. I would call it a dysfunctional relationship ... .

> [S]he's toxic and detrimental to the best interests of [the child], and I make that as a finding.

(R.T. 24:21-22, italics added.)

> I don't know why she's refused to come. She's told Judge Steinberg she's afraid of me, which I think is hysterical, this pudgy little judicial officer she's afraid of. [¶] ...
> Tell her I have been defanged, and I no longer have rabies.

(R.T. 26:20-27:9.)

> THE COURT: By the way, just for the record, because I'm really in to making a record today – sorry, Debra – [T.J.] carried on mercilessly, unprofessionally, and I can't think of – and despicably in dealing with the staff downstairs when they wouldn't let her see the file. ... I got a report from the clerical staff downstairs. She carried on like a banshee because they told her, "You're not a party, you're not a guardian ad litem, you can't see this." [¶] ... The only people who can see them are the lawyers and the parties. So just I'm (sic) throwing that in just before we recess to let everybody know it's not just me that's got an issue with [T.J.]. It's the staff downstairs.

(R.T. 28:24-29:11.)

> I am going to address it on the record because I know I am going to hear whatever I say come back to me in a letter from [T.J.].

(R.T. 35:15-17, italics added.)

THE COURT: Your mother [T.J.], [A.J.], has no boundaries. Hear some new stuff, if you don't know – doesn't matter whether she's dealing with this court's staff, downstairs in the clerk's office, or whether she's dealing with my supervising judge in terms of thinking she's going to get me kicked off this case. As much as you may go to bed every night praying at the edge of your bed that the good lord will take me from this earth or take me from this case, it's not going to happen, and it's all precipitated by your mother. Okay. Your mom has no concept of boundaries.

MR. GOLDBERG: Your Honor, we are trying –

THE COURT: Transcript's available for ordering.

[A.J.]: [T.J.] doesn't hate him [T.R].

THE COURT: Yes, she does. I don't care – she certainly hates me. I don't care if [D.V.] doesn't care for me, doesn't care for Ms. Sternberg, or doesn't care for [T.J.]. I could make an order, notwithstanding the fact he is a peace officer, that [the child] will not live in the home if [D.V.] is there. Now let's see what your mom thinks about that. [¶] I can make an order that [the child] will not live with you if your mom is in the house. I wish she were in here to hear this. But I'm sure you'll tell her, and she's free to order the transcript so she can write another complaint letter to Judge Steinberg, and I know she's planning a lawsuit against me, and tell her I'm waiting for it.

[A.J.]: Can you not bring that up with me though? I am not my mother.

Commissioner Friedenthal's remarks during the May 29, 2008 proceeding reflected embroilment, created the appearance of bias in violation of canons 1 and 2A, and constituted a failure to be dignified, patient and courteous in violation of canon 3B(4). Canon 1 states in relevant part that "[a] judge should participate in establishing, maintaining, and enforcing high standards of conduct, and shall personally observe those standards so that the integrity and independence of the judiciary will be preserved." Canon 2A states that "[a] judge shall respect and comply with the law and shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary." The Advisory Committee Commentary to canon 2A states in relevant part that a judge "must avoid all impropriety and appearance of impropriety." Canon 3B(4) states that a "judge shall be patient, dignified, and courteous to litigants, ... lawyers, and others with whom the judge deals in an official capacity, ...."

In his written objections to the public admonishment, Commissioner Friedenthal contends that T.J.'s conduct was relevant to T.R.'s request for change of custody. Even so, the commissioner could have expressed his concerns about T.J.'s conduct in a manner that did not violate his duty to be patient, dignified and courteous.

At a hearing on June 5, 2008, Commissioner Friedenthal again referred to T.J.'s complaints about him to the court, stating to A.J., "Remember what I said last week ... I said if your mother, [T.J.], doesn't absent herself from the conflict – and I'm not talking about the conflict, apparently, she and I have, okay, or she has with Judge Steinberg about me. I'm not talking about that." (R.T. 16:10-16, italics added.)

Commissioner Friedenthal's remarks during the June 5, 2008 proceeding reflected embroilment, created the appearance of bias in violation of canon 2A, and constituted a failure to be dignified, patient and courteous in violation of canon 3B(4).

On June 18, 2008, at a hearing at which T.J. and R.A. (who later became T.R.'s stepfather) were present, Commissioner Friedenthal brought up the fact that D.V. (T.J.'s boyfriend) had filed a complaint against him with the court, and said, "I want to say something else that I hope you will carry back to [D.V.]." Commissioner Friedenthal went on to address the interaction between D.V. and Ms. Sternberg that Commissioner Friedenthal had referred to on May 29, which Commissioner Friedenthal did not observe. When attorney Goldberg asked, "Let's move on, Your Honor, please," Commissioner Friedenthal remarked to T.J.:

> THE COURT: No. The letters of complaint are going nowhere so I don't know why you dealing (sic) with [D.V.] and you are persisting in pursuing the matter. But it's your right to do so. And if you got nothing (sic) better to do than do that.

Commissioner Friedenthal's remark that the "letters of complaint are going nowhere" appeared to suggest that complaints about him would serve no purpose, thereby undermining public confidence in the integrity of the judicial system, contrary to canons 1 and 2A, and the remainder of his remark constituted embroilment and violated canon 3B(4).

Later in the proceeding, Commissioner Friedenthal admonished the two teenage parents that if they could not control their parents in the use of certain county agencies as an "offensive weapon to gain an advantage in the litigation, I will take the child away. I will have DCFS pick up [C.R.] and he will go into a placement." (R.T. 59:23-28, italics added.)

Commissioner Friedenthal's threat to take the child way constituted a threatened abuse of authority and contravened canons 1 and 2A.

In August 2008, T.R.'s attorney filed a civil harassment restraining order application following an incident that allegedly occurred at T.R.'s workplace, a Mexican fast food restaurant, involving A.J. and T.J. At a hearing on September 19, 2008, regarding the restraining order, Mr. Goldberg argued that he was entitled to present evidence regarding (father T.R.'s stepfather) R.A. as a defense to the harassment charge, saying that it was "in the statute." Commissioner Friedenthal responded, "Let me write that down. The next time I get mad at somebody who pushes the taco-burrito combo through the window to me, I'll say it was because of [R.A.]." (R.T. 18:16-19, italics added.)

Commissioner Friedenthal's remark, which appeared to be sarcastic, violated canon 3B(4).

T.J. posted a number of comments about Commissioner Friedenthal on an online forum concerning court matters and on a Myspace page. While Commissioner Friedenthal was presiding over this case, he reviewed those posts, which violated canon 3B(7), which prohibits judges from considering ex parte communications concerning a pending proceeding. In his written objections to the intended admonishment, Commissioner Friedenthal states that he believed he could monitor these postings and postings by other litigants to determine if there was a threat to himself or his family. If a judicial officer has safety concerns, the appropriate steps are to alert judicial security and ask them to monitor the posts rather than to review ex parte communications.

II. T.J. v. R.A.

In September 2008, T.J. filed a request in the Chatsworth courthouse for a temporary civil harassment restraining order against R.A. (T.R.'s stepfather), which was granted. Commissioner Friedenthal then had the case transferred to his department in the San Fernando courthouse.

On October 3, 2008, counsel appeared before Commissioner Friedenthal concerning an ex parte motion made by attorney Carol Sternberg, who was representing R.A. in connection with the restraining order. Before that hearing, Commissioner Friedenthal conducted independent investigation of R.A., which included checking online records and having his clerk bring him R.A.'s divorce file and other files involving R.A. and T.J. The commissioner's independent investigation of litigants violated canon 3B(7), which prohibits judges from initiating or considering ex parte communications concerning a pending proceeding. The Advisory Committee Commentary to canon 3B(7) states in relevant part, "A judge must not independently investigate facts in a case and must consider only the evidence presented, unless otherwise authorized by law." The commissioner's independent investigation also reflected embroilment and created the appearance of a lack of impartiality, contrary to canon 2A.

During the proceeding on October 3, 2008, Commissioner Friedenthal made the following two remarks regarding T.J. When referring to previous statements he had made about R.A. and C.R., he remarked to T.J.'s attorney, in reference to T.J.'s complaints against him, "You can order the transcripts again because evidently there's a bottomless pit of money to order transcripts." (R.T. 15:5-7, italics added.) Later, when Mr. Goldberg argued that T.J. was not solely responsible for the heightened conflict in the custody case, Commissioner Friedenthal stated, "It's never [T.J.] It's not [T.J.] who let the registered sex offender live in the back house, as I was told." (R.T. 30:20-22, italics added.) These gratuitous remarks reflected embroilment and violated canon 3B(4).

At the next hearing, on October 17, 2008, A.J. and T.R., the parents of C.R., were present. In the morning, Commissioner Friedenthal made a number of comments about complaints that had been made against him to the court by T.J. and her boyfriend D.V., some of which addressed the facts alleged in those complaints. At one point, Commissioner Friedenthal commented on a complaint T.J. had made to the Commission on Judicial Performance, saying, "It would give it more credibility if Mr. Goldberg joined it. I'm not worried about it, Mr. Goldberg." (R.T. 22:28-23:2, italics added.) The commissioner's comment reflected embroilment and appeared to suggest that filing complaints about him would serve no purpose, thereby undermining public confidence in the integrity of the judicial system, contrary to canon 2A.

In the afternoon, Commissioner Friedenthal referred to T.J.'s online postings about him, noting after beginning a story about himself that "I know I'm going to hear about this later probably on some website, some posting on a website." (R.T. 65:23-25, italics added.) The commissioner's comment reflected embroilment.

During the afternoon of October 17, Commissioner Friedenthal took over the examination of (T.R.'s stepfather) R.A. and questioned him extensively about his background, which created the appearance of embroilment.

A.J. was called as a witness later that afternoon. When she was describing R.A.'s angry demeanor during an incident in support of T.J.'s harassment claim, she said that R.A.'s face was red and that he was shaking. Commissioner Friedenthal remarked, gratuitously and apparently sarcastically, "In June everybody's face is red." (R.T. 86:22, italics added.) His comment violated canon 3B(4).

T.J. posted a number of comments about Commissioner Friedenthal on an online forum concerning court matters and on a Myspace page. While Commissioner Friedenthal was presiding over this case, he reviewed those posts, thereby violating canon 3B(7).

III. M.T. v. M.C.

This matter concerned the minor son of father M.T. and mother M.C.

On June 2, 2008, at a hearing to review visitation, M.C. accused minor's counsel of making untrue statements about her, including that she was a lesbian. Minor's counsel denied making that statement, and M.C. apologized. Commissioner Friedenthal responded by stating, "She called you a Martian, and that was substantiated?" (R.T. 7:8-9, italics added.) This gratuitous and discourteous remark violated canon 3B(4).

At a hearing on August 14, 2008, Commissioner Friedenthal twice referred to the possibility of M.C. complaining about him to the court. When M.C. interrupted minor's counsel, Commissioner Friedenthal said, "Don't interrupt. Remember, by the way, when you're filing a complaint against me with Judge Steinberg, she's going to see the transcript. If she sees you interrupting me all the time, she's going to go – (indicating). Okay?" (R.T. 10:23-27, italics added.) Later in the same hearing, when the court reporter asked M.C. to slow down and said, "I missed half of what she said," Commissioner Friedenthal remarked, "She [the court reporter] lost it. It's not in the record when she [M.C.] wants to send it to Judge Steinberg." (R.T. 23:16-23, italics added.) These remarks created the appearance of embroilment.

At the same August 14 hearing, after M.C. said she didn't want to "bag on" Commissioner Friedenthal (meaning insult or offend Commissioner Friedenthal, according to her), Commissioner Friedenthal remarked, "Bag on me? Is that a legal term?" (R.T. 16:6-7, italics added.) This remark, which appears to be sarcastic, violated canon 3B(4).

During a discussion of the inappropriateness of voicemail messages M.C. had left for M.T., which had been listened to in court, Commissioner Friedenthal asked M.C., who was attending nursing school, whether she thought the way she had dealt with M.T. was something she "had taken away from" a court-ordered parenting class. When she said no, Commissioner Friedenthal responded, "Good. So you flunked. I hope you do better in nursing school." (R.T. 17:6-7, italics added.) This remark, which is denigrating to the litigant and appears to be sarcastic, violated canon 3B(4).

Near the end of the hearing, M.C. expressed her objection to her visitation with her child being monitored. When Commissioner Friedenthal noted, "I guess you didn't hear the tapes," M.C. asked, "So what do tapes have to do with anything?" Commissioner Friedenthal then said, "That's what Tina said to Ike" (referring to the Tina Turner song, "What's Love Got to Do with It?"). (R.T. 30:10-12, italics added.) This apparent attempt at humor at the litigant's expense violated canon 3B(4).

In October 2008, M.T. was awarded custody of the minor son, and it was ordered that M.C. not have contact with him before a trial date in February 2009. A few days later, M.C. left a voicemail message for M.T. that included a highly offensive remark about Jewish people, which may have referred to persons affiliated with the court case. M.T. then sought a restraining order against M.C., which was heard on November 19, 2008.

During the November 19 hearing, Commissioner Friedenthal asked M.C. numerous times who she was referring to in her voicemail message and otherwise referred to her anti-Semitic comment. At one point Commissioner Friedenthal told her "You're going to raise a little Nazi." (R.T. 16:9-18.) At another point, he asked M.C., "Do you want the nursing school administration to see the text of what you said to [M.T. and his wife]?" M.C. said she had already talked to a "few people at school" about it. Commissioner Friedenthal responded, "They're pleased that one of their star nursing students is an anti-Semite." (R.T. 17:6-12, italics added.) Commissioner Friedenthal's remarks at this hearing, in addition to exhibiting improper demeanor, reflected embroilment.

During a hearing on January 15, 2009, at which minor's counsel sought a restraining order against M.C., M.C. complained about not being able to see her son, with whom she had had no contact for several months. She said, "You still have not told me where my son is. Don't – ". Commissioner Friedenthal interrupted and said, "Hold on. [Minor's counsel], didn't I order you to implant the GPS in his blood?" (R.T. 40:9-13, italics added.) Commissioner Friedenthal's attempt at humor constituted a failure to be dignified and courteous to a litigant, contrary to canon 3B(4).

This case involved the minor child of mother L.L. and father T.L. Mother L.L. posted a number of comments about Commissioner Friedenthal on an online forum concerning court matters. While Commissioner Friedenthal was presiding over this case, he reviewed those posts, thereby violating canon 3B(7)'s prohibition against ex parte communications.

L.L.'s posts included references to her belief that Commissioner Friedenthal had not properly disclosed certain ownership interests in real property and that he might own property with minor's counsel in the case, and a suggestion that those concerned about Commissioner Friedenthal should call the District Attorney's Judicial Integrity Unit. One of the posts also referred to what Commissioner Friedenthal's "German-Jewish ancestors might think." At a hearing on January 21, 2009, Commissioner Friedenthal made comments about L.L.'s posts, as follows:

> Take good notes. I look forward to reading your summary.

> First, I don't know why you can't find my statement of economic interest for 2007, but if you keep looking, you'll find it, okay, and you won't find anything untoward. Okay. [¶] Second, I don't have any investments or partnerships or any interest in any property owned by Ken Sherman or his family. I have no interest in any property or interest in or any investments with [T.L.] or James [L.], who I assume is a member of his family. So you can continue this witch hunt to your heart's desire. Okay. Knock yourself out. I rule on the facts. I'm not blind. You can call the D.A.'s Judicial Integrity Unit all you want. It's not going anywhere. I've never committed a crime. I am not about to start in this case or any other case. [¶] So thank you for the defamation. Keep that in mind, that it is defamation, and my German-Jewish ancestors would be very proud of me. So thank you very much.

(R.T. 4:13-5:3, italics added.)

In addition to constituting a failure to be patient, dignified and courteous, in violation of canon 3B(4), Commissioner Friedenthal's comments to L.L. created an appearance of bias and embroilment.

V. M.M. v. M.M.

This case involved the custody of a minor child, J.M. The mother had remarried. On June 8, 2007, Commissioner Friedenthal presided over a hearing on an ex parte application that included an allegation that the stepfather, W.R., had hit J.M. when J.M. attempted to stop W.R. from kissing his mother. The following exchange occurred when Commissioner Friedenthal was addressing the mother:

THE COURT: Okay. If any of this bears out, you know he may be living with his dad. [Mother's counsel] advised you of that, I assume?

[MOTHER]: Yes.

THE COURT: So you better have a real good heart to heart with [W.R.], or I will put you in the position of making a choice, [W.R.] or [the child] – smoochie, smoochie, or [the child] – got it?

[MOTHER]: Yes.

Commissioner Friedenthal's undignified and gratuitous remark, made to a mother in a custody dispute, violated canon 3B(4).

At a hearing on July 3, 2007, arrangements were made for the minor child to return by airplane to his father's residence from his mother's residence in another state pending a custody hearing set for August 3, 2007. A supplementary custody evaluation had been ordered. Commissioner Friedenthal ordered the father to pay over $4,000 in fees for minor's counsel and the supplemental custody evaluation. When the father raised his hand to address the issue of payment, Commissioner Friedenthal responded by threatening to place the child with grandparents, as follows:

> [FATHER]: I'm not refusing to pay. I owe a lot of people money –
> THE COURT: Okay. This needs to be grandparent placement because he can't afford to pay the rates for the child. [¶] Where do the [grand]parents live?
> [FATHER'S COUNSEL]: Mexico.
> THE COURT: [Mother]?
> [¶] ... [¶]
> [MOTHER]: My parents are in Mexico.
> THE COURT: You have brothers?
> [MOTHER]: I have a brother in Moorpark.
> THE COURT: I want [minor's counsel] to talk to the brother in Moorpark. [¶] Will you provide that information?
> [FATHER'S COUNSEL]: My client is simply saying he'd like to have a payment arrangement. On that basis, you are going to order –

THE COURT: Marsha Wiley is going to do this evaluation. If I have to stand on my head and walk on my hands all the way down McKay –

[FATHER]: I'm asking for three payments, sir.

[FATHER'S COUNSEL]: Rather than –

[MOTHER'S COUNSEL]: Miss Wiley does not accept that. Most evaluators request –

THE COURT: She wanted 2,500?

[MINOR'S COUNSEL]: No; 3,500 which is very modest.

THE COURT: Follow my order. That's it. No more discussion. [¶] What is your brother's name in Moorpark? [¶] [Mother's counsel] is to provide his name and number to [minor's counsel] for appropriateness of some shared custody.

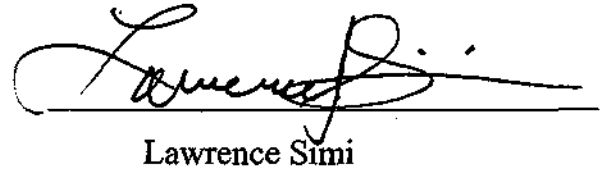
Commissioner Friedenthal's threat to award custody of the child to other family members in response to the father's statements that he was not refusing to pay fees but wanted a payment plan constituted a threatened abuse of authority and violated canons 1, 2A and 3B(4). At his appearance before the commission, the commissioner maintained that his statement concerning a grandparent placement was based on his concerns about the father's parenting abilities. This assertion is refuted by the fact that the commissioner had already ordered a supplemental custody evaluation report and scheduled a custody hearing for the following month, as well as by the commissioner's own words: "This needs to be a grandparent placement because he can't afford to pay the rates for the child." (Italics added.)

Commissioner Friedenthal's conduct in the matters described above was, at a minimum, improper action.



In deciding to issue a public admonishment, the commission took into consideration the number of acts of misconduct and the nature and seriousness of the misconduct. Commissioner Friendenthal describes his misconduct as "momentary lapses" in response to difficult litigants. In the commission's view, his misconduct was not momentary or isolated. He made multiple denigrating and undignified comments toward multiple litigants and related parties in multiple proceedings reflecting a pattern of poor demeanor and embroilment. In addition, his misconduct includes inappropriately commenting on complaints made against him, viewing web posts of litigants concerning matters pending before him, independently investigating facts, and failing to disclose on the record information that was reasonably relevant to the question of disqualification.

For the foregoing reasons, and to preserve public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary, the commission has determined to issue this this public admonishment.

The vote of the commission to impose a public admonishment was 9 ayes and one no. Commission members Mr. Lawrence Simi, Ms. Mary Lou Aranguren, Anthony P. Capozzi, Esq., Hon. Frederick P. Horn, Hon. Judith D. McConnell, Nanci E. Nishimura, Esq., Ms. Sandra Talcott, Mr. Adam N. Torres, and Mr. Nathaniel Trives voted for a public admonishment. Commission member Hon. Erica R. Yew would have issued a private admonishment. Commission member Ms. Maya Dillard Smith did not participate.

| IN THE MATTER CONCERNING JUDGE JOHN D. KIRIHARA | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT |
|---|---|

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge John D. Kirihara, a judge of the Merced County Superior Court since 2001. His current term began in 2009. Judge Kirihara and his attorney, James A. Murphy, appeared before the commission on May 8, 2012, to object to the imposition of a public admonishment, pursuant to rule 116 of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance. Having considered the written and oral objections and argument submitted by Judge Kirihara and his counsel, and good cause appearing, the Commission on Judicial Performance issues this public admonishment pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution, based on the following statement of facts and reasons.

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

1. Decisional Delay

Judges are required to dispose of all judicial matters promptly and efficiently. (Canon 3B(8).) The Supreme Court has found that California Constitution, article VI, section 19, and Government Code section 68210, discussed below, "reflect the judgment of the Legislature and the electorate that this period [90 days] affords a reasonable time within which to expect a trial judge to carry out the basic responsibility of a judge to decide cases." (Mardikian v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1985) 40 Cal.3d 473, 477, fn. 4.)

Judge Kirihara violated his duty to dispose of all judicial matters promptly and efficiently by failing to issue timely rulings in the following submitted matters:

(a) On January 22, 2010, Judge Kirihara took under submission the case of Gregory Rodrigues v. CVP Acquisition Corp., et al., No. CU148156. Judge Kirihara failed to rule on the matter until December 8, 2010, 320 days after it was taken under submission.

(b) On June 18, 2010, Judge Kirihara took under submission the case of Estate of Vernon E. Lustre, No. P24707. Judge Kirihara was later reminded of the fact that the case was under submission and undecided for over 90 days. On December 13, 2010, Judge Kirihara received an email from a court clerk stating that an attorney had inquired about the status of the case, and that Judge Kirihara had taken the case under submission in June 2010. Judge Kirihara failed to rule on the matter until February 10, 2011, 237 days after it was taken under submission.

(c) On November 12, 2010, in Petition of Family Trust of Ray Buie, No. P23034, Judge Kirihara took under submission the Petition of Successor Trustee, John Van Curen, for Settlement of Third Account and Report. Judge Kirihara failed to rule on the petition until March 2, 2011, 110 days after it was taken under submission.

Judge Kirihara's failure to decide the above matters within 90 days after they were taken under submission violated canon 3B(8), which requires that judges dispose of all judicial matters promptly and efficiently.

2. Submission of False Salary Affidavits

The California Constitution provides that a judge may not receive a salary "while any cause before the judge remains pending and undetermined for 90 days after it has been submitted for decision." (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 19.) To be paid, the judge must sign an affidavit to that effect. (Gov. Code, § 68210.) Payment is not forfeited, but simply postponed until the submitted matter is decided. (Hassanally v. Firestone (1996) 51 Cal.App.4th 1241, 1244-1245.)

Judge Kirihara signed and caused to be submitted on his behalf, 11 salary affidavits that falsely stated that no cause remained pending and undetermined that had been submitted to him for decision for the period of 90 days prior to May 1, June 1, July 1, August 1, September 1, October 1, November 1, and December 1, 2010, and January 1, February 1, and March 1, 2011. Judge Kirihara allowed each of the salary affidavits to be processed, and received his salary for judicial office in violation of law, while a matter in at least one of the cases listed above was pending and undetermined for over 90 days.

Judge Kirihara failed to keep a list of cases he had under submission during the relevant time period, even when he was the presiding judge and had the duty under California Rules of Court, rule 10.603(c)(3), to compile and circulate a list of all matters that had been under submission for more than 30 days. The fact that a judge may be unaware that he or she has matters that have been under submission for more than 90 days, or signs the salary affidavits in advance at a time when the judge has no matters under submission for more than 90 days, is not a defense to a charge of filing false salary affidavits. "A judge who executes a salary affidavit affirming he or she has no overdue rulings should take care to ensure that the statement is true when it is made." (Inquiry Concerning Freedman (2007) 49 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 223, 246.)

Judge Kirihara's conduct violated canons 1 and 2. Canon 1 requires judges to personally observe "high standards of conduct ... so that the integrity and independence of the judiciary will be preserved." Canon 2 requires judges to avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety in all their activities. Canon 2A requires judges to "respect and comply with the law" and to "act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity ... of the judiciary."

3. Failure to Circulate List of Cases Under Submission as Presiding Judge

While Judge Kirihara was presiding judge of the Merced County Superior Court between April 30, 2007, and December 31, 2010, he failed to circulate each month to each judge of the court a complete list of all causes that had been under submission for more than 30 days, as required by California Rules of Court, rule 10.603(c)(3)(C). Rule 10.603(c)(3) provides that the presiding judge, among other things, > must supervise and monitor the number of causes under submission before the judges of the court and ensure that no cause under submission remains undecided and pending for longer than 90 days. As an aid in accomplishing this goal, the presiding judge must:

> (A) Require each judge to report to the presiding judge all causes under submission for more than 30 days and, with respect to each cause, designate whether it has been under submission for 30 through 60 days, 61 through 90 days, or over 90 days;
> (B) Compile a list of all causes under submission before judges of the court, designated as the submitted list, which must include the name of each judge, a list of causes under submission before that judge, and the length of time each cause has been under submission; [and]
> (C) Circulate monthly a complete copy of the submitted list to each judge of the court....

By failing to circulate the submitted lists during his tenure as presiding judge, Judge Kirihara violated canon 3C(1), which requires that a judge "shall diligently discharge the judge's administrative responsibilities ... in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity of the judiciary."

4. Failure to Respond to Email Inquiring of Submitted Matters

On December 30, 2010, and January 31, February 28, and March 30, 2011, a judicial assistant sent emails to Judge Kirihara asking that he let her know if he had any cases under submission and the dates they were taken under submission. The purpose of the emails was to assist the presiding judge in fulfilling his duties under California Rules of Court, rule 10.603(c)(3). Judge Kirihara failed to respond to the emails even though he had cases that had been under submission for more than 30 days at the time he received each email. Judge Kirihara's conduct violated canon 3C(1), which requires that judges "cooperate with other judges and court officials in the administration of court business."

Judge Kirihara's conduct described above was, at a minimum, improper action and dereliction of duty pursuant to article VI, section 18, subdivision (d)(3) of the California Constitution.

In the commission's view, Judge Kirihara's conduct demonstrates a lack of regard for his obligation to decide matters in a timely manner and ensure the accuracy of his salary affidavits. Over a period of less than a year, Judge Kirihara had three matters that were delayed beyond 90 days, two that were significantly delayed, and allowed 11 false salary affidavits to be processed on his behalf. His indifference is reflected in his failure to keep a list of submitted matters, failure to respond to emails from a judicial assistant asking that he let her know if he had cases under submission, and failure to circulate a list of submitted matters to other judges while he was presiding judge. These are not simply technical requirements for the sake of administrative process. Rather, they are procedures designed to alert judges to decisional delays and prevent the filing of false salary affidavits. Delays in issuing decisions can cause significant financial and emotional harm to litigants and the filing of false salary affidavits lowers public esteem for the judiciary.

Further aggravating the judge's misconduct in the commission's view is the fact that Judge Kirihara had delayed matters and allowed false salary affidavits to be processed on his behalf while he was presiding judge. Presiding judges have the responsibility of monitoring the cases under submission in their county and ensuring that no cases remain undecided for more than 90 days. (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 10.603(c)(3).) Consequently, a presiding judge should be particularly vigilant about monitoring his or her own submitted matters.

For the foregoing reasons, the commission determined to impose this public admonishment.

Commission members Mr. Lawrence J. Simi, Ms. Mary Lou Aranguren, Hon. Frederick P. Horn, Hon. Judith D. McConnell, Nanci E. Nishimura, Esq., Ms. Sandra Talcott, Mr. Adam N. Torres, and Mr. Nathaniel Trives voted for a public admonishment. Commission members Honorable Erica R. Yew and Anthony P. Capozzi, Esq. were recused from this matter. Commission member Ms. Maya Dillard Smith did not participate.

BEFORE THE COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

| IN THE MATTER CONCERNING JUDGE MORRIS D. JACOBSON | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT |

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge Morris D. Jacobson, a judge of the Alameda County Superior Court. Judge Jacobson and his attorney, James A. Murphy, appeared before the commission on June 27, 2012, to object to the imposition of a public admonishment, pursuant to rule 116 of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance. Having considered the written and oral objections and argument submitted by Judge Jacobson and his counsel, and good cause appearing, the Commission on Judicial Performance issues this public admonishment pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution, based on the following statement of facts and conclusions.

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND CONCLUSIONS

Judge Jacobson has been a judge of the Alameda County Superior Court since December 2005. His current term began in January 2009.

On October 13, 2010, the judge presided over the matter of People v. Andrew Barrientos, No. 564482A, which was on calendar for Mr. Barrientos's motion to continue the preliminary hearing scheduled for the following day. Mr. Barrientos was charged, among other things, with the attempted murder of a police officer. There were two co-defendants charged as accessories, one of whom had not waived time for the preliminary hearing.

The judge called the case at approximately 9:00 a.m. Attorney Anne Beles appeared on behalf of Mr. Barrientos and Deputy District Attorney John Brouhard appeared for the People. Mr. Barrientos was present; however, the co-defendants were not present. The following colloquy occurred:

> THE COURT: People versus Barrientos, 564482A. Ms. Beles is here along with Mr. Brouhard. Do you want your client --
> MS. BELES: He's here.
> THE COURT: Okay. Very good. You filed a motion to continue preliminary hearing. There's two other defendants in the case, one of the other defendants declined to waive the 10-day rule.
> MS. BELES: That is true.
> THE COURT: I can't do anything in terms of ruling on this at this point until everyone is here. What I do want to do, Ms. Beles, is I'm ordering you to spend every waking moment between now and when we are next in court working on this case. And one of the things I'll be inquiring about is how you've spent your time since --
> MS. BELES: September 30th.
> THE COURT: Is that the day that --
> MS. BELES: Your Honor, I have kept my hours and been very cautious about that. We put this on calendar to make sure that maybe somehow miraculously I can be ready. I cannot be. I will be not able to competently defend Mr. Barrientos at preliminary examination if it is sent out tomorrow. I'm making that record now, and I'll make it tomorrow morning.
> THE COURT: Plan on it being sent out as long as it's in a no time waiver basis on a 10-day rule, that's what I'm telling you to plan on. I'm telling you to spend every waking moment working on it, and I'll take this matter up tomorrow. [¶] I have not read your papers yet. You just mentioned at side-bar that you've got 1,100 pages of discovery. Mr. Brouhard just produced some sort of gang report. [¶] I'm saying to you that one of the things that I'm looking at is if Mr. Brouhard is able to be ready as the person who carries the burden of proof, you can imagine how that's part of the context. If he can be ready I expect that you can be ready.

MS. BELES: I thought that you might say that. I would like the Court to be aware even before it reads my papers, which I did file yesterday, that Mr. Brouhard has been integral in the investigation. So the statements that I am reviewing, many of which Mr. Brouhard conducted, so it is a different situation where we have a District Attorney who is faced with a certain amount of information. He was there, so he doesn't need to review these hours of statements. But I can't do it all. [¶] I've also requested an in-camera discussion tomorrow, because some of what I have done and some of what I would need to do in order to be competent would compromise defense strategy, so I would request an in-camera at that time.

THE COURT: We'll take that up tomorrow. I'm telling you since September 30th there's plenty of time to read and absorb 1,100 pages of stuff.

MS. BELES: There is not, and I strongly disagree.

THE COURT: I read about 2,000 pages a week. You and I differ on that. I read nearly 500 pages of documents every day. I'm not real sympathetic to 1,100 pages is so overwhelming. [¶] Why don't you bring your discovery with you tomorrow, because I'm going to look through it and see what 1,100 pages consists of. Please bring that and be ready to go tomorrow, that's my order to you today. We'll take up the --

MS. BELES: You --

THE COURT: Please let me finish. We'll take up the 1050 tomorrow morning when all parties are here.

MS. BELES: 9:00 or 8:30?

THE COURT: You need to contact co-counsel. I can't do anything until everyone is here. The sooner you get here the sooner I will deal with it. There's a starting place. [¶] Work all day today, work all night. Get up early tomorrow morning --

MS. BELES: Your Honor, I don't need your advice on how to be competent.

THE COURT: That is contemptuous. That is contemptuous. That was disrespectful. Take a seat.

Following the above colloquy, Ms. Beles took a seat in the courtroom and the judge called a brief recess during which he went to chambers to gather his thoughts and review a checklist to be followed in adjudicating a contempt. The judge subsequently returned to the bench and called other cases. At approximately 10:20 a.m., while the judge was handling a hearing in another matter, Ms. Beles walked across the courtroom to obtain a portion of the Barrientos file to review. The judge stated to Ms. Beles from the bench that she was to take a seat and remain in the courtroom as she had been told. Ms. Beles complied.

At approximately 11:05 a.m., the judge re-called the Barrientos case. The judge ordered Ms. Beles to return at 2:00 p.m. that afternoon for a hearing. Ms. Beles apologized for her earlier remark, which she said was "improper and too informal." The judge stated that he was holding the hearing in the afternoon out of consideration to Ms. Beles because fewer people would be present. Mr. Barrientos waived his appearance for the afternoon hearing.

At approximately 2:35 p.m., the judge called the Barrientos case for the contempt hearing. Ms. Beles was present. The judge proceeded to describe what had occurred when the case had been called during the morning calendar and he explained why the contempt hearing had been continued to the afternoon. When Ms. Beles was allowed to speak, she again apologized for her conduct that morning. However, she did not concede that her remark was contemptuous on its face or that the court had the authority "to order [her] to do certain things." The judge stated that he appreciated and accepted the apology. He stated that he had not been advising Ms. Beles on how to practice law, but instead was "ordering [her] how to spend the next 24 hours." The judge stated that he thought he had the authority, in the context of a no time waiver preliminary hearing, to order her to work on the Barrientos case alone and to not engage in social functions. The judge did not find Ms. Beles to have been in contempt.

The commission determined that Judge Jacobson's actions constituted abuse of the contempt power and abuse of authority. Whether or not Ms. Beles's remark constituted contempt, it was improper for the judge to have ordered her to remain in the courtroom from the time she was told to "take a seat" until the case was re-called at approximately 11:05 a.m. – a period of over an hour and a half – without adjudicating the alleged contempt. In a direct contempt situation, a judge may detain an alleged contemnor in the courtroom for the time necessary to review the contempt checklist and compose oneself. (Rothman, California Judicial Conduct Handbook (3d ed. 2007) § 4.22, p. 164.) Here, however, Judge Jacobson's detention of Ms. Beles continued long after he took a recess for those purposes. In the commission's view, requiring Ms. Beles, who had not been found in contempt, to remain in the courtroom pending a contempt hearing that was to take place at a later, unspecified time was tantamount to punishing her for contempt without a hearing. It is misconduct for a judge to impose punishment for contempt without first adjudicating the contempt and sentencing the contemnor. (See Ryan v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1988) 45 Cal.3d 518, 533.)

In his response to the commission, Judge Jacobson maintained that he continued to have jurisdiction over the case, the parties, and the attorneys until the conclusion of the Barrientos hearing that afternoon. However, the judge cited no authority, and the commission is aware of none, that supports the proposition that a court can continue to detain an individual for a direct contempt when the matter is not summarily adjudicated and the contempt hearing is put off to a later time. The judge also asserted that his intention during the morning session was to proceed with the contempt hearing as soon as he was able to clear some cases off the calendar, in order to avoid embarrassment to Ms. Beles, but other matters took too long. The commission noted that the judge could have expeditiously conducted a contempt hearing in chambers, which would have avoided any undue embarrassment to Ms. Beles. (See Rothman, California Judicial Conduct Handbook, supra, § 4.35, p.188; Hawk v. Superior Court (1974) 42 Cal.App.3d 108, 131.) Further, the commission notes the paradox in detaining Ms. Belles in the courtroom for over an hour and a half after having ordered her to spend every waking moment working on the case.

The commission further found that Judge Jacobson abused his authority by ordering Ms. Beles to "spend every waking moment" working on the Barrientos case until the time set for the preliminary hearing, to the exclusion of other cases and social activity. In his objections to the notice of intended public admonishment, Judge Jacobson contended that his direction to Ms. Beles was in accord with statutes discouraging continuances in criminal cases and authorizing a judge to relieve assigned counsel[1] or impose sanctions upon assigned counsel who, without good cause, is not ready for a preliminary hearing. (Pen. Code, §§ 1050(a), (e); 987.05.) These statutes require a judge to deny a motion for a continuance absent good cause; they do not permit a judge to direct an attorney on how to prepare his or her case.

Judge Jacobson states that his intention was to give Ms. Beles a "heads up" on what she would need to establish in order to have her motion for a continuance granted. However, that is not what Judge Jacobson said. He did not inform Ms. Beles that her convenience or other work commitments would not be considered in determining good cause. Rather, he stated, "I'm ordering you to spend every waking moment between now and when we are next in court working on this case."

Judge Jacobson also asserts that the commission's decision will chill judges from probing into the grounds for a requested continuance. There is a clear distinction between asking questions to determine why an attorney is not prepared and ordering an attorney to spend every waking moment working on a case.

[1] Penal Code section 987.05 authorizes a judge to sanction or remove an attorney who accepted assignment of a criminal case after representing that he or she would be ready to proceed with the preliminary investigation or trial, and thereafter, without good cause, is not ready on the date set. This section applies to appointed counsel. Judge Jacobson acknowledges that he does not know whether Ms. Beles was appointed.

The commission concluded that the judge's order constituted an abuse of authority and violated canon 1, which requires judges to uphold the integrity and independence of the judiciary, and canon 2A, which requires judges to act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary.

The commission also found that the judge's statements to Ms. Beles during the morning court session to "spend every waking moment" on the case, to "work all day today, work all night" and "get up early tomorrow," violated canon 3B(4), which requires judges to be patient, dignified, and courteous to those persons with whom they deal in an official capacity. The commission concluded that the judge's remarks were demeaning and discourteous because they appear to call into question Ms. Beles's work ethic and suggest she had not adequately prepared her case. As they were made in the presence of her client, they are also the type of remarks that could be expected to damage the attorney-client relationship.

The commission concluded that Judge Jacobson's conduct as described above constituted, at a minimum, improper action.

Judge Jacobson's prior discipline for similar misconduct was a significant factor in the commission's determination to impose this public admonishment. In 2010, the judge received a strong advisory letter for abuse of authority and poor demeanor. The judge ordered an attorney to appear in his court when no matter requiring the attorney's presence was pending. When the attorney appeared, the judge chastised him for engaging in what the judge perceived as an improper ex parte communication arising out of the attorney's discussion of a matter with a court administrator. The judge ordered the attorney to remain in the courtroom while the judge summoned opposing counsel in one of the attorney's cases that was awaiting trial, after which he conducted an un-calendared hearing. In the commission's view, Judge Jacobson's repeat of similar misconduct in the present case reflects a lack of appreciation for the bounds of his authority and his duty to treat those who appear before him with courtesy, dignity and respect.

The vote of the commission to impose a public admonishment was 7 ayes and three noes. Commission members Mr. Lawrence Simi, Anthony P. Capozzi, Esq., Hon. Frederick P. Horn, Hon. Judith D. McConnell, Nanci E. Nishimura, Esq., Mr. Adam N. Torres, and Mr. Nathaniel Trives voted for a public admonishment. Commission members Hon. Erica R. Yew, Ms. Maya Dillard Smith and Ms. Sandra Talcott would have issued a private admonishment. Commission member Ms. Mary Lou Aranguren did not participate.

| IN THE MATTER CONCERNING JUDGE CHARLES R. BREHMER | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT |

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge Charles R. Brehmer of the Kern County Superior Court. Judge Brehmer and his attorney, Paul S. Meyer, appeared before the commission to object to the imposition of a public admonishment, pursuant to rule 116 of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance. Having considered the written and oral objections and argument submitted by Judge Brehmer and his counsel, and good cause appearing, the Commission on Judicial Performance issues this public admonishment pursuant to article VI, section 18, subdivision (d) of the California Constitution, based on the following statement of facts and conclusions.

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND CONCLUSIONS

Judge Brehmer has been a judge of the Kern County Superior Court since January 2009, when he began his current term.

This public admonishment is based on violations of the Political Reform Act (Act)[1] that occurred during and after the judge's successful 2008 campaign for judicial office. The judge was an attorney-candidate in that election.

On July 18, 2011, following an investigation by the Fair Political Practices Commission (FPPC) that arose from an audit of the judge's campaign committee, the judge signed a stipulation with the FPPC wherein he admitted to three counts of violating the Act and agreed to pay a $5,500 fine. On September 29, 2011, the stipulation was approved by the FPPC and entered as its decision and order. The judge admitted to the following FPPC charges:

- The judge and his campaign treasurer received three cash contributions of $100 or more, in violation of Government Code section 84300, subdivision (a). The Act prohibits receiving cash contributions of $100 or more. The cash contributions were (1) $1,000 from the Law Offices of Young & Nichols, received on or about April 25, 2008; (2) $500 from Steve Nichols, received on or about October 2, 2008; and (3) $500 from Todd Gall, received on or about October 2, 2008.
- The judge and his campaign treasurer failed to disclose the true source of a $15,000 loan that the campaign treasurer made to the campaign on or about October 24, 2008, in violation of Government Code sections 84211, subdivision (g), and 84301. The campaign treasurer provided the loan funds to the judge, so that the judge could contribute the funds from his personal account to the campaign account. On ensuing campaign statements, the loan was reported as having been received from the judge rather than the campaign treasurer, even though the campaign treasurer was the true source of the contribution.
- The judge and his campaign treasurer failed to timely file two semi-annual campaign statements for the reporting periods of January 1, 2009 through June 30, 2009, and July 1, 2009 through December 31, 2009, in violation of Government Code section 84200, subdivision (a). The semi-annual statements were due by July 31, 2009 and January 31, 2010, respectively. The semi-annual statements were required to be filed because of the following campaign activity: during the first reporting period there were expenditures of approximately $12,300; during the second reporting period there was a $15,750 payment made to the campaign treasurer to repay the loan.

The commission found that Judge Brehmer also committed violations of the Act not addressed in the FPPC stipulation. The additional violations found by the commission are as follows:

- On a pre-election campaign statement that was filed for the July 1, 2008 through September 30, 2008 reporting period, the judge failed to disclose $9,000 in contributions, in violation of Government Code section 84211, subdivisions (a), (c), and (f). The undisclosed contributions were (1) $5,000 from the Bakersfield Police Officers Association PAC; (2) $2,000 from Lois M. Brehmer; and (3) $2,000 from Sierra Process Systems, Inc. The judge admitted this conduct in his response to the commission's preliminary investigation letter.
- The judge failed to timely file the semi-annual campaign statement for the October 19, 2008 through December 31, 2008 reporting period, during which there were campaign contributions of $20,349 and campaign expenditures of $16,919, in violation of Government Code section 84200, subdivision (a). The semi-annual campaign statement was due by January 31, 2009. The judge admitted this conduct in his response to the commission's preliminary investigation letter.
- The judge failed to deposit the $15,000 campaign loan that he received from his campaign treasurer into the campaign committee's bank account and instead deposited it into his personal account, in violation of Government Code section 85201, subdivision (c). In his response to the commission, the judge denied that his conduct violated section 85201, subdivision (c). The judge asserted that "[t]he loan was a personal loan and the proceeds were shortly deposited into the campaign account after having been placed into [his] personal account." He also asserted that the funds deposited into the campaign account were his funds "freed up by the loan" from the campaign treasurer. The commission concluded, however, that the loan was clearly intended to be used in connection with the judge's campaign, as opposed to being a personal loan for other purposes, as evidenced by the written document memorializing the loan, titled "Election Campaign Loan Agreement," which was signed by the judge and the campaign treasurer. Because this was a campaign loan, the proceeds should have been deposited directly into the campaign committee's bank account.

The FPPC found, and the commission concurs, that there is no evidence of any intent to conceal information from the public on the part of Judge Brehmer. In the commission's view, the violations of the Act discussed above were the result of a failure to oversee sufficiently the work of an inexperienced campaign treasurer handling the campaign's reporting requirements. The commission noted that the judge amended his campaign statements after the problems with his filings were brought to his attention (post-election), and that the cash contributions were timely reported in various campaign statements. Judge Brehmer has acknowledged that ensuring that his campaign activities were in compliance with the law was his obligation, and has accepted responsibility for his conduct.

DISCIPLINE

An express purpose of the Political Reform Act, as set forth in Government Code section 81002, subdivision (a), is to ensure that "[r]eceipts and expenditures in election campaigns ... [are] fully and truthfully disclosed in order that the voters may be fully informed and improper practices may be inhibited." Judge Brehmer's multiple failures to comply with his campaign reporting obligations undermined this basic purpose of the Act. Public confidence in the integrity of the judicial campaign process and the judiciary is harmed when the public is deprived of important information, such as sources of contributions and amounts of expenditures made by a campaign. The judge's failure to obey the Act's requirements in his campaign for judicial office constitutes conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute. In addition, the violations of the Act that occurred after the judge took the oath of judicial office also constitute violations of the Code of Judicial Ethics canon 3B(2), which requires a judge to be faithful to the law, and canon 2A, which requires a judge to comply with the law and to act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity of the judiciary.

For the forgoing reasons, the commission has determined to impose this public admonishment.

The vote of the commission to impose a public admonishment was 9 ayes and 2 noes. Commission members Mr. Lawrence Simi; Ms. Mary Lou Aranguren; Anthony P. Capozzi, Esq.; Hon. Frederick P. Horn; Hon. Judith D. McConnell; Nanci E. Nishimura, Esq.; Mr. Adam N. Torres; Ms. Maya Dillard Smith; and Mr. Nathaniel Trives voted for a public admonishment. Commission members Hon. Erica R. Yew, and Ms. Sandra Talcott would have issued a private admonishment.

| IN THE MATTER CONCERNING JUDGE DEREK G. JOHNSON | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT |
|---|---|

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge Derek G. Johnson of the Orange County Superior Court. Judge Johnson and his attorney, Paul S. Meyer, appeared before the commission on December 5, 2012 to object to the imposition of a public admonishment, pursuant to rule 116 of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance. Having considered the written and oral objections and argument submitted by Judge Johnson and his counsel, and good cause appearing, the Commission on Judicial Performance issues this public admonishment pursuant to article VI, section 18, subdivision (d) of the California Constitution, based on the following statement of facts and conclusions.

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND CONCLUSIONS

Judge Johnson has been a judge of the Orange County Superior Court since 2000. His current term began in January 2009.

Judge Johnson is publicly admonished for remarks he made while sentencing a defendant convicted of rape and other sexual assault offenses. The comments created the impression that the judge was not impartial in cases involving rape without serious bodily injury showing resistance by the victim.

On June 20, 2008, Judge Johnson presided at sentencing in People v. Metin Riza Gurel. The defendant had been convicted at a jury trial held before the judge of rape, forcible oral copulation, domestic battery with corporal injury, stalking, and three counts of criminal threats, with use of a deadly weapon as to one count of criminal threats.

The underlying facts are set forth in the Court of Appeal's nonpublished opinion affirming the defendant's convictions. The defendant and the victim began dating in 2004 and moved in together in 2006. While they lived together, the defendant threatened the victim with a knife and threatened to slash her throat with a broken compact disk. The victim reported this conduct to the police in early 2007, and the defendant moved out at her request, but the two continued to date on and off until September 2007. They had consensual sex in October 2007. After they stopped dating, the victim continued communicating with the defendant but became increasingly concerned he would hurt her. At one point, the victim found her front door lock jammed so it could not be locked, and was unable to access her home computer. She believed that he had access to her computer because he knew everything she was doing. In the week prior to November 10, 2007, the defendant spoke to the victim on the telephone daily. In each conversation, he threatened to get her fired from her job or blow up her car, and claimed he had access to her apartment.

On the night of November 10, 2007, the defendant showed up at a restaurant where the victim was on a date with another man. The defendant referred to the man by name and threatened the victim while making a slicing motion across his throat. When the victim went to her car, she found that one of her tires had been slashed. After she reached home, the defendant called, threatening to blow up her car and cause her to lose her job if she failed to arrive at his apartment within 20 minutes. She went to his apartment where the defendant bruised her breast with a metal baton, shattered her cell phone, heated a screwdriver and threatened to use it to maim her face and vagina, threatened to burn her face and hair with a lit cigarette lighter, and threatened to shoot and kill her. He ordered her to perform fellatio, raped her, and ejaculated in her mouth. The victim did not leave after the defendant fell asleep because he was a light sleeper.

The next morning, the defendant demanded that the victim make him breakfast and told her she would live at his apartment. She convinced the defendant to allow her to return to her apartment on her own to collect her clothing. She drove to the police station, where she reported the defendant's threats from the previous evening. In an interview about 17 days later, she reported the rape.

At the sentencing proceeding, Judge Johnson heard and rejected the prosecutor's argument that the rape and oral copulation should be considered "separate occasions" mandating full consecutive sentences; he pointed out differences between certain cases cited by the prosecutor and the case before him, and referred to another case as "just a bunch of dicta." The judge then said that he would give counsel a "preview" of what he intended to do. He stated that he intended to impose the mid-term (six years in state prison) on count 1, impose concurrent six-year terms on each of the other six counts, and stay the enhancement, for a total term of six years. The prosecutor asked the judge if he was running the sentences as to counts 1 and 2 concurrent solely because he was finding them to be the same occasion, and continued, "[C]an I ask why the court is exercising its discretionary power ... to run the[m] concurrent, or is the court finding that they're merging for some reason?" The judge said that he was "not finding merger at all," but was finding, after hearing the case, including the preliminary hearing, that the case was "worth six years." Counsel was given an opportunity to be heard and declined. The following then occurred:

> THE COURT: All right. Let me tell you why I'm going to sentence Mr. Gurel to six years only in spite of the People's request for—
> MS. SNYDER: Sixteen.
> THE COURT: —16. And that is, I spent my last year and a half in the D.A.'s office in the sexual assault unit. I know something about sexual assault. I've seen sexual assault. I've seen women who have been ravaged and savaged whose vagina was shredded by the rape. I'm not a gynecologist, but I can tell you something: If someone doesn't want to have sexual intercourse, the body shuts down. The body will not permit that to happen unless a lot of damage is inflicted, and we heard nothing about that in this case. That tells me that the victim in this case, although she wasn't necessarily willing, she didn't put up a fight. And to treat this case like the rape cases that we all hear about is an insult to victims of rape. I think it's an insult. I think it trivializes a rape.

MS. SNYDER: May I respond, Your Honor?

THE COURT: Pardon?

MS. SNYDER: May I respond?

THE COURT: I'm just telling you. We don't need to get into a discussion. You are free to join in, but I'm telling you the reasons why I think this case is worth six years because it's the mid-term. There's nothing in mitigation. There's nothing in aggravation. And it's what the jury has put in front of me.

MS. SNYDER: All I wanted to say, Your Honor, was I'm — obviously, it's a rape because she was not willing. I'm not in any way equating this to a stranger rape, to a forcible rape where she was beaten ... so it's not the People's intention and position to in any way trivialize what we normally consider to be true victims of rape. I just — in speaking with her and seeing her testify, I know that she doesn't feel any less of a rape victim because she had a relationship with him or she had at one time engaged in sexual intercourse with him. I understand the court's reasoning when you're looking at the cases in comparison, and I understand the court's position on them being the same occasion. The only thing I would ask, and maybe I shouldn't have submitted as quickly as I did, is on count 1 why the court is not finding there to be any circumstances in aggravation to aggravate the term to eight years based on the fact that there were threats involved, there was a weapon involved, and just that there are aggravating circumstances that do apply where not many mitigating do? I was just wondering.

THE COURT: I just found the threats to be technical threats. I found this whole case to be a technical case. The rape is technical. The forced oral copulation is technical. It's more of a crim law test than a real live criminal case. I don't know what more to say.

The judge then imposed the six-year sentence.

The commission concluded that Judge Johnson's remarks — which first became known to the commission in May 2012 — were contrary to canon 2A, which requires a judge to act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary, and canon 3B(5), which requires a judge to perform judicial duties without bias or prejudice, and provides that a judge shall not, in the performance of judicial duties, engage in speech or other conduct that would reasonably be perceived as bias or prejudice. The comments suggested the judge was not impartial towards sexual assault victims who do not "put up a fight," by suggesting that they are not victims of a "real" crime. Further, the judge improperly relied on his own "expert opinion" concerning serious bodily injury showing resistance based on his experiences in the district attorney's office, rather than evidence before him. (See Inquiry Concerning Judge Jose A. Velasquez (2007) 49 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 175, 204; Public Admonishment of Judge Christine K. Moruza (2008) p. 7.)

Judge Johnson's comments that "if someone doesn't want to have sexual intercourse, the body shuts down," and that "the body will not permit that to happen unless a lot of damage was inflicted," were not based upon any evidence before the court, but upon his experience in the district attorney's office involving other cases. The judge's statement that the lack of physical damage showed that the victim "didn't put up a fight," along with his comment immediately thereafter that treating the case before him like other rape cases was "an insult to victims of rape" and "trivializes rape," reflected his own view that a victim must resist in order for there to be a "real" sexual assault — a view that is inconsistent with California law, which since 1980 has contained no requirement of proof that the victim of rape either resisted or was prevented from resisting because of threats. (See Pen. Code, § 261; People v. Iniguez (1994) 7 Cal.4th 847, 854-856.) Judge Johnson's reference to the rape and forced oral copulation as "technical," and his statement that the case was "more of a crim law test than a real live criminal case," similarly signaled his own view that there must be resistance by the victim and associated infliction of serious bodily injury in order for there to be a "real" case involving more than a "technical" sexual assault.

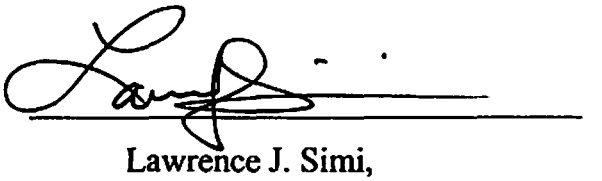
In his response to the commission and at his appearance, Judge Johnson conceded his comments were inappropriate and apologized. He explained that his comments were the result of his frustration with the prosecutor whom he believed was requesting a sentence not authorized by law. He stated that he was attempting to respond to the prosecutor's arguments on the issue of whether the rape and forced oral copulation should be considered "separate occasions" for sentencing purposes, and to distinguish the more aggravated cases cited by the prosecutor. The commission found, however, that none of Judge Johnson's statements set forth above pertained to the prosecutor's argument concerning "separate occasions" or to the cases cited by the prosecutor.



In the commission's view, the judge's remarks reflected outdated, biased and insensitive views about sexual assault victims who do not "put up a fight." Such comments cannot help but diminish public confidence and trust in the impartiality of the judiciary. At a minimum, the judge's conduct constituted improper action.

For the forgoing reasons, the commission has determined to impose this public admonishment.

The vote of the commission to impose a public admonishment was 10 ayes and 0 noes. Commission members Mr. Lawrence J. Simi; Ms. Mary Lou Aranguren; Anthony P. Capozzi, Esq.; Hon. Judith D. McConnell; Nanci E. Nishimura, Esq.; Mr. Adam N.

Torres; Ms. Maya Dillard Smith; Ms. Sandra Talcott; Mr. Nathaniel Trives; and Hon. Erica R. Yew voted for a public admonishment. Commission member Hon. Frederick P. Horn was recused.

INQUIRY CONCERNING JUDGE BRUCE CLAYTON MILLS

SUMMARY

A disciplinary matter was commenced concerning a superior court judge.

The Commission on Judicial Performance publicly admonished the judge. The commission concluded that the judge engaged in prejudicial misconduct and violated Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canons 1, 2, 2A and 2B(2). By communicating his desired resolution of his son's case to the courtroom clerk of the assigned pro tempore judge and participating in a favorable disposition of the matter with the pro tempore judge through channels not available to the public, the judge created an appearance of impropriety that undermined public confidence in the impartiality and integrity of the judiciary. Moreover, the fact that both the courtroom clerk and the pro tempore judge were subordinate to the judge heightened the appearance and reality of impropriety. In aggravation, the judge had been previously disciplined for using his judicial position to bypass proper channels on behalf of his son. In mitigation, the commission took into consideration that the judge did not overtly pressure the courtroom clerk or the pro tempore judge to facilitate the meeting in chambers and told the pro tempore judge to do what she wanted or words to that effect, and the requested disposition was not more lenient than would likely have occurred if the attorney had appeared in open court on behalf of the judge's son. The commission also considered in mitigation the finding that the judge was acting as a concerned parent and the testimony of a number of character witnesses that the judge was hardworking, conscientious, and fair. (Opinion by Lawrence J. Simi, Chairperson.)

HEADNOTES

(1) Judges § 6—Discipline—Prejudicial Misconduct—Nonpublic Areas of Courthouse—Outside Normal Process—Appearance of Impropriety.—A superior court judge engaged in prejudicial misconduct and violated Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canons 1, 2, 2A and 2B(2). By allowing discussion and resolution of his son's case to take place in nonpublic areas of the courthouse and outside the normal process, the judge created an appearance of impropriety that undermined public confidence in the impartiality and integrity of the judiciary.

(2) Judges § 6—Discipline—Burden of Proving Charges—Clear and Convincing Evidence.—The examiner for the Commission on Judicial Performance has the burden of proving the charges against a judge by clear and convincing evidence. Evidence of a charge is clear and convincing so long as there is a high probability that the charge is true.

(3) Judges § 6—Discipline—Special Masters—Factual Findings—Legal Conclusions.—While the Commission on Judicial Performance gives special weight and deference to the factual findings of the special masters because they had the advantage of observing the demeanor of the witnesses, legal conclusions of the masters are entitled to less deference because the commission has expertise in evaluating judicial misconduct.

(4) Judges § 6—Discipline—Prejudicial Misconduct.—Prejudicial misconduct is the second most serious type of judicial misconduct. Prejudicial conduct is distinguishable from willful misconduct in that a judge's acts may constitute prejudicial conduct even if not committed in a judicial capacity, or, if committed in a judicial capacity, not committed in bad faith. Prejudicial conduct is either conduct which a judge undertakes in good faith but which nevertheless would appear to an objective observer to be not only unjudicial conduct but conduct prejudicial to public esteem for the judicial office or willful misconduct out of office, i.e., unjudicial conduct committed in bad faith by a judge not then acting in a judicial capacity. The provision that the conduct must be that which brings the judicial office into disrepute does not require actual notoriety, but only that the conduct, if known to an objective observer, would appear to be prejudicial to public esteem for the judicial office.

The subjective intent or motivation of the judge is not a significant factor in assessing whether prejudicial conduct has occurred under this standard.

(5) Judges § 6—Discipline—Improper Action.—The least serious type of misconduct is improper action. Improper action consists of unjudicial conduct that violates the Code of Judicial Ethics, but does not rise to the level of prejudicial misconduct because, viewed objectively, the conduct would not adversely affect the esteem in which the judiciary is held by members of the public.

(6) Judges § 6—Judicial Conduct—Requirements.—Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canon 2, provides that a judge shall avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety in all the judge's activities. Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canon 1, provides that a judge is required to observe high standards of conduct so that the integrity and independence of the judiciary is preserved. Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canon 2A, provides that a judge shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary. Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canon 2B(2), provides that a judge shall not lend the prestige of judicial office to advance the personal interests of the judge or others.

(7) Judges § 1—Solicitation of Civic or Charitable Contributions—Subordinate Judicial Officer.—A judge is prohibited from seeking civic or charitable contributions from a subordinate judicial officer or temporary judge, although such solicitation is permitted among judges (Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canon 4C(3)(d)(i)).

(8) Judges § 6—Discipline—Factors.—In determining the appropriate level of discipline, the Commission on Judicial Performance considers several factors, including the following: number of incidents of misconduct, the seriousness of the misconduct, whether the judge has prior discipline, whether the judge acknowledges and appreciates the impropriety of his actions, the impact of the misconduct on the judicial system, and the judge's reputation for administering his or her duties in a fair, impartial, and dignified manner.

(9) Judges § 6—Discipline—Capacity to Reform.—A judge's failure to appreciate or admit to the impropriety of his or her acts indicates a lack of capacity to reform.

INTRODUCTION AND SUMMARY

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge Bruce Clayton Mills, a judge of the Contra Costa County Superior Court. The commission commenced this inquiry with the filing of its Notice of Formal Proceedings (Notice) on November 1, 2012. The Notice charges Judge Mills in a single count with engaging in judicial misconduct through his communications with a courtroom clerk and a pro tempore judge in nonpublic areas of the courthouse concerning his son's scheduled court appearance on an order to show cause for failure to complete volunteer work ordered in a tobacco infraction case. The Notice alleges that the judge sought and received credit for time his son spent in a residential program in lieu of the required community service.

The Supreme Court appointed three special masters who held an evidentiary hearing and reported to the commission. The masters are the Honorable Dennis M. Perluss, Associate Justice of the Court of Appeal, Second Appellate District; the Honorable Gail A. Andler, Judge of the Orange County Superior Court; and the Honorable Vincent J. O'Neill, Jr., Judge of the Ventura County Superior Court. Judge Mills is represented by James A. Murphy, Esq., of Murphy, Pearson, Bradley & Feeney in San Francisco, California. The examiners for the commission are Gary W. Schons, Esq., and Valerie Marchant, Esq.

A three-day evidentiary hearing was held before the special masters commencing February 19, 2013, followed by oral argument on April 8, 2013.[1] The masters' report to the commission, containing their findings of fact and conclusions of law, was filed on April 25, 2013. Oral argument before the commission was heard on June 26, 2013.

(1) The masters found that Judge Mills communicated his desired disposition of his son's case and showed supporting documents to the courtroom clerk in an area not accessible to the public and participated in a favorable disposition of the matter in chambers with the pro tempore judge.[2] We adopt the factual findings of the masters. Based on these factual findings, we reach our own independent legal conclusion that Judge Mills engaged in prejudicial misconduct, which is unjudicial conduct prejudicial to public esteem for the judiciary. By allowing discussion and resolution of his son's case to take place in nonpublic areas of the courthouse and outside the normal process, Judge Mills created an appearance of impropriety that undermines public confidence in the impartiality and integrity of the judiciary. Moreover, the fact that both the courtroom clerk and the pro tempore judge were subordinate to the judge heightens the appearance and reality of impropriety.

For reasons discussed in this decision, we conclude that the purpose of judicial discipline—protection of the public, enforcement of rigorous standards of judicial conduct, and maintenance of public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary—can best be accomplished through the imposition of a public admonishment.

FINDINGS OF FACT AND CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

A. Findings of Fact

(2) The examiner has the burden of proving the charges by clear and convincing evidence. (Broadman v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1998) 18 Cal.4th 1079, 1090 [77 Cal.Rptr.2d 408, 959 P.2d 715] (Broadman).) "Evidence of a charge is clear and convincing so long as there is a 'high probability' that the charge is true. [Citations.]" (Ibid.)

Factual findings of the masters are entitled to great weight because the masters have "the advantage of observing the demeanor of the witnesses." (Broadman, supra, 18 Cal.4th at p. 1090; see Inquiry Concerning Freedman (2007) 49 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 223, 232 (Freedman).) We adopt the factual findings of the masters, which we have determined are supported by clear and convincing evidence.

The evidence presented at the hearing before the special masters concerned, for the most part, Judge Mills's conduct surrounding his son's scheduled court appearance at 1:30 p.m. on October 4, 2011, in Department 59 of the Walnut Creek courthouse to show proof of completion of volunteer work in a tobacco infraction case. The son had not completed the volunteer work because he enrolled in a residential treatment program out of state shortly after his guilty plea. The disputed evidence involved Judge Mills's communications before the scheduled hearing with Jane Sims, the clerk in Department 59, and Helen Peters, a pro tempore judge who was scheduled to preside in Department 59 that day. The conflicts in the testimony primarily concerned the number, location, and substance of the judge's conversations with Ms. Sims. Most of the disputes in the evidence were resolved by the masters in accord with Judge Mills's testimony based on the masters' observation of the manner in which the witnesses testified and the extent to which the testimony was consistent or inconsistent with other evidence.

[2] A pro tempore judge is an attorney who serves as a temporary judge once, sporadically, or regularly on a part-time basis by appointment of the superior court. (See Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, Terminology.)

Judge Mills has no objections to the factual findings of the masters. The examiner "notes concern" as to one factual finding relevant to the masters' credibility determination as discussed later in this decision.

In deference to the masters' evaluation of the demeanor of the witnesses and based on our own independent review of the record, we adopt the following factual findings.

On March 2, 2011, Judge Mills appeared with his minor son in Department 59 for his son's arraignment on a charge of possession of tobacco by a minor. Former Commissioner Joel Golub was assigned to Department 59. For more than a decade, Judge Mills and his ex-wife Judge Cheryl Mills[3] had a strained relationship with Commissioner Golub. Shortly after taking office, Judge Mills recommended that Commissioner Golub be replaced. In 2002, Commissioner Golub unsuccessfully ran against Cheryl Mills for judicial office. During the campaign, Commissioner Golub filed a lawsuit against Cheryl Mills that was ultimately dismissed. Cheryl Mills subsequently filed a lawsuit against a person aligned with Commissioner Golub's campaign. The masters aptly described the relationship between Judge Mills and Commissioner Golub as being "marked by strong, mutual antipathy."

Judge Mills expected Commissioner Golub to recuse himself under Code of Civil Procedure section 170.1 from hearing a matter concerning the son of Judge Mills and Judge Cheryl Mills. However, the commissioner did not recuse himself and Judge Mills did not move to disqualify him.[4] Instead,

[3] We refer to respondent Judge Bruce Clayton Mills as Judge Mills throughout this decision. We refer to his former wife, Judge Cheryl Mills, by both her first and last names.

[4] See Rothman, California Judicial Conduct Handbook (3d ed. 2007) section 7.52, page 358 ("Where the party, victim or defendant is a fellow judge or a spouse of a fellow judge, there would at least be a perception of bias, or a reasonable doubt that any judge on the same court would be able to maintain impartiality."); California Judges Association, Formal Ethics Opinion No. 56 (2006) Ethical Considerations When a Judge or a Member of a Judge's Family

Judge Mills asked the commissioner to clarify whether the offense was a misdemeanor or infraction, and the commissioner explained that it was an infraction and accepted the son's plea to the infraction. The son was ordered to complete 20 hours of volunteer work with the American Lung Association or the American Cancer Society and to submit proof of completion to the court.

Shortly after the March court appearance, the son entered a 10-month out-of-state residential rehabilitation program. Consequently, he did not complete the required volunteer work. In mid-September 2011, an order to show cause (OSC) why proof of community service had not been submitted was issued by the court, setting the matter for 1:30 p.m. on October 4, 2011, in Department 59. The son was still in the out-of-state program. Judge Mills and Judge Cheryl Mills discussed the OSC and agreed an attorney should appear for their son because Commissioner Golub would be handling the matter. Judge Mills asked Attorney Elle Falahat, a close friend, to appear on his son's behalf and asked her to request that the community service requirement be satisfied through performance in the rehabilitation program. The judge explained that the therapeutic goal of volunteer work at the American Cancer Society or American Lung Association was served through his son's participation in the rehabilitation program that included counseling related to smoking.

On the morning of the October 4, 2011 scheduled hearing, Judge Mills and Ms. Falahat spoke on the phone several times concerning her anticipated court appearance at 1:30 p.m. Judge Mills asked her to arrive early so he could provide her with documents concerning his son's participation in the rehabilitation program. At 10:21 a.m. Ms. Falahat called Judge Mills on his cell phone and told him she could not appear at the hearing because of an emergency. She told Judge Mills, "We have to continue it obviously." According to Ms. Falahat, Judge Mills was "in a state of panic" and responded, "Let me see how I can handle this." (Judge Mills testified he told Ms. Falahat, "Let me think about what I want to do, and then I'll let you know." He subsequently testified he said to her, "Well, I'll figure out what we're going to do.") Judge Mills did not ask Ms. Falahat to call the clerk's office to obtain a continuance and Ms. Falahat did not offer to do so.[5]

Has Been Arrested or Is Being Prosecuted for Criminal Activity, page 2 ("If the arrest occurs within the jurisdiction of the judge's court, it is recommended that the judge notify the Presiding Judge, so that the case may be assigned to a judge whose impartiality will not be questioned.")

[5] The masters found Ms. Falahat's failure to offer to contact the court to seek a continuance to be a mitigating factor on Judge Mills's behalf. We do not consider this fact to be mitigating because Judge Mills told Ms. Falahat that he would let her know once he decided how he wanted to proceed.

According to Judge Mills's clerk, Joane Quontamatteo, the judge was upset after Ms. Falahat informed him that she could not appear. Ms. Quontamatteo offered to go to Department 59 and inform Ms. Sims that the attorney could not appear and find out what needed to be done. Judge Mills told her he would take care of it himself because it was a personal matter.

Judge Mills went downstairs to seek out Ms. Sims, the clerk in Department 59. He encountered her in the main clerk's office and informed her that neither his son nor the attorney engaged to represent him could attend the OSC hearing that afternoon. Judge Mills responded positively when Ms. Sims informed him that Commissioner Golub was not in that day and Helen Peters would be presiding in Department 59. He said something along the lines of "Well, great; that's better." Ms. Sims asked, "What is it on for?" The judge explained it was an order to show cause for proof of community service and the "lawyer was going to present the records from the program that [his son] is in and ask for credit for time served for the program that he's doing in lieu of the community service." Ms. Sims indicated that the pro tempore judge would want to review such documents to determine if the volunteer service obligation had been satisfied.

Judge Mills then went back to his chambers to retrieve the documents and brought them to Ms. Sims in the administration area of the courthouse. The documents included the parent handbook for the program and invoices for payments to the program. Judge Mills showed the documents to Ms. Sims, but she declined to take them.

As Judge Mills was leaving the courthouse for lunch at around noon that day, he stopped by Ms. Sims's office because he wanted to know "what was going to occur" and what they wanted him to do. Ms. Sims told the judge to come back when he returned from lunch.

Pro Tempore Judge Peters thought she arrived at the Walnut Creek courthouse between 12:30 p.m. and 1:00 p.m. on October 4, 2011. She testified Ms. Sims first told her Judge Mills's son's case was on calendar, an attorney would be appearing, and there was a question of whether the attorney could be given priority on the calendar. Sometime later, Ms. Sims came into chambers and told Ms. Peters the attorney was not available and Judge Mills needed to know whether he could take care of the matter before the start of his own calendar.

The windows in Department 59 chambers look directly into the judges' parking area. Ms. Peters testified that she noticed Judge Mills's car arrive shortly before the beginning of the afternoon calendar. The masters found that Ms. Peters knew an attorney would not be appearing for Judge Mills's son before she saw the judge arrive in the parking lot.[6] The masters concluded that this fact refutes Ms. Sims's testimony that Judge Mills initially told her an attorney would appear and did not disclose that Ms. Falahat had a conflict until after he returned from lunch. The examiner urges the commission to reject this finding because Ms. Peters's observation was based on a "flash" of a car outside the chambers window[7] and because such a scenario is inconsistent with Ms. Sims's testimony on this issue.

We believe the evidence taken in its totality supports the masters' finding that Ms. Peters knew an attorney would not be appearing when she saw Judge Mills enter the parking lot. On cross-examination, Ms. Peters testified, "I knew before Judge Mills'[s] vehicle flashed, if that's what it was, that the lawyer was not going to be appearing. I knew that before he had entered the building that day." And, two other times in her testimony Ms. Peters stated or suggested that she knew the lawyer would not be appearing before she saw the judge enter the parking lot.[8]

Court security records reflect that Judge Mills returned from lunch at precisely 1:30:11 p.m. He immediately went to Ms. Sims's office. Ms. Sims asked the judge to wait while she went to confer with Ms. Peters. In a matter of seconds, Ms. Sims returned and asked Judge Mills to come and talk to Ms. Peters.

Judge Mills and Ms. Sims entered the chambers of Department 59 where Ms. Peters was sitting behind the commissioner's desk. Judge Mills and Ms. Peters greeted each other, and Judge Mills expressed pleasure or relief that she was there instead of Commissioner Golub. When Ms. Peters asked

[6] The masters accepted Ms. Peters's testimony that Ms. Sims initially told her an attorney would be appearing for Judge Mills's son and asked that the matter be given priority on the calendar. However, the masters found that there was not clear and convincing evidence that Judge Mills actually told Ms. Sims that an attorney would be appearing or asked for priority. We have difficulty understanding why Ms. Sims would convey this information to Ms. Peters if Judge Mills had not reported it to her. Nevertheless, we defer to the masters' finding that the examiner did not prove this allegation by clear and convincing evidence based on the masters' credibility determinations and inconsistencies and conflicts in the evidence with respect to when Judge Mills allegedly made this statement to Ms. Sims.

[7] When asked on direct examination if she saw Judge Mills park his car, Ms. Peters replied, "I wasn't really watching. I was just in chambers and it's a view directly outside my window. So I didn't look and say, 'Oh, there's Judge Mills; he [sic] parking.' I just looked up and saw a flash . . . . And I said, 'Oh, that's Judge Mills.' "

[8] "Q. [Mr. Murphy] So before you saw Judge Mills pull into the parking spot and get out of his car, you knew that the lawyer now could not attend the hearing; right? [¶] A. [Ms. Peters] I believe so, yes." Ms. Peters later testified that when she saw Judge Mills pull into the parking lot, "It was my expectation that he would be entering my chambers in order to dispose of [his son's case], yes." She also testified that she knew a lawyer would not be appearing before Ms. Sims came into chambers to tell her the judge had returned from lunch.

what was going on in the case, Judge Mills told her the matter was on calendar for an OSC regarding failure to complete required volunteer work. The judge explained that his son was in an out-of-state program. According to Judge Mills, he then told Ms. Peters his attorney intended to ask for "credit for time served" in the program. According to Ms. Peters, Judge Mills himself asked for that disposition when he entered the chambers. The masters did not expressly resolve this conflict in the testimony because the "practical effect and legal consequences are no different whether Judge Mills himself asked for the disposition or told Ms. Peters the lawyer he engaged to represent [his son] had intended to ask for that disposition." We agree.

Judge Mills said something to Ms. Peters like, "[D]o what you want." Ms. Peters asked Judge Mills about the nature of the rehabilitation program but did not receive or review any documents. Judge Mills explained that his son was participating in outreach in the community while in the program. Ms. Peters concluded that participation in the program would qualify for the community service requirement. As they were leaving chambers, each to begin their own court calendars, Ms. Peters gave Judge Mills a hug.

In assessing her own actions, Ms. Peters testified, "I felt that I made the right decision in the wrong place." The resulting disposition was within her discretion and in all likelihood would have been the same if an attorney had appeared in open court and made the request. When asked if she felt pressured to grant Judge Mills's request because he was a judge, Ms. Peters replied, "Yeah. I did."

Ms. Peters wrote "credit for time served, accepted" on the judge's notes that Ms. Sims had retrieved from her office and brought into chambers. Ms. Sims made a similar notation on the clerk's docket and minutes and also filled in "DAD" on the line for appearances. Judge Mills did not sign the stipulation for a pro tempore judge to hear the matter until the following day, October 5, 2011. However, Ms. Peters's signature on the stipulation is dated October 4, 2011. Although all proceedings in Department 59 are recorded, neither party submitted any evidence of this matter having been recorded.

When Commissioner Golub returned to court on October 6, 2011, Ms. Sims told him about how Judge Mills's son's case was handled. The commissioner told Ms. Sims to contact the supervising judge at the Walnut Creek courthouse, which she did.

B. Conclusions of Law

(3) While we give special weight and deference to the factual findings of the masters because they had the advantage of observing the demeanor of the witnesses, legal conclusions of the masters are entitled to less deference because the commission has "expertise in evaluating judicial misconduct." (Broadman, supra, 18 Cal.4th at p. 1090; see Freedman, supra, 49 Cal.4th CJP Supp. at p. 232.) For reasons explained below, we diverge from the masters in our legal conclusions.

There are three types of judicial misconduct: willful misconduct, prejudicial misconduct and improper action. Only the latter two are pertinent in this case.[9]

(4) Prejudicial misconduct is the second most serious type of judicial misconduct. "Prejudicial conduct is distinguishable from willful misconduct in that a judge's acts may constitute prejudicial conduct even if not committed in a judicial capacity, or, if committed in a judicial capacity, not committed in bad faith. Prejudicial conduct is 'either "conduct which a judge undertakes in good faith but which nevertheless would appear to an objective observer to be not only unjudicial conduct but conduct prejudicial to public esteem for the judicial office" [citation] or "willful misconduct out of office, i.e., unjudicial conduct committed in bad faith by a judge not then acting in a judicial capacity." [citation].' [Citation.]" (Broadman, supra, 18 Cal.4th at pp. 1092–1093.) "The provision that the conduct must be that which 'brings the judicial office into disrepute' does not require actual notoriety, but only that the conduct, if known to an objective observer, would appear to be prejudicial to public esteem for the judicial office. [Citation.]" (Adams v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1995) 10 Cal.4th 866, 878 [42 Cal.Rptr.2d 606, 897 P.2d 544] (Adams).) "The subjective intent or motivation of the judge is not a significant factor in assessing whether prejudicial conduct has occurred under this standard. [Citation.]" (Ibid.)

(5) The least serious type of misconduct is improper action. Improper action consists of unjudicial conduct that violates the Code of Judicial Ethics, but does not rise to the level of prejudicial misconduct because, viewed objectively, the conduct would not adversely affect the esteem in which the judiciary is held by members of the public. (Inquiry Concerning Ross (2005) 49 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 79, 89 (Ross); Adams, supra, 10 Cal.4th at pp. 897–899.)

The masters concluded that by discussing the case with Ms. Peters outside the courtroom and participating in a favorable disposition of the matter in chambers, the judge created an appearance of impropriety in violation of canon 2 of the California Code of Judicial Ethics and engaged in improper action, but not prejudicial misconduct. Further, the masters concluded the judge's communications with Ms. Sims did not constitute misconduct.

(6) The examiner contends that Judge Mills engaged in prejudicial misconduct by meeting with Ms. Peters and in his interactions with Ms. Sims. In addition to violating California Code of Judicial Ethics, canon 2 (a judge shall avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety in all the judge's activities), the examiner contends that Judge Mills violated California Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 1 (a judge is required to observe high standards of conduct so that the integrity and independence of the judiciary is preserved),[10] 2A (a judge shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary), and 2B(2) (a judge shall not lend the prestige of judicial office to advance the personal interests of the judge or others).[11]

Judge Mills urges the commission to reject the masters' legal conclusion that he engaged in misconduct. He maintains in his written brief to the commission that "[t]here was absolutely nothing improper" about his conduct and that he "acted as any concerned parent would in his situation and used the proper channels available to him after he was notified that his son's attorney could not make the 1:30 [p.m.] appearance."

We conclude that Judge Mills engaged in prejudicial misconduct by conveying his desired disposition of his son's case to Ms. Sims and Ms. Peters through channels not available to the public. His conduct falls within the category of prejudicial misconduct arising out of conduct, which, even if not done in bad faith, would appear to an objective observer to be conduct prejudicial to public esteem for the judicial office. (Broadman, supra, 18 Cal.4th at p. 1092; Inquiry Concerning Hall (2006) 49 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 146, 154.) Further, through his communications with Ms. Sims and Ms. Peters, Judge Mills used the prestige of his judicial office to influence the disposition of his son's case in violation of canon 2B(2), and created an appearance of impropriety and compromised the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary in violation of canons 1, 2, and 2A. (See Inquiry Concerning Platt (2002) 48

[10] The California Code of Judicial Ethics was amended effective January 1, 2013. Canon 1 was amended to add the word "impartial," so that it now reads, "An independent, impartial, and honorable judiciary is indispensable to justice in our society." The amendments are not applicable in this case because they were not in effect at the time of the charged conduct.

[11] The Notice also charges Judge Mills with a violation of canon 3B(7), which prohibits a judge from engaging in or considering ex parte communications. The masters concluded Judge Mills did not violate this canon because no party other than his son was involved in the hearing, and the evidence established that the district attorney's office has a policy of not appearing on the calendar at issue in this case. The examiner does not object to this conclusion. We adopt the conclusion of the masters.

When Judge Mills learned the attorney could not appear, he could properly have asked the attorney to seek a continuance, appeared himself at the scheduled hearing, or called the clerk to ask for another date. These are all courses of action available to members of the public faced with a similar situation. Instead, he went beyond what was necessary to inform Ms. Sims of the status of the case and bypassed normal procedures—he approached Ms. Sims in an area not accessible to the public, told her not just that his attorney could not appear but also of his desired resolution, and showed her documents in support of his request. By so doing, he created the appearance that he was using Ms. Sims as a conduit to the assigned judicial officer on behalf of his family member. He also discussed the matter with Ms. Peters in her chambers and off the record before the start of the afternoon calendar.

The masters summarized Judge Mills's actions accordingly: "Although aware he was about to enter an ethical minefield, he elected not to follow the safest path and simply notify the clerk's office of the situation and request a continuance." The path he chose created the appearance that he obtained special access to the court clerk and the pro tempore judge and was able to bypass ordinary procedures by virtue of his position as a judge to the benefit of his son and his own schedule. The case was heard before the start of the calendar to accommodate Judge Mills's need to start his own court calendar on time. When asked to describe the judge's demeanor, Ms. Peters replied, "We were in a hurry. It felt like it was a stop along the way, an inconvenience, something to be done quickly and be finished." Members of the public are required to take time off of work to come to court and do not have the advantage of having their case called before the start of the calendar and off the record to accommodate their work schedule and do not have special access to the judge's clerk in nonpublic areas of the courthouse to provide documentation and arguments in support of their desired disposition. Further, Judge Mills was allowed to discuss the sensitive nature of his son's situation in chambers without going through the same process expected of members of the public who request that their matter be heard in closed session. The commission has condemned conduct that creates the appearance of a "two-track system of justice—one for those with special access to the judge, and the other for everyone else. The nub of the problem is the appearance or reality that Lady Justice is not blindfolded." (Inquiry Concerning Wasilenko (2005) 49 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 26, 51.)

The masters concluded that an objective observer aware of all the facts would not consider Judge Mills's actions prejudicial to public esteem for the judicial office because the difference between what actually occurred and what Judge Mills could properly have done is slight and because the same result would likely have occurred had the judge appeared in court. Whether or not his son received an unusually lenient disposition as a result of Judge Mills's actions is not a determinative factor in our analysis of the level of misconduct. Regardless of the final disposition, judges must be sensitive to the appearance of impropriety inherent in discussing a family member's court case with the judicial officer presiding over the matter behind closed doors and off the record. It leads to suspicions of favoritism and backdoor deals for the select few with connections to the judicial officer hearing the matter.

(7) The fact that Ms. Sims and Ms. Peters are subordinate to Judge Mills magnifies the appearance of impropriety and further undermines public confidence in the integrity of the judiciary. Judge Mills maintains he did not take advantage of his judicial position because he was acting in the role of a father, not a judge, and emphasizes that he told Ms. Peters to do what she wanted. However, Ms. Peters testified that she felt pressured to grant Judge Mills's request because he was a judge. It is not surprising that a person in a subordinate position to the judge would feel pressure to comply with a judge's request. For this reason, the canons prohibit a judge from seeking civic or charitable contributions from a subordinate judicial officer or temporary judge, while permitting such solicitation among judges. (Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canon 4C(3)(d)(i); see Rothman, Cal. Judicial Conduct Handbook, supra, § 10.43, p. 557.) As a judge for 16 years, the ethical boundaries between judges and their subordinates should have been apparent to Judge Mills.

In Platt, supra, 48 Cal.4th CJP Supp. at pp. 244–246, the judge called a court commissioner, asked her questions about a traffic ticket issued to the judge's godfather, and conveyed information that his godfather was active in the community. The commission noted that even though the facts showed Judge Platt did not ask that any action be taken and that the commissioner was not influenced by the judge's call, it did not mean the commissioner did not perceive the call as an attempt to influence. The commission observed: "The attempt to influence is inherent in the unsolicited telephone call and the ex parte conveyance of positive information about the offender. The judge's failure to explicitly ask the referee to do anything does not change the nature of the communication." (Id. at p. 245.)

Judge Mills also suggests that he was simply following the directives of Ms. Sims and Ms. Peters. However, as a judge, he was responsible for ensuring that his son's case was handled no differently than any other matter before the court and that he was not granted procedural shortcuts because of his judicial position, particularly when dealing with those who are subordinate to him.

III

DISCIPLINE

(8) In determining the appropriate level of discipline, we consider several factors, including the following: number of incidents of misconduct, the seriousness of the misconduct, whether the judge has prior discipline, whether the judge acknowledges and appreciates the impropriety of his actions, the impact of the misconduct on the judicial system, and the judge's reputation for administering his or her duties in a fair, impartial, and dignified manner. (Policy Declarations of Com. on Jud. Performance, policy 7.1 [nonexclusive factors relevant to sanctions]; e.g., Ross, supra, 49 Cal.4th CJP Supp. at p. 138.)

Weighing heavily in aggravation is Judge Mills's history of prior discipline. This is not the first time Judge Mills has been disciplined for using his judicial position to bypass proper channels on behalf of his son. In 2011, he received an advisory letter for, after signing a search warrant, allowing his son to accompany a police officer in executing the warrant without going through the ordinary application process for going on a ride-along.

In addition, Judge Mills received an advisory letter in 2008 for improperly conditioning a defendant's release in a misdemeanor probation revocation proceeding on posting bail for the improper purpose of collecting restitution. In 2006, he was publicly admonished for engaging in improper ex parte discussions and for a pattern of making discourteous, sarcastic, and demeaning comments to attorneys and litigants appearing before him. And, in 2001, he received a private admonishment for remarks suggesting a lack of impartiality and attempting to obtain a guilty plea from a defendant despite statements from the defendant indicating he wanted counsel.

Another aggravating factor is Judge Mills's failure to acknowledge or appreciate the impropriety of his actions. At the hearing before the special masters and in his briefs to the commission, he insisted that he did nothing improper. During his oral argument before the commission, Judge Mills stated that, in hindsight, he realizes he should not have met with the pro tempore judge in chambers. However, he immediately followed this acknowledgement with excuses and justifications for his conduct. The judge also deflected questions about the public perception of his actions by questioning Ms. Sims's credibility and recollection of the time events occurred. His presentation before the commission leaves us with no confidence that he appreciates the impropriety of his actions.

(9) "A judge's failure to appreciate or admit to the impropriety of his or her acts indicates a lack of capacity to reform." (Platt, supra, 48 Cal.4th CJP Supp. at p. 248; see Fletcher v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1998) 19 Cal.4th 865, 920–921 [81 Cal.Rptr.2d 58, 968 P.2d 958]; Kloepfer v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1989) 49 Cal.3d 826, 866 [264 Cal.Rptr. 100, 782 P.2d 239].) The fact that Judge Mills was advised by the commission in February 2011 that it is improper to use his judicial position to bypass normal procedures for the benefit of a family member makes his failure to recognize the impropriety of his actions in October 2011 all the more troubling. (See Inquiry Concerning Van Voorhis (2003) 48 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 257, 301–302; Doan v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1995) 11 Cal.4th 294, 339–340 [45 Cal.Rptr.2d 254, 902 P.2d 272]; McCullough v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1989) 49 Cal.3d 186, 199 [260 Cal.Rptr. 557, 776 P.2d 259] [failure to respond to prior discipline "evidences a lack of regard for the Commission, [the Supreme Court] and his obligations as a judge"].)

Judge Mills's misconduct is further aggravated by the fact that Ms. Sims and Ms. Peters were his subordinates. The judge's conduct and his subsequent response to the charges evidence a lack of sensitivity to the pressure he implicitly placed on them by virtue of his judicial position. (See Sarmiento, supra, No. 191 at p. 7.)

We have already discussed the adverse impact of Judge Mills's conduct on public confidence in the impartiality of the judicial system, which is another important factor in our assessment of the appropriate sanction. In imposing public discipline, we assure the public that using the influence of judicial office to obtain an advantage, no matter how slight, in a legal matter involving a family member or friend is impermissible.

In determining to issue a public admonishment, rather than a higher level of discipline, we take into consideration that Judge Mills did not overtly pressure Ms. Sims or Ms. Peters to facilitate the meeting in chambers and told Ms. Peters to do what she wanted or words to that effect, and the requested disposition was not more lenient than would likely have occurred if the attorney had appeared in open court on behalf of the judge's son.[12] We also consider in mitigation the masters' finding that Judge Mills was acting as a concerned parent and the testimony of a number of character witnesses that the judge is hardworking, conscientious, and fair.[13]

[12] Judge Salvador Sarmiento was censured pursuant to a stipulation in 2012 for communications with a commissioner in nonpublic areas of the courthouse concerning his wife's traffic ticket. While there are factual similarities with the present case, Judge Sarmiento's conduct was more aggravated. He approached the commissioner in the courthouse hallway and followed her into her chambers where he asked her to address his wife's $300 penalty assessment fee and left the ticket on the commissioner's desk. The judge admitted he was seeking to have the commissioner vacate the fine—something that would not necessarily occur through proper channels. Moreover, he returned to the commissioner's chambers later that day and told her nothing had been done on the ticket. The commissioner told the judge she would give him a trial date, but did not vacate the fee.

Balancing the foregoing factors leads us to the conclusion that a public admonishment is the appropriate sanction.

IV

ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of article VI, section 18 of the California Constitution, we hereby impose this public admonishment.

Commission members Mr. Lawrence J. Simi, Hon. Erica R. Yew, Ms. Mary Lou Aranguren, Anthony P. Capozzi, Esq., Nanci E. Nishimura, Esq., Hon. Ignazio J. Ruvolo, Mr. Richard Simpson, Ms. Maya Dillard Smith, Ms. Sandra Talcott, and Mr. Adam N. Torres voted in favor of all of the findings and conclusions expressed herein and in the foregoing order of a public admonishment. Commission member Hon. Thomas M. Maddock was recused.

[13] The character witnesses testifying on Judge Mills's behalf were a retired Contra Costa County Superior Court judge, a Contra Costa County Superior Court commissioner, the Contra Costa County District Attorney, five private attorneys, and one retired senior deputy district attorney. One of the attorney witnesses was the attorney who participated in ex parte communications with Judge Mills in the matter that resulted in the judge's 2006 public admonishment.

PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE RONALD M. SOHIGIAN

The Commission on Judicial Performance has ordered Judge Ronald M. Sohigian publicly admonished pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution and commission rule 115, as set forth in the following statement of facts and reasons found by the commission:

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

Judge Sohigian has been a judge of the Los Angeles County Superior Court since October 1988. Judge Sohigian's current term began in January 2009.[1]

Judge Sohigian treated attorneys in a sarcastic and belittling manner while presiding over proceedings in the civil case DiBernardo v. Leight (No. BC365900), as illustrated by the following:

- On April 28, 2011, the attorneys contended that they were not prepared for trial that day as the case had been trailing for trial for about a month and they had been told by another judicial officer that they would get several days of notice as to the start of trial. Judge Sohigian criticized them for being unprepared, and further stated they should have their materials and said, "Don't expect me to swallow that kind of thing. That is just [sic] that is preposterous. [¶] I mean, no – no lawyer with any – with any skill at all shows up here and says golly, I was just – I just walked out my office." (R.T. 64:20-24.)

- On April 29, 2011, after attorney Michael E. Leight objected to a question during examination of a witness and the judge overruled his objection, Mr. Leight said, "Your Honor, why is that not hearsay?" Judge Sohigian responded, "I'll explain it to you sometime when you pay tuition." (R.T. 190:13-15.)

- On March 22, 2012, during a colloquy about whether the plaintiff had failed to cite a statutory provision regarding authority to enforce a settlement, Judge Sohigian addressed Mr. Leight in a rude manner as follows:

> THE COURT: Why should he mention it? It's already in the record. Why should he say, by –
> MR. LEIGHT: Because he has to notify the other side of the basis of the relief he's seeking.
> THE COURT: He made a motion to enforce the settlement or, in the alternative, to have an O.S.C. issued regarding contempt. Does he have to go back and say, by the way, this is the statutory section?

[1] Judge Sohigian retired April 16, 2014. The Notice of Intended Public Admonishment in this matter was issued prior to his retirement.

MR. LEIGHT: Yes.

THE COURT: Particularly you're on the other side of the case.

MR. LEIGHT: Yes. He has to cite Authority.

THE COURT: You're a lawyer of some experience. Does he have – does he have to tell you, by the way, here, give me your finger, let me show you, I'll take you through – Here, right here, see – Does he have to do that? (R.T. 8:5-20.)

- On April 28, 2011, Judge Sohigian appeared to mock Mr. Leight's co-counsel for his role, asking him how long it would take to make his opening statement, "Or are you just going to say he's [Mr. Leight] going to make it, you're not going to do anything?" (R.T. 54:4-7.) The judge questioned each of the lawyers about whether they had exhausted the settlement possibilities, and said: "Now, if I ask that question to you, you're going to say I don't know. Ask Mr. Leight, right?" (R.T. 63:28 – 64:2.)

On February 15, 2013, Judge Sohigian treated plaintiff's counsel in Avila v. Cervantes (No. BC480543), in a sarcastic, belittling, and harsh manner, as illustrated by the following remarks. Judge Sohigian accused plaintiff's counsel in Avila of handling the case in a cavalier manner and stated at the outset of the hearing, in response to an unopposed request for a continuance, "I feel there's a certain amount of gamesmanship involved in showing up here a month before – pardon me – a trial date." (R.T. 1:20-22.) The judge later said that plaintiff's counsel was "now purporting to be concerned about her [client's pregnancy] condition and so forth, [and] didn't so much as show up [at the post-mediation status conference]." (R.T. 1:24-26.) After plaintiff's counsel argued that defense counsel had appeared and spoke on the plaintiff's behalf at the post-mediation conference, Judge Sohigian responded as follows:

> THE COURT: Was that your understanding? Tell me what provision of law authorizes a lawyer to represent simultaneously conflicting interests. I would be interested in knowing authority on that. Or if you're running through the authority in your head right now, which you might be doing, tell me if you stumble upon in your own mind a massive body of authority that says that that's absolutely prohibited. Indeed, if it occurs, it's a basis for strict disciplinary measures, including such things as disbarment and so forth.

While the judge's references to disbarment and State Bar discipline do not constitute misconduct here, the commission finds the above sarcastic remarks regarding the attorney's knowledge of the law to be a violation of canon 3B(4).

Judge Sohigian's remarks during both of these proceedings were inconsistent with the judge's duty to be patient, dignified, and courteous to those with whom the judge deals in an official capacity. (Canon 3B(4).) Judge Sohigian stated in his response to the commission that, with respect to party/attorney Michael E. Leight in DiBernardo v. Leight, he "intended that the things [he] said to Mr. Leight would curb his disrespectful and provocative behavior and would yet be short of a contempt citation." Even when dealing with difficult litigants and counsel, however, Judge Sohigian was required to comport himself in accordance with the Code of Judicial Ethics. "The public looks to judges to set the tone of judicial proceedings. When a judge mistreats staff, belittles counsel or gives vent to his or her anger or frustration, the audience is not only concerned about the result in the specific matter before the court, but worries that other parties, lawyers, jurors and employees will be subjected to similar mistreatment." (Inquiry Concerning Judge Bruce Van Voorhis (2003) 48 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 257, 312-313.)

Judge Sohigian's conduct in the matters described above was, at a minimum, improper action.

In determining that a public admonishment was appropriate in this matter, the commission considered that Judge Sohigian has been the subject of prior discipline, including discipline for sarcastic and belittling treatment of those who appear before him. Judge Sohigian received a public admonishment in 2007 that addressed, in part, his rude treatment of an attorney. Judge Sohigian also received an advisory letter in 1991 for abusing his authority in sanctioning attorneys.

Commission members Anthony P. Capozzi, Esq., Ms. Mary Lou Aranguren, Nanci E. Nishimura, Esq., Hon. Ignazio J. Ruvolo, Mr. Lawrence J. Simi, Ms. Maya Dillard Smith, and Mr. Adam N. Torres voted to impose a public admonishment. Commission members Ms. Sandra Talcott and Hon. Erica R. Yew voted for a private admonishment. Commission member Mr. Richard Simpson voted to close the matter. Commission member Hon. Thomas M. Maddock did not participate.

| IN THE MATTER CONCERNING JUDGE DANIEL J. HEALY | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT |
|---|---|

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge Daniel J. Healy, a judge of the Solano County Superior Court. Judge Healy and his attorney, Harlan B. Watkins of Murphy Pearson Bradley & Feeney, appeared before the commission on October 15, 2014, to object to the imposition of a public admonishment, pursuant to rule 116 of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance. Having considered the written and oral objections and argument submitted by Judge Healy and his counsel, and good cause appearing, the Commission on Judicial Performance issues this public admonishment pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution, based on the following statement of facts and conclusions.

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND LEGAL CONCLUSIONS

Judge Healy has been a judge of the Solano County Superior Court since January 2011. His current term began on January 3, 2011.

The commission determined that Judge Healy should be publicly admonished for violating the California Code of Judicial Ethics in multiple family law cases over which he presided in 2012 and 2013.

1. K.B. v. E.B.

Judge Healy presided over the family law case K.B. v. E.B, in which the dissolution petition had been filed on August 19, 2013.[1] On August 23, 2013, the issues before Judge Healy included allegations that the mother had driven in the middle of the night, while intoxicated, with the parties' small child in the car.

[1] Case names and the identities of certain persons have been redacted to protect the privacy rights of minors.

a. On August 23, after some discussion with the parties regarding the issues, Judge Healy stated that he would recall the case in the afternoon to "get to the bottom of" what had happened. The mother said that she would like a chance to respond to the judge's statements about the case, and Judge Healy said that the parties would get their chance, and stated, "[B]ut I don't think either of you understand the beatdown that is coming, because this child deserves a thousand times better than all of this drama."

The case was recalled that afternoon. Judge Healy stated that he thought the parties were "just rotten":

> Here's what I think. I think that I do not have any evidence in front of me rising to the level of any chronic abuse of anything or rises [sic] to a level regarding drugs or alcohol. I just think, to be honest with you, sometimes people are just rotten, and they can't respect other people. Everything's drama. It's like they're trying out for Jersey Shore. You guys just both strike me as rotten. Maybe what I should do is have CPS save your child from both of you because you are both rotten.

Later, after the mother told Judge Healy that she was trying to prove to him that she was not lying, Judge Healy said: "Okay. Why don't you prove to me that you recognize what a train wreck you are, and then maybe we'll be somewhere?" Judge Healy continued to call her a "liar" and stated:

> Everything you have said you have put into doubt because you have been such a liar. So I don't know why you think you deserve anything about [sic] a cell door closing behind you.

Near the end of the August 23 proceedings, Judge Healy stated, "[T]he question is how hard do I have to beat you before we get going, and I've been – I know I've been beating you pretty hard here today."

During further proceedings in K.B. v. E.B. on August 27, 2013, Judge Healy told the mother's then-attorney that she was "executing the wrong play book" and "ought to be groveling like there is no tomorrow and you ought to be trying to re-boot, create a little time out trying to undo some of the damage your client has done rather than selling her as something other than the total human disaster that she is or at least appears to be so far."

Judge Healy's remarks while presiding over K.B. v. E.B. constituted a failure to be patient, dignified, and courteous, in violation of canon 3B(4), which states that a judge "shall be patient, dignified, and courteous to litigants . . . and others with whom the judge deals in an official capacity . . . ."

b. Judge Healy also attempted to influence another judicial officer's handling of an arrest warrant regarding the father in the K.B. v. E.B. case and appeared to become embroiled in the case. During the proceedings on August 23, 2013, Judge Healy stated that he had located a criminal file regarding the father on a judicial colleague's desk and reviewed a police report regarding the father's alleged domestic violence against the mother. Judge Healy expressed his opinion to the parties that "the event, even if true, did not rise to the level where the police should have summarily sought an arrest warrant without fully investigating the incident." Judge Healy stated that he would communicate with his judicial colleague "during the lunch hour, but what I'm going to suggest is it's probably not appropriate, based upon all of the facts and circumstance[s] here, that he summarily issue a bench warrant for [the father]'s arrest." Judge Healy stated that "obviously the District Attorney has submitted a complaint and you're going to have to litigate that, but I will try to minimize the blow-back from that and see if you can walk it in, or calendar it, rather than that. I suppose someone may be in contact with you." Judge Healy stated the following to the attorney then appearing for the father: "[Y]ou may want to call my assistant sometime this afternoon and see if we have ascertained a different manner of proceeding with that case."

Later in the case, Judge Healy stated that he had attempted, without success, to influence the handling of this arrest warrant by another judicial officer. In the afternoon, Judge Healy said, "[T]here is a possibility that there will be a warrant for [the father] based on the June-something incident out there, and I'm not sure what's going to happen with all of that." The judge further stated that he "did try to do some things" with the "criminal thing floating around there" about the father, but he was "not sure it was successful." Judge Healy said that the father maintaining custody of the child might be moot depending on law enforcement actions and that he was "not sure what to make of that."

On August 27, 2013, Judge Healy presided over further proceedings in the family law case. After counsel stated that whether the father would be remanded on the arrest warrant was "up to this Court," Judge Healy responded that it was "not up to me" and then described his attempts to influence another judge's decision as to whether to issue the arrest warrant and his questions about whether the mother's report of domestic violence could be trusted:

> I didn't issue the warrant. I actually – through the – just so you know, in full candor, on an ex parte we knew that warrant was sitting on another Judge's desk. I went and told that Judge that I had serious problems with at least a warrant going out. The District Attorney had filed a Complaint. Obviously had to be litigated because based on what I had heard there was incredibly significant questions about [the mother]'s veracity given the serial lying that she had done here on the record on Friday.
> So I thought – so now some bonds man's [sic] going to make four grand because our system lacked the flexibility to deal with these situations. To a certain extent I think that's unfortunate but I don't have control. I did what I did.

Near the end of the August 27 proceedings, Judge Healy stated that he suspected that there would be a problem with the family law case if the criminal case against the father "goes on for a while. It could go on for a year. I'm going to hope – well, I'm not going to try to solve that problem today."

Judge Healy's attempt to influence another judicial officer's handling of an arrest warrant reflected, or at least created the appearance of, embroilment, particularly in light of his treatment of the mother in K.B. v. E.B., and constituted a failure to uphold the integrity and independence of the judiciary (canon 1), and a failure to act at all times in a manner that promotes respect for the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary (canon 2A).

2. N.C. v. M.D.C.

On August 23, 2013, Judge Healy presided over the family law case N.C. v. M.D.C. Judge Healy made threatening remarks, in violation of canon 3B(4), when he said, "I guess what I'm wondering is, what are we going to do with the child when both parents are in jail after I put [the father] in jail for failing to follow my court orders about not despairing [sic] the other parent, and I put [the mother] in jail for lying to me?" Judge Healy later stated: "Just so both of you know, I'm only trying to get your attention. I can't unilaterally put people in jail. You're entitled to a hearing. I would have to cite you with contempt, it would be me [sic] a couple weeks to put you in jail. But I just want you to be thinking about that question because we may be running out of options here."

3. R.C. v. M.E.

On August 27, 2013, Judge Healy presided over a custody motion in the family law case R.C. v. M.E. Judge Healy remarked that if the mother "had been smart enough," her son would not have had to go through the process of changing schools. Judge Healy remarked that "[n]ow your son is screwed" because of these problems. Judge Healy's remarks violated canon 3B(4).

4. K.A. v. S.H.

On the morning of August 27, 2013, Judge Healy presided over the family law case K.A. v. S.H. The father's vulgar and threatening text messages to the mother about child exchanges were at issue, including the statement, "Bitch, trust me, bitch, I'm not having it." Judge Healy told the father that this conduct was unacceptable and then speculated as to what the father was thinking: "I know how I'm going to solve this problem, she's not following court orders so I'm going to talk to her like some ghetto whatever; where did that come from?" Judge Healy expressed his concern that if in the future the children get into conflict, "[t]hey're going to do something stupid and thuggish because their father is stupid and thuggish." After the father offered that his neighbors knew him to be a person who would not allow harm to his children, the judge asked if he talked to his neighbors like he had talked to the mother in the case: "Do you call your neighbors[']] wives bitches and hoes, all that. Is [sic] just how you roll in your neighborhood?"

Later in the hearing, Judge Healy made a harsh and threatening remark about remanding the parents to jail and taking away their child when he stated the following after the mother spoke directly to the father: "You don't talk to each other. Can I be honest with you, either one of you are about 60 seconds away from putting you both to jail and putting you over to 1:30 and calling CPS and finding a better home for your kids." (Sic.)

In the afternoon, the case was recalled and Judge Healy stated that at the next hearing the parties could present proof of any improper text messages they had received, that depending on his mood he might cite them with contempt, and that "I can't put [you in] jail that day, but I can appoint a public defender for you and tell you that I'm going to upon a hearing probably put you in jail." Judge Healy said, "[The parties] could be in jail 'till [sic] your kids are adults if I'm in the wrong mood the next time I see you."

Judge Healy told the parties that life was too short to let kids be "tortured by rotten parents like you two."

Judge Healy's remarks to and about the parents were undignified and discourteous (canon 3B(4)) and could also be reasonably perceived as reflecting bias or prejudice (canon 3B(5)).

5. N.D. v. L.F.

On August 27, 2013, Judge Healy presided over the family law case N.D. v. L.F. Judge Healy remarked that the father's claim that he would get a job was "pie in the sky" and that the father was claiming that he would get a job "even though I [in reference to the father] admittedly am morbidly obese and at risk of dying any time . . . ."

Judge Healy's remarks were undignified and discourteous (canon 3B(4)).

6. A.A. v. R.M.

On December 17, 2012, Judge Healy presided over the family law case A.A. v. R.M. During that hearing, the judge made the following remarks reflecting a lack of courtesy (canon 3B(4)):

> So, just an observation. This is the first time I've seen you, but if you are exposing your daughter to one-fifth of the attitude I'm getting from you right now, you might as well have her start walking the streets as a hooker, because that's the life you're going to subject her to when you treat her like this, when you flash this attitude like this.

Judge Healy's conduct in the matters described above was, at a minimum, improper action.

DISCIPLINE

The commission determined to issue this public admonishment in view of the number of incidents of misconduct, the judge's apparent lack of insight into the impropriety of his treatment of litigants, and the negative impact of the misconduct on the judicial system. (See Inquiry Concerning Judge Bruce Van Voorhis (2003) 48 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 257, 296-300; Policy Declaration 7.1(1)(a), 2(a), 1(h).) Judge Healy made multiple denigrating and undignified comments to family law litigants, most of whom were unrepresented by counsel, in multiple proceedings. And, in one case, he engaged in misconduct reflecting, at a minimum, the appearance of embroilment.

Although at his appearance before the commission Judge Healy acknowledged the impropriety of his conduct, in his response to the preliminary investigation and in his written objections to the notice of intended public admonishment, he consistently defended the specific incidents of misconduct as being appropriate in the context of the cases before him and maintained that he did not violate the canons. He argued that blunt and evocative language is sometimes necessary to compel litigants to gain awareness of their circumstances, the harm that they are causing their children, and the importance of respect and cooperation. The commission disagrees. Referring to litigants as "rotten," "stupid and thuggish," and a "total human disaster," and telling litigants their child "might as well start walking the streets as a hooker," is the antithesis of imparting the importance of respect.

Improper judicial demeanor impacts the fairness of judicial proceedings and respect for the judicial institution, and "[t]he canons' insistence on appropriate judicial demeanor rests on the idea that such demeanor is one of those things that is central to the appearance and reality of fairness and impartiality in judicial proceedings." (Rothman, Cal. Judicial Conduct Handbook (3d ed. 2007) § 2.46, p. 93.) The commission recognized that the family law cases addressed in this matter were high-conflict and difficult cases. However, the contentious nature of a case, which is not uncommon in family law, does not relieve a judge from the duty to treat litigants in a dignified, respectful and courteous manner as required by the Code of Judicial Ethics. As the commission previously stated in Inquiry Concerning Judge Bruce Van Voorhis, supra, 48 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 312-313:

> The public looks to judges to set the tone of judicial proceedings. When a judge mistreats staff, belittles counsel or gives vent to his or her anger or frustration, the audience is not only concerned about the result in the specific matter before the court, but worries that other parties, lawyers, jurors and employees will be subjected to similar mistreatment.

Remarks such as Judge Healy's are improper even if there is no objection from those on the receiving end, over whom the judge wields vast power. Some of the litigants in fact did voice their objections on the record. The mother in K.B. v. E.B. told Judge Healy that she was "not a rotten person." The mother in A.A. v. R.M. took exception to Judge Healy's remarks about her child, as reflected in the following:

> Ms. [M]: So, I take kind of offense when you said what you said earlier about our child.
> THE COURT: Okay. Well, if you take –
> Ms. [M]: She's a very smart and bright child.
> THE COURT: Okay. Well, I mean, you can take it however you take it, but we're in here talking about your child and when you flash all this attitude, all I can assume is that when the subject is your child and this is the attitude you're flashing, that it permeates your relationship with her.

These objections to his demeaning characterizations of litigants and their children should have provided notice to the judge that his conduct was improper, in addition to the clear guidance of canon 3B(4) that he shall be dignified and courteous to litigants and others appearing before him.

The commission appreciates that at his appearance before the commission Judge Healy expressed recognition of the impropriety of demeaning litigants. Further, the commission recognizes that Judge Healy's conduct may have been motivated by a desire to help families move forward in a positive direction, and that it appears he took an active interest in the family law cases before him and in attempting to achieve positive outcomes in those cases. Nonetheless, these goals can and must be accomplished in a manner that comports with the Code of Judicial Ethics.

For the foregoing reasons, the commission determines to issue this public admonishment.

The vote of the commission to impose a public admonishment was ten ayes and zero noes. Hon. Erica R. Yew; Anthony P. Capozzi, Esq.; Ms. Mary Lou Aranguren; Hon. Thomas M. Maddock; Nanci E. Nishimura, Esq.; Hon. Ignazio J. Ruvolo; Mr. Lawrence J. Simi; Mr. Richard Simpson; Ms. Maya Dillard Smith; and Ms. Sandra Talcott voted for a public admonishment. Commission member Mr. Adam N. Torres did not participate.

PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE JOSEPH SCOTT

The Commission on Judicial Performance has ordered Judge Joseph Scott publicly admonished pursuant to article VI, section 18, subdivision (d) of the California Constitution and commission rule 115, as set forth in the following statement of facts and reasons found by the commission:

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

Judge Joseph Scott has been a judge of the San Mateo County Superior Court since 2003. His current term began in January 2011.

On May 24, 2014, at approximately 12:31 a.m., Judge Scott drove his vehicle in an erratic manner on Highway 101 in Redwood City while under the influence of alcohol. After being stopped by law enforcement, the judge submitted to breath tests that showed he had a blood-alcohol level of 0.12 percent. On June 10, 2014, the judge was charged with violations of Vehicle Code section 23152, subdivisions (a) and (b). (Case No. SM393022A.) By letter dated June 12, 2014, Judge Scott reported the charges to the commission, as required by canon 3D(3) of the Code of Judicial Ethics. On September 24, 2014, following a plea of nolo contendere, Judge Scott was convicted in the San Mateo County Superior Court of driving with a blood-alcohol level of 0.08 percent or more, in violation of Vehicle Code section 23152, subdivision (b).

Judge Scott's unlawful action described above evidences a serious disregard of the principles of personal and official conduct embodied in the California Code of Judicial Ethics, including failure to observe high standards of conduct so that the integrity and independence of the judiciary will be preserved (canon 1), and failure to respect and comply with the law and to act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity of the judiciary (canon 2A). "Public confidence in the judiciary is eroded by irresponsible or improper conduct by judges." (Canon 2A advisory committee commentary.) Judge Scott's unlawful conduct was also prejudicial to the administration of justice and brought the judicial office into disrepute within the meaning of article VI, section 18, subdivision (d) of the California Constitution.

PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE JOHN L. FIELDER

The Commission on Judicial Performance has ordered Judge John L. Fielder publicly admonished pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution and commission rule 115, as set forth in the following statement of facts and reasons found by the commission:

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

Judge John L. Fielder has been a judge of the Kern County Superior Court for 33 years. His current term began in January 2013.

As set forth below, the commission found that Judge Fielder engaged in improper conduct when interacting with a member of court administration regarding the reassignment of another judge's courtroom clerk and, on a different occasion, when interacting with an attorney regarding the filing of a motion and supporting papers with the court.

I. On April 3, 2013, Judge Fielder and Judge Cory Woodward met with Deputy Chief Court Executive Officer for Court Operations Marie Castaneda regarding court administration's decision to reassign Judge Woodward's courtroom clerk. Judge Fielder concedes that, during the meeting, he improperly displayed considerable irritation toward the court administrator and engaged in a discussion that was too aggressive, too heavy-handed, and could have been intimidating to court administration. He acknowledges that he was unnecessarily forceful in his statements and that his conduct was inappropriate.

During the meeting, Judge Fielder accused court administration of being "in violation" of court protocol for moving a clerk from a judge's courtroom and stated that court administration should not be "messing around" with judges' courtrooms. He stated words to the effect that before they would allow court administration to move courtroom clerks around, the judges "would get together and fire" the court executive officer. Judge Fielder acknowledges that making a statement to an administrative officer about firing that individual's supervising administrator was "out of line" for a judicial officer.

Judge Fielder also spoke on behalf of Judge Woodward's clerk, stating that she "was getting the shaft," that there was "no significant or valid reason" to move the clerk, that the complaint about the clerk "should be something more significant," and that if the complaint was coming from another clerk, that clerk was the one who should be moved. Judge Fielder acknowledges that court administration is ultimately responsible for decisions that are made about staffing. As noted in the California Judicial Conduct Handbook:

> Interference with discipline or other actions by administrators. It is not a judge's role to become the advocate for staff in their interactions with administrators. A staff member who is in conflict with administrators may seek your support and intervention. It is not inappropriate to hear the staff member out, but it is a mistake to promise help or to be perceived as actively intervening.

The commission found that Judge Fielder's conduct violated canon 2A (a judge shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary), canon 2B(1) (a judge shall not allow family, social, political or other relationships to influence the judge's judicial conduct or judgment, nor shall a judge convey or permit others to convey the impression that any individual is in a special position to influence the judge), canon 2B(2) (a judge shall not lend the prestige of judicial office or use the judicial title in any manner, including any oral or written communication, to advance the personal interests of the judge or others), canon 3B(4) (a judge shall be patient, dignified and courteous to litigants, jurors, witnesses, lawyers, and others with whom the judge deals in an official capacity), and canon 3C(2) (a judge shall maintain professional competence in judicial administration, and shall cooperate with other judges and court officials in the administration of court business).

II. On May 28, 2013, Judge Cory Woodward presided over a trial in Erin E. Posey v. Jerrold C. Posey. Attorney Michael Kilpatrick represented Ms. Posey. Judge Woodward ruled against Ms. Posey on June 12, 2013. On July 1, 2013, Mr. Kilpatrick filed a motion for a new trial, which was set for hearing on August 28, 2013.

On July 5, 2013, Mr. Kilpatrick's associate Andrew Smith presented to Judge Fielder on Mr. Kilpatrick's behalf an ex parte application for a temporary stay of enforcement of Judge Woodward's June 12, 2013 order pending the hearing on Mr. Kilpatrick's motion for new trial. Because the application for a stay was being made ex parte, Judge Fielder's approval as supervising judge was required before the clerk would file and set the application for hearing. Mr. Kilpatrick's application included a statement of disqualification of Judge Woodward for cause pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure section 170.1. The ex parte application and statement of disqualification presented by Mr. Smith were accompanied by a declaration signed by Mr. Kilpatrick that included statements questioning Judge Woodward's ability to hear the case, including references to recent "allegations of perhaps substantial inappropriate behavior and/or misconduct between Judge Woodward and his staff" resulting in "tremendous pressure placed upon Judge Woodward, Judge Woodward's family and other issues." The declaration also contained a statement that Judge Woodward was to have been in the Metropolitan District hearing family matters for 2013 and 2014, but that "he has now been quietly swept aside and returned to the East Kern Branch."

After Judge Fielder reviewed the ex parte application and accompanying declaration presented by Mr. Smith, he called Mr. Smith into his chambers and told him, among other things, that Mr. Kilpatrick's declaration about Judge Woodward and the court should be toned down before it was filed. Judge Fielder concedes that he was concerned that "the flamboyant statements" in the declaration "unnecessarily implicated our court administration in improper acts and cast aspersions on Judge Woodward's family." He believed the statement that the court was "sweeping aside" Judge Woodward was "an inaccurate overstatement" and that the references to Judge Woodward's family were "mean-spirited and unnecessary." He says he may have asked the attorney if he thought Judge Woodward's family "deserved this kind of treatment in a public document." Judge Fielder told the commission that he did not think he said to Mr. Smith that he would not allow the documents to be filed. As a result of Judge Fielder's statements to Mr. Smith, however, Mr. Smith concluded that the declaration needed to be modified before Judge Fielder would permit it to be filed. Mr. Smith returned to his office, modified the declaration, and resubmitted it the same day. Judge Fielder acknowledges that Mr. Smith might have taken the judge's statements as not allowing him to file the documents unless the content was changed.

The only issue before Judge Fielder was whether a request for stay of enforcement of judgment could be filed as an ex parte application. The merits of the request for stay of enforcement of judgment and the disqualification of Judge Woodward for cause were not before Judge Fielder for decision, as evidenced by his concession to the commission that when the revised papers were presented later that day, they were filed "without review or comment."

The commission concluded that Judge Fielder abused his authority by summoning an attorney into his chambers and suggesting in any way that the declaration not be filed as presented due to his stated concerns about the court's reputation and Judge Woodward's family.

The commission found that Judge Fielder's actions violated canon 2A (a judge shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary), canon 2B(1) (a judge shall not allow family, social, political or other relationships to influence the judge's judicial conduct or judgment, nor shall a judge convey or permit others to convey the impression that any individual is in a special position to influence the judge), and canon 2B(2) (a judge shall not lend the prestige of judicial office or use the judicial title in any manner, including any oral or written communication, to advance the personal interests of the judge or others).

The commission found that Judge Fielder's conduct was, at a minimum, improper action.

Judge Fielder's prior discipline was a factor in determining the level of discipline. In 1992, the judge received an advisory letter for accepting guilty pleas from an in-custody defendant who had entered not guilty pleas on three charges the previous day, without inquiring whether some action had been taken the previous day regarding affording counsel for the defendant on those charges. In 1994, the judge received an advisory letter for treating a witness in an unduly harsh and intimidating manner. In 1997, the judge received a private admonishment for conduct that appeared to be coercive in connection with guilty and no contest pleas, failing to advise unrepresented defendants of their right to counsel at arraignment, and reading police reports without the consent of an unrepresented defendant.

PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE DALE A. REINHOLTSEN

The Commission on Judicial Performance ordered Judge Dale A. Reinholtsen publicly admonished, pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution and commission rule 115, as set forth in the following statement of facts and reasons found by the commission:

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

Judge Reinholtsen has been a judge of the Humboldt County Superior Court since 1997. His current term began in 2013. Judge Reinholtsen was a judge of the Humboldt County Municipal Court in 1996 and 1997.

As set forth below, the commission found that Judge Reinholtsen engaged in improper conduct when he signed and submitted false salary affidavits on seven occasions, received his salary for judicial office in violation of law on 13 occasions, failed to act timely on over 20 matters that had been assigned to him, and failed to prepare a case progression plan in a case he exempted from meeting certain disposition time goals.

1. On or about December 27, 2011; February 27 and June 23, 2012; January 30, April 8, and August 13, 2013; and July 14, 2014, Judge Reinholtsen signed and submitted salary affidavits pursuant to Government Code section 68210 in which the judge falsely declared that no cause remained pending and undetermined that had been submitted to him for decision for the period of 90 days prior to the effective date of each affidavit. The commission found that the judge's conduct violated his duties under canon 2A to respect and comply with the law and to act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity of the judiciary.

2. On or about December 30, 2011; February 29, June 29, August 20, September 5, November 28, and December 19, 2012; January 31, February 27, and April 9, 2013; and February 25, July 15, and September 9, 2014, Judge Reinholtsen received his salary for judicial office in violation of law, while at least one cause before him was pending and undetermined for 90 days or more after it had been submitted for decision.

The California Constitution provides that "[a] judge of a court of record may not receive the salary for the judicial office held by the judge while any cause before the judge remains pending and undetermined for 90 days after it has been submitted for decision." (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 19, italics added.) The Legislature followed this command with an implementing statute, Government Code section 68210, which provides that "[n]o judge of a court of record shall receive his salary unless he shall make and subscribe before an officer entitled to administer oaths, an affidavit stating that no cause before him remains pending and undetermined for 90 days after it has been submitted for decision." (Italics added.) The withheld salary is not forfeited; once all overdue matters are completed, the judge is again entitled to receive his or her salary, including those amounts that were not paid during the period of delay. (See Inquiry Concerning Freedman (2007) 49 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 223, 230, citing Hassanally v. Firestone (1996) 51 Cal.App.4th 1241, 1244-1245.)

The commission found that the judge's conduct violated his duties under canon 2A to respect and comply with the law and to act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity of the judiciary.

3. When he was presiding judge of the Humboldt County Superior Court in 2013 and 2014, Judge Reinholtsen failed to decide each of the following matters within 90 days of the date that he took each matter under submission:

(a) A motion for an order determining good faith settlement in Nicholson, et al. v. Ghilarducci, et al., No. DR110125, decided on or about May 1, 2013, at least 93 days after the judge took it under submission;

(b) The case of Pec, et al. v. Brackenbury, et al., No. DR080769, decided on or about May 23, 2013, at least 111 days after the judge took it under submission;

(c) The case of County of Humboldt v. McKee, et al., No. DR020825, decided on June 7, 2013, 98 days after the judge took it under submission;

(d) A motion for summary judgment in Carr v. Kohl's Department Stores, Inc., et al., No. DR120088, decided on or about July 5, 2013, at least 151 days after the judge took it under submission;

(e) A motion for stay of writ of execution pending appeal in Frank, et al. v. Keating, No. CV120559, decided on or about July 16, 2013, at least 116 days after the judge took it under submission;

(f) The objections to the trustee's account and report in Matter of Bruce Eldon Fraser Trust, No. PR100259, decided on or about August 15, 2013, approximately 209 days after the judge took the matter under submission;

(g) A motion to quash a subpoena duces tecum in People v. Young, No. CR1301738, decided on or about October 31, 2013, at least 113 days after the judge took it under submission;

(h) The plaintiffs' motion for attorney's fees in Pec, et al. v. Brackenbury, et al., No. DR080769, decided on November 8, 2013, 123 days after the judge took it under submission;

(i) A motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication in Tsurai Ancestral Society v. Pennisi, et al., No. DR100981, decided on or about December 17, 2013, at least 120 days after the judge took it under submission;

(j) A motion to compel and a motion to strike in Nicholson, et al. v. Ghilarducci, et al., No. DR110125, decided on or about December 31, 2013, at least 99 days after the judge took the motions under submission;

(k) A motion for leave to re-file expunged lis pendens in City of Eureka, et al. v. Squires, et al., No. DR110040, decided on January 3, 2014, 102 days after the judge took it under submission;

(l) Two motions to compel responses to discovery requests in Viadro v. Ghilarducci, et al., No. DR091101, decided on March 25, 2014, 127 days after the judge took the motions under submission;

(m) A motion to tax costs in County of Humboldt v. McKee, et al., No. DR020825, decided on or about March 26, 2014, at least 128 days after the judge took it under submission;

(n) A matter in a family law case (No. FL110603), decided on or about July 16, 2014, at least 194 days after the judge took it under submission;

(o) A joint motion to compel discovery in People v. Pratts, et al., Nos. CR1205594 and CR1303269, decided on July 29, 2014, 133 days after the judge took it under submission;

(p) A motion for reconsideration of an order approving the payment of a portion of the fees and costs sought by the receiver in City of Eureka, et al. v. Squires, et al., No. DR110040, decided on or about September 8, 2014, at least 189 days after the judge took it under submission;

(q) A motion to quash a subpoena duces tecum in People v. Warren, No. CR1301240, decided on or about September 15, 2014, at least 159 days after the judge took it under submission; and

(r) A motion to terminate probation in People v. Leahy, No. 92CR0062CS, decided on or about September 15, 2014, at least 154 days after the judge took it under submission.

As presiding judge, Judge Reinholtsen had the duty to "ensure that no cause under submission remains undecided and pending for longer than 90 days." (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 10.603(c)(3).) The commission found that the judge's failure to ensure that the above matters were decided within 90 days violated the judge's duty under canon 2A to respect and comply with the law, which includes court rules.

The commission also found that Judge Reinholtsen violated canon 3B(8), which requires judges to dispose of all judicial matters promptly and efficiently. In Mardikian v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1985) 40 Cal.3d 473, the California Supreme Court stated that Government Code 68210 and article VI, section 19 of the California Constitution, quoted above, "reflect the judgment of the Legislature and the electorate that this period [90 days] affords a reasonable time within which to expect a trial judge to carry out the basic responsibility of a judge to decide cases." (Id. at p. 477, fn. 4.)

The commission recognizes that a judge's workload may make prompt decision of all matters submitted to the judge impossible. This is particularly true in counties in which the average workload exceeds the statewide average, which appears to be the case in Humboldt County. However, at the time each of the above matters was submitted for decision, Judge Reinholtsen was the court's presiding judge. As presiding judge, Judge Reinholtsen had the authority to "[a]pportion the business of the court, including assigning and reassigning cases to departments…." (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 10.603(b)(1)(B).) He also had the duty to "[s]upervise the court's calendar, apportion the business of the court among the several departments of the court as equally as possible," and "[r]eassign cases between departments as convenience or necessity requires…." (Id., rule 10.603(c)(1)(C)-(D).) The commission found that since Judge Reinholtsen had the ability to assign and reassign cases and to arrange assistance to ensure that matters were timely decided in 2013 and 2014, he cannot be excused from the duty to decide matters within 90 days during that period.

4. The commission also found that Judge Reinholtsen violated his duty under canon 3B(8) to dispose of the following judicial matters promptly and efficiently, even though they were no longer "pending and undetermined" for purposes of California Constitution, article VI, section 19 and Government Code section 68210:

(a) On August 24, 2012, in DeMars v. Hillman, No. CP120167, Judge Reinholtsen found that the respondent had committed financial abuse of an elder and imposed conduct orders on the respondent. On September 10, 2012, petitioner's counsel submitted to the court a proposed "Judgment for Financial Elder Abuse Restraining Order; Damages; Costs of Court; Costs of Agent; and For Attorney's Fees." On July 1, 2013, petitioner's counsel wrote a letter to the court, stating that he had submitted a judgment in September 2012 but had heard nothing to date. Counsel enclosed the previously submitted judgment and cover letter to the court. Judge Reinholtsen did not sign a judgment until on or about October 3, 2014, over two years after the proposed judgment was initially submitted, and shortly after the commission notified the judge of the delay.

(b) On August 16, 2013, the court filed Judge Reinholtsen's tentative decision in Matter of Bruce Eldon Fraser Trust, No. PR100259. The tentative decision stated that any objections to it needed to be filed by September 20, 2013. The trustee filed his objections on September 16, 2013, and the petitioner filed a reply on September 20, 2013. On March 3, 2014, petitioner's counsel wrote to Judge Reinholtsen "RE: Request for Final Decision." Counsel enclosed the tentative decision, noted that objections to it had been filed and responded to, and inquired as to whether anything further was needed to "help facilitate a final decision in this matter." The judge did not issue a statement of decision until April 4, 2014, approximately 6½ months after briefing was completed.

(c) On November 8, 2013, in Pec, et al. v. Brackenbury, et al., No. DR080769, Judge Reinholtsen issued an order asking the plaintiffs to submit a proposed judgment. On November 13, 2013, plaintiffs' counsel submitted a proposed "Judgment (Amended After Hearing)" and a cover letter addressed to the judge. The proposed judgment was the same as one that had been submitted by counsel on June 6, 2013, with the amount of attorney's fees filled in pursuant to the judge's November 8 order. The cover letter referenced and attached the proposed judgment submitted on June 6, 2013. On March 6, 2014, plaintiffs' counsel wrote to Judge Reinholtsen to "seek guidance on the status of the proposed judgment…." On March 18, 2014, the plaintiffs filed a "Motion re: Issuance of Judgment," asking the court to execute the judgment submitted on June 6, 2013, and resubmitted on November 13, 2013. Judge Reinholtsen did not sign a judgment until April 4, 2014, nearly five months after the proposed amended judgment was submitted.

5. On November 18, 2011, Judge Reinholtsen ordered that the consolidated cases of Stewart v. Parris, et al., No. DR081020, In re Estate of Lean, No. PR090073, and In re Estate of Stewart, No. PR090102, involved circumstances that may prevent the court and parties from meeting the goals and deadlines imposed by the Trial Court Delay Reduction Act, and that the management goals for the cases shall be defined by California Rules of Court, rule 3.714(c). However, Judge Reinholtsen failed to establish a case progression plan as is required by rule 3.714(c)(2).

California Rules of Court, rule 3.713(b) provides that the goal of the court is to "manage general civil cases from filing to disposition as provided under standard 2.2 of the California Standards of Judicial Administration." Standard 2.2(f) provides that the goal of each trial court should be to manage general civil cases, except those exempt, so that they are disposed of within 24 months. If the court exempts a case from the case disposition time goals, as Judge Reinholtsen did here on November 18, 2011, "the court must establish a case progression plan and monitor the case to ensure timely disposition consistent with the exceptional circumstances, with the goal of disposing of the case within three years." (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 3.714(c)(2).) On December 19, 2011, counsel for intervenor James Lewis Taylor wrote to Judge Reinholtsen requesting that her office be provided with the case progression plan. By failing to issue the required case progression plan, the judge violated his duties under canons 3B(1) and 3B(8) to dispose of all judicial matters promptly and efficiently and to hear and decide all matters assigned to him, except those in which he is disqualified.

The commission concluded that the judge's conduct, as described herein, constituted at a minimum improper action.

In aggravation, Judge Reinholtsen received an advisory letter in 2002 for conduct that included a nearly one-year delay in processing a complaint about a court commissioner.

In determining to issue a public admonishment, the commission took into account the fact that on many occasions, Judge Reinholtsen delayed signing salary affidavits while he had matters under submission for more than 90 days. The judge also appears to have made efforts to avoid similar misconduct in the future.

Commission members Hon. Erica R. Yew; Anthony P. Capozzi, Esq.; Ms. Mary Lou Aranguren; Ms. Pattyl A. Kasparian; Hon. Thomas M. Maddock; Hon. Ignazio J. Ruvolo; Mr. Lawrence J. Simi; Mr. Richard Simpson; Ms. Sandra Talcott; and Mr. Adam N. Torres voted to impose a public admonishment. Commission member Nanci E. Nishimura, Esq. did not participate.

PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE CHRISTOPHER G. WILSON

The Commission on Judicial Performance ordered Judge Christopher G. Wilson publicly admonished, pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution and commission rule 115, as set forth in the following statement of facts and reasons found by the commission:

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

Judge Wilson has been a judge of the Humboldt County Superior Court since 1999. His current term began in 2011.

As set forth below, the commission found that Judge Wilson engaged in improper conduct when he signed and submitted false salary affidavits on eight occasions and received his salary for judicial office in violation of law on six occasions.

1. On April 29, 2011, in Certain Underwriters at Lloyd's of London, et al. v. Simpson Timber Company, et al., No. DR100160, Judge Wilson heard argument on the defendant's motion to stay or dismiss and took the motion under submission. The judge did not decide the motion until he denied it in a ruling that was filed on August 5, 2011, 98 days after the motion was submitted.

On August 3, 2011, Judge Wilson signed a salary affidavit in which he falsely declared that no cause remained pending and undetermined that had been submitted to him for decision for the period of 90 days prior to August 1, 2011, even though the motion to stay or dismiss in this case was pending and undetermined for 94 days on August 1, 2011.

2. On April 12, 2013, Judge Wilson took the case of Cynthia Harcharik v. James Harcharik, No. FL120079, under submission when each side filed post-trial briefs. The judge's list of submitted matters dated August 1, 2013, reflects that this case was submitted on April 12, 2013, and remained undecided on August 1, 2013. The judge did not decide the case until the statement of decision was filed on August 13, 2013, 123 days after the case was taken under submission.

On August 2, 2013, Judge Wilson signed a salary affidavit in which he falsely declared that no cause remained pending and undetermined that had been submitted to him for decision for the period of 90 days prior to August 1, 2013, even though this case was pending and undetermined for 111 days on August 1, 2013. On or before August 9, 2013, Judge Wilson received his salary for judicial office in violation of law, while this matter was pending and undetermined for 90 days or more after it had been submitted for decision.

3. On June 7, 2013, in Jack Crlenjack v. Humboldt Land Title Company, No. DR110599, Judge Wilson heard argument on the plaintiff's Motion to Add Back Causes of Action to the Third Amended Complaint and took the motion under submission. The judge sent his completed ruling to his judicial assistant on October 7, 2013. The ruling was processed and filed on October 10, 2013, 125 days after the judge took the motion under submission.

On October 4, 2013, Judge Wilson signed and submitted a salary affidavit in which he falsely declared that no cause remained pending and undetermined that had been submitted to him for decision for the period of 90 days prior to October 1, 2013, even though this case was pending and undetermined for 116 days on October 1, 2013. On or before October 7, 2013, Judge Wilson received his salary for judicial office in violation of law, while this matter was pending and undetermined for 90 days or more after it had been submitted for decision.

4. On August 30, 2013, in Certain Underwriters at Lloyd's of London, et al. v. Simpson Timber Company, et al., No. DR100160, Judge Wilson presided over a hearing on a motion for summary judgment and/or adjudication and took the motion under submission. The judge did not decide the motion until his ruling was filed on December 6, 2013, 98 days after he took the motion under submission.

On November 26, 2013, Judge Wilson signed a salary affidavit in which he falsely declared that no cause remained pending and undetermined that had been submitted to him for decision for the period of 90 days prior to December 1, 2013, even though the motion for summary judgment and/or adjudication in this case was pending and undetermined for 93 days on December 1, 2013.

5. On April 15, 2014, in Janet Battaglieri v. Donald A. Battaglieri, No. FL050322, Judge Wilson presided over a hearing on a request for an order to determine support arrearages and took the matter under submission. The judge did not issue his ruling until August 4, 2014, 111 days after the matter was submitted.

On July 30, 2014, Judge Wilson signed a salary affidavit in which he falsely declared that no cause remained pending and undetermined that had been submitted to him for decision for the period of 90 days prior to August 1, 2014, even though the above matter was pending and undetermined for 108 days on August 1, 2014. As a result, on August 1, 2014, Judge Wilson received his salary for judicial office in violation of law.

6. On May 23, 2014, in Laura Lewis v. Jeffrey Lewis, No. FL130332, Judge Wilson presided over a hearing on a motion, a demurrer, and multiple requests for orders, and took the matters under submission. The judge's lists of submitted matters dated August 7 and September 4, 2014, reflect that at least three matters in this case were submitted on May 23, 2014, and remained undecided on August 7 and September 4, 2014. The judge did not issue his rulings until September 5, 2014, 105 days after the matters were submitted.

On May 27, 2014, in Kara Clower v. Justin Natividad, No. FL130224, Judge Wilson presided over a hearing on a request for an order regarding child support and took the matter under submission. The judge's list of submitted matters dated August 7, 2014, reflects that this matter was submitted on May 27, 2014, and remained undecided on August 7, 2014. The judge did not issue a decision until September 2, 2014, 98 days after the matter was submitted.

On August 28, 2014, Judge Wilson signed a salary affidavit in which he falsely declared that no cause remained pending and undetermined that had been submitted to him for decision for the period of 90 days prior to September 1, 2014, even though the above matters were pending and undetermined for over 90 days on September 1, 2014. As a result, on August 29, 2014, Judge Wilson received his salary for judicial office in violation of law.

7. On July 1, 2014, in County of Humboldt v. Frederick Breckenridge, No. FS100378, Judge Wilson presided over a hearing on an order to show cause and three requests for orders, and took the matters under submission. One of the requests for orders concerned child custody and visitation. The judge's lists of submitted matters dated August 7, September 4, and October 3, 2014, reflect that at least one matter in this case was submitted on July 1, 2014, and remained undecided on August 7, September 4, and October 3, 2014. The judge did not decide the matters until his ruling was filed on November 3, 2014, 125 days after the matters were submitted.

On October 6, 2014, Judge Wilson signed a salary affidavit in which he falsely declared that no cause remained pending and undetermined that had been submitted to him for decision for the period of 90 days prior to October 1, 2014, even though the above matters in this case were pending and undetermined for 92 days on October 1, 2014. As a result, on October 7, 2014, Judge Wilson received his salary for judicial office in violation of law.

In addition, on October 29, 2014, Judge Wilson signed a salary affidavit in which he falsely declared that no cause remained pending and undetermined that had been submitted to him for decision for the period of 90 days prior to November 1, 2014, even though the above matters in this case were pending and undetermined for 123 days on November 1, 2014. As a result, on October 30, 2014, Judge Wilson received his salary for judicial office in violation of law.

The California Constitution provides that "[a] judge of a court of record may not receive the salary for the judicial office held by the judge while any cause before the judge remains pending and undetermined for 90 days after it has been submitted for decision." (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 19.) The Legislature followed this command with an implementing statute, Government Code section 68210, which provides that "[n]o judge of a court of record shall receive his salary unless he shall make and subscribe before an officer entitled to administer oaths, an affidavit stating that no cause before him remains pending and undetermined for 90 days after it has been submitted for decision." The withheld salary is not forfeited; once all overdue matters are completed, the judge is again entitled to receive his or her salary, including those amounts that were not paid during the period of delay. (See Inquiry Concerning Freedman (2007) 49 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 223, 230, citing Hassanally v. Firestone (1996) 51 Cal.App.4th 1241, 1244-1245.)

In Mardikian v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1985) 40 Cal.3d 473, the California Supreme Court stated that the Government Code section and constitutional provision "reflect the judgment of the Legislature and the electorate that this period [90 days] affords a reasonable time within which to expect a trial judge to carry out the basic responsibility of a judge to decide cases." (Id. at p. 477, fn. 4, citation omitted.) "When, with 'proper application,' a judge would be able to decide matters pending before him within 90 days of their submission for decision, but does not do so, the failure to perform is a basis for" discipline. (Id. at p. 482.) A judge's workload may make prompt decision of all matters submitted to the judge impossible, particularly in counties like Humboldt where the average workload appears to exceed the statewide average. However, that does not justify the execution of false salary affidavits or the unlawful receipt of salary for judicial office.

The commission found that the judge's conduct violated his duties under canon 2A to respect and comply with the law and to act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity of the judiciary.

The commission concluded that the judge's conduct, as described herein, constituted at a minimum improper action.

In aggravation, Judge Wilson received a private admonishment in 2007 for deciding matters in seven cases between 168 and 277 days after they were taken under submission, signing three false salary affidavits, and failing to disclose in criminal cases his dispute and ongoing negotiations with the district attorney over disclosure of his salary affidavits and pay records.

PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE JOSEPH E. BERGERON

The Commission on Judicial Performance ordered Judge Joseph E. Bergeron publicly admonished, pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution and commission rule 115, as set forth in the following statement of facts and reasons found by the commission:

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

Judge Joseph E. Bergeron has been a judge of the San Mateo County Superior Court for 18 years. His current term began in January 2015.

The commission found that, despite having been warned by the court about his behavior, Judge Bergeron treated certain women at court inappropriately, and thereby failed to maintain high standards of conduct, to act in a manner that promotes public confidence in the judiciary, and to be patient, dignified and courteous to those with whom he deals in an official capacity, as follows:

1. On August 28, 2014, a courtroom clerk was assigned to work in Judge Bergeron's courtroom. She was not regularly assigned to his courtroom. Judge Bergeron presided over two specially set criminal matters. After the first matter concluded, the clerk stood up to retrieve the file from the bench where Judge Bergeron was presiding. He asked the clerk whether she played baseball and, before she could respond, tossed a crumpled calendar at her, which hit her in the chest and fell to the floor. The clerk, who was taken aback, responded, "I guess not." After the second matter concluded, the judge again tossed a crumpled calendar at the clerk, which hit her in the chest and fell to the floor. Judge Bergeron acknowledges that his actions made the clerk feel angry and uncomfortable and that they were discourteous and undignified.

2. On October 7, 2014, a different courtroom clerk was assigned to work in Judge Bergeron's department. She was not regularly assigned to his courtroom. She arrived at his courtroom at 8:00 a.m. Judge Bergeron had not yet arrived at court. A jury panel was scheduled to arrive at 9:00 a.m. or 9:15 a.m. At some point that morning, the judge telephoned the clerk's station while the clerk was on the telephone regarding the jury. He left a voicemail message stating that he did not know who his clerk would be that day, that he would arrive at court between 9:30 a.m. and 9:45 a.m., and that the jurors should not be sent to his courtroom. In his voicemail message, he asked the clerk to call him back, but because he did not leave a telephone number in his voicemail message, the clerk did not call him back. When Judge Bergeron arrived at court, he called the clerk's supervisor from his chambers and complained about the clerk in a very stern, very loud voice, yelling words to the effect of, "She didn't call back. She didn't even pick up the message. You are putting people in here who can't follow instructions." The judge's complaints about the clerk were so loud that she and others in the courtroom, but not jurors, heard them. Judge Bergeron acknowledges that he raised his voice and overreacted to the situation.

3. On December 18, 2014, Judge Bergeron was presiding over the in-custody pretrial calendar in a fourth floor courtroom that was not his regular courtroom. A female deputy district attorney came in to the department's conference room to pretry a criminal matter, joining another deputy district attorney, who had a cup of coffee with her. As the female deputy district attorney was leaving, Judge Bergeron asked her if her office was across the hall. When she said it was, the judge inquired about the availability of coffee there in a manner that conveyed that he would like her to bring him coffee; the facts about how he inquired, including the point at which he handed her his empty coffee mug, are in dispute. She responded by asking the judge, in a sarcastic manner intended to convey the impropriety of his request, what kind of coffee he would like and whether he would like cream and sugar. He responded, "I'll make it easy for you" and said he would take his coffee black. As she was leaving, he said, "If I had cash [or money], I'd give you a tip." She returned with his cup of coffee and said, again intending to convey with sarcasm the impropriety of his request, "Here is your coffee. Is there anything else I can do for you, Your Honor? Can I iron your shirts?" The judge remarked, "Well, at noon if it's still raining outside I can give you my keys, and you can go get my car." She responded, again sarcastically, "That may be a man's job," and left.

The commission found that the judge's conduct violated canon 1 of the Code of Judicial Ethics (judges shall personally observe high standards of conduct and uphold the integrity of the judiciary), canon 2A (judges shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary) and canon 3B(4) (judges shall be patient, dignified and courteous to those with whom they deal in an official capacity).

Judge Bergeron's conduct as described above was, at a minimum, improper action.

In determining to impose public discipline in this matter, the commission took into account the following aggravating factors:

First, in October 2013, less than one year before the August 2014 incident, Judge Bergeron was informed by the court's presiding judge and the court executive officer that six female court employees had complained that he treated them in a rude, abrasive and condescending manner. They told him that it was imperative that he alter his behavior and prevent future complaints.

Second, in April 2014, four months before the August 2014 incident, Judge Bergeron received a private admonishment from the commission for embroilment and abuse of authority. An attorney in a matter pending before him had come to his courtroom and had an encounter with his clerk, the facts of which were disputed. Among other things, the clerk alleged that the attorney grabbed her arm. Judge Bergeron summoned the attorney to a proceeding to address the attorney's actions and conducted that proceeding without having jurisdiction to do so, failed to advise the attorney of the nature of the proceeding or of his rights, relied on the unsworn testimony of a third party without affording the attorney the opportunity to be heard, questioned the attorney and asked him if he wanted to testify, and asserted that the attorney had committed a crime while the incident was still under investigation by law enforcement. The commission found that Judge Bergeron's actions violated canon 1 (judges shall uphold the integrity of the judiciary and personally observe high standards of conduct) and canon 2A (judges shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary). Further, in December 2004, Judge Bergeron received an advisory letter for violating canon 3B(7)'s prohibition against ex parte communications by failing to place on the record prior to meeting with deliberating jurors a stipulation reflecting counsel's consent to his meeting with jurors and for meeting with jurors after counsel objected to some of the judge's prior meetings with jurors and stated that all communication with the jury should be made in open court.

| IN THE MATTER CONCERNING JUDGE HENRY J. WALSH | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT |

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge Henry J. Walsh, a judge of the Ventura County Superior Court. Judge Walsh and his attorney, Edith R. Matthai, appeared before the commission on January 27, 2016, to object to the imposition of a public admonishment, pursuant to rule 116 of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance. Having considered the written and oral objections and argument submitted by Judge Walsh and his counsel, and good cause appearing, the Commission on Judicial Performance issues this public admonishment pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution, based on the following statement of facts and conclusions.

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND CONCLUSIONS

Judge Walsh has been a judge of the Ventura County Superior Court since 1998. His current term began in 2013.

Judge Walsh was in a contested reelection in 2012 and received campaign contributions from many individuals, including attorneys with cases before the judge. As set forth below, the commission determined that Judge Walsh engaged in a pattern of failing to disclose the campaign contributions of attorneys who appeared before him after the election.

During his campaign for reelection, Judge Walsh received contributions of $100 or more from more than 150 attorneys. Some of the attorneys made their first contributions after the June 5, 2012 election, when Judge Walsh was reelected.

In 2010, effective January 1, 2011, subdivision (a)(9)(C) was added to Code of Civil Procedure section 170.1 to require judges to disclose campaign contributions of $100 or more. This requirement is intended to ensure impartiality and to promote public confidence in the impartiality of an elected judiciary by providing parties and lawyers with information about campaign contributions. Canon 3E of the Code of Judicial Ethics provides for the manner of disclosure and, in 2012, required judges to disclose on the record "information that is reasonably relevant to the question of disqualification under Code of Civil Procedure section 170.1, even if the judge believes there is no actual basis for disqualification." Regarding the duration of the duty to disclose, a formal ethics opinion issued by the California Judges Association in 1999 and the California Judicial Conduct Handbook, third edition published in 2007, advised judges to disclose campaign contributions from attorneys of $100 or more for a minimum of two years. (Cal. Judges Association, Opinion No. 48, pp. 4-6 (1999); Rothman, Cal. Judicial Conduct Handbook (3d ed. 2007) § 7.56, p. 364.) Canon 3E was amended effective January 2013 to expressly require disclosure of campaign contributions for two years after a candidate takes the oath of office, or for two years after the date of the contribution, whichever is later. (Canon 3E(2)(b)(iii).)

When attorneys who contributed to Judge Walsh's campaign committee, either before or after the election, appeared before him after the election, Judge Walsh did not fulfill his duty to disclose the campaign contributions of those attorneys when they appeared before him.

An example of this pattern is the case of Randall S. Richman v. Mark Hartley, No. 56-2011-00401599-CU-BC-VTA, which was pending before Judge Walsh between August 2011 and September 2014. Among the matters litigated in 2012 was a summary judgment motion filed by defendant Mark Hartley, which Judge Walsh granted in August 2012.

Judge Walsh received campaign contributions of more than $100 from the attorneys involved in Richman v. Hartley, including a contribution of $1,499 from defendant Hartley's lead attorney Peter Goldenring on April 2, 2012; $1,000 from Mr. Goldenring's law partner, James Prosser, on March 26, 2012; and $250 from plaintiff's counsel Richard Francis on May 10, 2012. Judge Walsh did not disclose those contributions on the record when the case came before him for a hearing on defendant's motion for summary judgment on July 16, 2012, 41 days after the election.

According to Judge Walsh, he did not believe he was required to disclose contributions after the election and he did not do so when attorneys who had contributed to his campaign appeared before him after the election. The commission noted that the judge's position severely restricts the extent of disclosure of campaign contributions and leads to the result that post-election contributions would never be disclosed. The commission found the judge's position to be contrary to the intent of the disclosure requirements and the ethics opinions available to the judge.

The commission found that Judge Walsh's conduct was inconsistent with his duty to disclose on the record information reasonably relevant to the question of disqualification, as set forth in canon 3E(2), and inconsistent with Code of Civil Procedure section 170.1, subdivision (a)(9)(C). Judge Walsh's failure to disclose campaign contributions after the election deprived the parties and attorneys appearing before him of information to which they were entitled. Even if the amount of a campaign contribution does not require disqualification, the perception of an impartial and independent judiciary is fundamental to public respect for the judicial system and the rule of law. In turn, public confidence in a fair and impartial judiciary depends on a transparent process through disclosure of information that may reasonably be relevant to the question of disqualification. Particularly with respect to campaign contributions, failure to disclose can give rise to public distrust in the independence and impartiality of the judiciary.

| IN THE MATTER CONCERNING JUDGE STUART SCOTT | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT |

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge Stuart Scott, a judge of the Santa Clara County Superior Court. Judge Scott and his attorney, James A. Murphy, appeared before the commission on January 28, 2016, to object to the imposition of a public admonishment, pursuant to rule 116 of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance. Judge Scott has waived his right to formal proceedings under rule 118 and to review by the Supreme Court. Having considered the written and oral objections and argument submitted by Judge Scott and his counsel, and good cause appearing, the Commission on Judicial Performance issues this public admonishment pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution, based on the following statement of facts and conclusions.

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND CONCLUSIONS

Judge Scott has been a judge of the Santa Clara County Superior Court since January 2015. His current term began in January 2015.

Shortly before noon on February 27, 2015, the jury returned a verdict in the case of People v. Howard, No. C1490791, which had been tried in Judge Scott's courtroom that week, finding the defendant guilty of violating Penal Code section 148. The same afternoon, Deputy District Attorney (DDA) Kelly Meeker, who had tried the case for the People, returned to the courtroom to pick up equipment she had left in the courtroom. DDA Meeker, who had several readiness matters on the afternoon calendar in the department next door to Judge Scott's, checked in there and then returned to Judge Scott's department at approximately 2:00 p.m. to 2:15 p.m. to collect her equipment.

When DDA Meeker entered Judge Scott's courtroom, he was seated at the court reporter's desk, chatting with the bailiff and a court clerk. DDA Meeker said hello to everyone and began to gather her things. Judge Scott stood to leave the courtroom and asked DDA Meeker to come speak to him when she had a second. DDA Meeker, who was holding her equipment and preparing to leave, asked when he would like her to drop by. Judge Scott responded, "Right now." DDA Meeker put down her equipment and walked to Judge Scott's chambers. While standing in the doorway, she told Judge Scott that she was really looking forward to getting his feedback on her performance in trial, but that several people in her office had told her that it was necessary to wait until after sentencing. Judge Scott told DDA Meeker not to worry and that he and she would be "discreet," or words to that effect. Judge Scott then closed his chambers door and told her to sit down.

Judge Scott first spoke about office history and the changing relationship between the public defender's office and the district attorney's office. He said that judges used to tell deputy district attorneys more about what to do in trial while trials were ongoing; he said that things were different now, and that it was hard for him to sit and watch a deputy district attorney in trial when he would do things differently. Judge Scott told DDA Meeker that she had done a great job in her trial. DDA Meeker, who was aware that she and Judge Scott should not be discussing the case, interrupted to say that she had several readiness conferences in the department next door with the deputy public defender who had opposed her in the Howard trial, and that the deputy public defender might be waiting for her. Judge Scott again said not to worry, that he and she would be discreet, and that she should just "sit tight."

Judge Scott then gave DDA Meeker additional feedback on her trial technique, complimenting her style, suggesting that she could make her direct examinations shorter, and telling her that if he were the prosecutor, he would have been much more aggressive on rebuttal in response to arguments defense counsel had made. Judge Scott told DDA Meeker that being subdued in closing argument was in keeping with her style, that she had tried the case in a professional manner, and that the jury had liked her.

Judge Scott then spoke about the deputy public defender's performance as defense counsel. The judge asked DDA Meeker what she thought of defense counsel's performance; she gave her opinion that it was poor and that defense counsel was unprepared. DDA Meeker mentioned being surprised that defense counsel had admitted on the record that she had not read a case she cited in support of a request for a certain instruction. Judge Scott said that defense counsel was either incompetent or lazy and did a terrible job; he said he thought that the jury hated her and this was why a guilty verdict was returned quickly. DDA Meeker again told Judge Scott that she might have to go, and he said not to worry, that this would be discreet. DDA Meeker and Judge Scott then engaged in some discussion of what sentence might be imposed on the defendant.

DDA Meeker told Judge Scott that she had several readiness conferences next door and had to go. Judge Scott asked DDA Meeker if he was "jamming her up" by keeping her in his chambers. She said that he was not, but that she had cases on calendar and did not want to keep the deputy public defender waiting. DDA Meeker stood up and told Judge Scott that she hoped to meet with him another time so that she could get further feedback on her performance. Judge Scott mentioned that he would be out the following week, and that he knew she would be in Palo Alto; he suggested that she would not be able to get feedback at a later time because of scheduling. DDA Meeker said that if she was in Palo Alto, she would make time to meet with Judge Scott to get further feedback after sentencing.

Shortly thereafter, DDA Meeker reported the conversation to her supervisor. A news article about the matter appeared in the San Jose Mercury News on March 17, 2015. Judge Scott subsequently reported his conduct to the commission; his report was received on March 27, 2015.

The commission found that Judge Scott knowingly engaged in improper ex parte communication, contrary to the prohibition on ex parte communications set forth in canon 3B(7) of the California Code of Judicial Ethics, about a case that was pending sentencing before him, and deliberately engaged DDA Meeker in ex parte communication that violated her ethical obligations as an attorney. The commission found that Judge Scott's conduct also was contrary to canon 2A, which requires judges to conduct themselves at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary.

In his written objections to the notice of intended public admonishment, Judge Scott asserted that his comments about "being discreet" pertained to his negative critique of the deputy public defender, rather than to the fact that they were engaging in an improper ex parte communication. However, Judge Scott first told DDA Meeker that they would be "discreet," or words to that effect, before he commented on the public defender's performance and in response to DDA Meeker informing him that she had been told she should wait until after sentencing to get his feedback on her trial performance.

In 1998, the commission publicly admonished a judge who engaged in email communications with an attorney about how he might handle a dependency case in which the attorney was appearing. The judge's communication included a statement reflecting the judge's awareness that the communication was improper; when the attorney expressed discomfort about engaging in ex parte communication about a pending case, the judge responded, "chicken." (Public Admonishment of Judge Gregory M. Caskey (1998).) The commission found that Judge Scott similarly made comments reflecting his awareness that the conversation was improper.

Judge Scott contends there was significant prejudice in the Caskey matter because Judge Caskey was soliciting the attorney's advice on how to handle a matter procedurally. He maintains that his communication with the DDA was not prejudicial to either party because the trial was over and he had already decided on what sentence to impose. The commission disagrees. Judge Scott engaged in a private discussion with one party about a pending matter that was to be decided in the future. Moreover, the commission notes that the defense had a right to be heard on sentencing before the judge decided the appropriate sentence.

The commission took into account that Judge Scott cooperated with the commission and expressed remorse. Judge Scott urged the commission to also take into consideration that he was a new judge at the time the misconduct occurred and he had not yet attended New Judges Orientation. The commission appreciates that, after attending New Judges Orientation, Judge Scott has gained a better understanding of his role as a judge and the importance of impartiality. However, the commission notes that Judge Scott made statements at the time of the ex parte communication demonstrating that he knew then that it was improper, and he acknowledged he was aware, from his experience as an attorney for many years before becoming a judge, that ex parte communications with judges are improper pursuant to rule 5-300(b) of the State Bar Rules of Professional Conduct.

The commission is charged with protecting the public and maintaining public confidence in the integrity and independence of the judiciary. Judge Scott's misconduct resulted in publicity that reflects negatively on the integrity of the judiciary. Further, the judge's misconduct placed DDA Meeker in the unpleasant position of having to report the conversation to her supervisor. In determining that a public admonishment is the appropriate sanction, the commission considered the fact that Judge Scott engaged in serious misconduct in the judge's official capacity, and that the conduct undermined the integrity of the judiciary and the fair administration of justice.

The commission concluded that Judge Scott's conduct was, at a minimum, improper action.

Commission members Anthony P. Capozzi, Esq.; Ms. Mary Lou Aranguren; Ms. Pattyl A. Kasparian; Hon. Thomas M. Maddock; Dr. Michael A. Moodian; Nanci E. Nishimura, Esq.; Hon. Ignazio J. Ruvolo; Ms. Sandra Talcott; and Mr. Adam N. Torres voted to impose a public admonishment. Commission member Hon. Erica R. Yew was recused from this matter, pursuant to commission policy declaration 6.1. Commission member Mr. Richard Simpson did not participate.

PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE PATRICK E. CONNOLLY

The Commission on Judicial Performance ordered Judge Patrick E. Connolly publicly admonished, pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution and commission rule 115, as set forth in the following statement of facts and reasons found by the commission:

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

Judge Patrick E. Connolly has been a judge of the Los Angeles County Superior Court since 2009. His current term began in January 2015.

As set forth below, the commission found that Judge Connolly engaged in a course of conduct that reflected embroilment with a criminal defense attorney and abused his authority by setting multiple post-trial hearings, including an ex parte evidentiary hearing, relating to statements the attorney made during trial without citing the attorney for contempt or issuing an order to show cause (OSC) re contempt. Judge Connolly failed to give the attorney notice of the subjects of his inquiry prior to conducting an evidentiary hearing, improperly excluded the attorney from the hearing, and engaged in improper ex parte communications before the hearing.

Judge Connolly presided over the jury trial in People v. Jackson, No. TA110670, in July 2010. During trial, Judge Connolly called for a sidebar conference to ask the defense attorney, Freddie Fletcher, for an offer of proof for a question he asked the alleged victim. Mr. Fletcher's offer of proof included the statement that his courtroom observer had reported seeing the prosecutor signal a police officer witness by slowing shaking her head. Judge Connolly said he had been watching the attorneys closely and had not seen anything from the prosecution that would make him believe she was trying to give answers to anyone. He described Mr. Fletcher's statement as "outrageous" and said "we will take this up at a later time."

At the end of the trial, after instructing the jury, Judge Connolly said, "I am going to be ordering a transcript about the allegation Mr. Fletcher made against the DA, and we are going to be bringing that up after the verdict." Mr. Fletcher asked for permission to put on the record his allegations regarding the conduct of the prosecutor while his witnesses were in court. Judge Connolly said Mr. Fletcher could make a record, but the court would not be taking witness testimony until after the jury returned.

The jury acquitted Mr. Fletcher's client on July 30, 2010. The verdict was not received by Judge Connolly, but by another judge. After the jury was released, the prosecutor said she believed Judge Connolly had requested that a hearing be set. Mr. Fletcher told the judge that he had been cited for contempt during the trial. The judge set the matter for an OSC on August 19, 2010 before Judge Connolly.

On August 19, 2010, Judge Connolly began the hearing by saying that Mr. Fletcher had made allegations about the conduct of the prosecutor during trial, and "at the very least we're going to have a hearing as to that conduct. Because if the DA did do the things for which the defense made those accusations, obviously, the DA would be, at the very least, in contempt of court, if not worse. ¶ But as I stated to Mr. Fletcher, I hope those are not spurious allegations, because, if so, the Court does find that that's contemptuous behavior also." Mr. Fletcher said he believed he had been cited for contempt for asking a certain question during trial. Judge Connolly said he was not proceeding as to the question, but as to the accusations Mr. Fletcher made.

Judge Connolly continued the hearing and said, "And then in the interim period of time I'm also going to be reviewing transcripts from Long Beach, as to contempt proceedings that are involving Mr. Fletcher." The Long Beach matter concerned a hearing before another judge in which it was alleged that Mr. Fletcher had challenged the conduct of a prosecuting attorney. A contempt hearing was placed on the court's calendar in December 2009, but no OSC re contempt was ever filed and the hearing never went forward. Mr. Fletcher objected to Judge Connolly's reviewing that matter and requested copies of any materials or transcripts the judge reviewed. Mr. Fletcher said he would provide affidavits from his observers in People v. Jackson, who said they had seen the prosecutor signal a witness.

On September 1, 2010, Judge Connolly called the case and said he was continuing it because, although he had spoken to the judge in Long Beach about the contempt matter pending there, he had not yet received the transcripts. He said, "So, what I'm going to do at this point in time is I'm going to set another date so that I can have those and review those."

On October 7, 2010, Judge Connolly again continued the matter. On October 28, Mr. Fletcher appeared with counsel, who filed a Request for Specification of Grounds for Contempt the same day. Judge Connolly said, "Who is representing Mr. Fletcher[?] Charges will be filed by the Court by November 22nd. We'll have both of you back here on December 28th." Judge Connolly also ordered Mr. Fletcher's witnesses back to court at his attorney's request.

On December 28, 2010, Mr. Fletcher appeared again with counsel. Judge Connolly continued the matter again, this time setting a hearing as to whether Mr. Fletcher's accusations against the prosecutor were well founded. Mr. Fletcher's attorney said he did not know what charges Mr. Fletcher was facing. Judge Connolly said, "There are no charges at this time. We are going to have a hearing as to whether or not the allegation that he made against [the prosecutor] were [sic] well-founded or not." Mr. Fletcher's attorney asked whether it was a contempt hearing, and Judge Connolly replied, "At this point, it is not. It's an evidentiary hearing to decide whether or not either side is in contempt."

On February 3, 2011, Mr. Fletcher appeared in pro per and an attorney from the District Attorney's office appeared to represent the prosecutor in People v. Jackson. Before the hearing, Judge Connolly met ex parte in his chambers with the attorney from the District Attorney's office. They reportedly discussed witness and hearing logistics. The substance of their discussion was not disclosed to Mr. Fletcher.

Judge Connolly began the February 3, 2011 hearing by stating that it was "an order to show cause as to whether or not any party in this matter should be held in contempt" and announcing that "these are separate proceedings." He recounted that during trial, in July of the previous year, "I believe on either the 27th or 28th of July, Mr. Fletcher made some statements on the record as to conduct that he alleged towards [the prosecutor]. ¶ If those allegations are correct, that would be contemptuous behavior, and we are to determine whether or not there was a basis for those allegations." Judge Connolly then asked the prosecutor in People v. Jackson and the DDA representing her to step outside the courtroom.

Mr. Fletcher filed three written motions on February 3, 2011: 1) objections to the court's jurisdiction to conduct an OSC re whether there was evidence to charge either of the attorneys in People v. Jackson with contempt, 2) a motion to disqualify Judge Connolly, and 3) notice that Mr. Fletcher was invoking his Fifth Amendment right not to appear as a witness in the hearing. Judge Connolly ruled that these motions were untimely.

Throughout the portion of the hearing in which Mr. Fletcher was permitted to participate, he objected to the court's jurisdiction. He also objected that the court had not provided him with transcripts of the statements at issue. Mr. Fletcher did not testify or present witness testimony, other than the declarations submitted with his motions, maintaining that the court did not have authority to conduct the hearing. Ultimately, Judge Connolly asked Mr. Fletcher to leave the courtroom so that he could conduct the second portion of the hearing, in which the District Attorney's office would participate. Mr. Fletcher objected strongly to being asked to leave the courtroom, but eventually left on Judge Connolly's order.

During the portion of the hearing in which the District Attorney's office participated, and from which Mr. Fletcher was excluded, Judge Connolly called as a witness his court reporter, who testified that she had been watching the prosecutor during the officer's testimony and did not see the prosecutor signal to the officer. The District Attorney's office called the police officer witness and the investigating officer, who both testified that they did not see the prosecutor signal to the officer. Mr. Fletcher did not have an opportunity to hear the testimony of these witnesses or to cross-examine them.

Judge Connolly had provided to the District Attorney's office, but not to Mr. Fletcher, excerpts of the trial transcript pertaining to two occasions on which Mr. Fletcher had arguably questioned the integrity of the prosecutor: the alleged signaling incident, and another incident in which Mr. Fletcher questioned the prosecutor's statement that she did not know of an outstanding bench warrant for the alleged victim. Judge Connolly informed the DDA's that he was inquiring into both issues, but said, "Well I have not made any true allegation. This is an order to show cause. I made both sides aware of that."

After Judge Connolly took witness testimony on February 3, 2011, he called Mr. Fletcher back into the courtroom and provided him with a copy of the transcript of "the trial testimony that the court was considering as far as contempt." He stated that he was "going to have contempt proceedings against Mr. Fletcher." Judge Connolly said he would file an OSC re contempt on February 23, 2011. Mr. Fletcher renewed his objection to the proceedings. The hearing concluded with Judge Connolly ordering Mr. Fletcher back to court on February 23, 2011.

On February 23, 2011, Judge Connolly said, "Mr. Fletcher, today I'm taking it off calendar, but checking into the Long Beach matter that you have still before you, as to perhaps consolidation and proceeding under 177.5." In response to Mr. Fletcher's question, Judge Connolly explained, referring to Code of Civil Procedure section 177.5, "It's lesser than actual contempt, it's just whether or not there should be any type of sanctions as far as monetary sanctions and such."

The commission determined that Judge Connolly's handling of these proceedings reflected embroilment, which is "the process by which the judge surrenders the role of impartial factfinder/decisionmaker, and joins the fray." (Rothman, Cal. Judicial Conduct Handbook (3d ed. 2007) § 2.01, p. 37.) After the defendant was acquitted in People v. Jackson, Judge Connolly set six hearings over the course of more than six months relating to a statement Mr. Fletcher made at a sidebar conference during trial. At the outset of this series of hearings, Judge Connolly contacted a judge in a different courthouse to obtain information and transcripts relating to another possible contempt matter concerning Mr. Fletcher, which also involved statements that reflected negatively on a prosecutor. Judge Connolly continued the post-trial hearings in People v. Jackson at least twice to obtain transcripts from this unrelated case. These actions gave the appearance that Judge Connolly was not acting as an impartial factfinder, but was conducting an independent investigation into Mr. Fletcher's conduct, and was embroiled in the matter and biased against Mr. Fletcher. In his response to the commission's investigation, Judge Connolly acknowledged that his contact with a judge in an unrelated case was improper embroilment, and that his handling of this matter could be perceived as reflecting bias and an abuse of power. The commission found that by this conduct Judge Connolly violated his duty to act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary (canon 2A), and to refrain from speech or other conduct that would reasonably be perceived as bias or prejudice (canon 3B(5)).

The commission further found that Judge Connolly abused his authority by setting a series of post-trial hearings regarding Mr. Fletcher's statements during trial without citing either attorney for contempt or issuing an OSC re contempt, and conducting an ex parte evidentiary hearing for the apparent purpose of obtaining evidence that could be used in future contempt proceedings. Ordering a person to appear in court when no matter requiring his attendance is pending is a serious misuse of the judicial office. (Kloepfer v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1989) 49 Cal.3d 826, 857.) If Judge Connolly was exercising his contempt power when he set these hearings, as he asserted before the commission, he was obliged to follow the procedures for imposing contempt.

Contempt proceedings, whether indirect, direct, or "hybrid", are properly initiated with notice to the alleged contemnor that the court is considering a contempt charge and notice of the nature and facts of the specific charge. (Rothman, Cal. Judicial Conduct Handbook (3d ed. 2007) § 4.21, p. 163, § 4.30, p. 177, § 4.01, pp. 153–154.) This notice may take the form of a verbal contempt citation in cases of direct or "hybrid" contempt, and, in cases of indirect contempt, requires an affidavit or a statement of facts by a judicial officer. (See Code of Civ. Proc., § 1211.)

Judge Connolly did not initiate a contempt proceeding by citing Mr. Fletcher for contempt or issuing an OSC re contempt. He stated generally that Mr. Fletcher had made "allegations as to the conduct of the DA" during trial, not specifying which allegations or when, and said that if those allegations were "spurious" the court found them to be contemptuous. On several occasions Judge Connolly told Mr. Fletcher that he would be filing "charges" or an OSC on a future date. But he did not do so. Instead, on February 3, 2011, he conducted what might be characterized as a "pre-contempt" evidentiary hearing.

The commission found that the evidentiary hearing Judge Connolly conducted on February 3, 2011, and the ex parte manner in which it was conducted, constituted an abuse of authority. No cause was pending before Judge Connolly when he invited testimony from Mr. Fletcher and his witnesses, or when he called and questioned his court reporter and heard testimony from and questioned police witnesses called by the prosecution. Neither attorney had been cited with contempt, no OSC's re contempt had been issued, and the underlying case had concluded months earlier. Judge Connolly's determination to proceed with an evidentiary hearing gave the appearance that he was conducting an independent investigation into the attorneys' conduct, which was beyond the scope of his authority. (See Wenger v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1981) 29 Cal.3d 615, 630-631.)

Having undertaken an evidentiary hearing with no cause pending before him, Judge Connolly further violated Mr. Fletcher's procedural rights by excluding him from the hearing over his objection with no legal basis, and failing to give him notice of the specific subjects of his inquiry. Judge Connolly acknowledged in his response to the commission that he should not have excluded either Mr. Fletcher or the prosecution from any hearing. He asserted, however, that prior to the February 3, 2011 hearing, he provided verbal notice on the record to Mr. Fletcher that his accusations about the prosecutor were the subject of potential contempt proceedings. But this notice did not describe with any specificity what Judge Connolly was considering as a basis for contempt proceedings. Judge Connolly provided Mr. Fletcher with transcripts of the remarks he was considering as a basis for contempt at the end of the hearing on February 3, 2011, only after conducting both portions of the ex parte evidentiary hearing.

The commission further noted that the statement underlying this series of unauthorized hearings does not appear to have constituted contempt of court. The remark does not appear to have actually interfered with court proceedings because it was made at a sidebar conference in response to a request for an offer of proof. (See Code of Civ. Proc., § 1209, subds. (a)–(b).) While it is contemptuous to intentionally make a false statement to a court, (In re Aguilar (2004) 34 Cal.4th 386, 394), an attorney may argue prosecutorial misconduct to the court, and must do so, to preserve the issue on appeal. (People v. Harmon (1948) 89 Cal.App.2d 55, 61.) If Mr. Fletcher's trial observers said they saw the prosecutor signal a witness, Mr. Fletcher's duties to his client may have compelled him to report the matter to the court.

The commission also found that Judge Connolly engaged in improper ex parte communications by meeting in chambers with the DDA representing the prosecutor in People v. Jackson before the February 3, 2011 hearing, and failing to disclose the substance of the communication to Mr. Fletcher. Even if this meeting concerned only scheduling or administrative matters, it would not be permissible unless the judge reasonably believed that no party would gain a procedural or tactical advantage as a result of the ex parte communication, and the judge made provision promptly to notify all other parties of the substance of the ex parte communication and allowed them an opportunity to respond. (Canon 3B(7)(b), formerly 3B(7)(d).) In his response to the commission, Judge Connolly acknowledged that he should not have had ex parte contact with either the prosecution or Mr. Fletcher. The ex parte meeting in chambers and the failure to disclose the substance of the meeting to Mr. Fletcher violated canon 3B(7) and gave rise to an appearance of impropriety and bias. (Canons 2A, 3B(5).)

The commission found that Judge Connolly's conduct in these proceedings reflected embroilment and constituted an abuse of authority. Judge Connolly violated his duty to respect and comply with the law and act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary (canon 2A), to be faithful to the law (canon 3B(2)), to perform judicial duties without bias or prejudice and refrain from speech or other conduct that would reasonably be perceived as bias or prejudice (canon 3B(5)), to refrain from improper ex parte communications (canon 3B(7)), and to maintain high standards of conduct (canon 1).

Judge Connolly's conduct as described above was, at a minimum, improper action.

In imposing this public admonishment, the commission considered as an aggravating factor Judge Connolly's prior discipline. In 2010, Judge Connolly received a private admonishment for his use of profanity in a judicial profile interview and in chambers discussions with attorneys.

PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE JAIME R. ROMÁN

The Commission on Judicial Performance ordered Judge Jaime R. Román publicly admonished, pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution and commission rule 115, as set forth in the following statement of facts and reasons found by the commission:

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

Judge Román has been a judge of the Sacramento County Superior Court since 2007. His current term began in January 2011.

As set forth below, the commission found that Judge Román abused his authority and violated the due process rights of individuals appearing before him when ordering an individual incarcerated for contempt, when ordering the payment of monetary sanctions, attorney fees and costs, and when granting ex parte relief. The commission also found that Judge Román's conduct in one of the sanctions matters raised an appearance of lack of impartiality and embroilment.

1. Judge Román presided over the 2010 trial of People v. Johnson, Nos. 08F08054, 08F10037, 09F01034 and 09F08416. The trial transcript reflects the following when witness Bryan Jones was called to testify:

> MR. GOODMAN: People call Bryan Jones.
> THE COURT: Hi, Mr. Jones. If you'll come on up and sit next to me.
> THE CLERK: Please raise your right hand.
> (Whereupon, in doing so, a hand gesture was made.)
> THE CLERK: Mr. Jones.
> THE COURT: I think we can do without that, Mr. Jones.
> [Clerk swears the witness.]

(R.T. 260:24–261:5.)

Mr. Jones then testified until the end of the day's proceedings. Judge Román recessed the proceedings, excused the jury and the following occurred:

> THE COURT: Deputy Parker, do we have someone to assist you?
> THE BAILIFF: I'll get somebody.
> THE COURT: All right. Mr. Jones, I'm having you here because when the clerk administered the oath to you, you characteristically did what we refer to as flipped her off.

THE WITNESS: I didn't mean to do that.

THE COURT: Unfortunately, that's contempt. I'm going to remand you. You're --

THE WITNESS: Oh, my God.

THE COURT: -- to jail, okay. And you'll --

THE WITNESS: What about my daughter [present in court].

THE COURT: That's unfortunate. You'll be there for 3 days.

THE WITNESS: Oh, Tony [defendant], look at all this shit you did, oh…

MS. LAMB: I'm sorry, what's happening, Your Honor?

THE COURT: He flipped off the clerk during the administration of the oath. That's contempt on its face.

THE WITNESS: I didn't mean to flip. I just put my hand up. Man, I got arthritis.

THE COURT: All right. Anything else we need to put on the record?

THE WITNESS: Oh my God.

MS. LAMB: I just wanted to state that my client has nothing to do with this.

THE COURT: That's why I did this out of the presence of the jury --

MS. LAMB: Thank you.

THE COURT: -- because I did not want anything [to] be connected with any defendant or, for that matter, the People with regard to what occurred; but it's contempt on its face. We all recognize it. So he's going to spend 3 days in the county jail thinking about that.

THE COURT: All right. Any event, 3 days. He'll be here tomorrow, okay, because he's going to be in custody now, all right. And I'll need all five of you tomorrow at 9:00.

The next day when Mr. Jones was brought in to continue his testimony, outside the presence of the jury, he requested counsel. Judge Román ordered Mr. Jones returned "downstairs" pending the appointment of counsel. Later, outside the presence of the jury, Judge Román appointed counsel (Mr. Matheu) for Mr. Jones. Mr. Matheu asked Judge Román, "[I]s it a contempt hearing or has he already been adjudged in contempt?" Judge Román explained the events of the prior day and informed counsel that witness Jones was already serving three days in jail for contempt. Attorney Matheu then asked, "And obviously it wasn't inadvertent or it wasn't a mistake and what he was doing wasn't a twitch of the hand; it was a clear, blatant lack of decorum before the Court?" Judge Román responded, "I'm 59 years old." Attorney Matheu responded, "You know what a bird is; is that fair to say?" and Judge Román said yes. (R.T. 291:26–292:15; 333:10–334:13.)

It is misconduct for a judge to use the contempt power to incarcerate someone without following correct contempt procedures, which include notice and the opportunity to be heard. (See Ryan v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1988) 45 Cal.3d 518, 533 [California Supreme Court found that a judge committed willful misconduct by holding a litigant in contempt without informing her that she was in contempt and failed to give her a chance to respond before sentencing her to jail]; Kloepfer v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1989) 49 Cal.3d 826, 855–856). Judge Román's description of Mr. Jones's conduct did not inform Mr. Jones that he was being charged with contempt of court. Judge Román did not give Mr. Jones the opportunity to speak on his behalf before sentencing him. Although Mr. Jones thereafter offered an explanation, Judge Román had already sentenced him to jail. Judge Román contended in his response to the commission that he "went a step further" than he was required to and appointed counsel, but this did not happen until the next day after Mr. Jones had spent the night in jail.

The commission determined that Judge Román's actions constituted abuse of the contempt power and abuse of authority and violated Mr. Jones's due process rights. This conduct violated canon 2A of the Code of Judicial Ethics (judges "shall respect and comply with the law and shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary") and canon 3B(7) (judges "shall accord to every person who has a legal interest in a proceeding … the full right to be heard according to law").

Judge Román also failed to follow proper contempt procedures after incarcerating Mr. Jones by failing to issue a written order reciting the evidentiary facts supporting the contempt finding as required by statute. (Raiden v. Superior Court (1949) 34 Cal.2d 83, 86; Hawk v. Superior Court (1974) 42 Cal.App.3d 108, 125 fn. 16 [advising that in view of Raiden, the judge "must draw the order with meticulous care and should not delegate the draftsmanship to counsel or depend upon the clerk, no matter how experienced, to incorporate it into the minutes"].) A written order is the judgment in a direct contempt proceeding and the prompt preparation of the order by the court is jurisdictional and essential to a valid contempt, and is the basis for the contemnor's right of appeal. (In re Buckley (1973) 10 Cal.3d 237, 247; Cannon v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1975) 14 Cal.3d 678, 694.) Judge Román explained to the commission that he understood at the time that the transcript, his observance of the conduct, Mr. Jones's excuses and the court's guilty adjudication and length of jail sentence were sufficient, but admitted his failure to prepare the required written order. Judge Román's conduct in failing to issue the required written order violated canon 2A of the Code of Judicial Ethics (judges "shall respect and comply with the law and shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary").

The California Supreme Court and the commission have stressed that "[t]he contempt power, which permits a single official to deprive a citizen of his fundamental liberty interest without all of the procedural safeguards normally accompanying such deprivation, must be used with great prudence and caution," and that "[i]t is essential that judges know and follow proper procedures in exercising this power." (Public Admonishment of Judge Lisa Guy-Schall (1999), citing Furey v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1987) 43 Cal.3d 1297, 1314 and Ryan v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 45 Cal.3d at p. 533 [failure to know or research proper contempt procedures constituted bad faith]; Kloepfer v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 49 Cal.3d at p. 858.) Ignorance of proper contempt procedures, without more, constitutes bad faith. (Cannon v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications, supra, 14 Cal.3d at p. 694.)

2. Also during the Johnson trial, Judge Román sanctioned Assistant Public Defender Crystal Lamb $150 for failure to appear at 3:00 p.m. on February 2, 2010, to discuss jury instructions pursuant to his oral order at the end of the proceeding that day. After Ms. Lamb failed to appear, Judge Román instructed her to appear in his courtroom at 8:00 a.m. on February 3, 2010. On the morning of February 3, 2010, with all counsel present, Judge Román conducted a proceeding on the record outside the presence of the jury concerning Ms. Lamb's failure to appear. Judge Román began by stating, "You weren't here yesterday at 3:00." Judge Román heard Ms. Lamb's explanation, questioned her further and she responded with further explanation. Judge Román asked the co-defendant's counsel if he was appointed or retained and what level he was. (R.T. 662:23-663:28.) Judge Román then said:

> THE COURT: Okay. I'm going to sanction you, impose a monetary sanction, because we all had to be here, okay, of $150, 75 to the DA's office, 75 to the Conflict Criminal Defenders Panel, okay?

Judge Román then stated that the sanction was because "you [co-defendant's counsel] were here for an hour yesterday, and we were doing nothing." Ms. Lamb apologized and said she would gladly write the checks, which she did immediately thereafter. (R.T. 664:16-21.)

Judge Román did not give Ms. Lamb notice that he was contemplating a monetary sanction at any time prior to ordering her to pay the $150 sanction and never stated the statutory basis for the sanction.

The commission determined that Judge Román abused his authority and violated Ms. Lamb's due process rights by imposing a monetary sanction without prior notice. This conduct violated canon 2A of the Code of Judicial Ethics (judges "shall respect and comply with the law and shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary") and canon 3B(7) (judges "shall accord to every person who has a legal interest in a proceeding … the full right to be heard according to law"). Before sanctions are imposed, adequate notice is mandated based upon the due process clauses of both the federal and state constitutions. (Caldwell v. Samuels Jewelers (1990) 222 Cal.App.3d 970, 976.) While a court may raise the issue of sanctions on its own motion, it must give notice of its intent to impose sanctions "before findings are made and at a time preceding the trial judge's decision whether, in fact, to impose sanctions." (Bergman v. Rifkind & Sterling, Inc. (1991) 227 Cal.App.3d 1380, 1387 [original italics] [sanctions award reversed because judge's findings regarding sanctions preceded his review of the attorney's explanation and evidence of good cause]; Public Admonishment of Judge Ronald J. Maciel (2006).) The reason for the notice requirement is to advise the responding party that the imposition of sanctions is being considered, and to give the party an opportunity to prepare for the hearing. (Seykora v. Superior Court (1991) 232 Cal.App.3d 1075, 1081.)

3. Judge Román presided over a hearing in Rapozo v. Rapozo, No. 10FL07683, on April 9, 2012, and issued an order of that same date enumerating and ruling on 70 issues collectively presented by the parties. Judge Román told the commission that, as always, there were only 15 minutes available to hear all of the motions associated with the Rapozo action. The ruling awarded petitioner $29,500 in attorney fees pursuant to Family Code section 2030, $4,500 in costs pursuant to Family Code sections 2030 and 2031, $20,000 in attorney fees as a sanction pursuant to Family Code section 271, and $5,000 in attorney fees as a sanction against respondent's counsel, Steven Wessels. Judge Román told the commission that he believed petitioner had filed a written sanctions motion, but petitioner had not requested any of these awards either in writing or in open court at the time of the hearing of the cause on the merits. (Family Code section 2031(b)(1) permits oral requests in open court at the time of the hearing on the merits for an award of attorney fees and costs under Family Code section 2030.) Judge Román had not issued an order to show cause giving Mr. Wessels or his client notice that he was contemplating such awards, nor had he otherwise provided notice. After Mr. Wessels filed a motion to vacate the awards on the ground that neither he nor his client had been provided notice and an opportunity to respond, Judge Román issued a June 1, 2012 order vacating his April 9, 2012 order as to each of these awards. Judge Román noted in his June 1, 2012 order that Mr. Wessels had objected at the April 9, 2012 hearing to lack of notice regarding attorney fees and sanctions.

The commission determined that Judge Román abused his authority and violated Mr. Wessels's and his client's due process rights in issuing these awards totaling $59,000 without notice or an opportunity to respond. This conduct violated canon 2A of the Code of Judicial Ethics (judges "shall respect and comply with the law and shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary") and canon 3B(7) (judges "shall accord to every person who has a legal interest in a proceeding … the full right to be heard according to law").

In his response to the commission, Judge Román admitted that he erred in issuing the awards, but stated it was a harmless mistake that he corrected immediately upon notice that no motion had been made. In the commission's view, the scope of the violations precludes treating the conduct as a mistake. To the contrary, the commission determined that Judge Román's April 9, 2012 and June 1, 2012 orders raised an appearance of lack of impartiality and embroilment, in violation of canon 2A of the Code of Judicial Ethics. Notice and an opportunity to respond were required as to all of the awards. Yet, in his April 9, 2012 order, Judge Román "granted" two motions that had never been made. Notwithstanding the absence of any motion and the detailed basis required by California Rules of Court, rule 5.93 (2012) to support requests for attorney fees and costs under Family Code section 2030, Judge Román, on his own, determined the amounts of attorney fees and costs to award under Family Code section 2030(a)(2) in a 21-page highly-detailed order while failing to include the findings required by Family Code section 2030(a)(2). Judge Román had been a judge since 2007 and had been presiding in family court for a year and a half before he issued this order. He had the opportunity to become familiar with the statutes and rules governing pretrial attorney fees and costs, and sanctions. He acknowledged in his response to the commission that motions for such attorney fees and costs were "all too common."

Further, Judge Román's comments in the April 9, 2012 order reflected embroilment. Judge Román's June 1, 2012 order stated, "Mr. Wessels again observes that he was not provided notice in petitioner's 'responding papers' -- an oversight that will clearly not recur." Judge Román's admittedly erroneous award of $5,000 in sanctions against Mr. Wessels resulted in a report to the State Bar by Judge Román (which he told the commission he corrected after he vacated the award two months later). Finally, the order requiring the total payment of $59,000 in attorney fees, costs and sanctions was outstanding from April 9, 2012 to June 1, 2012, and was only vacated after Mr. Wessels filed a motion to vacate.

4. Judge Román presided over a child custody hearing in Gray v. Gray, No. 99FL00645, on October 10, 2012. On October 9, 2012, respondent mother filed a Declaration of Respondent in Support of Return of Minor's Belongings along with a proof of service showing service by mail and fax on October 9, 2012 on father's counsel, Steven Wessels. The hearing date listed on the proof of service was the following day, October 10, 2012 at 9:00 a.m., the time set for the custody hearing. Mother's declaration asked the court to order father to immediately turn over certain alleged belongings of the 16-year-old minor, including her iPhone and iPad. At the custody hearing, mother reiterated her ex parte demand for the phone and iPad. Mr. Wessels objected on the ground that mother had not provided notice of the demand, other than by fax the night before the hearing, which he had only received the morning of the hearing, and that father therefore had no opportunity to respond to the demand. Mr. Wessels also contended that there was no emergency justification for mother's untimely ex parte demand, and told Judge Román that father was not present to respond to mother's demand because father believed the custody matter had been resolved by a stipulation presented to Judge Román at the hearing. Judge Román told the commission that he believed the iPhone and iPad rightly belonged to the 16-year-old minor because she was the only party with the passcode, so he ordered father to turn over the phone and iPad forthwith.

The commission determined that Judge Román abused his authority and violated the father's due process rights when he ordered him to turn over the phone and iPad in response to mother's untimely ex parte demand. This conduct violated canon 2A of the Code of Judicial Ethics (judges "shall respect and comply with the law and shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary") and canon 3B(7) (judges "shall accord to every person who has a legal interest in a proceeding … the full right to be heard according to law").

At the time of this hearing, an applicant for ex parte relief was required to give the opposing party notice of the application by 10:00 a.m. the court day before the ex parte hearing. (Sacramento County Superior Court Local Rules, rule 14.08 (C) (2012); California Rules of Court, rule 3.1203(a) (2012).) Judge Román was aware that this requirement had not been satisfied. Judge Román contended to the commission that "untimely notice notwithstanding," father was able to appear and contest the motion through his counsel of record. This ignores the governing rules and the purpose of notice, i.e., protection of the party's constitutional right of due process. (Caldwell, supra, 222

Cal.App.3d at p. 976.) In the commission's view, the implication that counsel was necessarily aware of the facts that father would have been able to present concerning ownership of the phone and iPad if notice had been timely is unsupported and inconsistent with the purpose of timely notice and due process. Judge Román also contended that father was aware of mother's demand for the phone based on earlier filings and a Family Court Services report. These earlier documents did not contain a demand for turnover of the phone, were not the same as a demand for specific property being made in a timely motion, and did not give father notice that a hearing would be held on this issue on October 10, 2012. Judge Román also contended that Mr. Wessels's contention that the property belonged to the father "completely lacked merit" because none of the parties had disputed that the phone and iPad belonged to the minor until the October 10, 2012 hearing. In the commission's view, it was contrary to due process principles to expect father to dispute in advance a demand that had not yet been made. Further, in the commission's view, nothing in mother's declaration constituted the required affirmative factual showing on personal knowledge of any immediate, significant and irreparable injury or danger, or other statutory basis for granting relief without notice.

The commission concluded that Judge Román's conduct as described above constituted improper action at a minimum.

I.

INTRODUCTION AND SUMMARY

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge Edmund W. Clarke, Jr., a judge of the Los Angeles County Superior Court. The Commission on Judicial Performance (commission) commenced this inquiry with the filing of its notice of formal proceedings (Notice) on December 24, 2015. The Notice charged Judge Clarke with five counts of misconduct while he was presiding over jury selection on May 6, 2014, in a criminal trial involving four defendants charged with murder and gang allegations. The judge is charged with making discourteous and undignified comments to five prospective jurors,[1] and improperly ordering one of them to wait in the hall after she had been excused. The Notice further alleged that the charged conduct constituted a pattern of discourteous, undignified, and inappropriate treatment of members of the public. Judge Clarke filed an answer to the Notice on January 13, 2016, in which he denied that his conduct as charged in the Notice constitutes grounds for discipline under the California Constitution.

The Supreme Court appointed three special masters, who held an evidentiary hearing and reported to the commission. The masters are the Hon. Carol D. Codrington, Associate Justice of the Court of Appeal, Fourth Appellate District, Division Two; the Hon. Vincent J. O'Neill, Jr., Judge of the Ventura County Superior Court; and the Hon. Clay M. Smith, Judge of the Orange County Superior Court. A three-day public evidentiary hearing was held before the special masters commencing March 7, 2016, in

Los Angeles, California. The masters' report to the commission containing their findings of fact and conclusions of law was filed on May 9, 2016. On May 25, 2016, pursuant to commission rule 131,[2] the Alliance of California Judges (Alliance) filed an amicus curiae brief in support of Judge Clarke.[3] Oral argument before the commission was heard on August 24, 2016.

The masters found that Judge Clarke engaged in improper action in his discourteous comments to the juror in count one, but found no impropriety in the judge's conduct in ordering that juror to wait in the hall. The masters found no misconduct as to the remaining counts. We adopt the factual findings of the masters, with a few exceptions as discussed in this decision. For reasons we explain, we reach our own independent legal conclusions, and conclude that Judge Clarke's treatment of jurors in counts one through four violated the California Code of Judicial Ethics (the canons) and constitutes misconduct within the meaning of article VI, section 18 of the California Constitution, as specified in this decision. We agree with the masters that the judge's conduct as charged in count five did not violate the canons.

For many members of the public, jury duty is their only direct contact with the court system. When a judge engages in a pattern of discourteous and undignified treatment of jurors, public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judicial system is eroded.

Judge Clarke's mistreatment of four jurors in this matter, together with his prior discipline for misconduct that included making discourteous and undignified remarks to a pro per defendant, convinces us that a public admonishment is the appropriate discipline.

[3] The Alliance states that it is an association of approximately 500 judicial officers. The Alliance website states, "The Alliance of California Judges was formed on September 11, 2009, in response to the unprecedented financial crisis now facing our judicial branch. We are a new organization of judges in the State who will be a meaningful voice to independently advocate and communicate on behalf of judges with the public, media, and Executive and Legislative branches."

Judge Clarke is represented by Edith R. Matthai, Esq., of Robie & Matthai, Los Angeles, California, and Kathleen M. Ewins, Esq., of Long and Levit LLP, San Francisco, California. The examiners for the commission are commission trial counsel Mark A. Lizarraga, Esq., and commission assistant trial counsel Sei Shimoguchi, Esq.

APPLICABLE LEGAL PRINCIPLES

A. Burden of Proof and Standard of Deference to Findings and Conclusions of Special Masters

The examiner has the burden of proving the charges by clear and convincing evidence. (Broadman v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1998) 18 Cal.4th 1079, 1090 [77 Cal.Rptr.2d 408, 959 P.2d 715] (Broadman); Doan v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1995) 11 Cal.4th 294, 313 [45 Cal.Rptr.2d 254, 902 P.2d 272] (Doan).)

The commission gives special weight to the factual findings of the masters, who have the advantage of observing the demeanor of the witnesses; however, the commission may determine it is appropriate to disregard the factual findings of the masters based on the commission's own independent review of the record. (See, e.g., Inquiry Concerning Stanford (2012) 53 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 1, 18; Inquiry Concerning Freedman (2007) 49 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 223, 232 (Freedman); see Broadman, supra, 18 Cal.4th at p. 1090; Dodds v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1995) 12 Cal.4th 163, 168 [48 Cal.Rptr.2d 106, 906 P.2d 1260] (Dodds).) Legal conclusions of the masters are entitled to less deference because the commission has expertise with respect to the law of judicial misconduct. (See, e.g., Broadman, supra, 18 Cal.4th at p. 1090; Adams v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1995) 10 Cal.4th 866, 880 [42 Cal.Rptr.2d 606, 897 P.2d 544] (Adams); Fletcher v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1998) 19 Cal.4th 865, 878 [81 Cal.Rptr.2d 58, 968 P.2d 958].) As such, the commission reaches its own conclusions of law based on its independent review of the record and the law. (See, e.g., Freedman, supra, 49 Cal.4th CJP Supp. at p. 232; Inquiry Concerning McBrien (2010) 49 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 315, 321.) The Supreme Court has stated that it is "particularly deferential" to the conclusions of the commission when it has acted unanimously. (Broadman, supra, 18 Cal.4th at pp. 1090-1091; Dodds, supra, 12 Cal.4th at p. 168.)

Judge Clarke and the Alliance assert that the commission should give dispositive effect to the factual findings and legal conclusions of the masters, except as to those factual findings to which Judge Clarke objects. The judge argues that to set aside the findings and conclusions of the special masters "would reduce the Formal Proceedings before the Special Masters to a fig leaf of due process used to disguise the power of the commission to impose its own views on the California judiciary." The degree of deference urged by Judge Clarke and the Alliance is contrary to Supreme Court precedent and would require the commission to relinquish to the masters the commission's constitutional mandate and authority to determine whether there is a basis for discipline, as well as the appropriate level of discipline. (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18.)

Prior to the passage of Proposition 190 in 1994, which significantly changed the constitutional composition and procedures of the commission, the commission made recommendations to the Supreme Court on factual findings, legal conclusions and discipline following a hearing before special masters. (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, former subd. (c).) After reviewing the report and recommendation of the commission, the Supreme Court independently evaluated the evidence to determine if there was clear and convincing evidence to sustain the charges, and determined the appropriate level of discipline. Because the commission, not the masters, was vested with the constitutional power to make recommendations to the Supreme Court, the court held that the commission "is free to disregard the report of the masters and may prepare its own findings of fact and consequent conclusions of law." (Geiler v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1973) 10 Cal.3d 270, 275 [110 Cal.Rptr. 201, 515 P.2d 1] (Geiler).)

By the same reasoning, since the voters of California have entrusted the commission with the ultimate authority to make determinations of judicial misconduct and discipline, subject to discretionary Supreme Court review, the commission has a responsibility to independently review the record and make its own findings and conclusions, while giving special weight to the factual findings of the masters. This responsibility takes on added import in view of the voters' decision to change the composition of the commission to a majority of public members. Moreover, with respect to conclusions of law, the commission must ensure that the law of judicial ethics is applied and interpreted consistently. The commission would be remiss in the exercise of its constitutional mandate in deferring to a legal conclusion that it determines to be incorrect.

B. Levels of Judicial Misconduct

A violation of the California Code of Judicial Ethics constitutes one of three levels of judicial misconduct: willful misconduct, prejudicial misconduct, or improper action. (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (d).)

1. Willful Misconduct

Willful misconduct is (1) unjudicial conduct that is (2) committed in bad faith (3) by a judge acting in his judicial capacity. (Broadman, supra, 18 Cal.4th at p. 1091.)

Whether a judge's conduct is unjudicial is measured with reference to the canons. (Dodds, supra, 12 Cal.4th at p. 172.)

A judge acts in bad faith "only by (1) performing a judicial act for a corrupt purpose (which is any purpose other than the faithful discharge of judicial duties), or (2) performing a judicial act with knowledge that the act is beyond the judge's lawful judicial power, or (3) performing a judicial act that exceeds the judge's lawful power with a conscious disregard for the limits of the judge's authority." (Broadman, supra, 18 Cal.4th at p. 1092.)

It is not disputed that Judge Clarke was acting in his judicial capacity.

2. Prejudicial Misconduct

The second most serious level of misconduct is prejudicial misconduct, "conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute." (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (d).) Prejudicial misconduct while acting in a judicial capacity does not require bad faith; rather, it is "conduct which a judge undertakes in good faith but which nevertheless would appear to an objective observer to be not only unjudicial conduct but conduct prejudicial to public esteem for the judicial office." (Geiler, supra, 10 Cal.3d at p. 284.)

3. Improper Action

Improper action occurs when the judge's conduct violates the canons, but the circumstances do not rise to the level of prejudicial misconduct and do not bring the judiciary into disrepute. (Inquiry Concerning Saucedo (2015) 62 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 1, 82; Inquiry Concerning Ross (2005) 49 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 79, 89 (Ross), citing Adams, supra, 10 Cal.4th at p. 899.)

III.

FINDINGS OF FACT AND CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

A. Factual Background

Judge Clarke presided over jury selection in People v. Diaz, et al. Four defendants were charged with murder and gang allegations. The trial estimate was more than four weeks. Judge Clarke's courtroom did not have the same resources available to the courts that are usually assigned long-cause felony cases with security concerns, so additional sheriff's deputies were assigned to his courtroom. Selecting jurors for the trial was made difficult by the estimated length of the trial and the number of peremptory challenges available to the multiple defendants and the district attorney.

A number of judges from the Los Angeles County Superior Court attested to the complexity of jury selection in a multidefendant case and the reluctance of many jurors to serve, particularly in long trials. These judges also discussed the challenges in evaluating claims of hardship and lack of English proficiency.

The charged conduct in this matter occurred on May 6, 2014, the second day of jury selection. Most of our factual findings are based on the transcript of that proceeding.

B. Count One

1. Factual Findings

Juror 7122 had written on her hardship form, "Having Severe Anxiety!!" next to a drawing of a distressed face. She added, "I work as a waitress and make minimum wages, plus I'm planning a wedding in two months and all of these things, especially this courthouse are aggravating my anxiety terribly. On the verge of a meltdown!" During the afternoon session, Judge Clarke discussed the hardship request with juror 7122, and then stated, "I'm going to excuse you, and you can go. And good luck." The juror then asked if she could add something and the following transpired:

> JUROR 7122: I would just like to add that, you know, everyone here in the jury has sacrificed a lot to even be here today. And, you know, anxiety is real. And the woman who is checking us in, I'm sure it's a very stressful job. The way she's treated everyone today has just been really disrespectful and —
> THE COURT: You can stay then and tell me about that at the end of the day.
> JUROR 7122: I got to go.
> THE COURT: No, you're staying. You're staying. You're staying on. I've been a judge for seven years. No one's ever complained about my clerk. But I'll be happy to hear your complaint at the end of the day. So go to the hall and stay and come in, act like an adult and you can face her and tell me everything she did wrong.
> JUROR 7122: Yes, sir.

The next juror remarked, "Hate to follow that." Judge Clarke responded, "Trust me, it would be hard not to look good after that."

Juror 7122 went into the hallway, where she was seen crying. Approximately an hour later, near the end of the afternoon session, she was called back into the courtroom. The following occurred:

> THE COURT: All right. We now have back juror 7122. Why don't you come right up to the front row there where I can hear you.
> JUROR 7122: Sure.

THE COURT: Now, what did you want to tell me about the way you've been treated today?

JUROR 7122: First of all, I apologize for upsetting you, or upsetting the clerk. That wasn't my intentions. You know, we just take a lot of time out of our day to come here. And I know everyone is really stressed out here, and it's a big job. But, you know, there was a comment made about my anxiety and it kind of, you know, really affected me. And, you know, I should have kept my mouth shut, obviously.

THE COURT: Tell me what my clerk said that caused you to personally go after her like that.

JUROR 7122: Well, like I said, I know — I know she has a hard job and everything, but the way that people are being talked to out there is just a little, you know —

THE COURT: Such as what? Was there some language used that you thought was inappropriate?

JUROR 7122: No. I mean, just demanding people around kind of rudely. Like I said, I know there's a lot of people coming in here. We don't know where — what we're doing. That was — and then there was just like — I told her I was having anxiety, which is very real and very true. And then she made it — I don't know if it was a joke about anxiety, "Well, I have anxiety too. You guys back up." And I felt that was personal to me. [¶] And I know — you know, I figured this is the place where we can have freedom of speech and exercise what is right, and that's all I was trying to do. I really didn't mean to offend or upset you in any way. I apologize for that.

THE COURT: So because she didn't respond to your claim of anxiety with appropriate sensitivity, you attacked her in open court in front of a judge with your criticism?

JUROR 7122: I mean, I guess.

THE COURT: I guess that's exactly what you did. [¶] Now, you say you work as a waitress; right?

JUROR 7122: Yes, sir.

[¶] . . . [¶]

THE COURT: So if I came into your establishment and criticized you loudly and in front of your manager, in front of other employees, and it wasn't fair, how would you feel about that?

JUROR 7122: I would be pretty upset. I would probably pull you aside and talk to you about it?

THE COURT: Privately. So she should have talked to you privately about your anxiety?

JUROR 7122: Yes.

THE COURT: Where?

JUROR 7122: I don't know, away from everyone.

THE COURT: Where? Did you see how many hundred people [sic] were in the hallway this afternoon?

JUROR 7122: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: The world does not circulate around any one of us. Not you and not me. When we no longer can see that other people are struggling and doing their best, we run the risk of looking immature and selfish and not contributing to the society that we're supposed to support. And I see jurors potentially who do that every day in every case. [¶] You've been in the jury room. You've heard people talking. You've heard them gossip. I hear their stories in every trial. Every trial there's someone who tries to lie to me. There's a lot of good people, but there's plenty of liars. [¶] So if you came here thinking that this was going to be Disneyland and you were getting an E Ticket and have good time [sic], I'm afraid you have no sense of what is going on in this building. [¶] Now, seven years ago the first clerk that was assigned to me, she's still here. The only clerk I've ever had. One juror, in all that time, out of thousands, has ever complained about her. That's you. [¶] You can leave now knowing that's what you accomplished. Goodnight. We'll be in recess for 15 minutes.

Juror 7122 testified that when she asked the judge's clerk for a hardship excuse based on anxiety, the clerk said, "Oh, I'm having anxiety too. You guys get away from me. Just go stand over there." Juror 7122 felt humiliated and insignificant. Based on the clerk's tone and gestures, juror 7122 thought the clerk was making a public joke of her anxiety.

The clerk handed out hardship request forms in the hallway outside the courtroom. When juror 7122 asked to be excused because of her anxiety, the clerk told her to discuss it with the judge. The clerk did not perceive that the juror was actually suffering from anxiety. She denied making a joke about the juror's anxiety or making rude gestures to her. The clerk had a personal space issue, which was causing her anxiety when people got too close to her. As some of the jurors started grabbing forms, she told them that she had anxiety and instructed them to step back.

Judge Clarke testified that juror 7122 did not appear to be suffering from anxiety. In cross-examining juror 7122, the judge elicited that she was a public speaker, actress, writer, and activist with a public Facebook page and a number of blogs, and that she posted on YouTube.

Multiple witnesses testified that the judge appeared upset by the juror's statement about his clerk [he was "really teeing off on her," "he was angry," he seemed like he took "personal offense," he spoke in an "elevated tone"]. Judge Clarke acknowledged that he was angry at the juror and that she had gotten "under [his] skin." He admitted he was "defensive" and personally "hurt" and felt as if the juror had attacked a "person in [his] family."

Juror 7122 testified that when she was recalled to the courtroom, she did not feel she could truly express her concerns about the judge's clerk and felt she had been recalled to be reprimanded, not heard.

Judge Clarke acknowledged that he told the juror, "I'm going to excuse you, and you can go," but denied that he actually excused her or that he lost jurisdiction over her. Instead, he asserted that he was predicting that he would excuse her later or that she was not really excused because she was required to return to the jury assembly room to see if she was needed in another case. The judge also testified that a juror is not technically excused unless he specifically informs the juror that he or she must report back to the jury assembly room, which he did not say to juror 7122. However, he acknowledged excusing other jurors without this specific instruction. In both his response to the preliminary investigation letter and his prehearing brief, the judge admitted that he had excused juror 7122 before he ordered her to wait in the hall.

The special masters found that Judge Clarke had excused juror 7122, but then reversed excusing her after she complained about his clerk. The examiner contends this finding is not supported by the record. Whether the judge excused the juror or reversed excusing the juror is not necessary to our determination of misconduct, for reasons discussed later in our conclusions of law. Thus, we do not make a factual finding on this issue.

At the evidentiary hearing, Judge Clarke contended for the first time that he relied on a discussion in Judge Rothman's California Judicial Conduct Handbook in concluding that he had a duty and authority as a judicial officer to investigate the juror's complaint against his clerk. In response to this explanation, the masters stated:

> Although Clarke maintains he had an "ethical obligation" to investigate Juror No. 7122's complaint, the record demonstrates that Clarke did not truly consider the merits of her concerns. Instead, he immediately interrupted her and ordered her to wait outside without much explanation. When he finally called her back in at the afternoon's end, he was dismissive of her claims of anxiety. He lectured her and made condescending comments about acting like an adult and not treating the court like Disneyland. [Fn. omitted.] [¶] Clarke did not consider that his clerk, [], might have overreacted when faced with trying circumstances. He did not ask [his clerk] if possibly she had been stressed and overreacted because of the large pool of jurors clamoring for her attention and crowding her physically. Instead, Clarke admits he spoke rudely to Juror No. 7122, retaliating against her criticism in defense of his clerk.

Despite his position that the commission should defer to the factual findings of the masters, Judge Clarke asks the commission to reject this factual finding. He asserts that he inquired into the juror's concern about his clerk when he asked her, "Now, what did you want to tell me about the way you've been treated today? . . .[¶] . . . Was there some language used that you thought was inappropriate?"

We agree with the masters that the record demonstrates by clear and convincing evidence that the judge was not truly concerned with investigating the juror's complaint about his clerk, but responded to her out of anger and in retaliation for her criticism of his clerk. After juror 7122 complained about the clerk, the judge said, "No one's ever complained about my clerk. . . . So go to the hall and stay and come in, act like an adult and you can face her and tell me everything she did wrong." When the juror said she had to leave, he repeated three times "you're staying." Judge Clarke acknowledged he was angry at her for "what she had done to [his] clerk." He described feeling as if he or his family had been personally attacked. And, when the juror told the judge what his clerk had done, he responded by reprimanding her: "So because she didn't respond to your claim of anxiety with appropriate sensitivity, you attacked her in open court in front of a judge with your criticism?" Moreover, as noted by the masters, the judge did not ask his clerk if the juror's concerns had any merit, something a person truly interested in investigating the complaint would do.

2. Conclusions of Law

a. Comments to Juror 7122

We conclude, as did the masters, that Judge Clarke's disparaging and discourteous treatment of juror 7122 violated canon 3B(4), requiring a judge to be patient, dignified and courteous to jurors and others who appear before the court. The judge was dismissive of the juror's claim of anxiety, lectured her and made condescending comments about acting like an adult and not treating the court like Disneyland. We independently conclude that this conduct also violated canons 1 (a judge shall uphold the integrity of the judiciary), 2 (a judge shall avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety), and 2A (a judge shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary), and constitutes prejudicial misconduct.

Prejudicial misconduct is conduct that would appear to an objective observer to be not only unjudicial but prejudicial to public esteem for the judicial office. (Broadman, supra, 18 Cal.4th at pp. 1092-1093.) The masters concluded that the judge's treatment of juror 7122 did not create an appearance of impropriety or adversely affect the judiciary's reputation. We reach a different conclusion.

The examiner contends that the masters did not properly apply the objective observer standard in determining whether the judge engaged in prejudicial misconduct, noting that the masters relied on the mixed reaction of actual observers in the courtroom, including the attorneys and court personnel. In Doan, supra, 11 Cal.4th 294, the Supreme Court stated, "We are concerned with an 'objective observer' and not with the 'actual observers.' . . . To be sure, it is sufficient that the 'actual observers' view the conduct in question to be such. [Citation.] But, contrary to [the judge's] assertion, it is not necessary." (Id. at pp. 324-325, italics in original.)

The "objective observer" standard is similar to the "reasonable person" judicial disqualification standard (a person aware of the facts might reasonably entertain a doubt that the judge would be able to be impartial). (Code Civ. Proc., § 170.1, subd. (a)(6)(A)(iii).) In defining the reasonable person standard for purposes of disqualification, the Supreme Court states, " 'The "reasonable person" is not someone who is "hypersensitive or unduly suspicious," but rather is a "well-informed, thoughtful observer." ' [Citation.] '[T]he partisan litigant emotionally involved in the controversy underlying the lawsuit is not the disinterested objective observer whose doubts concerning the judge's impartiality provide the governing standard.' " (Haworth v. Superior Court (2010) 50 Cal.4th 372, 389 [112 Cal.Rptr.3d 853, 235 P.3d 152], italics in original, quoting United Farm Workers of America v. Superior Court (1985) 170 Cal.App.3d 97, 106, fn. 6 [216 Cal.Rptr. 4]; see also Wechsler v. Superior Court (2014) 224 Cal.App.4th 384, 391 [168 Cal.Rptr.3d 605]; Leland Stanford Junior University v. Superior Court (1985) 173 Cal.App.3d 403, 408 [219 Cal.Rptr. 40] [employing the " 'average person on the street' " standard]; United Farm Workers of America v. Superior Court (1985) 170 Cal.App.3d 97, 104, 106 [216 Cal.Rptr. 4] [applying average person on the street standard; also "the partisan litigant emotionally involved in the controversy . . . is not the disinterested objective observer"].)

These cases suggest that the view of a disinterested actual observer may be a fact to consider, but is not determinative on the question of whether the conduct is prejudicial to public esteem for the judicial office. Determining the view of the objective observer encompasses a general assessment of how the conduct would be viewed by members of the public, or the average person on the street, aware of the facts and circumstances.

As the commission stated in Inquiry Concerning Van Voorhis (2003) 48 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 257, 312-313 (Van Voorhis): "The public looks to judges to set the tone of judicial proceedings. When a judge mistreats staff, belittles counsel or gives vent to his or her anger or frustration, the audience is not only concerned about the result in the specific matter before the court, but worries that other parties, lawyers, jurors and employees will be subjected to similar mistreatment." We conclude that a judge's disparaging and retaliatory treatment of a juror who was simply voicing a complaint about how a clerk was treating jurors would be considered prejudicial to public esteem for the judiciary in the eyes of an objective member of the public.

Judge Clarke engaged in additional misconduct by ordering juror 7122 to wait in the hall, where she waited for approximately an hour before being recalled and reprimanded for criticizing his clerk. The masters found no impropriety in this aspect of the judge's treatment of juror 7122. We disagree and conclude that the judge engaged in willful misconduct.

As previously discussed, there is clear and convincing evidence to support the conclusion that Judge Clarke ordered juror 7122 to wait in the hall out of anger and in retaliation for her having criticized his clerk, not to make a genuine inquiry into the validity of her complaint. We conclude that this conduct violated canons 1, 2, 2A, 3B(4) and 3B(5) (a judge shall perform judicial duties without bias or prejudice) and thus constitutes an unjudicial act by a judge acting in his judicial capacity. Judge Clarke also acted in bad faith, a requisite element of willful misconduct, because he acted for a corrupt purpose, a purpose other than the faithful discharge of judicial duties. (Broadman, supra, 18 Cal.4th at p. 1092.)

When a judge acts out of anger and for a retaliatory purpose, the judge is not acting in the faithful discharge of judicial duties. In Van Voorhis, supra, 48 Cal.4th CJP Supp. at page 275, the commission concluded that the judge's comments, made in the presence of the jury suggesting that a prosecutor was misleading the jury, were made in bad faith and constituted willful misconduct because the judge was acting out of anger rather than in the faithful discharge of judicial duty. The commission rejected the judge's assertion that the comments were made to ensure that the defendant received a fair trial, and instead concluded that the comments were made for the corrupt purpose of venting his anger or frustration. (See also Inquiry Concerning Velasquez (2007) 49 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 175, 193-195, [judge engaged in willful misconduct when he became embroiled and " 'acted out of pique, irritation or impatience, any of which is a purpose other than the faithful discharge of his judicial duties' "]; Ross, supra, 49 Cal.4th CJP Supp. at p. 100 [judge engaged in willful misconduct by adding new criminal charges against a defendant out of pique].)

The examiner contends that Judge Clarke also acted in bad faith by exceeding his authority in ordering juror 7122 to wait in the hall after she had been excused. Judge Clarke maintains that he had authority to order the juror to wait in the hallway. We need not resolve this dispute because even if the judge had such authority, he exercised it for the improper purpose of venting his anger and in retaliation against the juror's criticism of his clerk. As such, he acted for a purpose other than the faithful discharge of judicial duties and in bad faith.

The masters concluded that although the judge engaged in "retaliatory conduct," it was not improper because he was personally defending his clerk. The Alliance asserts that Judge Clarke had a duty to come to the defense of his clerk when her "competence" was challenged. We disagree.

Juror 7122 was voicing a complaint about what she perceived to be discourteous treatment of jurors by the judge's clerk. This is something a member of the public has a right to do. There is no requirement that a judge come to the defense of a member of the judge's staff under the circumstances presented here. To the contrary, canon 3B(4) provides that a judge shall require court staff and personnel under the judge's direction to be patient, dignified, and courteous. (See Rothman, Cal. Judicial Conduct Handbook (3d ed. 2007) 6.26, p. 276.)

Judge Clarke asserts that a judge must be able to provide for the orderly conduct of court proceedings and be in charge of time management. He maintains that he was avoiding delay in addressing other hardship requests by ordering juror 7122 to wait in the hall rather than immediately addressing her complaint. We do not question a judge's authority to manage the order of court proceedings, so long as it is done for a proper purpose. As noted, here, Judge Clarke acted for a retaliatory purpose.

The Alliance contends that the judge's actions were in keeping with the spirit of canon 3C(1). That canon requires a judge to diligently discharge administrative duties impartially and prohibits a judge from engaging in speech that could reasonably be perceived as bias in the performance of those duties.[4] Judge Rothman states that a judge, "together with court administrators and the court's judicial managers, share responsibility for staff, with the judge having the most direct control in the courtroom environment." (Rothman, Cal. Judicial Conduct Handbook, supra, 6.27, p. 278.) However, he warns that the "managerial role requires oversight and actions by the judge that can become more difficult when the judge's relationship to staff is too personal. . . . [¶] . . . A professional relationship means that the judge understands that the first obligation is to the court and the public to maintain high standards in the management of the courtroom and the manner in which the important staff duties are performed." (Ibid.)

Thus, even if inquiring into the juror's complaint was within Judge Clarke's managerial duties, the responsibility entailed determining whether there was merit to the complaint, not jumping to the conclusion that the complaint was meritless and immediately reprimanding the complainant in open court. Moreover, a judge must be respectful and courteous in the performance of managerial responsibilities, and not act out of bias. Here, the judge allowed his personal bias toward his clerk to interfere with his objectivity.

[4] We note that ruling on hardship claims is an adjudicative responsibility, not an administrative duty.

C. Count Two

1. Factual Findings

On the morning of May 6, Judge Clarke questioned juror 4688, who had asserted on her hardship request that she could not speak or understand English. The following occurred:

> [THE COURT:] Good morning.
> [JUROR 4688]: Buenos dias. Good morning.
> THE COURT: Good morning.
> [JUROR 4688]: Good morning.
> THE COURT: All right. So you answered in English and then you got down to the reason and — I know enough Spanish to know what you wrote here. You said "I don't speak and I don't understand English."
> [JUROR 4688]: Correct.
> THE COURT: Correct. Thank you. How long have you been in this country?
> [JUROR 4688]: [Twenty-five].
> THE COURT: [Twenty-five] years, yes. And you studied for citizenship in English, yes?
> THE COURT: Don't try and fool me now, ma'am, you'll be here a lot longer. Most people that have been in this country for ten years have picked up enough English. [Twenty] or so, they're moving right along. And 25 years is — so you better have a different reason why you want to be excused than that. Otherwise you'll be around here a while. [¶] Do you want to come back tomorrow and talk to me about this more?

[JUROR 4688]: (No audible response.)

THE COURT: We'll get your jury form to see what you wrote on "Do you understand basic English," and if you wrote "Yes." [¶] You can stay in the hallway please, we'll get back to you. Stay in the hallway. [¶] Can you get her juror form? 4688.

Later, near the end of the afternoon court session, Judge Clarke recalled juror 4688, and the following transpired:

THE COURT: Good afternoon.

JUROR 4688: Good afternoon.

THE COURT: Remind me of your number?

JUROR 4688: Six eight — no. 4688.

THE COURT: 4688. Okay. So I found your form and someone put "Yes" for understanding English.

JUROR 4688: No.

THE COURT: And then they switched it.

JUROR 4688: No, I understand no English. I'm sorry.

THE COURT: Yes. I'm telling you I have it right here that you signed it and it says yes, and then someone moved it over to another side and put N-S on it. So here's — if you understand me, I'm giving you a hint. If you start being honest with me you'll go home. If I think you're still trying to fool me, you might be back here tomorrow while I investigate this further. Because the jury form says that someone already evaluated you for English and you said to them that you didn't speak English, and they already checked you. So they put a mark next to your number. [¶] So I don't care if you don't want to be here, but I do care if you're trying to fool me and you think that that's fair. So did you want to tell me how this all happened, or do you want to just come back tomorrow, I'll get a Spanish interpreter here and have that person help me communicate with you.

JUROR 4688: I'm sorry, I — I don't understand nothing. No [en]tiendo.

THE COURT: We can get an interpreter here this afternoon. You can wait in the hallway, we will get an interpreter here. [¶] As soon as we deal with this juror [Juror 7122] we'll take a break and I'll figure out what we do with our time, if any.

When Judge Clarke recalled juror 4688 at approximately 4:00 p.m., a Spanish language interpreter was present. The following occurred:

THE COURT: Is the interpreter here? Did you want to try and talk to this lady? Maybe we can get her on her way. [¶] Good afternoon, ma'am.

JUROR 4688: Good afternoon.

THE COURT: So now we have a certified Spanish language interpreter assisting you. Tell me —

JUROR 4688: Thank you so much.

THE COURT: When you just cried, why did you cry?

JUROR 4688: I felt ashamed.

THE COURT: Why ma'am?

JUROR 4688: Because I am a citizen and I really do need to speak English and I don't know how to speak English.

THE COURT: I'm sorry if you feel embarrassed about that.

JUROR 4688: I feel that way too.

THE COURT: So I assume you studied long ago to take the test; right?

JUROR 4688: No. My father was German, may he rest in peace. And he had me naturalized as a citizen when I was two years old. And then he sent me to Mexico. And when I came back here I was already a grownup.

THE COURT: All right. So as a citizen, some day we would like to have you serve as a juror. Now, I am not fluent in any other language, so I won't criticize someone who only knows one language. For citizenship here you should make an effort. People would like to have someone with your background, someone with your knowledge, someone with your understanding hearing their case. So if you have time to work on your English, the next time you come in maybe you can stay to serve.

JUROR 4688: Well, I would have to — I've got two jobs. I would have [to] quit one of my jobs.

THE COURT: I'm not ordering you to do anything. I'm hoping you have the time to do it.

JUROR 4688: Okay. I'll try. Of course I will.

THE COURT: Many people come and they say they don't understand English, and they actually can. And this has caused me to mistrust you, and now I feel that I should have trusted you more.

JUROR 4688: Well, I want to thank you. I would not lie to you if I really could understand and if I really knew.

THE COURT: All right. So now you're free to go. You don't have to go study anything, but I think everybody here would like to see you participating, if you can find the time and if you can.

JUROR 4688: Of course. Thank you.

THE COURT: Good luck. Thank you.

JUROR 4688: Thank you so much. Thank you.

The jury services division of the Los Angeles County Superior Court interviews prospective jurors to assess their English proficiency. When Judge Clarke first addressed juror 4688, he had a list indicating that she had been prescreened and found to be English qualified.

At some point while juror 4688 was waiting in the hall, Judge Clarke received her jury affidavit form from jury services. The form inquires whether the affiant is able to read and understand basic English, and includes circles indicating "yes" and "no." Juror 4688 filled in both circles, but also crossed out and initialed the "no" box.[5]

[5] The special masters found that the juror had changed and initialed the box for non-English speaking, even though she had been deemed qualified. Judge Clarke objects to this factual finding, and asks the commission to find that she changed her answer from

The judge testified that the inconsistencies on the form, the prescreening information, and the juror's responses made him skeptical of her claim that she did not speak English. One of the defense attorneys who spoke fluent Spanish thought the juror was not being honest about her lack of English skills because he saw her speaking English with other jurors in the hallway and she had filled out the juror form in English.[6] However, there is no evidence that the attorney conveyed this information to Judge Clarke before the judge questioned juror 4688 in the morning or afternoon.

Judge Clarke testified that he eventually excused juror 4688 because she had been weeping loudly and openly.

2. Conclusions of Law

The masters concluded that although Judge Clarke may not have acted with absolute patience, dignity and courtesy, he did not violate the canons charged or engage in misconduct with respect to count two. Based on the factual findings of the masters and our independent review of the record, we determine that Judge Clarke violated canon 3B(4) through his discourteous and intimidating comments to juror 4688.[7] We further conclude that the conduct constitutes improper action.

non-English to English, not the other way around. Juror 4688 did not testify at the hearing. We find that there is not clear and convincing evidence to determine which box the juror filled in first or to determine the juror's intent in making the change.

[6] The examiner objects to the masters' statement that "[b]oth the deputy district attorney and one of the defense attorneys thought she was dissimulating about her English proficiency." The transcript reflects that the deputy district attorney testified that he did not think Judge Clarke believed juror 4688, not that he (the deputy district attorney) did not believe her.

[7] The examiner asserts that Judge Clarke also violated canon 3B(4) by failing to give juror 4688 any indication of how long she would have to wait in the hall. When Judge Clarke first ordered the juror to wait in the hall, he did not know how long it would take to get her juror affidavit. The record does not reflect when the judge received the juror affidavit. Sometime in the afternoon, by his estimate at approximately 2:55 p.m., when his clerk inquired about juror 4688, the judge responded, "She can come at the end of the day when we've finished." Although, at that point, it would have been preferable

Judge Clarke contends that we should adopt the conclusion of the masters that he did not engage in misconduct because he had good reason to question the juror's claim that she was not proficient in English, because the issue of juror English proficiency is a significant and ongoing problem in the Los Angeles County Superior Court, and because of the importance of having a jury reflecting a cross-section of the community. We do not question that the judge initially had reason to doubt the juror's language claim or that language hardship claims are frequent and difficult to evaluate. However, this does not justify the judge's harsh and disparaging comments to the juror in open court. He could have simply asked juror 4688 to explain why she did not speak English after having been in the country for 25 years. If she claimed not to understand his questions, he could have told her to wait until he got the jury form and an interpreter, without accusing her of dishonesty in open court. In fact, once an interpreter arrived and the judge asked appropriate questions (why she felt embarrassed; "So I assume you studied long ago to take the test; right?"), he quickly learned that she had been naturalized as a citizen when she was two years old, and then was sent to Mexico where she stayed until she grew up.

Judge Clarke denied that he accused juror 4688 of lying, and instead describes his remarks as expressing skepticism. But, the transcript reveals that he repeatedly accused the juror of trying to "fool" him and told her if she did not "start" being honest with him, she would be there a lot longer and might even have to come back the next day. This is the equivalent of accusing her of lying.

Judge Clarke cites People v. Venegas (1970) 10 Cal.App.3d 814 [89 Cal.Rptr. 103], for the proposition that it is proper for a judge who believes that someone has testified falsely to say so, rather than remain silent. Venegas cannot reasonably be interpreted as condoning the judge's remarks to a juror in this case. In Venegas, the judge admonished a witness who was hostile, argumentative and evasive of the possible penalty for perjury, and told the witness, "If you are telling the truth, there is no to inform the juror that she would have to wait until approximately 4:00 p.m., based on this record, we conclude that there is not clear and convincing evidence that failure to do so violated canon 3B(4).

problem." The appellate court noted that the judge did not at any time directly accuse the witness of lying, and stated, "The mere comment by the court in a court trial of its disbelief of a witness' testimony in a temperate manner is not error." (Id. at p. 825.) In this case, Judge Clarke directly accused juror 4688 of trying to "fool" him and his comments were not made in a temperate manner. In People v. Steinfeld (1940) 38 Cal.App.2d 280, 282 [101 P.2d 89], the court stated: "It is not customary in American courts which follow approved principles of decorum to address witnesses in the curt manner in which defendant was addressed. Neither is it customary to interrupt the testimony of witnesses to accuse them of lying."

Significantly, Judge Clarke received an advisory letter from the commission less than six months before the conduct in this matter for conduct that included calling a criminal defendant whom the judge believed had misrepresented the amount of funds in his pro per account, "a ditherer, a dissembler, a poser and a fraud."

Judge Clarke has again violated his duty under the canons to be patient, dignified and courteous to those who appear before him by accusing juror 4688 in open court of dishonesty in an intemperate and disparaging manner.

D. Count Three

1. Factual Findings

During the afternoon court session on May 6, Judge Clarke considered the hardship request of juror 7132, who had written on her hardship form that she had $25 in her checking account. The following occurred:

> [THE COURT:] Next up, 7132. That's 137 on the random list. [¶] Hello.
> JUROR 7132: Hello.
> THE COURT: You actually told me how much you have in your checking account.
> JUROR 7132: I can show you too.
> THE COURT: No. No. It's an impressive and convincing figure.

JUROR 7132: Thank you for not sharing it.

THE COURT: Well, every one of these lawyers spent more than that on lunch today.

JUROR 7132: Great.

THE COURT: Probably. [¶] But, yes, I know some wait staff make a lot of money. Sounds like you're not in that category yet, so I'm going to excuse you. Thank you.

JUROR 7132: Thank you.

THE COURT: That's 137, 7132. She has $25 in her checking account. I know you all eat for less than $25. Sometimes we don't. That's cutting it close.

Juror 7132 had exited the courtroom when the judge revealed the amount in her checking account.

Juror 7132 testified that the judge's remark comparing the amount in her account with what the attorneys spent for lunch was "embarrassing and condescending." When she responded, "Great," to the judge's comment, she did so sarcastically. When juror 7132 left court she called a friend because it was embarrassing and she thought it was an unusual story and worth sharing. She was crying when she spoke with her friend. The juror told a commission investigating attorney that this conversation took place as she was walking to lunch. The interaction with the judge occurred in the afternoon session. In her testimony, she acknowledged that she could have been mistaken as to when she called the friend.

There was mixed reaction to the remarks from actual observers in the courtroom (a juror and defense counsel considered the comments demeaning; another defense attorney and the deputy district attorney did not find the comments to be offensive).

Judge Clarke denied he had any intent to demean or embarrass juror 7132. He testified that he intended his exchange with the juror as light-hearted banter meant humorously. He said the juror acted like she was doing comedy and was kidding and joking. He also stated he disclosed the amount in her account because he realized that it was impolite to make a joke comparing the amount in her account with how much money the attorneys spent on lunch when the attorneys did not know the figure.

Yet another explanation offered by the judge was that he revealed the specific amount in the juror's checking account to provide the attorneys with a factual basis for the hardship excuse. However, the judge acknowledged he excused other jurors for financial hardship without providing the attorneys with a factual basis. He also admitted he did not reveal the amount in juror 5868's (count four) account to provide the factual basis for his hardship excuse.

In addition, Judge Clarke had the agreement of the attorneys to handle hardship requests without their input and without providing them with the hardship forms, although they were free to request the forms. None of the attorneys challenged the judge's decision to excuse juror 7132, or asked the factual basis for dismissing the juror. At his appearance before the commission, Judge Clarke stated he did not think the attorneys would have challenged the financial hardship of juror 7132, or would have cared if he did not disclose the amount in her account.

We find that the judge's remark was not intended to provide a factual basis for the hardship excuse.

2. Conclusions of Law

The masters concluded that although the judge bordered on acting undignified, his conduct did not violate the canons or constitute misconduct. We reach a different conclusion, and find that Judge Clarke violated canon 3B(4) and engaged in conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute.

Even if Judge Clarke thought he was engaging in humorous banter,[8] joking about a juror's limited financial resources and revealing personal financial information in open court, particularly when the juror expressed that she did not want that information to be disclosed, is manifestly discourteous and undignified. Judge Rothman states:

> A sense of humor is essential to judicial demeanor, and the modest injection of humor at the appropriate time can reduce tension, and can be a tool for restoring control in court. The problem, however, is that much of what seems funny in court relate [sic] to the conduct or demeanor of those standing before the court, creating the temptation to get a laugh at their expense. The temptation is especially great given how easy it is for a judge to get a laugh from the adoring audience of those seeking the favor of the judge. [Fn. omitted.] In addition, one must always remember there may be people in the courtroom under very serious or grave circumstances who may not appreciate jocular and humorous exchanges between the judge and counsel. A judge needs to always keep in mind that breaks to joke around and have a few laughs may not be in the service of the goals and objectives of the judicial proceeding.

The commission has recognized that humor may be inappropriate and may violate the canons, particularly when at the expense of another. In Public Censure of Judge DeAnn M. Salcido (2010), the commission stated, "Judicial humor should never be used in a courtroom . . . in a manner that diminishes the dignity of the judicial process." The commission has also stated, "[H]umor at the expense of another, or humor intended or likely to demean or belittle another is unacceptable." (Public Reproval of Judge Gary T. Friedman (1993); see also Public Admonishment of Judge Robert C. Coates (2000).)

When members of the public give up their time for jury service, they do not expect to have their private financial information disclosed in open court or to be the brunt of jokes about their limited financial resources. Moreover, here, Judge Clarke revealed the amount in the juror's account even after she had thanked him for not doing so. Such conduct objectively undermines public respect for the judiciary. Therefore, we conclude that the judge's comments and gratuitous disclosure of the amount in the juror's checking account constitutes prejudicial misconduct.

E. Count Four

1. Findings of Fact

Juror 5868 wrote on his hardship form that he had $33 in his checking account. In addressing the hardship claim, Judge Clarke said to the juror, "[You have a] little bit more than the other gal. [Thirty-three] bucks," and "You are putting her [juror 7132] in the shade with that big account." The judge excused the juror and said, "Good luck on getting paid and being able to bring that number up a little bit better."

Judge Clarke testified he was making a light-hearted joke. Juror 5868 testified he did not feel humiliated or embarrassed by the judge's comments.

2. Conclusions of Law

We conclude the judge's comments to juror 5868 about his limited financial resources and the judge's gratuitous disclosure of the amount in the juror's account was discourteous and undignified and violated canon 3B(4). For the reasons discussed with respect to the conduct in count three, the majority of the commission also concludes that the judge's conduct undermines public esteem for the judiciary and thus constitutes prejudicial misconduct. (Four commission members considered the conduct on this count to be improper action.)

Whether the judge's comments are considered demeaning, undignified and discourteous in violation of canon 3B(4) and undermine public esteem for the judiciary is judged by an objective standard. Otherwise, the subjective perception of complainants would determine whether the judge engaged in misconduct and lead to inconsistent commission decisions. The fact that juror 5868 was not embarrassed while similar comments brought juror 7132 to tears illustrates that people have different sensitivities. The commission must view the conduct from the perspective of an objective person aware of the circumstances. In the commission's determination, such a person would find the judge's gratuitous disclosure of a juror's personal financial information and jokes about the juror's limited financial means to be discourteous and demeaning and harmful to public esteem for the judiciary.

F. Count Five

1. Findings of Fact

On her hardship form, juror 1968 indicated that during the anticipated pendency of the trial she was scheduled to shoot a film entitled, "The Big Balloon." In questioning the juror about her role in the film, the judge stated he would not disclose the name of the film. After excusing the juror and after she left the courtroom, the judge said, "It sounds like a nice PG project, by the way, for those of you letting your minds run a little bit."

Juror 1968 did not hear the "PG" comment, but heard laughter after she left the courtroom.

Judge Clarke testified that after he told the juror in open court that he would not disclose the name of the film, he became concerned that the attorneys and other jurors could be speculating that it was a gang-related movie. He testified that he wanted them to know that it was a wholesome film title. One of the defense attorneys recalled the juror being attractive and that there was whispering among the defense attorneys about whether it was a pornographic film. Judge Clarke testified that he did not hear this conversation.

The masters found implausible the judge's explanation that he was attempting to curb speculation that the movie might be about gangs and violence (rather than a sexually explicit film). Judge Clarke objects to this factual finding. We find that the masters' finding is supported by clear and convincing evidence.

The judge's assertion that he thought the jurors might be speculating that the movie was about gangs or violence makes no sense and finds no support in the record. There is no conceivable reason the jurors would make this assumption. There was nothing said about the movie that would suggest that the juror was in a movie about gangs or violence. And, the judge acknowledged that there was nothing about the juror's appearance or demeanor that would have created such curiosity.

We find that the judge made the remark in an effort to be humorous.

2. Conclusions of Law

The masters concluded that the "PG" remark did not violate the canons or constitute misconduct. We agree.

The use of humor in the courtroom does not in itself constitute misconduct. (Inquiry Concerning Harris (2005) 49 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 61, 71.) The question is whether the humor was discourteous, undignified or demeaning. Unlike the comments to the jurors about their limited finances, this remark was not making fun of a person's personal circumstances. As the examiner points out, the "PG" comment could be interpreted as suggesting that others in the courtroom were thinking that the juror was in a sexually explicit film. However, the judge's comment was not accusing the juror of being in a sexually explicit film, but dispelled any such thoughts that the judge could have created when he said he would not disclose the name of the film. Although the remark would have been better left unsaid, we agree with the masters that any lack of dignity with respect to this comment is de minimis. As such, we conclude that the conduct as proven in count five did not clearly and convincingly constitute a violation of the canons or misconduct.

IV.

DISCIPLINE

In determining the appropriate discipline, we consider several factors, including the nature and number of incidents of misconduct, whether the judge has prior discipline, whether the judge acknowledges and appreciates the impropriety of his or her actions, the extent to which the misconduct is injurious to others, the impact of the misconduct on public esteem for the judiciary, and the judge's reputation for administering his or her duties in a fair, impartial, and dignified fashion. (Policy Declarations of Com. on Jud. Performance, policy 7.1 [non-exclusive factors relevant to sanctions]; e.g., Inquiry Concerning Mills (2013) 57 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 1, 15.)

Judge Clarke engaged in one instance of willful misconduct, three instances of prejudicial misconduct, and one instance of improper action. The misconduct demonstrates a pattern of discourteous and undignified treatment of jurors. Public esteem for the judicial system is harmed when a judge mistreats and belittles jurors, uses humor at a juror's expense, and retaliates against a juror for complaining about his clerk. Jury service is essential to maintaining one of the bedrocks of our judicial system: the constitutional right to trial by an impartial jury.

The judicial disciplinary process plays an important role in maintaining public trust and confidence in the judiciary and the administration of justice. (Adams, supra, 10 Cal.4th at p. 912.) For many members of the public, jury service is their only opportunity to witness the justice system at work. How a judge treats jurors can leave a lasting impression, not only of that particular judge, but of the entire judicial institution. Judge Clarke presented evidence concerning the reluctance of many citizens to serve as jurors in Los Angeles County. In the commission's view, jurors are more likely to be willing to serve when treated with dignity and respect. Jurors are asked to take time out of their lives as a public service, often at a financial loss. They deserve to be treated with patience, dignity and courtesy.

In addition to the impact on the esteem of the judiciary and the judicial system, the commission considers the extent to which the misconduct has been injurious to other persons. (Policy Declarations of Com. on Jud. Performance, policy 7.1(1)(f).) In this case, the judge's conduct brought three jurors to tears. Moreover, it appears that the judge's conduct was intimidating to other jurors and caused general discomfort in the courtroom, as reflected by the comment of the juror following juror 7122, "Hate to follow that."

At his appearance before the commission, Judge Clarke showed little appreciation of the impact of his conduct on the jurors who were the recipients of his discourteous and demeaning comments. While acknowledging that the juror in count one was sobbing, he was dismissive of her emotions because "[i]t fit the way she behaved that day." He admitted seeing the juror in count two crying in the presence of the interpreter, but denied that he made her cry because by the time she was recalled "she was no longer crying."

And, with respect to count three, he questioned the credibility of the juror's testimony that she cried while telling her friend what happened in court.

The commission understands that this was a long and stressful jury selection and that evaluating hardship claims can be difficult. However, this does not excuse Judge Clarke's disrespectful treatment of four jurors.

Judge Clarke maintains that his conduct in this case is a consequence of the unusual circumstances of the Diaz case and is not reflective of his treatment of jurors in general. He presented testimony and declarations from others who served as jurors or who were prospective jurors in his courtroom in other cases and who praised his treatment of jurors (a friend, an attorney, and two fellow judges). However, the examiner presented the testimony of an attorney, David Freedman, who had a poor experience when he was a prospective juror in the judge's courtroom in a different case and who contacted the commission office after reading about the charges brought against the judge. When Freedman expressed reservation about his ability to be fair given the defendant's appearance and tattoos, the judge lectured him at some length about the concept of a fair trial. Freedman thought the judge's comments were insulting and offensive.[9]

Another indication that the poor demeanor exhibited by Judge Clarke in this case is not simply a result of the stress associated with selecting a jury for a multidefendant murder trial is the judge's prior discipline for similar misconduct. As previously noted, in December 2013, less than six months before the conduct in this matter, Judge Clarke received an advisory letter for two incidents of misconduct involving a pro per criminal defendant. The first incident involved the defendant's request for additional ancillary funds for "phone time." After forming the opinion the defendant had misrepresented that he did not have funds, the judge called the defendant "a ditherer, a dissembler, a poser and a fraud." The second incident involved a statement of disqualification filed by the same defendant, which was based in part on the aforementioned comments. The judge struck the disqualification motion as having no merit on its face, rather than having it heard by another judge. The first incident is similar to the judge's conduct in accusing the juror in count two of trying to fool him into thinking she did not speak English. Prior discipline, particularly for similar misconduct, is a significant factor in the commission's determination of the appropriate level of discipline. (Policy Declarations of Com. on Jud. Performance, policy 7.1(2)(e).) As such, this factor weighs in favor of public discipline.

Whether a judge has shown an appreciation of the impropriety of his or her acts is another factor relevant to sanctions. (Policy Declarations of Com. on Jud. Performance, policy 7.1(2)(a).) A judge's failure to appreciate or admit the impropriety of his or her acts indicates a lack of capacity to reform. (Inquiry Concerning Platt (2002) 48 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 227, 248.) Judge Clarke acknowledged he displayed inappropriate judicial demeanor in his comments to juror 7122, but denied any impropriety in ordering her to wait in the hall. The judge acknowledged that it would have been better had he not stated in open court the amount in the checking accounts of jurors 7132 and 5868, but denied that doing so constituted misconduct. He denied accusing juror 4688 of lying, and instead described his remarks as appropriately expressing skepticism. Thus, Judge Clarke has shown a very limited appreciation of the impropriety of his conduct.

In determining the appropriate level of discipline, we have also taken into consideration the testimony and declarations from other judges and lawyers attesting to Judge Clarke's positive qualities as a judge. He is described as intelligent, professional, fair, even-tempered, and hardworking. While the judge's positive reputation for administering justice is a factor that may mitigate the level of discipline (Policy Declarations of Com. on Jud. Performance, policy 7.1(2)(g)), in this case, it is outweighed by the consideration of the factors discussed above, particularly the nature and number of incidents of misconduct and the judge's prior discipline.

As recognized by the masters, Judge Clarke's conduct toward the juror in count one is similar to that of other judges who have been publicly admonished based on discourteous and denigrating comments, use of humor at the expense of litigants and embroilment. (Public Admonishment of Commissioner Alan H. Friedenthal (2012); Public Admonishment of Judge Paul M. Bryant, Jr. (2008); Public Admonishment of Judge James M. Petrucelli (2007).) The comparison to prior public admonishments for this type of misconduct is even stronger given the additional misconduct we have found in counts two through four. (See also Public Admonishment of Judge Joseph E. Bergeron (2016); Public Admonishment of Judge Daniel J. Healy (2014).)

Weighing all of the foregoing factors leads us to the conclusion that a public admonishment is the appropriate discipline in order to protect the public, enforce rigorous standards of judicial conduct, and maintain public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary.

Finally, we address the position of the amicus curiae with respect to discipline. The Alliance asserts that the commission should not impose discipline on Judge Clarke and instead should allow the judge's supervisor to handle the matter "locally." According to the Alliance, a "few words from a supervising judge would have handled this matter adequately without involving the disciplinary machinery of the commission."[10] This argument reflects a misunderstanding of the role of the commission. Under the California Constitution, the commission is responsible for investigating complaints of judicial misconduct and disciplining judges. (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18.) By referring a complaint of judicial misconduct to the local court, the commission would effectively be relinquishing its responsibility under the constitution. In changing the composition of the commission from a majority of judge members to a majority of public members, the voters declared that complaints of judicial misconduct should be reviewed and decided by a commission that does not consist of all judges. The Alliance's suggestion that Judge Clarke's misconduct be handled by local judges, rather than the commission, runs contrary to the manifest intent of the voters, and the responsibility entrusted to the commission by our state constitution.

[10] There is no evidence or suggestion that this matter was ever referred to a supervising judge, or that a supervising judge took any action.

ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of article VI, section 18 of the California Constitution, we hereby impose this public admonishment.

| IN THE MATTER CONCERNING JUDGE TARA M. FLANAGAN | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT |
|---|---|

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge Tara M. Flanagan, a judge of the Alameda County Superior Court. Judge Flanagan and her attorney, Edith R. Matthai, appeared before the commission on March 22, 2017, to object to the imposition of a public admonishment, pursuant to rule 116 of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance. Judge Flanagan has waived her right to formal proceedings under rule 118 and to review by the Supreme Court. Having considered the written and oral objections and argument submitted by Judge Flanagan and her counsel, and good cause appearing, the Commission on Judicial Performance issues this public admonishment pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution, based on the following statement of facts and conclusions.

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND CONCLUSIONS

Judge Tara M. Flanagan has been a judge of the Alameda County Superior Court since 2013. Her current term began in 2013.

Judge Flanagan was a candidate for judicial office in 2012. Her campaign committee was titled Tara Flanagan for Superior Court Judge 2012. The election was held on June 5, 2012. Judge Flanagan was elected.

In March or April of 2012, Judge Flanagan's campaign manager and treasurer (treasurer) made a loan to candidate Flanagan in the form of a cashier's check in the amount of $10,000. The loan was for the campaign, but the check was made payable to candidate Flanagan personally, not to her campaign. On April 30, 2012, the check was deposited into candidate Flanagan's business account for her law office. On May 2, 2012, the same amount of money was withdrawn by candidate Flanagan from this account and deposited into the campaign bank account held by Tara Flanagan for Superior Court Judge 2012.

In mid-May 2012, the treasurer made another loan to candidate Flanagan in the form of a check in the amount of $15,000. The loan was for the campaign, but the treasurer wrote "Personal Loan" on the check and made it payable to candidate Flanagan personally, not to her campaign. On May 14, 2012, the check was deposited into candidate Flanagan's personal bank account. On or about May 19, 2012, candidate Flanagan wrote a personal check to her campaign committee from the same account and for the same amount of money, which cleared the bank on or about May 21, 2012.

On or about May 23, 2012, candidate Flanagan and her treasurer caused to be filed a pre-election campaign statement on behalf of Tara Flanagan for Superior Court Judge 2012 for the reporting period of March 18, 2012 through May 19, 2012. The loans were reported, but instead of reporting her treasurer as the true source of the loans, candidate Flanagan disclosed the contributions as personal loans from herself to her campaign committee. No mention was made of her treasurer. The loans together comprised approximately 23 percent of reported receipts for candidate Flanagan's 2012 campaign committee. Both loans were campaign contributions because they were made for political purposes within the meaning of Government Code section 84216. Candidate Flanagan did not inform her treasurer that the treasurer was required to file campaign reports for making contributions of $5,000 or more.

Candidate Flanagan's failure to disclose her treasurer as the true source of the $25,000 in loans violated Government Code sections 84211(f) and (g) and 84216, requiring accurate reporting of information about the sources of campaign contributions. Judge Flanagan entered into a stipulation with the California Fair Political Practices Commission (FPPC) which included payment of a penalty in the amount of $4,500 for this violation. Additionally, use of a cashier's check for the $10,000 loan was a violation of Government Code section 84300(c), which prohibits campaign contributions in the form of cashier's checks. Depositing the $10,000 cashier's check into her business account and the $15,000 check into her personal bank account constituted commingling of campaign contributions and personal funds in violation of Government Code section 84307. Candidate Flanagan's failure to inform her treasurer of the campaign treasurer's reporting responsibilities was a violation of Government Code section 84105.

These violations of law constituted improper political activity in violation of canon 5 of the Code of Judicial Ethics, applicable to candidates for judicial office, and conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute.

In determining to issue a public admonishment, the commission considered the impact of the judge's conduct on public confidence in the integrity of the judiciary and the administration of justice. (Policy Declarations of Com. on Jud. Performance, policy 7.1(1)(h).) Candidate Flanagan failed to report the true source of a significant contribution to her campaign, and commingled personal, business and campaign funds. An express purpose of the Political Reform Act is to ensure that "[r]eceipts and expenditures in election campaigns ... [are] fully and truthfully disclosed in order that the voters may be fully informed and improper practices may be inhibited." (Gov. Code, § 81002(a).) When this is not done, the public is deprived of important information that has the potential to affect how votes are cast. When a judicial candidate violates financial reporting laws and wins the election, public respect for the judiciary is undermined.

The commission also took into consideration that the FPPC found the violations to be unintentional. (Policy Declarations of Com. on Jud. Performance, policy 7.1(1)(e).) Judge Flanagan maintained that it did not occur to her that the loans were reportable; she made logical assumptions that she had no responsibility to report the loans, and was shocked when notified of the violation. She explained that she made the contribution in her name because she was concerned the campaign account would have insufficient funds at the end of the race to repay her treasurer; whereas, she signed promissory notes to repay the loans to her treasurer. Nonetheless, regardless of her motivations, she had an obligation to report the true source of the loans. Particularly as an attorney, she should have known to familiarize herself with the applicable reporting requirements before submitting an official campaign statement. Judge Flanagan acknowledged at her appearance that she was aware the FPPC had a website which would have informed her of her reporting responsibilities; but that she never looked at the regulations on the website.

Judge Flanagan asks the commission to take into consideration that neither she nor her treasurer had prior campaign experience. The commission has taken this into consideration, but does not consider it to be mitigating. Without an experienced treasurer or campaign manager, it was all the more incumbent upon candidate Flanagan to inform herself about the applicable statutes and instruct her treasurer to do the same. Ignorance of the law is an aggravating factor for a judicial candidate. As the commission has stated:

> The FPPC has primary responsibility for enforcing the Act, including as to candidates for judicial office. That agency may consider it mitigating when a candidate violates the Act through inadvertence due to lack of familiarity with the intricacies of the law. However, because of the additional constraints imposed by the canons on a candidate for judicial office, we consider a claim by a judicial candidate of "ignorance of the law" as a defense to a wide-ranging violation of the law, such as here, to aggravate the violation itself. It is axiomatic that candidates for judicial office are obligated to know the requirements of the law and to conduct their election campaigns in strict accordance with it.

In mitigation, the commission has taken into consideration that Judge Flanagan cooperated with the FPPC and the commission, and that she has expressed regret for her errors and fully acknowledged that she had the responsibility to know the law and comply with it, but failed to do so. (Policy Declarations of Com. on Jud. Performance, policy 7.1(2)(a)(b).)

Weighing the forgoing factors, the commission determined that a public admonishment is the appropriate discipline in order to maintain public confidence in the integrity of judiciary and the administration of justice.

Commission members Hon. Ignazio J. Ruvolo; Mr. Richard Simpson; Anthony P. Capozzi, Esq.; Hon. Michael B. Harper; Ms. Pattyl A. Kasparian; Dr. Michael A. Moodian; and Mr. Adam N. Torres voted for the Public Admonishment. Ms. Mary Lou Aranguren and Ms. Sarah Kruer Jager were not present. Commission members Nanci E. Nishimura, Esq. and Hon. Erica R. Yew were recused from this matter, pursuant to commission policy declaration 6.1.

| IN THE MATTER CONCERNING JUDGE JEFF FERGUSON | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT |

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge Jeff Ferguson, a judge of the Orange County Superior Court. Judge Ferguson and his attorney, Paul S. Meyer, appeared before the commission on May 10, 2017, to object to the imposition of a public admonishment, pursuant to rule 116 of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance. Judge Ferguson has waived his right to formal proceedings under rule 118 and to review by the Supreme Court. Having considered the written and oral objections and argument submitted by Judge Ferguson and his counsel, and good cause appearing, the Commission on Judicial Performance issues this public admonishment pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution, based on the following statement of facts and conclusions.

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND CONCLUSIONS

Judge Jeff Ferguson has been a judge of the Orange County Superior Court for two years. His current term began in January 2015.

As set forth below, the commission found that Judge Ferguson violated the Code of Judicial Ethics by posting a statement about a candidate for judicial office on Facebook with knowing or reckless disregard for the truth of the statement, and by being Facebook friends with attorneys who were appearing regularly before him in court.

1. Post on Local Bar Association Facebook Page

Deputy District Attorney Karen Schatzle was a candidate for judicial office in 2016. Judge Ferguson supported her opponent, Judge Scott Steiner, who was publicly censured by the commission in 2014 for conduct that included sexual activity in the courthouse. On April 26, 2016, Ms. Schatzle posted on the North Orange County Bar Association (NOCBA) Facebook page: "Scott Steiner uses his office for sex and yet so many aren't concerned, crazy politics!" Judge Ferguson posted in response: "Karen Shatzle [sic] has sex with defense lawyer whike [sic] shw [sic] is a DA on his cases and nobody cares. Interesting politics."

The Facebook page was open to all NOCBA members. Judge Ferguson removed his post after Ms. Schatzle responded to it.

The commission found that Judge Ferguson's post claiming that Ms. Schatzle was having sex at the time, or had sex in the past, with a defense attorney while she was a prosecutor on his cases was made with knowing or reckless disregard for the truth. Ms. Schatzle and the defense attorney referred to in Judge Ferguson's post deny any intimate involvement while they were appearing on the same cases. In his response to the preliminary investigation letter from the commission, Judge Ferguson stated that many years ago Ms. Schatzle was a frequent subject of discussion for her intimate relationship with the defense attorney, and when he saw her post, he "immediately thought of this commonly known information, and without thought repeated it." Judge Ferguson could provide no factual support for his reference to "commonly known information" that Schatzle and the defense attorney appeared on the same cases during the time they were in an intimate relationship. He submitted a declaration from one attorney who purportedly had knowledge of the relationship. The attorney admitted having no evidence that Ms. Schatzle and the defense attorney were working on opposite sides of cases while involved in an intimate relationship. Judge Ferguson acknowledged that he was wrong to write the post, recognized that it fell outside the bounds of professionalism and the decorum expected of a bench officer, and apologized for his conduct.

The commission found that Judge Ferguson's conduct violated canon 1 of the Code of Judicial Ethics (a judge shall personally observe high standards of conduct so that the integrity and independence of the judiciary is preserved), canon 2 (a judge shall avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety in all of the judge's activities), canon 2A (a judge shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary), canon 4A(2) (a judge shall conduct all of the judge's extrajudicial activities so that they do not demean the judicial office), and canon 5 (a judge shall not engage in political activity that may create the appearance of impropriety).

2. Failure to Disclose That Attorneys Were Facebook Friends

For a period of time after becoming a judge, Judge Ferguson was Facebook friends with Orange County criminal defense attorneys Jeffrey D. Kent, Ray Dinari and Bob Hickey while they had cases pending and appeared regularly before him in court. The judge did not disclose that he was Facebook friends with these attorneys.

The commission noted that California Judges Association Ethics Opinion No. 66 regarding "Online Social Networking" (Nov. 23, 2010, pp. 10-11) provides the following guidance to judges:

> While it may be permissible for a judge to interact on a social network site with an attorney who may appear before the judge, it is not permissible to interact with attorneys who have matters pending before the judge. When a judge learns that an attorney who is a member of that judge's online social networking community has a case pending before the judge the online interaction with that attorney must cease (i.e. the attorney should be "unfriended") and the fact this was done should be disclosed .... Regardless of the nature of the social networking page, maintaining online contacts while a case is pending creates appearance issues that cannot be overcome through disclosure of the contacts. [Italics in original.]

Judge Ferguson stated he agrees with the CJA opinion and that he unfriended the attorneys promptly after being contacted by the commission concerning this matter.

The commission found Judge Ferguson's conduct violated canon 2 of the Code of Judicial Ethics (a judge shall avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety in all of the judge's activities), canon 2A (a judge shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary), and canon 2B(1) (a judge shall not allow family, social, political, or other relationships to influence the judge's judicial conduct or judgment, nor shall a judge convey or permit others to convey the impression that any individual is in a special position to influence the judge).

Judge Ferguson's conduct as described above was, at a minimum, improper action.

DISCIPLINE

Judge Ferguson asserts that his misconduct is mitigated by his corrective action in unfriending the attorneys who were appearing before him and in removing the post from the NOCBA Facebook page as soon as he realized it was inappropriate. In the commission's view, the judge's corrective action in removing the post is undermined by the fact that he did so after Ms. Schatzle stated in response to his post, "I'm sure The Judicial Commission of Performance (sic) would love to know about your blogging!!" In mitigation, the commission has considered that Judge Ferguson acknowledged the impropriety of his conduct related to his post and his failure to disclose, and that he took corrective action in unfriending attorneys appearing before him who were his Facebook friends. (Policy declaration 7.1(2)(a)(c).) However, in the commission's view, these mitigating factors do not outweigh the seriousness of his misconduct in accusing a judicial candidate of ethical impropriety with a reckless disregard for the truth. The judge's post was not only potentially injurious to the candidate, but also undermined public respect for the judiciary and the integrity of the electoral process. (Policy declaration 7.1(1)(b),(f),(h).) For these reasons, the commission has determined that a public admonishment is the appropriate discipline.

Commission members Hon. Ignazio J. Ruvolo; Mr. Richard Simpson; Ms. Mary Lou Aranguren; Hon. Michael B. Harper; Nanci E. Nishimura, Esq.; and Mr. Adam N. Torres voted to impose a public admonishment. Commission members Ms. Pattyl A. Kasparian and Hon. Erica R. Yew would have imposed a private admonishment. Anthony P. Capozzi, Esq. and Ms. Sarah Kruer Jager were not present. Commission member Dr. Michael A. Moodian was recused from this matter, pursuant to commission policy declaration 6.1.

PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF COMMISSIONER MARK KLISZEWSKI

The Commission on Judicial Performance ordered Commissioner Mark Kliszewski publicly admonished, pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution and commission rule 115, as set forth in the following statement of facts and reasons found by the commission:

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

Commissioner Kliszewski has been a commissioner of the Alameda County Superior Court since 1989.

For many years, during his assignment to the juvenile division, Commissioner Kliszewski permitted court staff members to routinely make offensive and inappropriate comments, some of which related to race, gender, and sexual conduct, in the courtroom when court was not in session. These remarks by staff members included a pattern of derogatory comments about parties and their family members who came before the court. Although the subjects of the remarks were not present, the remarks were made in the courtroom, often in the presence of Commissioner Kliszewski and other court staff. Staff members also made racial jokes and engaged in sexual banter in Commissioner Kliszewski's courtroom.

Commissioner Kliszewski reports that he spoke to the responsible staff members several times over the years to ask them to "tone down" their remarks. His actions, however, were insufficient to prevent the remarks from recurring.

Commissioner Kliszewski's tolerance of these remarks, by sometimes laughing at them and failing to take sufficient corrective action to stop them, violated his duty to be patient, dignified, and courteous to litigants and others with whom he deals in an official capacity, and to require similar conduct of his staff (canon 3B(4)), and his duty to require staff and courtroom personnel under his direction to observe appropriate standards of conduct and to refrain from manifesting bias or prejudice based upon race, sex, gender, religion, national origin, ethnicity, disability, age, sexual orientation, marital status, socioeconomic status, or political affiliation in the performance of their official duties (canon 3C(3)).

Between 2010 and 2015, Commissioner Kliszewski made numerous insulting and derogatory remarks about a court interpreter to other court staff; some of these remarks were made in the interpreter's presence. In 2010, after questioning another court staff member and learning that the interpreter had reported to her supervisor that Commissioner Kliszewski had spoken harshly to her in the courtroom, the commissioner said angrily, "That c…! That f…… bitch!" On several occasions, Commissioner Kliszewski expressed sympathy for court staff who worked with the interpreter and spoke about the interpreter as though she was not present, when she was.

Commissioner Kliszewski's conduct in making profane and derogatory comments about a court interpreter to other court staff violated his duty to maintain and enforce high standards of conduct (canon 1), to avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety (canon 2), to be patient, dignified and courteous to individuals with whom he deals in an official capacity (canon 3B(4)), to perform judicial and administrative duties without bias or prejudice or the appearance thereof (canons 3B(5), 3C(1)), and to conduct all activities so that they do not demean the judicial office (canon 4A).

Commissioner Kliszewski's conduct as described above was, at a minimum, improper action.

In determining to impose public discipline in this matter, the commission took into account Commissioner Kliszewski's prior discipline, imposed by the Alameda County Superior Court. In 2000, the court suspended Commissioner Kliszewski without pay for 120 days for misconduct during his judicial campaign, which included making misrepresentations in his campaign literature. In 1996, the court suspended Commissioner Kliszewski without pay for two weeks for discourteous and improper treatment of a female social worker who appeared in his courtroom. In both instances the court required Commissioner Kliszewski to participate in additional training.

Commission members Hon. Ignazio J. Ruvolo; Mr. Richard Simpson; Anthony P. Capozzi, Esq.; Hon. Michael Harper; Ms. Sarah Kruer Jager; Ms. Pattyl A. Kasparian; Dr. Michael A. Moodian; Nanci E. Nishimura, Esq.; Mr. Adam N. Torres; and Hon. Erica R. Yew voted for the Notice of Intended Public Admonishment. Commission member Ms. Mary Lou Aranguren was recused from this matter, pursuant to commission policy declaration 6.1.

| IN THE MATTER CONCERNINGJUDGE ELIZABETH W. JOHNSON | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT PURSUANT TO STIPULATION(Commission Rule 116.5) |

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge Elizabeth W. Johnson, a judge of the Trinity County Superior Court. Judge Johnson and her counsel James A. Murphy, of Murphy, Pearson, Bradley & Feeney, have entered into a stipulation with commission trial counsel Mark A. Lizarraga pursuant to commission rule 116.5 to resolve the pending preliminary investigation involving Judge Johnson by imposition of a public admonishment with the judge's agreement to resign from judicial office and not seek or hold judicial office in the future. The Stipulation for Discipline by Consent (Stipulation) was approved by the commission on January 16, 2018, pursuant to the following terms and conditions and stipulated facts and legal conclusions.

TERMS AND CONDITIONS

1. This agreement resolves the matters alleged in the commission's pending preliminary investigation involving Judge Johnson.

2. The commission shall issue a public admonishment based on the agreed Stipulated Facts and Legal Conclusions set forth therein.

3. If the commission accepts this proposed disposition, the commission's decision and order imposing public admonishment may articulate the reasons for its decision and include explanatory language that the commission deems appropriate.

4. Upon acceptance by the commission, this stipulation and the commission's decision and order shall be made public.

5. Judge Johnson waives any further proceedings and review in this matter, including the public admonishment procedure (commission rules 115-116), formal proceedings (rules 118, et seq.), and review by the Supreme Court (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 9.60).

6. Judge Johnson has agreed to resign from her position as a judge, effective January 18, 2018.

7. If Judge Johnson fails to resign in accordance with this agreement, the commission may withdraw the public admonishment and resume the preliminary investigation as to all of the matters in the preliminary investigation letters. Failure to comply with the terms and conditions of this agreement may also constitute additional and independent grounds for discipline.

8. Judge Johnson has agreed not to seek or hold judicial office, or accept a position or assignment as a judicial officer, subordinate judicial officer, or judge pro tem with any court in the State of California, or accept a reference of work from any California state court, at any time in the future.

9. If Judge Johnson attempts to serve in a judicial capacity in violation of the foregoing paragraph, the commission may withdraw the public admonishment and resume the preliminary investigation as to all of the matters in the preliminary investigation letters. Additionally, the commission may refer the matter to the State Bar of California.

STIPULATED FACTS AND LEGAL CONCLUSIONS

Judge Johnson has been a judge of the Trinity County Superior Court since January 2013.

1. In 2007, Judge Johnson and her husband, Charles J. Johnson, obtained a Community Development Block Grant loan from Trinity County in the amount of $185,000 in connection with their ownership and operation of the Trinity Alps Golf Course. The terms of the loan required the Johnsons to make payments of $2,148.01 on the 22nd of each month.

On February 19, 2014, in connection with a prior investigation, the commission sent Judge Johnson a preliminary investigation letter in which it was alleged that, among other things, there were deficiencies in the Johnsons' payment of the loan and that the Johnsons defaulted on their obligations to pay the loan.

Judge Johnson responded to the preliminary investigation letter by letter dated March 31, 2014. The judge's response stated, "The Johnson's [sic] lost the business but continue to make payments on the loan." The judge's statement to the commission that she and her husband were continuing to make payments on the loan was not true. As of August 5, 2013, the Johnsons had failed to make payments required by the terms of the loan while they were negotiating a resolution and repayment program on the loan. In fact, the Johnsons did not make any payments on the loan between August 5, 2013 and November 1, 2015.

The above conduct violated Judge Johnson's duties to uphold the integrity of the judiciary (canon 1), to avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety (canon 2), and to respect and comply with the law and to act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity of the judiciary (canon 2A).

2. On 14 occasions from July 2014 to January 2016, Judge Johnson used the court's Cal Card credit card in a manner not permitted by the policies adopted by the Judicial Council as set forth in the Trial Court Financial Policies and Procedures Manual (the "FIN Manual"), including using the credit card for personal purposes unrelated to court business and other improper purposes (such as lunches with other court personnel that did not meet the FIN Manual requirements), and failing to provide the requisite supporting documents, such as receipts. These fourteen incidents involved total charges of $740.22.

Nine incidents concerned restaurant charges incurred either in connection with meetings the judge held with court personnel that involved court business, or for staff lunches when court sessions were held at a branch court, which the judge believed constituted business travel and would be reimbursable. Four incidents involved travel-related charges incurred in connection with legal conferences the judge attended in Southern California, either for continuing education requirements or to give a presentation. One incident involved a charge of $36.36 for a personal matter unrelated to court business.

Judge Johnson acknowledged that her use of the Cal Card for these charges was improper and not in compliance with the requirements set forth in the FIN Manual. With the exception of one charge, at the time these charges were incurred, the judge believed she could properly use the Cal Card because the charges concerned business purposes or travel. The judge reimbursed the court for all of the above charges after learning that her conduct and interpretation was improper.

The above conduct violated the judge's duties to uphold the integrity of the judiciary (canon 1), to avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety (canon 2), and to respect and comply with the law and to act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity of the judiciary (canon 2 A).

3. Judge Johnson frequently arrived at the courthouse after her 9:00 a.m. calendar was scheduled to start. Between January 1, 2013 and August 10, 2015, on days the judge had calendars set to begin at 9:00 a.m., she arrived at the courthouse (not her courtroom or chambers) after 9:00 a.m. at least 42 times.

While most of these incidents involved the judge arriving at the courthouse within 10 minutes of 9:00 a.m., several involved longer time periods, and typically there was additional delay between the time the judge entered the courthouse and the time she took the bench.

On a weekday in July 2013, the judge had a 1:30 p.m. calendar. During lunch that day, the judge and the court executive officer went to a bakery to pick up a cake for a going-away party for a member of court personnel. The writing on the cake needed to be corrected, and the court executive officer offered to wait for it so the judge could go to court. The judge insisted on staying and waiting for the cake, which delayed her return to court until approximately 2:00 p.m.

On December 21, 2015, the judge was approximately 30 minutes late in taking the bench for her felony calendar.

On March 14, 2017, the judge had 26 matters on calendar at 8:59 a.m. and nine matters on calendar at 9:00 a.m. The judge arrived at the courthouse approximately 30 minutes late and took the bench thereafter.

On May 2, 2017, the judge had 15 matters on calendar at 8:59 a.m. and 22 matters on calendar at 9:00 a.m. The judge arrived at the courthouse approximately 15 minutes late and took the bench thereafter.

On each of these occasions, the judge's tardiness caused numerous people who were at court on time, including parties, attorneys, and court personnel, to have to wait for her to take the bench.

The above conduct violated the judge's duties to give her judicial duties precedence over all other activities (canon 3A), to dispose of all judicial matters fairly, promptly and efficiently (canon 3B(8)), and to act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity of the judiciary (canon 2A).

4. In July 2014, Judge Johnson revised the existing Trinity County Superior Court Local Rules without complying with the requirements of California Rules of Court, rule 10.613, pertaining to the drafting and amendment of local rules; specifically, the requirement that the court provide copies of proposed modifications of local rules to various local agencies, including the local county bar association and the district attorney's office, for comment at least 45 days before the rules are adopted. In early January 2016, the judge again revised the Trinity County Superior Court Local Rules without complying with rule 10.613.

The above conduct violated the judge's duties to respect and comply with the law and to act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity of the judiciary (canon 2A), and to maintain professional competence in judicial administration (canon 3C(2)).

5. Trinity County does not have a public defender's office. As a consequence, private attorneys are hired by the Trinity County Auditor-Controller to serve as appointed public defenders on a yearly contract basis. Attorneys Laura Woods and Larry Olson were hired in that capacity for the fiscal year that began on July 1, 2015.

On August 5, 2015, due to a conflict of interest of the new public defenders and several other appointed conflict counsel, Judge Johnson issued a minute order appointing Attorney James Underwood as the public defender to represent the conservatee in Matter of J.W., No. 15PR013. The judge and Mr. Underwood were name partners in the law firm of Wilkins Underwood & Johnson until shortly before the judge took the bench in January 2013. The minute order did not disclose the judge's prior partnership relationship with Mr. Underwood. The minute order noted that the next hearing in the case was set in the judge's department on August 17, 2015.

On August 17, 2015, the parties and counsel, including Mr. Underwood, appeared before the judge for a hearing on the petition for appointment of conservator. Judge Johnson did not disqualify herself from the case or disclose on the record her prior partnership relationship with Mr. Underwood. The judge also did not include in the court file any record of her prior partnership relationship with Mr. Underwood.

The above conduct violated the judge's duties to avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety (canon 2), to respect and comply with the law and to act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary (canon 2A), to exercise the power of appointment impartially, on the basis of merit, without bias or prejudice, free of conflict of interest, and in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity of the judiciary (canon 3C(5)), and to disqualify herself and/or disclose on the record information that is reasonably relevant to the question of disqualification even if the judge believes there is no actual basis for disqualification (canon 3E).

Judge Johnson's conduct described herein was, at a minimum, improper action pursuant to article VI, section 18, subdivision (d)(3) of the California Constitution.

In 2014, the judge received an advisory letter for failing to disclose in cases she presided over in which Trinity County was a party that her family business had an outstanding loan from the county. The advisory letter noted that the judge's conduct violated her duties under canon 3E(2).

Judge Johnson expressly admits that the foregoing facts are true and that she agrees with the stated legal conclusions.

DISCIPLINE

Judge Johnson engaged in multiple instances of misconduct that undermines public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary. The Supreme Court has recognized that providing material misinformation to the commission in the course of the commission's investigation is particularly serious misconduct. (Adams v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1995) 10 Cal.4th 866, 914; Fletcher v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1998) 19 Cal.4th 865, 887-891.) The totality of the judge's misconduct, including improper use of the court's Cal Card credit card; numerous incidents of tardiness in arriving to court and taking the bench; revising local court rules without following required procedures; and appointing her former law partner to represent a party in a conservatorship proceeding without disqualifying or disclosing her former partnership relationship, reflects a pattern of failure or inability to abide by basic rules and ethical standards required of all judges. This pattern is aggravated by the fact that Judge Johnson again failed to disqualify or disclose a relationship when required by law after having been previously disciplined for failure to disclose in cases she presided over, in which Trinity County was a party, that her family business had an outstanding loan from the county.

Although the stipulated facts might otherwise warrant greater discipline, the commission has determined that acceptance of the Stipulation is in the best interest of the public because the judge has agreed to resign from office and not to serve as a judicial officer after her resignation. Furthermore, acceptance of the Stipulation resolves the matter in a manner that protects the pubic while avoiding the delay of further proceedings. For these reasons, the commission imposes this public admonishment upon the terms and conditions in the attached Stipulation.

Commission members Hon. Ignazio J. Ruvolo; Nanci E. Nishimura, Esq.; Ms. Mary Lou Aranguren; Anthony P. Capozzi, Esq.; Mr. Eduardo De La Riva; Ms. Sarah Kruer Jager; Ms. Pattyl A. Kasparian; Dr. Michael A. Moodian; Mr. Adam N. Torres and

Hon. Erica R. Yew voted to accept the Stipulation and issue this public admonishment.

Commission member Hon. Michael B. Harper is recused from this matter.

|---|---|
| IN THE MATTER CONCERNINGJUDGE ELIZABETH W. JOHNSON | STIPULATION FOR DISCIPLINEBY CONSENT (Rule 116.5) |

Pursuant to Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance, rule 116.5, Judge Elizabeth W. Johnson of the Trinity County Superior Court, represented by counsel James A. Murphy, and commission trial counsel (the "parties") submit this proposed disposition of the matters set forth in the commission's preliminary investigation letters dated March 11, 2016, October 20, 2016, and May 16, 2017. The parties request that the commission resolve this matter by imposition of a public admonishment. The parties believe that the settlement provided by this agreement is in the best interests of the commission and Judge Johnson because, among other reasons, the public admonishment and the judge's agreement to resign from office and not to serve as a judicial officer after her resignation adequately protect the public and will avoid the delay and expense of further proceedings.

TERMS AND CONDITIONS OF AGREEMENT

1. This agreement resolves the matters alleged in the commission's pending preliminary investigation involving Judge Johnson.

2. The commission shall issue a public admonishment based on the agreed Stipulated Facts and Legal Conclusions set forth therein.

3. If the commission accepts this proposed disposition, the commission's decision and order imposing public admonishment may articulate the reasons for its decision and include explanatory language that the commission deems appropriate.

4. Upon acceptance by the commission, this stipulation and the commission's decision and order shall be made public.

5. Judge Johnson waives any further proceedings and review in this matter, including the public admonishment procedure (commission rules 115-116), formal proceedings (rules 118, et seq.), and review by the Supreme Court (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 9.60).

6. Judge Johnson has agreed to resign from her position as a judge, effective January 18, 2018.

7. If Judge Johnson fails to resign in accordance with this agreement, the commission may withdraw the public admonishment and resume the preliminary investigation as to all of the matters in the preliminary investigation letters. Failure to comply with the terms and conditions of this agreement may also constitute additional and independent grounds for discipline.

8. Judge Johnson has agreed not to seek or hold judicial office, or accept a position or assignment as a judicial officer, subordinate judicial officer, or judge pro tem with any court in the State of California, or accept a reference of work from any California state court, at any time in the future.

9. If Judge Johnson attempts to serve in a judicial capacity in violation of the foregoing paragraph, the commission may withdraw the public admonishment and resume the preliminary investigation as to all of the matters in the preliminary investigation letters. Additionally, the commission may refer the matter to the State Bar of California.

10. The commission may reject this proposed disposition and resume its preliminary investigation. If the commission does so, nothing in this proposed disposition will be deemed to be admitted by Judge Johnson.

Accordingly, it is hereby stipulated and agreed that the commission shall issue a public admonishment on the above Terms and Conditions of Agreement, and based on the following Stipulated Facts and Legal Conclusions.

STIPULATED FACTS AND LEGAL CONCLUSIONS

Judge Johnson has been a judge of the Trinity County Superior Court since January 2013.

1. In 2007, Judge Johnson and her husband, Charles J. Johnson, obtained a Community Development Block Grant loan from Trinity County in the amount of $185,000 in connection with their ownership and operation of the Trinity Alps Golf Course. The terms of the loan required the Johnsons to make payments of $2,148.01 on the 22nd of each month.

On February 19, 2014, in connection with a prior investigation, the commission sent Judge Johnson a preliminary investigation letter in which it was alleged that, among other things, there were deficiencies in the Johnsons' payment of the loan and that the Johnsons defaulted on their obligations to pay the loan.

Judge Johnson responded to the preliminary investigation letter by letter dated March 31, 2014. The judge's response stated, "The Johnson's [sic] lost the business but continue to make payments on the loan." The judge's statement to the commission that she and her husband were continuing to make payments on the loan was not true. As of August 5, 2013, the Johnsons had failed to make payments required by the terms of the loan while they were negotiating a resolution and repayment program on the loan. In fact, the Johnsons did not make any payments on the loan between August 5, 2013 and November 1, 2015.

The above conduct violated Judge Johnson's duties to uphold the integrity of the judiciary (canon 1), to avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety (canon 2), and to respect and comply with the law and to act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity of the judiciary (canon 2A).

2. On fourteen occasions from July 2014 to January 2016, Judge Johnson used the court's Cal Card credit card in a manner not permitted by the policies adopted by the Judicial Council as set forth in the Trial Court Financial Policies and Procedures Manual (the "FIN Manual"), including using the credit card for personal purposes unrelated to court business and other improper purposes (such as lunches with other court personnel that did not meet the FIN Manual requirements), and failing to provide the requisite supporting documents, such as receipts. These fourteen incidents involved total charges of $740.22.

Nine incidents concerned restaurant charges incurred either in connection with meetings the judge held with court personnel that involved court business, or for staff lunches when court sessions were held at a branch court, which the judge believed constituted business travel and would be reimbursable. Four incidents involved travel-related charges incurred in connection with legal conferences the judge attended in Southern California, either for continuing education requirements or to give a presentation. One incident involved a charge of $36.36 for a personal matter unrelated to court business.

Judge Johnson acknowledged that her use of the Cal Card for these charges was improper and not in compliance with the requirements set forth in the FIN Manual. With the exception of one charge, at the time these charges were incurred, the judge believed she could properly use the Cal Card because the charges concerned business purposes or travel. The judge reimbursed the court for all of the above charges after learning that her conduct and interpretation was improper.

The above conduct violated the judge's duties to uphold the integrity of the judiciary (canon 1), to avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety (canon 2), and to respect and comply with the law and to act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity of the judiciary (canon 2A).

3. Judge Johnson frequently arrived at the courthouse after her 9:00 a.m. calendar was scheduled to start. Between January 1, 2013 and August 10, 2015, on days the judge had calendars set to begin at 9:00 a.m., she arrived at the courthouse (not her courtroom or chambers) after 9:00 a.m. at least 42 times.

While most of these incidents involved the judge arriving at the courthouse within ten minutes of 9:00 a.m., several involved longer time periods, and typically there was additional delay between the time the judge entered the courthouse and the time she took the bench.

On a weekday in July 2013, the judge had a 1:30 p.m. calendar. During lunch that day, the judge and the court executive officer went to a bakery to pick up a cake for a going-away party for a member of court personnel. The writing on the cake needed to be corrected, and the court executive officer offered to wait for it so the judge could go to court. The judge insisted on staying and waiting for the cake, which delayed her return to court until approximately 2:00 p.m.

On December 21, 2015, the judge was approximately 30 minutes late in taking the bench for her felony calendar.

On March 14, 2017, the judge had 26 matters on calendar at 8:59 a.m. and nine matters on calendar at 9:00 a.m. The judge arrived at the courthouse approximately 30 minutes late and took the bench thereafter.

On May 2, 2017, the judge had 15 matters on calendar at 8:59 a.m. and 22 matters on calendar at 9:00 a.m. The judge arrived at the courthouse approximately 15 minutes late and took the bench thereafter.

On each of these occasions, the judge's tardiness caused numerous people who were at court on time, including parties, attorneys, and court personnel, to have to wait for her to take the bench.

The above conduct violated the judge's duties to give her judicial duties precedence over all other activities (canon 3A), to dispose of all judicial matters fairly, promptly and efficiently (canon 3B(8)), and to act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity of the judiciary (canon 2A).

4. In July 2014, Judge Johnson revised the existing Trinity County Superior Court Local Rules without complying with the requirements of California Rules of Court, rule 10.613, pertaining to the drafting and amendment of local rules; specifically, the requirement that the court provide copies of proposed modifications of local rules to various local agencies, including the local county bar association and the district attorney's office, for comment at least 45 days before the rules are adopted. In early January 2016, the judge again revised the Trinity County Superior Court Local Rules without complying with rule 10.613.

The above conduct violated the judge's duties to respect and comply with the law and to act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity of the judiciary (canon 2A), and to maintain professional competence in judicial administration (canon 3C(2)).

5. Trinity County does not have a public defender's office. As a consequence, private attorneys are hired by the Trinity County Auditor-Controller to serve as appointed public defenders on a yearly contract basis. Attorneys Laura Woods and Larry Olson were hired in that capacity for the fiscal year that began on July 1, 2015.

On August 5, 2015, due to a conflict of interest of the new public defenders and several other appointed conflict counsel, Judge Johnson issued a minute order appointing attorney James Underwood as the public defender to represent the conservatee in Matter of J.W., No. 15PR013. The judge and Mr. Underwood were name partners in the law firm of Wilkins Underwood & Johnson until shortly before the judge took the bench in January 2013. The minute order did not disclose the judge's prior partnership relationship with Mr. Underwood. The minute order noted that the next hearing in the case was set in the judge's department on August 17, 2015.

On August 17, 2015, the parties and counsel, including Mr. Underwood, appeared before the judge for a hearing on the petition for appointment of conservator. Judge Johnson did not disqualify herself from the case or disclose on the record her prior partnership relationship with Mr. Underwood. The judge also did not include in the court file any record of her prior partnership relationship with Mr. Underwood.

The above conduct violated the judge's duties to avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety (canon 2), to respect and comply with the law and to act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary (canon 2A), to exercise the power of appointment impartially, on the basis of merit, without bias or prejudice, free of conflict of interest, and in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity of the judiciary (canon 3C(5)), and to disqualify herself and/or disclose on the record information that is reasonably relevant to the question of disqualification even if the judge believes there is no actual basis for disqualification (canon 3E).

Judge Johnson's conduct described herein was, at a minimum, improper action pursuant to article VI, section 18, subdivision (d)(3) of the California Constitution.

In 2014, the judge received an advisory letter for failing to disclose in cases she presided over in which Trinity County was a party that her family business had an outstanding loan from the county. The advisory letter noted that the judge's conduct violated her duties under canon 3E(2).

By signing this stipulation, in addition to consenting to discipline on the terms set forth, Judge Johnson expressly admits that the foregoing facts are true and that she agrees with the stated legal conclusions.

| IN THE MATTER CONCERNING JUDGE JOHN D. LORD | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT |
|---|---|

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge John D. Lord, a judge of the Los Angeles County Superior Court. Judge Lord and his attorney, Edith R. Matthai, appeared before the commission on March 28, 2018, to object to the imposition of a public admonishment, pursuant to rule 116 of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance. Judge Lord has waived his right to formal proceedings under rule 118 and to review by the Supreme Court. Having considered the written and oral objections and argument submitted by Judge Lord and his counsel, and good cause appearing, the Commission on Judicial Performance issues this public admonishment pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution, based on the following statement of facts and conclusions.

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND CONCLUSIONS

In 2015, Judge Lord presided over the trial in the misdemeanor domestic violence case People v. Roberts. In February 2015, the jury found defendant Melvin Roberts guilty. The defendant subsequently filed a motion for a new trial. Prior to the April 2015 hearing on the motion for a new trial, Judge Lord commented publicly on the pending Roberts case to a reporter, and his comments were published in a March 26, 2015 article ("Domestic Violence Judge Questioned") in the Grunion Gazette. The reporter discussed with Judge Lord the judge's refusal to issue a protective order, and Judge Lord offered a reason for why he denied the request for such an order during sentencing, as follows: "I wanted everything to remain the status quo until we had a chance to review the issue at the motion for a new trial." In response to the reporter's question about the perception that he was giving the defense an argument needed for a retrial, the judge stated the following: "No, I wasn't quite doing that. I was expecting a motion for a new trial. It is not that unusual to make that motion, no matter what the circumstances of the case. This one had at least an arguable issue for appeal, and I thought it would be brought up."

Judge Lord's public comments regarding the pending Roberts case violated canon 3B(9)'s prohibition against public comment by judges regarding pending cases. Judge Lord's comments, at a minimum, created the impression that he was defending his statements and rulings in Roberts and may have also created the appearance that he was embroiled in the Roberts case. (Broadman v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1998) 18 Cal.4th 1079, 1101 ["A judge's public comment on a pending case threatens the state's interest in maintaining public confidence in the judiciary . . . . Such comments may also create the public impression that the judge has abandoned the judicial role to become an advocate for the judge's own ruling or for the position advanced by one of the parties"].)

When Judge Lord later presided over the April 14, 2015 new trial hearing in the Roberts case, he made a discourteous remark in open court about the domestic violence victim. After the People stated that they were renewing their request for a California Law Enforcement Telecommunication System (CLETS) protective order, "just like is typically issued in virtually every domestic violence case," Judge Lord responded, in part, as follows:

> THE COURT: So I don't understand why there is such a huge difference between Ms. Sarres [in reference to a separate case, People v. Ernesto Oliver Sarres], who is roughly the same age as Mrs. Roberts – Ms. Sarres has as her perpetrator a convicted felon, long history of violence, Ms. Sarres gets almost no protection from the City Prosecutor's office whereas Mrs. Roberts, who's as white as a piece of wonder bread, gets all kinds of protection and attention from the prosecution office.

Judge Lord argues that he perceived disparate treatment of the victims in the Sarres and Roberts cases. Judge Lord was obligated to address his concerns consistent with the Code of Judicial Ethics. His flippant remark about the victim in the Roberts case being "as white as a piece of wonder bread" was inconsistent with canon 3B(4), which requires judges to be patient, dignified, and courteous to those with whom they deal in an official capacity, and may have furthered the appearance that the judge was embroiled in the Roberts case.

In considering the appropriate level of discipline, Judge Lord's prior discipline was a significant factor in the commission's determination. In 2016, Judge Lord received a private admonishment addressing his conduct that gave rise to an appearance of embroilment with a criminal defense attorney, including his improper initiation of a contempt proceeding against that attorney, which the judge never resolved. Judge Lord also received an advisory letter in 2011 for making statements in the presence of the jury to the effect that the pro per criminal defendant was misrepresenting facts and engaging in "gamesmanship."

Judge Lord's conduct was, at a minimum, improper action.

Commission members Nanci E. Nishimura, Esq.; Anthony P. Capozzi, Esq.; Ms. Sarah Kruer Jager; Dr. Michael A. Moodian; Hon. Ignazio J. Ruvolo; and Mr. Adam N. Torres voted for issuance of the public admonishment. Commission members Ms. Mary Lou Aranguren and Hon. Erica R. Yew voted for a private admonishment. Commission members Mr. Eduardo De La Riva, Hon. Michael B. Harper and Ms. Pattyl A. Kasparian did not participate.

| IN THE MATTER CONCERNING JUDGE LISA A. NOVAK | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT |

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge Lisa A. Novak, a judge of the San Mateo County Superior Court. Pursuant to rule 116 of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance Judge Novak and her attorney, Janet L. Everson, appeared before the commission on May 16, 2018, to object to a notice of intended public admonishment issued on December 21, 2017. Judge Novak has waived her right to formal proceedings under rule 118 and to review by the Supreme Court. Having considered the written and oral objections and argument submitted by Judge Novak and her counsel, and good cause appearing, the Commission on Judicial Performance issues this public admonishment pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution, based on the following statement of facts and reasons.

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

Judge Novak has been a judge of the San Mateo County Superior Court since 2005. Her current term began in 2013.

As set forth below, the commission found that Judge Novak failed to be patient, dignified, and courteous to a criminal defense attorney, and made remarks that could reasonably be expected to impair the attorney-client relationship; failed to disclose improper ex parte communications received from her bailiff; and made improper remarks at a judges' meeting.

I. Comments to Attorney in People v. Golden

On August 19, 2015, Judge Novak presided at a preliminary hearing in People v. Leon Allen Golden (No. SF399441A/SM397700A). After Judge Novak called the case and Deputy District Attorney Ashish Bhatt stated his appearance, defense counsel Mara Feiger said, "Mara Feiger on behalf of Mr. Golden. There is a defense motion to exclude any witnesses." (R.T. 3:20-22.) Judge Novak did not address this, and instead discussed with Ms. Feiger where each party should sit in the courtroom. In her response to the commission, Judge Novak explained that she did not hear the motion to exclude because the parties and counsel were realigning their positions in the courtroom at the time.

The prosecutor then called the alleged victim as the first witness. During cross-examination, the witness testified that he was aware of an allegation that he had taken money from Mr. Golden, and denied that his father had told him that Mr. Golden was unhappy that the witness had taken Mr. Golden's money. Ms. Feiger then asked the witness, "In addition to taking Mr. Golden's money, you were aware --" (R.T. 16:2-3.) Judge Novak interrupted, said that the question was inappropriate because it assumed facts not in evidence, and admonished Ms. Feiger to avoid asking questions that might force the witness to incriminate himself. Judge Novak said she would not allow a question that assumed the witness had committed a crime, despite the absence of an objection by the prosecution, because she had a duty to protect the witness's rights. Ms. Feiger continued with the question: "You were accused by Mr. Golden of slashing his tires right after you were accused of stealing his money, right?" (R.T. 16:20-22.)

Later during Ms. Feiger's cross-examination, the witness referred to another individual who was in the courtroom, and Ms. Feiger said to the prosecutor, "I guess you are not calling him as a witness today?" (R.T. 17:22-23.) The prosecutor responded that he was not planning to call the individual as a witness, and the following exchange occurred:

THE COURT: There was no motion to exclude.

MS. FEIGER: There was. That was the very first motion that I made.

THE COURT: No.

MS. FEIGER: You can ask your court reporter.

THE COURT: I didn't grant a motion. I didn't hear a motion. [¶] Was there a motion to exclude?

THE REPORTER: I'll have to check my notes.

THE COURT: I didn't hear one, and I didn't grant one.

MS. FEIGER: It's the very first thing I did.

THE COURT: If you made one, I didn't rule on it. There is no motion to exclude. Sounds like it's irrelevant because the Deputy DA indicated to you that he is not calling a person. [¶] Your next question.

MS. FEIGER: Well, if there is any other witnesses in the courtroom, then I'm going to renew my motion to exclude witnesses.

THE COURT: That motion at this point is denied because it's not timely, Ms. Feiger. [¶] Your next question.

After Ms. Feiger asked the witness another question, Judge Novak again stated that counsel had not made a motion to exclude witnesses and quoted a portion of the transcript beginning after Ms. Feiger's reference to a motion to exclude witnesses and the discussion of where the parties should sit. Ms. Feiger stated that she had made the motion before the quoted discussion. Judge Novak disagreed, stating, "I am just looking at the record, which is consistent with my recollection...." (R.T. 19:15-17.) Ms. Feiger completed her cross-examination and the prosecutor called two additional witnesses.

After the parties indicated that they had no further evidence to present, Judge Novak stated that Ms. Feiger could present argument, and the following exchange occurred:

> MS. FEIGER: Well, I'm not going to miss an opportunity like to exclude witnesses when I'm not on the record.
> THE COURT: Ms. Feiger, those comments are unprofessional. I appreciate that you think you made a motion to exclude witnesses.
> MS. FEIGER: I know I did.
> THE COURT: Don't interrupt me. You have been extremely unprofessional this afternoon. You have been disparaging of the witness, irrespective of the Deputy DA not objecting. You have been unprofessional to the witness. You have been unprofessional to this court. I have been very patient. My patience has ended with your behavior this afternoon. You can have your temper tantrum outside of my courtroom. [¶] If you didn't make a motion to exclude witnesses and it's brought to your attention, live with it and learn from it. I'm sure you thought that you had made a motion to exclude witnesses because you probably do in every hearing. When we do things out of habit and custom, we think that we always do them. You didn't make the motion. I pointed that out to you. You were disrespectful to the court. I let it slide. [¶] I then reviewed the record corroborating the fact that you didn't make the motion. You were again disrespectful to the court, and I let it slide. I'm not letting it slide any longer. Let it go. [¶] Argue any issues that you have on the evidence of this case. Act like the professional that you are. [¶] Do you have any argument on the evidence in this case?

The commission found that Judge Novak's comments were discourteous and demeaning toward Ms. Feiger and constituted a violation of the judge's duty to be patient, dignified, and courteous to lawyers and others who appear before the judge. (Canon 3B(4).) Moreover, several of the judge's remarks, made in open court and in the presence of Ms. Feiger's client, were of a nature that could reasonably be expected to impair the attorney-client relationship. Judge Novak remarked that Ms. Feiger was "disparaging of the witness" and "unprofessional to the witness." Ms. Feiger's questioning of the witness about whether he was aware that the defendant had previously accused the witness of uncharged crimes was arguably relevant to the witness's bias and state of mind. If the judge thought the line of questions was irrelevant, she could have made that ruling and advised the witness of his Fifth Amendment rights without disparaging Ms. Feiger, particularly in the presence of her client.

Judge Novak's statements that Ms. Feiger was "extremely unprofessional," "unprofessional to this court," "disrespectful to the court," and having a "temper tantrum"—which appear to have been based, at least in part, on exchanges resulting from the judge's mistaken belief that Ms. Feiger had not made a motion to exclude witnesses, and later claimed that she had—also constituted improper accusations of professional misconduct. Even if Ms. Feiger had acted unprofessionally, as Judge Novak states was the case here, the extent to which Judge Novak criticized Ms. Feiger in open court and in front of her client was conduct that could reasonably be expected to impair the attorney-client relationship. A judge has the option of calling counsel to the bench or into chambers if the judge feels that an attorney has acted unprofessionally, particularly if the judge feels that more than a brief, corrective comment is necessary.

II. Failure to Disclose Unauthorized Ex Parte Communications in People v. Quintana

On January 4 and 5, 2017, Judge Novak heard a motion to dismiss in People v. Rachel Quintana (No. 16-SM-001677). The hearing largely concerned whether Sergeant Michael Otte had recorded with a cell phone the events surrounding the arrest of defendant Rachel Quintana, which resulted in additional misdemeanor charges of battery on an officer and resisting arrest. Sergeant Otte had earlier denied that such a recording existed. On the first day of the hearing, the defendant's mother testified, and the defense introduced a cell phone video taken by a family member from inside the house that showed Sergeant Otte outside the house holding a cell phone horizontally and appearing to record the interactions between officers and the defendant. On the second day of the hearing, Sergeant Otte testified that he did not record the incident, but only held his phone up to make it appear that he was recording in an effort to get the defendant to comply with the officers' orders.

Judge Novak's bailiff approached her outside of the presence of the prosecutor and defense counsel and said, "I think I may have seen that video," or words to that effect. Judge Novak told her bailiff she could not discuss the matter. Judge Novak recalled the communication taking place in the hallway while waiting for the proceeding to begin. Judge Novak did not disclose the communication from her bailiff to the parties.

At the end of the hearing, Judge Novak stated that she was troubled by Sergeant Otte's testimony that he had not made a recording of the arrest of Ms. Quintana. Judge Novak said, "It is evident that the man was recording this incident, and I am very troubled that his testimony was proffered because it was not honest." (R.T. 75:2-4.) Judge Novak also made a finding of bad faith, stating, "Knowing that he recorded a video, knowing that he misrepresented under oath that he recorded a video, knowing that the video no longer exists, one is reasonable in inferring that it was not preserved in bad faith. So I have no problem finding that." (R.T. 75:5-9.)

The commission found that Judge Novak's failure to disclose her bailiff's remarks regarding the video constituted a failure to promptly notify the parties of unauthorized ex parte communications, as required by canon 3B(7)(d), and a failure to disclose information relevant to the question of disqualification (canon 3E(2)(a)).

The central issue before Judge Novak was whether Sergeant Otte, who was her bailiff's colleague at the sheriff's office, had video-recorded the defendant's arrest, as he appeared to have done in the video taken from inside the defendant's home. The bailiff's statement that he may have "seen that video," bore directly on the question before the judge and constituted an unauthorized ex parte communication. It also raised a question as to whether the bailiff was a potential witness in the proceedings before the judge.
In her response to the commission, Judge Novak stated that when her bailiff said he "may have seen that video," she was not certain whether he was referring to the video recorded by Sergeant Otte or to the video played in court of Sergeant Otte holding his cell phone that was recorded by a family member. She also said that her bailiff had been seated in a location where he could not see the recording played for the court. Nevertheless, the judge knew it was possible that her bailiff was referring to the video taken by Sergeant Otte. Therefore, she had an obligation to disclose that information to the parties.

If a judge receives an unauthorized ex parte communication, the judge must promptly notify the parties of the substance of the communication and provide them with an opportunity to respond. (Canon 3B(7)(d).) Judge Novak's conduct was inconsistent with her duties under canon 3B(7), regardless of whether she considered the bailiff's statement in her ruling.

As noted, Judge Novak recalls the conversation with her bailiff taking place during the proceeding. The judge's bailiff reported that he recalled the conversation taking place after the hearing on the motion concluded. Judge Novak contends that if her bailiff's recollection is correct, she did not have an obligation to inform the parties. The judge's failure to disclose the ex parte communication constitutes misconduct regardless of whether the communication occurred during the proceeding or following her ruling on the motion. A matter or proceeding continues to be pending through any period during which an appeal may be filed and any appellate process until final disposition. (Cal. Code of Judicial Ethics, Terminology.) Even if Judge Novak had already ruled on the motion, the district attorney's office could file an appeal and there could be future motions concerning the recording. Thus, the matter was still pending and Judge Novak had a duty to promptly notify the parties of the substance of the communication. (Canon 3B(7).)

III. Improper Comments at Judges' Meeting

After the hearing in People v. Quintana, Judge Novak attended a judges' meeting on January 20, 2017. There, Judge Novak informed the court's judges that she had made a finding that Sergeant Otte perjured himself. Judge Novak described the motion hearing, stating that Sergeant Otte had testified that he never made a recording of the defendant's detention, despite a second video recording depicting him doing so. Judge

Novak informed the court's judges that she had granted the motion because she found Sergeant Otte's testimony to be not credible. She told the judges that she was providing this information to them as an "FYI" and that they could do with it what they wished.

Because this was a meeting for all judicial officers, the judges who would later hear People v. Quintana could be present, in addition to the judges of the court's appellate division, who would hear writ petitions or an appeal in People v. Quintana. Judge Novak contends that her comments were proper because she did not mention the case by name. The details she shared, however, were such as to make the matter identifiable to any judge who heard subsequent proceedings in the matter. Moreover, because Sergeant Otte could be called as a witness in other cases, Judge Novak's comments could bear on other cases before the judges at the meeting.

The commission found that Judge Novak's remarks to the judges at the meeting, made while People v. Quintana was pending and when Sergeant Otte was a potential witness in that case and in other pending and impending cases, constituted unauthorized ex parte communications not permitted by the exception allowing judges to consult with other judges (canon 3B(7)), and also constituted comments that might substantially interfere with a fair trial or hearing (canon 3B(9)). Although judges are permitted to consult with each other and assist each other in their adjudicative responsibilities, Judge Novak was not consulting with other judges and seeking their advice, but was instead informing them of her evaluation of the evidence in a pending case and potentially impairing their independence and impartiality. Judge Novak's remarks may have interfered with the ability of the other judges present to avoid receiving factual information that is not a part of the record or an evaluation of that factual information (canon 3B(7)(a)). Further, canon 3B(7) expressly prohibits a judge from engaging in discussions about a case with another judge who may participate in appellate review of the matter. (Canon 3B(7)(a).)

Judge Novak's remarks also called into question her impartiality and gave an appearance of bias and embroilment. (Canons 2A, 3B(5).) Judge Novak stated that she did not intend to suggest to the other judges that Sergeant Otte should not be trusted when called as a witness in other hearings. She also stated, however, that her findings bore directly on the sergeant's credibility as a witness and so her disclosure of these findings to other judges on the bench was "mandated." She noted the close relationship between the sheriff's office and the court and cited the need to have an unqualified trust relationship with this partner.

Judge Novak did not have a duty to report her findings to her judicial colleagues, and her conduct in doing so at a judges' meeting was improper. If Judge Novak's finding that Sergeant Otte committed perjury constituted exculpatory evidence in cases where the sergeant is a witness, it would be the duty of the district attorney's office to disclose that evidence to the defense, not the judge's duty to disclose that evidence to other judges. (See U.S. v. Bagley (1985) 473 U.S. 667, 676; Brady v. Maryland (1963) 373 U.S. 83, 87.)

Judge Novak's conduct as set forth above was, at a minimum, improper action.

In determining that a public admonishment is the appropriate sanction, the commission took into consideration that Judge Novak has been previously disciplined. (Policy declaration 7.1(2)(e).) In 2011, Judge Novak received an advisory letter for raising a defendant's bail and remanding him into custody after granting his request for a substitution of counsel on the day of trial, a request she considered untimely. The commission found that Judge Novak's conduct, which included her remark that she had a means by which she could ensure the case proceeded in a timely fashion, gave the appearance that she was punishing the defendant for seeking new counsel or causing a delay in the case, neither of which is a valid reason for raising bail, and violated her duty to avoid the appearance of impropriety and to act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the impartiality of the judiciary.

The commission also took into consideration that in this matter, Judge Novak engaged in three different incidents of misconduct, reflecting a lack of proper judicial demeanor and a failure to understand and appreciate the requirements and restrictions imposed upon judges by the canons. (Policy declaration 7.1(1)(a), (b).)

PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE ERNEST M. HIROSHIGE

The Commission on Judicial Performance ordered Judge Ernest M. Hiroshige publicly admonished, pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution and commission rule 115, as set forth in the following statement of facts and reasons found by the commission:

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

Judge Ernest M. Hiroshige has been a judge of the Los Angeles County Superior Court since 1982, and previously served on the municipal court beginning in 1980. His current term began in January 2013.

Judge Hiroshige has engaged in a practice of delegating his responsibility to conduct case management conferences to his court clerk. The judge has continued to engage in this practice despite the private admonishment he received in 2010 addressing, in part, such conduct.

Judge Hiroshige explained in his response to the commission in this matter that, after receiving his 2010 private admonishment, he posted a notice in his courtroom advising counsel and parties that he had reviewed all case management conference statements submitted and indicated to the clerk the range of dates that should be scheduled in each case. The judge's notice further advised that "[t]he clerk will meet & confer with counsel/parties and attempt to schedule dates in court that are agreeable to all parties," and that if there is any disagreement with the proposed dates and other entries on the proposed case management order, "please request to discuss the issue with the court." As noted in Judge Hiroshige's 2010 private admonishment, Judge Hiroshige's practice violates canon 3B(1), which requires a judge to "hear and decide all matters assigned to the judge except those in which he or she is disqualified." (Italics added.) Improper delegation of judicial responsibilities to the court clerk constitutes misconduct. (See Inquiry Concerning Judge Christopher J. Sheldon (1998) 48 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 46 (Sheldon).)

Judge Hiroshige asserts that his case should not be compared to Sheldon because his conduct in delegating judicial duties is less serious than that of Judge Sheldon, who delegated his judicial authority to his clerk by, among other things, allowing his clerk to accept pleas and waivers of constitutional rights in misdemeanor matters. The Sheldon decision is not cited as a comparison of the facts of the two matters, but only as authority for the proposition that improper delegation of judicial responsibilities to the clerk constitutes misconduct.

In this matter, Judge Hiroshige allowed his clerk to conduct case management conferences. Case management conferences are scheduled proceedings at which attorneys and unrepresented parties are required to appear, with the expectation that issues in cases may be addressed in court by a judge. (See Cal. Rules of Court, rules 3.721, 3.722, 3.724.) The subjects to be considered at case management conferences are not limited to ministerial issues such as the setting of a jury trial date, but include a host of issues enumerated in California Rules of Court, rule 3.727, including what discovery issues are anticipated, whether discovery is complete, the nature of injuries, the amount of damages, and any additional relief sought. "At the conference, counsel for each party, and each self-represented party, must appear by telephone or personally and must be prepared to discuss and commit to the party's position on the issues enumerated in C.R.C., Rules 3.724 and 3.727." (7 Witkin, Cal. Procedure (5th ed. 2008) Judgment § 45, p. 69.) A case management order may, however, be issued on the court's review of the parties' written submissions when the court determines that appearances at the conference are not necessary, and when the parties are notified that no appearance is required. (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 3.722(d).)

Judge Hiroshige does not contend that it is his practice to notify parties that no appearance is required. Rather, Judge Hiroshige reviews the parties' written submissions, prepares written notes of his review for the case management order that address all the case management issues, and provides his notes to the court clerk for the clerk's use during the conference.

Judge Hiroshige's practice of having his clerk meet with parties and counsel and convey his decisions in court gives the appearance that the clerk, rather than the judge, is running the court. Further, the purpose of case management is "to secure the fair, timely, and efficient disposition of every civil case." (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 3.700.) Discussion between the court and parties or counsel at a case management conference can be effective in resolving issues that may not have been apparent from the written submissions, and, in that sense, an appearance before a judge at a case management conference can be more efficient and effective in terms of the disposition and management of a case than issuing an order without an appearance before a judge. Moreover, as noted in the private admonishment Judge Hiroshige received in 2010, a judge may not delegate judicial responsibilities to the court clerk.

Judge Hiroshige's conduct was, at a minimum, improper action and dereliction of duty.

Judge Hiroshige's 2010 private admonishment addressed the improper delegation of his judicial duties to the court clerk, as well as his abuse of the prestige of judicial office through his use of stationery and checks bearing his judicial title and address. The judge's prior discipline was a significant factor in the commission's decision to issue this public admonishment.

|---|---|
| IN THE MATTER CONCERNING JUDGE CAROL WILLIAMS ELSWICK | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT |

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge Carol Williams Elswick, a judge of the Los Angeles County Superior Court. Judge Elswick and her attorney, Randall Miller, appeared before the commission on December 5, 2018, to object to the imposition of a public admonishment, pursuant to rule 116 of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance. Having considered the written and oral objections and argument submitted by Judge Elswick and her counsel, and good cause appearing, the Commission on Judicial Performance issues this public admonishment pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution, based on the following statement of facts and reasons.

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

Judge Elswick has been a judge of the Los Angeles County Superior Court since 2000. She previously served on the municipal court from 1997 until 2000, and was a court commissioner from 1991 to 1997.

The commission found that in three separate misdemeanor probation cases, Judge Elswick improperly remanded the defendant and delayed setting a revocation hearing until after the defendant served a predetermined sentence of jail time, which conveyed the appearance that the judge was circumventing the Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department's early release program. In other matters, the judge improperly responded to a peremptory challenge filed pursuant to section 170.6 of the Code of Civil Procedure, was discourteous to several criminal defendants, and improperly referenced her personal life when discussing the ability of some defendants to pay fines. The commission concluded that Judge Elswick disregarded the fundamental rights of defendants, abused her authority, conveyed the appearance of bias and prejudgment, and violated the Code of Judicial Ethics, as set forth below.

I. PROBATION VIOLATION MATTERS

A. People v. Josh Chia Juin Hsu

Mr. Hsu was convicted of a driving under the influence (DUI) offense in 2011, placed on court probation, and ordered to pay a fine of $1,812, or complete 12 days of community labor.

On March 22, 2013, Mr. Hsu appeared before Judge Elswick and requested an extension of time to pay the fine, his third such request. The following exchange occurred:

> [DEFENSE ATTORNEY]: Your Honor, Mr. Hsu is asking for an extension to pay the fine. He realizes he's not going to be able to do the community service. He's asking for two months.
> THE DEFENDANT: What can you offer me, Your Honor?
> THE COURT: Excuse me? I don't accept that. 'What can you offer me?'. [sic] [¶] You were placed on probation two years ago. What were you ordered to do? That's the second question. So it might be out there in the internet, okay, let's not make a deal. It's, you are the defendant on a criminal case. You were placed on probation two years ago and you have yet to live up to your responsibilities. [¶] What can you offer me?

Judge Elswick remanded Mr. Hsu, and set bail in the amount of $30,000. Prior to the bailiff removing Mr. Hsu, Judge Elswick stated:

> Mr. Hsu, this matter goes over for probation violation hearing setting to the date of March 27, 2013. [¶] Listen very carefully. It's the Court's intent to keep you in custody until March 27, 2013. On that day I'll see you back in this department, sentence you credit time served, wipe out your fine of $1812. So with the option, remaining community labor, reinstate your probation. [¶] You can bail out. If you bail out, you're still going to owe the court the jail time. Okay. So there you go.

(R.T. 4:3-14, italics added.)

On March 27, 2013, Mr. Hsu appeared in Judge Elswick's courtroom, out of custody. At that time, Mr. Hsu's fine of $1,812 had been paid in full, he had served two days in custody, and he had no outstanding conditions of probation. A receipt was provided to Judge Elswick. After the deputy district attorney noted that the court had requested the defendant to not post bail, and the defendant's attorney explained that the defendant's father had posted bail, the following exchange occurred:

> THE COURT: Well, Mr. Hsu, I was serious when I made that statement. It's not a matter of you just --
> THE DEFENDANT: I understand.
> THE COURT: -- buying your way out of jail. [¶] Returning your receipt to you at this time. [¶] I indicated to you on March 22,

2013 that I was setting bail at 30,000 and if you bailed out, understand that you still, it's this Court's intention to have you do the jail time, have you do that time on 22nd of the [sic] March through March 27. [¶] I arrived at that timeframe because of, as I previously put on the record, March 25, 2011 you were placed on probation by Commissioner McTaggart for DUI; fines and fees or 12 days of community labor; fines and fees weren't paid, community labor wasn't done. . . . [¶] . . . [¶] Did you bail out on March 24?

[DEFENSE ATTORNEY]: Yes, Your Honor.

THE COURT: The Court, he owes the Court three more days. I wasn't playing. I just don't think that the defendant gets to run the show.

THE DEFENDANT: May I speak, Your Honor?

THE COURT: The tail does not wag the dog, okay. You are the criminal defendant, and when Commissioner McTaggart made his order, which you agreed to and accepted two years ago, you had an option to pay it or do 12 days of community labor and you just -- what would be the appropriate word would be on the record -- you messed around and didn't get it done because it's okay to buy your way out, or family buys your way out and that's not the way this court work [sic]. [¶] So at this time you are remanded, and it's late in the day, but you are remanded. And I'll set it out for March the 29th, so that comes to, not a full day today, and bail is set at -- [DEFENSE ATTORNEY]: Would the Court consider allowing him to stay on his bond that his family posted and surrender himself?

THE DEFENDANT: Your Honor, may I –

THE COURT: It's very hard for the Court -- let any criminal defendant who's on probation gets to call the shots. [sic] That's the difficulty I have. [¶] Mr. Hsu, you are the one who was, [sic] not done what you were supposed to do. So bail is set at $35,000. [¶] The matter is set for probation violation hearing setting on March the 29th, and you're going to get some phone calls and tell Dad, "Don't bail you out."

(R.T. 2:10-4:5, italics added.)

Mr. Hsu stated he had learned his lesson, that his father had bailed him out, and that he was concerned about losing his job, when the following exchange occurred:

> THE COURT: Mr. Hsu, that is between you and your employer. I made it very clear. Very clear. [¶] So March 29 you're going to be making some phone calls, or you want [your defense attorney] to make some phone calls. Do not have Dad, Mom, your great uncle, your rich aunt, don't have them bail you out. [¶] I'll see you on the 29th of March. Okay.
> THE DEFENDANT: I did not request to bail out.
> THE COURT: I understand that.
> THE DEFENDANT: That's why I stayed it [sic] until Sunday.
> THE COURT: I understand that. Make sure they don't bail you out. Okay.

(R.T. 4:27-5:11, italics added.)

On March 29, 2013, Mr. Hsu was advised of his rights and he admitted "the violation." Judge Elswick did not describe what the probation violation was, given that Mr. Hsu had both paid the fine and served days in custody at the time of his admission. Judge Elswick sentenced Mr. Hsu to 12 days of jail (six actual and six good time/work time credits), and released him from custody for time served.

B. People v. Riley Glover

Ms. Glover was convicted of a DUI in 2013, but did not complete 45 days of community labor, a condition of her probation.

On October 28, 2015, Ms. Glover appeared out of custody on a bench warrant, which was recalled. Judge Elswick asked Ms. Glover why she had not completed 45 days of community labor. Ms. Glover stated that on March 12, 2015, another judge told her that she did not have to complete the community labor. Judge Elswick asked how much community labor had been completed when the following exchange occurred:

> THE DEFENDANT: None, Your Honor. I was -- I don't know. Maybe I misheard or something, but I was under the impression that I did not have to do it anymore.
> THE COURT: You didn't mishear because this is what I do. I'd say, the Court is reminding you or letting you know or reminding you that you still have community labor, or this or that, to do by a certain date. I also say, "That was previously put in writing for you. Do you need that information?" or something to that effect, or "Are you on target?" or "Do you have any questions regarding > that?" [¶] Typically, that's how I do that. I did it at least twice, myself. I didn't place you on probation, but I did it at least twice. If you had requested that document again for community labor, we would have given it to you. So it was not deleted. Okay?

Judge Elswick said, "So there was no misunderstanding, counsel, with respect to the things that she needed to do." (R.T. 8:4-6.) Judge Elswick remanded Ms. Glover, set bail at $30,000, and set a date for a probation violation hearing setting on November 18, 2015. Judge Elswick denied the public defender's request for an earlier date and vacated an interim appearance that had previously been set for November 10, 2015. Judge Elswick then assigned the case to herself for all purposes and stated:

> [I]t's this Court's intent that if she remains in custody until that date and she admits a violation of probation on that date that I will then wipe out all 45 days of community labor because she will have been in custody for about 20 days, give or take. That's if she remains in custody, doesn't bail out. [¶] The Court has set the date, pursuant to appellate case law, within a reasonable time and, therefore, that date will remain, November 18, 2015. Thank you.

On November 18, 2015, when Ms. Glover returned to court after serving 22 days in custody, Judge Elswick asked if Ms. Glover wanted "to admit the violation of probation regarding the 45 days of community labor that was ordered," or have a hearing. (R.T. 1:18-20.) Judge Elswick then advised Ms. Glover of her rights, and she admitted a violation of probation. The probation condition requiring 45 days of community labor was deleted "in light of the jail time served." (R.T. 6:5.)

C. People v. Cecilia Zavala

In 2014, Ms. Zavala was placed on probation for a DUI conviction. On February 3, 2016, Ms. Zavala, who was self-represented appeared before Judge Elswick to request an extension to pay her fines. The following exchange occurred:

> THE DEFENDANT: And I overlooked it.
> THE COURT: Yeah. You really overlooked it. [¶] . . . [¶] So are you paying it today?
> THE DEFENDANT: I would like to ask for an extension.

> THE COURT: No. Listen to my question. Listen to my question. [¶] Are you paying it today? . . . [¶] So can you pay that 471 today?

Judge Elswick described the procedural history of Ms. Zavala's two cases. In the 2014 case, Ms. Zavala had been ordered to pay fines and fees totaling $1,888, or complete 12 days of community labor, and she had been given several extensions to February 3, 2016. Ms. Zavala stated that she worked six days a week and that she was trying to pay the $1,888, when the following exchange occurred:

> THE COURT: There won't be any further extensions. Your one case is 19 years old.
> THE DEFENDANT: I was unaware of that case.
> THE COURT: You were aware of it, Ma'am. You signed the terms and conditions of probation.
> THE DEFENDANT: No. But that case came up with this matter.

(R.T. 3:19-25, italics added.)

Judge Elswick then remanded Ms. Zavala into custody and set bail at $35,000 on each matter. Judge Elswick did not advise Ms. Zavala of any rights, or ask if she wished to be represented by counsel, prior to incarceration. The following exchange occurred when the public defender was appointed:

> [PUBLIC DEFENDER]: If I could just talk to her before she's taken into custody, Your Honor.
> THE COURT: Well, she's indicated she can't pay.
> [PUBLIC DEFENDER]: I would just like to get more of the back story.
> THE COURT: No. At this time, she's remanded into the custody of the Sheriff's Department and bail is set at $35,000 on each and the matter will be set for probation violation hearing setting in short order . . . .

The public defender filed a peremptory challenge against Judge Elswick and the case was heard by another judge the next day, on February 4, 2016, at which time probation in the 1998 case was terminated, and Ms. Zavala was released.

The commission found that in each of these matters Judge Elswick intentionally delayed setting a hearing until after her predetermined jail sentence had been served, which conveyed the appearance that she was circumventing the sheriff's department's early release program. Judge Elswick remanded the defendants into custody, set bail, and continued the matters for probation violation hearing setting dates, without advising the defendants of their right to a revocation hearing. At her appearance, Judge Elswick stated that she wanted the defendants to know they were not satisfying their probation obligations by posting bail. This, however, is not what she told the defendants. She specifically stated that her "intent" was to keep Mr. Hsu in custody until March 27, 2013, at which time she would sentence him to time served and delete the fine. She went further and said if he bailed out, he would still owe jail time, and she told him not to post bail. Judge Elswick also specifically stated that her "intent" was to keep Ms. Glover in custody until November 18, 2015, at which time she would sentence Ms. Glover to time served and delete the community labor. Judge Elswick explicitly stated that her intent was to keep Ms. Glover in custody for 22 days, and added, "That's if she remains in custody, doesn't bail out." After being remanded, Ms. Zavala did not appear again before Judge Elswick because the public defender filed a peremptory challenge, and the matter was assigned to a different judge. If the defendants had been offered the opportunity to admit the probation violation and be sentenced before being remanded on bail, it is likely they would have served only a fraction of the sentence, given the sheriff's department's early release program.

In her response to the commission, Judge Elswick denied remanding probationers, or setting bail, in order to circumvent the sheriff's department's early release program. Judge Elswick stated there was concern among the judiciary about how the early release program might affect a defendant's participation in the Substance Treatment and Re-Entry Transition (START) program. START is a jail-based treatment program that began offering services in April 2017 to inmates with a minimum amount of days left on their sentence and who meet other clinical criteria. The proceedings in Hsu, Glover, and Zavala, however, had concluded prior to the implementation of START, and the defendants were not sentenced to qualifying terms of incarceration.

Judge Elswick contends that, at most, her conduct constituted legal error and, as such, is not subject to discipline under Oberholzer v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1999) 20 Cal.4th 371, 395. The California Supreme Court in Oberholzer held that legal error alone does not constitute judicial misconduct subject to discipline. (Id. at pp. 395-398.) A judge who commits legal error, however, which, in addition, clearly and convincingly reflects "bad faith," "bias," "abuse of authority," "disregard for fundamental rights," "intentional disregard of the law," "or any purpose other than the faithful discharge of judicial duty" is subject to sanctions. (Id. at p. 398.)

The commission found that Judge Elswick abused her authority and disregarded the defendants' fundamental rights to due process by de facto revoking probation and imposing a sentence without affording the right to a revocation hearing in all three matters. These proceedings failed to comply with minimum due process requirements as specified by the California Supreme Court in People v. Vickers (1972) 8 Cal.3d 451, 457-458. Judge Elswick contends that she had discretion to remand defendants into custody pending their revocation hearings, as long as the time before the hearing was not unreasonable, under Morrissey v. Brewer (1972) 408 U.S. 471. The problem here was not the length of time between the remand and a hearing, but that the judge continued the matters for dates to set the hearing in order that the defendants serve a predetermined sanction, without conducting a revocation hearing or obtaining a waiver of the right to a hearing. While a judge may remand a probationer pending probation violation hearings, the remand cannot be for the improper purpose of requiring a probationer to serve a predetermined sentence.

In addition, the commission concluded that Judge Elswick acted for a purpose other than the faithful discharge of judicial duties, abused her authority, and disregarded Mr. Hsu's fundamental rights by recommitting him to custody for having exercised his right to post bail. The commission also found that Judge Elswick used bail for the improper purpose of imposing a predetermined sentence. Bail may not be used to punish a defendant, and it is misconduct for a judge to impose bail in a punitive or arbitrary manner. (See Cal. Const., art. I, § 12; Rothman et al., Cal. Judicial Conduct Handbook (4th ed. 2017) § 3:24, pp. 171-172; People v. Gilliam (1974) 41 Cal.App.3d 181, 191.) Moreover, Judge Elswick improperly recommitted Mr. Hsu to custody after he posted bail, when none of the statutory circumstances warranting remand existed. (See Pen. Code, §§ 1310, 1129, 1166.) Judge Elswick admitted that she should not have recommitted Mr. Hsu to custody after posting bail, but could not recall why she did so.

Further, Judge Elswick disregarded Ms. Zavala's right to counsel by failing to advise her of her right to counsel, and denying the public defender's request to speak with Ms. Zavala prior to her being incarcerated.

The commission also found that Judge Elswick's conduct toward Mr. Hsu was discourteous, sarcastic, and conveyed the appearance of embroilment, bias, and retaliation. After Mr. Hsu exercised his statutory right to post bail, the judge stated, "I wasn't playing. I just don't think that the defendant gets to run the show." The judge told Mr. Hsu, "The tail does not wag the dog, okay. You are the criminal defendant . . . ." She also warned him, "Do not have Dad, Mom, your great uncle, your rich aunt, don't have them bail you out."

Judge Elswick's conduct was inconsistent with her obligations to avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety in all of her activities (canon 2); to respect and comply with the law and act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary (canon 2A); to accord to every person the full right to be heard according to law (canon 3B(7)); to dispose of all judicial matters fairly, promptly, and efficiently, and to manage the courtroom in a manner that provides all litigants the opportunity to have their matters fairly adjudicated in accordance with the law (canon 3B(8)); to be patient, dignified, and courteous to litigants with whom the judge deals in an official capacity (canon 3B(4)); and to perform judicial duties without bias or prejudice, and not to engage in speech, gestures, or other conduct that would reasonably be perceived as bias or prejudice (canon 3B(5)).

II. RESPONSE TO PEREMPTORY CHALLENGE

On October 21, 2015, the public defender filed a peremptory challenge, pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure 170.6, in People v. Jingles.

The next day, during an arraignment in an unrelated matter, People v. Salinas, Deputy Public Defender Diane Link filed the defendant's completed financial documents and appointment of counsel forms when the case was called. The documents had been prepared in advance of the case being called. Judge Elswick asked how the forms could have been filed when the public defender had not been appointed yet, then stopped the arraignment and called Ms. Link into chambers, with a court reporter and the prosecutor. In chambers, Judge Elswick summarized her view of what had happened in court, indicating that Ms. Salinas had been approached by Ms. Link and given financial paperwork. The following exchange then occurred:

> THE COURT: At the outset, the Court does not wish to engage in a battle with the public defender's office.
> MS. LINK: I'm not engaging.

> THE COURT: I'm not saying, I'm just making a statement as for the record, calmly and professionally as I can. Not because I'm angry, but because I don't want there to be any misinterpretation. When I say 'the Court has no intent to engage in a battle with the public defender's office,' okay, that's what I mean by that. Okay. [¶] However, it is a violation of the law to solicit. I'm not saying you solicited. It is a violation of the law for a lawyer to solicit a client. I'm not saying you did, but we do have what we have here. I'm just -- let me finish. I'm not saying you solicited.

In response to the judge's expressed concern that Ms. Link had engaged in improper solicitation of a client, Ms. Link explained that she had been approached by the defendant's father, who said the defendant wanted a public defender. After discussion of the alleged solicitation and the judge's arraignment practice, Judge Elswick said, "I understand there's a battle between your office and myself, okay. I'm not trying to make a battle is my point. I'm just trying to lay it all out there for everyone based upon what the constitution says, what the law says, and doing my best to follow it. . . . [¶] I shouldn't have to wake up in the middle of the night racking my brain over these particular issues when they are what they are . . . . [¶] . . . [¶] . . . [¶] It's not done on the part of my, not done out of animosity." (R.T. 9:22-10:19, italics added.) Judge Elswick ultimately made a finding that there was no solicitation.

After learning of the in-chambers discussion with Ms. Link, Jeffrey Graves, who was then the Deputy in Charge of the Alhambra branch of the Los Angeles County Public Defender's Office, approached Judge Elswick about the allegation that the public defender had violated the law by soliciting clients. Judge Elswick met with Mr. Graves and the prosecutor in chambers with a court reporter.

In chambers, Judge Elswick described the Jingles arraignment, which occurred the day before. During the discussion of whether Ms. Link had been improperly soliciting a client, the judge said:

> And I looked. Because Miss Link was standing there. If you want me to respond -- I'm not here to discuss 170 with you, I'm just letting you know what happened so the record is clear. Because I know I can't discuss 170's with parties. [¶] But the clerk told me, Your Honor, there's a 170.6. I looked, I saw Miss Link standing at the clerk's desk, I saw the defendant still there in custody. I thought to myself, okay, and the clerk says 'Do you want to see it?' I said 'Yes, I do.' [¶] So I looked at it and it had Mr. Jingles' name on it, it had my name on it and it was signed by Tavoukjian.

> So then I was thinking, oh, how does somebody paper the court prior to even their appointment? Now they didn't hand it to the court prior to the public defender's appointment, but certainly it was filled out before an appointment was even filled out, before it was even requested by the public defender. [¶] . . . [A]nd immediately she called madam clerk to find out where that particular case would go. . . . Again, I'm not discussing the merits or the fact of the 170 that was filed, but I'm willing, you know, how that scenario played out [sic]. . . . [¶] . . . [¶] After I got papered, I thought, okay, well, they had a plan. That's what I thought. They may not have had a plan, but clearly I thought they had a plan because there was a, immediately, affidavit by a lawyer who was not present and it was completed before even the appointment. [¶] So taken that [sic] into consideration and, again, I didn't mention that on the record a little while ago, take all that into consideration, two things, yesterday and today, it's like, well, I just need to say something to the People and see, by People I mean [the prosecutor] and Miss Link, to see what is going on.

Judge Elswick then mentioned that she was not engaging in battle with the public defender's office and mentioned the word "battle" several times during the in-chambers discussions with Mr. Graves.

Contrary to Judge Elswick's assertion, it was the judge who introduced the Jingles peremptory challenge, and mentioned the "battle" with the public defender numerous times in her conversation with Mr. Graves. Judge Elswick's statement, "Again, I'm not discussing the merits or the fact of the 170 that was filed, but I'm willing, you know, how that scenario played out [sic]," appeared to invite Mr. Graves to discuss the peremptory challenge. Mr. Graves, however, did not comment on the peremptory challenge.

When a 170.6 challenge is properly and timely filed, a judge must accept the disqualification without inquiry. (McCartney v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1974) 12 Cal.3d 512, 531-532.) Litigants have a statutory right to file a peremptory challenge of a judge. (Code Civ. Proc., § 170.6.) As noted by Judge David M. Rothman, "Any conduct by a judge that amounts to retaliation for the exercise of a lawful right amounts to judicial misconduct." (Rothman et al., Cal. Judicial Conduct Handbook, supra, § 7:12, p. 405.) It is improper for a judge to inquire of the attorney, or the agency for which she works, about a peremptory challenge. (Id. at p. 407.)

Judge Elswick asserts that her intent in raising the issue of the peremptory challenge was to inquire how the public defender could file a peremptory challenge in Jingles when the public defender had not yet been appointed, as proof of her concerns that the public defender was improperly interfering with the defendant's right to self-representation in the Salinas case. In the commission's view, the relevance is attenuated, at best, and did not authorize the judge to comment on the peremptory challenge.

The commission found that Judge Elswick's repeated remarks to Ms. Link regarding her battles with the public defender's office, the day after the public defender had filed a peremptory challenge in Jingles, conveyed an appearance of bias and embroilment in violation of canons 2, 2A, and 3B(5). The commission found that Judge Elswick improperly created the appearance of impropriety, in violation of canon 2, by discussing the Jingles peremptory challenge with Mr. Graves, who was the public defender misdemeanor attorney supervisor.

III. REFERENCES TO PERSONAL EXPERIENCE AND POOR DEMEANOR

The commission found that Judge Elswick referred to her personal experiences in a manner that failed to promote confidence in her impartiality and displayed poor demeanor in two cases, and, also displayed poor demeanor in a third case.

A. People v. David Hong

On September 16, 2016, Judge Elswick presided over an expungement motion in the matter of People v. David Hong, in which Mr. Hong was convicted of a DUI in 2010. Judge Elswick denied an expungement petition because an outstanding balance of $372 had not been paid, and the court lacked jurisdiction to accept payment after probation expired. The public defender appeared as a friend of the court and stated that Mr. Hong did not have the ability to pay previously, when the following exchange occurred:

> THE COURT: He had the ability to pay SC [University of Southern California]. I went to SC. I'm a fellow [Trojan]. If I could help you, I'd help you; Bruin, I wouldn't help you. He's a Bruin.[1] That's why I said it. I said a Bruin I wouldn't help you.

[1] The team name for the University of California at Los Angeles is the "Bruins." The team name for the University of Southern California is the "Trojans." It appears the judge meant to say, "He's not a Bruin," or "He's a Trojan."

THE COURT: Here's my position. I've already said it. I can't say it more clearly. He had money for his alcohol program. He had money to pay SC. You see what I'm saying.

When Mr. Hong asked to address the court again, the following exchange occurred:

THE DEFENDANT: Your Honor, if I had the ability to pay the fees --

THE COURT: You had. You had the ability. You had the abilities.

THE DEFENDANT: I lost my job. I have records from the Social Security with me, I guess, year old, my year old income. I think I made --

THE COURT: How are you paying for housing and SC, or were you living at home?

THE DEFENDANT: I was living at home.

THE COURT: Okay. And under whose roof?

THE DEFENDANT: My mother. But she's, she's also, she wasn't working at the time.

THE COURT: Welcome to reality.

THE DEFENDANT: Right.

THE COURT: You could have had a job. [¶] Did you have a job?

THE DEFENDANT: Excuse me?

THE COURT: Did you have a job while going to school at SC?

THE DEFENDANT: No, I did not.

THE COURT: You could have had a job. I had a job, okay.

THE DEFENDANT: Understood.

THE COURT: Went to school full time, worked part-time.

THE DEFENDANT: Understood.

THE COURT: Over at University Village. [¶] You know where University Village is? Okay.

THE DEFENDANT: Your Honor, I'm just trying to explain my situation. I'm not going to make excuses for what I didn't do, so I didn't have a job at the time I was going through school. I had financial aid.

THE COURT: So did I.

B. People v. Rutu Shah

On October 29, 2015, Judge Elswick presided over People v. Rutu Shah, in which Ms. Shah had been granted deferred entry of judgment (diversion) for one year on March 13, 2015, for shoplifting. Ms. Shah requested an extension (her first) on October 29, 2015 to complete five days of community labor.

When the case was called, Judge Elswick asked if Ms. Shah had completed the community labor. After Ms. Shah said she could not, because she got behind on schoolwork when she had to go to India, due to a family emergency, the following exchange occurred:

THE DEFENDANT: I am in school, graduate school, right now. And it became really difficult to finish off.

THE COURT: No, it didn't. I, too, was in graduate school and I worked part time, which is more than five days over four months, okay?

THE DEFENDANT: I don't know how I can go further. Is there anyway out? I have not been able to finish that.

THE COURT: Did you start it?

THE DEFENDANT: No, I went to report but I couldn't go. I had planned to go.

THE COURT: Ma'am, you had plenty of time to go.

THE DEFENDANT: Yes, I know. I know.

THE COURT: The Court is very clear that at the time of your guilty or no contest plea to this theft case --

THE DEFENDANT: I –

> THE COURT: I am still talking. I will let you speak. I believe I heard you went to India; that you had a family emergency.
> THE DEFENDANT: Yes.
> THE COURT: That you were there for a month, okay? That you are in graduate school. That you are very busy. That you, quote, "Tried to do it". [¶] The Court gave you 6 months to do 5 days. That is not even a day per month. [¶] Is there anything else you want to tell the Court? Is there anything else you want to tell me?

The judge terminated diversion and imposed a sentence with two years of summary probation.

In both Hong and Shah, by mentioning that when she was in college and graduate school she had worked, Judge Elswick implied that the defendants should have been able to do the same. Judge Elswick's reference to her personal life suggests prejudgment or bias, or that the judge was making determinations based on information outside the record. The commission found that Judge Elswick's statements about her personal experience created the impression that her personal experience might be influencing her decision-making in the matter before her, and violated canons 2A and 3B(5).

The commission also found that Judge Elswick's statements to Mr. Hong ("Welcome to reality," and comments on his ability to get a job), and her statements to Ms. Shah ("[Y]ou had plenty of time to go," and "That you are very busy. That you, quote, 'Tried to do it.'") were sarcastic and discourteous, in violation of canon 3B(4).

C. People v. Humberto Maya

On November 15, 2016, Judge Elswick presided over a motion to continue sentencing in the above-entitled case, in which the defendant was convicted of driving with a suspended license. The defense requested to continue the sentencing hearing in order to allow the defendant time to obtain his driver's license. Judge Elswick denied the continuance request, citing several prior failures to appear. Mr. Maya stated that he had a newborn baby and had one more ticket to clear before obtaining his license, when the following exchange occurred:

> THE DEFENDANT: I told you I have ADHD.
> THE COURT: And that's why it's written for you. If you have that, then I don't know how you can drive, but that's a different story. Okay. If you forget everything, it doesn't make sense.

Okay. [¶] I'm not saying you don't have that condition, okay, but your lawyer did write it down for you, okay.

(R.T. 3:18-25, italics added.)

The commission found that Judge Elswick's statement that she did not know how Mr. Maya could drive if he had ADHD was sarcastic and discourteous, in violation of canons 2A and 3B(4).

The judge's conduct, at a minimum, constituted improper action.

IV. DISCIPLINE

Judge Elswick has engaged in numerous incidents of misconduct over a three-year period. In the commission's view, the judge's misconduct involving abuse of authority and disregard of the defendants' fundamental rights, resulting in deprivation of liberty, is particularly serious. Despite Judge Elswick's long tenure on the bench without prior discipline, the commission determined that the multitude and severity of the misconduct in this matter warrants imposition of a public admonishment.

Commission members Nanci E. Nishimura, Esq.; Hon. Michael B. Harper; Anthony P. Capozzi, Esq.; Hon. William S. Dato; Mr. Eduardo De La Riva; Dr. Michael A. Moodian; and Mr. Richard Simpson voted for a public admonishment. Commission members Ms. Sarah Kruer Jager and Hon. Erica R. Yew voted for a private admonishment. Commission members Ms. Pattyl A. Kasparian and Mr. Adam N. Torres did not participate.

| IN THE MATTER CONCERNING FORMER JUDGE TIMOTHY J. STAFFORD | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT PURSUANT TO STIPULATION (Rule 116.5) |

INTRODUCTION AND SUMMARY

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge Timothy J. Stafford, a former judge of the Orange County Superior Court. Judge Stafford retired from judicial office, effective September 30, 2018.

Judge Stafford, through his counsel, Edith R. Matthai, Esq., and Commission on Judicial Performance Director-Chief Counsel Gregory Dresser proposed to settle the preliminary investigation instituted by the commission in this matter through the issuance of a public admonishment under the stated terms and conditions, and upon the stipulated statement of facts and conclusions of law. A Stipulation for Discipline by Consent (Stipulation) signed and executed by Judge Stafford, Ms. Matthai, and Mr. Dresser is attached to this decision and order. Pursuant to rule 116.5 of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance, the proposed Stipulation was approved by the commission on December 5, 2018.

The terms and conditions of the Stipulation provide that, upon approval of the Stipulation, the commission shall resolve the matters alleged in the pending preliminary investigation with the issuance of a public admonishment based upon the agreed stipulated facts and legal conclusions. Further, the parties agree that the commission may articulate the reasons for its decision imposing public admonishment and include explanatory language that the commission deems appropriate.

In signing the Stipulation, Judge Stafford expressly admits that the stipulated facts are true and that he agrees with the stated legal conclusions, and waives any further proceedings and review in this matter including formal proceedings and review by the Supreme Court. Accordingly, pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution, the commission issues this public admonishment based on the following stipulated statement of facts and legal conclusions.

FACTS AND LEGAL CONCLUSIONS

Retired Judge Timothy J. Stafford served as a judge of the Orange County Superior Court from September 13, 2013 to September 30, 2018.

On April 5, 2017, Judge Stafford presided over a hearing on a petition for a civil harassment restraining order in K.N. v. Stowell (No. 30-2017-00903204). At the conclusion of the hearing, Judge Stafford made undignified remarks, as set forth below. Judge Stafford's ruling denying the restraining order was reversed by the court of appeal, which found that Judge Stafford had abused his discretion. The court of appeal stated that Judge Stafford's comments did not accord with recognized principles of judicial decorum consistent with the presentation of a case in an atmosphere of fairness and impartiality.

K.N. and Martin Stowell were co-workers at a landscaping company, and were once close friends. K.N. testified that, at some point during their relationship, Mr. Stowell began making unwanted sexual advances toward her. She testified that, although she refused Mr. Stowell's advances many times, he continued to make remarks and send texts and emails that "crossed the line" or expressed anger that she had cut off contact with him. K.N. introduced into evidence a months-long series of text messages, emails, and voice messages from Mr. Stowell. In one such email, sent three days after Mr. Stowell promised to leave K.N. alone and give her space, Mr. Stowell called K.N.'s husband a "pussy," and said, "One more thing, don't drag [your friend Nikki's] pussy husband in this like you did with the flowers[. H]e will lose his fucking teeth permanently[.]" K.N. testified that, in October 2016, she told Mr. Stowell to leave her alone entirely, and that he made approximately 70 attempts to contact her thereafter.

K.N. stated that she sought psychological treatment for anxiety and depression resulting from Mr. Stowell's conduct, and that she eventually sought and obtained permission to work from home to avoid Mr. Stowell. She testified that Mr. Stowell contacted her several times after she began working from home, saying, in a phone call, that he had become obsessed with her, and, in a text message, "This ain't over[.] People will go down [for] this shit[.] That I guarantee you[.] You [K.N.] of all people should have blown this shit off like [me]. . . . This is gonna get ugly[.] Pass that on to[] those two bitches. . . . [I]t[']s not going to stop until this shit is worked out and over[.] This will be my primary focus until then[.]"

On cross-examination, K.N. testified about gifts Mr. Stowell had given her during their friendship. She also testified about an email she sent him, in February 2016, in which she explained that she was pulling back from their relationship, and not responding to messages she considered inappropriate, because there were rumors that they were having an affair. She further explained in the email that her husband had become uncomfortable with their relationship. K.N. also testified on cross-examination that, during the period of their friendship, K.N. told Mr. Stowell, and another co-worker, that she had sent her husband a text message saying, "Will you buy me a new car if I give you a blow job every day?" and that her husband had replied, "I wish I could, but I can't afford to."

Mr. Stowell and others from the parties' place of employment also testified. Mr. Stowell described his past relationship with K.N. as "buddies," who would "back off" and then resume being buddies a few days later. He said he did not intend to harass K.N. and said he could leave her alone without a restraining order.

At the end of the hearing, Judge Stafford said, "I feel like I've sat for the last four and a half or five hours dealing with junior high school students, both of you, even though you have some gray over your ears, all right. And the thing that concerns me is that [K.N.], your husband's here, isn't he?" She confirmed that he was, and Judge Stafford asked why no one called him as a witness. The restraining order had also been sought on his behalf. Judge Stafford asked Mr. Stowell whether he was married and learned that he was. Judge Stafford suggested that the spouses of the parties were the ones who should be sitting at the table with attorneys, "because they had to put up with it." Judge Stafford further stated, to K.N.:

> And your husband had to listen, and it was like Mr. Stowell was pretty much the big man on campus, had the bucks in his back pocket, and the petitioner was the best looking girl in school, and he was going to get her any way he possibly could, all right. And she knew it, and she liked it, because she got things.
> And don't — counsel, you're giving me a frown. Look it. If I got a letter from someone, or a phone call saying, I'll give you a blow job every day for the rest of your life for a car, we will be at the Mercedes dealer pretty soon, but not because I'm married, all right.

K.N.'s lawyer interjected that K.N.'s text message had not been directed at Mr. Stowell. Judge Stafford said he understood to whom it was directed and added, "It came out of your client's mouth, out of her brain onto a piece of paper, didn't it?"

After making these remarks, Judge Stafford denied K.N.'s petition for a restraining order. K.N. appealed.

The Fourth District Court of Appeal concluded that Judge Stafford abused his discretion in denying K.N.'s request for a restraining order against Mr. Stowell. (K.N. v. Stowell (Aug. 27, 2018, G054963) [nonpub. opn.].) The court of appeal concluded that the judge's comments did not show actual bias or a high probability of bias. The court found, however, that the judge's statement, "If I got a letter from someone, or a phone call saying I'll give you a blow job every day for the rest of your life for a car, we will be at the Mercedes dealer pretty soon. . . ," was "clearly inappropriate." The appellate court stated:

> Although the comment does not demonstrate judicial bias, it did "'not accord with recognized principles of judicial decorum consistent with the presentation of a case in an atmosphere of fairness and impartiality.'" (In re Marriage of Iverson (1992) 11 Cal.App.4th 1495, 1501 (Iverson), overruled on other grounds by People v. Freeman [(2010)] 47 Cal.4th [993,] 1006, fn. 4.) Judicial ethics require a judge to

> "be patient, dignified, and courteous to litigants . . . ." (Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canon 3(B)(4).) The judge's comment is the antithesis of judicial decorum and courtesy.

The appellate court also addressed Judge Stafford's statement that Mr. Stowell was the "big man on campus" and K.N. was "the best looking girl in school, and [Stowell] was going to get her any way he possibly could, all right. And she knew it, and she liked it, because she got things." The appellate court found that Judge Stafford failed to identify the applicable timeframe and noted that there was no evidence that K.N. "liked" Mr. Stowell's attention or "got things" after July 2016. The appellate court stated:

> We cannot definitively conclude the judge's comments show actual bias, but the comments were inappropriate and created an appearance of gender bias because they suggest the female target of a "big man on campus" would like the attention. (See Iverson, supra, 11 Cal.App.4th at pp. 1500-1501 [at minimum, appearance of gender bias shown where judge employed gender-based stereotypes in decisionmaking process]; see also Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canon 3B(5) ["A judge shall not, in the performance of judicial duties, engage in speech, gestures, or other conduct that would reasonably be perceived as (a) bias or prejudice, including but not limited to bias or prejudice based upon . . . sex, gender. . ."].)

(K.N. v. Stowell, supra, G054963 at pp. 12-13.)

The appellate court noted that any pattern of conduct over a period of time, however short, can constitute harassment, and observed:

> Because K.N. was not seriously annoyed, alarmed or harassed in the past does not foreclose the possibility she was seriously annoyed, alarmed, or harassed after October 2016. Thus, the trial court appears to have applied an improper criterion—that K.N. liked Stowell's conduct in the past—in denying K.N.'s request for a restraining order.

(K.N. v. Stowell, supra, G054963 at p. 15.)

The court further observed, "The trial court's comments and references to irrelevant evidence undermine our confidence it properly exercised its discretion in denying K.N.'s request for a restraining order." (K.N. v. Stowell, supra, G054963 at p. 15.)

The appellate court directed, "On remand, in light of our determination that there was an appearance of judicial bias on the part of Judge Stafford, we conclude the hearing on K.N.'s request should be before a different judge." (K.N. v. Stowell, supra, G054963 at p. 16.)

Former Judge Stafford's conduct violated his duty to be dignified and courteous to those with whom he deals in an official capacity (canon 3B(4)); to perform judicial duties without bias or prejudice, and to refrain from speech or other conduct that would reasonably be perceived as bias or prejudice (canon 3B(5)); to avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety in all of his activities (canon 2); to act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary (canon 2A); to be faithful to the law (canon 3B(2)); and to maintain high standards of conduct (canon 1).

Former Judge Stafford's conduct constituted, at a minimum, improper action.

DISCIPLINE

Judge Stafford engaged in serious misconduct by making comments in a restraining order proceeding that were extremely undignified and inappropriate, including "If I got a letter from someone, or a phone call saying I'll give you a blow job every day for the rest of your life for a car, we will be at the Mercedes dealer pretty soon...." As stated by the appellate court, this comment "is the antithesis of judicial decorum and courtesy." (K.N. v. Stowell, supra, G054963, at p. 12.) The judge also suggested both parties were acting like junior high school students and that the female plaintiff liked the attention she received from her co-worker, and that Mr. Stowell was the "big man on campus." These comments were belittling and injurious to both parties and were based on gender-based stereotypes, raising the appearance of gender bias.

The commission determined that imposition of a public admonishment under the terms of the Stipulation best fulfills its mandate to protect the public and uphold high standards of judicial conduct in view of the judge's retirement and his cooperation with the commission's investigation.

Commission members Nanci E. Nishimura, Esq.; Hon. Michael B. Harper; Anthony P. Capozzi, Esq.; Hon. William S. Dato; Mr. Eduardo De La Riva; Ms. Sarah Kruer Jager; Dr. Michael A. Moodian; Mr. Richard Simpson; and Hon. Erica R. Yew voted to accept the Stipulation and issue this public admonishment. Commission members Ms. Pattyl A. Kasparian and Mr. Adam N. Torres did not participate.

| IN THE MATTER CONCERNING FORMER JUDGE TIMOTHY J. STAFFORD | STIPULATION FOR DISCIPLINE BY CONSENT (Rule 116.5) |

Pursuant to Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance, rule 116.5, former Judge Timothy J. Stafford of the Orange County Superior Court, represented by counsel, and commission staff counsel (the "parties") submit this proposed disposition of the matters set forth in the commission's preliminary investigation letter dated September 18, 2017. The parties request that the commission resolve this matter by imposition of a public admonishment. The parties believe that the settlement provided by this agreement is in the best interests of the commission and Judge Stafford because, among other reasons, in light of the stipulated facts and legal conclusions, a public admonishment adequately protects the public and will avoid the delay and expense of further proceedings.

Former Judge Stafford retired from judicial office, effective September 30, 2018.

TERMS AND CONDITIONS OF AGREEMENT

1. This agreement resolves the matters alleged in the commission's pending preliminary investigation involving former Judge Timothy J. Stafford.

2. The commission shall issue a public admonishment based on the agreed Stipulated Facts and Legal Conclusions set forth therein.

3. If the commission accepts this proposed disposition, the commission's decision and order imposing public admonishment may articulate the reasons for its decision and include explanatory language that the commission deems appropriate.

4. Upon acceptance by the commission, this stipulation and the commission's decision and order shall be made public.

5. Former Judge Stafford waives any further proceedings and review in this matter, including formal proceedings (rules 118, et seq.) and review by the Supreme Court (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 9.60).

6. The commission may reject this proposed disposition and resume its preliminary investigation. If the commission does so, nothing in this proposed disposition will be deemed to be admitted by former Judge Stafford.

Accordingly, it is hereby stipulated and agreed that the commission shall issue a public admonishment on the above Terms and Conditions of Agreement, and based on the following Stipulated Facts and Legal Conclusions.

STIPULATED FACTS AND LEGAL CONCLUSIONS

Retired Judge Timothy J. Stafford served as a judge of the Orange County Superior Court from September 13, 2013 to September 30, 2018.

On April 5, 2017, Judge Stafford presided over a hearing on a petition for a civil harassment restraining order in K.N. v. Stowell (No. 30-2017-00903204). At the conclusion of the hearing, Judge Stafford made undignified remarks, as set forth below. Judge Stafford's ruling denying the restraining order was reversed by the court of appeal, which found that Judge Stafford had abused his discretion. The court of appeal stated that Judge Stafford's comments did not accord with recognized principles of judicial decorum consistent with the presentation of a case in an atmosphere of fairness and impartiality.

K.N. and Martin Stowell were co-workers at a landscaping company, and were once close friends. K.N. testified that, at some point during their relationship, Mr.

Stowell began making unwanted sexual advances toward her. She testified that, although she refused Mr. Stowell's advances many times, he continued to make remarks and send texts and emails that "crossed the line" or expressed anger that she had cut off contact with him. K.N. introduced into evidence a months-long series of text messages, emails, and voice messages from Mr. Stowell. In one such email, sent three days after Mr. Stowell promised to leave K.N. alone and give her space, Mr. Stowell called K.N.'s husband a "pussy," and said, "One more thing, don't drag [your friend Nikki's] pussy husband in this like you did with the flowers[. H]e will lose his fucking teeth permanently[.]" K.N. testified that, in October 2016, she told Mr. Stowell to leave her alone entirely, and that he made approximately 70 attempts to contact her thereafter.

K.N. stated that she sought psychological treatment for anxiety and depression resulting from Mr. Stowell's conduct, and that she eventually sought and obtained permission to work from home to avoid Mr. Stowell. She testified that Mr. Stowell contacted her several times after she began working from home, saying, in a phone call, that he had become obsessed with her, and, in a text message, "This ain't over[.] People will go down [for] this shit[.] That I guarantee you[.] You [K.N.] of all people should have blown this shit off like [me]. . . . This is gonna get ugly[.] Pass that on to[] those two bitches. . . . [I]t[']s not going to stop until this shit is worked out and over[.] This will be my primary focus until then[.]"

On cross-examination, K.N. testified about gifts Mr. Stowell had given her during their friendship. She also testified about an email she sent him, in February 2016, in which she explained that she was pulling back from their relationship, and not responding to messages she considered inappropriate, because there were rumors that they were having an affair. She further explained in the email that her husband had become uncomfortable with their relationship. K.N. also testified on cross-examination that, during the period of their friendship, K.N. told Mr. Stowell, and another co-worker, that she had sent her husband a text message saying, "Will you buy me a new car if I give you a blow job every day?" and that her husband had replied, "I wish I could, but I can't afford to."

Mr. Stowell and others from the parties' place of employment also testified. Mr. Stowell described his past relationship with K.N. as "buddies," who would "back off" and then resume being buddies a few days later. He said he did not intend to harass K.N. and said he could leave her alone without a restraining order.

At the end of the hearing, Judge Stafford said, "I feel like I've sat for the last four and a half or five hours dealing with junior high school students, both of you, even though you have some gray over your ears, all right. And the thing that concerns me is that [K.N.], your husband's here, isn't he?" She confirmed that he was, and Judge Stafford asked why no one called him as a witness. The restraining order had also been sought on his behalf. Judge Stafford asked Mr. Stowell whether he was married and learned that he was. Judge Stafford suggested that the spouses of the parties were the ones who should be sitting at the table with attorneys, "because they had to put up with it." Judge Stafford further stated, to K.N.:

> And your husband had to listen, and it was like Mr. Stowell was pretty much the big man on campus, had the bucks in his back pocket, and the petitioner was the best looking girl in school, and he was going to get her any way he possibly could, all right. And she knew it, and she liked it, because she got things.
> And don't — counsel, you're giving me a frown. Look it. If I got a letter from someone, or a phone call saying, I'll give you a blow job every day for the rest of your life for a car, we will be at the Mercedes dealer pretty soon, but not because I'm married, all right.

K.N.'s lawyer interjected that K.N.'s text message had not been directed at Mr. Stowell. Judge Stafford said he understood to whom it was directed and added, "It came out of your client's mouth, out of her brain onto a piece of paper, didn't it?"

After making these remarks, Judge Stafford denied K.N.'s petition for a restraining order. K.N. appealed.

The Fourth District Court of Appeal concluded that Judge Stafford abused his discretion in denying K.N.'s request for a restraining order against Mr. Stowell. (K.N. v. Stowell (Aug. 27, 2018, G054963) [nonpub. opn.].) The court of appeal concluded that the judge's comments did not show actual bias or a high probability of bias. The court found, however, that the judge's statement, "If I got a letter from someone, or a phone call saying I'll give you a blow job every day for the rest of your life for a car, we will be at the Mercedes dealer pretty soon. . . ," was "clearly inappropriate." The appellate court stated:

> Although the comment does not demonstrate judicial bias, it did "'not accord with recognized principles of judicial decorum consistent with the presentation of a case in an atmosphere of fairness and impartiality.'" (In re Marriage of Iverson (1992) 11 Cal.App.4th 1495, 1501 (Iverson), overruled on other grounds by People v. Freeman, supra, 47 Cal.4th at p. 1006, fn. 4.) Judicial ethics require a judge to "be patient, dignified, and courteous to litigants . . . ." (Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canon 3(B)(4).) The judge's comment is the antithesis of judicial decorum and courtesy.

The appellate court also addressed Judge Stafford's statement that Mr. Stowell was the "big man on campus" and K.N. was "the best looking girl in school, and [Stowell] was going to get her any way he possible could, all right. And she knew it, and she liked it, because she got things." The appellate court found that Judge Stafford failed to identify the applicable timeframe and noted that there was no evidence that K.N. "liked" Mr. Stowell's attention or "got things" after July 2016. The appellate court stated:

> We cannot definitively conclude the judge's comments show actual bias, but the comments were inappropriate and created an appearance of gender bias because they suggest the female > target of a 'big man on campus' would like the attention. (See Iverson, supra, 11 Cal.App.4th at pp. 1500-1501 [at minimum, appearance of gender bias shown where judge employed gender-based stereotypes in decisionmaking process]; see also Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canon 3B(5) ["A judge shall not, in the performance of judicial duties, engage in speech, gestures, or other conduct that would reasonably be perceived as (a) bias or prejudice, including but not limited to bias or prejudice based upon . . . sex, gender. . ."].)

(K.N. v. Stowell, supra, G054963 at pp. 12-13.)

The appellate court noted that any pattern of conduct over a period of time, however short, can constitute harassment, and observed:

> Because K.N. was not seriously annoyed, alarmed or harassed in the past does not foreclose the possibility she was seriously annoyed, alarmed, or harassed after October 2016. Thus, the trial court appears to have applied an improper criterion—that K.N. liked Stowell's conduct in the past—in denying K.N.'s request for a restraining order.

(K.N. v. Stowell, supra, G054963 at p. 15.)

The court further observed, "The trial court's comments and references to irrelevant evidence undermine our confidence it properly exercised its discretion in denying K.N.'s request for a restraining order." (K.N. v. Stowell, supra, G054963 at p. 15.)

The appellate court directed, "On remand, in light of our determination that there was an appearance of judicial bias on the part of Judge Stafford, we conclude the hearing on K.N.'s request should be before a different judge." (K.N. v. Stowell, supra, G054963 at p. 16.)

Former Judge Stafford's conduct violated his duty to be dignified and courteous to those with whom he deals in an official capacity (canon 3B(4)); to perform judicial duties without bias or prejudice, and to refrain from speech or other conduct that would reasonably be perceived as bias or prejudice (canon 3B(5)); to avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety in all of his activities (canon 2); to act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary (canon 2A); to be faithful to the law (canon 3B(2)); and to maintain high standards of conduct (canon 1).

Former Judge Stafford's conduct constituted, at a minimum, improper action.

By signing this stipulation, in addition to consenting to discipline on the terms set forth, former Judge Stafford expressly admits that the foregoing facts are true and that he agrees with the stated legal conclusions.

| IN THE MATTER CONCERNING JUDGE JOSE I. SANDOVAL | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT |

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge Jose I. Sandoval, a judge of the Los Angeles County Superior Court. Pursuant to rule 116 of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance, Judge Sandoval and his attorney, Edith R. Matthai, appeared before the commission on May 8, 2019, to contest the imposition of a proposed public admonishment issued on February 14, 2019. Judge Sandoval has waived his right to formal proceedings under rule 118 and to review by the Supreme Court. Having considered the written and oral objections and argument submitted by Judge Sandoval and his counsel, and good cause appearing, the Commission on Judicial Performance issues this public admonishment pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution, based upon the following statement of facts and reasons.

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

Judge Sandoval has been a judge of the Los Angeles County Superior Court since 2001. His current term began in 2015.

The commission found that Judge Sandoval violated his duty to dispose of all judicial matters promptly and efficiently, as required by canon 3B(8) of the Code of Judicial Ethics, and to perform his judicial duties competently and diligently, as required by canon 3, when he failed to resentence a criminal defendant for over three years after being directed to do so by the Court of Appeal.

On February 24, 2012, the Court of Appeal issued a decision in People v. Dewone T. Smith (B223181), affirming a judgment issued by Judge Sandoval, but vacating the 150-years-to-life sentence he had imposed, and remanding the case to him for sentencing. The Court of Appeal issued its remittitur to the trial court on August 30, 2013. Judge Sandoval did not resentence Mr. Smith until October 12, 2016.

After the August 30, 2013 remittitur, on September 6, 2013, a different judge at the superior court ordered the remittitur forwarded to Judge Sandoval for action. Judge Sandoval told the commission that the remittitur was not received in his department until nearly a year later. On September 3, 2014, Smith was called by a different judge and continued to September 18, 2014 for hearing in Judge Sandoval's department. Judge Sandoval continued the hearing on September 18, 2014, September 24, 2014, and October 28, 2014; the commission found that these three continuances did not violate the Code of Judicial Ethics.

Thereafter, however, Judge Sandoval continued the hearing 16 more times, until he finally sentenced Mr. Smith on October 12, 2016. The pattern that emerged is that counsel often agreed on dates that were convenient to them, and Judge Sandoval simply accepted those dates. Mr. Smith's counsel did, however, occasionally object to further continuances. Judge Sandoval did not offer any evidence that he had questioned counsel about the need for, or length of, the continuances he granted, and he did not offer any explanation for the length of these continuances in his response to the commission. Judge Sandoval did not issue any orders during this period to ensure that the case was managed efficiently.

In the absence of proactive case management by Judge Sandoval, briefing on motions and discovery was prolonged. An issue arose on July 21, 2015 about whether Judge Sandoval or another judge should hear one of the defense motions, but Judge Sandoval still had not resolved the issue by the September 10, 2015 hearing. The prosecution repeatedly subpoenaed documents over a period of many months, and then required more time to provide them to the defense and the court, contributing to delay of the sentencing hearing between January 23, 2015 and April 20, 2016. Judge Sandoval recognized this issue, but did not take any action to manage the process. For example, on January 23, 2015, Judge Sandoval suggested setting a hearing "relatively soon" for counsel to confirm that there were no further discovery and disclosure issues. Defense counsel objected to further continuances. Judge Sandoval responded, "I appreciate that," recognized there had been "some delay," and said he wanted the parties to have the opportunity to be heard. He did not, however, exert control over the process to assure that a sentencing hearing would occur within a reasonable period of time. Five months later, on June 9, 2015, Judge Sandoval told counsel he wanted to handle the documents issue "as soon as possible, in a week," but again did not issue an order to govern the process. On November 24, 2015, defense counsel asked to be provided with the prosecution's witness list at least a week prior to the next hearing, but Judge Sandoval did not issue any order, resulting in the prosecution providing the list only two days prior to the next hearing on January 20, 2016. The result was that the defense was not prepared to proceed at the January 20, 2016 hearing, and Judge Sandoval once again continued the matter to February 25, 2016. Judge Sandoval offered no explanation for permitting the matter to proceed in this manner. Meanwhile, Judge Sandoval had informed counsel at the September 24, 2014 hearing that he intended to substantially reduce the sentence.

"A convicted defendant should not be subjected to unnecessary and indefinite delay before a new sentence is imposed." (People v. Domenzain (1984) 161 Cal.App.3d 619, 623.) Mr. Smith was subjected to unnecessary and indefinite delay before the new sentence was imposed. As the Court of Appeal in Mr. Smith's subsequent appeal stated,

> After our remittitur, this case languished in the trial court for more than three years before Smith was resentenced. That is true even though the only felony for which Smith was ultimately resentenced was punishable by two, three, or four years had the trial court exercised its discretion in any number of ways ([Pen. Code,] § 4502, subd. (a).)

The court then concluded:

> The three-year delay between remittitur and resentencing here was unconscionable. The record does not disclose the cause of the vast majority of the more-than-20 continuances. But unless the trial court had already determined when it first started continuing resentencing in this case that it was going to sentence Smith to more than the length of the continuances (taken together with whatever custody and other credits Smith was entitled to), then the > delay had the very real possibility of implicating Smith's liberty rights. We will grant Smith's request to be resentenced before a different trial judge.

The commission found that Judge Sandoval's conduct in failing to manage the case, after becoming aware that it had already languished for a year after the remittitur, violated canon 3 (judges shall perform judicial duties competently and diligently), canon 3B(8) (judges must dispose of all judicial matters promptly and efficiently), and canon 2A (judges shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary).

Judge Sandoval's conduct was, at a minimum, improper action.

In determining to impose public discipline, the commission took into account the following aggravating factors:

(1) Judge Sandoval received an advisory letter in 2013 for delay in ruling on a criminal defendant's motion, in violation of canon 3B(8). (The advisory letter was also for unrelated improper ex parte communication.)

(2) In his response to the notice of intended public admonishment, Judge Sandoval stated that he had "no history of discipline," despite the existence of the 2013 advisory letter. At his appearance before the commission, he acknowledged having received the 2013 advisory letter, but did not seem to recall that it concerned decisional delay. Judge Sandoval did not appear to have taken into account his 2013 discipline for failing to dispose of matters promptly and efficiently while he was handling the Smith case between 2014 and 2016.

(3) Judge Sandoval also asserted that none of the continuances he granted was the result of his failure to perform his judicial duties. The commission determined that this assertion reflected a lack of appreciation for the impropriety of his conduct.

Commission members Nanci E. Nishimura, Esq.; Hon. Michael B. Harper; Hon. William S. Dato; Mr. Eduardo De La Riva; Ms. Sarah Kruer Jager; Dr. Michael A. Moodian; and Mr. Adam N. Torres voted for a public admonishment. Commission members Ms. Kay Cooperman Jue, Hon. Lisa B. Lench, and Mr. Richard Simpson voted for a private admonishment. Commission member Anthony P. Capozzi, Esq. did not participate.

| IN THE MATTER CONCERNING JUDGE BRIAN LAMB | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT |

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge Brian Lamb, a judge of the Inyo County Superior Court since 2003. His current term began in 2015. Pursuant to rule 116 of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance, Judge Lamb and his attorney, Daniel S. Agle, appeared before the commission on June 26, 2019, to contest the imposition of a proposed public admonishment issued on March 29, 2019. Judge Lamb has waived his right to formal proceedings under rule 118 and to review by the Supreme Court. Having considered the written and oral objections and argument submitted by Judge Lamb and his counsel, and good cause appearing, the Commission on Judicial Performance issues this public admonishment pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution, based upon the following statement of facts and reasons.

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

Judge Lamb engaged in improper conduct by failing to timely act in three family law cases and by signing two false salary affidavits. His prior discipline for similar misconduct—an advisory letter in 2006 and a private admonishment in 2015—were significant aggravating factors.

Canon 3B(8) of the Code of Judicial Ethics requires judges to dispose of all judicial matters promptly and efficiently. Canon 3 requires judges to perform their judicial duties competently and diligently. Canon 2A requires judges to act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary.

Under California law, judges are expected to decide matters submitted to them within 90 days of submission, and are prohibited from receiving their salaries when they have undecided matters under submission for more than 90 days. (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 19; Mardikian v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1985) 40 Cal.3d 473, 477, fn. 4.) Government Code section 68210 requires judges to execute affidavits declaring that they are in compliance with the law.

1. In Regard to the Marriage of Richardson (SICVFL15-57764). Judge Lamb delayed more than 14 months—from January 3, 2017 until March 6, 2018—in issuing a final judgment and statement of decision in this matter. Trial concluded on August 23, 2016. The matter was submitted for decision on September 2, 2016. Judge Lamb issued a judgment on December 2, 2016. The petitioner filed an ex parte application for relief from the judgment, requesting a statement of decision. Judge Lamb issued an order vacating the judgment, converting it to a proposed statement of decision, and inviting objections from the parties. Both parties timely filed objections on January 3, 2017. On February 10, 2018, Judge Lamb set a hearing on the objections for February 26, 2018. He did not issue the dissolution judgment or the statement of decision until March 6, 2018, more than 14 months after the parties filed their January 3, 2017 objections.

Judge Lamb recognized that a "considerable amount of time" passed between his receipt of objections on January 3, 2017 and his setting the hearing on February 10, 2018, and apologized for the delay. He said he "lost track" of the matter, but this is inconsistent with the fact that he ruled on a motion in the case in the intervening period. Judge Lamb's "lost track" explanation is the same one he offered in connection with his 2006 advisory letter and his 2015 private admonishment.

The 14-month delay between the January 3, 2017 objections and the March 6, 2018 final judgment and statement of decision was unreasonable. (Mardikian, 40 Cal.3d at p. 477, fn. 4.) Delay in dissolution proceedings "necessarily prejudices the parties who are unable to remarry, utilize assets, or establish stable homes for the children of the marriage." (Id. at p. 483, fn. 9.) Judge Lamb's conduct violated canon 3B(8) and canon 3.

2. In Regard to the Marriage of Faldowski (SICVFL12-53648/15-58551). Judge Lamb delayed more than 12 months—from August 25, 2016 until September 5, 2017—before issuing a final statement of decision in this matter. A post-judgment request for order regarding child support, attorney fees, and support arrearages was submitted for decision on May 27, 2016. Judge Lamb issued a tentative decision 90 days later, on August 25, 2016. On September 15, 2016, the respondent filed a request for a statement of decision. Due to a clerical error, this request was not brought to Judge Lamb's attention until six weeks later, on October 27, 2016. Judge Lamb granted himself a 40-day extension of time to December 5, 2016 to issue the statement of decision. The day before this extension ran out, Judge Lamb ordered the petitioner to draft the proposed statement of decision. The petitioner filed the proposed statement of decision on December 12, 2016, followed by timely objections and a reply, closing the pleadings on December 27, 2016. Judge Lamb did not issue the final statement of decision until September 5, 2017, more than 12 months after he had issued his tentative decision.

Judge Lamb contended that there is no deadline for the issuance of a final statement of decision. Judge Lamb was, however, still required by canon 3B(8) to resolve the matter fairly, promptly, and efficiently. Judge Lamb admitted that he was reminded of the outstanding final statement of decision on June 6, 2017, when he held a hearing on petitioner's March 28, 2017 request for order, which stated that the parties were still waiting for the statement of decision and final judgment, and described the negative impact of the delay on the petitioner.

Judge Lamb nevertheless delayed an additional three months before issuing the final statement of decision. Issuing the final statement of decision more than 12 months after the tentative decision was unreasonable and violated canon 3B(8).

3. In Regard to the Marriage of Kruse (SICVFL16-59777). Judge Lamb ruled on a request for an order for support and attorney fees 63 days late in this matter. He presided over a hearing on the request on September 1, 2016. The matter was submitted for decision on October 4, 2016. Judge Lamb did not issue an order on the request until March 7, 2017, 63 days after the 90th day after submission. This delay was unreasonable and violated canon 3B(8).

Further, on December 6, 2016, the respondent filed a request for a ruling regarding attorney fees and costs, pursuant to Family Code section 2031, subdivision (a)(2), which requires that a ruling on fees must issue within 15 days of the hearing. Judge Lamb did not issue an order within 15 days. This also violated canon 3B(8).

Judge Lamb apologized for these delays and told the commission that he did not know how he "lost track" of this matter. He admitted, however, that a court operations manager sent him emails on November 30, 2016 and December 19, 2016, both of which attached a submitted matter list showing that the ruling in Kruse was due by January 3, 2017. He also admitted that the presiding judge sent him an email on December 20, 2016 reminding him of his upcoming submitted matter deadlines, including Kruse.

In addition, in January 2017 and February 2017, while Kruse remained pending and undecided in excess of 90 days, Judge Lamb signed and submitted salary affidavits pursuant to Government Code section 68210 in which he falsely declared that no cause remained pending and undetermined that had been submitted to him for decision in excess of 90 days. Judge Lamb stated that he did not know the January and February 2017 salary affidavits were false when he signed them, but the fact that a judge may be unaware that he or she has matters that have been under submission for more than 90 days is not a defense to a charge of filing false salary affidavits. "A judge who executes a salary affidavit affirming he or she has no overdue ruling should take care to ensure that the statement is true when it is made." (Inquiry Concerning Freedman (2007) 49 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 223, 246; Public Admonishment of Judge John D. Kirihara (2012), p. 3.) Lamb's false salary affidavits violated his duty to respect and comply with the law and to act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity of the judiciary (canon 2A).

Judge Lamb's conduct was, at a minimum, improper action.

In determining to issue this public admonishment, the commission considered Judge Lamb's prior discipline to be a significant aggravating factor. Judge Lamb received an advisory letter in 2006 for issuing a decision in a family law case 22 days after the 90th day after the matter had been submitted for decision. Judge Lamb stated that the matter "slipped between the cracks" and "dropped from his radar screen." Judge Lamb told the commission he had conferred with his presiding judge and that they "redesigned their current practices for tracking submitted cases," and "put in place parallel and redundant systems for calendaring of submitted matters, and for alerting judges to the pendency and status of those cases," said he would meet with his presiding judge "on a regular basis to assure himself that matters are decided on a timely basis, and that [he] has the time and other resources he needs to file timely decisions on submitted matters," and said that these changes were "to ensure nothing like this occurs again in Inyo County." The commission considered Judge Lamb's apology and remedial steps mitigating, but also warned him that the failure to promptly decide family law matters is particularly egregious in light of the harm to the parties.

Judge Lamb then received a private admonishment in 2015 for failing to issue a decision in a submitted matter until six months after he stated he would. Judge Lamb was reminded about the need to issue the decision approximately four months after the matter was submitted and obtained the file to determine which judge was responsible for the matter, but failed to promptly review the file (and it was his case all along). During that time, another judge expressed concern to Judge Lamb about the submitted matter and the 90-day rule. A month later, Judge Lamb was provided definitive notice that it was his decision that was overdue, but he did not issue the decision until another month had passed. While the underlying matter remained pending and undecided in excess of 90 days, Judge Lamb also signed false salary affidavits declaring that no cause remained pending and undetermined that had been submitted to him for decision in excess of 90 days. Judge Lamb recognized that he should not have allowed the matter to "fall off his radar," said he regretted the delay, and asserted that he did not knowingly sign the false salary affidavits. The private admonishment referred to the 2006 advisory letter, and the further delay in ruling after it became clear that Judge Lamb was responsible for the outstanding ruling, as aggravating factors.

The commission recognizes that Judge Lamb is a hard-working judge, but it did not consider his assertions about his workload or his apologies mitigating in this matter because he has been previously disciplined twice for similar misconduct.

Commission members Nanci E. Nishimura, Esq.; Hon. Michael B. Harper; Anthony P. Capozzi, Esq.; Ms. Sarah Kruer Jager; Ms. Kay Cooperman Jue; Hon. Lisa B. Lench; Dr. Michael A. # PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE DAVID A. MASON

The Commission on Judicial Performance ordered Judge David A. Mason publicly admonished, pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution and commission rule 115, as set forth in the following statement of facts and reasons found by the commission:

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

Judge David A. Mason has been a judge of the Modoc County Superior Court since May 1, 2009. His current term began in 2017.

According to Judge Mason, at the time he took the bench, he had a "personal and sustained" relationship with attorney Tom Gifford, including a "prior professional relationship," and "ongoing social interactions in the community," which continued after he took the bench. In 2013, Judge Mason went on a two-week trip to Italy with Mr. Gifford and their spouses as part of a celebration of the Giffords' wedding anniversary, which "marked an escalation of the friendship." Mr. Gifford made regular appearances before Judge Mason during this period. Mr. Gifford moved to Texas shortly after the trip to Italy, but this did not immediately impact their social relationship. Judge Mason traveled to Mr. Gifford's home in Texas on two occasions, for about one week each time, including once over a Thanksgiving holiday. In or about April 2017, Mr. Gifford returned to Modoc County, and was awarded a contract to serve as Modoc County's conflicts attorney for indigent defense. He resumed making regular appearances before Judge Mason, including appearances in at least 86 criminal cases between April and December 2017, and has continued to do so. According to Judge Mason, he and Mr. Gifford "maintained some form of friendship" in 2017, but it was "not as strong" as before Mr. Gifford moved to Texas. Judge Mason recalled only one dinner with Mr. Gifford in 2017.

In his response to the commission's December 4, 2018 preliminary investigation letter, Judge Mason stated that there are only a few attorneys in Modoc County, that his friendship with Mr. Gifford had never influenced his handling of any case, and that, "I have always and routinely made full disclosures to all attorneys and litigants in every case where ethics and fairness made it necessary and expedient that attorneys and litigants be made aware of any possible grounds for disqualification." In response to the commission's March 25, 2019 supplemental preliminary investigation letter, Judge Mason stated, "[I]t is more appropriate for Judge Mason to recognize that his . . . prior response to the Commission may have overstated his diligence regarding disclosing specific information concerning his relationship with Mr. Gifford, on the record, in every matter. The fact is that he cannot stand by such definitive statements with absolute confidence." He also stated that he made "appropriate disclosures" "regularly" during his first years on the bench, but could not make definitive statements about his practices ten years ago. Judge Mason did not provide any evidence that he had ever made any disclosure on the record in any case in which Mr. Gifford had appeared. Judge Mason stated that he is "willing to acknowledge lapses in diligence and formal statements on the record regarding his relationship with Mr. Gifford." Judge Mason expressed regret if his prior statements created confusion or were in any way misleading. Judge Mason provided a proposed disclosure that he will put on the record in Mr. Gifford's cases in the future.

Judge Mason explained that he was aware of the need to disclose his relationship with Mr. Gifford when he took the bench, and that he and his presiding judge agreed disclosure was required, but not disqualification, because his interactions with Mr. Gifford were "fairly ordinary within the context of the Modoc legal community." Judge Mason stated that he was confident he could be fair, that "local attorneys" knew about the relationship, and that they did not object to him presiding over cases in which Mr. Gifford appeared. Judge Mason also stated that the "political climate" in Modoc County is such that the "population expects that the judges will know many of the litigants and would view it as concerning if the judges sidestepped their responsibility so 'outsiders' could decide local legal matters." In his supplemental response to the commission, Judge Mason stated that he "recognizes now that he may have erred by substituting the actual views of local attorneys for the more standardized, objective standard applicable to judges statewide, and that such an analysis may have required a different decision regarding disqualification."

"By their terms, the canons impose uniform statewide standards. Whenever an assigned case involves a party the judge 'knows,' the judge must be particularly vigilant to ensure the appearance and reality of independence and impartiality. The situation may arise more frequently in a small town than a major metropolitan area, but the judge's ethical duties are the same irrespective of population statistics." (Inquiry Concerning Former Judge David Wasilenko (2005) 49 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 26, 46; Rothman, et al., California Judicial Conduct Handbook (4th ed. 2017) § 7.65.) Moreover, Judge Mason's repeated references to "local attorneys" leaves out attorneys who are not local, and the parties, including self-represented parties.

When Judge Mason took the bench in 2009, canon 3E(2) of the Code of Judicial Ethics stated that judges "shall disclose on the record information that is reasonably relevant to the question of disqualification under Code of Civil Procedure section 170.1, even if the judge believes there is no actual basis for disqualification." This requirement was renumbered as canon 3E(2)(a) effective January 1, 2013. Under Code of Civil Procedure section 170.1, subdivision (a)(6)(A)(iii), judges are disqualified when "[a] person aware of the facts might reasonably entertain a doubt that the judge would be able to be impartial." This is an objective standard. The question is whether the "average person on the street" would harbor doubts as to the judge's impartiality, not whether the judge is actually biased. (United Farm Workers of America v. Superior Court (1985) 170 Cal.App.3d 97, 104; Flier v. Superior Court (1994) 23 Cal.App.4th 165, 170.) Pursuant to this standard, even if Judge Mason was not disqualified from presiding over Mr. Gifford's cases, he was required to disclose all facts about their relationship that were reasonably relevant to disqualification, on the record, in every case in which Mr. Gifford appeared. Judge Mason presented no evidence that he ever did so, and concedes that he did not make a disclosure in every case where he was required to do so, and that he made "mistakes . . . regarding disclosures." Judge Mason violated canons 3E(2) and 3E(2)(a) over an extended period by failing to make the required disclosures on the record.

Judge Mason's conduct was, at a minimum, improper action.

I. INTRODUCTION AND SUMMARY

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge Morris D. Jacobson, a judge of the Alameda County Superior Court. On October 29, 2019, the commission filed its Notice of Formal Proceedings (Notice) against Judge Jacobson.

By Stipulation for Discipline by Consent (Stipulation), Judge Jacobson and his counsel, Edith R. Matthai, Esq., of Robie and Matthai, and the examiner for the commission, Mark A. Lizarraga, Esq., proposed that the commission resolve this matter by imposition of a public admonishment. Pursuant to the Stipulation, Judge Jacobson waives any further proceedings and review in this matter, including formal proceedings (Rules of Com. on Jud. Performance, rule 118 et seq.) and review by the Supreme Court (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 9.60). (The Stipulation is attached to this decision.)

Pursuant to commission rule 127, the Stipulation was approved by the commission on December 16, 2019. Accordingly, the commission issues this public admonishment based on the terms and conditions of the Stipulation and based on the following Stipulated Facts and Legal Conclusions.

II. STIPULATED FACTS AND LEGAL CONCLUSIONS

Judge Jacobson became a judge of the Alameda County Superior Court in 2005. His current term began in January 2015.

Count One

On June 29, 2011, Deputy Public Defender Romany McNamara appeared before Judge Jacobson in Department 11, where he was filling in for another judge that day. Ms. McNamara, who was new to the felony trial department, had a number of matters set on the morning calendar, including People v. Eric Hale, No. 166264. During the hearing, Judge Jacobson spoke sharply to Ms. McNamara when she asked for a moment before proceeding. The following exchange occurred between Judge Jacobson and Ms. McNamara:

> THE COURT: Is this Mr. Hale? Are you Mr. Hale? Good morning, sir. [¶] 166264. [¶] Ms. McNamara is here with Mr. Hale; Mr. McCannon for the People.
> MS. MCNAMARA: Just a moment, please.
> THE COURT: Is formal arraignment waived?
> MS. MCNAMARA: So waived.
> THE COURT: Do you have the Information only, or do you have the preliminary hearing as well?
> MS. MCNAMARA: I have the Information only.
> THE COURT: Is the plea not guilty to all charges?
> MS. MCNAMARA: I need just a moment, please.
> THE COURT: Ms. McNamara. I am proceeding with the arraignment. I'm not giving you a moment. So if you want to put this over for a different day so you can visit with your client out of court, that's fine. If you anticipate you are going to be pleading guilty to a robbery and a burglary at this point, please let me know. I am assuming you are going to be pleading not guilty. [¶] I need to move this along; I have a lot of cases left on the calendar. I'm not giving you time right now.
> THE COURT: Plea is not guilty on all charges.
> MS. MCNAMARA: Plea is not guilty on all charges.

THE COURT: All clauses and priors are denied?

MS. MCNAMARA: Yes.

THE COURT: Okay. Would you guys take a moment to figure out if you want to waive time or if you don't. Either way is okay.

MS. MCNAMARA: Thank you, Judge.

(Other cases were handled)

THE COURT: Ms. McNamara, going back to Mr. Hale, what do you guys prefer to do about time?

MS. MCNAMARA: So we will not waive time, your Honor.

THE COURT: Okay. Time is not waived. August 29 is the 60th day. August 15 is the jury trial date. [¶] And would you like to have a D & S as well?

MS. MCNAMARA: Yes, please. Could I ask for July 7th?

THE COURT: Madam Clerk, is that a good date?

THE CLERK: July 8th is better.

THE COURT: Does it make a difference to you Ms. McNamara?

MS. MCNAMARA: I can't be here July 8th in the morning. Can we do July 11th? Does that work?

THE CLERK: July 11th.

THE COURT: July 11th.

MS. MCNAMARA: Thank you.

(R.T. 2:4-3:26.)

After hearing the Hale matter, Judge Jacobson asked to speak with Ms. McNamara, who came forward and placed her hand on the bench. Judge Jacobson apologized to Ms. McNamara for speaking sharply to her during the arraignment, and hit her hand, and inadvertently used enough force to leave a visible impression.

The conduct described above constituted, at a minimum, prejudicial misconduct and violated canons 2 (judge shall avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety), 2A (judge shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary), 3B(4) (judge shall be patient, dignified, and courteous to those persons with whom the judge deals in an official capacity), and 3B(5) (judge shall not, in the performance of judicial duties, engage in speech, gestures, or other conduct that would reasonably be perceived as bias or prejudice).

Count Two

In 1986 and 1987, Judge Jacobson clerked for a federal judge in Texas who presided over a civil rights action filed by the Justice Department against a Tarrant County judge, who was charged with coercing female prisoners to have sexual relations with him in return for leniency in court. Judge Jacobson was present throughout the trial of the case, which received a great deal of publicity at the time.

In early 2016, while Judge Jacobson was the presiding judge, a female court administrator was talking to Judge Jacobson at the Hayward Courthouse. Judge Jacobson engaged the court administrator in a discussion about Tarrant County, Texas. Judge Jacobson asked the court administrator, who had previously worked in the Tarrant County Court, whether she knew of the case against the Tarrant County judge, and, when she said she did not, told her that prostitutes performed sex acts on the judge in chambers in exchange for a better outcome in their cases. The language the judge used was crude and inappropriate.

The conduct described above constituted, at a minimum, improper action and violated canons 2, 2A, and 3B(4).

Prior discipline

In 2010, Judge Jacobson received an advisory letter for abuse of authority, embroilment, and poor demeanor. The judge ordered an attorney to his courtroom when no matter requiring the attorney's presence was pending, chastised the attorney for a perceived ex parte communication, ordered him to remain there while opposing counsel in one of the attorney's cases was contacted, and then conducted an uncalendared hearing.

In 2012, Judge Jacobson received a public admonishment for abuse of authority, abuse of the contempt power, and poor demeanor. The judge ordered an attorney to "spend every waking moment" working on a case, and, when the attorney said she did not need the court's advice on how to be competent, ordered her to stay in the courtroom, where she remained for an hour and a half, after which he ordered her to return later that afternoon for a contempt hearing. Although the judge did not find the attorney in contempt, ordering her to remain in the courtroom was found to be tantamount to punishing her for contempt without a hearing.

III. DISCIPLINE

The commission has determined to accept the Stipulation and impose this public admonishment, because it fulfills the commission's mandate of protecting the public, and it resolves this matter without the delay and expense of further proceedings. (See Broadman v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1998) 18 Cal.4th 1079, 1111-1112; Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (d).)

Count One of the Stipulation addresses Judge Jacobson's 2011 conduct toward a female attorney, Romany McNamara, who was new to the felony trial department. Judge Jacobson's sharp speech toward Ms. McNamara, combined with his act of hitting her hand at the bench, was a gross breach of demeanor, and would reasonably be perceived as a demonstration of bias.

Judge Jacobson's act of hitting Ms. McNamara's hand, and doing so with enough force, albeit inadvertent, to leave a visible impression, constitutes particularly serious misconduct. No attorney should fear being hit by the judge, whose duty it is to maintain a courtroom free of such conduct by any of the participants. Judges have at their disposal many tools for carrying out their judicial duties; hitting an attorney's hand is unequivocally not among them.

Judge Jacobson's conduct toward Ms. McNamara was, at a minimum, "conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute." (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (d).)

Judge Jacobson engaged in further misconduct in his conversation with a court administrator about a case involving sexual misconduct by a judge in another state. The commission notes that, while judges can, and sometimes must, discuss sensitive case-related facts with court personnel, it is improper to use crude and inappropriate language when doing so. In this instance, Judge Jacobson's conversation with the court administrator did not pertain to a case before him. Judge Jacobson's use of crude and inappropriate language constituted, at a minimum, improper action.

In determining that a public admonishment is the appropriate sanction, the commission took into consideration Judge Jacobson's acknowledgment that he engaged in misconduct in both instances set forth in the Stipulation, and his history of prior discipline, an advisory letter and a public admonishment. Judge Jacobson's 2012 public admonishment for abuse of authority, abuse of the contempt power, and poor demeanor toward an attorney was issued a year after his conduct toward Ms. McNamara, in Count One. His conduct in Count Two, which does not concern misconduct toward attorneys, but rather the judge's use of crude and inappropriate language, took place after both instances of prior discipline.

Commission members Nanci E. Nishimura, Esq.; Hon. Michael B. Harper; Hon. William S. Dato; Mr. Eduardo De La Riva; Ms. Kay Cooperman Jue; Hon. Lisa B. Lench; Dr. Michael A. Moodian; Mr. Richard Simpson; and Mr. Adam N. Torres voted to issue this decision and order imposing a public admonishment pursuant to the Stipulation. Commission members Anthony P. Capozzi, Esq., and Ms. Sarah Kruer Jager voted to reject the Stipulation, because Count Two did not contain the specific language the judge used.

| INQUIRY CONCERNINGJUDGE MORRIS D. JACOBSONNo. 205 | STIPULATION FOR DISCIPLINEBY CONSENT (Rule 127) |

Pursuant to Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance, rule 127, Judge Morris D. Jacobson of the Alameda County Superior Court, represented by counsel Edith R. Matthai, Esq. of Robie & Matthai, and the examiner ("the parties") submit this proposed disposition of Inquiry No. 205. The parties request that the commission resolve this matter by imposition of a public admonishment. The parties believe that the settlement provided by this agreement is in the best interests of the commission and Judge Jacobson because, among other reasons, in light of the stipulated facts and legal conclusions, a public admonishment adequately protects the public and will avoid the delay and expense of further proceedings.

TERMS AND CONDITIONS OF AGREEMENT

1. This agreement resolves the matters alleged in the Inquiry Concerning Judge Morris D. Jacobson, No. 205.

2. The commission shall issue a public admonishment based on the agreed Stipulated Facts and Legal Conclusions set forth therein.

3. If the commission accepts this proposed disposition, the commission's decision and order imposing public admonishment may articulate the reasons for its decision and include explanatory language that the commission deems appropriate.

4. Upon acceptance by the commission, this stipulation, the judge's affidavit of consent, and the commission's decision and order shall be made public.

5. Judge Jacobson waives any further proceedings and review in this matter, including formal proceedings (rules 118, et seq.) and review by the Supreme Court (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 9.60).

6. The commission may reject this proposed disposition and resume formal proceedings. If the commission does so, nothing in this proposed disposition will be deemed to be admitted by Judge Jacobson.

Accordingly, it is hereby stipulated and agreed that the commission shall issue a public admonishment on the above Terms and Conditions of Agreement, and based on the following Stipulated Facts and Legal Conclusions:

| IN THE MATTER CONCERNING JUDGE MATTHEW J. GARY | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT PURSUANT TO STIPULATION (Commission Rule 116.5) |

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge Matthew J. Gary, a judge of the Sacramento County Superior Court. Judge Gary and his counsel, James A. Murphy, Esq., have entered into a stipulation with commission trial counsel Mark A. Lizarraga, Esq., pursuant to commission rule 116.5, to resolve the pending preliminary investigation involving Judge Gary by imposition of a public admonishment. The Stipulation for Discipline by Consent (Stipulation) was approved by the commission on May 6, 2020, pursuant to the following terms and conditions and stipulated facts and legal conclusions.

TERMS AND CONDITIONS OF AGREEMENT

1. This agreement resolves the matters alleged in the commission's preliminary investigation involving Judge Gary and the Notice of Intended Public Admonishment, dated September 13, 2019.

2. The commission shall issue a public admonishment based on the agreed Stipulated Facts and Legal Conclusions, set forth therein.

3. If the commission accepts this proposed disposition, the commission's decision and order imposing public admonishment may articulate the reasons for its decision and include explanatory language that the commission deems appropriate.

4. Judge Gary waives any further proceedings and review in this matter, including further formal proceedings (Rules of Com. on Jud. Performance, rule 118 et seq.), and review by the Supreme Court (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 9.60).

5. Failure to comply with the terms and conditions of this agreement may constitute additional and independent grounds for discipline.

6. Judge Gary agrees that the facts set forth herein are true and correct, and that the stipulated discipline, recited herein, is appropriate, given those facts.

7. The commission may reject this proposed disposition and resume the proceedings. If the commission does so, nothing in this proposed disposition will be deemed to be admitted by Judge Gary.

Accordingly, it is hereby stipulated and agreed that the commission shall issue a public admonishment on the above Terms and Conditions of Agreement, and based on the following Stipulated Facts and Legal Conclusions.

STIPULATED FACTS AND LEGAL CONCLUSIONS

A. FACTS

History and case procedure

Judge Gary has been a judge of the Sacramento County Superior Court since June 2007. His current term began in January 2017. He was a court commissioner from 2002 to 2007. Judge Gary presided over In re Marriage of Battilana (No. 16FL04193) from January 2017 to December 2018.

The Battilana case involved the mother's Request for Order (RFO), filed December 16, 2016, seeking permission to relocate with the parties' minor child to Medford, Oregon, and attorney fees. Judge Gary presided over a series of short cause hearings on the mother's RFO, including on January 30, 2017, June 19, 2017, July 24, 2017, and July 31 – August 1, 2017, and a long cause hearing on January 11, 12, 16, 18, and 19, 2018. On January 19, 2018, Judge Gary issued an oral tentative statement of decision. On March 15, 2018, after the father filed objections to the tentative statement of decision, Judge Gary issued a formal Proposed Statement of Decision. Both parties subsequently lodged objections. On April 16, 2018, the matter was argued before Judge Gary. The judge bifurcated the issues of attorney fees and costs from the relocation/custody issues, re-opened evidence on attorney fees and costs, ordered both parties to file updated income and expense declarations (I&Es) and detailed attorney fee statements, and continued the hearing to June 1, 2018. On April 17, 2018, Judge Gary issued a Statement of Decision and Order After Hearing on the bifurcated relocation/custody issues.

On May 29, 2018, the father filed for bankruptcy. On June 1, 2018, because of the bankruptcy stay, Judge Gary continued the hearing on attorney fees and costs. On June 5, 2018, the mother filed an ex parte RFO concerning a summer visitation issue and an issue concerning the child's asthma medication. Judge Gary issued a temporary order on June 5, 2018, and the matter came back on for hearing on July 20, 2018. The bifurcated issues of attorney fees and costs, and the June 5, 2018 RFO, eventually came back on for hearing on December 7, 2018.

July 31, 2017 Hearing

On July 31, 2017, the Battilana matter was before Judge Gary for an ex parte hearing concerning the mother's request to move out of state pending a long cause hearing in December. During the proceeding, in response to the mother's claim that the father would not compromise, Judge Gary stated, "It's a battle. Your name is appropriate. Pretty close." (R.T. 17:7-8.)

Judge Gary accused the parents of damaging their child, as exemplified by the following:

> And, more important, how bad do you want to ruin your child? (R.T. 15:21-22.)
> She. She's going to get married and then she's going to get divorced. And your grandkid is going to go through > the same things she's going through because this is all she knows. (R.T. 16:7-10.)

Judge Gary also stated the following:

> [I]n my opinion, the case is out of control, the fees are being churned. (R.T. 6:23-24.)
> Once again, we don't even have an initial starting of your case and we're nearing $100,000 in attorney's fees, with two people who say they don't have enough money to live on. [¶] I'm not buying it. It may be that you don't have any money; but I'm not buying that there is no solution. This is a self-created, self-inflicted wound that I'm ready to give up on. You can bleed out. It's not my responsibility anymore. (R.T. 7:1-9.)
> What I would do in the meantime is, I would try to find a suitable place, or let her go without prejudice. She has a right to go – or a suitable place to live; or you can go and leave the child. Or because you can't do anything with your employment because of all of this, move to Oregon and get a job up there part-time. [¶] If you guys were really interested in your child, the solutions are many. And the one solution you keep coming back to, that is not the solution, is me. I'm the perpetuation of the problem. [¶] Grow up, figure it out, take matters into your own hands, come up with a reasonable solution, or you get what you get. (R.T. 16:15-17:2.)
> I'm picking sides right now. I know where the problems lie; but I'll wait to see how it all plays out. (R.T. 17:14-15.)

Judge Gary continued the ex parte hearing to the next day, August 1, 2017.

August 1, 2017 Hearing

During the hearing, Judge Gary made the following comments:

> Mr. Sagaria [the mother's attorney], you're about to come out of your underwear there. What do you need? (R.T. 21:15-16.)
> We can look at prior transcripts where I've gone off on you guys about how crazy this is, how much fees have been churned, how far off track we are on all of this; how we've made such a huge, colossal, nuclear meltdown over all of this. [¶] You've got a two-year marriage, a two-year-old child, nobody has any property, nobody has any income; and we're exceeding $100,000 in attorney's fees, and $30,000 for -- or strike that -- $11,000 for a 3111 eval, and we're off to trial, and we haven't even done our disclosures, and we're nowhere even near a divorce on a two-year-old marriage, with a two-year-old child. Way to go. Way to go. I'm done. [¶] Go off to trial, burn it all up. Good luck. [¶] And good luck to [the child], because it ain't going to turn out well for her. [¶] This is unbelievable. (R.T. 38:25-39:16.)

January 2018 Trial

Judge Gary conducted the hearing concerning the mother's December 16, 2016 RFO on January 11, 12, 16, 18, and 19, 2018. Attorneys Scott Sagaria and Lauren Pruett appeared on behalf of the mother, and attorney Fredrick Cohen appeared on behalf of the father.

During the testimony of Mary Jo Battilana,[1] the paternal grandmother, the following exchange occurred:

> THE WITNESS: If your child is sick more than a couple of days, I, as a mother, would always either make a phone call, be advised, or get your child into the doctor if she's running a fever.

[1] Due to the similarity of names, Mary Jo Battilana is herein referred to as the "grandmother."

THE COURT: Sure. How do you think Jillian [the mother] got the prescription?

THE WITNESS: I have no idea, sir.

THE COURT: Do you know whether Jillian is a pharmacist?

(R.T. 620:23-622:3.)

The grandmother testified that she had heard disagreements between the mother and the father but she stayed out of them. Subsequently, during re-direct examination of the mother by Pruett, the following exchange occurred:

Q: The next message, can you read that out loud, his next message?

MR. COHEN: What page?

MS. PRUETT: Same page, Bates Stamp 67.

THE WITNESS: 67, after I said, "Again, please don't be mean," his next response is, "Your daughter is in the house by herself."

Q: Do you recall the incident surrounding that?

A. This is directly after he assaulted me.

Q: So why was [the child] in the house by herself?

A: Because he left, and I was at the next door neighbors, in front of her house.

Q: Had you -- you were -- you had already left for the neighbor's house while he's still there?

A: Yes, I left from the front door, went immediately next door while on the phone with 911.

THE COURT: Let me ask you this, you heard [the grandmother] testify earlier?

THE WITNESS: Yes.

THE COURT: She testified that she had heard disagreements between you and Will. She wanted to stay out of them.

THE WITNESS: Yes, I heard that.

THE COURT: It was the essence of her testimony, and that you had come to her to talk to her about Will. Did your wanting to go talk to her about Will have anything to do with this type of marital interaction?

THE WITNESS: Yes, she was there.

THE COURT: Was she – that was my next question. Was she ever in the same room with you and Will when Will talked and behaved like this toward you?

THE WITNESS: Yes. Yes. She was there the night that he threw the magazine at me while I was holding [the child].

THE COURT: How many times can you recall, let's say, within the last six months of your marriage, January of '16 through June of '16, would you guess or would you recall that [the grandmother] was present when you and Will had an oral confrontation in the same room with [the grandmother] or in a room where it's obvious that someone else can hear it where you were being belittled and treated like this?

THE WITNESS: Yes.

THE COURT: How many times?

THE WITNESS: At least once a week. At least once a week for -- when she got in her incident, she started to taper off to do therapy, so I would say at least 20 times she was there.

THE COURT: Today she suffered a bout of amnesia, I would guess?

THE WITNESS: Yes.

(R.T. 717:13 -719:6.)

Judge Gary also made comments about religion and death, and referenced a passage in the Bible. During the testimony of Terry Nichols, a retired licensed clinical social worker, Nichols testified that she heard the child say her father was going to die, and that a child that age does not understand death, when the following exchange occurred:

THE COURT: Who do you think planted -- how do you think the child got it in her head?

THE WITNESS: I don't know. I don't know how else to answer that.

THE COURT: Okay.

THE WITNESS: I can say developmentally that a child that age doesn't understand death. It's not permanent in their mind, and they see things on TV, and they see things on movies.

THE COURT: Well, sure. Adults don't understand death. One of the purposes of religion and culture is because people don't understand death.

WITNESS: But we do understand the permanence. And a two or three year old doesn't understand the permanence of death.

THE COURT: Well, sure, excepting that in religion, you take Western culture religion, almost all religions -- what is the purpose of the religion?

WITNESS: I'm just saying developmentally. I have nothing to say about the religious part, just developmentally where a child is at that age.

THE COURT: Okay. Without bickering with me, isn't it one of the purposes of religion for adults [sic] everlasting life so that you don't have to face death? Don't we all have perceptions of death?

MR. COHEN: Objection; relevance, Your Honor; argumentative, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Overruled. Overruled. It's not intended to be argumentative at all. The point is, and the two parents should understand this, and since one of the parents is pointing the finger at the other parent, and I'm looking for the evidence, Mr. Cohen, again, mountains made of molehills. [¶] Is it unhealthy for a child to face a death issue -- and this is not a question for the witness. The record will reflect I'm talking to the parties. And the answer to that question is obviously no, it's not unhealthy. In fact, it's healthy for a person, at least in this trier of fact's opinion since I'm having to rule on the best interest of your child. Death is part of life. In fact, it's one of the certainties of life. [¶] And the reason I raised religion is not to get into a deep philosophical religious discussion, but to address this witness's concern with these two parents that a child not understanding the permanence of death, that is true, but parents or adults also struggle with the permanence of death. And one of the ways they cope with the permanence of death is through religion, through the promise of when you die, somehow you will live again. [¶] The Christian religion -- I know dad goes to church, or at least I've heard testimony. The Christian religion, you will have everlasting life, John 3:16. If you go through that, what is the purpose for that for adults? This is all commentary on the side. It's so that you don't have to face the permanence of death. [¶] Well, the truth of the matter is we don't know. Some of us have strong opinions one way or the other on that. Wars have been fought over that, are continually fought over > religion. My concern is not as much the statement having been made unless there is solid proof that one of you is running around saying to the child your daddy's going to die soon. Your mommy is going to die soon. If that's happening, that is way, way out of bounds. [¶] But you should both understand that children pick up on things and say things that sometimes just totally come out of the blue. It could come from a Disney movie. It could come from something from a book. It could come from anywhere. My bigger concern is not the child's affect, whether she said it and the fact that she said it, that was easily addressed. [¶] Rather than lawyering up and litigating the issue – let me say that again. Rather than lawyering up and litigating the issue, you might want to sit down with your daughter, put her on your lap and say, sweetheart, I'm not going to die any time soon. I love you. I'm going to be around, but death is part of life. We have pets that die. We have flowers that die. [¶] Mr. Cohen, are you listening? What I want the parties to do i[s] in these situations, rather than blow this up and run to court and point fingers, the answer to this question, the answer to this issue was [to communicate].

Throughout the trial, Judge Gary made comments that the case was "contrived."[2] Judge Gary stated that the parties were making "mountains out of a molehills," and that it was a "nothing case" that should have settled.[3] Judge Gary also commented about the parties "lawyer[ing] up," and accused the parties of churning litigation and churning fees.[4] In addition, in responding to Cohen's argument that Family Code section 271 attorney fees were not before the court, Judge Gary made the following remarks:

> No, I intended all [Family Code section] 271s. Because of the history of the case, I wasn't limiting it just to your motion. Because of what was going on in the case as a whole, because I was watching, and as I told you guys earlier, you went on my radar on January 30th of 2017. That is unusual. I see so many cases, but I saw this case come up. On January 30th you went on my radar. By the time we got to July, I thought about you after work, unusual. [¶] I was always watching for your case. I even kept your file in my chambers for a while, for a long while. When pleadings would come in, I would keep the pleadings. You were always on my radar. . . . And I had told you guys the path you're going down, you shouldn't be going down ad nauseam. And that in the end what I fully intended was that someone is going to win and someone is going to lose, and it will be big time. [¶] Judgment day is today. One of you will win. One of you will lose, and judgment day will be big time. All attorney's fees, including 271 for both sides, including 2030 for both sides, all of it will be decided before you leave this place today. All of it. This is the day. I'm not putting anything over for any further day. It's all -- it's all on the table.

On January 19, 2018, after taking evidence and hearing closing arguments, Judge Gary gave an oral tentative statement of decision and issued a tentative order after hearing on all issues. On January 29, 2018, the father filed objections to the statement of decision and requested a formal written statement of decision. On March 15, 2018, Judge Gary filed his Proposed Statement of Decision and Proposed Order. After both parties lodged objections, the matter was heard by Judge Gary on April 16, 2018. During the hearing, Judge Gary bifurcated the issues of attorney fees and costs, re-opened evidence, ordered the parties to file and serve updated I&Es with detailed attorney fee statements, and continued the hearing on the bifurcated issues to June 1, 2018. On April 17, 2018, Judge Gary issued an Order After Hearing on the relocation/custody/visitation issues. Judge Gary (1) granted the mother's request to relocate, (2) ordered sole legal and sole physical custody of the child to the mother, (3) ordered visitation to the father, and (4) made other miscellaneous orders concerning child custody.

June 1, 2018 Hearing

On this date, the case was set before Judge Gary for a hearing on the bifurcated issues of attorney fees and costs. The mother appeared at the hearing with attorney Sagaria, and Kayleigh Birks, an associate of Cohen's, appeared on behalf of the father. During the hearing, Judge Gary noted that the proceeding was stayed because of a bankruptcy petition filed by the father on or about May 29, 2018. Judge Gary also noted that the mother had filed her up-dated I&Es and attorney fee statements as ordered, but that the father had not.

Judge Gary made comments concerning the timing of the father's bankruptcy proceeding, and disparaged Cohen, as set forth below:

> MS. BIRKS: Excuse me, Your Honor.
> THE COURT: Yes.
> MS. BIRKS: We do have a DVRO hearing or trial, excuse me, on the 24th of August.
>
> THE COURT: A DVRO?
> MS. BIRKS: Yeah, a DV hearing out of county.
> MR. SAGARIA: Oh, out of county.

MS. BIRKS: On the 24th of August.

THE COURT: Well, here's my problem with it. I'll probably honor it, but I have honored -- and Ms. Birks, this is nothing personal to you.

MS. BIRKS: I know.

THE COURT: I really enjoy you. Every time you've come in, you're very -- you're just very professional, and I really enjoy you --

MS. BIRKS: Thank you.

THE COURT: -- but I do want this to be noted. Every turn I have offered Mr. Cohen the professional courtesy he's asked for, and at virtually every turn he has burned me every time he can. It's not appreciated. It's not professional. It's undignified. It detracts from the quality of the bar. I will offer him the courtesy again, but at some point I would appreciate professional courtesy in response, not just to me, but also to Ms. Battilana and Ms. Battilana's attorney. [¶] This -- dropping this, in my mind it is no accident. It is no coincidence that the filing of the bankruptcy occurred on the day before or the day before the day before the hearing after the deadline for the May 21st filing of the document. I had actually asked both parties to file as soon as they could. I gave May 21st as the deadline. If they could offer me the courtesy, to get them filed earlier, but no later than. [¶] Again, Ms. Battilana complied, and as you can see, once again, for the record, I meticulously went through every single entry on her billing statements looking for, well, should this have been done, is this appropriate, is that not appropriate, is this too much billing, is it not too much billing. I went through everything, how much was written off, how many times were there no charges for services. I noted everything. And then in the end to get nothing. [¶] And then to be hit with an e-mail that didn't even come directly to the department even though your > office -- and again, it's not you. Your office has called my clerk, the department, numerous times when it needed something. To send it to the place where it is least likely to be gotten on the day before the day before the hearing so that I would get it the day before the hearing, so that all of the work that I put in, all of the work Mr. Sagaria put in, all of the work Ms. Battilana put in, to continue this trial would be ambushed and for not [sic]. Those types of tactics do not go unnoticed by the Court.

On June 5, 2018, Judge Gary presided over the mother's ex parte RFO concerning summer visitation and an asthma inhaler for the minor child that the father was allegedly refusing to administer. Judge Gary engaged in the following colloquy with father:

> THE COURT: Because you are in such conflict, I have given one party already sole legal, sole physical custody, and that legal decision-making has been challenged when it shouldn't be. There is no legal authority to stand on he can question her call on the medical. He has no right to do that. That was taken away from him with the sole legal custody order to mom. And one of the reasons mom got sole legal custody is not just the domestic violence, not just the presumption, but because after all of the fighting, I knew at the end of the day these two would not be able to agree on anything. And it turns out that's the way it's turned out. It's not fun or happy for me to do something like this. For the State to step in and [d]o something like this, but we've left it that way, or you've left it that way. [¶] The proposed order is Respondent to administer the medications prescribed to the minor child, and I'm going to strike out and add as mother directs.

> MS. PRUETT: Thank you, Your Honor.
> THE COURT: Unfortunately for Mr. Battilana, he is not in a position to veto or question mom at this point.
> RESPONDENT: So if she tells me not to follow the doctors [sic] orders, then I'm supposed to follow her orders instead of the doctors [sic]?
> THE COURT: What part of that is hard to understand?
> RESPONDENT: I'm just --
> THE COURT: What you're doing is bickering. What that was, that was a challenge to my order now masquerading as some sort of valid question. No, it wasn't. It was just a challenge to the order. It was bickering. And this is the same thing I've watched you do to her in your texts. I've watched you belittle her. I am pretty convinced that what she said happened, the "yeah, right" is exactly what happened because I saw them in all of those text messages at trial, all of them.

July 20, 2018 Hearing

On July 20, 2018, the parties appeared before Judge Gary for a return on mother's June 5, 2018, ex parte RFO. The father was represented at the hearing by Daniel Lynch, an attorney with Gary, Till, Burlingham & Lynch. Lynch informed Judge Gary that a statement of disqualification (challenge for cause, pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure sections 170.1 and 170.3) had been served on both the clerk and opposing counsel. The statement of disqualification was based on the allegation that Judge Gary's clerk had made remarks reflecting lack of impartiality, and the allegation that the judge previously worked for the firm Gary, Till, Burlingham & Lynch, where his father was a founding member, and that Judge Gary had routinely recused himself when an attorney from that firm appeared on a case assigned to him.

Judge Gary then discussed the history of the case, informed Lynch of the issues at trial that the father's prior attorney had raised, and stated:

> And here we are in the middle of a continuing trial. Every step along the way has been tortuous. I can't remember a case that has been like this in 30 years in family law, 16 of which has been on the bench. And now another 170.3 from my own firm -- my old firm. My old firm, not my own firm. My old firm. [¶] It is not surprising at all to me after everything that has happened in this case that Gary Till & Burlingham came into the case. No shot at all. None. And I sort of knew. I knew it would put that firm in a position of: Do we attack the judge or not? Do we take the case and attack the judge or not? And I didn't know which way it was gonna go, but it took the case, and it's attacking the judge. [¶] I'm not going to take it as a personal attack. I'm going to take it as a legal attack, but it is a tactic. It is a tactic.

Judge Gary then took a recess to "decide how to handle the 170.3," and directed the parties to look over the mediation report. Prior to doing so, Judge Gary accepted a responsive declaration from Lynch. Following the recess, Judge Gary asked whether the parties had come to an agreement, and Lynch explained that a partial agreement had been reached, but that the father preferred to have the matter continued. Pruett objected, and she and Judge Gary discussed the issues that were preventing resolution, including Lynch's preference for the judge not to make any orders that day, when the following exchange occurred:

> MR. LYNCH: That is correct. I don't think that can happen, Your Honor. I don't want to waive my challenge, so I object to any orders being made today.

> THE COURT: I understand that. I'm not asking you to. I'm just trying to figure out what the dispute is. Not that I'm going to make an order. [¶] … [¶] Here's my assessment. There is no Holy Grail in those reports. [¶] What I'm asking parties to do is just consider what the actual issues are. What I begged them to do for a year and a half is to get out of litigation mode. You're ruining your daughter. It does not surprise me one bit that she's not adjusted on these -- she's a four-year-old little girl. [¶] She's been suffering this for a year and a half to two years now. I just don't know why you can't come to some agreement that the issues are nominal. There was an emergency temporary order put in place that expires today unless the court makes an order, and the parties cannot seem to reach an agreement even on an inhaler. And counsel wants to bicker about it.
> MR. LYNCH: Your Honor --
> THE COURT: The parties want to bicker about it. It is so obvious. It is so obvious what the solution is aside from litigation. It is so entirely obvious.

(R.T. 20:1-21:10.)

The hearing on the mother's June 5, 2018 RFO was ultimately continued to December 7, 2018. The motion to disqualify Judge Gary was later denied by an out of county judge.

December 7, 2018 Hearing

On December 7, 2018, counsel and the parties in Battilana appeared before Judge Gary for the continued hearing on the mother's June 5, 2018 RFO. During the hearing, the parties reached a full agreement, which was read into the record. Judge Gary subsequently addressed allegations made by the father that he was wrongfully keeping the case and preventing the father from having access to the file. In responding to a question from the father's attorney about the availability of the case file, Judge Gary stated:

> I hate it that I have been brought into this personally. I hate it. That is not the role of a judge, and frankly, it's not the role of parties to involve a judge like has happened here. The ball that we should be keeping our eye on is [the child]. I don't like being the object of it all.

B. DISCIPLINE

1. Embroilment, bias, and prejudgment. "Embroilment is the process by which the judge surrenders the role of impartial factfinder/decision-maker, and joins the fray." (Rothman, et al., Cal. Judicial Conduct Handbook (4th ed. 2017) § 2.1, p. 58.) Prejudgment can occur when a judge "drift[s] from professional distance and objectivity." (Id. at § 2.19, p. 86.) Judges are required to respect and comply with the law and to act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary. (Canon 2A.) Judges are also required to perform judicial duties without bias or prejudice. (Canon 3B(5).)

Judge Gary remarked (prior to the January 2018 long cause hearing) that he was "picking sides," "knew where the problems lie," and that "the parties are going to find themselves with nothing in the end." These remarks reflected, at a minimum, the appearance of prejudgment and embroilment in violation of canons 2A and 3B(5).

During the December 7, 2018 hearing, Judge Gary stated, "I hate it that I have been brought into this personally. I hate it. That is not the role of a judge, and frankly, it's not the role of parties to involve a judge like has happened here." (R.T. 42:11-14.) During the January 2018 hearing, Judge Gary stated that the Battilana case went on his "radar" January 30, 2017, and by July 2017, he was thinking about the parties after work. He stated that he was always watching for the case, kept the file in his chambers for a long while, and kept the pleadings when they came in. He stated, "You were always on my radar. . . And that in the end what I fully intended was that someone is going to win and someone is going to lose, and it will be big time. [¶] Judgment day is today. One of you will win. One of you will lose, and judgment day will be big time." (R.T. 901:11-20.) During the August 1, 2017 hearing, the judge stated, "Way to go. Way to go. I'm done. [¶] Go off to trial, burn it all up. Good luck. [¶] And good luck to [the child], cause it ain't going to turn out well for her. [¶] This is unbelievable." (R.T. 38:25-39:16.) These comments exhibited embroilment and the appearance of bias in violation of canons 2A and 3B(5).

2. Comments accusing the parents of damaging the child. Throughout multiple proceedings, Judge Gary accused the parents of damaging their child ("[H]ow bad do you want to ruin your child," "And good luck to [the child], because it ain't going to turn out well for her," and "[S]he's going to get divorced. And your grandkid is going to go through the same things she's going through because this is all she knows."). Judge Gary's remarks to and about the parents were undignified and discourteous (in violation of canon 3B(4)), could also be reasonably perceived as reflecting bias or prejudice (in violation of canon 3B(5)), and failed to promote public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary (in violation of canon 2A).

3. Questioning witnesses. While judges may examine witnesses to elicit or clarify testimony, they must not become an advocate, comment on the evidence, or cast aspersions about, or ridicule, a witness. (People v. Perkins (2003) 109 Cal.App.4th 1562.)

Judge Gary made discourteous remarks to and about the grandmother (the father's mother) during the long cause hearing in January 2018. While examining the grandmother, Judge Gary sarcastically asked her if she knew whether the child's mother was a pharmacist. In addition, while questioning the mother, Judge Gary made a gratuitous remark about the grandmother "suffer[ing] a bout of amnesia." Judge Gary's conduct was undignified and discourteous (in violation of canon 3B(4)), and could also be reasonably perceived as reflecting bias or prejudice (in violation of canon 3B(5)).

4. Comments concerning religion and death. Judge Gary initiated a discussion with Nichols over the purpose of religion, referenced the Bible (John 3:16), and discussed the promise of everlasting life. Judge Gary's comments at the Battilana trial improperly injected religion into court proceedings, and created an appearance of lack of impartiality contrary to canon 2A (requiring judges to conduct themselves at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary) and canon 3B(5) (requiring judges to perform judicial duties without bias or prejudice and to refrain from engaging in speech, gestures or other conduct that would reasonably be perceived as bias or prejudice, including but not limited to bias based upon religion). As the commission has previously stated, "The bench is not a pulpit nor soapbox for self-expression. A litigant is entitled to assume that a judge's attention will be focused entirely upon the relevant facts of his or her case, and that his or her cause will be judged dispassionately – without consideration of anyone's religion. . . ." (Censure of Judge Jose A. Velasquez (1997) pp. 9-10.)

5. Bankruptcy comments and comments disparaging the father's attorney. At the first hearing after the father filed a bankruptcy petition, Judge Gary stated that Cohen "burned [him] every time he [could]." The judge said Cohen's conduct was "not professional" and "undignified," and "detracts from the quality of the bar." The commission found these remarks undignified and discourteous, and reasonably likely to interfere with the attorney-client relationship, in violation of canons 2A and 3B(4).

6. Remaining remarks and conduct. The following comments and conduct of Judge Gary were discourteous and undignified: mocking the father's name ("it's a battle"), accusing the parties of engaging in excessive litigation and of "churning fees," remarking that an attorney was about to "come out of [his] underwear," commenting about the parties "lawyering up," telling the parties they could “bleed out” and to “grow up,” repeatedly referring to the case as “contrived,” stating that it was a “nothing case,” and responding to the father’s question about whether he should follow the mother’s orders rather than the doctor’s, by stating, “What part of that is hard to understand?” and “What you’re doing is bickering. What that was, that was a challenge to my order now masquerading as some sort of valid question. No, it wasn’t. It was just a challenge to the order. It was bickering.” The judge’s remarks and conduct, as described, violated canons 2A and 3B(4).

Judge Gary’s conduct, as set forth above in paragraphs Nos. 1 – 6, constituted, at a minimum, improper action.

Judge Gary’s misconduct was significantly aggravated by the judge’s prior discipline. Judge Gary received an advisory letter in 2014 for misconduct in two family law matters. The commission stated, “The canons insist on appropriate demeanor even if a litigant has engaged in conduct a judge considers repugnant and detrimental to the litigant’s family and the court system.”

In the first matter, a mother was contemptuous toward Judge Gary. When she asked to be arrested, the judge responded, “If your desire here today is so that you can be taken down and play the martyr, I won’t give you that privilege.” Judge Gary continued with the hearing and later warned the mother of the possibility of direct contempt if she continued to interrupt. After making a custody ruling, Judge Gary stated that he was finding the mother in direct contempt and sentenced her to five days in jail “commencing forthwith.” The commission found that Judge Gary failed to provide the mother an adequate opportunity to respond and offer an excuse or an apology before adjudicating the contempt and sentencing her to jail. The judge’s conduct violated canons 2 and 2A.

In the second matter, Judge Gary treated a mother in a rude manner and appeared to become embroiled in the proceedings. He invited the father to file a motion seeking sole custody of the child, by saying, “So I’m willing to give him sole legal, sole physical custody. I am willing to do that. If he only files the motion, that will be heard. . . . And if Mr. [A.] were to file a motion for sole legal and sole physical custody, given all that has happened, the Court would entertain it like it would entertain any other motion." Judge Gary also remarked that the mother had "played" the males involved in the cases, and had played games with many people. The commission found that the judge's treatment of the mother created the appearance of embroilment and prejudgment, particularly in light of his repeated invitations to the father to file a motion seeking sole custody. The judge's conduct violated canons 2A, 3B(4), and 3B(5).

DISCIPLINE IMPOSED BY COMMISSION

Judge Gary's multiple instances of misconduct while presiding over the Battilana family law matter failed to comport with high judicial standards and undermined public respect for the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary. Judge Gary's loss of objectivity and neutrality, his lack of courtesy and dignity when addressing those appearing before him, and his improper comments about religion violated the canons of judicial ethics.

"The canons' insistence on appropriate judicial demeanor rests on the idea that such demeanor is one of those things that is central to the appearance and reality of fairness and impartiality in judicial proceedings." (Rothman et al., Cal. Judicial Conduct Handbook (4th ed. 2019) § 2:46, p. 116.) "Once a judge becomes embroiled in a matter, fairness, impartiality, and the integrity of decisions leave the courtroom." (Id. at § 1:35, p. 27.)

Family law matters can be particularly fraught with emotion. These situations are when a calm and steady hand, a respectful demeanor, and the appearance of neutrality are especially needed. A judge may convey to family law litigants the judge's concerns about the detrimental effects that high-conflict disputes may have on children, but may not do so by telling parents, in harsh terms, that the judge knows how their children will turn out. Judges may also express their concerns about counsel's conduct, but may not do so in a disparaging manner, or in a manner that is likely to interfere with the attorney-client relationship. Judges may also question witnesses, but must comply with the canons' mandates of patience, dignity, and courtesy when doing so.

The commission determined to accept the Stipulation and impose a public admonishment because Judge Gary has accepted responsibility for his multiple acts of misconduct and has acknowledged that his prior discipline in two family law matters is a significantly aggravating factor.

Commission members Hon. Michael B. Harper; Dr. Michael A. Moodian; Hon. William S. Dato; Mr. Eduardo De La Riva; Ms. Kay Cooperman Jue; Hon. Lisa B. Lench; Nanci E. Nishimura, Esq.; Victor E. Salazar, Esq.; and Mr. Richard Simpson voted to accept the Stipulation and to issue this public admonishment of Judge Gary. Commission members Ms. Sarah Kruer Jager and Mr. Adam N. Torres did not participate.

| IN THE MATTER CONCERNINGJUDGE ROBERT L. TAMIETTI | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT PURSUANT TO STIPULATION(Commission Rule 116.5) |

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge Robert L. Tamietti of the Nevada County Superior Court. On August 24, 2020, Judge Tamietti and his counsel, David S. McMonigle, Esq., entered into a stipulation with Director-Chief Counsel Gregory Dresser, pursuant to commission rule 116.5, to resolve the pending preliminary investigation involving Judge Tamietti by the imposition of a public admonishment and the judge's agreement to retire and not to serve in a judicial capacity in the future. Judge Tamietti has tendered his retirement from judicial office, effective October 31, 2020. The Stipulation for Discipline by Consent was approved by the commission on October 7, 2020, pursuant to the following terms and conditions and stipulated facts and legal conclusions. A copy of the stipulation is attached.

TERMS AND CONDITIONS OF AGREEMENT

1. This agreement resolves the matters alleged in the commission's pending preliminary investigation involving Judge Tamietti.

2. The commission shall issue a public admonishment based on the agreed Stipulated Facts and Legal Conclusions set forth herein.

3. If the commission accepts this proposed disposition, the commission's decision and order imposing a public admonishment may articulate the reasons for its decision and include explanatory language that the commission deems appropriate.

4. Upon acceptance by the commission, this stipulation and the commission's decision and order shall be made public.

5. Judge Tamietti waives any further proceedings and review in this matter, including formal proceedings (Rules of Com. on Jud. Performance, rule 118, et seq.) and review by the Supreme Court (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 9.60).

6. On July 27, 2020, Judge Tamietti tendered his retirement effective October 31, 2020 through written correspondence to Governor Gavin Newsom. A copy of that letter is attached hereto as an exhibit and incorporated by this reference. Judge Tamietti shall use accrued vacation or other leave time, and shall be absent from the bench and not preside over any judicial proceedings after September 11, 2020. Judge Tamietti represents and warrants that he has sufficient vacation/leave time to be absent from the bench between September 12 and October 31, 2020, inclusive, and that his presiding judge will allow him to be absent during that period.

7. Failure to comply with the terms and conditions of this agreement may constitute additional and independent grounds for discipline.

8. Judge Tamietti has agreed not to seek or hold judicial office, or accept a position or assignment as a judicial officer, subordinate judicial officer, or judge pro tem with any court in the State of California, or accept a reference of work from any California state court, at any time after October 31, 2020.

9. If Judge Tamietti attempts to serve in a judicial capacity in violation of the foregoing paragraph, the commission may withdraw the public admonishment and resume the preliminary investigation as to all of the matters in the preliminary investigation letters.

10. Judge Tamietti agrees that the facts recited herein are true and correct, and that the discipline to which the parties stipulate herein is acceptable in light of those facts.

11. The commission may reject this proposed disposition and resume its preliminary investigation. If the commission does so, nothing in this proposed disposition will be deemed to be admitted or conceded by the parties.

Accordingly, it is hereby stipulated and agreed that the commission shall issue a public admonishment on the above Terms and Conditions of Agreement, and based on the following Stipulated Facts and Legal Conclusions.

STIPULATED FACTS AND LEGAL CONCLUSIONS

Judge Robert L. Tamietti became a judge of the Nevada County Superior Court in 2003. His current term began in January 2019.

I. People v. Anthony Coronado-Smith, No. TF19-000233

A. Pre-charge conduct

On June 19, 2019, Judge Tamietti signed a warrant for the arrest of Anthony Coronado-Smith on a violation of Penal Code section 647.6 (annoying or molesting a child), which is a misdemeanor. The judge set bail at $7,500, but did not impose any bail conditions. Mr. Coronado-Smith was arrested on the warrant later that day. After interviewing Mr. Coronado-Smith, a Truckee Police Department officer executed a request to increase bail to $150,000. Judge Tamietti telephonically authorized the request, but did not impose any bail conditions based on his expectation that Mr. Coronado-Smith would not post bail and would appear for arraignment within 48 hours of his arrest. On June 20, 2019, Mr. Coronado-Smith posted bond and was released, and was given an appearance date of September 30, 2019. No charges were filed.

On June 21, 2019, Judge Tamietti sent Deputy District Attorney (DDA) Anna Tyner an email that stated, “Who is the DA on this child molest case? He bailed (to 9/30/19) and we need to get him in more quickly for bail conditions.” The subject line of the email stated, “Tony Coronado-Smith.”

On June 24, 2019, at 9:50 a.m., DDA Edward Grubaugh sent Judge Tamietti an email, stating, “It will be my case, Your Honor.” At 9:53 a.m., Judge Tamietti responded to DDA Grubaugh, stating, “Thank you. [¶] He posted bail to September. I want to see him before then to impose bail conditions. [¶] Judge T." At 2:34 p.m., DDA Grubaugh sent the following response: "I will do my best to bring him into court as soon as we make a filing decision, Your Honor. As of now, unfortunately, I have no reports to review."

On September 4, 2019, Judge Tamietti sent DDA Grubaugh an email, with a subject line of "Coranado-Smith [sic]," stating, "We still have not seen a complaint on this case. What is up?" On September 6, 2019, at 11:37 a.m., DDA Grubaugh responded, "Further investigation and questions were taking place in the background. I am meeting with Truckee PD next week."

On Friday, September 6, 2019, at 12:25 p.m., Judge Tamietti emailed DDA Grubaugh, District Attorney (DA) Clifford Newell, Assistant District Attorney (ADA) Christopher Walsh, and Presiding Judge Linda Sloven, stating:

> He bonded out on June 20 and has been free without any conditions since then despite facing child molestation charges and having an extensive occupational and avocational history of dealing with minors. This level of "service" is far below what the citizens of this community expect and deserve.

At 3:07 p.m., DA Newell responded as follows, while adding Truckee Police Department Chief of Police Robert Leftwich as a recipient:

> Good afternoon Judge Tamietti: [¶] Please do not try to influence my Office's filing decisions. You have no idea what is going on in the case nor should you. A rush to filing could very well jeopardize a case and result in serious injustice. You can be assured the "level of service" to the citizens of Truckee is extensive and DDA Grubaugh is appropriately handling the matter. [¶] Regards, Cliff Newell

At 4:33 p.m., Judge Tamietti responded, as follows:

> Baloney. When the inaction and/or inattention of your office or any other agency puts this community at risk I have a duty to speak up. If that offends you in this circumstance, so be it.

While Judge Tamietti was not aware that Mr. Coronado-Smith had retained counsel on or before July 10, 2019, until after the above referenced e-mails, he did not include Mr. Coronado-Smith on the communications.

Judge Tamietti's conduct conveyed the appearance of bias against the Nevada County District Attorney's Office. The judge intruded into the charging authority of the executive branch of government, and engaged in conduct that was inconsistent with the proper role of a judge as a neutral arbiter. The judge violated his duties to avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety (canon 2); to act in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary (canon 2A); to be patient, dignified, and courteous while acting in a judicial capacity (canon 3B(4)); to refrain from speech or conduct that would reasonably be perceived as bias or prejudice (canon 3B(5)); and to not initiate, permit, or consider ex parte communications (canon 3B(7)).

B. Improper Response to Filing of Peremptory Challenge

1. On September 19, 2019, DDA Grubaugh filed a felony complaint in People v. Anthony Coronado-Smith, No. TF19-000233, and an "Invitation to the Honorable Judge Robert L. Tamietti to Recuse Himself." The "Invitation" attached the emails that are quoted above, and requested that the judge recuse himself to protect the rights of the defendant and ensure public confidence in the judiciary. Attorney Grubaugh stated in the "Invitation" that "[t]he People do not believe Judge Tamietti holds actual bias in this case." On the same day, Judge Tamietti filed a "Response Regarding People's Invitation to Recuse." The response stated that the "Invitation" did not set forth grounds that would require the judge to disqualify himself.

On September 24, 2019, DDA Grubaugh timely filed a peremptory challenge against Judge Tamietti pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure section 170.6. The peremptory challenge, which DDA Grubaugh signed under oath, stated that Judge Tamietti was prejudiced against the People of the State of California. Instead of allowing the case to be reassigned as required by Code of Civil Procedure section 170.6, subdivision (a)(4), Judge Tamietti questioned DDA Grubaugh about the challenge, suggested that he may have committed perjury, advised him of his Fifth Amendment right to remain silent, and alluded to a possible inquiry by the State Bar.

Judge Tamietti's conduct conveyed the appearance of retaliation for filing the peremptory challenge, and the appearance of attempting to improperly influence a deputy district attorney in the exercise of the People's statutory rights. The judge's conduct violated his duties to avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety (canon 2); to act in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary (canon 2A); to be patient, dignified, and courteous while acting in a judicial capacity (canon 3B(4)); and to refrain from speech or conduct that would reasonably be perceived as bias or prejudice (canon 3B(5)).

2. Instead of notifying Presiding Judge Linda Sloven of the peremptory challenge in Coronado-Smith, for the purpose of case reassignment, Judge Tamietti improperly chose the successor judge, who had served as a visiting judge in Truckee on occasion, in violation of Code of Civil Procedure section 170.6, subdivision (a)(4). Judge Tamietti thereby violated his duties to avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety (canon 2), to respect and comply with the law (canon 2A), and to act in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary (canon 2A).

II. People v. Anthony Torres, No. T13/0408

Anthony Torres was charged in a criminal complaint with three felonies: (1) assault with a deadly weapon (Penal Code § 245(a)(1)), (2) battery with serious bodily injury (Penal Code § 243(d)), and (3) street terrorism (involving active participation in a criminal street gang) (Penal Code § 186.22). The alleged assault occurred as a number of people were leaving a late night party, and the victim was seriously injured.

On August 20, 2013, Judge Tamietti presided over the preliminary hearing. At the outset of the hearing, the judge granted the prosecutor's motion to dismiss the counts of assault with a deadly weapon and street terrorism. The hearing proceeded with the prosecutor calling numerous Truckee Police Department (PD) officers, who testified about their interviews of percipient witnesses, and the defense calling a single eyewitness. There was conflicting evidence as to whether the defendant was involved in the alleged assault, including the eyewitness's testimony that she was certain the defendant was not involved because he was wearing a bright white shirt and those involved were wearing dark clothing. Judge Tamietti concluded that there was sufficient evidence to hold the defendant to answer on the one remaining count, battery with serious bodily injury.

On February 11, 2014, DA Newell appeared before Judge Tamietti to request dismissal of case number T13/0408. DA Newell asked that the case be dismissed because it could not be proved beyond a reasonable doubt, due to tainted witness statements. Judge Tamietti asked how much "DA investigator time" had been expended on the case. (R.T. 4:1-2.) DA Newell stated that a DA investigator had not been used, because the Truckee PD had not requested assistance. Judge Tamietti then stated, "And it's been my experience that recantation isn't all that uncommon in cases; we see it in the DV [domestic violence] situations quite frequently." (R.T. 4:18-20.) DA Newell stated that, in addition to two recanting witnesses, there was a third witness who testified that the defendant was at least 10 feet away from the altercation. DA Newell also stated that there was subsequent testimony of "white-dressed figures" running away after the incident. Judge Tamietti then stated:

> Well, the testimony at the preliminary, as I recall, was the only person who had white on was Mr. Torres and that was how one of the witnesses testified that Mr. Torres wasn't in the scrum because according to that > witness, everybody in the scrum was wearing dark clothing.

(R.T. 5:16-20.)

DA Newell responded that an additional person had been seen running. In response, Judge Tamietti stated:

> I got a couple of problems here with this file. One is I have got a victim beaten within an inch of his life who thankfully survived.
> Two, I have got this insinuation, I'll call it, of gang activity, which is a cancer that seems to be working its way into this community and to which most of the citizens of the community are oblivious. Sitting where I sit doing what I do, I'm a little less oblivious than average to that.
> And there was enough of an insinuation of gang involvement in this circumstance that it initially got charged as a gang case. And then the gang aspects of the case got dismissed, for whatever reason, some of which is attributable to your assistant DA's statement that we are not, meaning you, are not prepared to try a gang case.
> And I think the citizens of this community are probably ready to have a gang case tried for a couple of reasons: One, to figure out, if in fact, that's true; and two, to educate the community about the risks that are inherent in that insinuation into the society of this community.
> So I heard the preliminary. I remember what was said. And I haven't seen the investigative work that the defendant's investigator, for which I have signed a couple of orders, has performed, I don't know what they say. I'm at a little bit of disadvantage there.
> But the mere fact that people are not getting their stories straight or recanting their stories, there is a lot of different reasons that might be happening in a case that has gang insinuation.
> I'm not suggesting that I have any evidence of [sic] Mr. Torres, or any of his cohorts are pressuring witnesses, > but I don't think that's a naive thing to assume that might be happening and might be an explanation for the result of some of the investigative works performed by the defense.

> I would point out, which is my question to you, was whether your office had expended any investigative resources on this file? I don't see Womack or Lopez here, so I don't know what their views are on that subject.[1]
> I'm also increasingly concerned, Mr. Newell, about the impact on this community about the absence of an assigned DA. You and I have spoken about that and I know you have tried and Ms. Ferguson has tried to fill the breach here . . . but it's not getting filled, and this community is suffering as a result, and we need to put a stop to that suffering. The citizens on this side of the pass are entitled to the same level of services as the citizens on the other side of the pass, and they're not getting it. And I'm pretty annoyed that – and it puts me in a pretty tough situation because I have to assert myself into cases where I shouldn't be responsible for doing that – but I have had to, and I have, and this is one of those cases in my view, I think no one has really picked up this ball and run with it as if it were their responsibility, and that's my primary problem with this pitch. I think it's a slipshod "let's get rid of this because it's going to be hard to try," and that's not a good reason to get rid of a case that's this serious, both to Mr. Torres and to the victim of the case.

DA Newell stated that being on the record was not the appropriate context to discuss personnel issues, to which the judge stated:

> Hang on a second. I'm not talking personal [sic] issues. I'm talking about staffing of this branch, and that has nothing to do with a personal [sic] decision, that has to do with the service of citizen [sic] to this community. [¶] I'm not telling you how to run your office. What I'm > telling you is the way it's being run up here is negatively affecting the operation of this branch and the citizens of this community.

(R.T. 8:9-16.)

DA Newell provided more details regarding the decision to move to dismiss the case, how the case was investigated, and his efforts to fill vacant DDA positions in the county. Judge Tamietti then questioned a victim witness advocate in the following exchange:

> THE COURT: Has he [the victim] indicated to you that he's getting any pressure?
> VICTIM WITNESS [ADVOCATE]: No, not at all.
> THE COURT: Has he indicated to you that he's aware that any of the people, who he has identified as potential witnesses, are getting any pressure?
> VICTIM WITNESS [ADVOCATE]: No, he has not indicated that at all.
> THE COURT: Okay. Has he provided a -- any additional information about potential witnesses for the case, to you, Shea?

The victim witness advocate responded that the victim had given a list of names to the attorneys. Judge Tamietti questioned DA Newell repeatedly about the status of follow-up reports concerning the list of names. After hearing arguments for dismissal, Judge Tamietti stated:

> Well, I would observe that having been the felony judge on the other side of the county for five years, before I got this assignment, that had this crime happened in [the] Safeway parking lot of Grass Valley, it is my impression that a whole bunch more of resources would have been thrown at this case than would have been thrown at this one.
> If Mr. Torres was improperly charged, he deserves an apology. If he was properly charged, we ought to take the case to trial and let a jury of 12 citizens of this > community decide whether or not witnesses who are recanting, have been pressured into recanting.

> I have some live testimony at the preliminary and most of it was 115[2] from Detective Lopez, so I can't make any real independent assessment about those people's statements given to Detective Lopez and Detective Lopez isn't here to amplify on that. So I'm put in the very uncomfortable situation of not doing what I think is my best to protect the citizens of this community, which is the principal reason they gave me this job in the first place.
> So I don't like the spot I'm being put in here, Mr. Newell. And I credit my disgust, in large part, to your office and its handling of this file. But I'll grant the motion without prejudice, dismiss the case, in return for his plea to the dead bang we found you with drugs indicia for sale.

Judge Tamietti then asked the defendant if he had a tattoo of Marilyn Monroe on his arm. When the defendant admitted to having the tattoo, Judge Tamietti asked DA Newell if he had any idea what it meant. DA Newell stated that the tattoo was potentially gang-affiliated, but that it could not be proved. Judge Tamietti then responded, "That might go along with the 13 that's on his chest." (R.T. 16:5-6.)

Judge Tamietti's conduct, as described, was discourteous, conveyed the appearance of embroilment, bias against the DA's office, and prejudgment, and suggested that the judge had assumed a prosecutorial role. Judge Tamietti's conduct violated his duties to avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety (canon 2); to act in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary (canon 2A); to be patient, dignified, and courteous while acting in a judicial capacity (canon 3B(4)); and to refrain from speech and conduct that would reasonably be perceived as bias or prejudice (canon 3B(5)).

III. Email disparaging District Attorney Newell

On Monday, February 24, 2020, at 9:56 a.m., DA Newell sent an email to Nevada County Superior Court Judge Robert Tice-Raskin with the subject heading, "KNCO article." The subject of the email was a radio interview of an attorney in the DA's office who had made comments about Senate Bill 10 (pretrial release and detention), and Penal Code section 1320.10 (pre-arraignment review), that DA Newell indicated had been taken out of context. The email stated:

> Good morning Judge,
> Hope you had a good weekend. Have you had a chance to listen to the whole interview in question? Chris had no idea how or what was excerpted from that interview. From my view he spoke negatively about another state's (there's a couple) well documented reform failure but [sic], followed with how it has given us opportunity to better craft ours. Not mentioned by the article is how judges need all the info, how it's incumbent on us to provide some of it and, Probation's role in completing the assessments thoroughly. Given the radio show in its entirety, I can't hold him to task for a reporter's inarticulate description or headline taken out of context.
> That said, I believe he could be more articulate on my Office's policy as it relates to SB10/ 1320.10, which is support. I will make that clear publically [sic] and, I will make sure, if he has any more public speaking, he uses the correct talking points. I am going to be on the radio myself later this week talking about it as well. I'll let you know when that is when I find out. I'm available all week if we need to discuss further.
> Thank you, Cliff

On February 24, 2020, at 10:50 a.m., Judge Tice-Raskin responded with an email addressed to DA Newell, and copied to all other Nevada County Superior Court judges, including Judge Tamietti. The email stated:

> Mr. Newell,
> I have forwarded your thoughts to the whole bench. We will be in touch. Thanks.
> SRT

On February 24, 2020, at 1:15 p.m., Judge Tamietti responded to Judge Tice-Raskin's email with an email addressed to DA Newell and to all other Nevada County Superior Court judges. The email stated: "So if he was so horribly misquoted, why hasn't he tried to get it corrected? More fecklessness from Newell."

February 24, 2020, is also the date on which Judge Tamietti submitted his response to the commission's preliminary investigation letter dated December 6, 2019.

Judge Tamietti's conduct, as described, was discourteous, and conveyed the appearance that the judge was biased against DA Newell. Judge Tamietti's conduct violated his duties to avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety (canon 2); to act in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary (canon 2A); to be patient, dignified, and courteous while acting in a judicial capacity (canon 3B(4)); and to refrain from speech and conduct that would reasonably be perceived as bias or prejudice (canon 3B(5)).

Judge Tamietti's conduct, as set forth in parts I-III, above, constituted, at a minimum, improper action.

Judge Tamietti has volunteered significant amounts of time to understaffed surrounding courts, and has taught at New Judges Orientation and judicial continuing education programs.

Judge Tamietti's misconduct was aggravated by the judge's prior discipline. In 2019, Judge Tamietti received an advisory letter for discourteous remarks about an attorney who was appearing before the judge in a civil case. The advisory letter noted that the judge's conduct, which occurred in 2018, was aggravated by the fact that, in 2017, he had participated in the commission's mentoring program to address demeanor issues.

DISCIPLINE

Judge Tamietti's misconduct reflected a loss of the neutrality required of judicial officers. His actions created the appearance of bias against the local district attorney's office, which undermines public respect for, and confidence in, the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary.

Judge Tamietti's intrusion upon the charging authority of the district attorney's office and his usurpation of the prosecutorial role was inconsistent with a judge's role of neutral arbiter. The court must not undertake the role of prosecutor or defense counsel if public confidence in the integrity of the criminal justice system is to be maintained. (Kloepfer v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1989) 49 Cal.3d 826, 845.)

Judge Tamietti's questioning of a deputy district attorney regarding the filing of a peremptory challenge, filed pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure section 170.6, further reflected a loss of neutrality. The judge's reaction to the peremptory challenge appeared to be an attempt to improperly influence the deputy district attorney and to be retaliatory. A judge must accept a proper peremptory challenge without further inquiry. (McCartney v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1974) 12 Cal.3d 512, 532.) "Any conduct by a judge that amounts to retaliation for the exercise of a lawful right amounts to judicial misconduct." (Rothman et al., Cal. Judicial Conduct Handbook (4th ed. 2017) § 7:12, p. 405.) The judge also failed to comply with Code of Civil Procedure section 170.6 by choosing a successor judge to handle the case, rather than advising his presiding judge about the peremptory challenge so that the case could be reassigned.

Judge Tamietti also engaged in improper ex parte communication and in behavior that was discourteous and conveyed the appearance of bias, embroilment, and prejudgment.

The commission's determination to resolve this matter with a public admonishment and to forgo formal proceedings and the possible imposition of higher discipline was conditioned upon Judge Tamietti's agreement to retire and not to serve in a judicial capacity in the future. The commission concluded that this resolution adequately fulfills its mandate to protect the public from further possible misconduct.

| IN THE MATTER CONCERNINGJUDGE ROBERT L. TAMIETTI | STIPULATION FOR DISCIPLINEBY CONSENT (Rule 116.5) |

Pursuant to Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance, rule 116.5, Judge Robert L. Tamietti of the Nevada County Superior Court, represented by counsel, and commission counsel (the "parties") submit this proposed disposition of the matters set forth in the commission's preliminary investigation letters dated December 6, 2019, March 26, 2020, and July 6, 2020. The parties request that the commission resolve this matter by imposition of a public admonishment. The parties believe that the settlement provided by this agreement is in the best interests of the commission and Judge Tamietti because, among other reasons, in light of the stipulated facts and legal conclusions, a public admonishment and the judge's agreement to retire and not serve in a judicial capacity in the future adequately protect the public and will avoid the delay and expense of further proceedings.

TERMS AND CONDITIONS OF AGREEMENT

1. This agreement resolves the matters alleged in the commission's pending preliminary investigation involving Judge Tamietti.

2. The commission shall issue a public admonishment based on the agreed Stipulated Facts and Legal Conclusions set forth therein.

3. If the commission accepts this proposed disposition, the commission's decision and order imposing public admonishment may articulate the reasons for its decision and include explanatory language that the commission deems appropriate.

4. Upon acceptance by the commission, this stipulation and the commission's decision and order shall be made public.

5. Judge Tamietti waives any further proceedings and review in this matter, including formal proceedings (Rules of Com. on Jud. Performance, rule 118, et seq.) and review by the Supreme Court (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 9.60).

6. On July 27, 2020, Judge Tamietti tendered his retirement effective October 31, 2020 through written correspondence to Governor Gavin Newsom. A copy of that letter is attached hereto as an exhibit and incorporated by this reference. Judge Tamietti shall use accrued vacation or other leave time, and shall be absent from the bench and not preside over any judicial proceedings after September 11, 2020. Judge Tamietti represents and warrants that he has sufficient vacation/leave time to be absent from the bench between September 12 and October 31, 2020, inclusive, and that his presiding judge will allow him to be absent during that period.

7. Failure to comply with the terms and conditions of this agreement may constitute additional and independent grounds for discipline.

8. Judge Tamietti has agreed not to seek or hold judicial office, or accept a position or assignment as a judicial officer, subordinate judicial officer, or judge pro tem with any court in the State of California, or accept a reference of work from any California state court, at any time after October 31, 2020.

9. If Judge Tamietti attempts to serve in a judicial capacity in violation of the foregoing paragraph, the commission may withdraw the public admonishment and resume the preliminary investigation as to all of the matters in the preliminary investigation letters.

10. Judge Tamietti agrees that the facts recited herein are true and correct, and that the discipline to which the parties stipulate herein is acceptable in light of those facts.

11. The commission may reject this proposed disposition and resume its preliminary investigation. If the commission does so, nothing in this proposed disposition will be deemed to be admitted or conceded by the parties.

Accordingly, it is hereby stipulated and agreed that the commission shall issue a public admonishment on the above Terms and Conditions of Agreement, and based on the following Stipulated Facts and Legal Conclusions.

STIPULATED FACTS AND LEGAL CONCLUSIONS

Judge Robert L. Tamietti became a judge of the Nevada County Superior Court in 2003. His current term began in January 2019.

I. People v. Anthony Coronado-Smith, No. TF19-000233

A. Pre-charge conduct

On June 19, 2019, Judge Tamietti signed a warrant for the arrest of Anthony Coronado-Smith on a violation of Penal Code section 647.6 (annoying or molesting a child), which is a misdemeanor. The judge set bail at $7,500, but did not impose any bail conditions. Mr. Coronado-Smith was arrested on the warrant later that day. After interviewing Mr. Coronado-Smith, a Truckee Police Department officer executed a request to increase bail to $150,000. Judge Tamietti telephonically authorized the request, but did not impose any bail conditions based on his expectation that Mr. Coronado-Smith would not post bail and would appear for arraignment within 48 hours of his arrest. On June 20, 2019, Mr. Coronado-Smith posted bond and was released, and was given an appearance date of September 30, 2019. No charges were filed.

On June 21, 2019, Judge Tamietti sent Deputy District Attorney (DDA) Anna Tyner an email that stated, "Who is the DA on this child molest case? He bailed (to 9/30/19) and we need to get him in more quickly for bail conditions." The subject line of the email stated, "Tony Coronado-Smith."

On June 24, 2019, at 9:50 a.m., DDA Edward Grubaugh sent Judge Tamietti an email, stating, "It will be my case, Your Honor." At 9:53 a.m., Judge Tamietti responded to DDA Grubaugh, stating, "Thank you. [¶] He posted bail to September. I want to see him before then to impose bail conditions. [¶] Judge T." At 2:34 p.m., DDA Grubaugh sent the following response: "I will do my best to bring him into court as soon as we make a filing decision, Your Honor. As of now, unfortunately, I have no reports to review."

On September 4, 2019, Judge Tamietti sent DDA Grubaugh an email, with a subject line of "Coranado-Smith [sic]," stating, "We still have not seen a complaint on this case. What is up?" On September 6, 2019, at 11:37 a.m., DDA Grubaugh responded, "Further investigation and questions were taking place in the background. I am meeting with Truckee PD next week."

On Friday, September 6, 2019, at 12:25 p.m., Judge Tamietti emailed DDA Grubaugh, District Attorney (DA) Clifford Newell, Assistant District Attorney (ADA) Christopher Walsh, and Presiding Judge Linda Sloven, stating:

> He bonded out on June 20 and has been free without any conditions since then despite facing child molestation charges and having an extensive occupational and avocational history of dealing with minors. This level of "service" is far below what the citizens of this community expect and deserve.

At 3:07 p.m., DA Newell responded as follows, while adding Truckee Police Department Chief of Police Robert Leftwich as a recipient:

> Good afternoon Judge Tamietti; [¶] Please do not try to influence my Office's filing decisions. You have no idea what is going on in the case nor should you. A rush to filing could very well jeopardize a case and result in serious injustice. You can be assured the "level of service" to the citizens of Truckee is extensive and DDA Grubaugh is appropriately handling the matter. [¶] Regards, Cliff Newell

At 4:33 p.m., Judge Tamietti responded, as follows:

> Baloney. When the inaction and/or inattention of your office or any other agency puts this community at risk I have a duty to speak up. If that offends you in this circumstance, so be it.

While Judge Tamietti was not aware that Mr. Coronado-Smith had retained counsel on or before July 10, 2019, until after the above referenced e-mails, he did not include Mr. Coronado-Smith on the communications.

Judge Tamietti's conduct conveyed the appearance of bias against the Nevada County District Attorney's Office. The judge intruded into the charging authority of the executive branch of government, and engaged in conduct that was inconsistent with the proper role of a judge as a neutral arbiter. The judge violated his duties to avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety (canon 2), to act in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary (canon 2A), to be patient, dignified, and courteous while acting in a judicial capacity (canon 3B(4)), to refrain from speech or conduct that would reasonably be perceived as bias or prejudice (canon 3B(5)), and to not initiate, permit, or consider ex parte communications (canon 3B(7)).

B. Improper Response to Filing of Peremptory Challenge

1. On September 19, 2019, DDA Grubaugh filed a felony complaint in People v. Anthony Coronado-Smith, No. TF19-000233, and an "Invitation to the Honorable Judge Robert L. Tamietti to Recuse Himself." The "Invitation" attached the emails that are quoted above, and requested that the judge recuse himself to protect the rights of the defendant and ensure public confidence in the judiciary. Attorney Grubaugh stated in the "Invitation" that "[t]he People do not believe Judge Tamietti holds actual bias in this case." On the same day, Judge Tamietti filed a "Response Regarding People's Invitation to Recuse." The response stated that the "Invitation" did not set forth grounds that would require the judge to disqualify himself.

On September 24, 2019, DDA Grubaugh timely filed a peremptory challenge against Judge Tamietti pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure section 170.6. The peremptory challenge, which DDA Grubaugh signed under oath, stated that Judge Tamietti was prejudiced against the People of the State of California. Instead of allowing the case to be reassigned as required by Code of Civil Procedure section 170.6, subdivision (a)(4), Judge Tamietti questioned DDA Grubaugh about the challenge, suggested that he may have committed perjury, advised him of his Fifth Amendment right to remain silent, and alluded to a possible inquiry by the State Bar.

Judge Tamietti's conduct conveyed the appearance of retaliation for filing the peremptory challenge, and the appearance of attempting to improperly influence a deputy district attorney in the exercise of the People's statutory rights. The judge's conduct violated his duties to avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety (canon 2), to act in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary (canon 2A), to be patient, dignified, and courteous while acting in a judicial capacity (canon 3B(4)), and to refrain from speech or conduct that would reasonably be perceived as bias or prejudice (canon 3B(5)).

2. Instead of notifying Presiding Judge Linda Sloven of the peremptory challenge in Coronado-Smith, for the purpose of case reassignment, Judge Tamietti improperly chose the successor judge, who had served as a visiting judge in Truckee on occasion, in violation of Code of Civil Procedure section 170.6, subdivision (a)(4). Judge Tamietti thereby violated his duties to avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety (canon 2), to respect and comply with the law (canon 2A), and to act in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary (canon 2A).

II. People v. Anthony Torres, No. T13/0408

Anthony Torres was charged in a criminal complaint with three felonies: (1) assault with a deadly weapon (Penal Code § 245(a)(1)), (2) battery with serious bodily injury (Penal Code § 243(d)), and (3) street terrorism (involving active participation in a criminal street gang) (Penal Code § 186.22). The alleged assault occurred as a number of people were leaving a late night party, and the victim was seriously injured.

On August 20, 2013, Judge Tamietti presided over the preliminary hearing. At the outset of the hearing, the judge granted the prosecutor's motion to dismiss the counts of assault with a deadly weapon and street terrorism. The hearing proceeded with the prosecutor calling numerous Truckee Police Department (PD) officers, who testified about their interviews of percipient witnesses, and the defense calling a single eyewitness. There was conflicting evidence as to whether the defendant was involved in the alleged assault, including the eyewitness's testimony that she was certain the defendant was not involved because he was wearing a bright white shirt and those involved were wearing dark clothing. Judge Tamietti concluded that there was sufficient evidence to hold the defendant to answer on the one remaining count, battery with serious bodily injury.

On February 11, 2014, DA Newell appeared before Judge Tamietti to request dismissal of case number T13/0408. DA Newell asked that the case be dismissed because it could not be proved beyond a reasonable doubt, due to tainted witness statements. Judge Tamietti asked how much "DA investigator time" had been expended on the case. (R.T. 4:1-2.) DA Newell stated that a DA investigator had not been used, because the Truckee PD had not requested assistance. Judge Tamietti then stated, "And it's been my experience that recantation isn't all that uncommon in cases; we see it in the DV [domestic violence] situations quite frequently." (R.T. 4:18-20.) DA Newell stated that, in addition to two recanting witnesses, there was a third witness who testified that the defendant was at least 10 feet away from the altercation. DA Newell also stated that there was subsequent testimony of "white-dressed figures" running away after the incident. Judge Tamietti then stated:

> Well, the testimony at the preliminary, as I recall, was the only person who had white on was Mr. Torres and that was how one of the witnesses testified that Mr. Torres wasn't in the scrum because according to that witness, everybody in the scrum was wearing dark clothing.

DA Newell responded that an additional person had been seen running. In response, Judge Tamietti stated:

> I got a couple of problems here with this file. One is I have got a victim beaten within an inch of his life who thankfully survived.
> Two, I have got this insinuation, I'll call it, of gang activity, which is a cancer that seems to be working its way into this community and to which most of the citizens of the community are oblivious. Sitting where I sit doing what I do, I'm a little less oblivious than average to that.

And there was enough of an insinuation of gang involvement in this circumstance that it initially got charged as a gang case. And then the gang aspects of the case got dismissed, for whatever reason, some of which is attributable to your assistant DA's statement that we are not, meaning you, are not prepared to try a gang case.

And I think the citizens of this community are probably ready to have a gang case tried for a couple of reasons: One, to figure out, if in fact, that's true; and two, to educate the community about the risks that are inherent in that insinuation into the society of this community.

So I heard the preliminary. I remember what was said. And I haven't seen the investigative work that the defendant's investigator, for which I have signed a couple of orders, has performed, I don't know what they say. I'm at a little bit of disadvantage there.

But the mere fact that people are not getting their stories straight or recanting their stories, there is a lot of different reasons that might be happening in a case that has gang insinuation.

I'm not suggesting that I have any evidence of [sic] Mr. Torres, or any of his cohorts are pressuring witnesses, but I don't think that's a naive thing to assume that might be happening and might be an explanation for the result of some of the investigative works performed by the defense.

I would point out, which is my question to you, was whether your office had expended any investigative resources on this file? I don't see Womack or Lopez here, so I don't know what their views are on that subject.[1]

I'm also increasingly concerned, Mr. Newell, about the impact on this community about the absence of an assigned DA. You and I have spoken about that and I know you have tried and Ms. Ferguson has tried to fill the breach here . . . but it's not getting filled, and this community is suffering as a result, and we need to put a stop to that suffering. The citizens on this side of the pass are entitled to the same level > of services as the citizens on the other side of the pass, and they're not getting it. And I'm pretty annoyed that – and it puts me in a pretty tough situation because I have to assert myself into cases where I shouldn't be responsible for doing that – but I have had to, and I have, and this is one of those cases in my view, I think no one has really picked up this ball and run with it as if it were their responsibility, and that's my primary problem with this pitch. I think it's a slipshod "let's get rid of this because it's going to be hard to try," and that's not a good reason to get rid of a case that's this serious, both to Mr. Torres and to the victim of the case.

DA Newell stated that being on the record was not the appropriate context to discuss personnel issues, to which the judge stated:

> Hang on a second. I'm not talking personal [sic] issues. I'm talking about staffing of this branch, and that has nothing to do with a personal [sic] decision, that has to do with the service of citizen [sic] to this community. [¶] I'm not telling you how to run your office. What I'm telling you is the way it's being run up here is negatively affecting the operation of this branch and the citizens of this community.

(R.T. 8:9-16.)

DA Newell provided more details regarding the decision to move to dismiss the case, how the case was investigated, and his efforts to fill vacant DDA positions in the county. Judge Tamietti then questioned a victim witness advocate in the following exchange:

> THE COURT: Has he [the victim] indicated to you that he's getting any pressure?
> VICTIM WITNESS: No, not at all.
> THE COURT: Has he indicated to you that he's aware that any of the people, who he has identified as potential witnesses, are getting any pressure?
> VICTIM WITNESS: No, he has not indicated that at all.

> THE COURT: Okay. Has he provided a -- any additional information about potential witnesses for the case, to you, Shea?

(R.T. 10:19-28.)

The victim witness advocate responded that the victim had given a list of names to the attorneys. Judge Tamietti questioned DA Newell repeatedly about the status of follow-up reports concerning the list of names. After hearing arguments for dismissal, Judge Tamietti stated:

> Well, I would observe that having been the felony judge on the other side of the county for five years, before I got this assignment, that had this crime happened in [the] Safeway parking lot of Grass Valley, it is my impression that a whole bunch more of resources would have been thrown at this case than would have been thrown at this one.
> If Mr. Torres was improperly charged, he deserves an apology. If he was properly charged, we ought to take the case to trial and let a jury of 12 citizens of this community decide whether or not witnesses who are recanting, have been pressured into recanting.
> I have some live testimony at the preliminary and most of it was 115[2] from Detective Lopez, so I can't make any real independent assessment about those people's statements given to Detective Lopez and Detective Lopez isn't here to amplify on that. So I'm put in the very uncomfortable situation of not doing what I think is my best to protect the citizens of this community, which is the principal reason they gave me this job in the first place.
> So I don't like the spot I'm being put in here, Mr. Newell. And I credit my disgust, in large part, to your office and its handling of this file. But I'll grant the motion without prejudice, dismiss the case, in return for his plea to the dead bang we found you with drugs indicia for sale.

[2] Proposition 115 amended the constitution to allow hearsay evidence to be presented by qualified officers at a preliminary hearing.

Judge Tamietti then asked the defendant if he had a tattoo of Marilyn Monroe on his arm. When the defendant admitted to having the tattoo, Judge Tamietti asked DA Newell if he had any idea what it meant. DA Newell stated that the tattoo was potentially gang-affiliated, but that it could not be proved. Judge Tamietti then responded, "That might go along with the 13 that's on his chest." (R.T. 16:5-6.)

Judge Tamietti's conduct, as described, was discourteous, conveyed the appearance of embroilment, bias against the DA's office, and prejudgment, and suggested that the judge had assumed a prosecutorial role. Judge Tamietti's conduct violated his duties to avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety (canon 2), to act in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary (canon 2A), to be patient, dignified, and courteous while acting in a judicial capacity (canon 3B(4)), and to refrain from speech and conduct that would reasonably be perceived as bias or prejudice (canon 3B(5)).

III. Email disparaging District Attorney Newell

On Monday, February 24, 2020, at 9:56 a.m., DA Newell sent an email to Nevada County Superior Court Judge Robert Tice-Raskin with the subject heading, "KNCO article." The subject of the email was a radio interview of an attorney in the DA's office who had made comments about Senate Bill 10 (pretrial release and detention), and Penal Code section 1320.10 (pre-arraignment review), that DA Newell indicated had been taken out of context. The email stated:

> Good morning Judge,
> Hope you had a good weekend. Have you had a chance to listen to the whole interview in question? Chris had no idea how or what was excerpted from that interview. From my view he spoke negatively about another state's (there's a couple) well documented reform failure but [sic], followed with how it has given us opportunity to better craft ours. Not mentioned by the article is how judges need all the info, how it's incumbent on us to provide some of it and, Probation's role in completing the assessments thoroughly. Given the radio show in its entirety, I can't hold him to task for a > reporter's inarticulate description or headline taken out of context.

> That said, I believe he could be more articulate on my Office's policy as it relates to SB10/ 1320.10, which is support. I will make that clear publically and, I will make sure, if he has any more public speaking, he uses the correct talking points. I am going to be on the radio myself later this week talking about it as well. I'll let you know when that is when I find out. I'm available all week if we need to discuss further.
> Thank you, Cliff

On February 24, 2020, at 10:50 a.m., Judge Tice-Raskin responded with an email addressed to DA Newell, and copied to all other Nevada County Superior Court judges, including Judge Tamietti. The email stated:

> Mr. Newell,
> I have forwarded your thoughts to the whole bench. We will be in touch. Thanks.
> SRT

On February 24, 2020, at 1:15 p.m., Judge Tamietti responded to Judge Tice-Raskin's email with an email addressed to DA Newell and to all other Nevada County Superior Court judges. The email stated: "So if he was so horribly misquoted, why hasn't he tried to get it corrected? More fecklessness from Newell."

February 24, 2020, is also the date on which Judge Tamietti submitted his response to the commission's preliminary investigation letter dated December 6, 2019.

Judge Tamietti's conduct, as described, was discourteous, and conveyed the appearance that the judge was biased against DA Newell. Judge Tamietti's conduct violated his duties to avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety (canon 2), to act in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary (canon 2A), to be patient, dignified, and courteous while acting in a judicial capacity (canon 3B(4)), and to refrain from speech and conduct that would reasonably be perceived as bias or prejudice (canon 3B(5)).

Judge Tamietti's conduct, as set forth in parts I-III, above, constituted, at a minimum, improper action.

Judge Tamietti has volunteered significant amounts of time to understaffed surrounding courts, and has taught at New Judges Orientation and judicial continuing education programs.

Judge Tamietti's misconduct was aggravated by the judge's prior discipline. In 2019, Judge Tamietti received an advisory letter for discourteous remarks about an attorney who was appearing before the judge in a civil case. The advisory letter noted that the judge's conduct, which occurred in 2018, was aggravated by the fact that, in 2017, he had participated in the commission's mentoring program to address demeanor issues.

By signing this stipulation, in addition to consenting to discipline on the terms set forth, Judge Tamietti expressly admits that the foregoing facts are true and accepts the stated legal conclusions.

Re: Judicial Retirement

Dear Governor Newsom:

Since November of 2003, it has been my honor to serve the people of Nevada County and the Truckee community as their Superior Court Judge. It has been a challenging and many times rewarding second career. In light of my health and my desire to explore other interests while I am vigorous enough to do so, I have decided to retire, effective October 31, 2020.

I urge you to appoint a resident of the Truckee community to replace me in this assignment. The citizens of this community deserve a judge who lives in this community, who has had experience in the legal system in our community, and who is familiar with the services available within this community, as well as the unique challenges that face this community.

On a personal note, and as a private citizen, please accept my humble and sincere compliments and thanks to you for your thoughtful and courageous leadership of our state through early stages of the Covid 19 pandemic and the related economic fallout. My best to you and your family in your continued service to our state.

Respectfully,

Judge Robert L. Tamietti

| IN THE MATTER CONCERNINGJUDGE FRANK ROESCH | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSINGPUBLIC ADMONISHMENT |

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge Frank Roesch, a judge of the Alameda County Superior Court since 2001. His current term began in 2015. Pursuant to rule 116 of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance, Judge Roesch and his attorney, David S. McMonigle, appeared before the commission on October 7, 2020, to contest the imposition of a tentative public admonishment issued on July 17, 2020. Judge Roesch has waived his right to formal proceedings under rule 118 and to review by the Supreme Court. Having considered the written and oral objections and argument submitted by Judge Roesch and his counsel, and good cause appearing, the Commission on Judicial Performance issues this public admonishment pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution, based upon the statement of facts and reasons set forth below.

As described below, in two cases, Judge Roesch displayed a lack of the dispassionate neutrality and the courtesy to others that is expected of judges. In a civil jury trial, he interrogated a witness in a hostile manner, made sarcastic remarks, and mishandled the witness's assertion of her Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination. In a quiet title action, the judge questioned the parties and counsel in an injudicious manner. Although Judge Roesch believed, based on faulty assumptions, that his intervention in each case was justified, it is the misguided manner in which he attempted to address his misassumptions, and the discourteous way he comported himself toward those appearing in court before him, that is the basis for this discipline.

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

I. Victaulic Co. v. American Home Assurance Co.

In 2015, Judge Roesch presided over a jury trial in Victaulic Co. v. American Home Assurance Co. (RG12642929) regarding Victaulic's claims against its insurers for breach of contract, bad faith, and punitive damages. After a three and one-half week trial, the jury awarded Victaulic $55,333,581.11. The Court of Appeal reversed the judgment due to Judge Roesch's misconduct and multiple errors during the trial. (Victaulic Co. v. American Home Assurance Co. (2018) 20 Cal.App.5th 948.)

During the trial, plaintiff Victaulic called Nancy Finberg, the director of complex claims for American Insurance Group (AIG), to testify as an adverse witness. The insurance defendants were members of AIG. Finberg had examined Victaulic's coverage claims and determined that there was potential insurance coverage. She had also verified, at the request of counsel, the insurers' responses to Victaulic's requests for admission (RFAs) regarding coverage, which the insurers denied on legal grounds. Victaulic's counsel questioned Finberg about the distinction between her role as a claims handler and the insurers' legal positions as reflected in their responses to the RFAs.[1] Finberg attempted to explain the difference. Judge Roesch intervened in counsel's questioning, as follows:

> Q. [MR. JEAN, counsel for Victaulic] So each of the seven cases at issue in this litigation presented a potential for coverage; right?
> A. [MS. FINBERG] Are you making a distinction between the handling of the claims or the coverage litigation? Because they're two separate things.

[1] The appellate court found that Judge Roesch erred in allowing Victaulic's counsel to question Finberg about the RFAs, which are not admissible, but the judge is not being disciplined for this error.

> Q. Well, I had not been because I didn't really think of them separately before you just gave that answer, but -- so are you saying that the coverage litigation -- or underlying claims handling -- I probably just mixed up words there, so let me just repeat myself. I'm sorry. [¶] So in the underlying claims handling, you make a determination as a potential for coverage one way, and then in the coverage case, this litigation, the potential for coverage is determined differently?
> A. They're two separate things.
> THE COURT: Answer his question. Are they determined differently?

Shortly thereafter, Jean asked Finberg a question on the same topic. When she answered, Judge Roesch interrupted, as follows:

> Q. [MR. JEAN] And I think where we left off, you had -- you started talking about that maybe you handled the potential for coverage one way in the -- when you handled claims, and perhaps in the litigation or this litigation maybe it's handled differently? [¶] Did I understand your testimony correctly?
> A. [MS. FINBERG] Well, there are two separate issues, two separate things.
> THE COURT: That was a yes-or-no question.
> THE WITNESS: I don't know if I can answer yes or no, Your Honor, the way --
>
> THE COURT: You don't know if you can answer that?
> THE WITNESS: The way he asked it. [¶] I'm sorry, would you ask it again.
> THE COURT: Why don't you rephrase the question. The witness doesn't understand it.

After further examination, Judge Roesch again intervened in the questioning of Finberg, as follows:

> [MR. JEAN]: . . . Now, do you handle the potential for coverage or make your assessments as a potential for coverage differently when you handle claims than as is done in this litigation?
> THE COURT: Do you understand the question?
> THE WITNESS: I understand what he's asked, but it's hard to answer yes or no to that question, Your Honor.
> THE COURT: Do you use the same analysis to determine if there's coverage in your claims handling as you would in responding to questions in this lawsuit?
> THE WITNESS: If it's yes or no, then I would have to say no.
> THE COURT: You don't?
> THE WITNESS: If I could qualify that.
> THE COURT: You use a different analysis to determine coverage in coverage litigation as in claims handling?
> THE WITNESS: May I --
> THE COURT: I'm just trying to get you to say yes or no. You'll be given plenty of opportunity to make your explanations.
>
> THE WITNESS: Okay. I'll say no then.
> THE COURT: So the answer is no. Mr. Jean, the answer is no.
> BY MR. JEAN: Q. All right. So is the answer -- I just want to make sure I'm clear. [¶] Do you treat the analysis for the potential for coverage as a claims handler the same as is done by AIG in connection with this litigation?

MR. GOINES [Counsel for AIG]: Objection. Vague, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Not vague.

WITNESS: No, not -- no.

BY MR. JEAN: Q. Okay. So -- okay. You asked for an opportunity to explain.\

A. Yes.

Q. Please explain.

A. Thank you. The claims handling I handle no matter what. In these claims that you -- the claims that are the subject of the litigation I've handled the same all along. Nobody's asked me to change the way I handle the claims or make any decisions differently than I normally would because of this coverage litigation.

Q. But then in connection with the litigation --

THE COURT: So how is it that your analysis is different if it's coverage litigation than if it's claims handling? Isn't the potential for coverage based on the facts that you find by the plaintiff in the underlying case? Isn't that where you get the concept of potential for coverage?

THE WITNESS: In the underlying case, yes, that's correct.

THE COURT: So how is that analysis different in a coverage case?

THE WITNESS: Because in this coverage litigation --

THE COURT: So what? The facts are the facts, aren't they?

THE WITNESS: We're taking a legal position in this coverage --

> THE COURT: The facts of the underlying cases are the facts of the underlying cases.
> THE WITNESS: Yes, correct.
> THE COURT: Is that right? [¶] And is it an analysis of the facts of the underlying cases that lead you to a determination of whether there's a potential for coverage?
> THE WITNESS: Yes.
> THE COURT: And that's both in -- wherever you are and whenever you are, that's the rule; right?
>
> THE WITNESS: That's correct.
> THE COURT: Okay. Good luck, Mr. Jean.
> MR. JEAN: Thank you, Your Honor.

Jean questioned Finberg further regarding the insurers' responses to the RFAs, and her verification of those responses under penalty of perjury. Judge Roesch intervened in this questioning, as follows:

> Q. [MR. JEAN] So when you were -- I'm a little confused because how is it that you could sign these under oath under penalties [sic] of perjury and deny the potential for coverage when you knew as a claims handler that there was the potential for coverage?
> A. [MS. FINBERG] I think I can clear up your confusion.
> Q. Yeah. Please do. I mean, that was an open-ended question, so go ahead.
>
> A. Okay. Thank you. These verifications, these requests for admissions were drafted and provided to me by coverage counsel, Mr. Eads' office.
> Q. Yes.

A. These are legal documents. I'm not an attorney. I'm just an adjuster. And I read them, and I reviewed them with Mr. Eads and his partners and was told, "This is a legal position that we're taking in the coverage litigation. We're preserving legal issues. We're asking the court for guidance, if you will." [¶] It had nothing to do with the way I handled my claims. Nobody ever asked me to withdraw a defense or stop handling or change the way I was handling. I signed these as the person most knowledgeable, the legal position asking the Court for guidance.

THE COURT: So you knew it was false when you verified it under penalty of perjury based on your own understanding of the underlying facts? Is that what you're telling us?

THE WITNESS: What was false, Your Honor?

THE COURT: It's false that there was, in fact, a potential for coverage under all of those seven. You told us that already today. [¶] And what you're telling me is that you signed this under penalty of perjury, and you knew it was false?

THE WITNESS: No, Your Honor. This is not false. I was handling my claims because there was a potential for coverage under all those claims. But these verifications, RFAs, were legal positions that were being taken in this coverage litigation, so . . .

THE COURT: So you knew that the underlying facts were that it was true that there was a potential for coverage, and yet you write in your verification that you declare under penalty of perjury that the foregoing responses are true and correct?

THE WITNESS: Right, because that was true and correct to the legal position that was being taken.

THE COURT: Oh, okay.

THE WITNESS: So I wasn't being inconsistent.

> THE COURT: I understand now. The facts don't matter. [¶] Is that what you're telling me?
> THE WITNESS: The facts don't matter in this litigation.
> THE COURT: All right.
> BY MR. JEAN: Q. So --
> THE COURT: May I see counsel in my chambers.

After the judge and counsel had a discussion in chambers, they returned to the courtroom, and the judge announced:

> THE COURT: Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, we are going to take an early lunchtime today. We're going to come back at one o'clock, and we are going to proceed. [¶] We'll have a different witness this afternoon, and we'll be dealing with things that are outside of your purview during that time, all right? Outside of your purview during that time. [¶] So you're excused to go to lunch.

The judge asked Finberg to "step outside," which she did. He summarized the chambers conversation that had just occurred, as follows:

> THE COURT: All right. Well, I will try to summarize. We've had a conversation, counsel and I, in my chambers regarding the testimony of the current witness, and the admission that she perjured herself in her verification. [¶] And at the conclusion of our conversations, it was determined at Mr. Goines' request that the witness be allowed an opportunity to obtain private counsel and either take the Fifth Amendment and refuse to respond to questions or not. [¶] Consequently in our questioning we're going to have a different witness this afternoon starting at one o'clock, and Ms. Finberg will be back tomorrow at nine o'clock for continued examination.

The insurers' counsel moved for a mistrial on the ground that the judge's treatment of Finberg conveyed that he did not believe her. Judge Roesch denied the motion without explanation.

The next day, Finberg appeared with personal counsel, who informed the court and counsel that Finberg would assert her Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination in response to all substantive questions from either side. Judge Roesch responded, "Either side and me too, I'll bet."

Judge Roesch then ordered that, when Finberg asserted the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination, she was to take the witness stand and do so in front of the jury. This was contrary to law. Requiring a witness to invoke the privilege in front of the jury invites the jury to draw an improper inference and violates Evidence Code section 913 (forbidding judges and attorneys from commenting on the assertion of the privilege, and forbidding juries from drawing any inference from it). (People v. Frierson (1991) 53 Cal.3d 730, 743; People v. Holloway (2004) 33 Cal.4th 96, 130; Victaulic, supra, 20 Cal.App.5th at p. 981.)

Judge Roesch also permitted Finberg to assert a blanket claim of privilege against self-incrimination as to all questions that would be asked of her. This, too, was contrary to law. A witness claiming this privilege against self-incrimination must do so with specific reference to particular questions asked, and the trial court must undertake a particularized inquiry with respect to each specific claim of privilege to determine whether the claimant has sustained his burden of establishing that the testimony or other evidence sought might tend to incriminate him." (Warford v. Medeiros (1984) 160 Cal.App.3d 1035, 1045.)

After Finberg took the witness stand and asserted the Fifth Amendment privilege in a blanket fashion as to all substantive questions from either side, Judge Roesch excused her, without allowing the insurers to cross-examine her. Her testimony remained in the case, and the insurers were denied their fundamental right to examine Finberg on subjects about which she had testified before she asserted the Fifth Amendment. The insurers had a statutory right to cross-examine Finberg. (Evid. Code, § 776, subd. (b).) Cross-examination is also a due process right that is fundamental to a fair proceeding. (Fost v. Superior Court (2000) 80 Cal.App.4th 724, 735.) "[T]he right to cross-examination cannot be defeated by a valid claim of privilege, even a privilege as strong as that embodied in the Fifth Amendment." (Ibid.) Although the scope of the insurers' cross-examination would have been limited to topics on which Finberg had testified during Victaulic's questioning, she had testified to multiple topics other than the RFAs.

Judge Roesch's handling of Victaulic, described above, constituted misconduct in multiple ways. His questioning of Finberg was inappropriately aggressive and conveyed to the jury that he questioned her credibility. As stated by the appellate court, "[A]ny fair reading of the record reveals that the court acted in a way that from every indication was hostile to Finberg—and that it did not believe her." (Victaulic, supra, 20 Cal.App.5th at pp. 974-975.) Judge Roesch's improper treatment of Finberg included sarcastic and gratuitous remarks related to her (e.g., "Good luck, Mr. Jean," and "Either side and me too, I'll bet"). A trial court commits misconduct if it persists in making discourteous and disparaging remarks to a witness and utters frequent comment from which the jury may plainly perceive that the judge does not believe the witness's testimony. (Victaulic, at p. 975.) The appellate court found that Judge Roesch's questioning of Finberg violated these principles, was improper, and constituted misconduct. (Ibid.) The commission agreed.

It is also misconduct for a trial court to act as an advocate for either side, due to the significance of the court in the eyes of the jury. (Victaulic, supra, 20 Cal.App.5th at p. 975.) The appellate court found that Judge Roesch improperly acted as an advocate for Victaulic by intervening in the case and cross-examining Finberg as he did. (Ibid.) The commission agreed.

Judge Roesch's handling of Finberg's assertion of her Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination was also improper. The judge lacked the judicial discretion to require Finberg to assert the Fifth Amendment in front of the jury. (Victaulic, supra, 20 Cal.App.5th at p. 982.) The appellate court found this ruling "hard to comprehend, in light of the authorities." (Ibid.) The insurers' counsel brought to the judge's attention that it was wrong to make Finberg invoke the privilege in front of the jury, but he nevertheless informed Finberg's counsel that Finberg would take the stand to invoke the privilege. When Finberg was getting ready to take the stand, the insurers' counsel said that they would request that she be questioned outside the presence of the jury, but that they understood that their request was going to be denied. Judge Roesch confirmed that it would be denied. Requiring Finberg to assert the Fifth Amendment in front of the jury without the discretion to do so constituted an abuse of authority.

Judge Roesch admitted knowing that a witness cannot assert a blanket claim of the Fifth Amendment privilege and that each question and potential answer must implicate the witness in a criminal act in some way. Counsel for Victaulic brought to the judge's attention his understanding that the Fifth Amendment needed to be evaluated on a question by question basis and that a blanket invocation was not proper. The insurers' counsel moved for a mistrial on the ground that a blanket assertion of the privilege denied them a fair trial. Judge Roesch denied the motion. Despite knowing the law on this issue, the judge allowed Finberg to invoke the privilege on a blanket basis and declined to conduct the particularized inquiry required by law. He asserted that he did this because he believed he had "buy-in" from counsel. Having attorneys agree to something the law does not permit does not obviate the judge's duty to respect and comply with the law. The judge's action in this regard constituted an intentional disregard of the law.

The insurers also raised the issue of the right to cross-examination, which is a fundamental right. They told the judge that it was unfair to allow Finberg to invoke the privilege against self-incrimination in the middle of her testimony without giving them the opportunity to rehabilitate her or give her a chance to explain her prior testimony, and they moved for a mistrial on this basis. Judge Roesch denied the motion without explanation. The judge's handling of this issue reflected a disregard for the insurers' fundamental right to cross-examination. The appellate court found that allowing Finberg's testimony to remain in the case, rather than excluding it, had a "devastating effect." (Victaulic, supra, 20 Cal.App.5th at p. 980.)

Judge Roesch's conduct also reflected embroilment. According to the California Judicial Conduct Handbook (Rothman et al. (4th ed. 2017) § 2:1, p. 58), embroilment can manifest itself when a judge is "attempting to see to it that a certain result prevails out of a misguided perception of the judicial role." In Victaulic, Judge Roesch believed—erroneously—that Finberg had testified falsely, and he inserted himself into Victaulic's examination of her in an effort to establish that for the jury. Rather than acting as an impartial jurist, he persisted in questioning her in an overly forceful manner, required her to assert the Fifth Amendment in front of the jury, and did not permit her to be questioned by the insurers, who repeatedly asked him for the opportunity to do so. Judge Roesch acknowledged that he overstepped his role as a trial judge and that his course of conduct related to Finberg's testimony was misguided. His interaction with Finberg, and the issues that presented themselves in connection with her testimony, reflected a loss of neutrality that is the hallmark of embroilment.

Judge Roesch's conduct violated canon 2A (a judge shall respect and comply with the law and shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary); canon 3 (a judge shall perform the duties of judicial office impartially, competently, and diligently); canon 3B(4) (a judge shall be patient, dignified, and courteous to those with whom the judge deals in an official capacity); and canon 3B(7) (a judge shall accord to every person who has a legal interest in a proceeding, or that person's lawyer, the full right to be heard according to law).

II. Westlake Trust v. Testate and Intestate Successors of Regete Gruhn

In July 2017, Judge Roesch presided over a hearing in Westlake Trust v. Testate and Intestate Successors of Regete Gruhn (RG16820169). Attorney Caroline Gegg appeared for plaintiff Alvin Cox as trustee of the Westlake Trust. Cox was seeking a quiet title judgment. There was no opposition. Gegg explained that Regete Gruhn left the property to Barbara Blumberg in a 2005 will, that Gruhn died on December 23, 2008, and that Blumberg decided not to probate the will and entered into a purchase agreement with Cox in March 2016. Gegg also informed the court that Cox had paid the back taxes on the property, paid the arrearages to the homeowners association and to the mortgage lender, and was making payments on the loan. Judge Roesch indicated that he would need Blumberg to authenticate the copy of the will Gegg was attempting to introduce into evidence, and a certified copy of a quitclaim deed, and that he wanted to know whether there was a supplemental tax assessment, based on Gruhn's death in 2008, and whether the taxes had been paid. The hearing was continued to permit Gegg to present this evidence.

At the subsequent hearing on July 28, 2017, Blumberg testified that she was present at Gruhn's attorney's office when Gruhn signed her will. Judge Roesch asked her, "And you are the principal beneficiary under this will and the lawyer permitted you to be present when it's signed?" Blumberg responded, "No. He made me leave the room at some point." Judge Roesch then made the following statement:

> THE COURT: I used to write wills for a living. That -- for a lawyer to have permitted the principal beneficiary of a will to come with the person who made the will and to be in the same building or on the same block at the time of the signing absolutely opens the door for a challenge based on undue influence. Now, maybe it's > true, maybe it's not. Nobody is raising that issue, but . . . .

Judge Roesch's comment implied that Blumberg's conduct may have been subject to a claim of undue influence, even after Blumberg testified that she was not in the room when Gruhn signed her will.

Judge Roesch then aggressively questioned Cox, and engaged in argument with Gegg, about the payment of property taxes. During the examination of Cox, Gegg offered to provide to the court certified copies of a Notice of Proposed Escape Assessment concerning property taxes on the subject property. Gegg asked Cox to identify the "event date" on the document, which she indicated was in the upper right-hand corner. Cox identified that date as December 23, 2008 (the date of Gruhn's death). The following exchange occurred:

> THE COURT: Isn't it more important the date in the upper left-hand corner, which is the date it was mailed to -- evidently was mailed to Mr. Cox? June 8th, 2017, so you received this on -- sometime after June 8th?
> THE WITNESS: Yes.
> THE COURT: All right. So had the taxes and the escape assessment that is listed here been paid before the last hearing?
> MS. GEGG: Your Honor, we are getting to that, and I would like to set a foundation for you, Your Honor, will understand how this process works.
>
> THE COURT: Well, you told me last time that these taxes had previously been paid prior to that hearing. Now --
> MS. GEGG: No.
> THE COURT: -- it turns out that may not be true.

> MS. GEGG: No, Your Honor. What I did say is all the back property taxes have been paid and the taxes are current. What Your Honor asked about were the supplemental taxes that are reassessed, and we have that information here and I would like to present that.

Shortly thereafter, Gegg asked Cox if there were additional assessments due on the property, and he answered that there were. Judge Roesch stated that the date of the notice was June 22, 2017, and said: "Well, the escape assessment was due subsequent to June the 22nd. It hadn't been paid before then." The following exchange occurred:

> MS. GEGG: Q. Mr. Cox, do you know if it's possible to pay these assessments for supplemental taxes now?
> A. It's not possible.
> Q. Why is that?
>
> A. Because they haven't given us the bill. We can't get the bill until October.
> Q. Did you attempt to pay the bill for the supplemental taxes?
>
> A. Believe me, we did.
> Q. Are these assessments secured by the property?
> A. Yes.
> THE COURT: Really?
> MS. GEGG: Yes.
> THE COURT: With who as the owner?
> MS. GEGG: They are secured by the property. The owner is not personally liable for these assessments. Although, Mr. Cox is willing to become personally liable for these assessments.

THE COURT: I'll tell you my opinion of what I think the law is. I believe that the law is that if the property is transferred from the heir who obtained it through somebody's death prior to supplemental taxes or escape assessments being levied on the -- whoever bought the property, either through a probate process or some other process, does not have the obligation of paying the supplemental taxes except to the date of their deed. If they bought the deed -- if the person died on January 1st, the property was transferred on July the 1st, if the county doesn't get around to assessing escape taxes until December 1st, the individual who owned the property between the date of death of January 1st and date of sale of July the 1st or June the 1st, whatever it was, is personally liable, but it's an unsecured obligation and the property becomes liable from the date of the new deed.

MS. GEGG: I --

THE COURT: I'm sorry. Your client doesn't have a deed to this property yet. If the property is transferred into his name -- well, he does have a deed. I don't remember whether it was recorded or not.

MS. GEGG: It has been recorded, yes.

THE COURT: Any escape assessment that was due prior to the date of his -- of the deed naming him as the owner becomes the unsecured obligation of the Estate of Regete Gruhn.

MS. GEGG: Q. Mr. Cox, are you willing to pay the supplemental tax assessments when they are generated in October of 2017?

A. Yes, I am.

Cox then testified that an exhibit was a first and second installment of taxes for Alameda County, and that the exhibit reflected that he had paid the taxes on the subject property, and that they were current. Judge Roesch directed Cox to language that stated, “Assessed to Gruhn, Regete, Heirs of Estate,” with an address. Judge Roesch asked Cox whose address that was, and he replied that it was his address. Judge Roesch asked Cox to state the date of the second to the last page of the exhibit. Cox confirmed the date was July 17, 2017. Judge Roesch stated, “That was just a few days ago. . . . Eleven days.” Gegg resumed questioning Cox.

> MS. GEGG: Q. Mr. Cox, are you willing to agree to a judgement [sic] that you will be personally liable for the supplemental taxes?
> A. Yes.

Judge Roesch then examined Cox, as follows:

> THE COURT: How many pieces of property do you own, Mr. Cox?
> MS. GEGG: Your Honor, I object on the basis of privacy. I’m not quite sure whether Mr. Cox wants to --
> THE COURT: Well, I’m looking for -- what is your experience in the world of buying and selling real estate?
> THE WITNESS: Extensive.
> THE COURT: Extensive. All right. [¶] So you knew what an escape assessment was before I brought it up at the last hearing.
> THE WITNESS: No.
> THE COURT: Really? And you didn’t know what a supplemental tax assessment was after the death of an individual?
>
> THE WITNESS: None of it concerned me.
> THE COURT: All right.

When Gegg was giving her closing statement, Judge Roesch interrupted her, as follows:

> THE COURT: You're not -- you're not going to argue that the county's supplemental tax assessment has expired, are you?
> MS. GEGG: No.
> THE COURT: Okay.
> MS. GEGG: And that will be paid, as Mr. Cox promised, when generated.

Gegg summarized the actions that had been taken regarding the subject property, including that the deed from Blumberg to Cox had been recorded, that Cox had paid Blumberg for her interest in the property, that the back taxes had been paid and were current, that the arrearages due to the homeowners association had been paid and were current, that Cox had brought a loan to a bank current, that he was waiting for the supplemental tax bill, which would not be generated until October 2017, and that all the back taxes were paid during Blumberg's possession of the property. The following exchange occurred:

> THE COURT: Except for the supplemental taxes.
> MS. GEGG: Which haven't been generated yet.
> THE COURT: Well, that's not my fault. It is the obligation of somebody, whoever wants to own a piece of property, to give notice to the county that they own the property so that the property can be reassessed to its current value. What you're telling me is that Ms. Blumberg did not pay the supplemental taxes and left the county begging.
> MS. GEGG: No.
> THE COURT: And then she transferred the property over to Mr. Cox's trust. And now the debt is going to be assessed by the county, but they haven't got around to doing it.

MS. GEGG: What I'm saying is that --

THE COURT: So all the taxes haven't been paid.

MS. GEGG: No.

THE COURT: Some of the taxes have been paid.

MS. GEGG: Correct. And the supplemental taxes haven't been paid only because they haven't been generated yet. Mr. Cox --

THE COURT: Oh -- oh, listen. I'm sitting here and I -- you were here a month ago or a little bit more than a month ago and at that point in time the representation was that all the taxes had been paid. I raised the question about the supplemental assessment. There was a suggestion that, yes, it had been paid and that we need to bring Ms. Blumberg in to tell us about it. Ms. Blumberg's testimony is she never made any effort to notify the assessor or tax collector, whoever it is, that's supposed to get notification by the person who's [sic] has been nominated executor on the will. She took the property. She didn't rent it out. She didn't pay homeowners association. And then Mr. Cox got involved and Mr. Cox paid those while the property -- before the property was transferred to him by deed from Ms. Blumberg. [¶] Nobody ever said a word about supplemental taxes, and if I had, in fact, approved your request at the last hearing and given Mr. Cox his qui[et] title deed, if you will, order of qui[et] title that he could record, then the county would have nothing more than an unsecured obligation on Mrs. Blumberg perhaps, but really on the Estate of Regete Gruhn. And nobody is going to probate that estate. And so when is the county going to get their money?

MS. GEGG: The county --

THE COURT: If the answer is if you had gotten the deed at the last hearing, the county would never get its money.

MS. GEGG: I beg your pardon?

THE COURT: The county would never have gotten its money.

MS. GEGG: No, Your Honor. The --

THE COURT: We would have an unsecured --

MS. GEGG: When the deed was recorded, that triggered the reassessment, and the county has said that that bill, the supplemental bill, would not be generated until October 2017, and at the last hearing, I need to correct you, because what was represented was that all the back taxes had been paid. You asked about the supplemental assessment. We showed you there was a showing on -- actually, Mr. Cox, was on his phone, showing that the supplemental assessments were -- had there been notice of the escape assessment, but again, they -- Mr. Cox had been unable to pay them, and he's tried to, because it hasn't been generated yet.

THE COURT: Well, how do you explain the fact that all the correspondence about the state [sic] assessment is subsequent to the last hearing?

MS. GEGG: I don't -- I don't understand.

THE COURT: Well, 11 days ago -- Exhibit R, was it? 11 days ago Exhibit R shows that they were mailing correspondence to Mr. Cox regarding the supplemental taxes. Well, why don't we have something going back to 2008. The county does not wait forever, certainly not 10 years or nine years, to assess supplemental taxes. They assess them as soon as they know about it.

MS. GEGG: Right. And --

THE COURT: Nobody --

MS. GEGG: -- what happened is recordation of the deeds triggered at the reassessment, and Mr. Cox is willing to pay the supplemental taxes. There is no issue there. The county has --

THE COURT: Your willingness to pay them is fine.

MS. GEGG: But he can't because they haven't been generated yet.

THE COURT: Well, if you asked them to generate them last week, what do you expect?

MS. GEGG: No.

THE COURT: You expect --

MS. GEGG: This was a matter of course they won't be generated until October 2017.

THE COURT: Well, if you had given them notice when Regete Gruhn died, they would have issued them in October of -- or whatever year it was that she died. She died in December 2008, so they would have been processed in 2009, but they didn't know that she was dead. All they knew was nobody was paying the taxes.

MS. GEGG: Your Honor, is the issue here that Your Honor's concerned the taxes won't be paid?

THE COURT: No. My concern is that it appears to me that you are seeking a qui[et] title judgment that has the effect of cheating somebody.

MS. GEGG: No.

THE COURT: Well –

MS. GEGG: No.

THE COURT: -- it sure looks like it to me.

MS. GEGG: As Mr. Cox has testified that he has attempted to pay the supplemental taxes. That the problem is they haven't been generated yet.

THE COURT: What was the date that you were here last?

MS. GEGG: July 14th.

THE COURT: You were here two weeks ago.

MS. GEGG: Yes.

THE COURT: All right. And he -- had he paid the supplemental taxes then?

MS. GEGG: Again, he couldn't, because they hadn't -- the bill had not been generate [sic] yet.

THE COURT: Well, why can't --

MS. GEGG: They aren't generated until October.

THE COURT: When did you file this lawsuit?

MS. GEGG: It was in, I believe, last year, 2016.

THE COURT: It was in 2016?

MS. GEGG: Yes.

THE COURT: Well, in 2016 when you filed this lawsuit, had all the taxes been paid? The answer is no.

MS. GEGG: And, again --

THE COURT: In your lawsuit did you say, well, whoopsie, there's some escape assessment that hasn't been made yet and we haven't paid those, but we will pay those? Don't you worry.

> MS. GEGG: No. That's because they hadn't been triggered yet. It hadn't been triggered, and what the --
> THE COURT: No. No. It was triggered on the death of Regete Gruhn.
> MS. GEGG: Right. Well, actually, this is what it says here. It says here that the event date is December 23rd, 2008.
> THE COURT: There are two assessment dates here. One is the date of reassessment on the date of death of Regete Gruhn. And then there is a second reassessment, and that's on the recording of the deed from Ms. Blumberg to Mr. Cox. So there is [sic] two assessments here. Two reassessments according to Prop 13. Nobody paid any attention at all to the reassessment based on the December 2008 date. None.
> MS. GEGG: Your Honor, that is not true. Again, Mr. Cox has attempted to pay the supplemental taxes, but cannot because they won't be generated until October of 2017. Now, what we are willing to propose is that in October 2017 when Mr. Cox pays the supplemental taxes that Your Honor issue a qui[et] title judgment on this property. Everything has been done. All the administration, all the things that Regete Gruhn wanted to have done in her will has been done.

In response to Judge Roesch's concerns, Gegg asked that the hearing be continued until October, when the supplemental tax bill generates, and Cox could pay the supplemental taxes. Judge Roesch denied the request. The following exchange occurred:

> THE COURT: That's denied.
> MS. GEGG: I see. On with [sic] grounds?
> THE COURT: Because it's denied. Actually, you should have finished your trial when you were here two weeks ago.

MS. GEGG: But, Your Honor --

THE COURT: You didn't finish it two weeks ago.

MS. GEGG: But Your Honor wanted to hear information about supplemental taxes and Mrs. Blumberg's testimony.

THE COURT: Oh, I don't mind the two weeks, but you're going to finish your presentation today. If you're not able to demonstrate your case today, I have to deny it. We've continued this case before, and we are not going to continue it again.

MS. GEGG: It's only been continued once.

THE COURT: That's right. We continued it before and we are not going to continue it again. [¶] Anything more?

MS. GEGG: Only one other matter, Your Honor. We are willing to offer that Mr. Cox will be personally liable for the supplemental taxes which will be included in the judgment.

THE COURT: How in the world could I issue a judgment saying that the plaintiff in a qui[et] title case has an obligation to pay money when -- he can have the title now, but he's got a personal obligation to pay the money later? There is no authority for me to give that kind of conditional judgment.

MS. GEGG: The only other thing I could suggest, Your Honor, is that -- and, again, the problem is that the bill won't be generated until October of 2017. Mr. Cox could provide an estimated amount and -- as proof that the supplemental taxes have been paid, and then any additional balance would be returned to him or billed to him, but that might be one of the ways to allay your concerns about supplemental taxes.

THE COURT: You know, the supplemental taxes were an example that I thought off the top of my head of an obligation that should have gone along with the estate. I don't know if there are others because I don't know that I'm smart enough to think of everything all at once. But it turned out that that hit a sore spot. The sore spot being between the last time you were here and now you've gone through considerable effort to try to get the tax assessor to assess the supplemental taxes that hadn't been paid.

MS. GEGG: Correct.

THE COURT: My reading of what I understand the law to be is that the supplemental taxes are the debt for the period of time between the death of Regete Gruhn and the date that the deed in favor of Mr. Cox, your client, was filed. The supplemental taxes that were due between that period of time are on the Estate of Ms. Gruhn. [¶] Now, I've heard testimony today that Ms. Blumberg claims she owned the property during that period of time, and so perhaps they are her personal debt. They are not Mr. Cox's personal debt.

MS. GEGG: But he's willing to pay and be liable for that debt.

THE COURT: Well, I understand that, but from the evidence it would appear that nobody has ever paid that debt to this day even though the lady died nine years ago -- well, almost nine years ago, a little less.

MS. GEGG: But that debt will be paid. That debt will be paid. Mr. Cox has been trying to pay that debt, again, just because the bill has not been generated.

THE COURT: He's been trying to since two weeks ago. [¶] Mr. Gressel, would you make holes in the document, please.

THE COURT ATTENDANT: Sure.

> THE COURT: Is there anything more that you would like to add?
> MS. GEGG: Yeah. I'd actually object to the characterization my client is trying to avoid paying the debt, paying the supplemental taxes. That certainly has never been his intent or never been his actions. He would like to pay, but, again, that information has -- is not provided yet.
> THE COURT: All right. Anything more?

Judge Roesch dismissed the case with prejudice. Cox appealed. The Court of Appeal reversed the judgment based on the uncontroverted facts established in the record and remanded the matter for entry of an order quieting title to the property, subject to the obligation to pay any supplemental real property tax that may be assessed. The appellate court stated: "The fact that real property taxes had gone into arrears while Barbara Blumberg owned the property can hardly be attributed to plaintiff [Cox], who paid all back taxes that were due, nor can plaintiff be faulted for not yet having paid a supplemental assessment that had not yet been made." (Cox v. Blumberg (Apr. 16, 2018, A152198) [nonpub. opn.], p. 8.)

Judge Roesch displayed poor demeanor in the Westlake matter. His discourteous comments include: "What you're telling me is that Ms. Blumberg did not pay the supplemental taxes and left the county begging"; "If [the] answer is if you had gotten the deed at the last hearing, the county would never get its money"; "Well, if you asked them to generate them last week, what do you expect?"; "Well, if you had given them notice when Regete Gruhn died[.] . . . All they knew was nobody was paying the taxes"; and "My concern is that it appears to me that you are seeking a qui[et] title judgment that has the effect of cheating somebody."

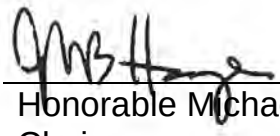
Judge Roesch's conduct in Westlake also reflected embroilment, which occurs when a judge "surrenders the role of impartial factfinder/decisionmaker."

(Rothman, Cal. Judicial Conduct Handbook, supra, § 2:1, p. 58.) Rather than remain neutral, the judge repeatedly engaged the parties and counsel in a manner that conveyed his concern that the parties were "cheating somebody." But the appellate court found that "the circumstances certainly do not evince an intent to cheat or negate [Cox's] entitlement to an order confirming the trust's ownership of the property." (Cox, supra, (April 16, 2018, A152198) [nonpub. opn.], p. 8.) The commission agreed.

Judge Roesch argued that he was merely exercising his "gatekeeping" function because he believed there should have been a probate proceeding to transfer the property to Blumberg before the sale to Cox, rather than a quiet title action, and that a supplemental assessment would not be enforceable if the petition to quiet title were granted. But the appellate court found that there were ways to protect the county's right to a future supplemental assessment. (Cox, supra, (April 16, 2018, A152198) [nonpub. opn.], p. 8.) And even if the judge had been correct about his concerns, he could have conveyed those concerns to the parties and counsel without resorting to unduly harsh language.

Judge Roesch's actions violated canon 2A (a judge shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary) and canon 3B(4) (a judge shall be patient, dignified, and courteous to those with whom the judge deals in an official capacity).

Judge Roesch's conduct in both cases was, at a minimum, improper action.



The commission considered Judge Roesch's prior discipline to be an aggravating factor. (Policy Declarations of Com. on Jud. Performance, policy 7.1(2)(e).) In 2011, he received an advisory letter for making discourteous remarks to a self-represented litigant, who told the judge he was an attorney in another state, but was a teacher in California. During a colloquy about whether the litigant's service of process was proper, Judge Roesch remarked, "Well, I can see why you don't practice law. You don't bother to read the law." When the litigant asked Judge Roesch if he needed to do anything else for the judge to read his motion, Judge Roesch responded, “Well, I don’t mean to be insulting, but that’s an idiotic question.” When the litigant asked Judge Roesch for an explanation, he responded, “It’s not my job to explain something to somebody who says they are a lawyer.” Judge Roesch also remarked, “I sure hope you teach elementary school better than you practice law.” Judge Roesch’s treatment of the litigant violated canon 3B(4), which requires judges to be patient, dignified, and courteous to those with whom they deal in an official capacity. Judge Roesch argued that his prior discipline is not relevant. The commission disagreed because it concerns the judge’s discourteous treatment of those appearing before him, which also occurred here.

Commission members Hon. Michael B. Harper; Dr. Michael A. Moodian; Hon. William S. Dato; Mr. Eduardo De La Riva; Hon. Lisa B. Lench; Nanci E. Nishimura, Esq.; Victor E. Salazar, Esq.; Mr. Richard Simpson; and Mr. Adam N. Torres voted to impose the public admonishment. Ms. Kay Cooperman Jue would have imposed a private admonishment. Ms. Sarah Kruer Jager did not participate.

| IN THE MATTER CONCERNING FORMER JUDGE DAVID A. MASON | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING SEVERE PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT PURSUANT TO STIPULATION (Commission Rule 116.5) |

This disciplinary matter concerns retired Judge David A. Mason of the Modoc County Superior Court. On November 9, 2020, former Judge Mason and his counsel, David S. McMonigle, Esq., entered into a stipulation with Director-Chief Counsel Gregory Dresser, pursuant to commission rule 116.5, to resolve the pending preliminary investigation involving former Judge Mason by the imposition of a severe public admonishment and the judge's agreement not to serve in a judicial capacity in the future. Judge Mason tendered his retirement from judicial office, effective October 31, 2020. The Stipulation for Discipline by Consent was approved by the commission on December 2, 2020, pursuant to the following terms and conditions and stipulated facts and legal conclusions. A copy of the stipulation is attached.

TERMS AND CONDITIONS OF AGREEMENT

1. This agreement resolves the matters alleged in the commission's pending preliminary investigation involving former Judge Mason.

2. The commission shall issue a severe public admonishment based on the agreed Stipulated Facts and Legal Conclusions set forth therein.

3. If the commission accepts this proposed disposition, the commission's decision and order imposing public admonishment may articulate the reasons for its decision and include explanatory language that the commission deems appropriate.

4. Upon acceptance by the commission, this stipulation and the commission's decision and order shall be made public.

5. Judge Mason waives any further proceedings and review in this matter, including formal proceedings (rule 118, et seq.) and review by the Supreme Court (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 9.60).

6. On October 6, 2020, Judge Mason tendered his retirement effective October 31, 2020 through written correspondence to Governor Gavin Newsom. A copy of that letter is attached to the stipulation.

7. Failure to comply with the terms and conditions of this agreement may constitute additional and independent grounds for discipline.

8. Former Judge Mason has agreed not to seek or hold judicial office, or accept a position or assignment as a judicial officer, subordinate judicial officer, or judge pro tem with any court in the State of California, or accept a reference of work from any California state court, at any time after the effective date of his retirement (October 31, 2020).

9. If former Judge Mason attempts to serve in a judicial capacity in violation of the foregoing paragraph, the commission may withdraw the severe public admonishment and resume the preliminary investigation as to all of the matters in the preliminary investigation letters.

10. Former Judge Mason agrees that the facts recited herein are true and correct, and that the discipline to which the parties stipulate herein is appropriate in light of those facts.

11. The commission may reject this proposed disposition and resume its preliminary investigation. If the commission does so, nothing in this proposed disposition will be deemed to be admitted or conceded by the parties.

Accordingly, it is hereby stipulated and agreed that the commission shall issue a severe public admonishment on the above Terms and Conditions of Agreement, and based on the following Stipulated Facts and Legal Conclusions.

STIPULATED FACTS AND LEGAL CONCLUSIONS

Former Judge David A. Mason became a judge of the Modoc County Superior Court in 2009, following appointment to that office. His current term began in January 2017. His retirement became effective October 31, 2020.

I. Lack of Candor in Two Responses to the Commission

A. 2019 Public Admonishment

On December 3, 2019, the commission issued a public admonishment to former Judge Mason for failing to disclose a personal relationship with attorney Tom Gifford. According to former Judge Mason, at the time he took the bench, he had a "personal and sustained" relationship with Mr. Gifford, including a "prior professional relationship," and "ongoing social interactions in the community," which continued after he took the bench in 2009. In 2013, former Judge Mason went on a two-week trip to Italy with Mr. Gifford and their respective spouses, as part of a celebration of the Giffords' wedding anniversary, which "marked an escalation of the friendship." Mr. Gifford made regular appearances as an attorney in cases over which former Judge Mason presided during this period. Mr. Gifford moved to Texas shortly after the trip to Italy, but this did not immediately impact their social relationship. Former Judge Mason traveled to Mr. Gifford's home in Texas on two occasions, for approximately one week each time, including once over a Thanksgiving holiday. In or about April 2017, Mr. Gifford returned to Modoc County, and was awarded a contract to serve as Modoc County's conflicts attorney for indigent defense. He resumed making regular appearances as an attorney in cases over which former Judge Mason presided, including appearances in at least 86 criminal cases from 2017 to 2019. According to former Judge Mason, he and Mr. Gifford "maintained some form of friendship" in 2017, but it was "not as strong" as before Mr. Gifford moved to Texas. Former Judge Mason recalled only one dinner with Mr. Gifford in 2017.

The commission found that, even if former Judge Mason was not disqualified from presiding over Mr. Gifford's cases, he was required to disclose all facts about their relationship that were reasonably relevant to disqualification, on the record, in every case in which Mr. Gifford appeared. Former Judge Mason presented no evidence that he ever did so, and conceded that he did not make a disclosure in every case where he was required to do so, and that he made "mistakes . . . regarding disclosures." The commission found that former Judge Mason violated canons 3E(2) and 3E(2)(a) over an extended period by failing to make the required disclosures on the record.[1]

B. June 25, 2019 Response to the Commission

Prior to the December 3, 2019 public admonishment, former Judge Mason responded to the commission's allegations in a letter dated June 25, 2019. In his response, former Judge Mason stated that he would disseminate the following disclosure:

> To All Parties and Counsel of Record:
> The purpose of this declaration is to disclose my longstanding relationship with local attorney Tom Gifford.
> Prior to my appointment to the bench in 2009 I developed a professional relationship with Mr. Gifford. This relationship developed into a social friendship where I was [sic] occasionally dined publically [sic] with Mr. Gifford and his wife and was invited to dinner at Mr. Gifford's home. These interactions lessened after my appointment to the bench but did continue after I became a judge.
> Sometime in the early part of 2013 I accompanied Mr. Gifford and his wife on a trip to Italy for two weeks as part of their celebration of their anniversary. Shortly thereafter, Mr. Gifford moved back to

[1] When former Judge Mason took the bench in 2009, canon 3E(2) of the Code of Judicial Ethics stated that judges "shall disclose on the record information that is reasonably relevant to the question of disqualification under Code of Civil Procedure section 170.1, even if the judge believes there is no actual basis for disqualification." This requirement was renumbered as canon 3E(2)(a) effective January 1, 2013. Under Code of Civil Procedure section 170.1, subdivision (a)(6)(A)(iii), judges are disqualified when "[a] person aware of the facts might reasonably entertain a doubt that the judge would be able to be impartial."

Texas and was practicing law there. I visited Mr. Gifford in his home in Texas on two occasions for about one week each time.

Mr. Gifford returned to Modoc County in 2017 and resumed his law practice. Since he returned in 2017, my social contact with Mr. Gifford has been minimal. We speak in a friendly manner on occasion and had dinner once in 2017. Mr. Gifford and I no longer have social contact, though we are friendly and exchange pleasantries when we interact in public.

Notwithstanding our history, I believe that I have and that I can in the future remain fair and impartial in matters where Mr. Gifford appears. You may inquire when your case is called if you wish to receive more information concerning my history with Mr. Gifford.

I declare under penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct.

Hon. David A. Mason
Asst Presiding Judge

Former Judge Mason described the above disclosure as a "comprehensive disclosure that will disseminate all relevant detail. . . ." Former Judge Mason stated that the above-written disclosure "will be published in Judge Mason's department with copies available for attorneys appearing in a new matter involving Mr. Gifford."

C. Misleading Disclosure Following the 2019 Public Admonishment

Following the December 3, 2019 public admonishment, instead of the disclosure described, above, in his response to the commission, former Judge Mason gave the following disclosure [hereinafter referred to as the "alternate" disclosure], which he delivered orally and in writing:

To All Parties and Counsel of Record:

The purpose of this declaration is to disclose that prior to my appointment to the bench in 2009 I had a professional relationship with attorney Tom Gifford that developed into a social friendship. I was occasionally invited to dinner at Mr. Gifford's home, and on a few occasions I dined in public with Mr. Gifford and his wife.

> Sometime after I took the bench, Mr. Gifford moved back to Texas and began practicing law there. During that time I visited Mr. Gifford and his family at his home in Texas on a couple of occasions. In the summer of 2013, I accompanied Mr. Gifford and his wife on a trip to Italy. My social contact with Mr. Gifford has been minimal from then to the present. Notwithstanding our history, I believe that I have, and that I can in the future, remain fair and impartial in matters where Mr. Gifford appears.

The alternate disclosure acknowledges that former Judge Mason has dined at Mr. Gifford's home, and has also dined in public with Mr. Gifford and his wife, but creates the misimpression that all of those dinners occurred prior to 2009. Former Judge Mason also failed to disclose that he and Mr. Gifford met for social dinners within the last three years.

The alternate disclosure states that former Judge Mason visited Mr. Gifford in Texas on two occasions, on undisclosed dates, and for undisclosed durations. By failing to disclose the dates and durations of the visits, former Judge Mason improperly minimized the disclosure of his contacts with Mr. Gifford. By referencing the Texas trips prior to a 2013 trip to Italy, former Judge Mason created the false impression that the Texas visits occurred prior to 2013. Former Judge Mason also improperly minimized his contacts with Mr. Gifford by failing to disclose the duration and purpose of the trip to Italy.

Former Judge Mason's June 25, 2019 response to the commission lacked candor by providing to the commission a disclosure that was materially different from the actual disclosure that he gave to parties who appeared before him in court, as described above.

D. June 26, 2020 Response to the Commission

In the most recent preliminary investigation, the commission contacted former Judge Mason on April 23, 2020, concerning the disparate disclosures and an apparent lack of candor to the commission. In a letter dated June 26, 2020, former Judge Mason stated that the alternate disclosure, "was circulated to litigants prior to his June 2019 submission, but believes that occurred as early as late May 2019." He stated, "These protocols, detailed in Judge Mason's prior submission, were followed from that time until the present, including cases in which Mr. Gifford appeared after the December 2019 Public Admonishment." Former Judge Mason stated he used the alternate disclosure throughout 2019, and that it "was also published in the courtroom and at the clerk's office continuously over the last year . . . ." Despite former Judge Mason's assertion that he continuously disclosed his relationship with Mr. Gifford throughout 2019, he made no disclosure in many cases in which Mr. Gifford appeared during the time period from May to December 2019. Former Judge Mason's June 26, 2020 response to the commission lacked candor by making misrepresentations about the disclosures the judge made from May to December 2019.

The judge's conduct constitutes a failure to uphold the integrity and independence of the judiciary (canon 1), a failure to avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety in all of the judge's activities (canon 2), a failure to respect and comply with the law and act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary (canon 2A), a failure to cooperate with the commission (canon 3D(4)), a failure to disclose on the record information that is reasonably relevant to the question of disqualification (canon 3E(2)), and a failure to conduct all of the judge's extrajudicial activities so that they do not cast reasonable doubt on the judge's capacity to act impartially (canon 4A).

II. Continuing Failure to Disclose Personal Relationship with Attorney Tom Gifford

A. Failure to Disclose Gift to Mr. Gifford

On or about October 29, 2019 to December 16, 2019, former Judge Mason orally disclosed in chambers, to two attorneys and two probation department employees, that he brought Mr. Gifford a gift and placed it in his attorney mail slot. The gift was a pennant from Mr. Gifford's alma mater. Judge Mason failed to ever disclose the gift on the record in any case.

B. Failure to Disclose After the Public Admonishment

Following the December 3, 2019 public admonishment, Mr. Gifford continued to appear regularly before former Judge Mason in both criminal and civil cases. After December 3, 2019, former Judge Mason failed to properly disclose on the record information concerning his relationship with Mr. Gifford that is reasonably relevant to the question of disqualification under Code of Civil Procedure section 170.1, as exemplified by the following.

On December 10, 2019, in People v. Sarah Hewitt (No. F-19-099), former Judge Mason stated, "I don't know if you heard my disclosure. Mr. Gifford and I have been friends for years, we practiced law against one another and developed a friendship. It's kind of spelled out there." On December 18, 2019, in People v. Danny Ray Dial (No. F-19-124), former Judge Mason stated, "I have a long standing friendship with Mr. Gifford. We haven't had any social connection in person for probably a year and a half or two years. But in the past I've visited the home that he owns in Corpus Christi, Texas. I've also had dinner with him and his wife and other friends on two occasions since I've been a Judge. And early on in my career as a judge I went to – took a trip to Italy with Mr. Gifford and his wife. [¶] All of those things being said, I do not believe that I am unable to be fair and unbiased, and I do not recuse myself." The above disclosures in Hewitt and Dial were misleading and improperly minimized the judge's contacts with Mr. Gifford, and failed to comport with the June 25, 2019 disclosure referenced in the judge's letter to the commission. Also, in Dial [sic], by referring to a written disclosure, former Judge Mason failed to make a disclosure on the record.

On various dates after December 3, 2019 (the date of his public admonishment), former Judge Mason read the alternate disclosure verbatim at some point during his calendar, but did not ensure that the defendants were present to hear the disclosure in the following cases in which Mr. Gifford represented a party: People v. Ruben Ayala (No. F-19-331), People v. Amber

Sharrett (No. M-18-479), People v. Kiajaney Dejesus-Roman (No. F-19-476), People v. Valerie Hubbard (Nos. F-19-420/M-19-475), People v. James Fristoe (No. F-20-050), People v. Leroy Michael Donnor (Nos. F-19-212/F-20-065), People v. Donald Vick (No. M-20-079), People v. Charles James Preston, Sr. (Nos. F-18-429/F-20-104), People v. Robin Klabbatz (No. F-20-052), People v. Ronald Cannon (No. F-20-059), People v. Fanchon Lafaver (Nos. F-18-471/F-19-011/F-19-038/M-18-367), People v. Lyle Castillo (No. F-19-485), People v. Corey Adam (Nos. F-19-483/F-19-261), and People v. Megan Blue (Nos. F-16-248/M-19-481).

At times, former Judge Mason failed to disclose his relationship with Mr. Gifford at the first appearance in a case in which Mr. Gifford represented a party, in People v. Samuel Alan Kiser (No. F-20-005) (three appearances before disclosure made), People v. James Fristoe (No. F-20-050) (one appearance before disclosure made), Eveann Smith v. Allen Lee Moore (No. FL-20-007) (two appearances before disclosure made), Walter Sphar v. Eriquiago, Bunyard, Bostic (No. CU-19-100) (three appearances before disclosure made), and Candice Mastagni v. Dale L. O'Neil (No. FL-20-011) (two appearances before disclosure made).

In many cases, minute orders indicated that the judge disclosed his relationship with Mr. Gifford, but the transcripts and recordings of the appearances did not reflect that former Judge Mason made a disclosure on the record. Former Judge Mason failed to disclose, or failed to properly disclose, in the following cases: People v. Sarah Hewitt (No. F-19-099), People v. Stephen Anastacio (No. F-19-383), People v. Arlen Javier Gonzalez (Nos. F-19-128/ F-17-094/F-17-045), People v. Ryan Randall West (Nos. M-19-293/ M-19-429), People v. Rogers Amerson (No. M-19-238), People v. Phillip Skaggs (No. F-17-075), People v. William Roy Biggerstaff (No. F-19-139), People v. Richard Chapman (No. F-19-368), People v. John Gregory Hughes (No. F-17-096), People v. Tamyara Cawthorn (No. F-18-462), People v. Rhyan James Urena (Nos. F-19-197/ F-19-200), People v. Danny Ray Dial (No. F-19-124), People v. Valerie Hubbard (No. F-19-420), People v. William Eugene Sainsbury (Nos. F-19-471/ F-19-365), People v. Fanchon Lafaver (Nos. F-18-471/F-19-011/F-19-038/M-18-367), People v. Lyle Castillo (No. F-19-485), People v. Corey Adam (Nos. F-19-483/F-19-261), People v. Megan Blue (Nos. F-16-248/M-19-481), People v. Donald Vick (No. M-20-079), People v. Charles James Preston, Sr. (Nos. F-18-429/F-20-104), People v. Robin Klabbatz (No. F-20-052), and People v. Ronald Cannon (No. F-20-059).

On December 18, 2019, in People v. Michael Lamug (Nos. M-19-404/M-19-454), after reading the alternate disclosure verbatim, former Judge Mason stated, "So you're going to hear that all the time, and you're going to be sick of hearing it, just like I get sick of reading it, but it's – it's what I have to do." (R.T. 3:8-10.) Former Judge Mason's comments were gratuitous and trivialized the importance of complying with his duty to disclose on the record information, concerning his relationship with Mr. Gifford that is reasonably relevant to the question of disqualification under Code of Civil Procedure section 170.1.

Canon 3E(2) and 3E(2)(a) of the Code of Judicial Ethics requires judges to disclose on the record "information that is reasonably relevant to the question of disqualification under Code of Civil Procedure section 170.1, even if the judge believes there is no actual basis for disqualification." Under Code of Civil Procedure section 170.1, subdivision (a)(6)(A)(iii), judges are disqualified when "[a] person aware of the facts might reasonably entertain a doubt that the judge would be able to be impartial." This is an objective standard. The question is whether the "average person on the street" would harbor doubts as to the judge's impartiality, not whether the judge is actually biased. (United Farm Workers of America v. Superior Court (1985) 170 Cal.App.3d 97, 104; Flier v. Superior Court (1994) 23 Cal.App.4th 165, 170.) Pursuant to this standard, even if former Judge Mason were not disqualified from presiding over Mr. Gifford's cases, he was required to disclose all facts about their relationship that were reasonably relevant to disqualification, on the record, in every case in which Mr. Gifford appeared. Former Judge Mason concedes that, despite his prior discipline for the same misconduct, he did not make a disclosure in every case where he was required to do so. Former Judge Mason violated canons 3E(2) and 3E(2)(a) over an extended period by failing to make the required disclosures on the record. His conduct also constituted a violation of canons 1, 2, 2A, and 4A.

III. Discourtesy to District Attorney in People v. Abernathy

On June 23, 2020, former Judge Mason conducted a chambers conference in People v. Ryan Abernathy (No. M20-158), with District Attorney (DA) Sophia Meyer, Deputy District Attorney Stacey Todd, three probation department employees, the defense attorney, a bailiff, and the court clerk. DA Meyer had filed a violation of a slow plea in an underlying case, as well as a new case (No. F19-093), and the defendant requested a jury trial. Former Judge Mason stated that he thought DA Meyer's office was "unprofessional and stupid for exercising prosecutorial discretion and filing a case." Former Judge Mason also stated that the District Attorney's office was "unprofessional and superfluous." DA Meyer responded that she did not appreciate being called unprofessional. Former Judge Mason then said, "Well, maybe unprofessional is not the word. In my opinion, the DA's office is stupid for filing this." On July 7, 2020, former Judge Mason told DA Meyer that he was "not accusing anyone in particular, but the DA's office as a whole was unprofessional." (The Modoc County DA's office is comprised of two attorneys and support staff members.)

Calling the DA's office "stupid" and "unprofessional," especially in the presence of others, constituted a failure to be patient, dignified, and courteous to litigants, jurors, witnesses, lawyers, and others with whom the judge deals in an official capacity (canon 3B(4)); a failure to refrain from speech and conduct that would reasonably be perceived as bias or prejudice (canon 3B(5)); and violations of canons 2 and 2A.

Former Judge Mason's conduct, as set forth in parts I-III, above, constituted, at a minimum, improper action.

Former Judge Mason's misconduct was aggravated by the judge's prior discipline. As discussed in part I, above, former Judge Mason was publicly admonished in 2019 for not only similar conduct, but the same conduct. In 2019, former Judge Mason conceded that he made "mistakes . . . regarding disclosures," and violated canons 3E(2) and 3E(2)(a) over an extended period by failing to make the required disclosures on the record.

This stipulation imposes a higher level of discipline than former Judge Mason's 2019 public admonishment, based on the judge's prior retirement and agreement to not at any time seek or hold judicial office or seek or accept assignment. The parties request that the commission accept this stipulation because it fulfills the commission's mandate to protect the public and maintain the integrity of the judiciary in order to avoid the prolonged impact of further proceedings on the justice's [sic] court and the administration of justice.

DISCIPLINE

Former Judge Mason has acknowledged his failure to properly disclose his personal relationship with attorney Tom Gifford on the record in a multitude of cases in which Mr. Gifford appeared, his lack of candor in his communication with the commission about his compliance with his disclosure obligations, and his discourteous and biased conduct toward the district attorney's office—all of which violated his duty to conduct himself with integrity and in a manner that promotes public confidence in the judiciary.

The purpose of California's statutory disclosure requirements is to ensure public confidence in the judiciary. (Curle v. Superior Court (2001) 24 Cal.4th 1057, 1070.) Former Judge Mason's persistent failure to comply with these requirements reflects an unacceptable lack of concern on his part about the public's perception of the integrity and fairness of the judiciary.

Similarly, the judicial canons' insistence on appropriate judicial demeanor rests on the idea that such demeanor is central to the appearance and reality of fairness and impartiality in judicial proceedings. (Rothman et al., Cal. Judicial Conduct Handbook (4th ed. 2017) § 2:46, p. 116.) Former Judge Mason's inappropriate remarks about the district attorney's office undermined the appearance of fairness and impartiality in the court's proceedings.

Finally, honesty is a minimum qualification expected of every judge. (Kloepfer v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1989) 49 Cal.3d 826, 865.) Lack of candor toward the commission is uniquely and exceptionally egregious. (Inquiry Concerning Ross (2005) 49 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 79, 90.) Former Judge Mason's lack of candor toward the commission is particularly grievous.

The commission considered former Judge Mason's prior public admonishment for related misconduct to be a significantly aggravating factor.

The commission's determination to resolve this matter with a severe public admonishment was conditioned upon former Judge Mason's agreement not to serve in a judicial capacity in the future. The commission concluded that this resolution adequately fulfills its mandate to protect the public from further possible misconduct and avoids the need for further proceedings.

Commission members Hon. Michael B. Harper; Dr. Michael A. Moodian; Hon. William S. Dato; Mr. Eduardo De La Riva; Ms. Sarah Kruer Jager; Hon. Lisa B. Lench; Nanci E. Nishimura, Esq.; Victor E. Salazar, Esq.; Mr. Richard Simpson; and Mr. Adam N. Torres voted to accept the stipulation. Ms. Kay Cooperman Jue did not participate.

| IN THE MATTER CONCERNINGJUDGE DAVID A. MASON | STIPULATION FOR DISCIPLINEBY CONSENT (Rule 116.5) |

Pursuant to Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance, rule 116.5, former Judge David A. Mason of the Modoc County Superior Court, represented by counsel, and commission counsel (the "parties") submit this proposed disposition of the matters set forth in the commission's preliminary investigation letters dated April 23, 2020, and September 2, 2020. The parties request that the commission resolve this matter by imposition of a severe public admonishment. The parties believe that the settlement provided by this agreement is in the best interests of the commission and former Judge Mason because, among other reasons, the severe public admonishment, and the judge's prior retirement from office, and agreement not to serve as a judicial officer after his retirement is a more severe level of discipline than former Judge Mason's 2019 discipline, adequately protects the public, and will avoid the delay, expense, and uncertain outcome of further proceedings. Former Judge Mason irrevocably retired from judicial office, effective October 31, 2020.

TERMS AND CONDITIONS OF AGREEMENT

1. This agreement resolves the matters alleged in the commission's pending preliminary investigation involving former Judge Mason.

2. The commission shall issue a severe public admonishment based on the agreed Stipulated Facts and Legal Conclusions set forth therein.

3. If the commission accepts this proposed disposition, the commission's decision and order imposing public admonishment may articulate the reasons for its decision and include explanatory language that the commission deems appropriate.

4. Upon acceptance by the commission, this stipulation and the commission's decision and order shall be made public.

5. Judge Mason waives any further proceedings and review in this matter, including formal proceedings (rule 118, et seq.) and review by the Supreme Court (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 9.60).

6. On October 6, 2020, former Judge Mason tendered his retirement effective October 31, 2020 through written correspondence to Governor Gavin Newsom. A copy of that letter is attached hereto as an exhibit and incorporated by this reference.

7. Failure to comply with the terms and conditions of this agreement may constitute additional and independent grounds for discipline.

8. Former Judge Mason has agreed not to seek or hold judicial office, or accept a position or assignment as a judicial officer, subordinate judicial officer, or judge pro tem with any court in the State of California, or accept a reference of work from any California state court, at any time after the effective date of his retirement (October 31, 2020).

9. If former Judge Mason attempts to serve in a judicial capacity in violation of the foregoing paragraph, the commission may withdraw the severe public admonishment and resume the preliminary investigation as to all of the matters in the preliminary investigation letters.

10. Former Judge Mason agrees that the facts recited herein are true and correct, and that the discipline to which the parties stipulate herein is appropriate in light of those facts.

11. The commission may reject this proposed disposition and resume its preliminary investigation. If the commission does so, nothing in this proposed disposition will be deemed to be admitted or conceded by the parties.

Accordingly, it is hereby stipulated and agreed that the commission shall issue a severe public admonishment on the above Terms and Conditions of Agreement, and based on the following Stipulated Facts and Legal Conclusions.

STIPULATED FACTS AND LEGAL CONCLUSIONS

Former Judge David A. Mason became a judge of the Modoc County Superior Court in 2009, following appointment to that office. His current term began in January 2017. His retirement became effective October 31, 2020.

I. Lack of Candor in Two Responses to the Commission

A. 2019 Public Admonishment

On December 3, 2019, the commission issued a public admonishment to former Judge Mason for failing to disclose a personal relationship with attorney Tom Gifford. According to former Judge Mason, at the time he took the bench, he had a "personal and sustained" relationship with Mr. Gifford, including a "prior professional relationship," and "ongoing social interactions in the community," which continued after he took the bench in 2009. In 2013, former Judge Mason went on a two-week trip to Italy with Mr. Gifford and their respective spouses, as part of a celebration of the Giffords' wedding anniversary, which "marked an escalation of the friendship." Mr. Gifford made regular appearances as an attorney in cases over which former Judge Mason presided during this period. Mr. Gifford moved to Texas shortly after the trip to Italy, but this did not immediately impact their social relationship. Former Judge Mason traveled to Mr. Gifford's home in Texas on two occasions, for approximately one week each time, including once over a Thanksgiving holiday. In or about April 2017, Mr. Gifford returned to Modoc County, and was awarded a contract to serve as Modoc County's conflicts attorney for indigent defense. He resumed making regular appearances as an attorney in cases over which former Judge Mason presided, including appearances in at least 86 criminal cases from 2017 to 2019. According to former Judge Mason, he and Mr. Gifford "maintained some form of friendship" in 2017, but it was "not as strong" as before Mr. Gifford moved to Texas. Former Judge Mason recalled only one dinner with Mr. Gifford in 2017.

The commission found that, even if former Judge Mason was not disqualified from presiding over Mr. Gifford's cases, he was required to disclose all facts about their relationship that were reasonably relevant to disqualification, on the record, in every case in which Mr. Gifford appeared. Former Judge Mason presented no evidence that he ever did so, and conceded that he did not make a disclosure in every case where he was required to do so, and that he made "mistakes . . . regarding disclosures." The commission found that former Judge Mason violated canons 3E(2) and 3E(2)(a) over an extended period by failing to make the required disclosures on the record.[1]

B. June 25, 2019 Response to the Commission

Prior to the December 3, 2019 public admonishment, former Judge Mason responded to the commission's allegations in a letter dated June 25, 2019. In his response, former Judge Mason stated that he would disseminate the following disclosure:

> To All Parties and Counsel of Record:
> The purpose of this declaration is to disclose my longstanding relationship with local attorney Tom Gifford.
> Prior to my appointment to the bench in 2009 I developed a professional relationship with Mr. Gifford. This relationship developed into a social friendship where I was [sic] occasionally dined publically [sic] with Mr. Gifford and his wife and was invited to dinner at Mr. Gifford's home. These interactions lessened after my appointment to the bench but did continue after I became a judge.
> Sometime in the early part of 2013 I accompanied Mr. Gifford and his wife on a trip to Italy for two weeks as part of their celebration of their anniversary. Shortly thereafter, Mr. Gifford moved back to Texas and was practicing law there. I visited Mr. Gifford in his home in Texas on two occasions for about one week each time.

[1] When former Judge Mason took the bench in 2009, canon 3E(2) of the Code of Judicial Ethics stated that judges "shall disclose on the record information that is reasonably relevant to the question of disqualification under Code of Civil Procedure section 170.1, even if the judge believes there is no actual basis for disqualification." This requirement was renumbered as canon 3E(2)(a) effective January 1, 2013. Under Code of Civil Procedure section 170.1, subdivision (a)(6)(A)(iii), judges are disqualified when "[a] person aware of the facts might reasonably entertain a doubt that the judge would be able to be impartial."

> Mr. Gifford returned to Modoc County in 2017 and resumed his law practice. Since he returned in 2017, my social contact with Mr. Gifford has been minimal. We speak in a friendly manner on occasion and had dinner once in 2017. Mr. Gifford and I no longer have social contact, though we are friendly and exchange pleasantries when we interact in public.
> Notwithstanding our history, I believe that I have and that I can in the future remain fair and impartial in matters where Mr. Gifford appears. You may inquire when your case is called if you wish to receive more information concerning my history with Mr. Gifford.
> I declare under penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct.
> Hon. David A. Mason
> Asst Presiding Judge

Former Judge Mason described the above disclosure as a "comprehensive disclosure that will disseminate all relevant detail. . . ." Former Judge Mason stated that the above-written disclosure "will be published in Judge Mason's department with copies available for attorneys appearing in a new matter involving Mr. Gifford."

C. Misleading Disclosure Following the 2019 Public Admonishment

Following the December 3, 2019 public admonishment, instead of the disclosure described, above, in his response to the commission, former Judge Mason gave the following disclosure [hereinafter referred to as the "alternate" disclosure], which he delivered orally and in writing:

> To All Parties and Counsel of Record:
> The purpose of this declaration is to disclose that prior to my appointment to the bench in 2009 I had a professional relationship with attorney Tom Gifford that developed into a social friendship. I was occasionally invited to dinner at Mr. Gifford's home, and on a few occasions I dined in public with Mr. Gifford and his wife. Sometime after I took the bench, Mr. Gifford moved back to Texas and began practicing law there. During that time I visited Mr. Gifford and his family at his home in Texas on a couple of > occasions. In the summer of 2013, I accompanied Mr. Gifford and his wife on a trip to Italy. My social contact with Mr. Gifford has been minimal from then to the present. Notwithstanding our history, I believe that I have, and that I can in the future, remain fair and impartial in matters where Mr. Gifford appears.

The alternate disclosure acknowledges that former Judge Mason has dined at Mr. Gifford's home, and has also dined in public with Mr. Gifford and his wife, but creates the misimpression that all of those dinners occurred prior to 2009. Former Judge Mason also failed to disclose that he and Mr. Gifford met for social dinners within the last three years.

The alternate disclosure states that former Judge Mason visited Mr. Gifford in Texas on two occasions, on undisclosed dates, and for undisclosed durations. By failing to disclose the dates and durations of the visits, former Judge Mason improperly minimized the disclosure of his contacts with Mr. Gifford. By referencing the Texas trips prior to a 2013 trip to Italy, former Judge Mason created the false impression that the Texas visits occurred prior to 2013. Former Judge Mason also improperly minimized his contacts with Mr. Gifford by failing to disclose the duration and purpose of the trip to Italy.

Former Judge Mason's June 25, 2019 response to the commission lacked candor by providing to the commission a disclosure that was materially different from the actual disclosure that he gave to parties who appeared before him in court, as described above.

D. June 26, 2020 Response to the Commission

In the most recent preliminary investigation, the commission contacted former Judge Mason on April 23, 2020, concerning the disparate disclosures and an apparent lack of candor to the commission. In a letter dated June 26, 2020, former Judge Mason stated that the alternate disclosure, "was circulated to litigants prior to his June 2019 submission, but believes that occurred as early as late May 2019." He stated, "These protocols, detailed in Judge Mason's prior submission, were followed from that time until the present, including cases in which Mr. Gifford appeared after the December 2019 Public Admonishment." Former Judge Mason stated he used the alternate disclosure throughout 2019, and that it "was also published in the courtroom and at the clerk's office continuously over the last year . . . ." Despite former Judge Mason's assertion that he continuously disclosed his relationship with Mr. Gifford throughout 2019, he made no disclosure in many cases in which Mr. Gifford appeared during the time period from May to December 2019. Former Judge Mason's June 26, 2020 response to the commission lacked candor by making misrepresentations about the disclosures the judge made from May to December 2019.

The judge's conduct constitutes a failure to uphold the integrity and independence of the judiciary (canon 1), a failure to avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety in all of the judge's activities (canon 2), a failure to respect and comply with the law and act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary (canon 2A), a failure to cooperate with the commission (canon 3D(4)), a failure to disclose on the record information that is reasonably relevant to the question of disqualification (canon 3E(2)), and a failure to conduct all of the judge's extrajudicial activities so that they do not cast reasonable doubt on the judge's capacity to act impartially (canon 4A).

II. Continuing Failure to Disclose Personal Relationship with Attorney Tom Gifford

A. Failure to Disclose Gift to Mr. Gifford

On or about October 29, 2019 to December 16, 2019, former Judge Mason orally disclosed in chambers, to two attorneys and two probation department employees, that he brought Mr. Gifford a gift and placed it in his attorney mail slot. The gift was a pennant from Mr. Gifford's alma mater. Judge Mason failed to ever disclose the gift on the record in any case.

B. Failure to Disclose After the Public Admonishment

Following the December 3, 2019 public admonishment, Mr. Gifford continued to appear regularly before former Judge Mason in both criminal and civil cases. After December 3, 2019, former Judge Mason failed to properly disclose on the record information concerning his relationship with Mr. Gifford that is reasonably relevant to the question of disqualification under Code of Civil Procedure section 170.1, as exemplified by the following.

On December 10, 2019, in People v. Sarah Hewitt (No. F-19-099), former Judge Mason stated, "I don't know if you heard my disclosure. Mr. Gifford and I have been friends for years, we practiced law against one another and developed a friendship. It's kind of spelled out there." On December 18, 2019, in People v. Danny Ray Dial (No. F-19-124), former Judge Mason stated, "I have a long standing friendship with Mr. Gifford. We haven't had any social connection in person for probably a year and a half or two years. But in the past I've visited the home that he owns in Corpus Christi, Texas. I've also had dinner with him and his wife and other friends on two occasions since I've been a Judge. And early on in my career as a judge I went to – took a trip to Italy with Mr. Gifford and his wife. [¶] All of those things being said, I do not believe that I am unable to be fair and unbiased, and I do not recuse myself." The above disclosures in Hewitt and Dial were misleading and improperly minimized the judge's contacts with Mr. Gifford, and failed to comport with the June 25, 2019 disclosure referenced in the judge's letter to the commission. Also, in Dial, by referring to a written disclosure, former Judge Mason failed to make a disclosure on the record.

On various dates after December 3, 2019 (the date of his public admonishment), former Judge Mason read the alternate disclosure verbatim at some point during his calendar, but did not ensure that the defendants were present to hear the disclosure in the following cases in which Mr. Gifford represented a party: People v. Ruben Ayala (No. F-19-331), People v. Amber Sharrett (No. M-18-479), People v. Kiajaney Dejesus-Roman (No. F-19-476), People v. Valerie Hubbard (Nos. F-19-420/M-19-475), People v. James Fristoe (No. F-20-050), People v. Leroy Michael Donnor (Nos. F-19-212/F-20-065), People v. Donald Vick (No. M-20-079), People v. Charles James Preston, Sr. (No. F-18-429/F-20-104), People v. Robin Klabbatz (No. F-20-052), People v. Ronald Cannon (No. F-20-059), People v. Fanchon Lafaver (Nos. F-18-471/F-19-011/F-19-038/M-18-367), People v. Lyle Castillo (No. F-19-485), People v. Corey Adam (No. F-19-483/F-19-261), and People v. Megan Blue (Nos. F-16-248/M-19-481).

At times, former Judge Mason failed to disclose his relationship with Mr. Gifford at the first appearance in a case in which Mr. Gifford represented a party, in People v. Samuel Alan Kiser (No. F-20-005) (three appearances before disclosure made), People v. James Fristoe (No. F-20-050) (one appearance before disclosure made), Eveann Smith v. Allen Lee Moore (No. FL-20-007) (two appearances before disclosure made), Walter Sphar v. Eriquiago, Bunyard, Bostic (No. CU-19-100) (three appearances before disclosure made), and Candice Mastagni v. Dale L. O'Neil (No. FL-20-011) (two appearances before disclosure made).

In many cases, minute orders indicated that the judge disclosed his relationship with Mr. Gifford, but the transcripts and recordings of the appearances did not reflect that former Judge Mason made a disclosure on the record. Former Judge Mason failed to disclose, or failed to properly disclose, in the following cases: People v. Sarah Hewitt (No. F-19-099), People v. Stephen Anastacio (No. F-19-383), People v. Arlen Javier Gonzalez (Nos. F-19-128/ F-17-094/F-17-045), People v. Ryan Randall West (Nos. M-19-293/ M-19-429), People v. Rogers Amerson (No. M-19-238), People v. Phillip Skaggs (No. F-17-075), People v. William Roy Biggerstaff (No. F-19-139), People v. Richard Chapman (No. F-19-368), People v. John Gregory Hughes (No. F-17-096), People v. Tamyara Cawthorn (No. F-18-462), People v. Rhyan James Urena (Nos. F-19-197/ F-19-200), People v. Danny Ray Dial (No. F-19-124), People v. Valerie Hubbard (No. F-19-420), People v. William Eugene Sainsbury (Nos. F-19-471/ F-19-365), People v. Fanchon Lafaver (Nos. F-18-471/F-19-011/F-19-038/M-18-367), People v. Lyle Castillo (No. F-19-485), People v. Corey Adam (No. F-19-483/F-19-261), People v. Megan Blue (Nos. F-16-248/M-19-481), People v. Donald Vick (No. M-20-079), People v. Charles James Preston, Sr. (No. F-18-429/F-20-104), People v. Robin Klabbatz (No. F-20-052), and People v. Ronald Cannon (No. F-20-059).

On December 18, 2019, in People v. Michael Lamug (Nos. M-19-404/M-19-454), after reading the alternate disclosure verbatim, former Judge Mason stated, "So you're going to hear that all the time, and you're going to be sick of hearing it, just like I get sick of reading it, but it's – it's what I have to do." (R.T. 3:8-10.) Former Judge Mason's comments were gratuitous and trivialized the importance of complying with his duty to disclose on the record information, concerning his relationship with Mr. Gifford that is reasonably relevant to the question of disqualification under Code of Civil Procedure section 170.1.

Canon 3E(2) and 3E(2)(a) of the Code of Judicial Ethics requires judges to disclose on the record "information that is reasonably relevant to the question of disqualification under Code of Civil Procedure section 170.1, even if the judge believes there is no actual basis for disqualification." Under Code of Civil Procedure section 170.1, subdivision (a)(6)(A)(iii), judges are disqualified when "[a] person aware of the facts might reasonably entertain a doubt that the judge would be able to be impartial." This is an objective standard. The question is whether the "average person on the street" would harbor doubts as to the judge's impartiality, not whether the judge is actually biased. (United Farm Workers of America v. Superior Court (1985) 170 Cal.App.3d 97, 104; Flier v. Superior Court (1994) 23 Cal.App.4th 165, 170.) Pursuant to this standard, even if former Judge Mason were not disqualified from presiding over Mr. Gifford's cases, he was required to disclose all facts about their relationship that were reasonably relevant to disqualification, on the record, in every case in which Mr. Gifford appeared. Former Judge Mason concedes that, despite his prior discipline for the same misconduct, he did not make a disclosure in every case where he was required to do so. Former Judge Mason violated canons 3E(2) and 3E(2)(a) over an extended period by failing to make the required disclosures on the record. His conduct also constituted a violation of canons 1, 2, 2A, and 4A.

III. Discourtesy to District Attorney in People v. Abernathy

On June 23, 2020, former Judge Mason conducted a chambers conference in People v. Ryan Abernathy (No. M20-158), with District Attorney (DA) Sophia Meyer, Deputy District Attorney Stacey Todd, three probation department employees, the defense attorney, a bailiff, and the court clerk. DA Meyer had filed a violation of a slow plea in an underlying case, as well as a new case (No. F19-093), and the defendant requested a jury trial. Former Judge Mason stated that he thought DA Meyer's office was

"unprofessional and stupid for exercising prosecutorial discretion and filing a case." Former Judge Mason also stated that the District Attorney's office was "unprofessional and superfluous." DA Meyer responded that she did not appreciate being called unprofessional. Former Judge Mason then said, "Well, maybe unprofessional is not the word. In my opinion, the DA's office is stupid for filing this." On July 7, 2020, former Judge Mason told DA Meyer that he was "not accusing anyone in particular, but the DA's office as a whole was unprofessional." (The Modoc County DA's office is comprised of two attorneys and support staff members.)

Calling the DA's office "stupid" and "unprofessional," especially in the presence of others, constituted a failure to be patient, dignified, and courteous to litigants, jurors, witnesses, lawyers, and others with whom the judge deals in an official capacity (canon 3B(4)); a failure to refrain from speech and conduct that would reasonably be perceived as bias or prejudice (canon 3B(5)); and violations of canons 2 and 2A.

Former Judge Mason's conduct, as set forth in parts I-III, above, constituted, at a minimum, improper action.

Former Judge Mason's misconduct was aggravated by the judge's prior discipline. As discussed in part I, above, former Judge Mason was publicly admonished in 2019 for not only similar conduct, but the same conduct. In 2019, former Judge Mason conceded that he made "mistakes . . . regarding disclosures," and violated canons 3E(2) and 3E(2)(a) over an extended period by failing to make the required disclosures on the record.

This stipulation imposes a higher level of discipline than former Judge Mason's 2019 public admonishment, based on the judge's prior retirement and agreement to not at any time seek or hold judicial office or seek or accept assignment. The parties request that the commission accept this stipulation because it fulfills the commission's mandate to protect the public and maintain the integrity of the judiciary in order to avoid the prolonged impact of further proceedings on the justice's court and the administration of justice.

By signing this stipulation, in addition to consenting to discipline on the terms set forth, former Judge Mason expressly admits that the foregoing facts are true and that he agrees with the stated legal conclusions.

Re: Judicial Retirement

Dear Governor Newsom:

Effective October 31, 2020, I am retiring from my position as a judge of the Modoc County Superior Court, where I have served since my appointment on March 26, 2009. It has been my honor and privilege to serve the citizens of this state and of the County of Modoc.

I urge you to appoint a replacement at your earliest opportunity.

Sincerely,

David A. Mason

DAVID MASON
Judge of the Modoc County Superior Court.

PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE BARBARA L. ROBERTS

The Commission on Judicial Performance ordered Judge Barbara L. Roberts publicly admonished, pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution and commission rule 115, as set forth in the following statement of facts and reasons found by the commission:

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

Before retiring on October 11, 2020, Judge Roberts had been a judge of the Butte County Superior Court since 1998. Her most recent term began in 2019.

The commission determined that Judge Roberts should be publicly admonished for violating the California Code of Judicial Ethics for misconduct on the bench and in the courthouse. Judge Roberts engaged in a pattern of poor demeanor in multiple dependency cases over which she presided in 2019 and 2020. This misconduct included treating primarily parents, but in one case, attorneys and a social worker, in a harsh and discourteous manner. Judge Roberts also abused her authority and became embroiled in one case. The commission also found that, on January 8, 2020, Judge Roberts yelled at court staff and engaged in a display of impatient and frustrated behavior in the clerk's office, in an adjoining internal court hallway, and in chambers. The commission further found that, on January 9, 2020, again while in chambers, the judge discourteously raised her voice to another judge.

The commission recognized that her dependency assignment and the cases addressed in this matter were often difficult and frustrating for Judge Roberts. The commission also recognized the challenges Judge Roberts experienced in moving the dependency court from one Butte County courthouse to another. Nevertheless, Judge Roberts was required to comport herself in accordance with the California Code of Judicial Ethics.

1. The commission found that Judge Roberts failed to be patient, dignified, and courteous toward parents appearing before her in 10 dependency hearings.

a. In re: K.S. and J.S.

On February 25, 2019, Judge Roberts presided over a dispositional hearing of a case involving two siblings.[1] J.S. suffered from significant mental illness, which the parents and Judge Roberts discussed at length. During an exchange regarding a possible out-of-state placement for J.S., both parents expressed concern that such a placement might make having access to their son more difficult.

---

[1] Case names and the identities of certain persons and locations have been obscured to protect the confidential nature of dependency cases and the privacy rights of minors.

THE COURT: So what is the objection to sending him out of state?

THE MOTHER: I'm just worried I'll never see him.

THE COURT: Of course you're going to see him.

THE FATHER: The main objection, Your Honor, is as it is right now with him in [a California location], it's costing us $200 a month to go up there every weekend and see him for six hours total. He gets –

THE COURT: What does that have to do with finding the best possible placement and treatment for him?

THE FATHER: It doesn't, Your Honor. It doesn't. If you allow me to finish, I'll get to my point. [¶] If he's moved out of state, it makes our ability to have contact, and consistent interaction with our child, that much more difficult than it already has been.

(R.T. 6:10-7:2.)

Later in the proceeding, the social worker said that he gave the parents transportation agreements to help with gas, and later sent them a packet with transportation assistance forms, but they had not returned them. The father told the court that, at the last court appearance, he told the social worker that he had lost the forms and requested new ones. The social worker then apologized. Shortly thereafter, the following exchange occurred:

THE COURT: Mother, why didn't you fill out the transportation form?

THE MOTHER: I don't really feel like getting reimbursed for -- I don't want money from CPS.

THE COURT: Then do not sit here in this courtroom and complain to me that you don't have the finances to go.

THE MOTHER: I never have.

THE FATHER: That was me, Your Honor.

THE MOTHER: I have the money.

THE FATHER: I didn't say that we didn't have the finances, I said it was a burden to have to spend $200 a month.

THE BAILIFF: You know, folks, stop arguing.

THE FATHER: I'm not trying to argue, sir.

THE COURT: You're talking out of both sides of your mouth, sir. You're telling me on the one hand that you're upset you have to pay $200 a month. There is a program set up for you to get reimbursed for your transportation expenses, but you don't feel like doing it.

THE FATHER: No, I requested the paperwork from [the social worker] over a month ago.

THE COURT: See you on March 4th. I am not going to argue with you too. You're being uncooperative, you're not following through with what you need to follow through with.

THE FATHER: No, [the social worker] is not following through. I requested that paperwork over a month ago.

THE MOTHER: They don't care.

THE COURT: Don't be rude.

THE FATHER: I have a right to say whatever the hell I want.

(Proceedings concluded.)

(R.T. 26:12-27:19.)

The commission found that Judge Roberts was discourteous to the mother by impatiently reprimanding her for something she did not do. Additionally, Judge Roberts's statements that the father was "talking out of both sides of his mouth," failed to get reimbursed for transportation expenses "because he didn't feel like doing it," and was "being uncooperative," as he tried to explain his request for replacement forms, were discourteous and impatient. The commission found that Judge Roberts's comments were contrary to canon 3B(4), which requires judges to be patient, dignified, and courteous to all those with whom they deal in an official capacity, canon 2A, which requires judges to act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary, and canon 1, which requires judges to personally observe high standards of conduct and uphold the integrity of the judiciary.

b. In re: K.S.

On June 6, 2019, Judge Roberts presided over further proceedings in the In re: K.S. case. The mother was participating in a medication-assisted drug treatment program, which included regular testing and prescription use of methadone and marijuana to help her overcome her addiction. During the hearing, the following occurred:

> THE COURT: Are you going to meet with the social worker without your attorney or not?
>
> THE MOTHER: I have been, yes.
> THE COURT: All right. The Court is going to order you to meet with your social worker without your attorney. The Court is going to order you to still communicate via text message. That is how we communicate in this court.
>
> THE MOTHER: Then I am going to turn my phone off.
> THE COURT: So Mother just said, "I guess I'll turn my phone off." Is that what you just said? So she just basically said she's going to turn her phone off, and she's not going to accept text messages from you. So we're going to get absolutely nowhere.
> [SOCIAL WORKER]: And, your Honor, she's also been testing positive still for THC. She claims that she has a prescription but won't provide it.
>
> THE COURT: You know what, I don't care if you have --
>
> THE MOTHER: You cleared it.
> THE COURT: -- a prescription or not, I ordered you to quit.
>
> THE MOTHER: No, you cleared that in November when you [also authorized her husband's marijuana use].
>
> THE FATHER: You told us that as long as there's a medical reason to use marijuana that it was fine. She cannot take anxiety medication for her PTSD because of the adverse side effects of the anxiety medication.
>
> THE COURT: Did I?
> THE FATHER: You can role [sic] your eyes and shake your head all you want, your Honor, but --
> THE MOTHER: She knows I can't take medication.

THE FATHER: -- it's not --

THE COURT: And I can.

THE FATHER: No, you cannot.

THE MOTHER: I have gotten that from the state attorney general.

THE COURT: Stop.

[ASSISTANT COUNTY COUNSEL]: Your Honor.

THE COURT: I can order you to not do anything that I say I am ordering you not to do it [sic].

THE FATHER: In a criminal case, this is not a criminal case, your Honor.

THE MOTHER: I have already talked to the Department of Justice about this.

[ASSISTANT COUNTY COUNSEL]: If I can be heard. On May 14th, this Court made it clear that Mother would not be able to use marijuana. There's --

THE MOTHER: Even though it was made clear in November.

[ASSISTANT COUNTY COUNSEL]: March 14, 2019, is when this Court made the order.

THE COURT: All right. So it appears that I might have authorized it at the beginning, because -- you know, here is the deal. Some people can drink and -- no problems in their life. Some people can do drugs, no problems in their life. Some people can use marijuana, no problems in their life. [¶] You are not a family with problems [sic].

THE FATHER: You're right, we have a son with mental disabilities that --

THE COURT: I want you to be quiet please.

THE FATHER: No. We have a --

THE MOTHER: We have a right to speak.

THE FATHER: -- a child who is uniquely handicapped, your Honor. Every report, in the initial report, except for one was about our son and his behavior.

THE COURT: See you August 29th.

THE FATHER: CSD is saying that we weren't doing any –

THE MOTHER: No, she doesn't want to hear what you have to say. She wants to hear lies and the corrupt [sic]. We will just continue with the Department of Justice. Go ahead, say I'm mental now. [¶] [Mother calls the judge an expletive as she leaves the courtroom.]

(R.T. 7:14-10:9.)

The commission found that Judge Roberts's conduct, including rolling her eyes, shaking her head, arguing with the parents, saying that she didn't care if the mother had a prescription for marijuana, and declaring that she could order the mother to do whatever she wanted violated canons 1, 2A, and 3B(4).

c. In re: K.S. and J.S.

On October 3, 2019, Judge Roberts presided over further proceedings in the In re: K.S. and J.S. matter. Judge Roberts spoke briefly to nine-year-old K.S., who was present in court. Immediately thereafter, with the child still present, Judge Roberts stated:

THE COURT: Mother and father, you and I have gotten off to a very bad place in this courtroom, and that is why I asked all of the attorneys to meet and confer with you over the lunch hour to see if we could start anew here.

Mother, I don't know what has happened to you. I truly don't. You were the most wonderful person when you were in my Drug Court. Delightful person. I enjoyed you so much. You were nice, you were polite, you were conscientious, you were willing to do the hard work. You were a delightful person when you graduated from Drug Court.

What happened? I want you to really stop and think about what has happened in your life that has caused you to be so incredibly nasty to social workers, your attorney. The fact that your attorney has to be relieved off this case tells me everything I need to know about how you treat people. You have also treated me terribly in this courtroom. Very, very insulting, very rude. I had to threaten to put you in jail to get you to come around. This is not the [person] I knew when she was in Drug Court.

I want to know why you're on methadone, and why we are not trying to get off the methadone. So I want you to really think about this. And I've read the records, and supposedly you're on a really high dose because of some kind of metabolism issue. I don't believe it for a minute. I have been on the bench for 22 years, and I have never heard of somebody having such a high metabolism, or whatever this is, that they have to stay on a high dose of methadone.

I want you to be thinking about this, because I think it's affecting your personality. You are on heroin every single day, and on a very high dose of it. And you are such a different person than the person I had in front of me a couple of years ago, that I'm wondering what happened. I don't know what happened in your personal life, I don't know what's going on at home, but you are an entirely different person.

This is what scares me, [mother]: If you act this way to your attorney, so bad that he had to be asked [sic] to be relieved from the case, so bad with the social workers that you won't even talk to them, and you guys won't even go to CFT meetings, you storm out of a courtroom cussing at me. If you act that way in this courtroom in front of me, when I'm going to send your children home or not, I wonder how you act when I'm not around.

This really, really is frightening to me, because if you act this way in front of all of these people, how do you act towards your daughter? And my biggest concern right now is that this young child is going to end up just like your son, and that's what I'm trying to prevent.

I see the love and affection that she has for you two, and I don't want to interfere with that. But both of you have turned into very nasty people, and that's my concern. I want to save this young girl from turning out like your son has. So I want you to really just think about this.

I also want you to think about the domestic violence that has gone on in your home that you two refuse to admit to. Domestic violence is taking advantage of the other person, yelling and screaming. You don't have to touch anyone for them [sic] to be domestic violence. And what you're > teaching is, you're teaching this little girl that it's okay to act like you do towards each other for somebody that you supposedly love with your heart and soul. You're teaching her that this is an okay way to treat people, and it's not.

> And until you two realize that the way you act in this courtroom is an indication to me of how you act with each other -- there's extreme violence going on in your home. It may not be physical, it's emotional, and that is way more damaging to a child than if you just push her, because she thinks there's something wrong with her.
> So I want you to just take a huge step back and realize you're burning your own bridges here. And I'm trying to get this child home, but until I see some changes in you, that's going to be really difficult.

Later in the same proceeding the judge said, "Let's all start over again with a fresh indication that we're going to do what's necessary for this child. [¶] So I don't care whether you want to do it or not, I'm going to do it for my [sic] child. (R.T. 12:4-9.)

The commission found that Judge Roberts's remarks were harsh and discourteous. She, among other things, incorrectly accused the mother of being on a very high dose of heroin every day, derisively discussed the mother's drug treatment records, said, without evidence, there was "extreme violence" in the parents' home, and said the parents had turned into "very nasty people." The commission found Judge Roberts's comments about trying to save K.S. from the same fate as her brother, who Judge Roberts knew suffers from very serious mental illness, troubling. Judge Roberts's statements were inconsistent with canons 1, 2A, and 3B(4).

On January 8, 2020, Judge Roberts presided over a number of cases on the dependency calendar. After Judge Roberts called the matter of In re: X.N., the following occurred:

> THE COURT: All right. Mother is present. [¶] And this is on for two issues: One is to ask the Court for authorization for medical treatment. [¶] Any objection to that?
> THE MOTHER: For the shunt?
> THE COURT: Yes. [¶] I'm talking to the attorneys.
> THE MOTHER: Oh.

[MOTHER'S ATTORNEY]: I haven't had a chance to meet with her.

THE COURT: How come you haven't talked to your attorney about this?

[MOTHER'S ATTORNEY]: Because I've been in court.

THE COURT: Do you have any objection to the medical procedure?

THE MOTHER: Yes and no. We had a doctor's appointment. Initially I did because of the risks and stuff that were initially mentioned and went over when he got the shunt placed.

THE COURT: Do you have an objection now or not?

ASSISTANT COUNTY COUNSEL: Your Honor, if I may, I spoke with our public health nurse about this, and she thought that [mother's] objections were well placed, because the initial surgeon's report was that the shunt was going to be able to stay in place indefinitely, and [mother], I believe, was surprised when the physician then said, "Well, we're going to schedule a surgery to take it out." And so I think there's an appointment scheduled to discuss the removal of the shunt.

THE COURT: Perfect.

(R.T. 3:8-4:12.)

Later in the hearing, Judge Roberts allowed the mother an opportunity to speak about services, but thereafter twice interrupted her, and on three occasions failed to allow the mother to be heard when she had a question or a suggestion. The commission found that Judge Roberts made impatient statements to the mother, discourteously interrupted her, and discourteously failed to let the mother speak, in violation of canons 1, 2A, and 3B(4).

e. In re: T.N. and J.N.

The matter was before Judge Roberts on January 8, 2020, with each parent represented by counsel. When Judge Roberts asked the father why he had not contacted his attorney, he said he had just been released from jail and had lost all his paperwork. The following then occurred.

THE COURT: When were you released?

THE FATHER: On Christmas.

THE COURT: That was not just released. Do not lie to me. Because you just implied you didn't talk to your attorney because you just got out of jail. That is a lie. It's been ten days and you could have called Children's Services and asked who your attorney was and gotten the phone number. [¶] Mother, apparently you haven't contacted your attorney either. Why not?

[MOTHER'S ATTORNEY]: She has, Your Honor. She has, but she's not understanding today's proceeding. If we could trail this?

THE COURT: This is a very, very serious matter, and for you two to come into this courtroom without ever having talked to your attorneys is appalling.

[MOTHER'S ATTORNEY]: Your Honor, the Mother has called me, and we have spoken, she's just not understanding today's proceeding.

Subsequently, the social worker reported that the mother had drug tested once and Judge Roberts asked the date of test. When the mother replied, "It was the last court date that we had. It was on -- I have to look at my calendar," Judge Roberts responded, "That doesn't help me at all. How can I remember when you came to court last?" Once it was determined that the mother had not tested in five weeks, Judge Roberts asked why it had been so long. When the social worker replied that the mother said she didn't know she was supposed to call a drug testing line, Judge Roberts responded, "That's baloney."

Later in the hearing, the mother's attorney told the judge that her client had made another appointment to meet with her and was just having a hard time understanding the proceedings that day. Judge Roberts responded, "I understand. But the solution isn't to talk to you in the courtroom, the solution is to make another appointment outside of court time. Because, you know, we've accomplished nothing here. And you've taken ten minutes of the Court's time because you didn't go see your attorneys to understand what's going on here." (R.T. 19:5-10.)

Judge Roberts also asked the mother if she knew why her children had been detained and the following occurred:

THE MOTHER: I do. For the most part, I understand why the children were detained.

THE COURT: Why were the children detained?

THE MOTHER: Because of my own --

THE COURT: Why were the children detained?

THE MOTHER: Because I had drugs in my car.

THE COURT: Because you were slumped over the steering wheel, passed out, with the children in the car, and both children tested positive for methamphetamine. That's why these children were detained. Not because you made a stupid decision.

(R.T. 23:11-21.)

The commission found that Judge Roberts made numerous discourteous or impatient remarks to the parents including, "Don't lie to me"; "that is a lie"; "appalling"; "That doesn't help me at all. How can I remember when you came to court last?"; "Because, you know, we've accomplished nothing here. And you have taken ten minutes of the Court's time because you didn't go see your attorneys to understand what's going on here" (despite mother's counsel twice confirming that she had talked with her client before the hearing); "That's baloney"; and "That's why these children were detained. Not because you made a stupid decision." The commission found that Judge Roberts's remarks violated canons 1, 2A, and 3B(4).

f. In re: A.V.

On January 8, 2020, the matter was before Judge Roberts for a disposition hearing. The mother's attorney told the court that the mother was trying to get into a rehabilitation program, was having difficulty with transportation, and had asthma. She also said her client was clean for methamphetamine, but was still using marijuana when the following occurred:

THE COURT: Why are you still using marijuana?

THE MOTHER: I've been trying to stop. It's really hard for my anxiety. I wake up –

THE COURT: You have asthma and you're using marijuana? Crazy. ... The Court's going to order you not to consume marijuana. That is ridiculous with you having anxiety and asthma that you would even consider using marijuana. You need to address the underlying mental health issues, not mask it with marijuana use. [¶] So how many drug tests has she missed?

SOCIAL WORKER: [Social worker] for Children's Services. [¶] Mom has 14 FTA's.

THE COURT: So you have 14 dirty tests. [¶] How about Father?

SOCIAL WORKER: Father has 16 FTA's.

THE COURT: Why are you not going to drug testing?

THE FATHER: Transportation.

THE COURT: What are we going to do to solve the transportation problem? Are both of you working?

THE FATHER: No.

THE COURT: Why not?

THE MOTHER: He's been taking on –

THE COURT: No, no, no. Why are you not working, sir?

THE FATHER: I've been taking on odd jobs here and there, what I can get.

THE COURT: Why aren't you working full time for a paycheck?

THE FATHER: There's no jobs [sic], Your Honor.

THE COURT: I don't believe that for one second. How many jobs have you applied for since January 1st?

THE FATHER: Probably about 15. [Father then discusses jobs for which he applied.]

(R.T. 39:4-40:21.)

Later in the proceeding, the social worker confirmed that the 20-year-old mother had applied to an inpatient drug rehabilitation program and was also in an outpatient program. Both parents lived on a rural family farm and neither had a driver's license. The mother said that, as a result, she was only able to go to one AA meeting a week, when her sponsor gave her a ride.

Judge Roberts ordered that the child be removed from the parents' custody. When she asked if the child had been re-detained, the following occurred:

[MOTHER'S ATTORNEY]: Yes. Last dispo – [counsel] on behalf of the Mother. At the first dispo, CSD returned the child to the parents and then did an unannounced visit, and Mother was using meth, or tested positive for meth, and the place was not in good shape.

THE COURT: How do you get the methamphetamine when you're five miles out in the country with nobody around? Somehow we can find transportation to get our drugs, but we can't find transportation to get into town to do our testing and to go to NA meetings. Do you understand how ridiculous this is? [¶] So once the children are returned home, the child was found to be residing in a home that posed health and safety risks, including cigarette butts accessible to the child. So both of you have enough money to smoke. [¶] Do you smoke Mother?

THE MOTHER: Yes.

THE COURT: Father, do you smoke?

THE FATHER: Yes, I do.

THE COURT: What do you know, we have enough money to buy cigarettes, but not enough money to get services. This is ridiculous, you two.

THE MOTHER: I didn't say money was my problem. Transportation is my problem.

THE COURT: I know. And what are you doing to solve that problem?

THE MOTHER: I've been calling everybody I know that I'm allowed to contact.

THE COURT: How about you solve the problem?

THE MOTHER: What do you think --

THE COURT: You're using methamphetamine after your child was returned to you. That is not somebody who is taking this seriously and is trying to get this child back. If this continues and you continue to live in a place where you cannot get services, you can not [sic] get to meetings, and you cannot get to drug testing, and the residence is in this kind of squalor, there's a zero chance that this child is being returned home. I think you need to think about giving up the family residence for now, move into town, get a place where you can attend services, both of you can get a job, both of you can get a driver's license, and maybe we can get this child home.

THE MOTHER: There's nowhere for me to move in town.

THE COURT: Why not?

THE MOTHER: The Esplanade House is full, and I haven't --

THE COURT: How about an apartment, you know, like a normal, grown up person does? Listen to me.

THE MOTHER: I have inherited [property], which is my home.

THE COURT: I'm sorry, what?

THE MOTHER: I've inherited [property] in [a town in Butte County], which is my home.

THE COURT: Great. And it's going to be a really lonely place for you and your husband.

THE MOTHER: Have you ever struggled in life ma'am?

THE COURT: [Property] does not give anything to this child, nothing.

THE MOTHER: It is my home.

THE COURT: You need to move into town, get some help, get rid of the drug addiction, get a job, get a place to live, and live like a normal, grown up person.

THE MOTHER: I'm trying.

THE COURT: No, you're not.

THE MOTHER: I'm definitely trying. I may have fucked up, but I'm trying.

THE COURT: That language is inappropriate in this courtroom.

THE MOTHER: I believe the way you are talking to me is inappropriate. You're not understanding.

[MOTHER'S ATTORNEY]: What is our next court date, please?

THE MOTHER: Yes, please.

THE COURT: The child is ordered and adjudged a dependent child ... [¶] Both of you are ordered to drug test today. Is there any reason why you can't drug test today, Mother?

THE MOTHER: No, not unless they don't get me in.

THE COURT: So we're setting ourself [sic] up for an excuse. Is it going to be clean or dirty?

THE MOTHER: Marijuana is the only thing possible.

THE COURT: All right. So she is going to be dirty for marijuana even though the Court has ordered her not to consume marijuana. Apparently she can get her marijuana, even though she can't get to the services.

(R.T. 47:6-50:25.)

The social worker told the court that she had offered the parents bus passes, but the mother said that would not work because of her asthma in walking to the bus stop. Judge Roberts responded, "If she'd quit using marijuana, maybe her asthma would be helped."

Later, the courtroom deputy realized the mother was recording the proceedings and ordered her to delete her recording. The following exchange then occurred:

THE COURT: You're recording this whole thing?

THE MOTHER: I was told to.

THE COURT: Sit down here, please. Sit down here, please.

THE MOTHER: You guys are recording.

THE COURT: No, we are not.

THE MOTHER: Why? This is very, very important. I just deleted it.

THE COURT: Is this child in a permanent placement, because it sounds to me like this child is not going home, that this child is going to end up being adopted out. [¶] How old is the child?

THE MOTHER: My son is 19 months.

THE COURT: Be quiet, please.

[SOCIAL WORKER]: He's 19 months, and he's not in a prospective adoptive home.

THE COURT: We need to get him in a prospective adoptive placement.

THE MOTHER: No, you're not adopting my son out.

THE COURT: We need to make sure that this child is in a prospective adoptive placement because Mother and Father are not -- I said prospective adoptive placement to wake you up.

THE MOTHER: I am awake, and I'm trying my best to do everything you're asking me. You've obviously never struggled to know how hard this is.

THE COURT: [Calls another case] [¶] Just a minute. Come back in here. Get her back in here, please. [¶] Sit down, please.

THE MOTHER: I will stay right here.

THE COURT: You will sit down in the jury box unless you want me to hold you in contempt of court. Sit down in that jury box right now. [¶] You have no right to be that rude to this social worker.

THE MOTHER: You have no right to be this rude to me. You have pulled this out of me, and it's not okay for me to be here any longer.

THE COURT: You have no right to be rude and assaultive to this social worker.

THE MOTHER: I did not assault her.

THE COURT: Yes, you did. You grabbed the piece of paper out of her so hard that I could hear it clear up here.

THE MOTHER: I am ready to leave.

THE COURT: I want you to apologize to this social worker.

THE MOTHER: I'm sorry, [social worker].

THE COURT: Thank you.

(R.T. 53:12-55:11.)

The commission found that Judge Roberts's comments to the parents were discourteous, impatient, and harsh, in violation of canons 1, 2A, and 3B(4).

g. In re: R.L. and S.L.

On January 8, 2020, the matter was before Judge Roberts for both jurisdiction and disposition determinations. During the hearing, Judge Roberts described the father's failure to enroll in a rehabilitation program as "pathetic." The commission found this remark to be discourteous, and in violation of canons 1, 2A, and 3B(4).

h. In re: H.O. and L.S.

During the January 8, 2020 hearing, Judge Roberts asked the mother about her divorce and the following exchange occurred:

THE COURT: All right. And, let's see, so you're divorced.

THE MOTHER: Yes. It will be final on the 14th of next month.

THE COURT: How do you go about choosing partners?

THE MOTHER: That's why I'm going to counseling, for healthy relationships.

THE COURT: How do you even find them?

THE MOTHER: I'm not. I'm done.

THE COURT: How do you find them?

THE MOTHER: My picker is broken. Yeah. That's -- it was bad.

THE COURT: First of all, you should not even consider being involved in another relationship as long as these cases are pending. You need to be applying yourself 1,000 percent to these children and getting your act together. So why would you even consider getting involved in one more relationship, much less two more relationships, much less with both of them being registered sex offenders is just so shocking to me. Why would you even consider getting involved in a relationship right now?

THE MOTHER: I don't know. I'm done, though. There's going to be no more relationships for me.

Judge Roberts then asked the father about his alcohol use. When the father acknowledged he was drinking, but not in treatment, Judge Roberts asked about his longest period of sobriety. When the father told her six months, Judge Roberts responded by calling him "a raging alcoholic." Judge Roberts subsequently asked to see the father's AA logs. When the father could not produce them because he said his backpack was stolen, Judge Roberts responded, "What do you know." Additionally, when discussing the father's alcohol use and lack of treatment, Judge Roberts said, "This is pathetic."

The commission found that Judge Roberts remarks to both parents were undignified, discourteous, and inconsistent with canons 1, 2A, and 3B(4).

i. In re: T.P., et al.

The matters were before Judge Roberts on January 8, 2020, for a sixth-month review. During the hearing Judge Roberts asked the father why he was not drug testing. When he said he was living in a van and did not have transportation, the following exchange occurred:

THE COURT: How about a bicycle or walk or bus?

THE FATHER: I don't have a bike, but I can walk, yeah.

THE COURT: You can walk.

THE FATHER: I do walk. My boots are falling apart already, though.

THE COURT: Well, that's the first time I've heard of somebody not drug testing because their boots are worn out. That is the most ridiculous statement I have ever heard.

THE FATHER: That's not what I said.

THE COURT: Yes, it is.

THE FATHER: I said, I do walk, my boots are worn out. I didn't say I don't test because my boots are worn out.

THE COURT: Then why did you tell me your boots are worn out if you weren't using it as an excuse?

Judge Roberts then asked the mother how she was doing. When the mother told the court that she was not well, Judge Roberts responded, "So you guys are doing terribly. I can't believe that Children's Services is extending these services out another six months. It's only by luck of the law that you're given more services here. Both of you are doing terribly, and there isn't a chance in the world these children are coming home if you continue doing what you're doing."

Later in the hearing, when the mother said she was clean but could be better about testing, Judge Roberts said, "You're clean? And you expect me to believe that?"

When Judge Roberts subsequently asked the father whether he was working, the following occurred.

THE FATHER: No. We are looking, but not working.

THE COURT: Why aren't you working?

THE FATHER: I just, I can't get any -- I'm applying. I've worked for my dad a couple of times, and he's been able to [sic]. But I'm trying to work.

THE COURT: Are these children in a pre-adoptive or permanent placement? Because it doesn't sound to me like they are going home.

THE FATHER: They're with my parents.

THE COURT: And so that makes you feel okay?

THE FATHER: No.

THE COURT: That's one of the problems with children being placed with relatives is you don't feel like you have to step up to the plate to get them home.

THE FATHER: I'm trying to step up.

THE COURT: No, you have not. You have not drug tested once. That is not somebody stepping up to the plate.

THE FATHER: For three and a half months I drug tested every single time, and you still yelled at me. I missed one that first court date. And I was working full time. I still got yelled at. And I'm trying. I'm homeless, I live in a van, have no phone.

THE COURT: Then get into treatment and get into doing your drug testing and quit using drugs, and get out of your van and go to a shelter. Get into residential treatment. Get a job. There's [sic] lots of things that if you told me that you were doing any of those things that I'd say, you know, you're right, you're trying as hard as you can. No. You two are still using drugs, you're not drug testing, you're sleeping in your van, you're not in a home, and you're not going to services. So don't tell me you are doing the best you can.

After ordering that reunification services be continued, Judge Roberts ended the hearing by saying, "And if you don't turn this around, these children are going to be placed permanently with the grandparents. See you then."

The commission found that the judge's remarks to the parents were impatient and discourteous, in violation of canons 1, 2A, and 3B(4).

j. In re: I.V.

On May 20, 2020, In re: I.V. was before Judge Roberts for disposition. The mother and child each had counsel and an assistant county counsel appeared on behalf of Children's Services. The paternal grandmother was present, but the father was not. The judge expressed dismay at the father's failure to appear, and twice told the parties that she wanted the father to "face the music." Judge Roberts spoke to the parties as follows:

THE COURT: All right. Well, I'm encouraging father to come. [¶] Where is he?

SOCIAL WORKER: Your Honor, [social worker], at last weeks' [sic] meeting with the relatives and [the mother], the mother-in-law that was present, we did have an interpreter present, and we did explain to them the importance of father showing up to court.

THE COURT: Where is he?

SOCIAL WORKER: They were going to try to encourage him to come.

THE COURT: Mother, where is Father? No. You.

[MOTHER'S ATTORNEY]: Your Honor –

THE COURT: Where is the father?

THE MOTHER: He's at home.

[MOTHER'S ATTORNEY]: My client –

THE COURT: I'm sorry. What did she say?

[ASSISTANT COUNTY COUNSEL]: "He's at home."

THE COURT: He's at home. He doesn't care about this?

[MOTHER'S ATTORNEY]: Your Honor, I would object to my client being asked questions about somebody who has a different potential interest than her.

THE COURT: I have every right to ask where the father is. This is a father and him not coming to court [sic]. This couple is together. It's not as if he's separated and living somewhere else. [¶] As far as I know they are together. They have produced three children together. They are not able to take care of any of these children. I want father here to face the music. [¶] Now, if he refuses to come, we'll still look at the relatives, but I don't understand why a father would not come to court to advocate what's right for his child.

(R.T. 9:9-10:16.)

Later in the proceeding, after a discussion about the mother possibly nominating a guardian, Judge Roberts spoke harshly to the crying 20-year-old mother.

THE COURT: This is a very sad situation. [¶] Mother, what are you doing about the drug problem?

THE MOTHER: I'm quitting.

THE COURT: I'm sorry?

THE MOTHER: I'm quitting. I'm trying to go to rehab.

THE COURT: You're going to quit, and you're going -- you have given birth to three drug addicted babies. That is not okay. You have sentenced them to a lifetime of problems. [¶] And I don't understand what's wrong with you as to why you would continue to get pregnant when you continued to abuse drugs and bring drug addicted babies in > this world. It's not okay. You either go get some permanent birth control, or you quit using drugs. This is not okay.

(R.T. 12:9-26.)

The commission found that Judge Roberts's questioning of the mother as to the father's whereabouts, while her attorney tried to object, was discourteous. The commission also found that Judge Roberts's other comments, excerpted above, were harsh and discourteous. Judge Roberts's demeanor and remarks violated canons 1, 2A, and 3B(4).

2. The commission found that, in one case, Judge Roberts was discourteous to the attorneys and the social worker.

During the same May 20, 2020 hearing in In re: I.V., discussed above, an attorney appeared on behalf of a local family who was about to adopt the child's older sister. That family also wished to care for the child, but Children's Services denied placement with them. Instead, Children's Services was considering placing the child with either the father's relatives or the out-of-county family who had adopted the child's other sister. When the attorney for the local family asked about visitation, the social worker told the court that the child was having video-conferencing visits with both her mother and the out-of-county family, but not the local family. The judge then interrupted the social worker, threw her arms up, and, with a raised voice, said, "What? With a newborn baby. That's ridiculous."

Later, when the assistant county counsel told Judge Roberts that the last judicial officer on the case approved of the video-conferencing, Judge Roberts appeared upset and responded by giving Children's Services full discretion for any and all visits and setting a further hearing date of July 22nd. When the attorney for the local family pointed out that Judge Roberts said she wanted the next hearing to be earlier than July, Judge Roberts responded, "I'm not interested. Sorry. I've said my peace [sic]. It's been rejected, so I'll see you in July."

The commission found that Judge Roberts was discourteous to the social worker and the attorneys. She raised her voice, threw her arms up, interrupted the social worker, twice suggested that the video-conferencing visits were "ridiculous," and appeared upset after the assistant county counsel told her another judge supported the video-conferencing visits. The judge's conduct was contrary to canons 1, 2A, and 3B(4).

3. The commission found that, over the course of four hearings in the In re: K.S. and J.S. matters, Judge Roberts became embroiled and abused her authority regarding the mother's prescription use of marijuana and methadone.

During the February 25, 2019 hearing, when Judge Roberts asked the mother if she planned to reduce her dose of methadone, the mother explained that she had a plan to decrease her prescription methadone use mapped out with her doctor. Judge Roberts requested a copy of the plan saying, "Let's get a copy of the plan she has, because we don't do a lot of good to these parents if they're taking so much methadone with no plan to get off it and decrease it. I would rather you be on methadone than heroin, but I would rather you be off methadone altogether." Later in the hearing Judge Roberts said, "I have people sit in this courtroom who are on methadone who are so doped up they can barely even talk. So it's not a foregone conclusion just because you're on methadone that it's the appropriate dose and the minimum dose you can take to keep from having to go back to heroin, but enough that you can function." During the same hearing, the father's attorney reminded Judge Roberts that she had authorized the father's use of opioids and marijuana because they were medically cleared.

At the March 14, 2019 hearing, despite an earlier authorization, Judge Roberts ordered the mother not to use marijuana. The judge also said the following:

> THE COURT: I would like to see some kind of plan to get Mother off the methadone. We don't stay on methadone forever. Methadone is a treatment to help you stay clean from heroin, and if we don't have any plan in place to start decreasing the amount of methadone, we have a Mother who is quite potentially is [sic] doped up every day. She doesn't appear to be under the influence when she comes into this courtroom, but we don't know what time she gets her dose, how much her dose is, is it going up, is it decreasing? We don't know because Mother refuses to cooperate. [¶] I think Father is doing much better. Father appears to be cooperating. Father appears to be drug testing as asked by the Court. He does appear to be using opiates and marijuana, but he appears to be using it [sic] appropriately. He does have significant medical conditions.

Judge Roberts also noted that the father "doesn't seem to have the animosity and anger towards the Court or the system that Mother seems to have."

As discussed above, at the June 6, 2019 hearing, Judge Roberts argued with the parents about authorizing, and then subsequently prohibiting, the mother's marijuana use, saying, "You know what, I don't care if you have -- a prescription or not, I ordered you to quit." With a raised voice, Judge Roberts then said, "I can order you to not do anything that I say I am ordering you not to do it [sic]."

During the October 3, 2019 hearing, Judge Roberts said to the mother, "I want to know why you're on methadone, and why we are not trying to get off methadone. So I really want you to think about this. And I've read the records, and supposedly you're on a really high dose because of some kind of metabolism issue. I don't believe it for a minute. I have been on the bench for 22 years, and I have never heard of somebody having such a high metabolism, or whatever this is, that they have to stay on a high dose of methadone." Judge Roberts also discussed, at some length, her view that methadone was having a negative impact on the mother's personality.

"Embroilment is the process by which the judge surrenders the role of impartial factfinder/decisionmaker and joins the fray." (Rothman, et al., Cal. Judicial Conduct Handbook (4th ed. 2017) § 2.1, p. 58.) Additionally, a judge's role is constrained to consideration of the evidence before her. A judge may not supplement that evidence, however lacking, with independent investigation.

The commission found that over the course of the four hearings, the judge abused her authority by substituting her own judgment for that of the mother's doctor on the issue of prescription marijuana and methadone use. Judge Roberts also abandoned the role of neutral arbiter and became embroiled when she argued with the parents about the mother's marijuana use and repeatedly and negatively commented on the mother's prescription use of methadone. Judge Roberts's conduct violated canons 2A and 3 (a judge shall perform the duties of judicial office impartially, competently, and diligently).

The commission found that on January 8, 2020, Judge Roberts engaged in undignified, discourteous, and abusive treatment of court staff and, the following day, discourteously raised her voice to another judge.

For several years, Judge Roberts was the presiding judge of the juvenile dependency court in the Chico courthouse. A commissioner handled juvenile delinquency cases in the Oroville courthouse, under the supervision of a criminal judge. In 2019, the Board of Judges voted to consolidate the two juvenile divisions under one presiding judge. They agreed, however, that the two juvenile courts would not be formally joined until Judge Roberts retired. The Board of Judges also voted to move the dependency court from the Chico courthouse to the Oroville courthouse. Judge Roberts did not agree with the consolidation plan and had concerns about the move and the size of her new courtroom and its single-inmate holding cell.

On January 8, 2020, Judge Roberts had her first dependency calendar in Oroville. One of the difficulties she faced was a court-wide internet outage. As all the dependency court files were digital, the outage delayed Judge Roberts's already-full calendar. Sometime during the morning, a court staff member entered Judge Roberts's courtroom to bring the courtroom clerk a message. Judge Roberts appeared frustrated and upset by the lack of internet service and yelled, "This is ridiculous!" The court staff member immediately left the courtroom to find someone who could help with tech support.

Sometime later that morning, another court employee, who was in a room off the internal hallway that connects the courtrooms to chambers and the clerk's office, heard Judge Roberts come out of her courtroom yelling, "This isn't working! This isn't working!" As Judge Roberts walked down the internal hall toward the clerk's office, her voice continued to be raised, but the court employee could no longer clearly hear what she was saying.

Also sometime that morning, another court staff member was at her desk when she heard Judge Roberts yelling in the internal hallway as she approached the clerk's office. She could not tell what Judge Roberts was saying, but said she heard Judge Roberts yelling loudly. Judge Roberts then approached her desk and was very angry about issues in her courtroom. Judge Roberts yelled at this court staff member words to the effect of, "This is my worst nightmare coming to Oroville. I never wanted this to happen. Fix it immediately!" The court staff member, who had worked for the court for many years, said she had never seen Judge Roberts, or any other judge, act this way. She offered to see if she could move the judge to another courtroom, but Judge Roberts yelled that she wasn't moving to another courtroom. Then Judge Roberts turned and loudly stomped back down the internal hallway in the direction of the courtroom and her chambers.

At some point during the lunch hour, Judge Roberts returned to the clerk's office and entered the juvenile room. She loudly demanded that a juvenile clerk request that a courtroom be opened in the Chico courthouse, as a matter on Judge Roberts's afternoon calendar was incorrectly noticed for Chico. Several court employees were in the clerk's office and observed that Judge Roberts was upset. The juvenile clerk contacted a supervisor who said that the court staff in Chico decided not to open another courtroom. When the juvenile clerk relayed this information to Judge Roberts, the judge appeared to be very upset and left the clerk's office.

After either the first or second outburst in the clerk's office, court staff heard Judge Roberts return to her chambers and slam both her outer and inner doors. Later, when a court supervisor repeatedly knocked on Judge Roberts's closed outer door, Judge Roberts refused to respond.

As the court supervisor walked back from Judge Roberts's chambers toward the clerk's office, she encountered another supervisor in the internal hallway. The second supervisor heard that Judge Roberts had yelled at her staff and was going to chambers to talk with her. The first supervisor explained that the judge would not respond to her knocking, and both court employees returned to the clerk's office to talk with the juvenile clerk.

The supervisors were in the juvenile room, with three other staff members, for only a few minutes when Judge Roberts returned. Judge Roberts was very upset and appeared to have been crying. Judge Roberts began screaming and pointing her finger at one of the supervisors, demanding that court staff open a courtroom in Chico. The supervisor attempted to calm Judge Roberts and explain the alternative plan to opening the courtroom. But Judge Roberts refused to listen, repeatedly interrupted, and continued to scream and point her finger. Judge Roberts then turned and walked out of the juvenile room with the supervisor following. Judge Roberts suddenly stopped in the middle of the Criminal Division of the clerk's office and turned to face the supervisor. In front of a number of court employees, Judge Roberts yelled, "Fine! I'll just do this myself!" Shortly thereafter, Judge Roberts left the courthouse after emailing the presiding judge to tell her that she was sick and going home. Court staff expressed concern for Judge Roberts and concern that the public may have overheard her outbursts in the clerk's office. The following day, Judge Roberts returned to the courthouse and apologized to court staff for her behavior.

On January 9, 2020, at the request of both Judge Roberts and the presiding judge, the assistant presiding judge observed Judge Roberts's dependency calendar. During a recess, the judges went to Judge Roberts's chambers to talk. Judge Roberts asked the assistant presiding judge why she couldn't be moved to another specific courtroom. When the assistant presiding began to explain, Judge Roberts spoke to her with a raised voice. The assistant presiding judge told Judge Roberts that she was going to leave if Judge Roberts continued to yell. She also said that it was not acceptable for Judge Roberts to yell at her or at court staff. As the assistant presiding judge left chambers, Judge Roberts said, in a manner that reflected derision, "Thanks for the support."

"Judges must conduct themselves in a judicious and professional manner in relation to courtroom staff and other court employees." (Rothman, et al., Cal. Judicial Conduct Handbook (4th ed. 2017) § 6:27, p. 367.) As Judge Rothman also states, "Canon 3B(4) of the Code of Judicial Ethics requires a judge to be 'patient, dignified, and courteous to ... others with whom the judge deals in an official capacity ....' This includes court personnel." (Rothman, et al., Cal. Judicial Conduct Handbook (4th ed. 2017) § 3.18, p. 142.)

The commission found that Judge Roberts engaged in significant and repeated abusive conduct toward court staff, including yelling in the courtroom and entering the clerk's office three separate times, inappropriately raising her voice to three specific court employees. She also yelled in the internal hallway, stomped her feet, slammed both her chambers' doors, and refused to answer her door when court employees sought to resolve the matter with her privately. The commission also found that Judge Roberts raised her voice and spoke derisively to the assistant presiding judge while in chambers. Judge Roberts's conduct violated canons 1, 2A, and 3B(4).

Judge Roberts's harsh and discourteous remarks to parents, attorneys and a social worker, discussed above, constituted misconduct. Describing, among other things, parties' conduct as "pathetic" and "ridiculous," as well as using sarcasm and a raised voice, constitute failures by a judge to be dignified and courteous to those with whom the judge deals in an official capacity. "Improper judicial demeanor impacts the fairness of judicial proceedings and respect for the judicial institution. The canons' insistence on appropriate judicial demeanor rests on the idea that such demeanor is one of those things that is central to the appearance and reality of fairness and impartiality in judicial proceedings." (Rothman, et al., Cal. Judicial Conduct Handbook (4th ed. 2017) § 2.46, p. 116.)

In response to the commission's preliminary investigation, Judge Roberts acknowledged that, on January 8, 2020, she should not have made the remark regarding the father's boots in the In re: T.P., et al. matter, should not have said unspecified things in the In re: A.V. matter, and should have let the mother offer her suggestions in the In re: X.N. matter. She pointed to the stress of the dependency court move, the significant delay in her calendar, and/or her frustration with the parents' behavior as an explanation for her conduct. She otherwise contended that her conduct was appropriate and that "[j]udges are human and courts have recognized that judges cannot be held to a 'superhuman standard' that would allow no expression of emotion. (Railey v. Webb (6th Cir. 2008) 540 F.3d 393, 411; Jones v. Luebbers (8th Cir. 2004) 359 F.3d 1005, 1013.)" She also asserted that "expressions of impatience, dissatisfaction, annoyance, and even anger are within the bounds of what imperfect men and women selected as judges sometimes display. (Liteky v. United States (1994) 510 U.S. 540, 555-556.)" The commission found those cases inapposite as they discuss, not the standards of proper judicial conduct under the canons, but rather the degree of judicial bias or partiality that would require recusal or disqualification in order to avoid a due process violation. With respect to her treatment of parents, Judge Roberts stated that she employed a "tough love" approach that she also used while presiding in drug court, arguing that her approach was necessary to compel parents to gain awareness of the harm they were causing their children and to change their behavior. The commission, however, found that belittling and demeaning litigants is not appropriate in any court, dependency, criminal, or otherwise. Such conduct violates the Code of Judicial Ethics.

Judge Roberts acknowledged her mistreatment of staff, her misconduct in the courthouse, and her discourtesy to the assistant presiding judge. She stated that she sincerely regrets her lack of composure on January 8 and 9, 2020, and recognizes that her behavior was not appropriate.

In determining to issue a public admonishment, the commission considered that Judge Roberts's misconduct involved harsh and degrading treatment of multiple vulnerable and struggling parents in dependency. The number and nature of these incidents indicate a pattern of misconduct.

The commission considered the impact of the judge's remarks on the public's regard for the integrity and impartiality of the court system. In determining to issue a public admonishment, notwithstanding Judge Roberts's retirement and lack of prior discipline, the commission considered the judge's apparent lack of remorse for the harm her "tough love" approach caused parents appearing before her, as well as her significant misconduct directed at court staff and her discourtesy to another judge.

The commission found that Judge Roberts's conduct in the matters described above was, at minimum, improper action.

|---|---|
| IN THE MATTER CONCERNINGJUDGE PATRICK E. CONNOLLY | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSINGPUBLIC ADMONISHMENT |

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge Patrick E. Connolly, a judge of the Los Angeles County Superior Court since 2009. His current term began in 2015. Pursuant to rule 116 of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance, Judge Connolly and his attorney, Edith R. Matthai, appeared before the commission on March 24, 2021, to contest the imposition of a tentative public admonishment issued on December 15, 2020. Judge Connolly waived his right to formal proceedings under rule 118 and to review by the Supreme Court. Having considered the written and oral objections and argument submitted by Judge Connolly and his counsel, and good cause appearing, the Commission on Judicial Performance issues this public admonishment pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution, based upon the statement of facts and reasons set forth below.

As described below, Judge Connolly displayed improper demeanor toward two criminal defense attorneys during an arraignment and, in a different criminal case, made an inappropriate remark about the jury's verdict to a defendant who had been acquitted. The commission determined that a public admonishment was warranted due to Judge Connolly's significant prior discipline (a public admonishment in 2016 and a private admonishment in 2010) and his failure to fully acknowledge that his conduct was inconsistent with the California Code of Judicial Ethics.

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

I. People v. Felipe Ramirez and Jorge Ramirez

Attorney Martin Lijtmaer represented criminal defendant Jorge Ramirez, and attorney Rachel Steinback represented co-defendant Felipe Ramirez, in People v. Ramirez (TA151719), a matter pending before Judge Connolly. On March 20, 2020, the day after Governor Gavin Newsom announced the statewide stay-at-home order due to COVID-19, Mr. Lijtmaer called Judge Connolly's clerk to request permission to appear by telephone for the arraignment scheduled that afternoon, based on his and Ms. Steinback's concern about having been exposed to the COVID-19 virus and the possibility of spreading it at the courthouse. Judge Connolly spoke to Mr. Lijtmaer over the phone and said his clerk would call back to communicate his decision. In the meantime, Mr. Lijtmaer and Ms. Steinback attempted to find another attorney who could appear at the arraignment of their clients in their stead, but they were unable to do so. At approximately 2:00 p.m., the clerk told Mr. Lijtmaer that the judge had agreed to allow counsel to appear at the arraignment by telephone later that day.

That afternoon, Mr. Lijtmaer and Ms. Steinback appeared by telephone. Their clients, co-defendants Jorge Ramirez and Felipe Ramirez, were in custody and appeared in person. After arraignment, Mr. Lijtmaer asked that his client, Jorge Ramirez, be released on his own recognizance, citing, among other reasons, health concerns outlined in a recent letter in Mr. Lijtmaer's possession. The following exchange occurred:

> THE COURT: How am I going to see that letter, if you're not in my courtroom?
> MR. LIJTMAER: Well --
>
> THE COURT: How am I going to see that letter if you are not in my courtroom? I'm not going to, am I?
> MR. LIJTMAER: As an officer of the court –

THE COURT: All right.

MR. LIJTMAER: -- I'd ask the court to --

THE COURT: Is there anything further? Is there anything further, sir? Anything further, sir?

MR. LIJTMAER: Yes, your honor. I have letters -- Yes. I have letters from both --

THE COURT: Which I cannot see, because you have not come to my courtroom? [¶] All right.

MR. LIJTMAER: Your honor, respectfully, the reason I didn't --

THE COURT: Respectfully? You have not come to the courtroom.

MR. LIJTMAER: Your honor --

THE COURT: All right. So, with that, I'm going to set -- I am going to set -- I am speaking, sir. I am speaking. [¶] We are setting the preliminary hearing at this time for April 13th, for each. Bail is going to be set for Mr. Ramirez, Jorge, for $150,000; and for Felipe at $100,000. [¶] If you have those letters, you can bring those in at the time.

Ms. Steinback asked to be heard and requested that her client, Felipe Ramirez, be released on his own recognizance because, among other reasons, he has a compromised immune system that makes him "particularly vulnerable to the condition --." Before Ms. Steinback finished explaining that her client was vulnerable to complications from COVID-19, which he was more likely to contract if he remained in custody, Judge Connolly asked: "And how do you know this? And how do you know this?" Ms. Steinback responded that she had learned about her client's medical history from his family. The judge replied: "I suggest you bring in that paperwork at the time of the preliminary hearing." Ms.

Steinback said that her client has a family to support and a full-time job that has been deemed essential under the stay-at-home orders, and that he would lose that job if he were not released from custody. Judge Connolly responded as follows:

> Okay. I'm going to stop you there. Because we're done. [¶] All right. I am not releasing either of these people, with these charges. There are multiple charges. If you wished to present this evidence, you should have been here or had someone represent you. [¶] . . . [¶] Bail for Jorge in the amount of $150,000, and for Felipe at $100,000.

In Judge Connolly's response to the preliminary investigation letter, he acknowledged that he "should not have demonstrated irritation or impatience with defense counsel" and that he "spoke too sharply" to them. He asked the commission to "take into account the highly unusual circumstances present at that time." He stated that, as of March 20, 2020, the court had not yet implemented operations to conduct matters remotely, which was becoming necessary due to the public health crisis; it was not yet clear how long the Governor's stay-at-home order would be in effect; and there was no clear guidance about how to handle the attorneys' request to appear telephonically at a criminal proceeding. The commission acknowledges that the circumstances caused by the public health crisis were unusual and presented challenges, but notes that the unusual circumstances and challenges affected the defense attorneys as well as the court. The commission concluded that the initial lack of clarity about how to handle court proceedings during the public health crisis did not excuse or explain the judge's mistreatment of the attorneys.

In his objections to the notice of tentative public admonishment, Judge Connolly objected to the commission's conclusion that his conduct toward the attorneys constituted improper action. He argued that, in Offutt v. United States (1954) 348 U.S. 11, 17, the United States Supreme Court said that a "modicum of quick temper" must be allowed even judges. But the court made that comment in the context of a judge being provoked by contumacious counsel and citing the attorney for contempt. Here, there is no evidence of provocative conduct by counsel. Before the hearing, the attorneys requested, and Judge Connolly granted, permission for them to appear by telephone, due to the stay-at-home order and concern that one of the counsel was experiencing COVID symptoms. At the hearing, Judge Connolly exhibited irritation that Mr. Lijtmaer referred to a letter the judge did not have, but the situation caused by the stay-at-home order arose unexpectedly, through no fault of the attorneys. When Mr. Lijtmaer tried to discuss the letter with the judge, the judge did not allow him to do so.

At his appearance before the commission, Judge Connolly claimed—for the first time—that he spoke with Mr. Lijtmaer on the telephone twice and told Mr. Lijtmaer to send whatever information he had to present to the court before the hearing, but that he had not received anything from Mr. Lijtmaer. Judge Connolly told the commission that, during the telephone arraignment, he did not mention his earlier instruction to Mr. Lijtmaer because he was cognizant of the relationship between the attorneys and their clients who were standing in his courtroom.

First, the commission does not consider new evidence at an appearance, absent certain circumstances not present here.[1] In his response to the preliminary investigation letter, Judge Connolly stated that he spoke to Mr. Lijtmaer once, asked Mr. Lijtmaer if he could find another attorney to appear in his and Ms. Steinback's stead, and told Mr. Lijtmaer that he would make a decision later that afternoon. The judge further stated that he later instructed his clerk to call Mr. Lijtmaer and inform him that his request to appear telephonically had been granted. There is no mention in the judge's response of any instruction to Mr. Lijtmaer to provide anything to the court before the hearing.

[1] Rule 116(b) provides that factual representations not previously presented to the commission during the preliminary investigation will not be considered unless it is shown that the new factual information is either: (1) (a) material to the question of whether the judge engaged in misconduct or the appropriate level of discipline, and (b) could not have been discovered and presented to the commission with reasonable diligence during the preliminary investigation, (2) offered to correct an error of fact in the notice of tentative public admonishment, or (3) necessary to prevent a miscarriage of justice.

Second, the commission was not persuaded by Judge Connolly's explanation for why, during the telephonic hearing, he did not question Mr. Litjmaer about why he had not provided the letter to the court before the hearing. If Judge Connolly had instructed Mr. Lijtmaer by telephone to provide the court with whatever he had before the hearing, Judge Connolly likely would have brought that up during the arraignment. Instead of asking Mr. Lijtmaer why he had not provided the letter to the court before the hearing, Judge Connolly rebuked him by stating four times that Mr. Lijtmaer had not come to the courtroom. Further, the commission found that, as far as the potential effect of the judge's comments on the attorney-client relationship, there would be no difference between chastising Mr. Lijtmaer in front of his client for not coming to the courtroom and chastising him for not providing a letter before the hearing. Hence Judge Connolly's rationale for not asking Mr. Lijtmaer why he did not provide the letter before the hearing, if the judge had asked him to do so, was not convincing.

Mr. Lijtmaer tried to respond to Judge Connolly's inquiry about how he was going to see the letter if Mr. Lijtmaer was not in his courtroom. When Mr. Lijtmaer said "Your honor, respectfully," Judge Connolly interrupted him with "Respectfully?", which seems sarcastic. Mr. Lijtmaer tried to respond. The judge cut him off again. Similarly, Judge Connolly also interrupted Ms. Steinback, displayed impatience toward her ("And how do you know this? And how do you know this?"), and cut her off ("I'm going to stop you there. Because we're done.") The attorneys, in contrast, appear polite and respectful. There is no apparent justification for the judge's display of impatience and irritation, which he admitted and which is clearly reflected in the transcript of the proceeding.

At his appearance before the commission, Judge Connolly acknowledged that the transcript "looks bad," but he did not acknowledge committing misconduct or display any contrition. Rather, he stated that he did not treat the defense attorneys any differently because they were not in the courtroom.

The commission found that Judge Connolly's poor demeanor toward the defense attorneys violated canon 3B(4) (a judge shall be patient, dignified, and courteous to those with whom the judge deals in an official capacity), canon 2 (a judge shall avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety in all of the judge's activities), and canon 2A (a judge shall respect and comply with the law and shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary).

2. People v. Hall-Singh, et al.

On August 20, 2018, in People v. Indra Hall-Singh, Dalisha Monique Jordan, and Eugene C. Germany (TA145484), after the jury announced its verdict convicting defendants Hall-Singh and Jordan and acquitting defendant Germany, and after the jurors left the courtroom, Judge Connolly said to Mr. Germany:

> . . . let me tell you, you've been given a gift from God because there's no question in my mind that you're guilty of this crime. [¶] Now, with that, though -- well, I'll tell you, chivalry is not dead. If you'd taken the deal, Ms. Jordan would have had that six year deal. She's going to get a lot more time than that. So, you know, take that into consideration. [¶] All right. But you've been given a gift. What you do with it is your choice. Fair enough?

Mr. Germany responded, "Yeah."

At his appearance before the commission, Judge Connolly asserted that it was his "duty" and his "responsibility" as a judge to advise defendant Germany that he had been "given a gift from God" so that Mr. Germany would take advantage of opportunities he has been given. But Judge Connolly said,

"[T]here's no question in my mind that you're guilty of this crime" after the jury had rendered a verdict of acquittal, thereby disparaging the jury's determination that the defendant had not been proven guilty. The jury system is an essential pillar of American democracy. The judge's role in a jury trial is to be neutral. Judge Connolly's remark was likely to undermine public confidence in the independence of the jury and its important role in the justice system.

Further, contrary to Judge Connolly's assertion, a judge does not have a duty to advise a criminal defendant that the defendant has been given the gift of an acquittal. While a judge may encourage a defendant to make better choices and take advantage of opportunities in the future, the judge must not do so at the expense of the jury and its verdict.

Judge Connolly did not demonstrate that he understands why his comments to Mr. Germany were improper. In his objections to the notice of tentative public admonishment, he argued that they were not improper. And at his appearance before the commission, he stated, with regard to those comments, that he thinks what he did "was right" and "what [he] should have done."

The commission found Judge Connolly's remarks to Mr. Germany to be gratuitous, undignified, and improper, in violation of canons 2A and 3B(4).

Judge Connolly's conduct in both cases was, at a minimum, improper action.

In imposing this public admonishment, the commission considered Judge Connolly's prior discipline to be a significant aggravating factor. (Policy Declarations of Com. on Jud. Performance, policy 7.1(2)(e).) In 2016, Judge Connolly received a public admonishment for a course of conduct reflecting embroilment with a criminal defense attorney and for setting multiple post-trial hearings regarding possible contempt charges, which was an abuse of his authority. In 2010, Judge Connolly received a private admonishment for using profanity during a judicial profile interview and in chambers discussions with attorneys.

The commission also considered Judge Connolly's failure to fully appreciate his misconduct as an additional aggravating factor. (Policy Declarations of Com. on Jud. Performance, policy 7.1(2)(a).)

Commission members Hon. Michael B. Harper; Dr. Michael A. Moodian; Hon. William S. Dato; Ms. Sarah Kruer Jager; Ms. Kay Cooperman Jue; Hon. Lisa B. Lench; Nanci E. Nishimura, Esq.; Victor E. Salazar, Esq.; and Mr. Richard Simpson voted to impose the public admonishment. Mr. Eduardo De La Riva and Mr. Adam N. Torres did not participate.

BEFORE THE COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

| IN THE MATTER CONCERNINGJUDGE MICHAEL J. O'GARA | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSINGPUBLIC ADMONISHMENT |

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge Michael J. O'Gara, a judge of the Los Angeles County Superior Court since 2009. His current term began in 2021. Pursuant to rule 116 of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance, Judge O'Gara and his attorney, Paul S. Meyer, appeared before the commission on September 1, 2021, to contest the imposition of a tentative public admonishment issued on June 11, 2021. Judge O'Gara waived his right to formal proceedings under rule 118 and to review by the Supreme Court. Having considered the written and oral objections and argument submitted by Judge O'Gara and his counsel, and good cause appearing, the Commission on Judicial Performance issues this public admonishment pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution, based upon the statement of facts and reasons set forth below.

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

I. Facebook activity

On December 10, 2020, three days after George Gascón was sworn in as the new District Attorney of Los Angeles County, Judge O'Gara used his personal Facebook account to join a recently-created Facebook group called "Recall George Gascón," and added his family members to the group.

In December 2020, Judge O'Gara posted on the group page, "[George Gascón] took an oath to uphold and defend the constitution of the state of California … He is blatantly violating Section 28(f)(4) in dismissal of any prior enhancements."

Judge O'Gara also posted, then later removed, comments that engaged with group members in response to other members' posts. Judge O'Gara's comments included: (1) responding to the group administrator's post, "I don't know about the rest of you, but every election I am guilty of not paying attention to the Judges running. Now, I definitely will, especially after Gascón's own staff is talking about 'flipping the bench' etc. Some of the judges are fighting Gascóns [sic] directives and we need them to stay. They are heroes"; and (2) engaging in discussion with group members in response to another post by the group administrator, ostensibly quoting a prosecutor on a victim's right to be heard. The judge's comments, though later removed, were visible to at least 16,000 group members at the time they were made.

Judge O'Gara also "liked" the following comments by other group members: (1) regarding a complaint about a deputy district attorney implementing the district attorney's directives, "[Deputy District Attorney] Bob [Sherwood] was only doing what all the other Head Deputies are doing. He is being scapegoated here. But that's why he gets paid Grade 5 pay I guess"; and (2) regarding efforts to oust the elected district attorney, "Please let me know what I can do to help with this person's run. I work in court. The morale is extremely low."

The commission determined that Judge O'Gara's Facebook activity gave the appearance of bias against the Los Angeles County District Attorney. The judge was an active participant in a group with more than 16,000 members, formed to oppose an elected official, giving the appearance that he endorsed the group's stated goals and activity. Judge O'Gara posted remarks expressing a partisan viewpoint, and "liked" other users' comments expressing similarly partisan viewpoints.

The commission found that the judge's defense that he did not intend his social media activity to act as an endorsement of any specific partisan positions was not vindicating. "Likes" are, on their face, indicia that a person likes content. Further, Facebook is a forum with over one billion active monthly users, each of whom may, if they wish, screenshot or share content generated by another user.

Once Judge O'Gara commented on a Facebook post, he effectively distributed material to an unlimited number of persons, over whose actions he had no control.

Additionally, because Judge O'Gara heard cases prosecuted by the district attorney's office at the same time he participated in the group, Judge O'Gara's Facebook activity constituted making public comments about pending or impending proceedings in a court.

In his response to the commission, Judge O'Gara acknowledged that his actions on Facebook were "inappropriate," expressed contrition, and, in December 2020, removed himself from the Facebook group.

Judge O'Gara's participation in the "Recall George Gascón" Facebook group constituted a failure to refrain from engaging in political activity that may create the appearance of political bias or impropriety (canon 5); to refrain from making a public comment about a pending or impending proceeding in any court (canon 3B(9)); to conduct all of his extrajudicial activities so that they do not cast reasonable doubt on his ability to act impartially or demean the judicial office (canon 4A); and to participate in establishing and maintaining high standards of conduct (canon 1). Judge O'Gara's conduct was also inconsistent with his obligations to act, at all times, in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary, and constituted making statements, whether public or nonpublic, that commit the judge with respect to cases, controversies, or issues that are likely to come before the courts or that are inconsistent with the impartial performance of the adjudicative duties of judicial office (canon 2A).

II. Twitter activity

Judge O'Gara also maintained a public Twitter account, with the username @mjogara and display name "Michael J. O'Gara." Judge O'Gara's followers on Twitter included the official account for the City of Glendale, at least one Los Angeles County deputy district attorney, and multiple private attorneys. Between 2014 and 2021, Judge O'Gara posted remarks ("tweets"), re-tweeted content, or liked tweets by other users that contained partisan viewpoints on controversial issues, suggested bias against particular classes of people, and were undignified and indecorous.

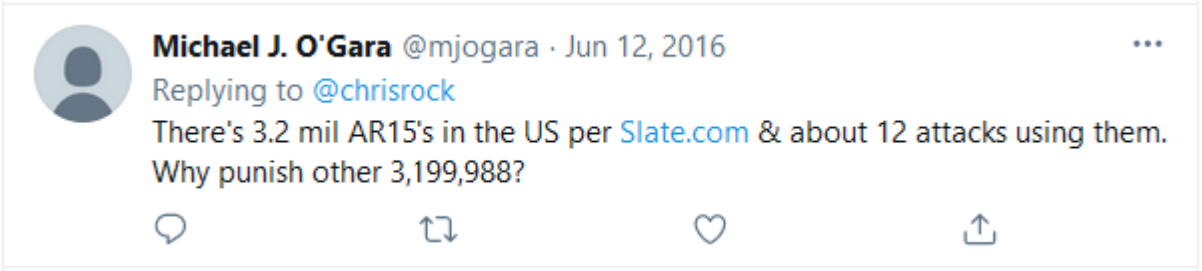
Several of Judge O'Gara's tweets appeared to reflect strong political points of view.



One tweet appeared critical of Black Lives Matter supporters who were exercising their First Amendment right to protest.

One tweet suggested a partisan viewpoint on the controversial issue of gun control.

Another tweet was undignified and indecorous.

Judge O'Gara also liked tweets by other users that appeared to reflect strong political points of view and opinions on controversial issues.

Judge O'Gara liked a tweet by another user that suggested racial bias against people of Chinese descent.

Judge O'Gara liked tweets that were seemingly critical of those exercising their First Amendment right to protest, such as supporters of the Black Lives Matter movement.

Several tweets the judge liked appeared to convey bias against victims of sexual assault and disdain and disrespect for women.

Other tweets liked by Judge O'Gara gave the appearance of opposition to immigrants and appeared to reflect strong political points of view and opinions on a controversial issue.

Other tweets that the judge liked suggested a partisan viewpoint on the controversial issue of police reform.

Judge O'Gara also liked a tweet that appeared to convey an anti-Muslim sentiment and gave the appearance of criticizing the First Amendment right to protest exercised by participants in Women's March.

Another tweet that Judge O'Gara liked seemed to express an opinion on the controversial issue of the death penalty.

Judge O'Gara's social media activity gave the appearance of bias. He posted undignified, indecorous remarks in response to public figures, and appeared to espouse partisan and controversial viewpoints.

The commission found that the judge's defense that he did not intend his social media activity to act as an endorsement of any specific partisan positions or controversial viewpoints was not vindicating. "Likes" are, on their face, indicia that a person likes content. In addition to the judge's original tweets, the Twitter content Judge O'Gara "liked" reflected the appearance of bias, regardless of his intent. Further, Twitter is a forum with over three hundred million active monthly users, each of whom may, if they wish, screenshot or share content generated by another user. Once Judge O'Gara tweeted or re-tweeted content, he effectively distributed material to an unlimited number of persons, over whose actions he had no control. That Judge O'Gara's followers on Twitter included the official account for the City of Glendale, at least one Los Angeles deputy district attorney, and multiple private attorneys, compounded the harm done by his social media activity.

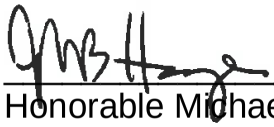
> Public involvement on either side in ongoing debates about controversial social and political issues is improper. Such issues (e.g., abortion and same-sex marriage) are frequently the subject of public debate and litigation. A judge who is politically active may be perceived to have prejudged issues that may come before the courts. Public involvement politicizes the judicial institution, demeans the judiciary, and impairs judicial independence and impartiality.

(Rothman, Cal. Judicial Conduct Handbook (4th ed. 2017) § 10:33, pp. 699-700.)

In his response to the commission, Judge O'Gara accepted that his actions on Twitter were inappropriate, expressed contrition, and advised the commission that he took corrective action by deleting the Twitter app from his phone and deactivating his account.



The commission determined that Judge O'Gara's Twitter activity constituted a failure to conduct all of his extrajudicial activities so that they do not cast reasonable doubt on his ability to act impartially or demean the judicial office (canon 4A); to participate in establishing and maintaining high standards of conduct (canon 1); and to act, at all times, in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary, and constituted making statements, whether public or nonpublic, that commit the judge with respect to cases, controversies, or issues that are likely to come before the courts or that are inconsistent with the impartial performance of the adjudicative duties of judicial office (canon 2A).

Judge O'Gara's conduct was, at a minimum, improper action.

Commission members Hon. Michael B. Harper; Dr. Michael A. Moodian; Mr. Eduardo De La Riva; Ms. Kay Cooperman Jue; Victor E. Salazar, Esq.; and Ms. Beatriz E. Tapia voted to impose the public admonishment. Hon. William S. Dato; Hon. Lisa B. Lench; Rickey Ivie, Esq.; and Mr. Richard Simpson voted for a private admonishment. Commission member Ms. Sarah Kruer Jager did not participate.

September 27, 1989

Honorable Bruce A. Clark
Judge of the Municipal Court
Ventura County Municipal Court District
800 South Victoria Avenue
Ventura, CA 93009

Dear Judge Clark:

At its August 1989 meeting, the Commission on Judicial Performance determined that you should be publicly reproved for the conduct set forth below.

The conduct which is the subject of the public reproval is as follows:

In June 1988, in your home, Assemblywoman Cathie Wright spoke with you about two traffic tickets received by her daughter. These cases were pending in your court. Based on that communication, you took several judicial actions in chambers: (1) You struck the requirement that the defendant appear in court on the tickets. (2) You permitted defendant to attend traffic school in connection with both tickets. (3) You ordered that both speeding counts be dismissed upon receipt of a traffic school certificate.

Because the communication from Assemblywoman Wright was in your own home, and because your judicial acts were in chambers, the prosecutor had no opportunity to participate in these proceedings, nor had the public any opportunity to observe them. The judicial decisions you made, though lawful, were unusually lenient.

This conduct warranted discipline under Article VI, section 18(f)(2) of the California Constitution. In particular, it violated the California Code of Judicial Conduct, including the following provisions:

> Canon 2A: Judges should respect and comply with the law and should conduct themselves at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary.
> Canon 2B: Judges should not allow their families, social, or other relationships to influence their judicial conduct or judgment. Judges should not. . . convey or permit others to convey the impression that they are in a special position to influence them.
> Canon 3A(4): Judges should accord to every person who is legally interested in a proceeding, or that person's lawyer, full right to be heard according to law, and except as authorized by law, neither initiate nor consider ex parte or other communications concerning a pending or impending proceeding. . .

In determining that a public reproval would be adequate discipline, the commission considered your lengthy service without discipline and your recognition that you should have handled the matter differently. The commission also considered that the incident appeared to be isolated. This public reproval is being issued with your consent.

Very truly yours,

Dear Judge Schmidt:

Following a five-day hearing before three special masters appointed by the Supreme Court to inquire into charges against you, the commission considered the record of the hearing and the report of the special masters and ordered you publicly reproved for conduct warranting discipline as follows:

> Judge Schmidt twice ordered the release from custody of one Terri Ann McMullen, the stepdaughter of Judge Schmidt's friend, Robert Guggenheim. Judge Schmidt's first release of McMullen followed another judge's denial of McMullen's motion for an O.R. release or a bail reduction. Before Judge Schmidt's second release of McMullen, McMullen had failed to appear in court and had been arrested on new charges, and the aggregate bail settings exceeded $50,000. The obvious and sole reason for Judge Schmidt's actions was his friendship with McMullen's step-father. Judge Schmidt's O.R. releases of McMullen were arbitrary and capricious exercises of Judge Schmidt's judicial discretion and undermined public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary. (See Canon 2, California Code of Judicial Conduct.)

Judge Schmidt made political contributions from his own campaign funds to non-judicial candidates in patent violation of Canon 7 of the Code of Judicial Conduct.

Judge Schmidt had been charged with providing preferential treatment to a friend who appeared before him. It was found that the case disposition was not unusual under existing Harbor Court policy.

Judge Schmidt had been charged with providing preferential treatment in exchange for sexual favors to a prostitute who had appeared before him. No evidence was introduced as to the exchange of sexual favors, and there was evidence that the case disposition was not unusual.

Honorable Glenda Doan
Judge of the Justice Court
Corcoran Justice Court District
1001 Chittenden Avenue

Dear Judge Doan:

At its November 1989 meeting, the Commission on Judicial Performance determined that you be publicly reproved for the conduct set forth below.

From January 3, 1983, to the present you have served as a judge of the Justice Court of the Corcoran Judicial District. In that same period you have continued the private practice of law, as the law permits.

From the time you became a judge through 1986, you received numerous sums of money from a client of your law practice. These sums, which exceeded $75,000, were not paid for legal services. You have variously described the money as gifts, loans, and income. You did not advise your client to obtain independent counsel before paying you the money, nor did you make the written disclosures required by the State Bar Rules of Professional Conduct, rule 3-300 (formerly rule 5-101). You did not inform the law firm where you worked that you were receiving these sums. You failed to disclose the payments on public Statements of Economic Interests filed in 1985 and thereafter.

This conduct warranted discipline under Article VI, section 18(f)(2) of the California Constitution. In particular, it was conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute.

In determining that a public reproval would be adequate discipline, the commission considered that the conduct occurred entirely off the bench. There was no evidence that your performance as a judge was in any way compromised. The commission also considered the great remorse you have expressed and your long record of civic service. This public reproval is being issued with your consent.

December 15, 1989

Honorable John Schatz, Jr.
Santa Clara County Superior Court
270 Grant Avenue
Palo Alto, California 94306

Dear Judge Schatz:

At its November, 1989 meeting, the commission determined that you should be publicly reproved for the conduct set forth below.

The conduct which is the subject of the public reproval is as follows:

1. On the morning of July 11, 1989, you went to the chambers of Judge James L. Browning, Jr., of the San Mateo County Municipal Court, to discuss a criminal case against your son, Christopher Schatz, charging violation of Health and Safety Code Section 11364 (possession of narcotics paraphernalia). The case was calendared for arraignment that morning. Your son did not appear. You identified yourself to Judge Browning as a Santa Clara Superior Court judge, and engaged him in discussion of your son and your son's case.

Deputy District Attorney Marta Diaz entered chambers at the request of Judge Browning shortly before 9:00 a.m. You, DDA Diaz, and Judge Browning discussed the possibility of diversion, and the sentence which would be given on a guilty plea. You asked whether a lower fine than that indicated might be given. On your request, you were given diversion papers. DDA Diaz pointed out to you that you could not appear for your son. The arraignment was continued one week, to July 18, 1989.

On July 18, 1989, you again appeared in court on your son's behalf. You approached the bench and began speaking to Commissioner Gruber. When DDA Diaz saw you conversing with Commissioner Gruber, she went to the bench. You were asking Commissioner Gruber to enter a plea of not guilty on your son's behalf and continue the matter as long as possible. Noting that your son was not present, DDA Diaz asked that a bench warrant issue. This request was placed on the record and taken under submission by the commissioner.

2. On August 22, 1989, the Commission on Judicial Performance sent you a preliminary investigation letter requesting your comment on the incident reported above, and asking the following question:

> "The commission also wishes to know whether you have ever contacted any other judge, court commissioner, court, law enforcement agency, or prosecutorial agency on your son's behalf regarding any charges against him. Please explain."

In a letter dated September 13, 1989, you responded to this inquiry as follows:

> "In answer to the 'have you ever' question on page 2, my answer is 'no.'"

Your response to the commission was false, for you had previously contacted the District Attorney in Santa Clara County regarding another criminal case against your son, as described in Count 3, below.

When asked about this inconsistency, you offered the explanation that you interpreted the commission's question "as referring to any other officials in San Mateo County where the events in question had taken place."

3. In early December, 1988, you telephoned District Attorney Leo Himmelsbach and asked to meet with him. He agreed to meet you for breakfast on December 13, 1988. At the meeting, you told DA Himmelsbach about a Santa Clara County burglary case against your son which you believed was a weak case. You told DA Himmelsbach that your son wished to enter the military, but could not do so unless the charge against him was dismissed. DA Himmelsbach told you that in his experience military recruiters would sometimes come to court or write letters for defendants; he also said that in his experience, the military refused to accept defendants who were on probation, but did not make dismissal of charges a condition of acceptance. DA Himmelsbach agreed to bring the case to the attention of Deputy District Attorney Tom Ferenholz.

DDA Ferenholz represented the prosecution in court on December 15, 1988. No military recruiter appeared in court. When counsel went into chambers to discuss the case with Municipal Court Judge Hanifan, you also went into chambers. DDA Ferenholz suggested that the matter be continued for some further checking. However, on the representation that your son would be entering military service immediately and that dismissal of the case was a prerequisite to enlistment, the burglary charge was dismissed pursuant to Penal Code Section 1385. Although your son apparently took some steps toward enlistment thereafter, he ultimately did not enter military service.

In determining that a public reproval would be adequate discipline, the commission considered your recognition that your conduct was inappropriate, and your assurance that such conduct would not be repeated.

Honorable Raymond D. Mireles
Los Angeles County Superior Court

Dear Judge Mireles:

The commission has investigated charges that on November 6, 1989 you gave official directions to two Los Angeles police officers which appeared to authorize their use of force to obtain the presence of Deputy Public Defender Howard Waco in your court. The commission has concluded its investigation, and at its June, 1990 meeting, determined to impose a Public Reproval for certain of your conduct as described in the following Investigative Findings:

Investigative Findings

The commission found that on November 6, 1989, in connection with Judge Mireles's handling of the case of People v. Smith, Judge Mireles exhibited exasperation at the absence from his court of defendant Smith's attorney, Deputy Public Defender Howard Waco, and directed two Los Angeles police officers to bring Deputy Public Defender Waco into his court, adding they should bring "a piece of" or "a body part" of Waco to his courtroom. These directions apparently created in the officers the impression and belief that Judge Mireles had authorized their use of physical force.

In carrying out what they perceived to be Judge Mireles's directions, the officers employed physical force to remove Deputy Public Defender Waco from another courtroom and to convey him to and deliver him into Judge Mireles's courtroom.

Judge Mireles witnessed the officers' forcible delivery of Deputy Public Defender Waco into his courtroom, but made no inquiry of Mr. Waco or of the officers regarding their actions, and appeared to ignore Mr. Waco's attempts to discuss the officers' actions. This contributed to an appearance that Judge Mireles had authorized the police officer's use of force.

The officers' use of force to obtain Deputy Public Defender Waco's attendance in Judge Mireles's court and the appearance that Judge Mireles had authorized the officers' use of force were conveyed to the public through extensive media coverage.

The commission found that Judge Mireles did not intend to authorize or direct the use of force by the officers, but found that Judge Mireles had been careless in the manner in which he had directed the officers by making remarks which he considered jocular but which were capable of being, and apparently were, misunderstood.

The commission found further that Judge Mireles earlier had taken certain actions toward the Public Defenders regarding their appointments as counsel and their continued representation in certain cases, and the Public Defenders had perceived these actions as hostile. The earlier actions involved legal questions arising from Judge Mireles's opinion with respect to effects of the public defender's court staffing practices on court business in Judge Mireles's department; the legal issues involved were appropriately addressed and resolved. This background had further contributed to an appearance that Judge Mireles had authorized or directed the police offiders' use of force toward Deputy Public Defender Howard Waco. (The commission made no findings regarding the propriety or correctness of the earlier actions themselves.)

In imposing a public reproval, the commission noted that Judge Mireles has acknowledged responsibility for having made remarks which apparently were misunderstood as authorizing the officers' use of force, and that he has expressed regret for having made the remarks and for the ensuing mistreatment of Deputy Public Defender Waco.

Honorable Glenda K. Doan
Judge of the Justice Court
Corcoran Judicial District

Dear Judge Doan:

At its August 1990 meeting, the commission determined that you should be publicly reproved for the conduct set forth below.

1. In 1988, an acquaintance approached you privately and asked you to help obtain the release of a relative who had just been arrested for serious crimes of violence. Because he was under the age of 18, the defendant was within the exclusive jurisdiction of the superior court.

You then telephoned a superior court judge at home and asked him to release the defendant under supervision but without bail. You told him you knew the defendant's family and they were "good people." The judge declined, telling you the request was improper. The next day in court the judge disclosed this telephone call to the defendant and the prosecutor.

You also telephoned the Probation Department to request a deputy probation officer to recommend the defendant's release pending the hearing. The officer refused to do so. A day or two later, you encountered the officer in court and repeated your request, which was again refused.

These activities violated the Code of Judicial Conduct, Canon 2B: "Judges should not lend the prestige of their office to advance the private interest of others. . ."

2. On December 26, 1989, the commission sent you a letter requesting your comment on the charge that you tried to help the defendant gain his release. In a letter dated February 12, 1990, you stated that your acquaintance "asked Judge Doan whether the relative would be kept from going to college. Judge Doan simply agreed to check on the status of the case, and answer the question. . . Judge Doan made no other efforts on behalf of the defendant. . ."

This response was false.

In determining that a public reproval would be adequate discipline, the commission considered your ultimate recognition that your conduct was inappropriate, and your assurance that it would not be repeated.

P.O. Box 6489

Dear Judge Hintz:

Following an investigation and the institution of formal proceedings, the Commission on Judicial Performance determined to issue a Public Reproval for the conduct set forth below:

I

On November 15, 1990, Judge Hintz abused his judicial authority by planning and executing a detention, search and warrant check of citizens lawfully present in the courtroom. The citizens were improperly detained, without reasonable suspicion or exigent circumstances, and subjected to unwarranted personal searches. The detained citizens were also improperly required to provide identification. These actions exceeded Judge Hintz's lawful authority and violated the citizens' constitutional rights.

II

At the conclusion of the trial in People v. Rodriquez in July 1990, Judge Hintz criticized the jurors for their verdict. Judge Hintz's comments regarding the verdict were improper and contrary to the Standards of Judicial Administration. Judge Hintz also improperly detained the jurors after their verdict, requiring them to sit through a separate hearing regarding the defendant. This appeared punitive of the jury and calculated to humiliate the defendant.

III

After the trial of People v. Lopez in August 1990, Judge Hintz attempted to use his judicial office for an improper personal purpose. The prosecution and defense had concluded there were valid grounds for a new trial. They submitted a stipulation to Judge Hintz, to which he attempted to add the following exculpatory language: "It is further stipulated that Judge Steven Hintz committed no legal error or ethical breach in the trial." When the parties refused to stipulate to Judge Hintz's exculpatory language, Judge Hintz granted a new trial on the grounds of prosecutorial misconduct -- grounds which were initiated and advanced by Judge Hintz. These actions constituted improper use of the judicial office for a personal purpose.

Your conduct as described above warranted discipline pursuant to Article VI, Section 18(f)(2) of the California Constitution.

This Public Reproval is being issued with your consent.

Dear Judge Van Voorhis:

The Commission on Judicial Performance has determined that you should be publicly reproved for the conduct set forth below:

You created the appearance of prejudgment, contrary to Canon 2A of the Code of Judicial Conduct, on the following occasion:

In November, 1990, in a criminal case, you created the appearance of prejudgment in your discussion of the case in open court by improperly predicting the outcome of the case.

You engaged in unauthorized ex parte communications, contrary to Canon 3A(4) of the Code of Judicial Conduct, on the following occasions:

In December, 1990, in a probation violation matter, you improperly engaged in an unauthorized ex parte communication concerning a pending proceeding when you telephoned an attorney from court. You asked the attorney whether he had advised the defendant, who was appearing before you pro per, that a guilty plea on a charge in another county could result in separate punishment for violation of probation. Your communication gave the appearance of improper interference with an attorney-client relationship.

For several months prior to approximately January, 1991, you engaged or attempted to engage in unauthorized ex parte communications concerning pending cases by personally making telephone calls to defendants who did not appear in court; you explained to the commission that your purpose was to reschedule the defendants' appearances and that you were able to reschedule appearances.

You failed to fulfill your judicial responsibility to be patient, dignified and courteous to those with whom you deal in an official capacity, contrary to Canon 3A(3) of the Code of Judicial Conduct, on the following occasions:

In two criminal cases in May, 1989 and April, 1990, your conduct during questioning of a potential juror in each case caused that person to perceive a lack of sensitivity and to feel intimidated by your questioning.

In October, 1991, when arrangements for the loaning of the neighboring court reporter faltered, you entered the adjoining courtroom through a side door wearing your judicial robe and immediately directed that the court reporter be sent to your courtroom. Your inappropriate interruption of the proceedings was an abuse of authority.

On two occasions, you gave directions to your court staff in a manner which was perceived as harsh.

In two criminal cases in December, 1989 and December, 1990, you used a sarcastic and intimidating tone toward the attorneys appearing before you when they requested continuances.

You impaired public confidence in the integrity of the judiciary and brought the judiciary into disrepute through the following conduct:

Prior to your election campaign in 1986, you and your wife were divorced, but continued to live together. During your first judicial election campaign in 1986, you referred to her as "my wife[11] in your literature and in public. In making that reference, you misinformed the public of your actual marital status.

The above conduct warranted discipline under Article VI, section 18(f)(2) of the California Constitution. In particular, it was conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute.

In determining that a public reproval would be adequate discipline, the commission considered the absence of prior discipline, your recognition that you should have handled the incidents differently, and your assurance that this conduct will not be repeated. This public reproval is being issued with your consent.

Very truly yours,

Victoria B. Henley

Honorable Craig Kamansky
San Bernardino County Superior Court
351 N. Arrowhead Avenue
San Bernardino, CA 92415-0240

Dear Judge Kamansky:

The Commission on Judicial Performance has determined that you should be publicly reproved for the following conduct:

> In the course of a commission investigation concerning his off-bench conduct, Judge Craig Kamansky was asked by the commission to supply certain videotapes. The judge agreed to supply the tapes, but before doing so, he deliberately overtaped them. When asked by the commission about the altered videotapes, the judge repeatedly denied the deliberate overtaping. When presented with evidence to the contrary, the judge ultimately admitted his misrepresentations.
> Judge Kamansky's actions constituted conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judiciary into disrepute. The conduct was committed in bad faith.

This public reproval is being issued with your consent.

Honorable Gary T. Friedman
Judge of the Superior Court
County of Kern
1415 Truxtun Avenue
Bakersfield, CA 93301

Dear Judge Friedman:

After a hearing before Special Masters, the Commission on Judicial Performance has determined that you should be publicly reproved for the following conduct:

1. In September 1987, a defendant who was representing himself in a felony criminal proceeding appeared before Judge Friedman for sentencing. The defendant told the judge he had been unable to read the probation report in part because he had observed and smelled a snake outside his cell. He told the judge that fear of snakes outside his prison cell had kept him awake at night. For the purpose of playing a joke on the defendant, the judge caused the head of a rattlesnake, enclosed in a plastic ball, to be displayed to the defendant when he was locked in a holding cell, causing an emotional outburst.

2. In October 1987, a defendant who was in custody appeared before Judge Friedman for trial. The judge was well aware of the defendant's obsession with a famous TV personality. The judge obtained a publicity photograph of the personality. He then pressured a court employee into writing on the photograph a personal inscription, purportedly from the personality to the defendant. The inscription was designed to play on the defendant's bizarre obsession. The judge caused the photograph to be passed to the defendant. His purpose in these actions was to play a joke on a vulnerable prisoner.

The commission determined that these actions constituted wilful misconduct in office (California Constitution, Article VI, section 18(c).)

The commission noted and approved this commentary by the Special Masters:

> The Special Masters recognize that humor and levity can oftentimes reduce tension in the courtroom. When appropriate, humor can assist in humanizing the otherwise intimidating atmosphere of our courts, and may even assist in improving communications between the judges, attorneys and litigants. However, humor at the expense of another, or humor intended or likely to demean or belittle another is unacceptable. This is particularly true when the object of the joke is someone who has been deprived of his liberty and who is submitting to the jurisdiction of the Court.

In determining that a public reproval was appropriate, the commission noted that these two incidents occurred more than five years ago. There is no indication that the judge has engaged in any further conduct of this kind.

The Special Masters and the commission also considered charges relating to the judge's conduct in People v. Pitts, a trial occurring in 1985. The commission declined to take action and dismissed these charges.

This public reproval is issued with Judge Friedman's consent.

Honorable James M. Slater
Judge of the Superior Court
County of Santa Barbara
1100 Anacapa Street
Santa Barbara, CA 93101

Dear Judge Slater:

The Commission on Judicial Performance has determined that you should be publicly reproved for the following conduct:

"On April 21, 1993, Judge Slater returned to the Santa Barbara courthouse parking lot after the lunch hour to find a van parked in his reserved parking space. Judge Slater parked in a space reserved for someone else and went into the courthouse, where he contacted the court administrator and said that he wanted the van towed. Judge Slater then returned to the parking lot, where he deflated the right front tire of the van. The van in question belonged to a handicapped person.

Findings of misconduct in formal proceedings must be established by clear and convincing evidence. In this case, there was sufficient evidence to support a finding that Judge Slater deflated the right front tire of the van. However, there was not sufficient evidence to establish that Judge Slater was aware that the van belonged to a handicapped person, or to establish that he made any comment which might have indicated such awareness. There also was not sufficient evidence to establish that Judge Slater later denied deflating the tire.

Judge Slater has offered that he was upset about previous incidents in which his parking space had been usurped, and about a previous vandalism of his automobile. Judge Slater has presented as justification that his intent was to keep the van in the parking lot until it could be cited and towed. The commission found that these concerns did not justify Judge Slater's conduct.

After conducting an investigation of the incident, the Santa Barbara County District Attorney issued a report concluding that Judge Slater had engaged in unjustified tampering with a vehicle within the meaning of Vehicle Code Section 10852, but stating that the matter would not be prosecuted.

The commission found, and Judge Slater agreed, that Judge Slater's conduct was contrary the California Code of Judicial Conduct. Canon 2 of the California Code of Judicial Conduct provides that a judge "should respect and comply with the law and should act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary." Canon 1 of the Code of Judicial Conduct provides that a judge "should participate in establishing, maintaining and enforcing high standards of conduct, and should personally observe those standards so that the integrity and independence of the judiciary will be preserved."

The commission noted that the judge's conduct had led to extensive negative publicity tending to diminish public confidence in the judiciary and bring the judiciary into disrepute.

In mitigation, the commission took into account Judge Slater's lengthy service without discipline and noted that the incident appeared to be an isolated one and that Judge Slater had admitted his misconduct and had expressed remorse. The commission considered that Judge Slater had apologized to the owner of the van, and had met with an organization of disabled persons to discuss improving access to public buildings and the sensitivity of government employees to problems of the handicapped."

This public reproval is being issued with your consent.

Very truly yours,

Honorable James L. Stevens, Jr.
Judge of the Superior Court
County of Yolo
725 Court Street, Room 207
Woodland, CA 95695

Dear Judge Stevens:

The Commission on Judicial Performance has determined that you should be publicly reproved for the following conduct:

"1. Judge Stevens, while presiding over cases, has made improper and offensive remarks:

For example, in a well-publicized civil case decided in 1991, a parental rights suit which involved a sperm donor, Judge Stevens made denigrating remarks about parties to the case, as follows:

In inquiring about the obligation for child support, Judge Stevens trivialized the relationships involved by mischaracterizing them when he set forth a hypothetical scenario wherein one of the litigants called the other party to the case "sweetheart". Judge Stevens stated, "She said to him, sweetheart make me a baby...", despite the absence of a romantic relationship between the parties.

In the same case, Judge Stevens also stated, "As I look at it, I frankly get the very distinct impression that this child is conceived as a sort of a toy for the mother and her friend, something to fill their lives up and to hell with the needs of the child and to hell with the rights of the father."

In another example, following a hearing and court appearance by a male defendant in a criminal case in May of 1993, Judge Stevens commented about the defendant to the female clerks in the courtroom, "Ladies, how would you like to wake up with that naked in your bed?" or words to that effect.

2. Judge Stevens used language and engaged in behavior toward members of the court staff which were abusive and demeaning.

This behavior included his discontinuing the services of his court reporter of some seven years as his official court reporter after presenting her with a partially rotten zucchini which to some observers conveyed a sexual connotation. The judge later joked about the incident and appeared to trivialize the employee's concern.

The commission found that Judge Stevens' conduct was in disregard of the California Code of Judicial Conduct. Canon 1 of the Code of Judicial Conduct provides that a judge "should participate in establishing, maintaining and enforcing high standards of conduct, and should personally observe those standards so that the integrity and independence of the judiciary will be preserved." Canon 2 of the Code of Judicial Conduct provides that a judge "should respect and comply with the law and should act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary." Canon 3 of the Code of Judicial Conduct provides that "a judge should be patient, dignified, and courteous to litigants, jurors, witnesses, lawyers, and others with whom the judge deals in an official capacity and should require similar conduct of lawyers, and of staff, court officials and others subject to the judge's direction and control."

Extensive publicity over these matters diminished public confidence in the judiciary and brought the judiciary into disrepute.

In mitigation, the judge has acknowledged that he has offended people and has apologized and he has agreed to refrain from further conduct as exemplified herein and to attend appropriate communication and sensitivity classes."

This public reproval is being issued with your consent.

Dear Judge Haugner:

The Commission on Judicial Performance has determined that you should be publicly reproved for the following conduct:

"On May 27, 1993, Deputy Public Defender Jeffrey Adachi appeared before Judge Haugner at a hearing in People v. Spencer. As Mr. Adachi commenced his argument, Judge Haugner stated:

> COURT: No, no. Listen, you filed your papers. . . . Do you have something to add to those papers which isn't in there, some brilliant case you found somewhere in the Upper Tokyo Reports or somewhere that nobody knows about, tell me about it. Otherwise there is no need to argue over what you already have.

The commission found that Judge Haugner's reference to "Upper Tokyo Reports" reflected insensitivity toward persons of Japanese-American ancestry and was offensive to Mr. Adachi. The commission further found that, regardless of Judge Haugner's intent in making the remark, it was suggestive of racial or ethnic bias.

The commission also determined that Judge Haugner's conduct was contrary to the California Code of Judicial Conduct, i.e., Canon 3 (avoiding appearance of bias or prejudice), Canon 2 (preserving public confidence in the judiciary), and Canon 1 (maintaining high standards of conduct).

The commission noted that Judge Haugner's conduct had led to negative publicity tending to diminish public confidence in the judiciary and bring the judiciary into disrepute."

Honorable Michael A. Kanner
Judge of the Municipal Court
Alhambra Municipal Court District
Los Angeles County
150 West Commonwealth Avenue
Alhambra, CA 91801

Dear Judge Kanner:

The Commission on Judicial Performance has determined that you should be publicly reproved for the following conduct:

"For a period of approximately two years, and ending in 1994, Judge Kanner maintained a policy of issuing no-bail bench warrants for all defendants who failed to appear on misdemeanors, despite the fact that the California Constitution and Penal Code Section 1270 et seq. provide that individuals have a right to bail before conviction with limited exceptions. No-bail warrants were issued by Judge Kanner for approximately one hundred to two hundred individuals. One of these individuals, Robert C. Lewis, was a man who had failed to appear in court on an infraction case in which he was charged with failing to have his dog licensed and vaccinated. (Case No. 93M03821) The man was arrested on the warrant and spent four days in jail in March, 1994.

Judge Kanner has stated that he instituted the no-bail policy because the Sheriff's Department routinely cited and released defendants arrested on warrants of less than $2,500 or for whom bail of less than $12,500 was set. In an article which appeared in the Los Angeles Times on March 8, 1994, Judge Kanner was quoted as follows:

> But this is just the tip of the iceberg. This situation has created an uneasy pact: Judges understand that the Sheriff's Department has a definite problem, but a judge represents the people who elect him or her. And the people who keep me in office expect that people who violate the law will be punished. And I can't punish anybody who isn't brought before me.

In his statement to the press, Judge Kanner appeared to suggest that his policy of issuing no-bail warrants on misdemeanor matters was justified by the need to bring people before the court so that they could be punished, despite the fact that the policy constituted a denial of the fundamental right to bail and a failure to exercise judicial discretion in handling the cases before him.

After being asked about his policy by the commission by letter dated May 27, 1994, Judge Kanner stated that he now realized that the no-bail policy was wrong, and recognized that it had resulted in failure to exercise judicial discretion in individual cases. Judge Kanner also stated that the policy was not intended to apply to 'license type' offenses, whether misdemeanors or infractions.

The commission found that Judge Kanner's no-bail policy was in disregard of the California Constitution and Penal Code Section 1270 et seq., and that the judge failed to exercise judicial discretion regarding bail in the cases in which these warrants were issued during the approximately two years his policy was in effect. The commission found that Judge Kanner's policy resulted in the denial of a fundamental right to a considerable number of individuals. With respect to the Lewis case, the commission noted that, at a minimum, Judge Kanner had necessarily failed to review the nature of the charges before issuing the no-bail warrant, since the judge would otherwise have discovered that the warrant was for a failure to appear on a license infraction, to which his 'no bail' policy was not to be applied.

The commission found that Judge Kanner's conduct was contrary to Canons 2A of the Code of Judicial Conduct, which provides that a judge 'should respect and comply with the law and should act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary,' and contrary to Canon 3B(2), which provides that a judge 'should be faithful to the law and maintain professional competence in it,' and that a judge 'should not be swayed by partisan interest, public clamor or fear of criticism.'"

This public reproval is being issued with your consent.

Honorable Thomas P. Breen
Judge of the Superior Court
San Benito County Superior Court
440 Fifth Street, Room 206
Hollister, CA 95023

Dear Judge Breen:

The Commission on Judicial Performance has determined that you should be publicly reproved for the following conduct:

"Judge Breen has engaged in a continuing pattern of failure to dispose of judicial matters promptly and efficiently.

On July 16, 1986, the commission sent Judge Breen an advisory letter concerning an unacceptable delay of 17 months in issuing a decision in American Forest Products Corporation v. Russell. The matter was submitted for decision on January 7, 1985, and a tentative decision was issued on June 2, 1986.

On July 13, 1987, Judge Breen was privately admonished by the commission for: (1) failing to rule for 31 months on a demurrer submitted on November 30, 1984, in Hospital and Institutional Workers' Union Local 250 v. San Benito Hospital District (decision issued June 24, 1987); and (2) failing to file a statement of decision for seven to nine months after submission of proposed statements of decision on September 26, 1985, and November 18, 1985, in Hospital and Institutional Workers' Union Local 250, SEIU AFL-CIO v. San Benito Hospital Workers (decision issued June 13, 1986).

On May 15, 1989, the commission sent Judge Breen another advisory letter for failure to recognize or take steps to correct serious problems in the clerk's office involving the misfiling and loss of legal documents. Judge Breen was referred in that letter to the Training & Consulting Unit of the Administrative Office of the Courts.

Judge Breen has nonetheless continued to delay disposition of judicial matters. There have been submitted matters in his court, involving issues of child and spousal support, marital property disposition, marital dissolution and corporate dissolution, that were ready for disposition but which remained undecided for excessive periods of time, constituting inordinate delay. These cases include the following:

1. Castillo v. Castillo Bros. Feed, Inc. (Tulare County No. 145933). Judge Breen's decision after a request for statement of decision, submitted on July 1, 1992, was not issued until September 27, 1993, almost 15 months later. His ruling on a motion to tax costs, which was submitted on July 9, 1992, was issued on February 19, 1994, more than 18 months later.

2. Marriage of Arena (San Benito County No. 19816). The matter was submitted on September 21, 1993, and was not decided until November 1994, approximately 14 months later.

3. Marriage of Morrison (San Benito County No. 19116). The matter was submitted on January 6, 1993, and was not decided until January 21, 1994, more than 12 months later.

4. Marriage of Quinn (San Benito County No. 16181). The matter was originally submitted on December 13, 1991, and a memorandum decision addressing some, but not all, of the issues was not filed until April 29, 1992, four and one-half months later. The remaining issues were briefed and submitted on October 5, 1992, and findings were issued on some, but not all, of the remaining issues on July 1, 1993, almost nine months later. Objections to the proposed statement of decision were submitted on November 16, 1993, but findings were not issued until March 3, 1994, three and one-half months later.

5. Marriage of McDavid (San Benito County No. 16837). The case was submitted on June 24, 1991, and was not decided until May 11, 1994, almost three years later.

Although inordinate delay in decision making is unacceptable in all cases, Judge Breen's failure to promptly decide family law matters before him was particularly egregious in light of the harm to the parties caused thereby.

During those periods when the above-referenced cases were under submission in Judge Breen's court, and remained undecided in excess of 90 days, he executed salary affidavits pursuant to Government Code section 68210, representing under penalty of perjury that he had no cases under submission for periods in excess of 90 days. During those periods while there were cases pending and undecided over 90 days after they were submitted for decision, Judge Breen received the salary for his judicial office in violation of California Constitution, Article VI, section 19.

In mitigation, the commission noted Judge Breen's agreement to submit monthly reports to the commission of all cases remaining undecided as of the date of the submission of his salary affidavits. These monthly reports to the commission shall contain the date of submission for each such case and shall be submitted for the next three years from the date of this public reproval."

This public reproval is being issued with your consent.

Sincerely,

Victoria B. Henley

Honorable Thomas M. Kelly
Judge of the Justice Court
Alpine Judicial District
P. O. Box 515
Markleeville, CA 96120-0515

Dear Judge Kelly:

The Commission on Judicial Performance has determined that you should be publicly reproved for the following conduct:

"In 1987, before justice court judges were prohibited from practicing law by California Constitution Article VI §17 and Government Code §71607, Judge Kelly became attorney of record for the plaintiff in Okoye v. Citicorp, Los Angeles Superior Court Case No. C 683268. Judge Kelly signed a complaint prepared by a Nevada attorney whose law library and office Judge Kelly sometimes used. Judge Kelly accommodated the Nevada attorney without receiving a fee or promise of fee, and without expecting a fee. The attorney had told Judge Kelly that he intended to handle the case and would file a motion to appear pro hac vice, seeking the court's permission to appear as an out-of-state attorney with Kelly, a California attorney, associated as counsel. However, within a month after the complaint was filed, the Nevada attorney abandoned his plan to file the application, and so advised Judge Kelly.

Because Kelly was counsel of record in Okoye v. Citicorp, the defendant's counsel communicated with Judge Kelly at the Nevada counsel's address. A demurrer to the complaint was filed. Judge Kelly and the Nevada attorney discussed the matter and agreed to stipulate to the demurrer. A first amended complaint was filed; a demurrer to that complaint was sustained, as well. No second amended complaint was filed.

During the spring and summer of 1987, defense counsel contacted Judge Kelly four times to schedule the plaintiff's deposition. Although Judge Kelly informed the Nevada attorney, Judge Kelly did not notify the plaintiff. On one occasion, Judge Kelly told defense counsel that he could not attend a deposition because he was scheduled on a judicial assignment.

No discovery pertinent to the merits of the case was provided to the defense. On July 8, 1987, a motion to compel production of documents was heard. There was no appearance for plaintiff. The court ordered production of the requested documents and ordered sanctions against Judge Kelly and the plaintiff, which were later paid by the Nevada attorney. Judge Kelly never notified the plaintiff.

On August 25, 1987, Judge Kelly appeared at a hearing on defendant's motion to dismiss. This was the first occasion on which the plaintiff and Judge Kelly met with each other. The court ordered the case dismissed for failure to file a second amended complaint, and imposed sanctions of $2,500 on both Judge Kelly and the plaintiff.

A federal complaint signed by Judge Kelly also was filed on behalf of the plaintiff, in April of 1987. It was dismissed for lack of prosecution, and the motion to set the dismissal aside was dismissed without hearing in December 1987.

The plaintiff sued Judge Kelly and the Nevada attorney for breach of contract, fraud, and legal malpractice in their representation of him in the Okoye v. Citicorp case. After a court trial, the court found Judge Kelly and the Nevada attorney liable on the cause of action for legal malpractice. The Nevada attorney was also held liable for breach of contract. Both were ordered to pay a judgment of $351,000. The judgment was affirmed on appeal.

The trial court determined that Judge Kelly, by agreeing that the Nevada attorney would handle the management of the lawsuits in the absence of a court order permitting the Nevada attorney to appear as counsel, after signing the complaints prepared by the Nevada attorney, unlawfully aided and abetted the unauthorized practice of law, contrary to Business and Professions Code § 6126(a) and Code of Professional Responsibility Rule 3-101. The commission finds that by his conduct in the case, including abandoning, for all intents and purposes, a client for whom he was attorney of record, Judge Kelly committed a breach of fiduciary duty and committed legal malpractice. Judge Kelly's conduct constitutes conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judiciary into disrepute."

This public reproval is being issued with your consent.

Very truly yours,

Victoria B. Henley

Honorable Kenneth E. Vassie
Judge of the Municipal Court
Inglewood Judicial District
One Regent Street
Inglewood, CA 90301

Dear Judge Vassie:

The Commission on Judicial Performance has determined that you should be publicly reproved for the following conduct:

"1. On March 28, 1994, Judge Vassie called the case of a defendant charged with driving under the influence. Her attorney, Deputy Public Defender Jason Rubel, stated that he wished to set the matter for a motion to suppress pursuant to Penal Code § 1538.5 and jury trial. The deputy district attorney advised the court that the case was a 'DUI refusal' and that an offer had been made. Judge Vassie then said to the defendant, 'You understand...that the offer that the prosecution has made will not be repeated.' Her attorney said that he had related the offer to the defendant. Judge Vassie replied, 'I am talking to her.' Mr. Rubel said that he objected to the judge talking to his client. This colloquy followed:

THE COURT: What is your authority for that? She has a right to speak to me if I ask her something, and if you interfere with that you are in contempt.

MR. RUBEL: Judge, this is my client. You have no right to speak to her.

THE COURT: Please stand. I'm finding you in contempt for interfering with the lawful process of this court.

You are interrupting me. This is a second count. Is there anything you'd like to say about that; either the interruption of my conferring with this defendant or your interruption?

MR. RUBEL: Judge, I represent her.

THE COURT: Is there anything you wish to say?

MR. RUBEL: Yes. I represent her as her attorney. If you wish to address her you address her through me.

THE COURT: What is your authority for that position?

MR. RUBEL: I am her attorney, Judge.

THE COURT: You are in contempt. You are remanded to the County Jail for 5 days.

Mr. Rubel was released a few hours later. On April 5, Judge Vassie held further proceedings in which he stated that he was vacating any previous action taken against Mr. Rubel.

Judge Vassie's actions constituted an abuse of the contempt power and an interference with the attorney-client relationship between Mr. Rubel and his client. Judge Vassie completely failed to follow proper contempt procedures. He jailed Mr. Rubel immediately, with no hearing or written order of contempt. Judge Vassie, who has been a judge for twenty-six years, was obligated to know or research proper contempt procedures. The contempt power, which permits a single official to deprive a citizen of his fundamental liberty interest without all of the procedural safeguards normally accompanying such a deprivation, must be used with great prudence and caution. It is essential that judges know and follow proper procedures in exercising this power, which has been called a court's 'ultimate weapon.' (See, Furey v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1987) 43 Cal. 3d 1297, 1314; Cannon v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1975) 14 Cal. 3d 678, 694, 696.)

In mitigation, Judge Vassie has acknowledged that he handled the matter improperly, and that he failed to follow proper contempt procedures.

2. Judge Vassie has refused to exercise his discretion to consider traffic school as a possible disposition in traffic matters. Judge Vassie has told traffic litigants requesting traffic school that he did not give traffic school because it was 'a joke,' and that he would not give traffic school until the traffic school system, which the judge characterizes as 'corrupt,' was cleaned up.

In mitigation, Judge Vassie has changed his policy. He now considers traffic school as a possible disposition in traffic matters, and exercises his discretion to grant or deny traffic school on a case-by-case basis.

Judge Vassie's conduct in these two matters was contrary to Canon 2A of the California Code of Judicial Conduct, which provides that a judge should respect and comply with the law and should act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary, and Canon 3B(2), which provides that a judge should be faithful to the law."

This public reproval is being issued with your consent.

JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE COMMISSION ANNOUNCES THE INSTITUTION OF FORMAL PROCEEDINGS AGAINST JUDGE ALAN E. KLEIN AND REFERRAL OF MATTER TO STATE BAR FOLLOWING JUDGE'S RESIGNATION

On May 11, 1995, the Commission on Judicial Performance announced that it had instituted an investigation concerning Judge Alan E. Klein of the Kern County Municipal Court. After an investigation, the Commission instituted formal proceedings at its January 31-February 1, 1996 meeting.

Judge Klein was charged with two counts of willful misconduct in office or conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute. Before being formally served with the notice of formal proceedings, Judge Klein offered to resign from office immediately. He also agreed to stipulate not to seek or accept judicial office, whether by election, appointment or assignment. At the time of his resignation, the Commission was also investigating possible additional charges of misconduct concerning the judge's involvement in a videotape recording made by a private investigator of a witness against the judge in the criminal proceeding against the judge which concluded in November 1995.

If the judge had not resigned, the charges would have been heard by a panel of impartial judges appointed by the Supreme Court. At the hearing, the Commission would have been required to prove the charges by clear and convincing evidence. The judge would have had the right to be represented by counsel, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, and to present evidence of his own. If, after the hearing, the Commission had determined to publicly admonish, censure or remove the judge from office, Judge Klein would have been entitled to seek review by the Supreme Court of the Commission's decision.

Because of the judge's resignation, the Commission has determined to close its proceedings, subject to re-opening if the judge seeks or accepts judicial office.

In view of the seriousness of the allegations and the fact that the judge resigned before the charges had been adjudicated and the remaining investigation completed, the Commission has determined to refer the matter to the State Bar, pursuant to California Rules of Court, rule 902(b)(4). This rule states:

> If a judge retires or resigns from judicial office following institution of formal proceedings, the commission may, in the interest of justice or to maintain confidence in the administration of justice, release information concerning the investigation and proceedings to a public entity.

The State Bar is a public entity with jurisdiction to investigate charges of misconduct by former judges in order to determine their fitness to practice law.

A copy of the notice of formal proceedings involving Judge Klein is available at the Commission office. Judge Klein chose not to file a response.

The Commission is composed of three judges, two lawyers and six public members. The Chairperson of the Commission is the Honorable William A. Masterson of the Court of Appeal, Second Appellate District in Los Angeles.

INQUIRY CONCERNING JUDGE SWIFT & JUDGE McGUIRE

SUMMARY

Two disciplinary matters were brought, one concerning a municipal court judge, and the other concerning a superior court judge. The matters were consolidated.

The Commission on Judicial Performance ordered that the matters be dismissed. The commission concluded that the municipal court judge did not violate Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canon 2A, when he called his wife to determine the whereabouts of his stepson, who was the subject of an investigation by the National Park Service regarding the possible theft of Native American artifacts. The property that park service rangers wanted to search belonged to the municipal court judge. The telephone call did not create an appearance of impropriety where the judge already had disclosed a conflict of interest and disqualified from the matter and there was no indication that the call revealed information about the investigation. The municipal court judge did not commit misconduct in the superior court judge's chambers by advocating a consent search of the property or by remaining in the superior court judge's chambers. Taking leave from the chambers discussion with information that could compromise the criminal investigation arguably could have raised a more substantial appearance of impropriety. Even if the superior court judge should have signed a warrant authorizing a search of the property while the rangers were present, his failure to do so did not constitute misconduct. His mistake, if any, was at most legal error. (Opinion by Commission Counsel, by direction of the Commission.)

OPINION

Commission Counsel, by direction of the Commission.—These are two disciplinary matters, one concerning Bert L. Swift, Judge of the San Bernardino County Municipal Court, and the other concerning James C. McGuire, Judge of the San Bernardino County Superior Court. The matters have been consolidated for all purposes. After formal factfinding and review by the Commission on Judicial Performance (Commission), the Commission has concluded that both matters should be dismissed.

BACKGROUND

Formal proceedings were commenced with the service of the Commission's notices of formal proceedings dated February 6, 1996.

Judge Swift was represented in the formal proceedings by Thomas C. Brayton and Jones Mahoney, Brayton & Soll of Claremont, California. Judge McGuire was represented by Thomas R. Hudson of Ontario, California. The examiners for the Commission were Dennis F. Coupe and Jack Coyle of the Commission's Office of Trial Counsel.

Special masters were appointed by the Supreme Court on May 7, 1996.[1] The special masters were directed to prepare a report containing "a brief

[1] The special masters were Justice Coleman A. Blease, Judge James H. Chang and Judge Irma J. Brown. statement of the proceedings had and their findings of fact and conclusions of law with respect to the issues presented by the notice of formal proceedings and the answer thereto [and if they choose] an analysis of the evidence and reasons for the findings or conclusions." (Then applicable Cal. Rules of Court, rule 912.)

A hearing to take evidence was conducted on August 26 through 28, 1996. On October 17, 1996, the special masters issued their report, recommending dismissal.

Objections were filed by the parties and oral argument was heard by the Commission on January 29, 1997. All commissioners participated. In the course of briefing and argument to the Commission, trial counsel modified or abandoned certain of their contentions before the special masters, and the focus of the proceeding was therefore narrowed. The Commission having considered the arguments of the parties, the report of the special masters, and having independently reviewed the record to assure that the findings reported are supported by clear and convincing evidence, makes the following findings of fact and conclusions of law.

THE FINDINGS OF THE COMMISSION

I

Findings of Fact

In 1993, the National Park Service was investigating the possible theft of Native American artifacts from the Joshua Tree National Monument (Monument). Ranger Todd Swain was the lead investigator. A principal target of the investigation was one Warren Churchwell.

Acting undercover and in the course of his investigation in the fall of 1993, Ranger Swain had twice visited a man named Tony Soares at his residence on Quail Springs Road in Joshua Tree. On both occasions Soares showed him an olla (a ceramic pot) taken from the Monument. Soares told him he had purchased the olla from Warren Churchwell, knowing it had been illegally collected, and that he was probably going to give it to the Monument once it had been restored. Ranger Swain also saw two manos (grinding stones) and a metate (a mortar) on a windowsill near the dining room table. Soares told Ranger Swain he had found them in the desert by Kelso, a town surrounded by the East Mohave National Scenic Area. On the second occasion, when Soares showed Swain the olla, it was sitting on the top of a dresser in his bedroom.

Ranger Swain wanted to search for contraband artifacts at Churchwell's residence in Desert Hot Springs, at a gallery in Palm Springs, and at Soares's residence. On several occasions Ranger Swain had sought to obtain assistance in preparing search warrants from the United States Attorney's office. Each time the representative of the Unites States Attorney told him that he was too busy. When this happened again on December 15, 1993, Ranger Swain decided to go through the state system. The next day, on December 16, he obtained the warrants in Riverside County for Churchwell's residence and the gallery.

Later, on the same day, Rangers Swain and Marion Damiano-Nittoli went to Joshua Tree and met with Deputy District Attorney Ray Pyle. Pyle is the Supervising Deputy District Attorney in the Morongo Office of the San Bernardino County District Attorney. The Morongo Office staff had four deputies, including Linda Root and Gordon Isen.

Pyle read the warrant application for Soares's residence and approved it. The warrant specified that the objects to be seized were the manos, the metate, the olla and items showing the ownership of the premises. The rangers had checked with the county assessor and determined that the Soares residence was owned by a Dianne Fox.[2]

At approximately 4:30 p.m. on December 16, 1993, the rangers were escorted by Pyle to the courtroom of respondent Judge Bert Swift. Judge Swift is the judge in Joshua Tree for the Morongo Basin Division of the San Bernardino County Municipal Court District. Pyle told Judge Swift that he had two rangers who had a search warrant they wanted signed. He then left.

Judge Swift went into chambers with the rangers and removed his robe. He asked why they were in the state court system rather than in the federal system. Ranger Swain explained that the matter involved multiple jurisdictions and discussed the rangers' jurisdiction under state law.

Ranger Swain then handed the warrant application to Judge Swift. Judge Swift began to read the affidavit to the warrant. When he read Soares's name and the address of the premises to be searched in the second paragraph of the affidavit he was stunned; he read no further. He announced that Soares was his stepson and that the property to be searched was his house. One of the rangers asked if he knew where Soares was. Judge Swift replied that he did not know, but he offered to find out. In the rangers' presence, he telephoned his wife, Dianne Fox, Soares's mother, at her place of employment.[3]

[2] Dianne Fox and Judge Swift were married in February 1993. Three children of Fox by a prior marriage, including Soares, age 23, resided or stayed from time to time at the Quail Springs Road residence. The Quail Springs Road residence had belonged to Fox before the marriage. Thereafter, title was held in her name and that of Judge Swift, as a result of a refinancing of their aggregate debt. After the marriage, Judge Swift and his wife divided their time between the former residence of Judge Swift and the Quail Springs Road house, living part time in each residence. They spent two or three nights a week at the latter residence, where they occupied the master bedroom, and ate most of their meals there with Fox's children.

Judge Swift then took the rangers and the warrant application to the chambers of respondent Judge James McGuire.

Judge Swift handed the warrant application to Judge McGuire and told him that he could not review it nor issue the warrant because it involved one of his homes and his stepson Tony Soares.

The rangers sat at a conference table abutting Judge McGuire's desk; Judge Swift took a seat across from them. The special masters found by clear and convincing evidence that Judge Swift accompanied the rangers and remained in Judge McGuire's chambers (1) for the purpose of allaying any concerns that Judge Swift would inform Soares about the impending search, and (2) in order to avoid the appearance of impropriety if the search was conducted but the artifacts were not recovered after he left the presence of the rangers, thus affording an opportunity to alert Soares. The special masters also found that Judge McGuire did not question Judge Swift's continued presence for similar reasons.

Judge McGuire began reading the warrant affidavit and discussing the situation with the rangers. He asked when the rangers intended to serve the warrant. They explained that there were two related warrants (the ones issued in Riverside). The rangers planned to serve the other warrants first because they perceived Soares to be the least culpable target. Judge McGuire pointed out this plan presented a problem because the proposed search of Soares's residence had been disclosed to Soares's stepfather (Judge Swift).

Judge McGuire inquired whether they could serve the Quail Springs Road warrant that evening. They replied that they could not because they did not have the manpower. They told him that there was a policy governing service of warrants which prescribed a certain number of officers. The rangers were adamant that they would not serve a warrant that evening.

Judge McGuire asked if they would be amenable to a consent search. The rangers appeared puzzled. Because they appeared puzzled and because he was concerned about being overbearing, he asked the rangers if they would like him to call in the district attorney to advise them. They affirmed that suggestion.

[3] The telephone call did not reveal information about the search warrant or the rangers' investigation. When Fox answered the telephone, Judge Swift asked her where the children were. She told him where she believed each child was, expressed concern that he was asking such a question, and asked if there had been an accident. He told her there had been no accident and that he would talk to her about it later.

Judge McGuire told his bailiff to summon Pyle. Pyle had left for the day and Deputy District Attorney Linda Root came instead. When she arrived, Judge McGuire, with interjections by Ranger Swain, explained the situation. Judge Swift indicated that he would cooperate in a consent search, and represented that his wife and stepson would also consent at his behest. At that point, Root brought up the fact that she was on the campaign committee of Richard Crouter who would be running in the next election (the following June) for the municipal court seat held by Judge Swift. She assured Judge Swift that despite her allegiance to a prospective challenger she would maintain confidentiality concerning the matter. Judge McGuire observed to the rangers that this impending political campaign was another reason requiring an immediate search. The special masters found, and the Commission concurs, that Root's raising of this topic and the ensuing commentary were inconsequential, i.e., the conduct of either judge would not have been different had there been no impending election.

Judge McGuire repeatedly asked the rangers if they would like to confer privately with Root. They declined. Ranger Swain responded that he would like to know about the legality of a consent search. Root, not Judge Swift nor Judge McGuire, explained the pertinent concepts, including the scope of parental capacity to consent, noting that an issue of voluntariness could arise concerning a consent by Fox or Soares.

Judge McGuire solicited information about the location of the manos, metate and olla, as identified in the affidavit. The ensuing discussion revealed that the objects were in common use areas or in plain view from common use areas of the dwelling.

From these considerations Root concluded that there was no issue of voluntariness as to Fox and Soares because Judge Swift's consent would suffice. She advised the rangers that in those circumstances a consent search was a perfectly good search, albeit she did not advocate that they agree to a consent search.

Judge McGuire invited a decision from the rangers on how they wanted to proceed. He informed them that he had read the affidavit, found it to be legally sufficient, and that he would execute the warrant if that was what they decided should be done. The rangers decided to proceed with a consent search that evening. Judge McGuire again inquired if they wanted him to sign the warrant. They responded "No."

Ranger Swain obtained a consent form from his vehicle. Judge Swift executed the consent form. Before the rangers and Judge Swift left his chambers, Judge McGuire gave the rangers a card with his home telephone number and assured them that he would be available to issue the warrant over the telephone if they developed any misgivings about the consent to search. He told them that if there was any problem whatsoever with any of the issues that had been discussed, e.g., the items they sought were not in the common area, or if Fox and Soares were not there or would not consent to a search of any other area of the house, he would issue the warrant.

During the discussions in chambers, Judge Swift made several statements, in addition to agreeing to consent to a search. Concerned for the impact on his family, he asked if the rangers intended to arrest his stepson. Soares is a craftsman experienced in creating reproductions of Native American artifacts. Judge Swift inquired whether the olla might be such a reproduction. He also gave his recollection of the location in the house of the artifacts sought in the warrant.

Although he did participate in the discussion described above, Judge Swift did not participate in the decision as to whether to issue the search warrant.

After Judge Swift executed the consent to search form, he drove to the Quail Springs Road residence, 10 minutes from the courthouse. The rangers followed in their vehicle. Judge Swift led them into the house and introduced them to one of Soares's younger brothers who was in the living room. No one else was home. Judge Swift asked Ranger Swain where the artifacts were located. Ranger Swain showed him. All the artifacts were where Swain had said they were during the chambers discussion, clearly visible from the living room. The door was open from the living room to Soares's bedroom, where the olla was located on the top of a dresser.

The next day, December 17, 1996, searches of the Churchwell residence and the gallery were conducted and Churchwell was arrested. Ranger Swain promptly filed reports with the Riverside District Attorney and requested that a criminal complaint be filed against Churchwell. The complaint was issued in January 1994 and in June 1994 Churchwell pleaded guilty to felony counts charged against him.

On the day following the Riverside search, December 18, 1993, Soares appeared voluntarily at the Palm Springs Police Department in response to a telephone request and was interviewed by Ranger Swain. Swain decided that he could not make a case for prosecution with respect to the grinding stones and mortar. His superiors were disinclined to prosecute Soares with respect to possession of the olla.

Three months passed. The rangers submitted no report concerning the search of the Quail Springs Road residence to the District Attorney of Riverside County until March 27, 1994. That report was prompted by an inquiry concerning the search and the proceedings in chambers by Sergeant Benge, a narcotics officer with the San Bernardino County Sheriff's office. Sergeant Benge was an active supporter of the candidacy of Deputy District Attorney Isen for election to the municipal court seat held by Judge Swift. Following the solicitation by Benge, the rangers, in response to a request by Pyle, submitted two reports on the events in chambers and the search to Pyle.

Following receipt of the first report, Pyle specifically requested a "subjective" report on the chambers conference on the representation that this was "necessary for a proper evaluation of the case against Tony Soares." (Pyle denied requesting such a subjective report.) In response, ranger Damiano-Nittoli filed a second report.

On April 28, 1994, Pyle sent the reports to the District Attorney of San Bernardino County, with a note, in pertinent part, as follows. "Please call when you've finished your review. Naturally, Gordon Isen would like to use this somehow in his campaign. Should we release info? If not, can it be leaked?"

Pyle provided copies of the ranger's reports to Crouter, another candidate in the election.[4] Pyle enthusiastically told Crouter that revelation of their version of the incident would probably defeat Judge Swift.

On May 3, 1994, Pyle issued a rejection letter concerning filing of charges against Soares. In the letter he asserted that the primary reason for rejecting the case was that the search was improper because Judge Swift could not consent to a search of the Quail Springs Road residence. However, Pyle made no investigation to determine the facts concerning Judge Swift's capacity to consent to a search.

II

Conclusions of Law and Analysis

Before the Commission, the examiners focused their contentions of misconduct by Judge Swift upon the fact that during his conference with the rangers, he placed a call to his wife to determine Soares's whereabouts. The examiners also contend that Judge Swift remained in Judge McGuire's chambers and participated in the discussion which took place, and that such was misconduct.

[4] The Commission notes that this finding directly contradicts Pyle's testimony that he did not provide the materials to anyone. The Commission does not find Pyle to be credible on this point. Compare the hearing transcript with the testimony of Richard Crouter.

As to Judge McGuire, they contend that he committed misconduct in permitting Judge Swift to remain in his chambers and in failing to sign the proffered warrant.

The Telephone Call to Judge Swift's Spouse

The examiners contend that the telephone call by Judge Swift to his wife violated canon 2A of the California Code of Judicial Ethics which adjures the avoidance of the appearance of impropriety.[5] They argue the telephone call created the appearance that Judge Swift had a conflicting personal interest in the case. They submit that he made the call because of his concern that he could be criticized and submit that the call could have jeopardized a five-month criminal investigation and it had an influence on the ensuing discussion of how to conduct the search.

(1) As a causal matter, the telephone call did not create the appearance that Judge Swift had a conflicting personal interest in the case. He already had disclosed and declared an actual personal interest conflict and announced that he could not act as the magistrate because of the conflict.

The call could only have jeopardized the investigation if it revealed information about the investigation; there is no suggestion that it did. The call may not have been wise, but that does not make it an unethical or unseemly action.

---

[5] References herein to a canon are to the California Code of Judicial Ethics, and not to the Code of Judicial Conduct as it existed in 1993. For the purpose of the issues discussed in this decision, there is no material difference between the 1993 and 1996 canons.

Canon 2A and its associated advisory committee comment are as follows.

"A. Promoting Public Confidence

"A judge shall respect and comply with the law and shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary.

"Advisory Committee Commentary—

"Public confidence in the judiciary is eroded by irresponsible or improper conduct by judges. A judge must avoid all impropriety and appearance of impropriety. A judge must expect to be the subject of constant public scrutiny. A judge must therefore accept restrictions on the judge's conduct that might be viewed as burdensome by other members of the community and should do so freely and willingly.

"The prohibition against behaving with impropriety or the appearance of impropriety applies to both the professional and personal conduct of a judge.

"The test for the appearance of impropriety is whether a person aware of the facts might reasonably entertain a doubt that the judge would be able to act with integrity, impartiality, and competence."

Judge Swift's Presence in Chambers

The examiners contend Judge Swift's conduct in remaining in Judge McGuire's chambers is conduct undermining public confidence in the "impartiality" of the judiciary because it indicated that Judge Swift was not impartial in the search warrant proceeding. The examiners point to canon 3B(2), which provides that in the performance of "Adjudicative Responsibilities," "(2) A judge shall be faithful to the law regardless of partisan interests, public clamor, or fear of criticism . . . ." The examiners suggest that this canon is applicable because Judge Swift expressed a fear that he would be criticized if the search was delayed and evidence was not found.

The canon is inapplicable because the fear in issue was not fear about criticism of Judge Swift's conduct in the course of his adjudicative responsibilities. He disqualified himself immediately and was not acting as the judge in this matter, so his impartiality was not in issue.

The examiners contend that remaining in Judge McGuire's chambers created an appearance of impropriety prohibited by canon 2A and that he was using his "influence" as a judge to obtain "confidential" information about his stepson's case, conduct prohibited by canon 2B.[6]

Judge Swift had a sound reason for remaining in Judge McGuire's chambers that arguably advanced an important public interest, viz., promoting confidence in the integrity of the judiciary. Through no fault of his own, Judge Swift was placed in a dilemma because a potential charge of appearance of impropriety attended either alternative course of action available. Judge Swift cannot be charged with impropriety because he chose between them, absent a showing that the course of action he selected is clearly less preferable, i.e., more likely to undermine public confidence in the judiciary.

The appearance of impropriety that could attend Judge Swift taking his leave with information that could compromise the criminal investigation may well have been more substantial than that arising from the possible speculation that by remaining he was using his "influence" as a judge to obtain

[6] Canon 2B provides in pertinent part: "(1) A judge shall not allow family, social, political, or other relationships to influence the judge's judicial conduct or judgment . . . . [¶] (2) A judge shall not lend the prestige of judicial office to advance the pecuniary or personal interests of the judge or others . . . ."

"confidential" information about his stepson's case. Faced with this Hobson's choice, we cannot say that it was misconduct for Judge Swift to remain in Judge McGuire's chambers.

The examiners also contend that Judge Swift committed misconduct in Judge McGuire's chambers by advocating a consent search, notwithstanding his "conflict of interest." The examiners argue that this created an appearance of impropriety. The special masters found, and the Commission concurs, that Judge Swift did not engage in such advocacy.

The examiners argue that advocating a consent search is improper because it is a use of nonpublic information for a purpose unrelated to his judicial duties in violation of canon 3B(11).[7] However, the use, if any, of nonpublic information here is related to Judge Swift's judicial duties, i.e., to the prevention of the potential discredit to the judiciary if the planned searches were conducted fruitlessly after he had the opportunity to alert his stepson or other family members about the impending search.

The examiners argue that advocating a consent search was improper because it created "admissibility issues" as to the evidence obtained. The rangers were represented by an experienced prosecutor who advised them concerning such issues.

The examiners contend that by remaining in Judge McGuire's chambers Judge Swift violated Code of Civil Procedure section 170.3, subdivision (a)(1) which provides: "Whenever a judge determines himself or herself to be disqualified, the judge . . . shall not further participate in the proceeding . . . ." In their view, the word "participation" should be construed broadly.

(2) The prohibition on participation, however, pertains to participation as a judge, i.e., as a judicial decision maker. If a judge discerns a personal interest in a controversy and determines he is disqualified, he could nonetheless "participate" in some other capacity in appropriate circumstances, e.g., intervene in the proceeding as a litigant or testify as a witness.

The evidence was clear and convincing that Judge McGuire had assumed the role of decision maker, and that any participation by Judge Swift thereafter was nonjudicial.

[7] Canon 3B(11) is as follows: "(11) A judge shall not disclose or use, for any purpose unrelated to judicial duties, nonpublic information acquired in a judicial capacity."

Judge McGuire

The examiners contend that Judge McGuire was obligated to sign or reject the warrant without broaching any proposals to cope with the potential problem of disclosure. They suggest that Soares was entitled to a neutral and detached magistrate, and that Judge McGuire was not one.

The Commission finds by clear and convincing evidence that the applicant for the search warrant was advised by competent counsel, and counsel concurred that the consent search was appropriate in the circumstances as they existed on December 16, 1993. Judge Swift executed the consent form while in Judge McGuire's chambers.

While arguably it may have been preferable for Judge McGuire to sign the search warrant, we note that he gave the rangers his home telephone number and invited them to telephone if circumstances changed and they needed a court-ordered, telephonic search warrant. Thus even if Judge McGuire should have signed the search warrant while the rangers were present, we are unable to conclude, in light of the unusual facts confronting Judge McGuire, that his failure to do so constitutes misconduct. His mistake, if any, was at most legal error.

CONCLUSION

The Commission accepts the special masters' conclusion that these proceedings should be dismissed. Commission members Hon. William A. Masterson, Ms. Ophelia Basgal, Robert C. Bonner, Esq., Mr. Christopher J. Felix, Hon. Lois Haight, Ms. Eleanor Johns, Patrick M. Kelly, Esq., Mr. David Malcolm, Hon. Vincent McGraw, Ms. Harriet C. Salarno and Ms. Pearl West voted to dismiss the matter.

These matters, inquiries 134 and 135, are therefore dismissed. This order shall become final forthwith.

Findings of Fact

In 1993, the National Park Service was investigating the possible theft of Native American artifacts from the Joshua Tree National Monument (Monument). Ranger Todd Swain was the lead investigator. A principal target of the investigation was one Warren Churchwell.

Acting undercover and in the course of his investigation in the fall of 1993, Ranger Swain had twice visited a man named Tony Soares at his residence on Quail Springs Road in Joshua Tree. On both occasions Soares showed him an olla (a ceramic pot) taken from the Monument. Soares told him he had purchased the olla from Warren Churchwell, knowing it had been illegally collected, and that he was probably going to give it to the Monument once it had been restored. Ranger Swain also saw two manos (grinding stones) and a metate (a mortar) on a windowsill near the dining room table. Soares told Ranger Swain he had found them in the desert by Kelso, a town surrounded by the East Mohave National Scenic Area. On the second occasion, when Soares showed Swain the olla, it was sitting on the top of a dresser in his bedroom.

Ranger Swain wanted to search for contraband artifacts at Churchwell's residence in Desert Hot Springs, at a gallery in Palm Springs, and at Soares's residence. On several occasions Ranger Swain had sought to obtain assistance in preparing search warrants from the United States Attorney's office. Each time the representative of the Unites States Attorney told him that he was too busy. When this happened again on December 15, 1993, Ranger Swain decided to go through the state system. The next day, on December 16, he obtained the warrants in Riverside County for Churchwell's residence and the gallery.

Later, on the same day, Rangers Swain and Marion Damiano-Nittoli went to Joshua Tree and met with Deputy District Attorney Ray Pyle. Pyle is the Supervising Deputy District Attorney in the Morongo Office of the San Bernardino County District Attorney. The Morongo Office staff had four deputies, including Linda Root and Gordon Isen.

Pyle read the warrant application for Soares's residence and approved it. The warrant specified that the objects to be seized were the manos, the metate, the olla and items showing the ownership of the premises. The rangers had checked with the county assessor and determined that the Soares residence was owned by a Dianne Fox.[2]

At approximately 4:30 p.m. on December 16, 1993, the rangers were escorted by Pyle to the courtroom of respondent Judge Bert Swift. Judge Swift is the judge in Joshua Tree for the Morongo Basin Division of the San Bernardino County Municipal Court District. Pyle told Judge Swift that he had two rangers who had a search warrant they wanted signed. He then left.

Judge Swift went into chambers with the rangers and removed his robe. He asked why they were in the state court system rather than in the federal system. Ranger Swain explained that the matter involved multiple jurisdictions and discussed the rangers' jurisdiction under state law.

Ranger Swain then handed the warrant application to Judge Swift. Judge Swift began to read the affidavit to the warrant. When he read Soares's name and the address of the premises to be searched in the second paragraph of the affidavit he was stunned; he read no further. He announced that Soares was his stepson and that the property to be searched was his house. One of the rangers asked if he knew where Soares was. Judge Swift replied that he did not know, but he offered to find out. In the rangers' presence, he telephoned his wife, Dianne Fox, Soares's mother, at her place of employment.[3]

[2] Dianne Fox and Judge Swift were married in February 1993. Three children of Fox by a prior marriage, including Soares, age 23, resided or stayed from time to time at the Quail Springs Road residence. The Quail Springs Road residence had belonged to Fox before the marriage. Thereafter, title was held in her name and that of Judge Swift, as a result of a refinancing of their aggregate debt. After the marriage, Judge Swift and his wife divided their time between the former residence of Judge Swift and the Quail Springs Road house, living part time in each residence. They spent two or three nights a week at the latter residence, where they occupied the master bedroom, and ate most of their meals there with Fox's children.

Judge Swift then took the rangers and the warrant application to the chambers of respondent Judge James McGuire.

Judge Swift handed the warrant application to Judge McGuire and told him that he could not review it nor issue the warrant because it involved one of his homes and his stepson Tony Soares.

The rangers sat at a conference table abutting Judge McGuire's desk; Judge Swift took a seat across from them. The special masters found by clear and convincing evidence that Judge Swift accompanied the rangers and remained in Judge McGuire's chambers (1) for the purpose of allaying any concerns that Judge Swift would inform Soares about the impending search, and (2) in order to avoid the appearance of impropriety if the search was conducted but the artifacts were not recovered after he left the presence of the rangers, thus affording an opportunity to alert Soares. The special masters also found that Judge McGuire did not question Judge Swift's continued presence for similar reasons.

Judge McGuire began reading the warrant affidavit and discussing the situation with the rangers. He asked when the rangers intended to serve the warrant. They explained that there were two related warrants (the ones issued in Riverside). The rangers planned to serve the other warrants first because they perceived Soares to be the least culpable target. Judge McGuire pointed out this plan presented a problem because the proposed search of Soares's residence had been disclosed to Soares's stepfather (Judge Swift).

Judge McGuire inquired whether they could serve the Quail Springs Road warrant that evening. They replied that they could not because they did not have the manpower. They told him that there was a policy governing service of warrants which prescribed a certain number of officers. The rangers were adamant that they would not serve a warrant that evening.

Judge McGuire asked if they would be amenable to a consent search. The rangers appeared puzzled. Because they appeared puzzled and because he was concerned about being overbearing, he asked the rangers if they would like him to call in the district attorney to advise them. They affirmed that suggestion.

[3] The telephone call did not reveal information about the search warrant or the rangers' investigation. When Fox answered the telephone, Judge Swift asked her where the children were. She told him where she believed each child was, expressed concern that he was asking such a question, and asked if there had been an accident. He told her there had been no accident and that he would talk to her about it later.

Judge McGuire told his bailiff to summon Pyle. Pyle had left for the day and Deputy District Attorney Linda Root came instead. When she arrived, Judge McGuire, with interjections by Ranger Swain, explained the situation. Judge Swift indicated that he would cooperate in a consent search, and represented that his wife and stepson would also consent at his behest. At that point, Root brought up the fact that she was on the campaign committee of Richard Crouter who would be running in the next election (the following June) for the municipal court seat held by Judge Swift. She assured Judge Swift that despite her allegiance to a prospective challenger she would maintain confidentiality concerning the matter. Judge McGuire observed to the rangers that this impending political campaign was another reason requiring an immediate search. The special masters found, and the Commission concurs, that Root's raising of this topic and the ensuing commentary were inconsequential, i.e., the conduct of either judge would not have been different had there been no impending election.

Judge McGuire repeatedly asked the rangers if they would like to confer privately with Root. They declined. Ranger Swain responded that he would like to know about the legality of a consent search. Root, not Judge Swift nor Judge McGuire, explained the pertinent concepts, including the scope of parental capacity to consent, noting that an issue of voluntariness could arise concerning a consent by Fox or Soares.

Judge McGuire solicited information about the location of the manos, metate and olla, as identified in the affidavit. The ensuing discussion revealed that the objects were in common use areas or in plain view from common use areas of the dwelling.

From these considerations Root concluded that there was no issue of voluntariness as to Fox and Soares because Judge Swift's consent would suffice. She advised the rangers that in those circumstances a consent search was a perfectly good search, albeit she did not advocate that they agree to a consent search.

Judge McGuire invited a decision from the rangers on how they wanted to proceed. He informed them that he had read the affidavit, found it to be legally sufficient, and that he would execute the warrant if that was what they decided should be done. The rangers decided to proceed with a consent search that evening. Judge McGuire again inquired if they wanted him to sign the warrant. They responded "No."

Ranger Swain obtained a consent form from his vehicle. Judge Swift executed the consent form. Before the rangers and Judge Swift left his chambers, Judge McGuire gave the rangers a card with his home telephone number and assured them that he would be available to issue the warrant over the telephone if they developed any misgivings about the consent to search. He told them that if there was any problem whatsoever with any of the issues that had been discussed, e.g., the items they sought were not in the common area, or if Fox and Soares were not there or would not consent to a search of any other area of the house, he would issue the warrant.

During the discussions in chambers, Judge Swift made several statements, in addition to agreeing to consent to a search. Concerned for the impact on his family, he asked if the rangers intended to arrest his stepson. Soares is a craftsman experienced in creating reproductions of Native American artifacts. Judge Swift inquired whether the olla might be such a reproduction. He also gave his recollection of the location in the house of the artifacts sought in the warrant.

Although he did participate in the discussion described above, Judge Swift did not participate in the decision as to whether to issue the search warrant.

After Judge Swift executed the consent to search form, he drove to the Quail Springs Road residence, 10 minutes from the courthouse. The rangers followed in their vehicle. Judge Swift led them into the house and introduced them to one of Soares's younger brothers who was in the living room. No one else was home. Judge Swift asked Ranger Swain where the artifacts were located. Ranger Swain showed him. All the artifacts were where Swain had said they were during the chambers discussion, clearly visible from the living room. The door was open from the living room to Soares's bedroom, where the olla was located on the top of a dresser.

The next day, December 17, 1996, searches of the Churchwell residence and the gallery were conducted and Churchwell was arrested. Ranger Swain promptly filed reports with the Riverside District Attorney and requested that a criminal complaint be filed against Churchwell. The complaint was issued in January 1994 and in June 1994 Churchwell pleaded guilty to felony counts charged against him.

On the day following the Riverside search, December 18, 1993, Soares appeared voluntarily at the Palm Springs Police Department in response to a telephone request and was interviewed by Ranger Swain. Swain decided that he could not make a case for prosecution with respect to the grinding stones and mortar. His superiors were disinclined to prosecute Soares with respect to possession of the olla.

Three months passed. The rangers submitted no report concerning the search of the Quail Springs Road residence to the District Attorney of Riverside County until March 27, 1994. That report was prompted by an inquiry concerning the search and the proceedings in chambers by Sergeant Benge, a narcotics officer with the San Bernardino County Sheriff's office. Sergeant Benge was an active supporter of the candidacy of Deputy District Attorney Isen for election to the municipal court seat held by Judge Swift. Following the solicitation by Benge, the rangers, in response to a request by Pyle, submitted two reports on the events in chambers and the search to Pyle.

Following receipt of the first report, Pyle specifically requested a "subjective" report on the chambers conference on the representation that this was "necessary for a proper evaluation of the case against Tony Soares." (Pyle denied requesting such a subjective report.) In response, ranger Damiano-Nittoli filed a second report.

On April 28, 1994, Pyle sent the reports to the District Attorney of San Bernardino County, with a note, in pertinent part, as follows. "Please call when you've finished your review. Naturally, Gordon Isen would like to use this somehow in his campaign. Should we release info? If not, can it be leaked?"

Pyle provided copies of the ranger's reports to Crouter, another candidate in the election.[4] Pyle enthusiastically told Crouter that revelation of their version of the incident would probably defeat Judge Swift.

On May 3, 1994, Pyle issued a rejection letter concerning filing of charges against Soares. In the letter he asserted that the primary reason for rejecting the case was that the search was improper because Judge Swift could not consent to a search of the Quail Springs Road residence. However, Pyle made no investigation to determine the facts concerning Judge Swift's capacity to consent to a search.

II

Conclusions of Law and Analysis

Before the Commission, the examiners focused their contentions of misconduct by Judge Swift upon the fact that during his conference with the rangers, he placed a call to his wife to determine Soares's whereabouts. The examiners also contend that Judge Swift remained in Judge McGuire's chambers and participated in the discussion which took place, and that such was misconduct.

As to Judge McGuire, they contend that he committed misconduct in permitting Judge Swift to remain in his chambers and in failing to sign the proffered warrant.

The Telephone Call to Judge Swift's Spouse

The examiners contend that the telephone call by Judge Swift to his wife violated canon 2A of the California Code of Judicial Ethics which adjures the avoidance of the appearance of impropriety.[5] They argue the telephone call created the appearance that Judge Swift had a conflicting personal interest in the case. They submit that he made the call because of his concern that he could be criticized and submit that the call could have jeopardized a five-month criminal investigation and it had an influence on the ensuing discussion of how to conduct the search.

(1) As a causal matter, the telephone call did not create the appearance that Judge Swift had a conflicting personal interest in the case. He already had disclosed and declared an actual personal interest conflict and announced that he could not act as the magistrate because of the conflict.

The call could only have jeopardized the investigation if it revealed information about the investigation; there is no suggestion that it did. The call may not have been wise, but that does not make it an unethical or unseemly action.

[5] References herein to a canon are to the California Code of Judicial Ethics, and not to the Code of Judicial Conduct as it existed in 1993. For the purpose of the issues discussed in this decision, there is no material difference between the 1993 and 1996 canons.

Canon 2A and its associated advisory committee comment are as follows.

"A. Promoting Public Confidence

"A judge shall respect and comply with the law and shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary.

"Advisory Committee Commentary—

"Public confidence in the judiciary is eroded by irresponsible or improper conduct by judges. A judge must avoid all impropriety and appearance of impropriety. A judge must expect to be the subject of constant public scrutiny. A judge must therefore accept restrictions on the judge's conduct that might be viewed as burdensome by other members of the community and should do so freely and willingly.

"The prohibition against behaving with impropriety or the appearance of impropriety applies to both the professional and personal conduct of a judge.

"The test for the appearance of impropriety is whether a person aware of the facts might reasonably entertain a doubt that the judge would be able to act with integrity, impartiality, and competence."

The examiners contend Judge Swift's conduct in remaining in Judge McGuire's chambers is conduct undermining public confidence in the "impartiality" of the judiciary because it indicated that Judge Swift was not impartial in the search warrant proceeding. The examiners point to canon 3B(2), which provides that in the performance of "Adjudicative Responsibilities," "(2) A judge shall be faithful to the law regardless of partisan interests, public clamor, or fear of criticism . . . ." The examiners suggest that this canon is applicable because Judge Swift expressed a fear that he would be criticized if the search was delayed and evidence was not found.

The canon is inapplicable because the fear in issue was not fear about criticism of Judge Swift's conduct in the course of his adjudicative responsibilities. He disqualified himself immediately and was not acting as the judge in this matter, so his impartiality was not in issue.

The examiners contend that remaining in Judge McGuire's chambers created an appearance of impropriety prohibited by canon 2A and that he was using his "influence" as a judge to obtain "confidential" information about his stepson's case, conduct prohibited by canon 2B.[6]

Judge Swift had a sound reason for remaining in Judge McGuire's chambers that arguably advanced an important public interest, viz., promoting confidence in the integrity of the judiciary. Through no fault of his own, Judge Swift was placed in a dilemma because a potential charge of appearance of impropriety attended either alternative course of action available. Judge Swift cannot be charged with impropriety because he chose between them, absent a showing that the course of action he selected is clearly less preferable, i.e., more likely to undermine public confidence in the judiciary.

The appearance of impropriety that could attend Judge Swift taking his leave with information that could compromise the criminal investigation may well have been more substantial than that arising from the possible speculation that by remaining he was using his "influence" as a judge to obtain

[6] Canon 2B provides in pertinent part: "(1) A judge shall not allow family, social, political, or other relationships to influence the judge's judicial conduct or judgment . . . . [¶] (2) A judge shall not lend the prestige of judicial office to advance the pecuniary or personal interests of the judge or others . . . ."

"confidential" information about his stepson's case. Faced with this Hobson's choice, we cannot say that it was misconduct for Judge Swift to remain in Judge McGuire's chambers.

The examiners also contend that Judge Swift committed misconduct in Judge McGuire's chambers by advocating a consent search, notwithstanding his "conflict of interest." The examiners argue that this created an appearance of impropriety. The special masters found, and the Commission concurs, that Judge Swift did not engage in such advocacy.

The examiners argue that advocating a consent search is improper because it is a use of nonpublic information for a purpose unrelated to his judicial duties in violation of canon 3B(11).[7] However, the use, if any, of nonpublic information here is related to Judge Swift's judicial duties, i.e., to the prevention of the potential discredit to the judiciary if the planned searches were conducted fruitlessly after he had the opportunity to alert his stepson or other family members about the impending search.

The examiners argue that advocating a consent search was improper because it created "admissibility issues" as to the evidence obtained. The rangers were represented by an experienced prosecutor who advised them concerning such issues.

The examiners contend that by remaining in Judge McGuire's chambers Judge Swift violated Code of Civil Procedure section 170.3, subdivision (a)(1) which provides: "Whenever a judge determines himself or herself to be disqualified, the judge . . . shall not further participate in the proceeding . . . ." In their view, the word "participation" should be construed broadly.

(2) The prohibition on participation, however, pertains to participation as a judge, i.e., as a judicial decision maker. If a judge discerns a personal interest in a controversy and determines he is disqualified, he could nonetheless "participate" in some other capacity in appropriate circumstances, e.g., intervene in the proceeding as a litigant or testify as a witness.

The evidence was clear and convincing that Judge McGuire had assumed the role of decision maker, and that any participation by Judge Swift thereafter was nonjudicial.

[7] Canon 3B(11) is as follows: "(11) A judge shall not disclose or use, for any purpose unrelated to judicial duties, nonpublic information acquired in a judicial capacity."

Judge McGuire

The examiners contend that Judge McGuire was obligated to sign or reject the warrant without broaching any proposals to cope with the potential problem of disclosure. They suggest that Soares was entitled to a neutral and detached magistrate, and that Judge McGuire was not one.

The Commission finds by clear and convincing evidence that the applicant for the search warrant was advised by competent counsel, and counsel concurred that the consent search was appropriate in the circumstances as they existed on December 16, 1993. Judge Swift executed the consent form while in Judge McGuire's chambers.

While arguably it may have been preferable for Judge McGuire to sign the search warrant, we note that he gave the rangers his home telephone number and invited them to telephone if circumstances changed and they needed a court-ordered, telephonic search warrant. Thus even if Judge McGuire should have signed the search warrant while the rangers were present, we are unable to conclude, in light of the unusual facts confronting Judge McGuire, that his failure to do so constitutes misconduct. His mistake, if any, was at most legal error.

CONCLUSION

The Commission accepts the special masters' conclusion that these proceedings should be dismissed. Commission members Hon. William A. Masterson, Ms. Ophelia Basgal, Robert C. Bonner, Esq., Mr. Christopher J. Felix, Hon. Lois Haight, Ms. Eleanor Johns, Patrick M. Kelly, Esq., Mr. David Malcolm, Hon. Vincent McGraw, Ms. Harriet C. Salarno and Ms. Pearl West voted to dismiss the matter.

These matters, inquiries 134 and 135, are therefore dismissed. This order shall become final forthwith.

INQUIRY CONCERNING JUDGE JOHN T. BALL.

SUMMARY

A disciplinary matter was brought concerning a superior court judge.

The Commission on Judicial Performance dismissed the proceedings. The commission concluded that the judge's purpose in calling a resentencing hearing pursuant to Pen. Code, § 1170, subd. (d), regarding a murder defendant who was rearrested after he was erroneously released from prison was to allow either side to reopen the case in light of the then existing circumstances, and to use the power of his office to correct any errors for which the judiciary was responsible. Although counsel had indicated that they did not wish to reopen the matter, their initial views were not binding. In the context of a resentencing hearing, the court and the parties were free to consider whether something different could or should be done. The judge in good faith attempted to determine whether the resentencing hearing was appropriate. He concluded that the statute did authorize such a hearing. Thus, whether authorized by the statute or not, the judge's action was at most legal error and not misconduct. (Opinion by Commission Counsel, by direction of the Commission.)

OPINION

Commission Counsel, by the direction of the Commission.—This is a disciplinary matter concerning Judge John T. Ball, Judge of the Santa Clara County Superior Court. After formal factfinding and review by the Commission on Judicial Performance (Commission), the Commission has concluded that the matter should be dismissed.

PROCEDURAL HISTORY

Formal proceedings were commenced with the service of the Commission's notice of formal proceedings dated February 6, 1996 (and amended on Apr. 29, 1996). Special masters were appointed by the Supreme Court on May 7, 1996.[1]

Judge Ball was represented by David R. Sylva and Christopher A. Seaman of Campbell, California. The examiners for the Commission were Dennis F. Coupe and Jack Coyle of the Commission's Office of Trial Counsel.

The California Judges Association participated before the Commission pursuant to Commission on Judicial Performance rule 131 as amicus curiae, and was represented by Ronald E. Mallen of San Francisco, California.

[1] The special masters were Justice William A. Stone, Judge Ronald B. Robie and Judge Paul H. Alvarado. They were selected by the Commission from a list submitted by the Supreme Court to hear and take evidence in this matter and to report thereon to the Commission. (See Cal. Rules of Court, rule 907. Order by Chief Justice George, dated May 7, 1996.)

The masters heard two days of testimony, and after affording the parties an opportunity for briefing and argument, submitted their report to the Commission on November 25, 1996. The report concluded that Judge Ball had engaged in improper action within the meaning of article VI, section 18 of the California Constitution.

After affording the parties an opportunity for briefing, oral argument was held before the Commission on January 29, 1997. All commissioners participated.

The Commission has considered written and oral arguments offered on behalf of Judge Ball and makes the following findings of fact and conclusions of law.

ISSUE

(1) The focus of this case is canon 3(B)(2) as it appeared in 1993 which provided: ". . . A judge should not be swayed by partisan interests, public clamor or fear of criticism."[2]

FACTUAL SUMMARY

The following facts are preface to the hearing before Judge Ball on December 17, 1993.

Dennis Collazo was convicted of felony murder in 1982. The conviction was reversed after a review by the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, and the matter was eventually set for retrial before Judge Ball. A plea bargain was made between the parties. The bargain was approved by Judge Ball, and in September 1993 he entered sentence under the terms of the plea bargain.

Two terms of that plea bargain are pertinent to this case: Collazo waived credit for the 11 years that he had already spent in prison under the original conviction, and he waived any right to appeal. The overall effect of the plea bargain was to reaffirm the original murder conviction and convert an indeterminate life sentence into a term of years (so that Collazo would know the exact date when he would get out of prison).

[2] Canon 3B(2) now provides: "A judge shall be faithful to the law regardless of partisan interests, public clamor, or fear of criticism, and shall maintain professional competence in the law."

Due to an error at the Department of Corrections—it gave him credit for the 11 years already served—Collazo was discharged from prison two weeks after the plea bargain. He went home to his wife in San Jose.

Judge Ball learned that Collazo was at home with his wife, and he inquired of the authorities regarding reports that Collazo had been released. The error in releasing Collazo was discovered. Collazo was rearrested and returned to prison. The arrest was performed pursuant to police procedures for arresting a convicted murderer who had escaped from prison.

Judge Ball did not order that Collazo be rearrested, nor did he participate in any way in determining how the rearrest should be performed.

Collazo's family and friends were upset both by the government's action in revoking his freedom and by the manner in which he was rearrested.

Collazo's wife was active in trying to bring her husband's plight to the public's attention. She and other Collazo supporters wrote letters to many public figures, including one to the Governor which included some 300 signatures. Some of this correspondence was copied to Judge Ball, and in fact, he referred to the 300 signatures at the December hearing. In January and February 1994, Mrs. Collazo also complained to the Commission.

On October 27, newspaperman Trotter wrote a newspaper column deploring Collazo's misfortune at being released and rearrested. Judge Ball was mentioned as being responsible for the arrest. Another article dated November 14, 1993, complained that a major injustice had occurred.

In the meantime, on November 4, 1993, Collazo filed a notice of appeal without specifying any grounds. The notice was filed in propria persona and requested the court to appoint counsel.

On November 23, 1993, Judge Ball ordered that Collazo appear before him for resentencing pursuant to Penal Code section 1170, subdivision (d) (section 1170(d)). Judge Ball's order says only, "hearing pursuant to PC 1170(d)." The hearing was set for December 10, 1993.

There is substantial controversy in the record as to whether section 1170(d) could be used in a circumstance such as herein. It is a code section that allows a judge, on his own motion, to recall a matter and revise a sentence, provided that the revised sentence is no greater than the original sentence.[3]

[3] Witness Judge Mullins testified that he used the section one time after a defendant had appealed and filed a brief pointing out an administrative error. Judge Mullins recalled the matter, corrected the error he had made, and thus avoided the appeal.

In this case, the legitimacy of Judge Ball's section 1170(d) order is subject to scrutiny because the original sentence had been entered pursuant to a plea bargain. The negotiated plea had been entered as agreed, and Judge Ball was not free to change it.[4] Judge Ball met with the attorneys prior to the section 1170(d) hearing, and both objected to having any hearing.

The resentencing hearing took place on December 17, 1993. The courtroom was packed. The transcript of the hearing reflects a number of statements by Judge Ball. One could reasonably interpret his remarks as being an effort to counter Mrs. Collazo's campaign and the newspaper articles critical of Judge Ball. While these remarks support the contention that Judge Ball was acting for a personal purpose in ordering and conducting the hearing, the Commission is unable to find clear and convincing evidence that, in fact, Judge Ball was acting for such an improper purpose.

DISCUSSION

(2) The Commission has concluded that Judge Ball's purpose in calling the section 1170(d) hearing was to allow either side to reopen the case in light of the then circumstances, and to use the power of his office to correct any errors for which the judiciary was responsible. Although counsel had indicated that they did not wish to reopen the matter, their initial views were not binding (particularly in the absence of Collazo). In the context of a section 1170(d) hearing, the court and the parties were free to consider whether something different could or should be done.

The second related question is whether section 1170(d) authorized a hearing for the purpose specified. The record shows that Judge Ball considered that issue prior to calling the hearing and that he consulted with other judges. Judge Ball in good faith attempted to determine whether a section 1170(d) hearing was appropriate. He concluded that section 1170(d) did authorize such a hearing. Thus, whether authorized by section 1170(d) or not, Judge Ball's action was at most legal error and not misconduct.

[4] During the December hearing Judge Ball acknowledged that he could not change the plea bargain: ". . . [the plea bargain] was at the request, I believe, of the Court reduced to a formal plea agreement bearing the signature of both the prosecutor Mr. Waite, Mr. Vaughn, and the defendant personally having executed this document on September 1st, 1993 clearly setting forth the precise terms of this plea bargain. And I am totally unable at this time to consider a modification of that plea agreement based upon anything that has transpired subsequent to its execution. And I know of no authority nor do I know of any reason in law or logic for me to deprive the People of the benefit of their bargain."

CONCLUSION

This proceeding is dismissed. This order shall be final forthwith.

Commission members Hon. William A. Masterson, Ms. Ophelia Basgal, Robert C. Bonner, Esq., Mr. Christopher J. Felix, Hon. Lois Haight, Ms. Eleanor Johns, Patrick M. Kelly, Esq., Mr. David Malcolm, Hon. Vincent McGraw, Ms. Harriet C. Salarno and Ms. Pearl West voted to dismiss the matter.

| Inquiry ConcerningJustice J. Anthony KlineNo. 151 | DECISION AND ORDEROF DISMISSAL |

This is a disciplinary matter concerning Justice J. Anthony Kline of the Court of Appeal, First Appellate District, Division Two. After considering the briefs filed by Justice Kline, the commission's trial counsel and the California Judges Association, as amicus curiae, the commission has concluded that the matter should be dismissed.

BACKGROUND

On December 2, 1997, the Court of Appeal, First District, Division Two, issued an opinion in Morrow v. Hood Communications, Inc. (1997) 59 Cal.App.4th 924, granting a motion for stipulated reversal. Justice Kline wrote a dissent in Morrow stating that he felt this was one of the "rare instances in which a judge of an inferior court can properly refuse to acquiesce in the precedent established by a court of superior jurisdiction," even though he acknowledged "that the opinion of the California Supreme Court in Neary [v. Regents of University of California (1992) 3 Cal.4th 273] ... requires that the motion before us be granted." Justice Kline clearly articulated his reasons for believing that the Neary decision was "analytically flawed and empirically unjustified" and that the doctrine of stipulated reversal was "destructive of judicial institutions." The penultimate paragraph in the dissent stated:

> While I will refuse to apply the Neary rule when asked to do so by litigants, I will of course comply with an order of the California Supreme Court to grant a particular request for stipulated reversal, a purely ministerial act.

Shortly after the issuance of the opinion and dissent in Morrow, the commission received a complaint concerning the dissent. After an investigation, the commission voted to institute formal proceedings, and a Notice of Formal Proceedings issued on June 30, 1998 charging that Justice Kline's "refusal to follow the law as established by the California Supreme Court was in violation of the Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 2A and 3B(2)."

Justice Kline filed a verified answer denying the allegations and at the commission's request the Supreme Court, on December 1, 1998, appointed special masters.[1]

On April 12, 1999, Justice Kline filed his prehearing brief and a letter requesting that the commission consider dismissing the pending charges on its own motion. At the same time, the California Judges Association (CJA) tendered a brief amicus curiae in support of Justice Kline.

On April 20, 1999, the commission issued an order staying proceedings before the special masters, filing the CJA's amicus brief, requesting that trial counsel file a brief responding to the briefs filed by Justice Kline and the CJA, and allowing Justice Kline to file a reply brief to trial counsel's responding brief. Trial counsel's brief and Justice Kline's reply brief were subsequently filed.[2]

On May 13, 1999, the Supreme Court issued its opinion in Oberholzer v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1999) 20 Cal.4th 371.

DISCUSSION

We recognize that appellate jurists deal with legal principles and ideas. It is fundamental to our system of jurisprudence that they feel free to break new ground, challenge existing assumptions, present novel legal reasoning and experiment with different approaches. In most instances they must be able to do so free from fear of discipline for the free expression of their ideas. Disagreement over interpretations of law are the essence of the work of appellate judges. We understand that appellate judges often write strong - even passionate - decisions on arcane matters of jurisprudence. Many of these involve questions regarding whether they have the authority to take certain actions. The answers are often far from obvious. To discipline a judge solely for the expression of ideas about legal questions is contrary to these principles.

These proceedings question whether there are some limits to what an intermediate appellate court justice may write. Justice Kline's dissent was unusual in that he did not seek to distinguish the precedent relied upon by the majority, but specifically recognized that the Supreme Court's opinion in Neary required that the motion for stipulated reversal be granted. He nevertheless reasoned that he was "constitutionally justified" in dissenting from the majority's decision to do so.

While the commission was considering this case, the Supreme Court decided Oberholzer. In its opinion, the Supreme Court noted that a defense of legal error does not necessarily preclude an investigation or even a finding of misconduct, reaffirmed that discipline must be based on clear and convincing evidence, and set forth the following standard for when a legal error may provide a basis for discipline:

---

[1] The special masters were Justice Kenneth R. Yegan, Court of Appeal, Second Appellate District, Division Six (presiding), Justice Fred K. Morrison, Court of Appeal, Third Appellate District, and Judge Michael N. Garrigan, Superior Court of San Joaquin County.

[2] The CJA's motion to file a reply brief as amicus curiae is denied.

> In summary, a judge who commits legal error which, in addition, clearly and convincingly reflects bad faith (Broadman v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 18 Cal.4th 1079, 1091-1092), bias (Kennick v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1990) 50 Cal.3d 297, 327-331), abuse of authority (Spruance v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1975) 13 Cal.3d 778, 786-795), disregard for fundamental rights (Kloepfer v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 49 Cal.3d 826, 849-854), intentional disregard of the law (Cannon v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications, supra, 14 Cal.3d 678, 695-698), or any purpose other than the faithful discharge of judicial duty (Ryan v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1988) 45 Cal.3d 518, 545-546), is subject to investigation. (See generally, Shaman et al., Judicial Conduct and Ethics, §2.02, pp. 32-37.) Mere legal error, without more, however, is insufficient to support a finding that a judge has violated the Code of Judicial Ethics and thus should be disciplined.

As clarified by the Supreme Court's opinion in Oberholzer, in order for the commission to discipline Justice Kline it must find by clear and convincing evidence that his decision to file a dissent was legal error and that the decision was made in bad faith or for some improper motive.

Justice Kline has maintained that his dissent was ethical. The CJA in its amicus brief argued that Justice Kline's dissent:

> raised a purely legal issue: whether there is a narrow exception to the doctrine of stare decisis articulated in Auto Equity Sales, Inc. v. Superior Court, 57 Cal.2d 450 (1962) that would permit a lower court judge - here a justice of the Court of Appeal writing in dissent - to depart from otherwise controlling precedent in the circumstance presented in Morrow. Because that legal issue plainly presented a tenable claim for an exception to the stare decisis rule applicable in the circumstances presented in Morrow, and because that legal issue was itself a question of first impression in California, Justice Kline's dissent in Morrow did not violate established California decisional law and therefore cannot properly be the basis for disciplinary charges.

Trial counsel, in response to the briefs filed by Justice Kline and the CJA, contended that the circumstances of Morrow did not justify a departure from stare decisis.

The commission finds the CJA's approach particularly useful. The CJA notes that it believes "that lower court judges cannot refuse to follow higher court precedent merely because of personal disagreement, even if deeply felt." The CJA suggests, however, that Justice Kline could file a dissent in Morrow because of the confluence of three factors: (1) Justice Kline had a tenable belief that the precedent was "destructive of judicial institutions;" (2) since the decision in Neary, subsequent events, including the United States Supreme Court's decision in U.S. Bancorp Mortgage Co. v. Bonner Mall Partnership, 513 U.S. 18 (1994), provided good cause to urge reconsideration; and (3) "for procedural reasons, there would be no opportunity for the Supreme Court to reconsider Neary unless a panel of the Court of Appeal declined to apply Neary."

None of the three factors cited by the CJA is in itself dispositive. As the CJA itself suggests earlier in it brief, a judge's sincerity is not necessarily sufficient to justify a failure to follow higher court precedent. The subsequent events, including the United States Supreme Court's decision and the general criticism of Neary, are not clearly persuasive. Justice Kline recognized that the doctrine of stipulated reversals was not an issue of constitutional law, but of common law, and it was clear that the Supreme Court was already aware of the United States Supreme Court's decision and the general criticism of its opinion in Neary. The suggestion that there was no vehicle for review is debatable in view of the practice of critical concurrences, such as Justice Kline's concurrence in Krug v. Praszker (1994) 22 Cal.App.4th 1814, and the Supreme Court's authority, which it exercised in Morrow, to review a decision on its own motion.

The commission, nonetheless, finds that in light of the CJA's brief and the confluence of these three factors, it cannot conclude that "the argument for a narrow exception to the stare decisis principle of Auto Equity Sales was so far-fetched as to be untenable." In other words, we cannot conclude under the Oberholzer standard that the dissent was improper (even though Justice Kline recognized that the Supreme Court's opinion in Neary was controlling). Accordingly, the first charge in the Notice of Formal Proceedings is dismissed.

In addition to charging Justice Kline for filing his dissent, the Notice of Formal Proceedings also charged him for stating that he "would continue to refuse to apply the law of Neary in future cases as well." We recognize that Justice Kline also stated that he would apply the Neary rule if specifically directed to do so by the Supreme Court. Although the arguments supporting his statement are more debatable than those supporting the issuance of a dissent, the commission finds, after considering all of the legal arguments presented by both sides, including the amicus brief by the judge's peers, that the Oberholzer standard is not met. The second charge in the Notice of Formal Proceedings is dismissed.

Justice Kline, the California Judges Association, and others have invited the commission to enunciate principles which govern cases alleging misconduct arising out of legal error and to reiterate our fundamental belief in the principle of judicial independence: we decline the former in light of the Supreme Court's opinion in Oberholzer. The Supreme Court has very recently carefully set forth the applicable standards and we see no reason to attempt to restate them here.

In conclusion, we readily reaffirm our fundamental belief in the principle of judicial independence. In our application of Oberholzer to this case, we endeavor to demonstrate that in exercising our mandate as conferred by the people, we appreciate the critical need for California judicial officers to act both independently and in conformity with the laws of the State, and we are sensitive to the substantial issues that arise when these principles clash. We recognize that Justice Kline asserts other substantive defenses as well, but in view of this decision, we need not consider them here.

The commission's vote is 8 to 1. Ms. Bergthold, Mr. Farrell, Judge Flier, Mr. Kahn, Mr. Kelly, Judge Pichon, Ms. Ripston and Ms. Sommars voted to dismiss the proceedings. Dr. Vinson voted against dismissing the proceeding. Justice Hanlon and Mrs. Lui recused themselves from participating in this proceeding.

CONCLUSION

This proceeding is dismissed. This order shall be final forthwith.

| Inquiry Concerning Judge Pamela R. RogersNo. 144 | DECISION AND ORDER DISMISSING COUNT ONE AND COUNT TWO |

In January 1998, the commission filed a Notice of Formal Proceedings. Counts One and Two concerned Judge Rogers' use of prescription drugs and Count Three addressed Judge Rogers' delay in ruling on certain matters.

On October 29, 1998, the commission issued a Decision and Order publicly admonishing Judge Rogers for failing to rule on seven submitted matters in a timely manner and incorporating a consent agreement concerning Judge Rogers' use of prescription drugs. Judge Rogers agreed to provide the commission, through July 1, 2000, with confidential periodic medical reports regarding her medical condition and treatment (sent directly to the commission by the physicians) and with judicial attendance records.

Judge Rogers having complied with the terms of the consent agreement, the charges in Count One and Count Two of the January 7, 1998 Notice of Formal Proceedings are dismissed with prejudice.

Commission members Justice Daniel M. Hanlon, Ms. Lara Bergthold, Mr. Mike Farrell, Judge Madeleine I. Flier, Ms. Gayle Gutierrez, Mr. Patrick M. Kelly, Mrs. Crystal Lui, Judge Rise Jones Pichon, and Ms. Ramona Ripston voted in favor of dismissing Counts One and Two. Commission member Mr. Michael A. Kahn voted against dismissing the counts. There is currently one public member vacancy.

OPINION

LUCAS, C. J.—David Press, formerly a judge of the Justice Court for the Crest Forest Judicial District of San Bernardino County, seeks an order rejecting or modifying a recommendation of the Commission on Judicial Performance that this court impose public censure. (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (c).) It appears, however, that Mr. Press no longer holds a judicial office, and that review of the recommendation by this court is not warranted.

The petition is therefore denied; the recommendation of the Commission is rejected; and the Commission is directed to dismiss the proceeding as moot.

[No. S045140. Dec. 21, 1995.]

BRUCE W. DODDS, a Judge of the Superior Court, Petitioner, v. COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE, Respondent.

SUMMARY

The Commission on Judicial Performance found that a superior court judge had observed a colleague deflate a tire on a van that had been parked in the colleague's assigned parking space; that he had declined to report what he had observed, even after it appeared the colleague lied about the incident; that, when approached by a sheriff's department detective about the incident, he had initially refused to give a statement and suggested that his staff also refuse to talk; and that he had given a statement only after his colleague had made a statement. The commission also found that on four occasions the judge had engaged in rudeness and prejudgment in the handling of cases, and that on one occasion he had made an offensive remark in chambers about two lawyers who had appeared before him. The commission found that these acts constituted wilful misconduct in office and conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brought the judicial office into disrepute. It recommended that the judge be publicly censured.

The Supreme Court rejected the recommendation of public censure. The court held that the commission's findings of fact were supported by clear and convincing evidence. However, contrary to the commission's conclusion of law, the court held that the judge's interference with a law enforcement investigation constituted only prejudicial conduct and not wilful misconduct. The court further held that the commission was correct in finding that the judge's rudeness and prejudgment in the handling of cases on four occasions constituted prejudicial conduct. As to the one offensive remark, however, the court lacked the power to impose discipline, since the remark was made more than six years before the commencement of the judge's current term, and, under Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, former subd. (c), the Supreme Court is limited to sanctioning "action occurring not more than 6 years prior to the commencement of the judge's current term." Finally, the court held, cases in which public censure has been imposed have involved more serious misconduct than that involved in the present proceeding, and the record was replete with evidence that the judge was a talented one who was often sought for his ability to settle difficult cases. Moreover, his interference in the investigation of his colleague, though improper, was not motivated by a desire to conceal the truth. Public censure would not further the purpose of judicial performance proceedings, which is not to punish errant judges but to protect the judicial system and those subject to the awesome power that judges wield. (Opinion by The Court. Separate concurring and dissenting opinion by Baxter, J., with George, J., concurring.)

HEADNOTES

Classified to California Digest of Official Reports

(1) Judges § 6.4—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Proceedings—Review by Supreme Court.—In reviewing the recommendations of the Commission on Judicial Performance, the Supreme Court's concern is only with the incidents that the commission has sustained. With respect to those incidents, the court reviews the record independently, cognizant that there must be proof by clear and convincing evidence sufficient to sustain a charge to a reasonable certainty. Nevertheless, the court gives special weight to factual determinations in the report of the masters, as the masters had the advantage of observing the demeanor of the various witnesses. In addition, in recognition of the commission's expertise, the court accords great weight to the commission's conclusions of law. It is particularly deferential to the commission when it has acted unanimously. Finally, based on the court's findings of fact and conclusions of law, the court determines what discipline, if any, is appropriate.

(2) Judges § 6.4—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Proceedings—Evidence—Character Evidence as Cumulative.—In proceedings concerning alleged misconduct by a superior court judge, the masters and the Commission on Judicial Performance did not err in refusing to consider the testimony and declarations of a number of witnesses who had favorable impressions of the judge, though they had not observed any of the specific incidents that were the subject of the inquiry. The exclusion of this evidence was well within the discretion of the masters and the commission. The masters permitted many character witnesses to testify in the judge's favor and reasonably determined that additional testimony of this kind would be cumulative.

(3) Judges § 6.2—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Grounds —Wilful Misconduct: Words, Phrases, and Maxims—Wilful Misconduct.—Under Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, former subd. (c), the Supreme Court may censure a judge for wilful misconduct in office or conduct that is prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute. "Wilful misconduct" comprises three elements: (1) unjudicial conduct, (2) committed in bad faith, (3) by a judge acting in his or her judicial capacity. Whether conduct is unjudicial is determined with reference to the California Code of Judicial Conduct. "Bad faith" means the judge intentionally committed acts that he or she knew or should have known were beyond a judge's lawful power, or acts within the lawful power of a judge that nevertheless were committed for a purpose other than the faithful discharge of judicial duties. "Acting in his judicial capacity" means the judge is performing one of a judge's adjudicative or administrative duties. In determining whether the judge is acting in a judicial capacity, due weight is given to the location of the conduct. Further, if the judge uses, or attempts to use, his or her authority as a judge for improper ends, regardless of location, the judge is considered to be acting in a judicial capacity.

(4) Judges § 6.2—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Grounds —Prejudicial Conduct: Words, Phrases, and Maxims—Prejudicial Conduct.—Unjudicial conduct that does not rise to the level of wilful misconduct, either because of a lack of bad faith or because the judge was not acting in a judicial capacity, may nevertheless constitute prejudicial conduct. Prejudicial conduct refers to conduct that would appear to an objective observer to be not only unjudicial but prejudicial to public esteem for the judicial office. The conduct, however, need not be notorious; it is enough that the conduct be known to those members of the public who observed it.

(5a, 5b) Judges § 6.2—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Grounds—Prejudicial Conduct—Interference With Law Enforcement Investigation.—A superior court judge who observed a colleague deflate a tire on a van that had been parked in the colleague's assigned parking space; who declined to report what he had observed, even after it appeared the colleague lied about the incident; who, when approached by a sheriff's department detective about the incident, initially refused to give a statement and suggested that his staff also refuse to talk; and who only gave a statement after his colleague had made a statement engaged in prejudicial conduct, but not wilful misconduct. His interference in the investigation was unjudicial. It also constituted bad faith, since the interference was intentional and he should have known that it was beyond his lawful power as a judge. However, he was not acting in a judicial capacity when he interfered, since he was not performing one of the functions generally associated with his position as a judge, in that when he advised his staff not to talk, he was giving advice as a witness to an event unrelated to the work of the court. Though he met the detective at the courthouse, that was simply a convenient meeting place selected by the detective.

(6) Judges § 6.2—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Grounds —Bad Faith Conduct—Actual Malice: Words, Phrases, and Maxims—Actual Malice.—The "actual malice" that will support a finding that a judge acted in bad faith connotes only specific intent, not hate or ill will.

(7) Judges § 6.2—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Grounds —Prejudicial Conduct—Rudeness and Prejudgment of Cases.—A superior court judge's rudeness and prejudgment in the handling of cases, as exhibited on four occasions, constituted prejudicial conduct. Interrupting and yelling loudly and angrily at counsel and a litigant, as well as telling a joke that suggested bias, was clearly unjudicial, and it brought disrepute upon the judicial office. The judge's contention that his "assertive" judicial style was desirable in that it helped him effect settlements betrayed an understanding of the judicial role that placed too much emphasis on the efficient disposition of cases and too little emphasis on the dignity of litigants.

[Disciplinary action against judge on ground of abusive or intemperate language or conduct toward attorneys, court personnel, or parties to or witnesses in actions, and the like, note, 89 A.L.R.4th 278.]

(8) Judges § 6.4—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Proceedings—Limitation to Conduct Occurring Less Than Six Years Before Current Term.—The Supreme Court, in reviewing a disciplinary recommendation of the Commission on Judicial Performance, lacked power to impose a sanction against a superior court judge based on a remark he allegedly made more than six years before the commencement of his current term. Under Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, former subd. (c), the Supreme Court may "censure or remove a judge for action occurring not more than 6 years prior to the commencement of the judge's current term." Although his current term began after disciplinary proceedings began, the constitutional provision is not a classic statute of limitations—it does not place a limit on when an action or proceeding may be commenced. Rather, it places a limit on the total time that may elapse from the occurrence of an incident to the imposition of discipline based on that incident.

[See 2 Witkin, Cal. Procedure (3d ed. 1985) Courts, § 32.]

(9) Judges § 6—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Interference With Law Enforcement Investigation, Rudeness, and Prejudgment of Cases—Propriety of Public Censure.—The Supreme Court rejected the Commission on Judicial Performance's recommendation of public censure concerning a superior court judge who had engaged in prejudicial conduct, including interfering in a law enforcement investigation of a colleague, rudeness, and the appearance of bias. Cases in which public censure has been imposed have involved more serious misconduct, and the record was replete with evidence that the judge was a talented one who was often sought for his ability to settle difficult cases. Moreover, his interference in the investigation of his colleague, though improper, was not motivated by a desire to conceal the truth. Public censure would not further the purpose of the judicial performance proceedings, which is not to punish errant judges but to protect the judicial system and those subject to the awesome power that judges wield.

OPINION

THE COURT.—Judge Bruce W. Dodds of the Santa Barbara County Superior Court has petitioned for review of the recommendation of the Commission on Judicial Performance (Commission) that he be publicly censured for acts that the Commission found to constitute "wilful misconduct in office" and "conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute." (See Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (d) [formerly subd. (c)];[1] Cal. Rules of Court, rule 919(b).)

The bases for the Commission's recommendation are 1) that petitioner obstructed a law enforcement investigation, 2) that petitioner "has frequently given the appearance of rudeness and prejudgment in his handling of cases," and 3) that petitioner made an offensive remark in chambers about two lawyers who had appeared before him. As set forth below, we agree with the Commission's findings of fact, but disagree with some of the Commission's conclusions of law. We reject the Commission's recommendation of public censure.

I. SCOPE OF REVIEW

The Commission's notice of formal proceedings, dated January 27, 1994, and amended July 26, 1994, specified six counts and thirteen separate incidents of misconduct. (1) Our concern is only with the incidents that the Commission has sustained. (Spruance v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1975) 13 Cal.3d 778, 784, fn. 5 [119 Cal.Rptr. 841, 532 P.2d 1209] (Spruance).) With respect to those incidents, we review the record independently, cognizant that there must be "proof by clear and convincing evidence sufficient to sustain a charge to a reasonable certainty." (Geiler v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1973) 10 Cal.3d 270, 275 [110 Cal.Rptr. 201, 515 P.2d 1] (Geiler); Doan v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1995) 11 Cal.4th 294, 313 [45 Cal.Rptr.2d 254, 902 P.2d 272] (Doan); Gonzalez v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1983) 33 Cal.3d 359, 365 [188 Cal.Rptr. 880, 657 P.2d 372] (Gonzalez).) Nevertheless, we give "special weight" to factual determinations in the report of the masters, as the masters had the advantage of observing the demeanor of the various witnesses. (Gubler v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1984) 37 Cal.3d 27, 34 [207 Cal.Rptr. 171, 688 P.2d 551] (Gubler); Wenger v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1981) 29 Cal.3d 615, 623 [175 Cal.Rptr. 420, 630 P.2d 954] (Wenger).) In addition, in recognition of the Commission's expertise, we accord "great weight" to the Commission's conclusions of law. (Kennick v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1990) 50 Cal.3d 297, 314 [267 Cal.Rptr. 293, 787 P.2d 591, 87 A.L.R.4th 679] (Kennick); Wenger, supra, 29 Cal.3d at p. 623.) We are particularly deferential to the Commission when it has acted unanimously. (Wenger, supra, 29 Cal.3d at p. 623.)

[1]The voters approved Proposition 190 at the November 8, 1994, election, thereby substantially amending article VI, section 18 of the California Constitution. By its terms, Proposition 190 became operative on March 1, 1995. Because petitioner's conduct preceded March 1, 1995, we apply the version of the Constitution that existed prior thereto.

Finally, based on our findings of fact and conclusions of law, we determine what discipline, if any, is appropriate. (Gubler, supra, 37 Cal.3d at p. 34; Geiler, supra, 10 Cal.3d at p. 276.)

II. FAIRNESS OF COMMISSION PROCEEDINGS

Before turning to the facts underlying the various charges and the merits of the Commission's conclusions of law, we address petitioner's threshold arguments. First, petitioner asserts that some members of the Commission were likely biased against him because of collateral litigation that he brought against the Commission in an effort to preserve the confidentiality of this proceeding. We rejected this same argument in Adams v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1995) 10 Cal.4th 866, 880-884 [42 Cal.Rptr.2d 606, 897 P.2d 544] (Adams), and we need not repeat our discussion here. In the course of adjudicative proceedings, decisionmakers frequently make preliminary or collateral determinations against a party. Absent persuasive evidence of actual bias, there is no reason to assume that these decisionmakers thereby lose their objectivity. (Ibid.; see also Withrow v. Larkin (1975) 421 U.S. 35, 56 [43 L.Ed.2d 712, 728-729, 95 S.Ct. 1456].)

(2) Second, petitioner cites as error the refusal on the part of the masters and the Commission to consider the testimony or declarations of a number of witnesses who had favorable impressions of petitioner, though they had not observed any of the specific incidents that were the subject of the inquiry. The exclusion of this evidence was well within the discretion of the masters and the Commission. (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 909; Evid. Code, § 352.) The masters permitted many character witnesses to testify in petitioner's favor and reasonably determined that additional testimony of this kind would be cumulative.

In an effort to compensate for the exclusion of these witnesses, petitioner has submitted to this court 64 letters and declarations from members of the bar. These letters and declarations generally praise petitioner's skills as a judge, particularly noting his ability to settle difficult cases by getting to the heart of the dispute and speaking frankly with counsel and the parties. Nearly all of these declarants qualify their praise of petitioner, using such words as "tough," "short," "abrupt," "direct," "rude," "impatient," and "gruff." Though these terms are generally used in the context of describing petitioner's reaction when counsel is unprepared, many declarants opine that petitioner should exercise more self-restraint. Much of this evidence is cumulative or of little probative value. We decline to take it into consideration.

III. FINDINGS OF FACT

We conclude that clear and convincing evidence supports the Commission's findings of fact. As in Fitch v. Commission of Judicial Performance (1995) 9 Cal.4th 552, 556 [37 Cal.Rptr.2d 581, 887 P.2d 937] (Fitch), "[b]ecause this case involves public censure rather than outright removal of a judge, we need not explore in detail the extensive factual matrix underlying each of the Commission's findings." The following summary adequately states our findings with respect to petitioner's misconduct.

A. Interference in a Law Enforcement Investigation

On April 21, 1993, petitioner and some members of his staff, when returning from lunch, observed another superior court judge remove the air from the tire of a van that was parked in that judge's assigned parking space in the courthouse parking lot. Petitioner did not try to dissuade his colleague from deflating the van's tire. The van turned out to be registered to a disabled person. For four weeks, petitioner did nothing to bring the incident to the attention of appropriate authorities. Even after press reports indicated that the judge who had deflated the tire had denied responsibility, petitioner did not publicly disclose his knowledge about the incident. Petitioner did, however, discuss the matter with the presiding judge of the court as well as the court's research attorney. In those discussions, petitioner expressed concern that the responsible judge had apparently denied involvement. Petitioner also said that he intended to tell the truth if asked.

On May 19, 1993, a detective from the Santa Barbara County Sheriff's Department came to petitioner's courtroom while court was in session and spoke to the bailiff, who took a note to petitioner. Through the bailiff, petitioner told the detective that he did not want to make a statement regarding the incident. Later, during the noon recess, petitioner met the detective in chambers and repeated that he did not want to make a statement, explaining that he was "too close." Petitioner also suggested to his staff that they decline to make statements, at least until the detective had interviewed the responsible judge. Though petitioner told his staff that it would not affect their jobs if they chose to speak to the detective, most of petitioner's staff followed petitioner's suggestion and refused to do so.

Later the same day, the detective spoke with the Santa Barbara County District Attorney, explaining the situation. The district attorney telephoned petitioner and accused him of obstructing justice. Following this conversation, petitioner arranged to meet with the detective, as well as the judge who had deflated the tire and the court's research attorney. Petitioner conferred with the latter two for a short time out of the detective's presence. Then petitioner invited the detective to join the group, and the judge who had deflated the tire gave a statement admitting his conduct. After this admission, petitioner also gave a statement to the detective. Petitioner's statement was only four and a half hours after the detective first approached petitioner.

On June 3, 1993, petitioner issued a press release that the court's research attorney had drafted. The press release briefly described the foregoing events.

B. Appearance of Rudeness and Prejudgment

During a settlement conference in a case involving alleged sexual misconduct by a physician, petitioner abruptly and repeatedly interrupted the plaintiff. Petitioner and the plaintiff then began to argue, and petitioner pressed the plaintiff for a settlement figure. Because of the inflammatory nature of the plaintiff's allegations, a key issue in the settlement was a confidentiality clause that the plaintiff opposed. The plaintiff was concerned that the confidentiality clause would prevent her from warning others about the physician's actions. Nevertheless, petitioner insisted that the case was about money and demanded a settlement figure. When the plaintiff finally provided a figure, petitioner angrily threw up his arms and yelled, "Get out, it will not settle." The plaintiff cried at the time, and cried again when asked to recount the incident as part of this proceeding.

In a second case, the plaintiff had sued a railroad, alleging that he had lost part of his foot when climbing across a stopped train that began to move. During proceedings immediately prior to trial, petitioner would not allow the plaintiff's counsel to explain his theory of liability, interrupting counsel in a hostile and angry manner, using a loud tone of voice, and disparaging counsel's arguments.

In a third case, after the parties reached a structured settlement, petitioner became angry when, for tax reasons, counsel declined to reveal the total value of the settlement. Petitioner required counsel for both sides to remain in the courtroom until late in the evening.

Finally, in a fourth case, petitioner reduced a chiropractor's lien and shortly thereafter made a joke that suggested that chiropractors provide excessive treatment. The joke was made outside the courtroom, but in front of the minor plaintiff's mother.

C. Offensive Remark

The Commission found that in approximately 1987 petitioner made an offensive remark in chambers about two lawyers who had appeared before him. For reasons discussed below, we do not reach this issue.

IV. CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

(3) Under former subdivision (c) of article VI, section 18 of the California Constitution, we may censure a judge for "wilful misconduct in office . . . , or conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute." We have defined the phrase "wilful misconduct" as comprising three elements: 1) "unjudicial conduct," 2) "committed in bad faith," 3) "by a judge acting in his judicial capacity." (Spruance, supra, 13 Cal.3d at p. 795; Doan, supra, 11 Cal.4th at p. 311; Geiler, supra, 10 Cal.3d at p. 284.) Our decisions give further definition to each of these elements. First, in order to determine whether a judge's conduct is "unjudicial," we measure that conduct with reference to the California Code of Judicial Conduct. (Doan, supra, 11 Cal.4th at p. 312; Adams, supra, 10 Cal.4th at p. 878; Spruance, supra, 13 Cal.3d at p. 796; Geiler, supra, 10 Cal.3d at pp. 281-282.) Second, by "bad faith" we mean that the judge "intentionally committed acts which he knew or should have known were beyond his lawful power" (Geiler, supra, 10 Cal.3d at p. 286) or "acts within the lawful power of a judge which nevertheless [were] committed . . . for any purpose other than the faithful discharge of judicial duties" (Spruance, supra, 13 Cal.3d at p. 796; Doan, supra, 11 Cal.4th at p. 311). Third, a judge is "acting in his judicial capacity," when he is performing one of his "judicial functions," i.e., one of the varied functions generally associated with his position as a judge, whether adjudicative or administrative in nature. (Adams, supra, 10 Cal.4th at p. 910.) In determining whether a judge acted in his judicial capacity, we give due weight to the location of the judge's conduct. (Kennick, supra, 50 Cal.3d at p. 319.) Thus, when a judge is on the bench, he is presumptively acting in a judicial capacity. (See, e.g., Gonzalez, supra, 33 Cal.3d at p. 376.) Similarly, when a judge is in chambers during normal working hours, he is generally, though not necessarily, acting in a judicial capacity (See, e.g., Geiler, supra, 10 Cal.3d at pp. 277 and 284 [finding wilful misconduct based on conduct occurring in chambers].) In addition, if a judge uses, or attempts to use, his authority as a judge for improper ends, regardless of location, we consider the judge to be acting in his judicial capacity. (Kennick, supra, 50 Cal.3d at p. 319.)

(4) Unjudicial conduct that does not rise to the level of wilful misconduct, either because of a lack of bad faith or because the judge was not acting in a judicial capacity, may nevertheless constitute prejudicial conduct. (Spruance, supra, 13 Cal.3d at p. 796; Geiler, supra, 10 Cal.3d at p. 284.) Prejudicial conduct refers to conduct that "would appear to an objective observer to be not only unjudicial . . . but . . . prejudicial to public esteem for the judicial office." (Geiler, supra, 10 Cal.3d at p. 284.) The conduct, however, need not be notorious. It is enough that the conduct be known to those members of the public who observed it. (Kennick, supra, 50 Cal.3d at p. 314; Wenger, supra, 29 Cal.3d at p. 622, fn. 4.)

With these principles in mind, we consider the three categories of misconduct that formed the bases for the Commission's recommendation.

A. Interference in a Law Enforcement Investigation

(5a) The Commission found that, in light of petitioner's inaction after observing his colleague deflate a tire on a van, his subsequent interference in the investigation of the incident constituted wilful misconduct. We disagree.

We agree with the Commission that petitioner's interference in the investigation was unjudicial. Canon 2A of the California Code of Judicial Conduct, adopted October 5, 1992 (Deering's Cal. Ann. Codes, Rules (appen.) (1995 Pocket supp.) p. 388), provides that "[a] judge . . . should act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary." Canon 3D provides that "[a] judge should take or initiate appropriate disciplinary measures against a judge or lawyer for unprofessional conduct of which the judge may become aware." Petitioner's conduct was manifestly inconsistent with both these standards.[2] Petitioner observed his colleague engage in patently improper conduct. During the next

[2]The formal charge against petitioner notes that petitioner's "actions were contrary to Canon 2A of the California Code of Judicial Conduct." Petitioner argues that we should not take canon 3D into consideration because it was not noted in the charge. Judicial discipline proceedings, however, consider whether a judge has engaged in unjudicial conduct, not whether the judge has violated any particular canon of the California Code of Judicial Conduct. We consider the standards of conduct enunciated in the California Code of Judicial Conduct only for guidance (see, e.g., Doan, supra, 11 Cal.4th at p. 312), and the reference to canon 2A in the charge in no way bars us from measuring petitioner's conduct against other standards. Indeed, a charge of judicial misconduct need not cite the Code of Judicial Conduct at all. We conclude that canon 3D is relevant to our inquiry.

In considering canon 3D, however, we do not conclude that it is in all cases unjudicial for a judge to remain silent about unprofessional conduct of which he is aware. Rather, it is necessary to look to the totality of the circumstances. For example, a judge who hears a rumor about a lawyer or a colleague does not have to become an investigator, rooting out details and reporting those details to the State Bar or the Commission. On the other hand, if a judge is a direct witness to manifestly unprofessional conduct that is either serious or repeated, the four weeks, petitioner did nothing to bring the truth about the incident to the attention of appropriate authorities. Even after it appeared that his colleague had lied about the incident, petitioner did not come forward, saying only that he would reveal the truth if anybody asked him. Shortly thereafter, somebody did ask him—a detective from the Santa Barbara County Sheriff's Department—and petitioner refused to give a statement, also suggesting to his staff that they refuse to give statements at least until the responsible judge had had a chance to admit his conduct. When the district attorney accused petitioner of obstructing justice, petitioner agreed to give a statement, but only after hearing the statement of his accused colleague.

It is true that petitioner ultimately acted so as to encourage his colleague to admit to deflating the van's tire. Indeed, petitioner's actions may have produced a complete statement from his colleague sooner than if petitioner had not intervened. Nevertheless, it was for the detective, not petitioner, to decide how best to pursue the investigation. An investigator may prefer to interview witnesses to an incident prior to interviewing a suspect. Such interviews often enable the investigator to ask more pointed questions when later interviewing the suspect. In addition, an investigator may prefer to interview witnesses separately so that he can detect inconsistencies in their statements. Petitioner's conduct prevented the detective from pursuing either of these strategies. Interfering in this way with the detective's investigation violated the California Code of Judicial Conduct and constituted unjudicial conduct. (Adams, supra, 10 Cal.4th at p. 878.)

Petitioner's conduct also constituted bad faith. Petitioner intentionally interfered in the investigation, and he should have known that this interference was beyond his lawful power as a judge. (Geiler, supra, 10 Cal.3d at p. 286.) Moreover, petitioner's conduct was for a purpose other than the faithful discharge of his duties. (Spruance, supra, 13 Cal.3d at p. 796.) There is no credibility to petitioner's assertion that he was trying to protect the reputation of the judiciary by ensuring that his colleague would admit his error voluntarily. There was much that petitioner could have done, short of interfering in a criminal investigation, that would have encouraged his colleague to come forward. For four weeks, petitioner did nothing. The evidence establishes that petitioner was more concerned about protecting the reputation of his colleague than that of the judiciary.

judge should, unless circumstances dictate otherwise, report that conduct to appropriate authorities who can investigate further and take any necessary disciplinary action. In addition, even in situations where a judge has no affirmative duty to come forward and report the misconduct of a lawyer or a colleague, a judge should cooperate fully with an official investigation.

(6) Citing Spruance, supra, 13 Cal.3d at page 796, petitioner argues that "actual malice" is a necessary element of bad faith, and that there is no evidence that petitioner acted maliciously. But in this context actual malice does not connote hate or ill will, but merely specific intent. (Adams, supra, 10 Cal.4th at p. 877; Spruance, supra, 13 Cal.3d at p. 796.) We conclude that petitioner's conduct satisfies the requirement of bad faith.

(5b) We find, however, that petitioner was not acting in a judicial capacity when he interfered in the investigation. First, petitioner was not performing one of the functions generally associated with his position as a judge. (Cf. Doan, supra, 11 Cal.4th at pp. 337-338; Adams, supra, 10 Cal.4th at p. 910; Gov. Code, § 68725.) Though one of those functions is to supervise staff, petitioner was not acting as a supervisor when he recommended to staff that they decline to give statements. Rather, petitioner was giving advice as a cowitness to an event that was unrelated to the work of the court. If petitioner had witnessed the incident with a friend instead of staff, no one would argue that giving advice to that friend was acting in a judicial capacity. To hold that petitioner acted in a judicial capacity simply because his advice carried with it a degree of authority due to his status as a judge and supervisor would mean that a judge is always acting in a judicial capacity when he talks to staff. We decline to interpret "judicial capacity" so broadly.

Second, though petitioner was at the courthouse when he met with the detective, that location was simply a convenient meeting place that the detective selected. The meeting had nothing to do with petitioner's work as a judge, but rather his status as a witness to an event that the detective was investigating. (Cf. Kennick, supra, 50 Cal.3d at p. 319.) Nor did petitioner's use of the bailiff cause petitioner to be acting in a judicial capacity. The detective approached petitioner while he was on the bench, and the detective chose to use the bailiff to communicate with petitioner. It would have been impolite for petitioner to ignore the detective, and it is hard to imagine how petitioner could have responded in a discreet way without using the bailiff. We are also unpersuaded that petitioner's use of the court's research attorney for advice and to prepare a press release caused petitioner to be acting in a judicial capacity. It is appropriate, indeed desirable, for a judge to consult with legal staff concerning what constitutes proper judicial conduct. In certain circumstances, this consultation may include advice as to the appropriate wording of a press release. If we were to hold that such a consultation caused a judge to be acting in a judicial capacity, thereby converting what might have been prejudicial conduct into wilful misconduct, we would discourage judges from seeking advice, which we decline to do.

Finally, petitioner did not attempt to curry favor with the detective, or anyone else, on account of his judicial status. (Cf. Kennick, supra, 50 Cal.3d at p. 319.)

Because petitioner was not acting in a judicial capacity, his interference in the investigation did not constitute wilful misconduct. Nevertheless, that interference, which was both unjudicial and prejudicial to public esteem for the judicial office, did constitute prejudicial conduct. (Geiler, supra, 10 Cal.3d at p. 284; In re Chargin (1970) 2 Cal.3d 617 [87 Cal.Rptr. 709, 471 P.2d 29] [newspaper coverage evidences prejudice to the public esteem for the judicial office].)

B. Appearance of Rudeness and Prejudgment

(7) The Commission found that petitioner's rudeness and prejudgment in the handling of cases, as exhibited on four occasions, constituted prejudicial conduct. We agree.

Canon 3B, subdivision (4) of the California Code of Judicial Conduct provides that "[a] judge should be patient, dignified, and courteous to all litigants, jurors, witnesses, lawyers, and others whom the judge deals with in an official capacity . . . ." Canon 3B, subdivision (5) provides that "[a] judge should not, in the performance of judicial duties, by words or conduct, manifest bias or prejudice . . . ." When measured against these standards (Adams, supra, 10 Cal.4th at p. 878), petitioner's conduct—which included interrupting and yelling loudly and angrily at counsel and a litigant, as well as telling a joke that suggested bias—was clearly unjudicial. It also brought disrepute upon the judicial office. (Cf. Kloepfer v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1989) 49 Cal.3d 826, 841-844 [264 Cal.Rptr. 100, 782 P.2d 239, 89 A.L.R.4th 235]; Furey v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1987) 43 Cal.3d 1297, 1306-1307 [240 Cal.Rptr. 859, 743 P.2d 919] (Furey); Spruance, supra, 13 Cal.3d at pp. 789, 797; In re Chargin, supra, 2 Cal.3d 617.)

Petitioner argues that his "assertive" judicial "style" is desirable because it enables him to effect settlements in difficult cases. Petitioner's argument betrays an understanding of the judicial role that places too much emphasis on the efficient disposition of cases and too little emphasis on the dignity of litigants. The judicial system is not concerned only with the resolution of disputes. It also permits individuals and entities to participate in the process by which the state determines to exercise its power. Thus, due process affords a litigant a right to be heard, "not only because he might contribute to accurate determinations, but also because a lack of personal participation causes alienation and a loss of that dignity and self-respect that society properly deems independently valuable." (Mashaw, The Supreme Court's Due Process Calculus for Administrative Adjudication in Mathews v. Eldridge: Three Factors in Search of a Theory of Value (1976) 44 U. Chi. L.Rev. 28, 49-50.) Even an otherwise just settlement, if imposed summarily and coercively, is likely to disserve justice by leaving the parties with a lingering resentment of one another and the judicial system. We laud the creative and diverse means by which judges assist parties in reaching voluntary settlements of complex disputes. But when a judge, clothed with the prestige and authority of his judicial office, repeatedly interrupts a litigant and yells angrily and without adequate provocation, the judge exceeds his proper role and casts disrepute on the judicial office.

C. Offensive Remark

The Commission found that petitioner made an offensive remark in 1987 that constituted prejudicial conduct. We do not reach this issue.

(8) Under former subdivision (c) of article VI, section 18 of the California Constitution, "the Supreme Court may . . . censure or remove a judge for action occurring not more than 6 years prior to the commencement of the judge's current term . . . ." Petitioner's current term began on January 1, 1995. Six years prior to the commencement of petitioner's current term was January 1, 1989. Petitioner allegedly made the offensive remark in approximately 1987. Accordingly, we are without power to impose a sanction based on the alleged remark.

Respondent points out that the Commission commenced disciplinary proceedings during petitioner's prior term, at which time we could have imposed discipline based on the alleged 1987 remark. Respondent argues that petitioner, who was put on notice of the charge in a timely fashion, should not be able to avoid discipline simply because he happened to commence a new term while the charges were being adjudicated. Though this argument has some appeal, we find the constitutional language to be unambiguous, and we see no way to read into that language the rule that respondent proposes. The constitutional provision is not a classic statute of limitations—it does not place a limit on when an action or proceeding may be commenced. Rather, it places a limit on the total time that may elapse from occurrence of an incident to imposition of discipline based on that incident. It thus combines the functions of a statute of limitations and a rule limiting the time proceedings may remain pending. Respondent's interpretation would eliminate the latter function, allowing the Commission and this court an unlimited time to resolve disciplinary charges once they were filed. Moreover, the constitutional provision in question differs from a typical statute of limitations in that the limitations period varies depending upon how recently the judge began a new term. Thus, the relative difficulty of determining the truth about events that transpired many years in the past is not the only policy underlying the constitutional limitation. The provision also gives due deference to the will of the electorate in reelecting a judge to a new term. In sum, we are constitutionally precluded from imposing discipline based on the alleged 1987 remark.

V. DISCIPLINE

(9) It remains for us to determine what discipline is appropriate based on our findings of fact and conclusions of law. Petitioner has served as a judge of the Santa Barbara County Superior Court since January 1977 with praise from many members of the bar and with the approval of the electorate. Nevertheless, petitioner has engaged in prejudicial conduct, including interfering in a law enforcement investigation, rudeness and the appearance of bias.

Cases in which we have publicly censured judges involve conduct more serious than that involved here. (Cf. Fitch, supra, 9 Cal.4th at pp. 556-557 [judge told a court reporter, "Your butt looks good in that dress"; judge said to a court reporter, "I certainly hope you're not that frigid at home with your husband"; judge slapped or patted a court reporter and a court trainee on their buttocks]; In re Rasmussen (1987) 43 Cal.3d 536, 538 [236 Cal.Rptr. 152, 734 P.2d 988] [judge initiated probation revocation proceedings for personal reasons]; In re McCullough (1987) 43 Cal.3d 534, 535 [236 Cal.Rptr. 151, 734 P.2d 987] [delay in deciding case; erroneous salary affidavits]; In re Creede (1986) 42 Cal.3d 1098, 1099 [233 Cal.Rptr. 1, 729 P.2d 79] [same and repeated]; Mardikian v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1985) 40 Cal.3d 473, 478 [220 Cal.Rptr. 833, 709 P.2d 852] [same with mitigating circumstances]; Gubler, supra, 37 Cal.3d at p. 45 [judge used threats of criminal sanctions as a means of collecting attorney fees for the county]; In re Youngblood (1983) 33 Cal.3d 788 [191 Cal.Rptr. 171, 662 P.2d 108] [judge abused contempt power including incarcerating persons without cause]; Roberts v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1983) 33 Cal.3d 739, 745-746 [190 Cal.Rptr. 910, 661 P.2d 1064] [judge struck officer in chest and shouted obscenities as officer tried to administer field sobriety test to judge's son; judge also tried to influence officers by identifying himself as a judge]; In re Fisher (1982) 31 Cal.3d 919, 920 [184 Cal.Rptr. 296, 647 P.2d 1075] [ex parte communication]; In re Charles S. Stevens (1982) 31 Cal.3d 403, 404-405 [183 Cal.Rptr. 48, 645 P.2d 99] [judge repeatedly used highly offensive racial and ethnic epithets to describe Blacks and persons with Spanish surnames]; In re Robert S. Stevens (1981) 28 Cal.3d 873 [172 Cal.Rptr. 676, 625 P.2d 219] [judge repeatedly telephoned former associates and discussed his sexual fantasies; recipients of these telephone calls repeatedly objected]; In re Jensen (1978) 24 Cal.3d 72, 73 [154 Cal.Rptr. 503, 593 P.2d 200] [repeated delay in deciding cases; erroneous salary affidavits]; McCartney v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1974) 12 Cal.3d 512, 532 [116 Cal.Rptr. 260, 526 P.2d 268] [judge repeatedly held benchside sentencing conferences with his bailiff, who would recommend the proposed sentence; judge also left the bench during court proceedings]; In re Sanchez (1973) 9 Cal.3d 844, 844-845 [109 Cal.Rptr. 78, 512 P.2d 302] [judge regularly gave bail bondsman prisoner release orders that were blank except for the judge's signature]; In re Glickfeld (1971) 3 Cal.3d 891 [92 Cal.Rptr. 278, 479 P.2d 638] [in chambers, judge called the victim of certain alleged crimes a "horse's ass"[3] and later made intemperate comments in open court]; and In re Chargin, supra, 2 Cal.3d at p. 617 [in the course of a juvenile court hearing, judge made inflammatory remarks reflecting upon the juvenile's family and members of the juvenile's ethnic group].) The record in this case is replete with evidence that petitioner is a talented judge who is often sought for his ability to settle difficult cases. Moreover, petitioner's interference in the investigation of his colleague, though improper, was not motivated by a desire to conceal the truth. "The purpose of these proceedings is not to punish errant judges but to protect the judicial system and those subject to the awesome power that judges wield." (Furey, supra, 43 Cal.3d at p. 1320; Doan, supra, 11 Cal.4th at p. 314.) We conclude that public censure in this case would not further this purpose. Accordingly, we reject the recommendation of the Commission.

BAXTER, J., Concurring and Dissenting.—Like the majority, I agree with the findings of misconduct made by the Commission on Judicial Performance (Commission). I nonetheless believe this misconduct is not serious enough to warrant public censure. I therefore concur in rejecting the Commission's disciplinary recommendation.

Unlike the majority, however, I take the 1987 "offensive remark" incident into account when reaching my conclusion that no discipline by this court is warranted. In my view, the California Constitution, as applicable to this case, allows this court to impose discipline for any misconduct within six years before commencement of the "current term" the judge was serving when the Commission set its formal hearing process in motion. The Commission gave notice of formal proceedings against petitioner on January 27, 1994, and, sometime before August 17, 1994, the Commission requested the appointment of special masters to hear the case.[1] (See Cal. Rules of Court, rule 907.) At the latest of these times, petitioner was still serving a term which had commenced on January 1, 1989. Because the 1987 incident occurred less than six years before that date, the incident was a proper subject for our discipline. It makes no difference that petitioner has since been reelected and has started a new term.

In its pre-Proposition 190 form applicable to this case, the Constitution provided that "[o]n recommendation of the Commission . . . the Supreme Court may . . . censure or remove a judge for action occurring not more than 6 years prior to the commencement of the judge's current term." (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, former subd. (c).)[2] The majority find this language "unambiguous" in providing that the "current term" is the one the judge happens to be serving when "the Supreme Court" finally acts on the Commission's recommendation. The result is that charges of serious misconduct, although properly made and proved before the Commission, and properly a basis for the discipline it proposes, may nonetheless suddenly drop away if the errant judge wins election to a new judicial "term" before we can act on the Commission's recommendation. I cannot agree that those who drafted and adopted the important provisions for judicial discipline "unambiguous-[ly]" intended such an unusual and anomalous result.

At the outset, I dispute the majority's assertion that the plain language of the constitutional provision compels their interpretation. The opposite is true. Article VI, section 18, former subdivision (c) of the California Constitution does not explicitly say whether the "6 years [before] current term" within which this court may remove or censure a judge is determined at the time we take final action or at some earlier stage of the disciplinary process. But when all the constitutional provisions for judicial discipline are read together, the flaw in the majority's construction is exposed.

[1]Hearings before the special masters began on August 17, 1994, and continued through September 2, 1994.

[2]As amended by Proposition 190, operative March 1, 1995, the Constitution transfers from this court to the Commission the powers of removal or censure and creates a new Commission power of "[public] admonish[ment]" short of censure. These Commission actions, like that of private admonishment, are now subject only to our review jurisdiction. As before, however, removal or censure may occur only for "action occurring not more than 6 years prior to the commencement of the judge's current term." (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (d).)

The Constitution gives this court no unilateral power to censure or remove a judge; we may act only upon a "recommendation" of the Commission. (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, former subd. (c).) The Commission's recommendation, in turn, depends entirely on its assessment of all the charges properly before it. This integrated disciplinary process, in which the Commission proposes and we merely dispose, cannot operate as contemplated by the literal constitutional language if charges which were timely when addressed by the Commission are no longer so by the time we act upon the Commission's findings and recommendations.

Indeed, even if there were literal support for the "plain language" construction the majority advance, we would thus be obliged to reject that construction under the well-settled rule that "[t]he literal language of [constitutional] enactments may be disregarded to avoid absurd results and to fulfill the apparent intent of the framers. [Citations.]" (Amador Valley Joint Union High Sch. Dist. v. State Bd. of Equalization (1978) 22 Cal.3d 208, 245 [149 Cal.Rptr. 239, 583 P.2d 1281].)

Moreover, periods of limitation, such as that provided by California Constitution, article VI, section 18, former subdivision (c), are typically measured from the formal commencement of proceedings, not from the later time when a final judgment or determination is rendered. We should not assume the framers and adopters of this constitutional provision "silently, or at best obscurely," decided an "important and controversial" public policy issue by adopting so radical a departure from prevailing legal principles. (In re Christian S. (1994) 7 Cal.4th 768, 782 [30 Cal.Rptr.2d 33, 872 P.2d 574].)

The history of California Constitution, article VI, section 18, indicates that no such departure was intended. This court's power to censure or remove judges for misconduct, after a recommendation by the Commission, was added to the Constitution in 1960. (Cal. Const., art. VI, former §§ 1b, 10b, adopted at Gen. Elec. (Nov. 8, 1960) as Sen. Const. Amend. No. 14, Stats. 1959 (Reg. Sess.), res. ch. 254, pp. 5822-5825.) The original scheme empowered the Commission, "after such investigation as [it] deem[ed] necessary," to "order a hearing" on charges of misconduct, or to request this court to appoint special masters for that purpose. No time limit was placed on the misconduct which could be considered. (Cal. Const., art. VI, former § 10b.)

Subsequently, the Constitutional Revision Commission (CRC) undertook a comprehensive proposed modernization of the Constitution. An article VI committee was appointed to address judicial issues. The article VI committee's third working draft retained much of the form and substance of the 1960 provision for judicial discipline. However, a limitations period was included to the effect that "[t]he Commission on Judicial Qualifications [now the Commission on Judicial Performance] may order a hearing . . . or request the appointment of special masters . . . with respect to . . . cases [of misconduct] which occur in the term of office of the judge current at the time of the hearing or request or which occur in the term . . . of the judge immediately preceding such current term and the Supreme Court may make an order of removal . . . on the basis of any cause occurring during such terms of office." (Cal. Const. Revision Com., art. VI committee, third working draft (July 15, 1965) pp. 41-42, italics added.) The third working draft thus expressly stated that the period of limitations for exercise of this court's disciplinary power was to be measured backward from the time the Commission formally called for a hearing on the charges.

The third working draft was considered by the full CRC at its meeting of July 29, 1965. Judge Charles J. McGoldrick, speaking for the California Judges Association (CJA), commented upon the draft's provisions for judicial discipline. His only observation on the proposed limitations period was that "some [CJA] members feel . . . [the discipline provision] should be amended so that action could not be taken against a judge for his conduct prior to his current term of office or within four years of the date of the conduct charged against him." (Minutes, Cal. Const. Revision Com. meeting of July 29, 1965, p. 20.) The CRC referred the issue back to the article VI committee, which was to report directly to the drafting committee. (Id., at p. 24.)

At its meeting of November 18, 1965, the CRC took up the drafting committee's final proposal, which tracked the current form of article VI, section 18, former subdivision (c), and included the current prohibition against censure or removal for conduct occurring more than six years before the judge's "current term." The final revised version was approved without discussion. (Minutes, Cal. Const. Revision Com. meeting of Nov. 18, 1965, pp. 12-13.)

The CRC's proposed constitutional revision was introduced in the Legislature as Assembly Constitutional Amendment No. 13 (1966 First Ex. Sess.) (A.C.A. No. 13). No changes were made to the limitations provision as A.C.A. No. 13 progressed through the two houses, and that provision (Stats.

1966 (First Ex. Sess.) res. ch. 139, par. Eighty-Second, p. 978) was adopted unaltered by the voters at the General Election of November 8, 1966.[3]

From this chronology of events the following principles emerge: the disciplinary limitations period proposed by the article VI committee clearly was to be measured by the term which the judge was "current[ly]" serving at the time the Commission set the formal hearing process in motion. That concept was never discussed or criticized, and no departure from it was ever suggested. While Judge McGoldrick proposed a shorter limitations period (current term or four years, whichever is less), he never intimated that the period should be measured from any later point in the disciplinary process, such as the imposition of final discipline by this court. Subsequent efforts by the article VI and drafting committees produced a briefer, semantically recast version of the discipline section. Most references to the Commission's detailed procedures were dropped, and the current limitations language was adopted. But there is no indication of an intent to alter the measurement of the limitations period as originally expressed in the third working draft.

It therefore seems quite clear that no such intent arose, and that the final language implicitly incorporates the original proposal in this respect. The modernization of the final language, with the consequent loss of procedural detail, simply eliminated the opportunity to include an express statement to that effect.

To overlook this clear history, and instead to adopt the majority's simplistic and unusual construction, has a distorting effect on the entire disciplinary process. An accused judge facing older but still timely charges has the incentive to delay the imposition of final discipline until after he commences a new term. By the same token, and with equally unjust implications, the Commission's examiner faces pressure to rush the matter to final discipline in order to avoid the intervening loss of valid and relevant charges.

The majority suggest the constitutional provision "combines the functions of a [classic] statute of limitations [measured by the time proceedings commence] and a rule limiting the time proceedings may remain pending."

[3]The ballot pamphlet materials for A.C.A. No. 13, submitted to the voters as Proposition 1-a, made no reference to the limitations period for judicial discipline. The argument in favor of the measure noted that a principal purpose of the constitutional revision effort was to reduce the length of the frequently amended Constitution of 1879, and to "put[] the Constitution into modern, concise, and easily understandable language." The argument also noted that judges would be under "stronger disciplinary procedures." (Ballot Pamp., Proposed Amends. to Cal. Const. with arguments to voters, Gen. Elec. (Nov. 8, 1966) p. 2.)

(Maj. opn., ante, at pp. 177-178.) By allowing commencement of a new term to shorten the total elapsed time between misconduct and final discipline, the majority assert, the constitutional provision "gives due deference to the will of the electorate in reelecting a judge . . . ." (Id. at p. 178.) But this "voters' will" analysis begs the fundamental question. There is no dispute that the Constitution immunizes a judge for certain past misconduct when the voters have more recently elected him to a new term. The issue is whether such immunity merely affects the charges the Commission may hear, or whether it may also prevent final discipline upon charges the Commission did properly hear. Contrary to the majority's conclusion, language, history, logic, and policy all indicate that the former construction is appropriate.[4]

As might therefore be expected, the majority's novel interpretation appears out of step with the rule in other jurisdictions. Of those few states that impose limitations on discipline for misconduct which precedes the judge's "current term," most appear to measure the limitations period backward from receipt of a complaint by the disciplinary agency. (See Rosenbaum, Practices and Procedures of State Judicial Conduct Organizations (1990) ch. 2, p. 17.)

Accordingly, I cannot endorse the majority's restrictive limitations period, under which petitioner may only be disciplined for judicial misconduct which took place within six years before the term he is serving at the moment we file this decision. Because the 1987 incident occurred within six years before the term petitioner was serving when the Commission's formal hearing process began, the Constitution does not prevent us from considering that incident.[5] Having done so, I nonetheless join the majority's

[4]One might argue that a judge is unlikely to "pull the wool over the voters' eyes" and win a new term when formal charges of misconduct are already pending against him. The facts of the instant case belie any such claim. Moreover, although Proposition 190 opens to the public all formal Commission proceedings begun after February 28, 1995 (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (j)), the Commission previously retained broad discretion to conduct a closed and confidential inquiry, even where charges of moral turpitude were involved. (Id., former subds. (f), (g); see also Cal. Rules of Court, rules 902, 907.2; cf. Adams v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1994) 8 Cal.4th 630, 638 [34 Cal.Rptr.2d 641, 882 P.2d 358].) Thus, there has been no guarantee that the voters would become aware of pending charges which might affect their support for the judge.

[5]As previously noted, Proposition 190, operative March 1, 1995, provides that the Commission, subject to our discretionary review, "may . . . censure . . . or remove a judge for action occurring not more than 6 years prior to the commencement of the judge's current term . . . ." (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (d).) I assume the majority would conclude, by reasoning parallel to its analysis here, that this limitations period must be measured from the time the Commission takes its final disciplinary action, so that charges properly heard by the Commission might nonetheless be obliterated if the judge commenced a new term before the determination that the discipline recommended by the Commission is not warranted.[6]

George, J., concurred.

Respondent's petition for a rehearing was denied February 15, 1996.

Commission's proceedings were final there. Thus, I cannot be confident that the mischief wrought by the majority's holding is ameliorated in future cases.

[6]By rejecting the Commission's recommendation of public censure, we leave the case at large for a determination by the Commission whether it should exercise its own power of private admonishment. (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, former subd. (c).) The Commission's constitutional power of private admonishment derives from a discrete, self-contained sentence which, unlike the provisions for censure and removal, specifies no time limitation on the conduct which may be considered. (Ibid.) It appears the Commission may therefore take the 1987 incident into account for admonishment purposes, and I do not read the majority's opinion as holding otherwise.

RICHARD J. OBERHOLZER, a Judge of the Superior Court, Petitioner,
v.
COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE, Respondent.

SUMMARY

The Supreme Court granted a petition for a writ of mandate filed by a superior court judge, and ordered the Commission on Judicial Performance to withdraw a confidential advisory letter it had issued to the judge sanctioning him for having dismissed a criminal prosecution on grounds that were allegedly contrary to controlling precedent. The court held that there was no evidence that the dismissal was motivated by bad faith, bias, abuse of authority, disregard of fundamental rights, intentional or reckless disregard of the law, or any purpose other than the faithful discharge of judicial duty. Specifically, after petitioner properly denied the prosecution's inadequate motion to continue, one that could have led to the imposition of sanctions under Pen. Code, § 1050.5, the prosecutor stated that the People unequivocally refused to proceed. Not unreasonably, the judge viewed this action as an intolerable affront to the trial court's authority that could have supported imposition of sanctions for contempt. Thus, the order dismissing the case, even if legally incorrect, failed to raise concerns regarding a reckless disregard of the law, bias, or a lack of impartiality, as the commission suggested in its advisory letter. The court also held that the commission was authorized to issue advisory letters, and that its procedure did not deny the judge due process of law. (Opinion by The Court. Concurring opinion by Werdegar, J. (see p. 400).)

HEADNOTES

Classified to California Digest of Official Reports

(1) Judges § 6.4—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Advisory Letter—Review.—The correct means to obtain judicial review of an advisory letter is by a petition for a writ of mandate. Because such review is neither a review of a determination by the Commission on Judicial Performance to retire, remove, censure, admonish, or disqualify a judge (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (d)) nor a legal proceeding requesting injunctive relief or another provisional remedy (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (g)), the Supreme Court is not required to issue its decision within any specific time period.

(2) Judges § 6—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Advisory Letter—Authority.—Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, provides the mechanism for the disciplining of judges and establishes the Commission on Judicial Performance as the entity responsible for disciplining judges, subject to review by the Supreme Court. Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (d), specifies that the disciplinary options available to the Commission include censure, removal, involuntary retirement, and public or private admonishment. The commission also has authority to issue a confidential advisory letter to a judge (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18.5). The issuance of such a letter amounts to discipline that implicates a judge's right to due process of law. Advisory letters fairly may be characterized as disciplinary in nature, because they may be considered by the commission in subsequent proceedings and because the confidentiality of the letters is not assured.

(3a, 3b) Judges § 6.4—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Proceedings—Advisory Letter—Due Process.—The procedure the Commission on Judicial Performance utilized in issuing an advisory letter ("stinger") to a judge did not violate his right to due process of law. Under Cal. Rules of Court, rule 110, before an advisory letter may be issued, the judge must be given notice of the inquiry and the nature of the charge and a reasonable opportunity to respond. The commission sent the judge an inquiry letter that provided him with notice of the inquiry and the nature of the charge (misconduct in dismissing a criminal case), and gave him an opportunity to respond. The judge did respond in defense of his action. After the commission later informed the judge that it had ordered a preliminary investigation, the judge filed a supplemental response, again defending his conduct. The nature of the commission's investigation was, at its core, a factfinding mission focused upon the judge's handling of the case. The commission's inquiry lent itself well to proof through documentary forms of evidence, including hearing transcripts and the parties' briefs. Balancing the judge's private interest in maintaining a judicial career free of the infliction of disciplinary measures and the commission's interest in the effective and efficient safeguarding of the public from aberrant action by judicial officers, due process of law did not require additional protections.

(4) Constitutional Law § 107—Due Process—Procedural—State—General Principles.—Under the California Constitution, the extent to which procedural due process is available depends on a weighing of private and governmental interests involved. The required procedural safeguards are those that will, without unduly burdening the government, maximize the accuracy of the resulting decision and respect the dignity of the individual subjected to the decisionmaking process. There are four factors to consider in determining whether the dictates of due process have been met: the private interest that will be affected by the individual action; the risk of an erroneous deprivation of this interest through the procedures used and the probable value, if any, of additional or substitute safeguards; the dignitary interest of informing individuals of the nature, grounds, and consequences of the action and of enabling them to present their side of the story before a responsible governmental official; and the governmental interest, including the function involved and the fiscal and administrative burdens that the additional or substitute procedural requirements would entail.

(5) Constitutional Law § 107—Due Process—Procedural—Federal—General Principles.—Under federal due process analysis, the aggrieved party must establish a protected property interest. Although U.S. Const., 14th Amend., protects the pursuit of one's profession from abridgment by arbitrary state action, due process of law is not a fixed theory, requiring standardized procedures or a trial-like hearing in each instance. To the contrary, due process is an elusive concept: Its exact boundaries are undefinable, and its content varies according to specific factual contexts. Thus, when governmental agencies make binding determinations that directly affect individuals' legal rights, they must use the procedures that have traditionally been associated with the judicial process. On the other hand, when governmental action does not amount to an adjudication, such as a general fact-finding investigation, it is not necessary that the full panoply of judicial procedures be used. Therefore, as a generalization, due process embodies the differing rules of fair play, which, through the years, have become associated with differing types of proceedings. Whether the Constitution requires that a particular right obtain in a specific proceeding depends upon a complexity of factors, including the nature of the alleged right involved, the nature of the proceeding, and the possible burden on that proceeding.

(6) Judges § 6.2—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Grounds—Legal Error.—A judge who commits legal error that clearly and convincingly reflects bad faith, abuse of authority, disregard of fundamental rights, or any purpose other than the faithful discharge of judicial duty, is subject to investigation. Mere legal error, without more, however, is insufficient to support a finding that a judge has violated the Code of Judicial Ethics and thus should be disciplined.

[See 2 Witkin, Cal. Procedure (4th ed. 1996) Courts, § 70.]

(7) Judges § 6.2—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Grounds—Legal Error—Advisory Letter—Dismissal of Criminal Prosecution.—The Supreme Court ordered the Commission on Judicial Performance to withdraw a confidential advisory letter it had issued to a judge sanctioning him for having dismissed a criminal prosecution on grounds that were allegedly contrary to controlling precedent, since the evidence did not support the commission's determination. After petitioner properly denied the prosecutor's inadequate motion to continue, one that could have led to the imposition of sanctions under Pen. Code, § 1050.5, the prosecutor stated that the People unequivocally refused to proceed. Not unreasonably, the judge viewed this action as an intolerable affront to the trial court's authority, one that could have supported imposition of sanctions for contempt. Given the prosecution's recalcitrance to proceed, the order dismissing the case, even if legally incorrect, failed to raise concerns regarding a reckless disregard of the law, bias, or a lack of impartiality, as the commission suggested in its advisory letter. There was no evidence that the dismissal was motivated by bad faith, bias, abuse of authority, disregard of fundamental rights, intentional or reckless disregard of the law, or any purpose other than the faithful discharge of judicial duty.

COUNSEL

Lewis, D'Amato, Brisbois & Bisgaard, James E. Friedhofer and Lisa K. Roberts for Petitioner.

Jack Coyle for Respondent.

THE COURT.—This original writ proceeding presents the following issues: (1) whether the Commission on Judicial Performance (Commission) has authority to issue a confidential advisory letter (commonly known as a "stinger" letter); (2) whether the issuance of such a letter amounts to "discipline" that implicates a judge's right to due process of law; (3) whether such a letter may be issued based upon a perceived legal error committed by a judge; and (4) whether petitioner here, Judge Richard J. Oberholzer, committed sanctionable legal error in dismissing a criminal case after the People indicated they were not ready to proceed.

As we shall explain, we conclude that the Commission has authority to issue advisory letters, that such letters are a form of discipline, that the Commission's procedures comport with the requirements of due process of law, and that such letters may be based upon a perceived legal error, if such error clearly and convincingly reflects bad faith, bias, abuse of authority, disregard for fundamental rights, intentional disregard of the law, or any purpose other than the faithful discharge of judicial duty. In the instant case, petitioner's dismissal of a criminal action, following the People's declaration of unreadiness, did not constitute such sanctionable conduct.

Accordingly, we find that the Commission improperly issued its advisory letter to petitioner.

FACTS

A. The Commission's Staff Inquiry Letter

By letter dated December 6, 1996, the Commission invited petitioner to "comment regarding a report that is before the commission." In pertinent part, the inquiry letter contained the following summation:

"It is reported that in the criminal case People v. James, Kern County Superior Court case no. 65661, defendant Keith James was charged with one felony count of committing a lewd and lascivious act upon his nine-year-old niece Alicia A. Reportedly, the preliminary hearing was held on January 12, 1996, and on January 17, 1996, an information was filed charging James with the felony. James reportedly successfully moved for one continuance, and the case was set for jury trial to begin on April 8, 1996.

"It is reported that on Monday, April 8, 1996, the trial was trailed to the following day because no courtroom was available for assignment. On April 9, 1996, Deputy District Attorney John Somers, who was the trial attorney assigned to the case, reportedly advised you that another of his cases, People v. Hammock, had been assigned to Department 2 for trial and was expected to run until the middle of the following week. You then set a trial date of Thursday, April 11, 1996.

"On April 11, 1996, you were reportedly advised by Deputy District Attorney Elizabeth Anderson that the case had been reassigned from DDA Somers to a different trial attorney the day before; you sent the case to Department 8 (Judge Kenneth C. Twisselman, II) for trial. Reportedly, defendant James and his attorney and Chief Deputy District Attorney Dan Sparks reported to Department 8, where DDA Sparks told Judge Twisselman that the prosecution was not ready to proceed because the case had been assigned to the trial attorney only the day before. Judge Twisselman reportedly told the parties to return to Department 1 to explain to you the prosecution's request for a continuance.

"Reportedly, the parties returned to Department 1. You reportedly sent them back to Department 8, without discussion. You then reportedly had a telephone conversation with Judge Twisselman during which you reportedly suggested that the prosecution's motion to continue should be denied. When the parties appeared in Department 8 for a second time, Judge Twisselman reportedly told them to return to Department 1.

"When the parties returned to Department 1, the prosecution advised the court that they were not ready to proceed because of the recent reassignment of the case. The prosecution requested a continuance of the trial until the following Monday (April 15) to allow the recently assigned trial attorney time to prepare. Reportedly, the 10-day period following the scheduled trial date, after which the case would be required to be dismissed pursuant to Penal Code section 1382, did not expire until April 18. It is reported that you denied the motion to continue on the grounds that no written motion to continue had been filed and the court had a heavy calendar of cases to be tried. DDA Sparks reportedly refused to return to Department 8 for trial and cited the case of People v. Ferguson [(1990) 218 Cal.App.3d 1173 [267 Cal.Rptr. 528]]. Reportedly, the defense then moved to dismiss, and you granted the motion on the grounds that the prosecution was not prepared to proceed to trial and had failed to file a written motion to continue the case. The hearing on the matter reportedly concluded as follows:

" 'Mr. Sparks: Does the Court remember its reversal in People v. Ferguson? This is the same mistake you made in that case.'

" 'The Court: That's the ruling of the Court.'

"In People v. Ferguson (1990) 218 Cal.App.3d 1173 [267 Cal.Rptr. 528], the Court of Appeal reversed an order entered by you dismissing a criminal case that had been trailed from the original trial date when the DDA assigned to the case was unable to proceed on the date set for trial. . . ."

B. Petitioner's Response

By letter dated January 27, 1997, petitioner responded to the Commission's letter, in pertinent part contending that he had ruled correctly in dismissing People v. James. The response asserted that the deputy district attorney assigned to the case, John Somers, had known in advance that he would be unable to try the case on the assigned date, yet failed to move for a continuance in writing or orally on April 8, 1996.

The response also reviewed certain provisions contained within Penal Code section 1050, governing motions for continuance of a criminal trial. As set forth more fully in the margin, the statute requires that a noticed motion be filed at least two court days prior to the hearing sought to be continued, and within two court days of learning of a conflict in the scheduling of any court hearing. (Pen. Code, § 1050, subd. (b).)[1] A party's failure to comply with these statutory requirements is excusable upon a showing of good cause. (§ 1050, subd. (c).) If the party seeking the continuance is unable to [1] Penal Code section 1050 provides in pertinent part:

"(a) The welfare of the people of the State of California requires that all proceedings in criminal cases shall be set for trial and heard and determined at the earliest possible time. . . .

"(b) To continue any hearing in a criminal proceeding, including the trial, (1) a written notice shall be filed and served on all parties to the proceeding at least two court days before the hearing sought to be continued, together with affidavits or declarations detailing specific facts showing that a continuance is necessary; and (2) within two court days of learning that he or she has a conflict in the scheduling of any court hearing, including a trial, an attorney shall notify the calendar clerk of each court involved, in writing, indicating which hearing was set first. A party shall not be deemed to have been served within the meaning of this section until that party actually has received a copy of the documents to be served, unless the party, after receiving actual notice of the request for continuance, waives the right to have the documents served in a timely manner. Regardless of the proponent of the motion, the prosecuting attorney shall notify the people's witnesses and the defense attorney shall notify the defense's witnesses of the notice of motion, the date of the hearing, and the witnesses' right to be heard by the court. The superior and municipal courts of a county may adopt rules, which shall be consistent, regarding the method of giving the notice or waiver of service required by this subdivision, where a continuance is sought because of a conflict between scheduled appearances in the courts of that county.

"(c) Notwithstanding subdivision (b), a party may make a motion for a continuance without complying with the requirements of that subdivision. However, unless the moving party shows good cause for the failure to comply with those requirements, the court may impose sanctions as provided in Section 1050.5.

"(d) When a party makes a motion for a continuance without complying with the requirements of subdivision (b), the court shall hold a hearing on whether there is good cause for the failure to comply with those requirements. At the conclusion of the hearing the court shall make a finding whether good cause has been shown and, if it finds that there is good cause, shall state on the record the facts proved that justify its finding. A statement of the finding and a statement of facts proved shall be entered in the minutes. If the moving party is unable to demonstrate good cause for failing to comply with the notice requirements, the motion for continuance shall not be granted, and the court may impose sanctions as provided in section 1050.5. (§ 1050, subds. (c), (d).)[2]

In his response letter, petitioner asserted that when the foregoing procedural requirements are not met by a prosecuting attorney seeking a continuance, witnesses' lives and schedules are disrupted, appropriate legal redress for victims may be impacted if witnesses are unavailable, defendants are left unable to prepare an opposition to the motion for continuance, and court clerks are denied the opportunity either to work out conflicts and priorities on their own or to expose a lack of true conflict. Relying upon sections 1050, subdivision (c), and 1050.5, petitioner argued that if the moving party fails to show good cause, the motion for continuance must be denied, and the movant's counsel may be subject to a monetary sanction and to the filing of a report with an appropriate disciplinary committee.

Petitioner's response emphasized the People's failure to properly request a continuance. Petitioner contended that Deputy District Attorney Somers appeared before him in department 1, on April 8, 1996, and the jury trial was trailed to the following day. On April 9, the case was put over to April 11, because Somers was in trial on another case. Petitioner informed him that a new prosecutor would have to be assigned in People v. James. On April 11, Deputy District Attorney Elizabeth Anderson appeared before petitioner and stated that, on the previous day, Deputy District Attorney Carla Grabert had been reassigned to replace Somers as trial counsel in James. Petitioner sent the matter to trial before Judge Twisselman, who presided in department 8.

Petitioner believes that when the parties arrived in department 8, Chief Deputy District Attorney Dan Sparks appeared on behalf of the People, requesting a continuance. Judge Twisselman sent the parties back to department 1, where motions for continuance were considered. Petitioner sent the parties back to department 8, because a motion for a continuance had not show good cause for the failure to give notice, the motion for continuance shall not be granted."

All further undesignated statutory references are to the Penal Code.

[2]Section 1050.5 provides:

"(a) When, pursuant to subdivision (c) of Section 1050, the court imposes sanctions for failure to comply with the provisions of subdivision (b) of Section 1050, the court may impose one or both of the following sanctions when the moving party is the prosecuting or defense attorney:

"(1) A fine not exceeding one thousand dollars ($1,000) upon counsel for the moving party.

"(2) The filing of a report with an appropriate disciplinary committee.

"(b) The authority to impose sanctions provided for by this section shall be in addition to any other authority or power available to the court."

been filed. He recalls that, "It is possible that on this trip Sparks indicated his desire to make a record." Petitioner believes that he informed the prosecutor that the proper place in which to make that record was before Judge Twisselman in department 8.

After the parties returned to department 8, Judge Twisselman called petitioner to discuss the case. They agreed that the matter should be heard in department 1. Deputy District Attorney Sparks thereafter informed petitioner that the People were not ready to proceed to trial, but that Deputy District Attorney Grabert would be ready to proceed on April 15. (The last day on which the trial could commence under the relevant statute was April 18, but section 1050, subdivision (g), permitted that deadline to be extended 10 days, until April 28.) Deputy District Attorney Sparks orally moved for a continuance, which was denied, as set forth in the following colloquy:

"DDA Sparks: 'The People are not ready. The assigned attorney is Mr. Somers. He is engaged in another case in Department 2. I don't know what facts were presented to the Court this morning, but I'm here requesting a continuance of the case until Monday, because we are going to reassign the trial to Carla Grabert in an effort to accommodate this Court's congested trial calendar. However, she has not even read the file because of other case commitments. She will be ready Monday morning [April 15]. If the court would like to send this [case] to Department 8 to commence Monday, that's perfectly acceptable to me and to the victims in the case, but the People are not ready. The last day for trial is [April] 18th, and in fact under [section] 1050 [subdivision] (g), it's the 28th of April.'

"The Court: 'Well, I have April 18th as the last day this can go to trial, number one; number two, this case has been on the trial calendar since Monday of this week [April 8]. Mr. Somers was sent out on his case last week. He was sent out on a case that was going to go two weeks. It was known to the District Attorney's Office at that time that he would be unavailable to try this case within the statutory time limit. I had been telling him that it was April 18th, I believe I began telling you that on Monday, and there has been no attempt apparently to reassign the case.

" 'We have courts available, and I have an extremely heavy calendar of cases that have to get out and cases that have to get out next week. This is one of the cases that we show that ha[s] to get out next week. Consequently—there was no motion filed with this Court to continue this case, I've been trailing it on a day-to-day basis, and the Court requires two days notice, pursuant to statute, for a motion to continue. None was ever filed with the Court, knowing that Mr. Somers was going to be in trial and would not be available to try this case.

" 'With that in mind, your motion to continue is denied and this [case] is sent to Department 8. You will have to start your trial.'

"DDA Sparks: 'We will not do that, Your Honor. We refuse to proceed. You can deal with it here, because [Judge Twisselman is] going to send it back up here. I suggest the Court read People v. Ferguson.

" 'Here is the position of the People. We are the executive authority under the Constitution. We pick the prosecutor. The last day for trial under [section] 1050[, subdivision] (g) in this case is the 28th of April. It is pointless to accommodate this Court by reassigning cases in an effort to assist with this congested calendar, because I am going to leave this case with Mr. Somers, I am not going to reassign it to Carla Grabert.'

"The Court: 'The District Attorney's Office is welcome to do what they want, but if there is a motion by defense counsel to dismiss because you are not ready to go, the Court's going to listen to that.'

"DDA Sparks: 'Under what grounds? [Section] 1385 requires that you state the grounds.'

"The Court: 'I will state that if it happens. There was no motion to continue this case before the Court, and you knew that Mr. Somers was not going to be available within the statutory time period.'

"DDA Sparks: 'It's not ready.'

"The Court: 'The Court is ready to send this case out. You've been notified. They answered up at readiness time. It was confirmed for trial at readiness. There was no motion to continue since that time, and that was ten, eleven, twelve, thirteen or fourteen days ago. [¶] Mr. McKnight?'

"[Defense Counsel] Mr. McKnight: 'Yes, Your Honor. At this time, based on the Court's findings at this time, I make a motion to dismiss.'

"The Court: 'All right. The Court, understanding that the People are not prepared to go to trial and they are not desirous of pursuing this case—'

"DDA Sparks: 'That is a misstatement of the facts.'

"The Court: '—at this time—'

"DDA Sparks: 'We are unable to proceed because we're not prepared. The record is quite clear on that.'

"The Court: '—and the Court notes that there is no motion to continue this case—'

"DDA Sparks: 'I just made one orally.'

"The Court: '—none has been filed with the Court, and that the District Attorney's Office knew well in advance of this case that we have a number of cases to get out, I am going to grant the defendant's motion.'

"DDA Sparks: 'You haven't satisfied the requirements of [section] 1385, Your Honor. Would you please do that?'

"The Court: 'What else do you want?'

"DDA Sparks: 'You must specify on the record the good cause, because you do not have grounds under [sections] 1381 or 1382.'

"The Court: 'The good cause is that this case is ready, was ready to go to trial—the defendant is ready, I presume—'

"Mr. McKnight: 'Ready, Your Honor.'

"The Court: 'Is ready to go to trial, there are courtrooms available, and the case was set for trial as of Monday and there has been no motion to continue.'

"DDA Sparks: 'I just made it orally.'

"The Court: 'Until you stepped into court, but failing to comply with the provisions for a motion to continue.'

"DDA Sparks: '[Section] 1050 provides for oral motions to continue. The penalty is sanctions for not filing it.'

"The Court: 'The Court does not find good cause for you waiting until the date this case is sent out to trial to make a motion when you knew well in advance if you had problems with the case and the assignment of the case.'

"DDA Sparks: 'Does the Court remember its reversal in People v. Ferguson? This is the same mistake you made in that case.'

"The Court: 'That's the ruling of the Court.' "

In his response to the Commission, dated January 12, 1997, petitioner explained that he "anticipated that the assigned DDA could seek 'logistical remedies' in the form of using the balance of the day (beginning in the afternoon) to pick a jury and/or conduct other preliminary matters which would not have required the actual opening statement and presentation of witnesses until perhaps the following Monday. Indeed, there were in limine motions to deal with as well as a scheduled conditional examination of a witness on the following day, Friday, April 12th."

Petitioner further explained that, in his view, People v. Ferguson (1990) 218 Cal.App.3d 1173 [267 Cal.Rptr. 528] was distinguishable. Petitioner also challenged the Commission's jurisdiction to investigate the matters set forth in the Commission's inquiry letter.[3]

C. The Commission's Notice

By letter dated April 17, 1997, the Commission informed petitioner that it had ordered a preliminary investigation pursuant to Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance, rules 109 and 111.[4] The Commission's notice explained that "[t]he nature of the possible charges" was set forth in the Commission's letter dated December 6, 1996, and that "[i]f true as described, your actions may constitute misconduct within the meaning of California Constitution, Article VI, section 18(d)." The Commission afforded petitioner "an opportunity to present in writing such matters as you may chose [sic]."

[3]The People appealed from petitioner's order dismissing the case, and also sought writ relief. The Court of Appeal summarily denied the writ, and the People abandoned the appeal, instead refiling the case in the trial court. The defendant subsequently was acquitted by a jury.

[4]Rule 109 of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance provides that if a complaint against a judge is not obviously unfounded or frivolous, the Commission may make a staff inquiry to determine whether sufficient facts exist to warrant a preliminary investigation and, if so, make a preliminary investigation to determine whether formal proceedings should be instituted and a hearing held. Unless otherwise noted, subsequent references to rules are to the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance.

Rule 111(a) provides that "[i]f the Commission commences a preliminary investigation, the judge shall be notified of the investigation and the nature of the charge, and shall be afforded a reasonable opportunity in the course of the preliminary investigation to present such matters as the judge may choose."

Rule 111(c) provides that "[a]t any time after notice of a preliminary investigation and a reasonable opportunity to respond has been given to the judge, the commission may determine that the judge's conduct does not constitute a basis for further proceedings and may terminate the investigation by issuing a confidential advisory letter to the judge."

D. Petitioner's Supplemental Response

By letter dated May 8, 1997, petitioner reiterated his belief that he had not violated any statute, court rule, or canon of judicial ethics in connection with his dismissal of People v. James. He asserted that he "made a proper legal ruling, the losing party made 'objections' to that ruling . . . , and the Court of Appeal considered and rejected those objections. The lack of success of the writ petition in People v. James demonstrates that the case cited as controlling by the Deputy District Attorney (People v. Ferguson) was not in fact on point." Petitioner's supplemental response opined that further inquiry by the Commission was unwarranted and that no basis existed to impose discipline.

E. The Commission's Advisory Letter

On July 14, 1997, the Commission sent the following confidential advisory (or "stinger") letter to petitioner:

"The matter about which you and commission staff have corresponded was considered by the Commission on Judicial Performance at its July meeting. After reviewing all the information before it, including the letters of January 27 and May 8, 1997, submitted on your behalf by counsel, the commission concluded that further proceedings are not warranted and determined to close the matter with this severe advisory letter.

"In making this determination, the commission strongly disapproved of your handling of the felony child molestation case of People v. James. Your dismissal of the case on April 11, 1996, occurred under circumstances equivalent to those in the earlier case of People v. Ferguson, in which the Court of Appeal reversed your dismissal of the case in a published opinion in 1990. When a judge's order is reversed in a published decision, and the judge repeats the action, such conduct necessarily raises concerns about a reckless disregard of the law, diminishing public confidence in the judiciary in contravention of Canon 2A. When the conduct is repeated against the same party, concerns of bias or a lack of impartiality may also be raised. See Canon 3B(5). As respects your conduct in dismissing the People v. James case, the commission was also particularly disturbed that the People v. Ferguson decision was brought to your attention by counsel before you dismissed the case.

"Article VI, section 18.5 of the California Constitution and Commission Rule 102 set forth the provisions concerning confidentiality of advisory letters.

"Thank you for your cooperation. The matter is now closed."

DISCUSSION

(1) (See fn. 5.) Petitioner filed this original writ proceeding on October 3, 1997.[5] He contends: (1) the Commission lacked authority to issue an advisory letter; (2) even if the Commission was empowered to issue such a letter, the Commission's procedure in doing so violated his right to due process of law; (3) the Commission may not issue a stinger letter based upon a perceived legal error committed by a judge; and (4) in the present case, no sanctionable legal error was committed.

Having issued an alternative writ of mandate, we now address these issues in turn.[6]

A. Whether the Commission Has Authority to Issue an Advisory Letter

(2) The California Constitution provides the mechanism for the disciplining of judges (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18; Furey v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1987) 43 Cal.3d 1297, 1320 [240 Cal.Rptr. 859, 743 P.2d 919]) and establishes the Commission on Judicial Performance as the entity responsible for disciplining judges, subject to review by this court. (Cal. Const., art. VI, §§ 8, 18.) Article VI, section 18, subdivision (d), of the California Constitution, specifies that the disciplinary options available to the Commission include censure, removal, involuntary retirement, and public or private admonishment.[7]

[5]The correct means by which to obtain judicial review of an advisory letter is by a petition for writ of mandate. Because the instant proceeding is neither a "review of a determination by the commission to retire, remove, censure, admonish, or disqualify" a judge (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (d)), nor a legal proceeding requesting "injunctive relief or other provisional remedy" (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (g)), this court is not required to issue its decision within any specific time period.

[6]Our alternative writ of mandate set forth in pertinent part: "The petition for writ of mandate on file herein having been considered and good cause appearing for the issuance of this alternative writ of mandate, respondent hereby is commanded to withdraw its advisory letter issued to petitioner, dated July 14, 1997, or, in the alternative, to show cause before this court why the relief sought in the petition should not be granted on the following ground or grounds: (1) the Commission lacks authority to issue confidential letters, (2) if the Commission has such authority, its procedure for doing so is invalid, and (3) if the Commission has such authority, the facts of this case did not warrant issuance of such a letter."

[7]Article VI, section 18, subdivision (d), of the California Constitution, provides in pertinent part: "Except as provided in subdivision (f) [which applies to justices and former justices of the California Supreme Court], the Commission on Judicial Performance may (1) retire a judge for disability that seriously interferes with the performance of the judge's duties and is or is likely to become permanent, or (2) censure a judge or former judge or remove a judge for action occurring not more than 6 years prior to the commencement of the judge's current Petitioner contends that because the constitutional provision cited above makes no reference to advisory letters, the Commission is without jurisdiction to issue them. He further contends that, even if the Commission considers such letters to be "advisory" or "educational" in nature, in fact they represent disciplinary action. The Commission disagrees with these contentions.

In addressing the parties' respective positions, we briefly trace the evolutionary development of the relevant rules and practices involved. In each year since its inception in 1961, the Commission confidentially and informally has cautioned against and disapproved of judicial misbehavior when the Commission deemed it appropriate to do so. (See generally, Com. Jud. Performance ann. reps. to Governor, 1983-1997.) The Commission traditionally has issued advisory letters to judges regarding matters that it determines do not warrant admonishment, censure, removal, or involuntary retirement, but which it considers too significant to dismiss without comment. (See Com. Jud. Performance, Rep. to Governor (1983) p. 6; see also Rothman, Cal. Judicial Conduct Handbook (1990) Private Admonitions by the Commission on Judicial Performance, pp. VII:1 to VII:27.)[8]

The Commission's long-standing practice of issuing advisory letters was formally acknowledged in 1988 when the Judicial Council—which at that time had rulemaking authority for the Commission under former article VI, term or of the former judge's last term that constitutes willful misconduct in office, persistent failure or inability to perform the judge's duties, habitual intemperance in the use of intoxicants or drugs, or conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute, or (3) publicly or privately admonish a judge or former judge found to have engaged in an improper action or dereliction of duty. . . ."

[8]Typically, the largest category of advisory letters implicate California Code of Judicial Ethics, canon 3B(4): "A judge shall be patient, dignified, and courteous to litigants, jurors, witnesses, lawyers, and others with whom judges deal in an official capacity . . . ." Thus, most advisory letters involve judicial demeanor, including unnecessary harshness, sarcasm, impatience, name-calling, and a variety of other inappropriate conduct on the bench. (See, e.g., Com. Jud. Performance, 1990 Ann. Rep., p. 21; Com. Jud. Performance, 1989 Ann. Rep., p. 22; see also Com. Jud. Performance, 1996 Ann. Rep., p. 24: "An advisory letter may be issued when the impropriety is isolated or relatively minor, or when the impropriety is more serious but the judge has demonstrated an understanding of the problem and has taken steps to improve. An advisory letter is especially useful when there is an appearance of impropriety. An advisory letter might be appropriate when there is actionable misconduct offset by substantial mitigation.")

In recent years, the Commission has issued an average of approximately 37 advisory letters annually. (See Com. Jud. Performance, 1989-1997 ann. reps.)

section 18, subdivision (h), of the California Constitution—adopted California Rules of Court, rules 904.1 and 904.2(c), effective January 1, 1989.[9]

In discussing the proposed California Rules of Court, rules 904.1 and 904.2(c), the Judicial Council Advisory Committee on Judicial Performance Procedures recognized the salutary effect of advisory letters, observing that such communications do not constitute "formal" discipline.[10] The California Judges Association characterized advisory letters as "an informal quasi-discipline tool." (Cal. Judges Assn.: Procedures of Commission on Judicial [9]California Rules of Court, former rule 904.1, provided: "At any time during the course of a staff inquiry, the commission may determine that a judge's conduct does not constitute a basis for further proceedings and may terminate the inquiry by issuing a confidential advisory letter to the judge. Before the commission issues an advisory letter, the judge shall be notified of the inquiry, the nature of the charge, and the name of the person making the verified statement or, if none, that the inquiry is on the commission's own motion. The judge shall be afforded a reasonable opportunity in the course of the inquiry to present such matters as the judge may choose. A reasonable time for a judge to respond to an inquiry letter shall be 20 days from the date the letter was mailed to the judge unless the time is extended for good cause shown.

"If the staff inquiry does not disclose sufficient cause to warrant issuance of a confidential advisory letter or further proceedings, the commission shall terminate the staff inquiry and notify the judge in writing." (Adopted eff. Jan. 1, 1989, and repealed eff. Dec. 1, 1996.)

California Rules of Court, former rule 904.2(c), provided: "At any time after notice of a preliminary investigation and a reasonable opportunity to respond has been given to the judge, the commission may determine that the judge's conduct does not constitute a basis for further proceedings and may terminate the investigation by issuing a confidential advisory letter to the judge." (Adopted eff. Jan. 1, 1989, and repealed eff. Dec. 1, 1996.)

[10]The Judicial Council Advisory Committee on Judicial Performance Procedures reported in pertinent part:

"The Commission on Judicial Performance uses an informal process of sending letters of caution, disapproval, and correction to judges whose conduct is questionable in some way or which might be considered 'borderline,' but which does not warrant formal discipline. This process is widely referred to as 'the stinger letter.' No specific authority for this procedure is contained in the rules governing commission procedures. The commission proposed that a rule be adopted which would authorize the commission to use this procedure. CJA [the California Judges Association] also supports adding specific authority for this procedure to the rules and clarifying the circumstances warranting its use.

"The committee found that use of an advisory letter procedure appears to be an effective educational tool for the commission and operates to benefit and assist the individual judge attempting in good faith to comply with all ethical duties. The committee further determined that since the letter merely provides advice and counseling, use of the procedure does not constitute a form of discipline. Legitimizing the procedure, the committee decided, need not involve a constitutional amendment and can properly be accomplished by rule.

"The advisory committee therefore recommends adoption of two provisions authorizing issuance of a confidential advisory letter at any time during the course of a staff inquiry or after commencement of a preliminary investigation. The proposed rule changes would require that notice to the judge and an opportunity to respond be afforded prior to issuance of the letter.

"These suggested changes are set forth in proposed rules 904.1 and 904.2(c) . . . . No adverse comments relating to these proposals were received." (Judicial Council of Cal., Rep.

Performance (July 24, 1987) p. 58.)[11] As noted above, the Commission similarly contends that advisory letters represent an action falling short of formal discipline; we observe, however, that the Commission has not been consistent in describing such letters as generally benign, educational advisories. (See Com. Jud. Performance, 1989 Ann. Rep., p. 22 ["In some cases, the commission will simply advise caution or express disapproval of the judge's conduct. This milder form of discipline is contained in letters of advice or disapproval called 'advisory letters' (Rule 904.1). The commission sometimes issues advisory letters when the misconduct is clear but the judge has demonstrated an understanding of the problem and has taken steps to improve. They are also used when the impropriety is isolated or relatively minor." (Italics added.)].) The circumstance that such letters may be considered by the Commission in subsequent proceedings further suggests that the letters have a potentially disciplinary effect. (See e.g., Broadman v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1998) 18 Cal.4th 1079, 1098-1099 [77 Cal.Rptr.2d 408, 959 P.2d 715] [upholding Commission's recommendation of public censure of judge who commented publicly on a pending case after and Recommendation of Judicial Council Advisory Com. on Judicial Performance Procedures, Court Management Committee (Oct. 3, 1988) pp. 6-7.)

Although the cover sheet of the report herein cited is labeled "(Staff Draft)" and "Not for Release," the report is contained in a binder for the Court Management Committee's agenda for October 21, 1988, which is available to the public at the Administrative Office of the Courts. Further, the minutes of the Judicial Council's meeting of November 3, 1988, note that the council followed the Court Management Committee's recommendation that the proposed rules be adopted. (See Judicial Council of Cal., minutes of meeting (Nov. 3, 1988) pp. 14-15 [adopting rules 904.1 and 904.2]; Admin. Office of Courts, Press Release No. 84 (Nov. 17, 1988) p. 2 ["The Judicial Council adopted a rule which codifies an existing practice of the Commission on Judicial Performance of issuing a confidential advisory letter in an appropriate case after either a staff inquiry or a preliminary investigation. The advisory letter serves a warning or counseling function for judges whose conduct is not severe enough to warrant further action."].)

[11]The California Judges Association formerly promulgated the Code of Judicial Conduct, which, although not formally adopted by a governmental entity, served as a guide to judicial conduct and was relied upon by this court and the Commission on Judicial Performance in evaluating disciplinary charges against judicial officers. (See, e.g., Cannon v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1975) 14 Cal.3d 678, 707, fn. 22 [122 Cal.Rptr. 778, 537 P.2d 898] ["We do not rely on the code in ascertaining violations thereof as grounds for disciplining petitioner; discipline is imposed pursuant to the constitutional provisions and rules in implementation thereof heretofore noted and considered. However, we acknowledge the applicability of the code to any conduct we as judges participate in after its effective date."].)

As part of its promulgation of the former Code of Judicial Conduct, the California Judges Association provided interpretive and explanatory materials to assist judges in understanding and complying with the disciplinary system. In addressing the matter of confidential advisory letters, the California Judges Association reported: "The stinger [letter] is used when a judge's conduct is deemed to be marginal: not worthy of formal discipline, but not to be condoned. The stinger is supposed to be a form of constructive criticism or advice as well as a harbinger of future bad tidings if the advice is not followed." (Cal. Judges Assn.: Procedures of Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, at p. 58, italics added.)

having received the Commission's advisory letter admonishing him for similar conduct].)

The electorate's passage of Proposition 190 in November 1994 directed the transfer of authority for rulemaking from the Judicial Council to the Commission. After Proposition 190 took effect in March 1995, the Commission invited public comment regarding proposed revisions to the rules, ultimately replacing California Rules of Court, rules 904.1 and 904.2(c), with virtually identical provisions, redesignated as Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance, rules 110 and 111(c), effective December 1, 1996.[12]

In addition to the transfer of rulemaking authority noted above, the electorate's passage of Proposition 190 amended the California Constitution to include article VI, section 18.5, which provides that "the text of any private admonishment, advisory letter, or other disciplinary action" shall be provided by the Commission upon request to public officials who may be considering a judicial appointment of the judge, as well as to the Commission on Judicial Appointments with respect to an applicant for a judicial appointment. (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18.5, subds. (a), (b), (c), italics added.)[13] Thus, although as petitioner observes, article VI, section 18, [12]Rule 110 provides: "(a) (Notice prior to issuance of advisory letter) If the commission makes a staff inquiry, the judge shall be notified of the inquiry and the nature of the charge, before the commission issues an advisory letter. The respondent judge so notified shall be afforded a reasonable opportunity in the course of the inquiry to present such matters as the judge may choose. A reasonable time for a judge to respond to an inquiry letter shall be 20 days from the date the letter was mailed to the judge unless the time is extended pursuant to rule 108.

"(b) (Termination of staff inquiry) If the staff inquiry does not disclose sufficient cause to warrant issuance of a confidential advisory letter or further proceedings, the commission shall terminate the staff inquiry and notify the judge in writing of such action if the judge was notified of the staff inquiry pursuant to subdivision (a).

"(c) (Advisory letter) At any time after notice of a staff inquiry and a reasonable opportunity to respond has been given to the judge, the commission may determine that the judge's conduct does not constitute a basis for further proceedings and issue a confidential advisory letter to the judge."

As noted previously, rule 111(c) similarly provides: "(Advisory letter) At any time after notice of a preliminary investigation and a reasonable opportunity to respond has been given to the judge, the commission may determine that the judge's conduct does not constitute a basis for further proceedings and may terminate the investigation by issuing a confidential advisory letter to the judge."

[13]Article VI, section 18.5, subdivisions (a), (b), and (c), of the California Constitution provide:

"(a) Upon request, the Commission on Judicial Performance shall provide to the Governor of any State of the Union the text of any private admonishment, advisory letter, or other subdivision (d), of the California Constitution, does not explicitly identify advisory letters as a form of discipline or admonishment available to the Commission, article VI, section 18.5, explicitly includes the issuance of such letters within the range of permissible alternatives. This latter constitutional provision codifies the Commission's long-standing practice of issuing advisory letters, characterizes such letters as "disciplinary action," recognizes the Commission's authority to issue such letters, and permits their release in certain circumstances. The section thus removes these letters from the realm of permanently private communications between the Commission and a judge, and makes clear that they may be transmitted to other, designated individuals. In the present case, the potentially detrimental impact of the Commission's advisory letter was plain, in view of the Commission's own characterization that its missive was a "severe advisory letter," used to "strongly disapprove" of petitioner's actions.[14]

In view of the foregoing, we reject petitioner's position that the Commission acted in excess of its jurisdiction when it issued the advisory letter challenged here. We find persuasive, however, his argument that advisory letters fairly may be characterized as "disciplinary" in nature, because they may be considered by the Commission in subsequent proceedings and because, in the wake of the new constitutional provision, the confidentiality of the letters no longer is assured.[15] disciplinary action together with any information that the Commission on Judicial Performance deems necessary to a full understanding of the commission's action, with respect to any applicant whom the Governor of any State of the Union indicates is under consideration for any judicial appointment.

"(b) Upon request, the Commission on Judicial Performance shall provide the President of the United States the text of any private admonishment, advisory letter, or other disciplinary action together with any information that the Commission on Judicial Performance deems necessary to a full understanding of the commission's action, with respect to any applicant whom the President indicates is under consideration for any federal judicial appointment.

"(c) Upon request, the Commission on Judicial Performance shall provide the Commission on Judicial Appointments the text of any private admonishment, advisory letter, or other disciplinary action together with any information that the Commission on Judicial Performance deems necessary to a full understanding of the commission action, with respect to any applicant whom the Commission on Judicial Appointments indicates is under consideration for any judicial appointment."

[14]An advisory letter issued by the Commission may be characterized as being analogous to a written reprimand given by an employer to an employee; such reprimands typically are considered part of a system of progressive discipline. (See, e.g., Kazensky v. City of Merced (1998) 65 Cal.App.4th 44, 73 [76 Cal.Rptr.2d 356]; Fontana Teachers Assn. v. Fontana Unified School Dist. (1988) 201 Cal.App.3d 1517, 1522 [247 Cal.Rptr. 761].)

[15]As noted, the Commission issued its advisory letter to petitioner on July 14, 1997. In view of our holding that article VI, section 18.5, of the California Constitution authorizes the Commission to issue advisory letters, we need not and do not reach petitioner's contention

B. Whether the Commission's Procedure in Issuing an Advisory Letter Violated Petitioner's Right to Due Process of Law

(3a) Having concluded that the Commission's issuance of its advisory letter amounted to a disciplinary response within the Commission's jurisdiction, we turn now to petitioner's contention that the Commission's procedures in issuing the letter violated his right to due process of law. (U.S. Const., 5th & 14th Amends.; Cal. Const., art. I, § 7, subd. (a); Allgeyer v. Louisiana (1897) 165 U.S. 578, 589-590 [17 S.Ct. 427, 431, 41 L.Ed. 832] [the " 'right to follow any of the common occupations' " is " 'a large ingredient in the civil liberty of the citizen' "].)

Petitioner contends that "not even the minimal requirements of due process of law are ever satisfied before an investigated judge is issued a stinger letter . . . . There is no hearing at all. There is no right to review the evidence the Commission has reviewed. There is no right to confront adverse witnesses or evidence. There is no established right of review by the judicial branch of State government." Petitioner adds that, in view of article VI, section 18.5, of the California Constitution (authorizing the release of advisory letters to any Governor, the President, and the Commission on Judicial Appointments), the issuance of an advisory letter "is potentially devastating to a judge's chances of future appointments and advancement in the judge's profession." He also notes that the Commission has, in disciplinary proceedings involving other jurists, introduced advisory letters issued to the judge under investigation, "in order to show aggravation, or to show a common pattern of improper behavior, or to show a failure of the judge to heed the Commission's advice." For these reasons, petitioner urges this court to invalidate procedures followed by the Commission in issuing advisory letters.

We decline to do so. (4) "Under the California Constitution, the extent to which procedural due process is available depends on a weighing of private and governmental interests involved. The required procedural safeguards are those that will, without unduly burdening the government, maximize the accuracy of the resulting decision and respect the dignity of the individual subjected to the decisionmaking process. Specifically, determination of the dictates of due process generally requires consideration of four factors: the private interest that will be affected by the individual action; the risk of an erroneous deprivation of this interest through the procedures used and the probable value, if any, of additional or substitute safeguards; the that similar letters issued by the Commission prior to the December 1, 1996, effective date of section 18.5 "are illegal and must be purged from [the Commission's] files."

dignitary interest of informing individuals of the nature, grounds and consequences of the action and of enabling them to present their side of the story before a responsible governmental official; and the government interest, including the function involved and the fiscal and administrative burdens that the additional or substitute procedural requirements would entail. [Citations.]" (5) (See fn. 16.) (Rodriguez v. Department of Real Estate (1996) 51 Cal.App.4th 1289, 1297 [59 Cal.Rptr.2d 652], fn. omitted; see also People v. Hansel (1992) 1 Cal.4th 1211, 1219 [4 Cal.Rptr.2d 888, 824 P.2d 694] [due process is a flexible concept]; Saleeby v. State Bar (1985) 39 Cal.3d 547, 565 [216 Cal.Rptr. 367, 702 P.2d 525] [not every situation requires a formal hearing with full rights of confrontation and cross-examination].)[16]

(3b) In the face of the well-established case law underscoring the elasticity inherent in due process principles, petitioner fails to provide this court with any authority to support his contention that the issuance of an advisory letter requires a level of due process greater than that provided in Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance, rule 110. As specified in rule 110 (and its predecessor, California Rules of Court, rule 904.1), the prerequisites for issuance of an advisory letter are notice to the judge of "the inquiry and the nature of the charge," and a "reasonable opportunity to respond."

[16]Under federal due process analysis, the aggrieved party must establish a protected property interest. (Morrissey v. Brewer (1972) 408 U.S. 471, 481 [92 S.Ct. 2593, 2600, 33 L.Ed.2d 484].) Although it is true that the Fourteenth Amendment "protects the pursuit of one's profession from abridgment by arbitrary state action" (Endler v. Schutzbank (1968) 68 Cal.2d 162, 169 [65 Cal.Rptr. 297, 436 P.2d 297]), "due process of law" is not a fixed theory, embodying a standardized set of procedures or a trial-like hearing in each instance. To the contrary, as noted by the United States Supreme Court in Hannah v. Larche (1960) 363 U.S. 420 [80 S.Ct. 1502, 4 L.Ed.2d 1307], due process is an elusive concept: "Its exact boundaries are undefinable, and its content varies according to specific factual contexts. Thus, when governmental agencies adjudicate or make binding determinations which directly affect the legal rights of individuals, it is imperative that those agencies use the procedures which have traditionally been associated with the judicial process. On the other hand, when governmental action does not partake of an adjudication, as for example, when a general fact-finding investigation is being conducted, it is not necessary that the full panoply of judicial procedures be used. Therefore, as a generalization, it can be said that due process embodies the differing rules of fair play, which through the years, have become associated with differing types of proceedings. Whether the Constitution requires that a particular right obtain in a specific proceeding depends upon a complexity of factors. The nature of the alleged right involved, the nature of the proceeding, and the possible burden on that proceeding, are all considerations which must be taken into account." (Id. at p. 442 [80 S.Ct. at pp. 1514-1515], italics added; see also Mathews v. Eldridge (1976) 424 U.S. 319, 334 [96 S.Ct. 893, 902, 47 L.Ed.2d 18] [same]; Cafeteria Workers v. McElroy (1961) 367 U.S. 886, 895 [81 S.Ct. 1743, 1748-1749, 6 L.Ed.2d 1230] ["The very nature of due process negates any concept of inflexible procedures universally applicable to every imaginable situation. . . . [¶] . . . [C]onsideration of what procedures due process may require under any given set of circumstances must begin with a determination of the precise nature of the governmental function involved as well as of the private interest that has been affected by governmental action."].)

The Commission's inquiry letter, dated December 6, 1996, provided petitioner with notice of the inquiry and the nature of the charge, and gave him an opportunity to respond. Petitioner presented his case in opposition (by letter dated January 27, 1997), defending his decision to grant the defendant's motion to dismiss People v. James, in substantial part because the prosecution had failed to comply with the statutory requirements applicable to a motion to continue the trial and thereafter had refused to proceed. The Commission subsequently informed petitioner that it had ordered a preliminary investigation, explaining that "[t]he nature of the possible charges" was set forth in the Commission's letter dated December 6, 1996. The reply also afforded petitioner a further opportunity to explain his handling of People v. James. Petitioner thereafter filed a supplemental response, again defending his conduct.

As noted previously, petitioner contends that, in addition to the procedures outlined in the preceding paragraph, he was entitled to a hearing, the right to review the evidence considered by the Commission, the right to confront adverse witnesses or evidence, and the right to judicial review—in other words, the functional equivalent of a trial. And, at oral argument, the Commission similarly contended that if advisory letters were deemed to be "disciplinary" in nature, then petitioner would be entitled to a "full adversary hearing." We disagree. "The essence of due process is the requirement that 'a person in jeopardy of serious loss [be given] notice of the case against him and opportunity to meet it.' [Citation.] All that is necessary is that the procedures be tailored, in light of the decision to be made, to 'the capacities and circumstances of those who are to be heard' [citation], to insure that they are given a meaningful opportunity to present their case." (Mathews v. Eldridge, supra, 424 U.S. 319, 348-349 [96 S.Ct. 893, 909].) Thus, procedural due process does not require a trial-type hearing in every instance. (Anderson Nat. Bank v. Luckett (1944) 321 U.S. 233 [64 S.Ct. 599, 88 L.Ed. 692, 151 A.L.R. 824].)

The procedural protections petitioner contends were improperly withheld from him are of the type more appropriately required whenever action by the state significantly impairs an individual's freedom to pursue a private occupation. (Willner v. Committee on Character (1963) 373 U.S. 96, 103-106 [83 S.Ct. 1175, 1180-1182, 10 L.Ed.2d 224, 2 A.L.R.3d 1254]; accord, Endler v. Schutzbank, supra, 68 Cal.2d 162, 172-178; see also Rodriguez v. Department of Real Estate, supra, 51 Cal.App.4th 1289, 1296-1300 [notice and opportunity to provide written argument prior to suspension of broker's license held to comport with principles of due process].) In the present case, however, no such significant impairment was at risk at this early stage in the disciplinary process.[17] Advisory letters may range from a mild suggestion to a severe rebuke; although they may reduce a judge's chance of being elevated to a higher court (or appointed to some other office), such letters do not inexorably subject a judge to public opprobrium or other inevitable consequences that might impair the individual's freedom to pursue his or her chosen occupation.

The nature of the Commission's investigation was, at its core, a fact-finding mission focused upon petitioner's handling of the case of People v. James. The Commission's inquiry lent itself well to proof though documentary forms of evidence including hearing transcripts and the parties' briefing. In view of these factors, we are satisfied that the Commission's procedures were adequate. They provided petitioner with sufficient notice of the Commission's inquiry, specifically identified the focus of, and evidentiary basis for, the Commission's investigation, and granted petitioner sufficient opportunities to address the Commission's concerns and defend himself against the allegation that he had acted improperly. (See generally, Saleeby v. State Bar, supra, 39 Cal.3d 547, 565 [in an action seeking a disbursement by the State Bar from the Client Security Fund, this court held that "[a] formal hearing, with full rights of confrontation and cross-examination is not necessarily required"]; see also Shacket v. Osteopathic Medical Board (1996) 51 Cal.App.4th 223, 231, fn. 4 [58 Cal.Rptr.2d 715] [medical peer review board was "not required to hold a formal hearing before filing and disseminating" a report involving suspension of physician].) The Commission thus fulfilled its obligation to inform petitioner of all material facts behind the allegations.

We are unpersuaded that the additional safeguards urged by petitioner are required. He fails to demonstrate that his interest in avoiding this relatively mild form of discipline is sufficiently significant to justify the added time and expense of the safeguards he proposes. Nor does he show that the consequences of an advisory letter are so severe as to invoke the need for a higher level of process. Similarly, he does not address the possibility that the safeguards he seeks could have a detrimental impact upon the Commission's effectiveness by requiring a disproportionate use of the Commission's resources. (See, e.g., Mathews v. Eldridge, supra, 424 U.S. 319, 348 [96 S.Ct.

[17]Had the preliminary investigation resulted in a determination by the Commission that a private or public admonishment was appropriate, petitioner would have been entitled to request a hearing and contest the Commission's intended action. (Rules 113-116, 118.) If, after the preliminary investigation, the Commission had concluded that formal proceedings should be instituted (rule 118), petitioner would have been afforded further opportunity to respond in writing (rule 119), as well as a hearing before special masters or the Commission (rules 121, 123-125). The Commission's rules provide the judge with procedural rights in such formal proceedings (rule 126).

893, 909] ["[T]he Government's interest, and hence that of the public, in conserving scarce fiscal and administrative resources is a factor that must be weighed. At some point the benefit of an additional safeguard to the individual affected by the administrative action and to society in terms of increased assurance that the action is just, may be outweighed by the cost."]; Rodriguez v. Department of Real Estate, supra, 51 Cal.App.4th 1289, 1299 [the full range of procedural due process rights sought, including the right to a hearing and to confront and cross-examine witnesses, "would impose great fiscal and administrative burdens on the process"].)[18]

The contrast between petitioner's position here, and that historically taken by the California Judges Association and the Judicial Council, also is instructive. The two organizations endorsed the Commission's practice of issuing advisory letters, in part because such letters provided an informal, less severe alternative to more formal discipline. Among the panoply of disciplinary measures available to the Commission, an advisory letter comprises a mild response. In view of these considerations, the additional procedural protections that petitioner urges appear paradoxical and unduly onerous.[19]

Article VI, section 18, subdivision (j), of the California Constitution provides that when the Commission institutes formal proceedings, the notice of charges, the answer, and all subsequent papers and proceedings shall be open to the public. The adoption of petitioner's position that more formal proceedings must be held before an advisory letter may be issued also might invoke the constitutional requirement that such proceedings be made public, thereby eliminating the confidentiality and informality of this form of discipline that makes it less onerous and detrimental to the judge. In short, granting the process requested by petitioner might well end up eliminating the benefits of the form of discipline itself.

Although, pursuant to article VI, section 18.5, of the California Constitution, information regarding an advisory letter may be requested by the President, a Governor, or the Commission on Judicial Appointments, and thus the confidentiality of the letter no longer is limited to the Commission and the judge (see Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18.5, subds. (a), (b), (c)), we also observe that the judge at that point is provided with information given to the [18]We also observe that if a full trial-type hearing were held whenever the Commission contemplated the issuance of an advisory letter, the negative impact upon the administration of justice likely would be significant, because such hearings would involve diverting the affected jurists from their courtrooms.

[19]We note that the availability of writ review in this court provides an additional due process guarantee for the recipient of an advisory letter.

requesting party (id., subd. (e)), and thus may fully respond, rebut, or otherwise explain the subject matter of the letter to the party that requested it. Moreover, the judge may describe the events that transpired in the period since the letter was issued. This additional opportunity to respond, although less preferable from a judge's standpoint than nondisclosure of the letter, provides a meaningful method to mitigate the potentially adverse impact created by such disclosure. Because the Commission's issuance of an advisory letter has only the potential, tangential effect of inflicting harm upon a judge's career, the implementation of additional procedural safeguards is unnecessary.

Balancing petitioner's private interest in maintaining a judicial career free of the infliction of disciplinary measures, and the Commission's interest in the effective and efficient safeguarding of the public from aberrant action by judicial officers, we are satisfied that due process of law does not require the additional protections urged by petitioner as prerequisites to the Commission's issuance of an advisory letter. The Commission's procedures sufficiently protect a judge's interests from the unreasonable issuance of such a letter, and thus are adequate to satisfy the requirements of due process of law.

C. Whether the Commission May Issue an Advisory Letter Based upon a Perceived Legal Error Committed by a Judge

In considering the scope of conduct for which the Commission may impose discipline, we are guided by the California Code of Judicial Ethics. (See Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (m) [imposing upon this court the responsibility of making "rules for the conduct of judges, both on and off the bench, and for judicial candidates in the conduct of their campaigns"].) Canon 1 of the Code of Judicial Ethics provides: "An independent and honorable judiciary is indispensable to justice in our society. A judge should participate in establishing, maintaining, and enforcing high standards of conduct, and should personally observe those standards so that the integrity and independence of the judiciary will be preserved. The provisions of this Code should be construed and applied to further that objective. A judicial decision or administrative act later determined to be incorrect legally is not itself a violation of this Code." (Italics added.)

(6) In view of the foregoing provision, petitioner contends that the advisory letter issued to him is invalid, because at most the letter addresses a legal error committed by a judge—not judicial misconduct. In further support of this contention, he cites a number of judicial decisions rendered by this court, and by our sister state courts, in which legal error, alone, was deemed insufficient to constitute sanctionable conduct. (See Gubler v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1984) 37 Cal.3d 27, 63 [207 Cal.Rptr. 171, 688 P.2d 551] [upholding the commission's recommendation of public censure where judge's culpability "transcend[ed] mere legal error"]; Wenger v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1981) 29 Cal.3d 615, 646, fn. 13 [175 Cal.Rptr. 420, 630 P.2d 954] [judge's ruling "had at least enough merit" not to constitute misconduct]; see also Matter of Seaman (1993) 133 N.J. 67 [627 A.2d 106, 122]; Matter of Barrett (Del. Ct. on Judiciary 1991) 593 A.2d 529, 533; Matter of Benoit (Me. 1985) 487 A.2d 1158, 1162-1163; West Va. Jud. Inquiry Com'n v. Dostert (1980) 165 W.Va. 233 [271 S.E.2d 427, 433-434]; People ex rel. Harrod v. Illinois Cts. Com. (1977) 69 Ill.2d 445 [14 Ill.Dec. 248, 372 N.E.2d 53, 65]; In re Mattera (1961) 34 N.J. 259 [168 A.2d 38, 44].) Petitioner asserts that a legal ruling that has any "intellectual merit" cannot support a finding of judicial misconduct; to hold otherwise would compromise the independence of the judiciary. (See Overton, Grounds for Judicial Discipline in the Context of Judicial Disciplinary Commissions (1977) 54 Chi.-Kent L.Rev. 59, 65-66; see also Shaman et al., Judicial Conduct and Ethics (2d ed. 1995) Use of Power, § 2.02, p. 32.)[20]

The Commission concedes that a judge's legal error "is not ordinarily misconduct." The Commission contends, however, that an act that is legally erroneous nevertheless can constitute misconduct if it involves "bad faith, bias, abuse of authority, disregard for fundamental rights, intentional disregard of the law or any purpose other than the faithful discharge of judicial duty." (See In re Whitney (1996) 14 Cal.4th 1, 2-3 [56 Cal.Rptr.2d 705, 922 P.2d 868] [failure to follow the law regarding arraignment procedures]; McCullough v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1989) 49 Cal.3d 186, 192 [260 Cal.Rptr. 557, 776 P.2d 259] [willful misconduct to direct guilty verdict in criminal action and thereby deprive the defendant of fundamental right to jury trial]; Gonzalez v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1983) 33 Cal.3d 359, 374-375 [188 Cal.Rptr. 880, 657 P.2d 372] [willful misconduct to visit jury room during deliberations]; Gubler v. Commission on

[20]"Imposing discipline upon a judge for an incorrect legal ruling is an extremely sensitive issue because of the potential impact on judicial independence. The preservation of an independent judiciary requires that judges not be exposed to personal discipline on the basis of case outcomes or particular rulings, other than in extreme or compelling circumstances. An independent judge is one who is able to rule as he or she determines appropriate, without fear of jeopardy or sanction. So long as the rulings are made in good faith, and in an effort to follow the law as the judge understands it, the usual safeguard against error or overreaching lies in the adversary system and appellate review. As the courts have often said, the disciplinary process should not be used as a substitute for appeal. Due to the possible threat to judicial independence, it has been suggested that legal error should be dealt with only in the appellate process and never should be considered judicial misconduct." (Shaman et al., Judicial Conduct and Ethics, supra, Use of Power, § 2.02, p. 32, fn. omitted.)

Judicial Performance, supra, 37 Cal.3d 27, 47-48, 55-59 [improper collection practices involving attorney fees, improper gun sale]; Kloepfer v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1989) 49 Cal.3d 826, 838-863 [264 Cal.Rptr. 100, 782 P.2d 239, 89 A.L.R.4th 235] [willful and prejudicial misconduct for failing to protect the rights of defendants, and abuses of power involving contempt procedure, orders to show cause, and bench warrants]; Cannon v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications, supra, 14 Cal.3d 678, 693-694 [failure to follow the law regarding contempt procedures].)

In response to petitioner's position that a judge's legal ruling cannot support a finding of judicial misconduct if the ruling has any intellectual merit, the Commission contends that petitioner overstates his case. The Commission argues that the decisions cited by petitioner stand for the proposition that the proper analysis focuses on the additional circumstances that surround the ruling in question. (See Wenger v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 29 Cal.3d 615, 646-648 [although one of the judge's rulings "had at least enough merit" not to constitute misconduct, other legal errors were misconduct]; Matter of Seaman, supra, 627 A.2d 106, 122 [although "mere error[]" was not sanctionable, charges against judge did not involve legal error, but sexual harassment]; Matter of Barrett, supra, 593 A.2d 529, 533 [charges against judge did not involve legal error, which generally is not sanctionable, but matters such as tardiness and political misconduct]; Matter of Benoit, supra, 487 A.2d 1158, 1162-1167 [in imprisoning defendants charged only with a civil infraction, judge's legal error constituted misconduct]; West Va. Jud. Inquiry Com'n v. Dostert, supra, 271 S.E.2d 427, 434 [judge's use of invalid procedure was not misconduct "[a]bsent proof of improper motive"]; People ex rel. Harrod v. Illinois Cts. Com., supra, 372 N.E.2d 53, 65 [although "mere errors" are not sanctionable, "a judge who repeatedly imposes punishment not provided for by law is subject to discipline"]; In re Mattera, supra, 168 A.2d 38, 47 [judge's noncompliance with procedural rules was not misconduct absent "improper motive"].)

Petitioner contends that a prohibition against "legal error investigation" is necessary in order to avoid abuse of the Commission's powers by persons politically or philosophically opposed to a particular jurist. Although we believe that the Commission properly should defer to a Court of Appeal's determination whether legal error in fact has occurred, we agree with the Commission's position that petitioner's proposed remedy is overbroad. A judge may, through repeated legal error, commit acts that would lead to violations of the judicial canons. For example, canon 2A of the California

Code of Judicial Ethics declares that "A judge shall respect and comply with the law and shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary." A judge who repeatedly dismisses certain kinds of claims might be subject to discipline if the dismissals are shown to be not only legally erroneous, but also based upon bias, prejudice, or some other improper purpose.

Instead, we agree with the Commission that legal error does not preclude a finding of misconduct, and that the Commission properly may consider surrounding factors in ascertaining whether discipline may be in order. Nevertheless, a judge must be free not only to make the correct ruling for the proper reasons, but also to make an incorrect ruling, believing it to be correct.[21] The determination whether a legal error provides the basis for discipline thus requires an inquiry into additional factors that demonstrate more than legal error, alone.

In summary, a judge who commits legal error which, in addition, clearly and convincingly reflects bad faith (Broadman v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 18 Cal.4th 1079, 1091-1092), bias (Kennick v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1990) 50 Cal.3d 297, 327-331 [267 Cal.Rptr. 293, 787 P.2d 591, 87 A.L.R.4th 679]), abuse of authority (Spruance v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1975) 13 Cal.3d 778, 786-795 [119 Cal.Rptr. 841, 532 P.2d 1209]), disregard for fundamental rights (Kloepfer v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 49 Cal.3d 826, 849-854), intentional disregard of the law (Cannon v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications, supra, 14 Cal.3d 678, 695-698), or any purpose other than the faithful discharge of judicial duty (Ryan v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1988) 45 Cal.3d 518, 545-546 [247 Cal.Rptr. 378, 754 P.2d 724, 76 A.L.R.4th 951]), is subject to investigation. (See generally, Shaman et al., Judicial Conduct and Ethics, supra, § 2.02, pp. 32-37.) Mere legal error, without more, however, is insufficient to support a finding that a judge has violated the Code of Judicial Ethics and thus should be disciplined.

D. Whether Petitioner Should Be Sanctioned for Dismissing a Criminal Case After the People Indicated They Were Not Ready to Proceed

We turn now to the facts of this case. As noted, the Commission's advisory letter informed petitioner that the Commission "strongly disapproved" of his handling of the proceedings in People v. James: "Your dismissal of the case . . . occurred under circumstances equivalent to those in the earlier case of People v. Ferguson, in which the Court of Appeal reversed your dismissal of the case in a published opinion in 1990. . . . As respects your conduct in dismissing the People v. James case, the commission was also particularly disturbed that the People v. Ferguson decision was brought to your attention by counsel before you dismissed the case."

[21](See Greenhouse, Judges Seek Aid in Effort to Remain Independent, N.Y. Times (Dec. 10, 1998) p. A20, quoting Hon. Adolpho A. Birch, former Chief Justice of the Tennessee Supreme Court: " 'Judicial independence is the judge's right to do the right thing or, believing it to be the right thing, to do the wrong thing.' ")

Petitioner contends that in issuing its advisory letter, the Commission erroneously relied upon purported similarities between James and Ferguson in reaching the conclusion that petitioner improperly had handled the motion to dismiss that had been made in James. According to petitioner, if one were to "take away the Commission's determination that James cannot be legally distinguished from Ferguson, [then] there is no basis for the conclusion that [petitioner] engaged in a reckless disregard for the law." More specifically, petitioner argues that Ferguson "involved different circumstances and is distinguishable" from James on three distinct grounds: (1) the issue presented in Ferguson was whether the trial court had abused its discretion in granting the defendant's motion to dismiss, in contrast to James, where the trial court believed the denial of the oral motion for continuance was mandatory; (2) the facts of the two cases are inapposite—in Ferguson, trial counsel was temporarily unavailable, but in James, trial counsel was available but unprepared and unwilling to proceed; and (3) in Ferguson, no policy objective was served by the dismissal, but in James the interests of the defendant, witnesses, and justice in general were advanced by the trial court's insistence that proper notice be given.[22]

(7) We need not enter the debate whether Ferguson and James were distinguishable, nor need we even decide whether petitioner committed "error" in dismissing the James matter. As noted, the critical inquiry is whether petitioner's action clearly and convincingly reflected bad faith, bias, abuse of authority, disregard for fundamental rights, intentional disregard of the law, or any purpose other than the faithful discharge of judicial duty.

In the present case, we conclude that the evidence does not support such a determination. After properly denying an inadequate motion to continue (one that could have led to the imposition of sanctions under section 1050.5), petitioner was confronted with a prosecutor who stated that the People unequivocally refused to proceed. Not unreasonably, petitioner viewed the prosecutor's challenge as an intolerable affront to the authority of the trial court, one that could have supported imposition of additional sanctions under the court's contempt power. (§ 166.) Our review of the proceedings as a whole suggests that petitioner in fact demonstrated extraordinary patience in dealing with an unprepared and unyielding prosecution. Viewed against the backdrop of the prosecution's recalcitrance to proceed, petitioner's order dismissing the case, even if legally incorrect, fails to "raise concerns" regarding "a reckless disregard of the law, . . . bias, or a lack of impartiality," as suggested by the Commission in its advisory letter. To the contrary, we find no evidence that petitioner's order dismissing the James case was motivated by bad faith, bias, abuse of authority, disregard for fundamental rights, intentional (or "reckless") disregard of the law, or any purpose other than the faithful discharge of judicial duty. Accordingly, we reject the Commission's position that petitioner's dismissal of the James case was sanctionable.

[22]Petitioner also contends that in denying the writ relief sought by the People in James, the Court of Appeal impliedly rejected the Commission's position that Ferguson mandated a result different from that reached by the trial court in James. In view of our analysis and the conclusion we reach in the present opinion, we need not and do not address this contention.

DISPOSITION

The petition for writ of mandate, seeking the withdrawal of the Commission's advisory letter, dated July 14, 1997, is granted. This court's alternative writ of mandate, filed December 31, 1997, is discharged. Each side shall bear its own costs incurred in this action.

WERDEGAR, J., Concurring.—Although I agree with the result and with much of the reasoning in the majority opinion, I would take a somewhat different approach to the question of discipline for legal error. The question raised by this case, in my view, is not whether a judge's legal error is itself subject to investigation or discipline by the Commission on Judicial Performance (Commission)—even the Commission concedes it is not, and canon 1 of the California Code of Judicial Ethics so provides. The question, rather, is whether a legal error of the type asserted in the complaint against petitioner has such a tendency to reveal underlying misconduct as to justify investigation and discipline by the Commission. I would answer that question in the negative: Because the judge's position, as revealed in his initial response to the Commission's inquiry, had reasonably arguable merit, and because the Commission had no extrinsic evidence of bad faith, bias, abuse of authority, intentional disregard of the law, or any improper purpose, the Commission should have ended its investigation at the time of that response without any discipline.

The majority opinion (ante, at p. 397) rejects petitioner's "intellectual merit" argument, although we have previously adopted a similar threshold standard. (See Wenger v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1981) 29 Cal.3d 615, 647, fn. 13 [175 Cal.Rptr. 420, 630 P.2d 954] [observing that, correct or not, one judge's ruling "had at least enough merit" not to constitute misconduct]; Gubler v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1984) 37 Cal.3d 27, 47-48 [207 Cal.Rptr. 171, 688 P.2d 551] [stating, with a citation to Wenger v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, that "a judge should not be disciplined for mere erroneous determination of legal issues . . . that are subject to reasonable differences of opinion"].) The majority, however, in order to explain why the rulings at issue here did not constitute misconduct, is nevertheless compelled to observe that the prosecutor's continuance was "properly" denied, that petitioner's view of the matter was "[n]ot unreasonabl[e]," and that petitioner demonstrated "extraordinary patience" (maj. opn., ante, at pp. 401-402, italics in original), all of which suggest the arguable correctness of petitioner's rulings is what precludes discipline. Rather than reject petitioner's position, then, I would accept it, at least in part: When, as here, the Commission has no extrinsic evidence of bad faith or improper motive—no evidence, that is, apart from the nature of the ruling itself—the Commission generally should not pursue an investigation into, or impose discipline for, a legal ruling that has reasonably arguable merit. In such circumstances, the principle of judicial independence requires that the determination whether the ruling was correct or not be left to a reviewing court.

In its letter of inquiry to petitioner, the Commission observed that petitioner had adhered to his dismissal ruling even after the deputy district attorney had drawn his attention to People v. Ferguson (1990) 218 Cal.App.3d 1173 [267 Cal.Rptr. 528] (Ferguson), in which the Court of Appeal reversed a dismissal under assertedly similar circumstances. I agree with the implication that, in some circumstances, a judge's ruling made in the face of directly contrary binding authority cited to him or her might be evidence of intentional disregard for the law. This was not such a case, however, because Ferguson was not so squarely on point as to absolutely preclude a different ruling in the James case. The Commission should have realized this, at the latest, when it received petitioner's responsive letter, which pointed out three arguably pertinent distinctions between Ferguson and James.[1] In the same letter, petitioner informed the Commission that the Court of Appeal had, despite its own Ferguson precedent, summarily denied

[1]Petitioner noted that Ferguson did not involve the mandatory denial of an improper oral motion for continuance (Pen. Code, § 1050, subd. (d)); that in Ferguson the assigned deputy district attorney was temporarily unavailable, while in James a deputy had been assigned who was available but unprepared to try the case; and that in Ferguson the People did not refuse to proceed and could have begun trial as soon as the same afternoon, while in James the chief deputy flatly refused to proceed without a continuance of several days. In addition, petitioner the People's petition for a writ of mandate in James, an act suggesting the reviewing court did not consider Ferguson completely dispositive.

At this point, if not before, the Commission should have realized that this was a garden-variety legal dispute, in which a litigant complaining of an adverse ruling can (and did) seek review from a higher court. That the ruling complained of appeared contrary to a published decision should not, in itself, have concerned the Commission, especially when petitioner provided arguable grounds for distinguishing the precedent.[2] Disputes over whether a prior decision is distinguishable, or whether a particular statute applies, are as common as air in litigation and (to mix metaphors) are typical grist for the appellate mill. In the absence of any evidence of improper motive, such a dispute should not also become the focus of a disciplinary proceeding. Because, in this case, the judicial ruling complained of had at least arguable merit and the Commission cited no extrinsic evidence of improper purpose, the Commission was simply wrong to conclude, as it did in the advisory letter, that petitioner's order of dismissal after Ferguson was brought to his attention, "raises concerns about a reckless disregard of the law, . . . bias or a lack of impartiality . . . ."

Although the majority reaches the same ultimate conclusion as I, it unfortunately fails to address the hard question of when, if ever, the erroneous nature of a ruling might itself be evidence, sufficient for investigation or discipline, of a judge's improper disregard for the law. Without attempting to describe all the circumstances under which legal error does and does not demonstrate misconduct, I would hold that, at a minimum, the ruling must lack all reasonably arguable merit.[3]

For these reasons, I concur in granting the petition.

argued the dismissal in James served certain policy objectives the Ferguson court found lacking in that case.

[2]Research into the subject, moreover, would have revealed precedent arguably supporting the dismissal order. (See, e.g., People v. Torres (1984) 159 Cal.App.3d Supp. 8, 13 [206 Cal.Rptr. 537] [dismissal proper when prosecutor demands continuance and refuses to proceed without one in order to control timing of trials].)

[3]To repeat, I speak here only of the case, such as this one, in which the Commission can cite no extrinsic evidence of improper motive or other misconduct.

| Inquiry Concerning Judge Eugene R. Bishop,No. 161 | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PRIVATE ADMONISHMENT |

This is a disciplinary matter concerning Judge Eugene R. Bishop of the Riverside County Superior Court. Formal proceedings having been instituted, this matter is before the Commission on Judicial Performance pursuant to rule 127 of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance (discipline by consent).

For the reasons set forth in this decision, the commission privately admonishes Judge Bishop for violating the rights of minors, parents and guardians in four separate cases as set forth in the Notice of Formal Proceedings and stipulated to by Judge Bishop. The commission also has determined that this private admonishment shall be available to the public.[1]

APPEARANCES

Judge Bishop is represented by James E. Friedhofer. Trial Counsel for the Commission on Judicial Performance is Jack Coyle.

PROCEDURAL HISTORY

A Notice of Formal Proceedings was filed on September 5, 2001, charging Judge Bishop with four counts of misconduct. Judge Bishop filed his verified answer on September 18, 2001. Pursuant to rule 121, the commission requested the appointment of three special masters, and the Supreme Court appointed Justice Paul Turner, presiding, Justice Rebecca A. Wiseman, and Judge Nancy Wieben Stock as masters. The masters held a pretrial telephone conference on November 9, 2001, and the case was scheduled for an evidentiary hearing commencing January 16, 2002.

On January 10, 2002, Judge Bishop and Trial Counsel submitted a Stipulation for Discipline by Consent pursuant to rule 127 of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance. On January 11, 2002, the commission issued an order vacating the hearing date in order that the commission might consider the Stipulation at its January 2002 meeting.

[1] With the issuance of this decision accepting the Stipulation for Discipline by Consent, the Stipulation is filed and is available to the public.

THE STIPULATION FOR DISCIPLINE BY CONSENT

A. Judge Bishop's Agreement to Discipline

Judge Bishop and Trial Counsel request that the commission resolve this matter by the imposition of a private admonishment. Judge Bishop, however, understands and accepts that the commission "may disclose publicly its decision and order of private admonishment, this stipulation, and respondent's affidavit of consent. (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18(j).)" Judge Bishop further recognizes that in its decision and order the commission "may articulate the reasons for its decision," and he agrees "to accept any such explanatory language that the commission deems appropriate."

The Stipulation further notes that Judge Bishop is no longer acting in a judicial capacity. On December 22, 2001, Judge Bishop gave notice, without right of revocation, that he was electing to retire from judicial office, effective March 29, 2002. The Stipulation further notes that "because of vacation time, his last day on the bench was December 21, 2001."

Judge Bishop has agreed that he "will not seek or accept an assignment, appointment or reference of work from a California state court." In addition, he understands "that if he does seek or accept an assignment, appointment, or reference of work, the commission may rescind the private admonishment and reopen formal proceedings."

Judge Bishop has signed and submitted an affidavit consenting to the sanction of a private admonishment, stating that the consent is freely and voluntarily given, admitting the truth of the charges as alleged, and waiving review by the Supreme Court.

B. Stipulated Facts

The Stipulation for Discipline sets forth the following factual stipulation, which tracks the allegations set forth in the Notice of Formal Proceedings.

COUNT ONE

> In In re Daniel K., et al., No. IJ-8816, as set forth below, respondent violated the due process rights of Anna K. by removing her children, Daniel and Shane (spelled "Shayne" in the Notice of Formal Proceedings) K., from her home without notice or a reasonable opportunity to be heard.
>
> On April 1, 1997, respondent presided at the six-month review hearing for Anna K.'s daughter, Korah K., in case number IJ-8816, pursuant to Welfare and Institutions Code section 366.21(e). At the time of the hearing, Anna K. had two sons, Daniel and Shane, who resided with her.
> At the hearing, the attorney for Korah, who also represented Daniel and Shane, requested that the two boys "be pulled from the home." Respondent ordered that Daniel and Shane be removed from Anna K.'s home and be placed in foster care. Respondent did so without notice to Anna K. that such a request would be considered at the hearing. Welfare and Institutions Code sections 332(e), 335(a), 337(c) and 387 require that such notice be given. Because no supplemental petition had been filed prior to respondent's order, and no noticed hearing on such a petition took place, respondent's order violated Welfare and Institutions Code section 387.

On March 4, 1998, the Court of Appeal for the Fourth Appellate District (hereafter "Court of Appeal" or "court") found that "the juvenile court violated the mother's right to basic due process under the federal and state constitutions and violated several statutes by removing the boys from their mother's physical custody at the six-month hearing without a supplemental petition[] being filed or prior notice."

Respondent's conduct violated the Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 1, 2A, 3B(2), 3B(7) and 3B(8).

COUNT TWO

In In re Anthony B., No. IJ-9898, as set forth below, respondent violated the due process rights of William B., the father of Anthony B., by proceeding with hearings on July 28, 1997, September 25, 1997, and February 3, 1998, without adequate notice or a reasonable opportunity to be heard.

On July 25, 1997, the Riverside County Department of Public Social Services (hereafter "DPSS") filed a petition in In re Anthony B., No. IJ-9898, alleging Anthony to be a dependent child of the court pursuant to Welfare and Institutions Code section 300, subdivisions (b) and (g). The petition alleged that the father of Anthony B. was William B., and listed William B.'s address as Tehachapi State Prison. William B. was a state prisoner in California from on or about May 29, 1997, to on or about September 16, 1998.

On July 28, 1997, respondent presided over a detention hearing in the case. Respondent appointed counsel for Anthony and for Anthony's mother, but not for William B. At the hearing, respondent ordered the detention of Anthony. William B. was not present at the hearing and no attorney appeared on his behalf. No notice of the petition or of the hearing was provided to William B. Welfare and Institutions Code sections 302(b), 311(a), 335(a) and 337(a), and California Rules of Court, rule 1407(e)(3), require that such notice be given. In addition, respondent failed to determine whether notice was "given as required by law," or to "make an appropriate finding [regarding notice] noted in the minutes," as required by rule 1412(k) of the California Rules of Court.

On September 25, 1997, respondent presided over a combined jurisdictional and disposition hearing in the case. William B. was not present at the hearing and did not waive his right to be present, and no attorney appeared on his behalf. At the hearing, respondent found that Anthony was a dependent child of the court and ordered that he be placed in foster care. This action violated Penal Code section 2625(d), which provides that "no petition to adjudge the child of a prisoner a dependent child of the court" pursuant to Welfare and Institutions Code section 300(b) may be adjudicated without the physical presence of the prisoner or the prisoner's attorney, or a waiver by the prisoner. Although the minute order of the September 25, 1997, hearing indicates that the "COURT FINDS notice has been given/attempted by law[,]" notice was not given to William B. at least five days in advance of the hearing, as required by Welfare and Institutions Code section 337(a).

On February 3, 1998, respondent presided over a six-month review hearing, pursuant to Welfare and Institutions Code section 366.21(e). William B. was not present at the hearing and no attorney appeared on his behalf. Notice of the hearing was not provided to William B. Welfare and Institutions Code section 302(b) requires that unless their parental rights have been terminated, both parents shall be informed of all proceedings involving the child. Respondent failed to determine whether notice was "given as required by law," or to "make an appropriate finding noted in the minutes," as required by rule 1412(k) of the California Rules of Court. Respondent found that William B. had not complied with the requirements for reunification services, and terminated reunification services.

On June 4, 1998, respondent presided over a selection and implementation hearing in the case. At that hearing, respondent terminated the parental rights of William B. Counsel for William B., whom respondent appointed on April 21, 1998, appeared at the hearing. However, respondent's order terminating parental rights was based on respondent's findings at the six-month review hearing that respondent conducted on February 3, 1998, without notice to William B., or an appearance by William B. or counsel on his behalf.

On March 10, 1999, the Court of Appeal reversed respondent's order terminating parental rights and remanded the case for a new jurisdictional hearing. (In re Anthony B., No. E023029.) The court found that "egregious due process violations" rendered the proceedings in the juvenile court "fundamentally unfair." The Court of Appeal found that due process violations in the case included the failure to provide adequate notice to William B. of the filing of the petition, the detention hearing, the jurisdictional hearing, and the six-month review hearing. The court also found that by the time respondent appointed counsel for William B., prior to the selection and implementation hearing:

> … it was too late because the juvenile court relied on the findings of the earlier [six-month review] hearing as the basis for its order terminating parental rights. Such reliance is proper only when the parent has had notice and the opportunity to appear at the earlier hearing. [Citation.]

Respondent's conduct violated the Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 1, 2A, 3B(2), 3B(7) and 3B(8).

COUNT THREE

In In re Shawn P., No. IJ-10363, as set forth below, respondent violated the due process rights of Penelope P. and abused his authority by ordering that the legal custody of Penelope's child, Shawn P., be transferred to Shawn's father, without giving Penelope P. notice or a reasonable opportunity to be heard, and without making a finding of dependency.

On January 16, 1998, Penelope P. received legal and physical custody of Shawn in family law court. On February 3, 1998, the DPSS filed a petition in In re Shawn P., No. IJ-10363, alleging Shawn to be a dependent child of the court pursuant to Welfare and Institutions Code section 300.

On February 4, 1998, respondent presided at a detention hearing in the case. At the hearing, respondent appointed separate counsel for Shawn, Shawn's mother, and Shawn's father. Shawn's attorney requested that custody of Shawn be given to Shawn's father. Penelope P.'s attorney objected to the request and stated, correctly, that his client was unaware that such action was going to take place that day. Respondent ordered that Shawn would go to the custody of the father, and dismissed the case without making a finding of dependency.

Because respondent issued his order without notice to Penelope P. that there would be a hearing at which it could be decided that custody of Shawn could be transferred to the father, respondent's order violated due process. Because respondent lacked jurisdiction to make a custody order without first finding Shawn to be a dependent child of the court, respondent's custody order exceeded respondent's jurisdiction and constituted an abuse of authority.

On March 5, 1999, the Court of Appeal reversed respondent's order. The court found that "the juvenile court … violated the mother's basic rights and exceeded its jurisdiction in giving custody to the out-of-custody parent…." (In re Shawn P., No. E022375.)

Respondent's conduct violated the Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 1, 2A, 3B(2), 3B(7) and 3B(8).

COUNT FOUR

In In re Emily D., No. IJ-11166, as set forth below, respondent violated the due process rights of the parents and maternal grandparents of Emily D. when respondent ordered, without notice or a reasonable opportunity to be heard, that Emily, who was residing with her grandparents, be placed in a non-relative foster/adoptive home and that there be no visitation by the parents or grandparents.

On August 17, 1999, respondent presided at the six-month review hearing in In re Emily D., No. IJ-11166, pursuant to Welfare and Institutions Code section 366.21(e). At the time of the hearing, Emily was approximately eight months old and had resided with her maternal grandparents, Cindy and John H., for all but one day since she was approximately three days old. The grandparents were not present at the hearing. Emily's two older siblings, Jordan and Megan, resided with their parents, Molly and Michael D., and were also in dependency proceedings.

At the hearing, the DPSS recommended that the dependency of Jordan and Megan be terminated, with custody of both children given to the parents. The DPSS also recommended that family reunification services be terminated with regard to Emily, based on the parents' waiving their right to further reunification services with her. The parents wanted Emily to be adopted by the maternal grandparents, Cindy and John H.

Emily's attorney expressed concern as to Emily's placement. She stated: "I think as the child that's not wanted, it's going to be very difficult for her to be adopted by the grandparents and live close to her siblings knowing that she's … an unwanted child."

The attorney for the DPSS pointed out that "it is the law to request placement of the children with relatives first if possible." Respondent replied:

> Well, I understand that, but this is weird here. There's got to be something wrong with their heads as I see it. They want to keep two but don't want the third one? They want to give the third one to Grandma and Grandpa. All sounds kind of ridiculous to me.

Respondent also stated: "Why don't we just take all of them, keep them all together, and find an adoptive home for all three of them and they can live together."

When the DPSS attorney stated that the DPSS was recommending that custody of the two older children be returned to the parents, respondent stated: "But they are going to have to decide whether they want all three or none. Not going to do this."

Following a recess, Emily's attorney requested that Emily be placed immediately in a non-relative foster/adoptive home. The attorney for Emily's mother, Molly D., stated that the mother "will reluctantly agree to that since it's the best alternative that seems to be available at this time." The father's attorney also expressed the father's agreement with the request. Respondent ordered that Emily be placed in a non-relative foster/adoptive home, and that there be no visitation by the parents or grandparents.

The hearing took place without notice to Emily's parents or to her custodial grandparents that an order removing Emily from the physical custody of the grandparents and placing her in a foster home would be considered at the hearing. Welfare and Institutions Code section 387 provides that "[a]n order changing or modifying a previous order by removing a child from the physical custody of a … relative … and directing placement in a foster home … shall be made only after noticed hearing upon a supplemental petition." Notice of the hearing must be given to the parents and the present custodian of the minor pursuant to Welfare and Institutions Code sections 332(e), 335(a), 337(c) and 387(b), and California Rules of Court, rule 1431(c). Because no supplemental petition was filed and no noticed hearing on such a petition took place, respondent's order violated Welfare and Institutions Code section 387.

The failure to provide notice circumvented the rights of Emily's parents, and of Emily's grandparents as custodians, to request that the clerk of the juvenile court issue subpoenas requiring the testimony of witnesses and the production of papers at the hearing, pursuant to Welfare and Institutions Code section 341 and California Rules of Court, rule 1408(d).

The failure to provide notice to the grandparents that respondent would consider issuing an order to remove Emily from their home also precluded them from applying to respondent for recognition as Emily's "de facto" parents, pursuant to rule 1412(e) of the California Rules of Court. A de facto parent has the right to be present, to be represented by counsel, and to present evidence at hearings at which the status of the dependent child is at issue.

Following respondent's order, Molly D. filed a petition for writ of mandate in the Court of Appeal in Molly D. v. Superior Court, No. E025658. On September 30, 1999, the court invited the DPSS to file an informal response, stating:

> Based on our preliminary review of the petition and record, this court is concerned that the trial court abused its discretion in ordering that the minor be immediately removed from the care of her maternal grandparents and placed in a non-relative fost-adopt home. The Department of Public Social Services has not sought such an order, and the parents could not have anticipated such an action being taken by the court. Their reluctant agreement to the placement was prompted only by the trial court's threat to remove all three children, and we conclude that they did not waive objections to the court's order. At a minimum, the due process rights of the parents were violated because of the failure to afford them adequate notice and a hearing on the matter. Moreover, this procedure deprived the grandparents, who may well be entitled to de facto parent status, of an opportunity to appear and be heard in this matter.

Respondent's conduct violated the Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 1, 2A, 3B(2), 3B(7) and 3B(8).

DISCIPLINE

The commission adopts the factual stipulations set forth in the Stipulation for Discipline by Consent and finds that Judge Bishop has admitted all of the factual allegations set forth in the Notice of Formal Proceedings.

The commission finds that Judge Bishop's misdeeds constitute sanctionable actions under article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution. The commission concludes that Judge Bishop's actions on each count violated canons 1 (a judge shall uphold the integrity and independence of the judiciary), 2A ("A judge shall respect and comply with the law and shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary"), 3B(2) ("A judge shall be faithful to the law regardless of partisan interests, public clamor, or fear of criticism, and shall maintain professional competence in the law"), 3B(7) ("A judge shall accord to every person who has a legal interest in a proceeding, or that person's lawyer, full right to be heard according to law"), and 3B(8) ("A judge shall dispose of all judicial matters fairly, promptly, and efficiently").

The commission accepts the request by Judge Bishop and Trial Counsel to resolve this matter by imposition of a private admonishment. A number of factors support this resolution, including: (1) Judge Bishop is 72 years old, has served as a judge for over 20 years, and is no longer acting in a judicial capacity; (2) Judge Bishop has agreed not to seek or accept an assignment, appointment or reference of work from a California state court and has further agreed that were he to seek or accept an assignment, appointment or reference of work, the commission could rescind this private admonishment and reopen formal proceedings; and (3) this resolution avoids the costs of an evidentiary hearing. The issuance of a private admonishment also is supported by the commission's determination that the private admonishment shall be "open to the public." (See Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (j).)

This decision shall constitute the private admonishment of Judge Eugene R. Bishop.

Commission members Mr. Michael A. Kahn, Judge Rise Jones Pichon, Ms. Lara Bergthold, Judge Madeleine I. Flier, Mrs. Crystal Lui, Justice Vance W. Raye, Ms. Ramona Ripston, Ms. Barbara Schraeger, and Dr. Betty L. Wyman voted to impose this private admonishment and to release the private admonishment to the public. Commission member Mr. Marshall B. Grossman concurs with the decision, but would characterize the admonishment as public as he believes that is what it is in substance. Commission member Ms. Gayle Gutierrez did not participate in this proceeding.

| INQUIRY CONCERNINGCOMMISSIONER TAYLOR CULVERNo. 199 | ORDER DISMISSING PROCEEDINGS PURSUANT TO STIPULATED DISPOSITION AND VACATING HEARING |

The Commission on Judicial Performance filed a Notice of Formal Proceedings (Notice) in the inquiry concerning Taylor Culver, Commissioner of the Alameda County Superior Court on October 17, 2016.

A hearing before special masters appointed by the Supreme Court is set to commence in San Francisco on January 23, 2017. On December 12, 2016, former Commissioner Culver, represented by Arthur J. Harris, Esq., and the examiner for the commission, Mark A. Lizarraga, (the parties) submitted a Stipulated Disposition of Pending Proceedings in the above-entitled-matter (Stipulation). Pursuant to the Stipulation, the parties request that the commission dismiss the matter based on former Commissioner Culver's agreement not to seek or hold judicial office, or accept a position or an assignment as a judicial officer, subordinate judicial officer, or judge pro tem with any court in the State of California, or accept a reference of work from any California state court, at any time in the future. In the Stipulation, the former commissioner acknowledges that he resigned his position with the Alameda County Superior Court on November 30, 2016.

The terms and conditions of the Stipulation state that if former Commissioner Culver fails to comply with any of the terms and conditions of the agreement, or seeks or holds judicial office, or accepts a position or an assignment as a judicial officer, subordinate judicial officer, or judge pro tem with any court in the State of California, or accepts a reference of work from any California state court, at any time in the future, the commission may seek to discipline the former commissioner and may re-institute formal proceedings regarding the matters charged in the Notice. Further, the agreement provides that the terms of the disposition may be made public upon the commission's acceptance of the Stipulation and included in any dispositional order issued by the commission.

By a vote of 9 to 0, the commission determined to accept the Stipulation upon the terms and conditions set forth in the Stipulation. Commission members Anthony P. Capozzi, Esq.; Hon. Ignazio J. Ruvolo; Ms. Sarah Kruer Jager; Ms. Pattyl A. Kasparian; Hon. Thomas M. Maddock; Dr. Michael A. Moodian; Nanci E. Nishimura, Esq.; Mr. Richard Simpson and Mr. Adam N. Torres voted to accept the parties' Stipulation. Commission members Ms. Mary Lou Aranguren and Hon. Erica R. Yew were recused.

Based on the terms and conditions of the Stipulation, the commission hereby dismisses Inquiry No. 199, and agrees not to pursue further the matters charged in the Notice, provided the former commissioner complies with the terms and conditions of the Stipulation. The hearing set for January 23, 2017, is hereby vacated.

| INQUIRY CONCERNINGCOMMISSIONER TAYLOR CULVER,No. 199 | STIPULATED DISPOSITION OFPENDING FORMAL PROCEEDINGS |

Former Commissioner Taylor Culver, represented by Arthur J. Harris, Esq., and the examiner, Mark A. Lizarraga, ("the parties") submit this proposed disposition of Inquiry No. 199. The parties believe this agreement is in the best interests of the Commission on Judicial Performance ("commission") and former Commissioner Culver because it adequately protects the public and avoids the delay, cost, and uncertainty of further proceedings.

The parties request that the commission dismiss this matter based on former Commissioner Culver's agreement to not seek or hold judicial office, or accept a position or an assignment as a judicial officer, subordinate judicial officer, or judge pro tem with any court in the State of California, or accept a reference of work from any California state court, at any time in the future. This proposed disposition is consistent with previous commission cases where proceedings were closed when a subordinate judicial officer resigned with the agreement not to serve or seek to serve in a judicial capacity.[1]

The parties stipulate and agree to the following terms and conditions:

TERMS AND CONDITIONS OF AGREEMENT

1. This agreement resolves the matters at issue in Inquiry Concerning Commissioner Taylor Culver, No. 199.

2. Former Commissioner Culver acknowledges that he resigned his position as court commissioner with the Alameda County Superior Court on November 30, 2016, and now agrees to not seek or hold judicial office, accept a position or an assignment as a judicial officer, subordinate judicial officer, or judge pro tem with any court in the State of California, or accept a reference of work from any California state court, at any time in the future.

3. The commission shall dismiss Inquiry No. 199 and shall not in the future seek to discipline former Commissioner Culver for the matters charged in the Notice of Formal Proceedings filed on October 17, 2016, provided the commissioner complies with the terms of this agreement.

4. The commission may disclose to the State Bar of California all or any part of the information obtained through the commission's preliminary investigation of former Commissioner Culver that resulted in the filing of the Notice of Formal Proceedings.

5. In the future, if former Commissioner Culver fails to comply with any of the terms and conditions of this agreement, or seeks or holds judicial office, or accepts a position or an assignment as a judicial officer, subordinate judicial officer or judge pro tem with any court in the State of California, or accepts a reference of work from any California state court, the commission may seek to

SUPERIOR COURT of the State of California, IN AND FOR the CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO, Respondent;
The COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE, Real Party in Interest.

Civ. 40184.

Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

March 15, 1977.

Hearing Denied May 12, 1977.

Justice of the Supreme Court of California sought writ to review order of Superior Court finding him guilty of contempt of court for his failure and refusal to submit to the taking of his deposition and decreeing that he be punished for such contempt by imprisonment until he submits to taking of deposition. The Court of Appeal, Taylor, P.J., held that a judge who is the subject of proceedings instituted before the Commission on Judicial Performance to inquire into his fitness to perform duties does not have the privilege afforded to a defendant in a criminal case to refuse to respond as a witness and to testify; he may be called upon to testify and can refuse only to disclose a matter that may tend to incriminate him. The Court also held that as object of order fixing punishment for civil contempt was to obtain answers to questions for the Commission, and there was no longer any proceeding before the Commission in which questions might be asked, release of justice from the restraint imposed upon him was required.

Order vacated.

Inasmuch as order finding justice of the California Supreme Court guilty of contempt for failure and refusal to submit to taking of his deposition at the time and place specified in order obtained by the Commission on Judicial Performance had coercive, not punitive, purpose in that its object was to obtain answers to questions before the Commission, but there was no longer any proceeding pending before the Commission in which questions might be asked, release of justice from restraint imposed by the order was required. TAYLOR, Presiding Justice.

Petitioner is an 82-year-old judge who is the subject of formal proceedings instituted before the Commission on Judicial Qualifications (now the Commission on Judicial Performance) to inquire into his fitness to perform his duties as a justice of the Supreme Court of California. He seeks an appropriate writ to review an order of the superior court finding him guilty of contempt of court for his failure and refusal to submit to the taking of his deposition at the time and place specified and directed by the court and decreeing that he be punished for such contempt by imprisonment until he submits to the 93 taking of his deposition. [FN1] This case has been fully briefed by petitioner and the commission and since the issues to be decided are purely matters of law, we have determined that an order to show cause would add nothing to the full presentation already made and we decide the matter peremptorily.

> FN1. A judgment of contempt which is made final and conclusive by section 1222 of the Code of Civil Procedure is not appealable (Code Civ.Proc., s 904.1, subd. (a)(2)), but may be reviewed by certiorari, or, where appropriate, by habeas corpus (In re Buckley (1973) 10 Cal.3d 237, 259, 110 Cal.Rptr. 121). We choose to treat the petition as a petition for a writ of review. Enforcement of the order has been stayed pending final determination of the merits of this petition.

The matter arose as follows: On April 29, 1976, after a preliminary investigation, the commission, real party in interest herein, instituted formal proceedings against petitioner to inquire into his ability to perform his duties as a justice of the Supreme Court of California.

On June 11, 1976, the commission issued an order directing that petitioner appear on July 9, 1976, and submit to the taking of his deposition. On August 5, 1976, after petitioner *235 had failed and refused to appear at the time and place specified in the order, the commission petitioned the superior court for an order requiring petitioner to appear and testify. On September 20, 1976, over the objections of petitioner, the superior court made an order requiring petitioner to appear and testify on October 1, 1976; and a subpoena to take his deposition was issued by the clerk of the superior court.

On September 29, 1976, after petitioner had been personally served with certified copies of the order and subpoena, petitioner filed in the superior court his written declaration under penalty of perjury stating that upon the advice of his attorneys, he would not appear at the time and placed set for the taking of his deposition and would not answer any questions touching upon the charges against him, asserting his constitutional privilege against self- incrimination.

On October 4, 1976, after petitioner had failed to obey the order and subpoena, the commission sought and the superior court issued an order that petitioner show cause why he should not be adjudged guilty of contempt of court and punished accordingly.

On October 18, 1976, petitioner filed an answer to the order to show cause, contending that he had, in his declaration under penalty of 94 perjury, asserted his constitutional privilege not to be called as a witness and not to testify, and therefore he could not be held in contempt for his refusal to appear and submit to his deposition as directed in the order and the subpoena.

On October 25, 1976, after a hearing at which petitioner did not appear in person but did appear through counsel, the superior court found petitioner guilty of contempt of court for his failure and refusal to submit to the taking of his deposition at the time and place specified and directed by the court and ordered that he be punished for such contempt by imprisonment until he submits to the taking of his deposition. The superior court stayed the execution of the order until November 8, 1976, to afford petitioner an opportunity to seek review of the order.

Petitioner contests the jurisdiction of the commission to proceed against him, contends that the commission has exercised its powers in a manner which has abridged his privileges and immunities, denied him due process of the law and the equal protection of the laws, and argues that the enactment of Proposition 7 on November 2, 1976, has subjected him to an ex post facto law. [FN2] In this case, in view of subsequent developments hereafter noted, we are bound to vacate the contempt order for reasons wholly unconcerned with the jurisdiction of the commission to proceed against petitioner. Consequently, for purposes of this opinion, we need not discuss all of the issues raised. However, for the guidance of the commission, we deem it appropriate and helpful to discuss its authority to issue the subpoena and the authority of the court to act in aid of the commission.

> FN2. Under an amendment to article VI, section 18 of the California Constitution, adopted at the November 1976 general election, a recommendation by the commission for the removal or retirement of a justice of the Supreme Court is reviewed by a tribunal of seven Court of Appeal justices selected by lot.

The authority of the commission to inquire into the fitness of petitioner to perform his duties as a justice of the Supreme Court of California has been granted under article VI, section 18 of the state Constitution and the necessary implementation of this constitutional power has been expressly provided for by statute (Gov. Code, s 68701, et seq.). In the conduct of investigations and formal proceedings, the commission has the general power to administer oaths, to issue subpoenas for the attendance of witnesses, and to make orders for or concerning the inspection of books and records (Gov. Code, s 68750). In addition, 95 Government Code section 68753 expressly provides that 'In any pending investigation or formal proceeding, the commission or the masters may order the deposition of a person residing within or without the State to be taken in such form and subject to such limitations as may be prescribed in the order.' *236 Neither this section nor any other provision of law exempts a judge who is the subject of a proceeding under article VI, section 18 from the class of 'person(s)' whose depositions may be taken under the provisions of Government Code section 68753.

Government Code section 68753 further provides that 'If the judge and counsel for the commission do not stipulate as to the manner of taking the deposition, either the judge or counsel may file in the superior court a petition . . . asking that an order be made requiring such person to appear and testify before a designated officer. Upon the filing of the petition, the court may make an order requiring such person to appear and testify. A subpoena for such deposition shall be issued by the clerk and the deposition shall be taken and returned, in the manner prescribed by law for depositions in civil actions.' Disobedience of a lawful order of a court of justice or of a subpoena duly served, or refusal to be sworn or answer as a witness are contempts of the authority of the court (Code Civ. Proc., s 1209, subds. 5 and 9), punishable under the provisions of Code of Civil Procedure section 1218 or 1219.

[1][2] Petitioner argues that he may not be held in contempt for disobedience of the order and subpoena, for the order and subpoena directing him to appear and submit to his deposition violated his constitutional privilege against self-incrimination (Cal.Const., art. I, s 15; United States Const., Amend. V and XIV). It is well established in this state that an order made in violation of a person's constitutional rights is issued without or in excess of jurisdiction and cannot produce a valid judgment of contempt (In re Berry (1968) 68 Cal.2d 137, 147, 65 Cal.Rptr. 273, 436 P.2d 273.) A person affected by such an order has a choice of complying with the order or, at his peril, disobeying the order and raising his jurisdictional contentions when he is sought to be punished for such disobedience. 'If he has correctly assessed his legal position, and it is therefore finally determined that the order was issued without or in excess of jurisdiction, his violation of such void order constitutes no punishable wrong. (Citations.) If, however, the final judicial determination is otherwise he may be punished' (In re Berry, supra, p. 149, 65 Cal.Rptr. p. 281, 436 P.2d p. 281).

96 The commission argues that the privilege not to be called as a witness and not to testify may be asserted only by a Defendant in a criminal case, and that all other persons, including a judge who is the subject of a proceeding under article VI, section 18, must appear when subpoenaed as a witness but may assert the privilege to refuse to disclose any matter that may tend to incriminate them, as provided in Evidence Code section 940 and People v. Whelchel (1967) 255 Cal.App.2d 455, 456, 63 Cal.Rptr. 258).

In order to determine whether petitioner has correctly assessed his legal position, we must decide whether petitioner is a Defendant in a criminal case and thus entitled to assert the privilege not to be called as a witness and not to testify. Except as otherwise provided by statute, no person has a privilege to refuse to be a witness (Evid. Code, s 911). An exception is contained in Evidence Code section 930, which provides that 'To the extent that such privilege exists under the Constitution of the United States or the State of California, a Defendant in a criminal case has a privilege not to be called as a witness and not to testify' (emphasis added). The Constitution of the United States, Amendment V, in pertinent part, declares that 'No person . . . shall be compelled in any Criminal case to be a witness against himself . . .' (emphasis added). The corresponding provision in the California Constitution is contained in article I, section 15, which declares that 'Persons may not . . . be compelled in a Criminal cause to be a witness against themselves . . .' (emphasis added).

[3] Penal Code section 15 defines a crime as follows: 'A crime or public offense is an act committed or omitted in violation of a law forbidding or commanding it, And to which is annexed, upon conviction, *237 either of the following punishments:

'1. Death;

'2. Imprisonment;

'3. Fine;

'4. Removal from office; or,

'5. Disqualification to hold and enjoy any office of honor, trust, or profit in this State' (emphasis added). The section is in the conjunctive;97 both of the conditions must be satisfied before the act will constitute a crime (People v. Crutcher (1968) 262 Cal.App.2d 750, 754, 68 Cal.Rptr. 904).

The notice of formal proceedings to inquire into allegations against petitioner charges petitioner in Count One with wilful and persistent failure to perform his duties; in Court Two with conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute; in Count Three with having a disability that seriously interferes with the performance of his duties and is, or is likely to become, permanent; and in Count Four with wilful misconduct in office. In order that a public offense be committed, some statute, ordinance, or regulation prior in time to the commission of the act must denounce it (Keeler v. Superior Court (1970) 2 Cal.3d 619, 632, 87 Cal.Rptr. 481, 470 P.2d 617). None of the foregoing acts or omissions described in the above counts is denounced as a crime by statute, ordinance or regulation. Subcount E under Count Four does charge petitioner with acts which would be in violation of statute (presentation of unlawful claims, defined as a crime by Pen.Code, s 72). [FN3]

FN3. Count Four was dismissed in its entirety by the special masters with the approval of the commission on November 8, 1976.

[4] But the commission is not invested with the power to prosecute a criminal action, nor is it a court with jurisdiction to legally convict and punish a person who is charged with a public offense. A criminal action, a proceeding by which a party charged with a public offense is accused and brought to trial and punished (Pen.Code, s 683), is prosecuted in the name of the People of the State of California, as a party, against the person charged with the offense (Pen.Code, s 684), who is designated as the defendant (Pen.Code, s 685). No person can be punished for a public offense, except upon a Legal conviction in a court having jurisdiction thereof (Pen.Code, s 681). The commission has no authority to prosecute or punish a person charged with a public offense; the power of the commission extends no further than to Recommend to the Supreme Court the removal or retirement of a judge who is the subject of a proceeding under article VI, section 18 of the Constitution.

We find the proceedings against petitioner instituted by the commission to be analogous to disciplinary proceedings instituted by the State Bar against attorneys at law to inquire into their fitness to continue in the capacity of officers of the court. It has been held that the purpose of 98 disciplinary proceedings against attorneys is not to punish the individual but rather to protect the courts and public from the official ministrations of persons unfit to practice, and that such a proceeding is not a criminal case for purposes of the privilege against self-incrimination (Segretti v. State Bar (1976) 15 Cal.3d 878, 886, 126 Cal.Rptr. 793, 544 P.2d 929; Black v. State Bar (1972) 7 Cal.3d 676, 688, 103 Cal.Rptr. 288, 499 P.2d 968; In re Vaughan (1922) 189 Cal. 491, 496--497, 209 P. 353). Likewise, in the case of a judge who is the subject of a proceeding under article VI, section 18 of the Constitution, the object of the proceeding is to protect the public and the litigants before the court from the official ministrations of a judge unfit for his high office. Since the object of both proceedings is the same, we find no valid reason for according to a judge who is the subject to a proceeding under article VI, section 18 of the Constitution any greater protection with respect to the privilege than that accorded to attorneys who are the subjects of disciplinary proceedings 238 to inquire into their fitness to continue in the capacity of officers of the court.

[5][6] Accordingly, we hold that a judge who is the subject of proceedings 'which are neither criminal nor before a 'court of justice' . . .' (McGartney v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1974)12 Cal.3d 512, 521, 116 Cal.Rptr. 260, 266, 526 P.2d 268, 274) does not have the privilege afforded to a defendant in a criminal case to refuse to respond as a witness and to testify (Evid.Code, s 930); he may be called upon to testify and can refuse only to disclose a matter that may tend to incriminate him (Evid.Code, s 940). (Cf. Black v. State Bar, supra, 7 Cal.3d p. 688, 103 Cal.Rptr. 288, 499 P.2d 968; Segretti v. State Bar, supra, 15 Cal.3d p. 886, 126 Cal.Rptr. 793, 544 P.2d 929.) We conclude that the order of the superior court and the subpoena directing petitioner to appear and testify at a deposition were valid, and that petitioner's disobedience of the order and subpoena was a contempt of the authority of the court. [FN4]

FN4. Although an attorney may not be held in contempt of court for advising his client, in good faith, to assert his privilege against self- incrimination (Maness v. Meyers (1975) 419 U.S. 449, 95 S.Ct. 584, 594-- 595, 42 L.Ed.2d 574), the client risks contempt if the attorney's advice proves to be wrong.

[7] If the superior court had elected to punish petitioner, pursuant to the provisions of Code of Civil Procedure section 1218, we would not interfere with the order. We have determined, however, that because of the provisional nature of the order and events occurring subsequent thereto, petitioner cannot be further restrained of his liberty. Unlike a commitment under Code of Civil Procedure section 1218, which authorizes imprisonment for a definite term, a commitment under Code *99 of Civil Procedure section 1219 is provisional. Under Code of Civil Procedure section 1219, a contemnor may be imprisoned until he has performed an act 'which is yet in the power of the person to perform . . ..' It has been held that the conditional imprisonment of a witness for civil contempt for refusal to testify must cease when the jury has been discharged and the trial concluded (Ex Parte Overend (1898) 122 Cal. 201, 203--204, 54 P. 740; In re McKinney (1968) 70 Cal.2d 8, 10, fn. 1, 73 Cal.Rptr. 580, 447 P.2d 972), where the grand jury has been finally discharged (Shillitani v. United States (1965) 384 U.S. 364, 371--372, 86 S.Ct. 1531, 16 L.Ed.2d 622), and where the litigation is otherwise terminated (Ex Parte Rowe (1857) 7 Cal. 175, 176--177; Morelli v. Superior Court (1969) 1 Cal.3d 328, 332, 82 Cal.Rptr. 375, 461 P.2d 665). On January 7, 1977, when the commission submitted to the Supreme Court of California its findings, conclusions and recommendation that petitioner be retired or removed from the office of associate justice of that court, the commission completed its function and the basis for the civil contempt no longer existed. The law neither does nor requires idle acts (Civ.Code, s 3532). Since the purpose of the order fixing the punishment for civil contempt was coercive, not punitive, its object being to obtain answers to questions for the commission, and since there is no longer any proceeding pending before the commission in which questions may be asked, the contemnor must be released from the restraint imposed upon him by the order of the superior court (In re Lifschutz (1970) 2 Cal.3d 415, 439, fn. 27, 85 Cal.Rptr. 829, 467 P.2d 557).

The order of October 25, 1976, is hereby vacated.

KANE and ROUSE, JJ., concur.

END OF DOCUMENT

[L.A. No. 31140. Oct. 18, 1979]

STANLEY MOSK, an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court, Petitioner, v.
THE SUPERIOR COURT OF LOS ANGELES COUNTY, Respondent;
COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE, Real Party in Interest.

SUMMARY

An associate Supreme Court justice filed a petition for a writ of mandate in the superior court to quash a subpoena ordering him to appear as a witness at a public hearing before the Commission on Judicial Performance, which was investigating the possible judicial misconduct by one or more justices of the Supreme Court. Petitioner sought to quash the subpoena on the ground the public investigation, pursuant to Cal. Rules of Court, rule 902.5, was unconstitutional in light of Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (f), which requires the Judicial Council to make rules which provide for confidentiality of proceedings before the commission. The superior court denied the petition. However, the Court of Appeal granted the petition and issued a peremptory writ ordering the Superior Court to quash the commission's subpoena. Before the Court of Appeal's decision became final, the commission petitioned the California Supreme Court for a writ of mandate to compel the Court of Appeal to vacate the peremptory writ or to transfer the proceedings to itself on its own motion. All the Supreme Court justices, except one, disqualified themselves from acting on the commission's petition. The Chief Justice assigned six Court of Appeal justices, who were selected by lot pursuant to an order by the Supreme Court, to act on the petition. The court then ordered the superior court proceeding transferred to itself on its own motion. The Supreme Court subsequently found and delcared that the remaining Supreme Court justice was disqualified from participating in the case, and a seventh Court of Appeal justice was then selected to replace him.

The Supreme Court issued a peremptory writ of mandate directing the superior court to vacate the order entered and to enter a new order quashing the commission's subpoena of the associate justice. The court held that the Supreme Court, composed of all assigned judges pro tempore, had constitutional authority and jurisdiction to act in the matter. The court also held the fact that the Chief Justice was disqualified from deciding the merits of a given case did not preclude her from exercising her administrative responsibilities in assigning judges to replace disqualified Supreme Court justices. The court further held that in light of the history and purpose of Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, the limited scope of the commission's authority to investigate judicial misconduct, the strong public policy in favor of confidential investigations by the commission, and the absence of any indication that the people of California intended to change the constitutional requirement of constitutionality by revision of art. VI, in 1966, the Judicial Council had authority to adopt rules which provide for confidentiality, but it did not have the power to authorize public investigations and hearings before the commission. Accordingly, the court held the associate justice could not constitutionally be compelled to testify at the public hearing before the commission. (Opinion by The Court.)

HEADNOTES

Classified to California Digest of Official Reports, 3d Series

(1a, 1b) Judges § 4—Temporary Judges—Authority of Supreme Court Composed of Temporary Judges.—A Supreme Court composed of all assigned judges pro tempore had constitutional authority and jurisdiction to decide a petition by an associate Supreme Court justice to quash a subpoena ordering him to appear as a witness at a public hearing before the Commission on Judicial Performance which was investigating possible judicial misconduct by one or more justices of the Supreme Court, where all of the regular justices of the court were disqualified from acting in the matter. The Constitution gives the Chief Justice broad authority to expedite the work of the courts, and implicit in that authority is the Chief Justice's power to assign judges to assist the Supreme Court when regular Supreme Court justices are disqualified. The fact that the Chief Justice was disqualified from deciding the merits of a given case did not preclude her from exercising her administrative responsibilities in assigning justices to replace disqualified Supreme Court justices. Moreover, when all the Supreme Court justices were ultimately disqualified, the Chief Justice was empowered to make the assignment under the rule of necessity.

(2) Judges § 4—Temporary Judges—Selection.—The manner, method, or criteria for selection of duly qualified assigned judges is within the inherent power of the Supreme Court and within the discretion of the Chief Justice in the exercise of her constitutional authority to make the assignments. Selection of assigned judges by lot is a proper method which the Chief Justice may use to avoid charges of bias, prejudice, or favoritism in making the selection.

(3) Judges § 4—Temporary Judges—Authority.—A duly assigned judge pro tempore generally has the same power and authority (pro hac vice) as a regular judge of the court to which he or she is assigned.

(4a, 4b) Judges § 1—Commission on Judicial Performance—Confidentiality of Proceedings.—Rule 902.5, of the Cal. Rules of Court, which authorized a public hearing of an investigation by the Commission on Judicial Performance of possible judicial misconduct by one or more justices of the Supreme Court, was inconsistent with Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (f), which requires the Judicial Council to make rules which provide for confidentiality of proceedings before the commission, in light of the history and purpose of the provision, the limited scope of the commission's authority to investigate judicial misconduct, the strong public policy in favor of confidential investigations by the commission, and in the absence of any indication that the people of California intended to change the constitutional requirement of confidentiality by revision of art. VI in 1966. Thus, the Judicial Council has authority to adopt rules which provide for confidentiality, but it does not have the power to authorize public investigations and hearings before the commission. Accordingly, an associate justice of the Supreme Court could not constitutionally be compelled to testify at a public hearing before the commission.

[See Cal.Jur.3d, Judges, § 65; Am.Jur.2d, Judges, § 18.]

(5) Judges § 1—Commission on Judicial Performance—Authority.—The Commission on Judicial Performance does not have the authority to investigate a "court"; its inquiry must be limited to misconduct or disability of an individual judge. The commission may privately admonish a judge for improper action or a dereliction of duty, but it has no power to censure, remove, retire or otherwise discipline a judge. It can only make certain recommendations to the Supreme Court, which then reviews the evidence and makes its own finding. Although the commission's findings are given great weight by the Supreme Court, they are inconclusive except where the commission, having made a preliminary investigation, concludes that there is insufficient evidence to charge a judge with judicial misconduct.

(6) Judges § 1—Commission on Judicial Performance—Confidentiality—Public Policy.—The confidentiality of investigations and hearings by the Commission on Judicial Performance is based on sound public policy. Confidentiality encourages the filing of complaints and the willing participation of citizens and witnessess by providing protection against possible retaliation or recrimination. It protects judges from injury which might result from publication of unexamined and unwarranted complaints by disgruntled litigants or their attorneys, or by political adversaries. It preserves confidence in the judiciary as an institution by avoiding premature announcement of groundless claims of judicial misconduct or disability, and is essential to protecting the judge's constitutional right to a private admonishment if the circumstances so warrant. When removal or retirement is justified by the charges, judges are more likely to resign or retire voluntarily without the necessity of a formal proceeding if the publicity that would accompany such a proceeding can thereby be avoided.

(7) Statutes § 13—Amendment—Meaning.—Generally, a substantial change in the language of a statute or constitutional provision by an amendment indicates an intention to change its meaning. But a mere change in phraseology, incident to a revision of the Constitution or statute, does not result in a change or meaning unless the intent to make such a change clearly appears.

(8) Words, Phrases and Maxims—"Provide for."—The words "provide for" are generally used to mean "to take precautionary measures" or "to make a proviso" or "to supply or furnish" in view of a possible need.

(9) Judges § 1—Commission on Judicial Performance—Confidentiality—Rules.—Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (f), requires the Judicial Council "to establish" rules for confidentiality of proceedings before the Commission on Judicial Performance, and while the Judicial Council is delegated discretionary power to establish rules which provide for confidentiality, § 18, subd. (f), does not, on its face, give the council discretionary power to make exceptions to the confidentiality requirement by authorizing public investigations and hearings.

(10) Constitutional Law § 10—Construction of Constitutions—Ambiguity.—Where a provision in a Constitution is ambiguous, a court must ordinarily adopt that interpretation which carries out the intent and objective of the drafters of the provision and the people by whose vote it was adopted. In order to ascertain the intent and objective of an ambiguous constitutional provision, a court may consider official reports of the Constitution Revision Commission.

(11) Constitutional Law § 16—Construction of Constitutions—Contemporaneous and Longstanding Construction.—While the contemporaneous administrative construction of an enactment by those charged with its enforcement and interpretation is entitled to great weight unless erroneous or unauthorized, the ultimate determination of the meaning of a constitutional provision rests with the court.

(12) Mandamus and Prohibition § 52—Mandamus—Defenses—Laches—Delay—Commission on Judicial Performance—Public Hearings.—An associate justice of the Supreme Court who sought a writ of mandate to quash a subpoena ordering him to appear as a witness at a public hearing before the Commission on Judicial Performance was not precluded from asserting the constitutional requirement of confidentiality by not filing the petition until after the commencement of the public hearings, where the justice delayed the filing of his petition at the request of the commission, and where he advised the commission of his present position well in advance of the public hearing.

(13) Judges § 1—Commission on Judicial Performance—Confidentiality—Announcement of Results or Status of Investigation.—Where an investigation by the Commission on Judicial Performance of alleged judicial misconduct is known to the public, the commission may report the results or status of the investigation to the public without violating the constitutional requirement of "confidentiality of proceedings." While Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (f), prohibits public hearings and public reports of testimony and other evidence presented to the commission, it does not preclude either the commission or a judge under investigation publicly announcing the results of an investigation already known to the public.

OPINION

THE COURT.*—Associate Supreme Court Justice Stanley Mosk filed a petition for a writ of mandate, or other appropriate relief, in the Los Angeles County Superior Court to quash a subpoena ordering him to appear as a witness at a public hearing before the Commission on Judicial Performance (hereinafter the Commission), which is investigating possible judicial misconduct by one or more justices of the Supreme Court.[1] Justice Mosk sought to quash the subpoena on the ground the public investigation, pursuant to rule 902.5 of the California Rules of Court, is unconstitutional in light of California Constitution article VI,

*Before seven assigned judges from the California Court of Appeal: Associate Justice James A. Cobey, Second Appellant District, Division Three (Los Angeles), as Acting Chief Justice; Associate Justice Joseph A. Rattigan, First Appellate District, Division Four (San Francisco); Associate Justice James B. Scott, First Appellate District, Division Three (San Francisco); Associate Justice Hugh A. Evans, Third Appellate District (Sacramento); Associate Justice George Hopper, Fifth Appellate District (Fresno); Presiding Justice Clinton W. White, First Appellate District, Division Three (San Francisco); Associate Justice John J. Miller, First Appellate District, Division Two (San Francisco).

[1]The Commission undertook the investigation, on request of the Chief Justice, in response to widespread news media reports that one or more of the justices improperly delayed the filing of controversial decisions, particularly the decision in People v. Tanner† (Cal. 1978) until after the November 1978 election at which the names of four Supreme Court justices were on the ballot for confirmation by the voters. Justice Mosk was not one of the four justices on the ballot for reconfirmation.

section 18, subdivision (f), which requires the Judicial Council to make rules which provide for confidentiality of proceedings before the Commission. The superior court denied Justice Mosk's petition. He then petitioned the Court of Appeal, Second Appellant District, for a writ of mandate to compel the superior court to vacate its order denying his petition and to enter a new order granting relief. The Court of Appeal granted Justice Mosk's petition and issued a peremptory writ which ordered the superior court to quash the Commission's subpoena of Justice Mosk. Before the Court of Appeal's decision became final, the Commission petitioned the California Supreme Court for a writ of mandate to compel the Court of Appeal to vacate the peremptory writ; in the alternative, the Commission requested that the Supreme Court transfer the proceeding to itself on its own motion. (Commission on Judicial Performance v. Court of Appeal, L.A. No. 31134.) All the Supreme Court justices, except Associate Justice Newman, disqualified themselves from acting on the Commission's petition. The Chief Justice assigned six Court of Appeal justices, who were selected by lot pursuant to an order by the Supreme Court, to act on the petition.[2] This court then ordered the first proceeding (Mosk v. Superior Court, L.A. No. 31140) transferred to itself on its own motion.[3] (See Cal. Const., art. VI, § 12; Cal. Rules of Court, rule 20.)

Justice Mosk raises two principal questions: (1) Does the Supreme Court, composed of all assigned judges pro tempore, have constitutional authority or jurisdiction to act in this matter? (2) If so, is rule 902.5 of the California Rules of Court unconstitutional in light of article VI, section 18, subdivision (f), of the California Constitution? As we shall explain, we conclude that this court has authority to decide the merits of this dispute, that rule 902.5 is unconstitutional because it violates the confidentiality requirement of article VI, section 18, subdivision (f), and that Justice Mosk consequently cannot be compelled to testify at a public hearing before the Commission.

I

(1a) Justice Mosk argues that this court, composed of all assigned judges pro tempore, has no constitutional authority or jurisdiction to act in this case, and that the peremptory writ of mandate issued by the Court of Appeal, Second Appellate District, must therefore stand as the decision of the court of last resort.

[2]On motion by the Commission, this court subsequently found and declared that Justice Newman was disqualified from participating in this case. A seventh Court of Appeal justice was then selected by lot to replace Justice Newman.

[3]For this reason the second proceeding (Commission on Judicial Performance v. Court of Appeal, L.A. No. 31134) is dismissed.

The California Constitution, article VI, section 2, provides: "The Supreme Court consists of the Chief Justice of California and 6 associate justices. The Chief Justice may convene the court at any time. Concurrence of 4 judges present at the argument is necessary for a judgment. [¶] An acting Chief Justice shall perform all functions of the Chief Justice when the Chief Justice is absent or unable to act. The Chief Justice or, if the Chief Justice fails to do so, the court shall select an associate justice as acting Chief Justice."

The Chief Justice has long had constitutional authority to assign any lower court judge, who is otherwise qualified, to the Supreme Court to sit in place of a disqualified Supreme Court justice. The 1926 constitutional amendment which created the Judicial Council (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 1a, now § 6) provided that the Chief Justice, as chairman of the Judicial Council, "shall seek to expedite judicial business and to equalize the work of the judges, and shall provide for the assignment of any judge to another court of a like or higher jurisdiction to assist a court or judge whose calendar is congested, to act for a judge who is disqualified or unable to act, or to sit and hold court where a vacancy in the office of judge has occurred." As amended in 1966 and 1974, this provision now reads: "The Chief Justice shall seek to expedite judicial business and to equalize the work of judges. The Chief Justice may provide for the assignment of any judge to another court but only with the judge's consent if the court is of lower jurisdiction. A retired judge who consents may be assigned to any court." (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 6, par. 5th.)[4]

Although the 1966 revision of article VI eliminated the language which empowered the Chief Justice to assign any judge to another court to act for a judge who is disqualified or unable to act, the 1966 revision was not intended to preclude the Chief Justice from assigning a duly qualified judge to another court to act for a disqualified judge. The 1966 revision was part of an overall policy of the Constitution Revision Commission to eliminate unnecessary language and to state the substance of existing sections more concisely and in modern terms. (Cf. People v. Tijerina (1969) 1 Cal.3d 41, 48 [81 Cal.Rptr. 264, 459 P.2d 680]; see also Cal Const. Revision Com., Proposed Revision (1966) p. 82.) The Constitution gives the Chief Justice broad authority to expe-

[4]Code of Civil Procedure section 170.8 also provides that the Chairman of the Judicial Council (Chief Justice) may assign a judge to hear an action or proceeding in a court where there is no qualified judge in that court to hear the action or proceeding.

dite the work of the courts (see People v. Najera (1979) 88 Cal.App.3d 930, 933-934 [152 Cal.Rptr. 124]), and implicit in that authority is the Chief Justice's power to assign judges to assist the Supreme Court when regular Supreme Court justices are disqualified. Such assignments have become commonplace.

Justice Mosk argues that once the Chief Justice disqualified herself from participating in this proceeding, she was also disqualified from assigning other judges to the Supreme Court to decide this matter, and that the order assigning Court of Appeal judges to this court is therefore void (citing Noorthoek v. Superior Court (1969) 269 Cal.App.2d 600, 604-606 [75 Cal.Rptr. 61], and discussion of authority of judge disqualified under Code Civ. Proc., § 170, to make certain orders in the action or proceeding). When the Chief Justice is disqualified, normally the Acting Chief Justice makes assignments to the Supreme Court to fill vacancies. However, the fact that the Chief Justice is disqualified from deciding the merits of a given case does not preclude her from exercising her administrative responsibilities in assigning judges to replace disqualified Supreme Court justices. (Cf. Yelle v. Kramer (1974) 83 Wn.2d 464 [520 P.2d 927]; State Board of Law Examiners v. Spriggs (1945) 61 Wyo. 70 [155 P.2d 285], cert. den., 325 U.S. 886 [89 L.Ed. 2001, 65 S.Ct. 1571].) Moreover, where, as here, all the Supreme Court justices were ultimately disqualified, the Chief Justice is empowered to make the assignment under the rule of necessity.[5]

There is no constitutional provision, statute, or court rule which prescribes the manner in which assigned judges are to be selected, except for article VI, section 18, subdivision (e), which is not applicable here.[6]

[5]Under the rule of necessity a disqualified administrative officer may nevertheless act if his failure to act would necessarily result in a failure of justice. (Caminetti v. Pac. Mutual L. Ins. Co. (1943) 22 Cal.2d 344, 366 [139 P.2d 908]; see also Scannell v. Wolff (1948) 86 Cal.App.2d 489, 493 [195 Cal.Rptr. 536]; Brenkwitz v. City of Santa Cruz (1969) 272 Cal.App.2d 812, 818 [77 Cal.Rptr. 705].)

[6]Article VI, section 18, subdivision (e), of the California Constitution provides: "A recommendation of the Commission on Judicial Performance for the censure, removal or retirement of a judge of the Supreme Court shall be determined by a tribunal of 7 court of appeal judges selected by lot." Justice Mosk argues that the adoption of this provision in 1976 indicates that prior to 1976 a Supreme Court composed of assigned judges pro tempore court not have been established to consider the censure, removal or retirement of a Supreme Court justice. Section 18, subdivision (e), however, was adopted to (1) expressly provide that the matter would be decided by judges other than fellow Supreme Court justices or superior court judges, and (2) to prevent the Chief Justice from selecting the judges to be assigned to hear the matter. Nothing in the adoption of section 18, subdivision (e), suggests that it was adopted because a Supreme Court composed of all assigned judges would not have constitutional authority to hear the matter.

(2) The manner, method, or criteria for selection of duly qualified assigned judges is within the inherent power of the Supreme Court and within the discretion of the Chief Justice in the exercise of her constitutional authority to make the assignments.[7] Selection of assigned judges by lot is a proper method which the Chief Justice may use to avoid charges of bias, prejudice, or favoritism in making the selection. (Cf. Yelle v. Kramer, supra, 83 Wn.2d 464 [520 P.2d 927].)

(3) A duly assigned judge pro tempore generally has the same power and authority (pro hav vice) as a regular judge of the court to which he or she is assigned. (See Fay v. District Court of Appeal (1927) 200 Cal. 522, 540 [254 P. 896]; see also Metropolitan Water District v. Adams (1942) 19 Cal.2d 463 [122 P.2d 257]; Amos v. Superior Court (1960) 182 Cal.App.2d 343, 349-350 [6 Cal.Rptr. 252]; see generally, 48 C.J.S., Judges, § 99, pp. 1111-1112; 46 Am.Jur.2d Judges, § 254, pp. 271-272.) Logically, if one judge assigned to the Supreme Court to replace a disqualified Supreme Court justice has the power and authority of a Supreme Court justice in the assigned case, including the power to cast the decisive vote (see e.g. Metropolitan Water District v. Adams, supra, 19 Cal.2d 463; People v. Cheatham (1979) 23 Cal.3d 829 [153 Cal.Rptr. 585, 591 P.2d 1237], majority opinion by three associate Supreme Court justices and three assigned judges; California Hotel & Motel Assn. v. Industrial Welfare Com. (1979) ante p. 200 [157 Cal. Rptr. 840, 599 P.2d 31], majority opinion by two associate Supreme Court justices and four assigned judges), it follows that four or more duly assigned judges have the authority to render a valid decision or judgment in a case before the Supreme Court.[8]

Nevertheless, relying primarily on dictum in Fay v. District Court of Appeal, supra, 200 Cal. 522, Justice Mosk argues that there is no constitutional authority for a Supreme Court composed only of all assigned judges pro tempore, and that such a court has no authority or jurisdiction to act. (See also Landon v. District Court of Appeal (1927) 200 Cal. 798 [254 P. 907].) In Fay, the Chief Justice, as chairman of the [7]Code of Civil Procedure section 187 provides: 'When jurisdiction is, by the constitution or this code, or by any other statute, conferred on a court or judicial officer, all the means necesssary to carry it into effect are also given; and in the exercise of this jurisdiction, if the course of proceeding be not specifically pointed out by this code or the statute, any sutitable process or mode of proceeding may be adopted which may appear most conformable to the spirit of this code."

[8]Article VI, section 2, of the California Constitution provides, in part: "Concurrence of 4 judges present at the argument is necessary for a judgment." Justice Mosk argues that since the word "judge" includes "justice" this provision requires a decision by four Supreme Court justices. We conclude, however, that the word "judges," as used in article VI, section 2, includes assigned judges pro tempore.

Judicial Council, had assigned three Los Angeles Superior Court judges to sit and hold court as justices of the District Court of Appeal, Second Appellate District, Division Two. The order was made pursuant to the 1926 constitutional amendment of article VI which created the Judicial Council and authorized the Chief Justice, as chairman, to assign "any judge to another court of a like or higher jurisdiction to assist a court or judge whose calendar is congested,..." Division Two of the Court of Appeal, Second Appellate District, then ordered the case of People v. Fay on calendar in that division for hearing and decision by the three assigned judges pro tempore. Fay objected and petitioned the Supreme Court for a writ of review of these orders and for a writ of prohibition to prevent the assigned judges from deciding his case. After a review of the history of article VI and the purpose of the 1926 amendment, the Supreme Court held that while it was proper for the Chief Justice to assign the superior court judges to the Court of Appeal to assist Division Two with its congested calender, it was improper for the Court of Appeal to assign Fay's case to a panel of three assigned judges pro tempore where the regular Court of Appeal justices in Division Two were neither disqualified nor unable to participate in the decision. Before reaching this conclusion the court reviewed the history of the 1904 and 1918 amendments of article VI as it pertained to the assignment of judges pro tempore to the Supreme Court and Court of Appeal (see Fay v. District Court of Appeal, supra, 200 Cal. at pp. 532-536). In the course of that review the court said, at pages 535-536: "...and it is interesting to note that the plan of calling in pro tempore justices as adopted in 1904 was evidently intended to be one of the ways then devised to relieve 'congestions'; since the same amendment which created the District Courts of Appeal for that then much needed relief also provided for the maintenance of the man power of both courts by the selection of justices pro tempore in each as the emergency required. It has, however, never been considered, nor is it now contended, that the power then reposed in the justices of the Supreme Court or of the District Courts of Appeal to make selections of justices or judges to act in the stated emergencies as justices pro tempore, however flexible its operation as disclosed in the Reeves case, could be so indefinitely expanded as to permit either of these tribunals to so far replace its constituent membership as to create or constitute a Supreme Court or a District Court of Appeal so far composed of justices pro tempore as to exercise the judicial functions of the regularly constituted tribunal. It has never, for example, been considered, nor is it now contended, that under the terms of the amendments of 1904 or 1918 of the constitution relating to pro tempore justices that the members of the Supreme Court or District Courts of Appeal were thereby invested with the power to substitute for themselves, acting as a group in the performance of the judicial function, another body of men composed of justices pro tempore and as such empowered to exercise the functions of a Supreme Court or District Court of Appeal. In other words, it was never intended to provide for the creation of a court pro tempore. To so interpret these provisions in said amendments, evidently intended to afford temporary and emergency relief, would be to encourage the violation of a very vital principle of popular government which is none other than that of the right of the people of a commonwealth to have their essential rights, liberties, and interests in respect to person and property heard and determined by courts of last resort, the constituent membership of which is composed of public servants of their own selection. That the people might transfer the direct exercise of this selection to those whom they may have chosen to administer the functions of our representative scheme of government is undoubted, but the text of such transfer, whether embodied in a constitution or a statute, should be plain and unambiguous." Justice Mosk relies on these statements in Fay to support his argument that a Supreme Court composed of a majority or all assigned judges pro tempore has no authority to act. The statements were made, however, with reference to the 1904 and 1918 constitutional amendments, which have since been repealed, and they must be read in light of the issue whether judges from lower courts could be assigned to assist a court with its congested calendar. As we read Fay, it does not suggest, and certainly does not hold, that the Supreme Court, composed of a majority or all assigned judges pro tempore, has no authority to act where, as here, all the regular Supreme Court justices are disqualified.

In Metropolitan Water District v. Adams, supra, 19 Cal.2d 463, the court said that a judge assigned to the Supreme Court does not have authority to act in place of a Supreme Court justice who is qualified and able to participate in the given action or proceeding. The court also recognized, however, that if a full complement of the qualified members of the Supreme Court is not available, then the matter may be decided by "such justice or justices as may be duly assigned to the court, provided that in no event shall there be more than seven justices acting on a particular matter." (Id., at p. 469.) Implicit in this language is a determination that severn justices pro tempore have authority to decide a matter before the Supreme Court if the Supreme Court justices are disqualified.

In other states, Supreme Courts composed entirely of assigned judges pro tempore have decided cases where all the regular Supreme Court justices were disqualified. For example, in Yelle v. Kramer, supra, 83 Wn.2d 464 [520 P.2d 927], all nine justices of the Washington Supreme Court disqualified themselves from participating in a mandamus proceeding which challenged an initiative measure prescribing salaries of certain elected state officials. A provision in the Washington Constitution states: "When necessary for the prompt and orderly administration of justice a majority of the Supreme Court is empowered to authorize judges or retired judges of courts of record of this state, to perform, temporarily, judicial duties in the Supreme Court. . . ." (520 P.2d at p. 928.) Pursuant to this provision, all nine justices of the supreme court assigned an order appointing nine retired justices pro tempore, who were selected by lot, to decide the case.

In State Board of Law Examiners v. Spriggs, supra, 61 Wyo. 70 [155 P.2d 285, 287], cert. den., 325 U.S. 886, all the justices (three) of the Wyoming Supreme Court disqualified themselves from participating in the case. Pursuant to a provision in the Wyoming Constitution, the chief justice assigned three district court judges to sit as members of the supreme court to decide the matter. Spriggs objected on the ground that the supreme court, consisting of three judges pro tempore, did not have jurisdiction of the matter. In overruling Spriggs' objection, the court said, in substance, that the constitutional provision empowered the chief justice to assign as many district court judges to the supreme court as necessary to replace supreme court justices who were disqualified or unable to act, that the constitutional provision was adopted to expedite the disposition of cases in the supreme court and to provide a full panel to hear and determine litigation before it.

Similarly, in State ex rel. Langer v. Kositzky (1918) 38 N.D. 616 [166 N.W. 534], four of the five justices of the North Dakota Supreme Court disqualified themselves from ruling on a petition for a writ of mandate to compel the state auditor to provide additional compensation for members of that court. Four district court judges were assigned to the supreme court and they decided the matter.

Justice Mosk argues that where, as here, all the Supreme Court justices are disqualified, and the Supreme Court need not decide the case under the rule of necessity,[9] the decision by the Court of Appeal should stand as the decision of the court of last resort. Justice Mosk argues that this court should apply the so-called doctrine of "judicial void" as applied by the United States Supreme Court when it lacks a quorum of qualified justices to decide a given case. When the United States Supreme Court lacks a quorum of qualified justices, it can either place the case on a special docket until it has a quorum (see e.g., United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, and North American Co. v. Securities & Exchange Commission (1943) 320 U.S. 708-709 [88 L.Ed. 415, 64 S.Ct. 73]), or, if no quorum is possible, the court may dismiss the appeal and thereby affirm the circuit court of appeals judgment (see, e.g., Chrysler Corporation v. United States, and Commercial Credit Co. v. United States (1941) 314 U.S. 583 [86 L.Ed. 471, 62 S.Ct. 356]; see also Cunningham, The Problem of the Supreme Court Quorum (1943) 12 Geo.Wash.L.Rev. 175; Frank, Disqualification of Judges (1947) 56 Yale L.J. 605). Where the appeal is directly from a federal district court, the case is remanded to the court of appeals for decision.[10]

[9]Under the "rule of necessity" an appellate court consisting of judges who ordinarily would be disqualified may nevertheless decide the case if there is no other qualified judge or court with exclusive jurisdiction to decide the matter. (See Evans v. Gore (1920) 253 U.S. 245 [64 L.Ed. 887, 40 S.Ct. 550]; Atkins v. United States (Ct.Cl. 1977) 566 F.2d 1028, 1035-1040, cert. den., 434 U.S. 1009 [54 L.Ed.2d 751, 98 S.Ct. 718]; Brinkley v. Hassig (10th Cir. 1936) 83 F.2d 351, 357; see Johnson v. State Bar

Where the United States Supreme Court lacks a quorum of qualified justices, it cannot decide the case because there is no procedure for the assignment of justices pro tempore to the Supreme Court to sit in place of disqualified justices. By contrast, in this state, as we have explained, the Chief Justice has constitutional authority to assign judges from lower courts to the Supreme Court to replace disqualified Supreme Court justices, and therefore it is not necessary for the California Supreme Court to adopt the United States Supreme Court's procedure of letting the lower court judgment stand.

(1935) 4 Cal.2d 744, 760 [52 P.2d 928], recognizing rule.) Justice Mosk argues that the Supreme Court need not invoke the rule of necessity since the Court of Appeal had jurisdiction and qualified judges to rule on his petition. We agree that the rule of necessity does not apply because there is an alternate method of selecting Supreme Court judges to decide the cause.

[10]As enacted in June 1948, 28 United States Code section 2109 provides: "If a case brought to the Supreme Court by direct appeal from a district court cannot be heard and determined because of the absence of a quorum of qualified justices, the Chief Justice of the United States may order it remitted to the court of appeals for the circuit including the district in which the case arose, to be heard and determined by that court either sitting in banc or specially constituted and composed of the three circuit judges senior in commission who are able to sit, as such order may direct. The decision of such court shall be final and conclusive. In the event of the disqualification or disability of one or more of such circuit judges, such court shall be filled as provided in chapter 15 of this title. [¶] In any other case brought to the Supreme Court for review, which cannot be heard and determined because of the absence of a quorum of qualified justices, if a majority of the qualified justices shall be of opinion that the case cannot be heard and determined at the next ensuing term, the court shall enter its order affirming the judgment of the court from which the case was brought for review with the same effect as upon affirmance by an equally divided court."

(1b) Accordingly, we conclude that this court, composed of all duly assigned judges pro tempore, has authority to decide the merits of this proceeding.

II

(4a) Justice Mosk contends that rule 902.5 of the California Rules of Court, which authorizes a public hearing of this investigation by the Commission on Judicial Performance,[11] is unconstitutional in light of California Constitution article VI, section 18, subdivision (f), which requires the Judicial Council to make rules which provide for

[11]Since the Commission was first established by constitutional amendment in November 1960, all investigations by, and hearings before, the Commission were required to be confidential until the record was filed with the Supreme Court. Because of the unprecedented nature of the pending investigation of the Supreme Court justices, however, the Commission asked the Judicial Council, which has the rule-making authority, to modify the confidentiality requirement by amending the rules to allow the Commission's proceedings, "after completion of the preliminary investigation," to be "publicly conducted, disclosed or reported, in whole or in part, having due regard for the personal reputations and other legitimate interests of the judge or judges and their right to due process." The executive committee of the Judicial Council recommended rejection of the Commission's request, but the full council adopted rule 902.5 in January 1979. Rule 902.5 provides:

"In a proceeding in which the Commission finds that: (1) the subject matter is generally known to the public; (2) there is broad public interest; (3) confidence in the administration of justice is threatened due to lack of public information concerning the status and conduct of the proceeding; and (4) the public interest in maintaining confidence in the judicial office and the integrity of the administration of justice requires that some or all aspects of such proceeding should be publicly conducted or otherwise reported or disclosed to the public, the requirement of confidentiality may, to the extent determined by the Commission, be modified with respect to said proceeding; and, after completion of the investigation, a public hearing shall be held and shall be publicly conducted. The public hearing shall include the right of all segments of the news media to be present and report the proceedings.

"The Commission's determination shall be based solely on evidence taken at the hearing.

"Such determination to modify may be made at any time after the Commission undertakes to conduct an inquiry or investigation, or otherwise to institute such proceeding with respect to the subject matter, but only after affording notice and an opportunity to be heard on the issue to any judge whose conduct may be called into question in such proceeding. [As amended effective Jan. 29, 1979, adopted effective Jan. 16, 1979. This rule shall apply to any investigation or proceeding of the Commission on Judicial Performance relating to any possible improper conduct of any Justice of the Supreme Court of California arising out of (1) any irregularities or delays in handling the Tanner case; (2) any irregularities or delays in handling any other case or cases pending before the Supreme Court prior to the election of November 7, 1978, caused or instituted for the purpose of delaying the filing of the Court's decision in any such case until after the date of the election, and/or (3) any unauthorized disclosure of confidential information regarding any of the above pending cases prior to the public release of the decision. (Judicial Council resolution, January 16, 1979, as revised January 29, 1979.)]" confidentiality of proceedings before the Commission.[12] The Commission, on the other hand, contends that article VI, section 18, subdivision (f), gives the Judicial Council discretionary rule-making authority to determine when, and under what circumstances, proceedings before the Commission shall be confidential, and that the adoption of rule 902.5 was within the discretionary rule-making authority of the Judicial Council. Both parties argue that their respective interpretations of section 18, subdivision (f), are (1) based on the plain and ordinary meaning of the words in that section; (2) supported by judicial and contemporaneous administrative construction; and (3) consistent with the history, intent, and objectives of that section. No reported California case has decided this issue.

The question of confidentiality of proceedings before the Commission on Judicial Performance must be considered in light of the Commission's history and the limited scope of its constitutional authority. It was, as previously noted, created by constitutional amendment in November 1960. (See Cal. Const., art. VI, § 8.) It has authority to investigate complaints of judicial misconduct, a judge's failure or inabil-

[12]Article VI, section 18, of the California Constitution provides:

"(a) A judge is disqualified from acting as a judge, without loss of salary, while there is pending (1) an indictment or an information charging the judge in the United States with a crime punishable as a felony under California or federal law, or (2) a recommendation to the Supreme Court by the Commission on Judicial Performance for removal or retirement of the judge.

"(b) On recommendation of the Commission on Judicial Performance or on its own motion, the Supreme Court may suspend a judge from office without salary when in the United States the judge pleads guilty or no contest or is found guilty of a crime punishable as a felony under California or federal law or of any other crime that involves moral turpitude under that law. If the conviction is reversed suspension terminates, and the judge shall be paid the salary for the judicial office held by the judge for the period of suspension. If the judge is suspended and the conviction becomes final the Supreme Court shall remove the judge from office.

"(c) On recommendation of the Commission on Judicial Performance the Supreme Court may (1) retire a judge for disability that seriously interferes with the performance of the judge's duties and is or is likely to become permanent, and (2) censure or remove a judge for action occurring not more than 6 years prior to the commencement of the judge's current term that constitutes wilful misconduct in office, persistent failure or inability to perform the judge's duties, habitual intemperance in the use of intoxicants or drugs, or conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute. The commission may privately admonish a judge found to have engaged in an improper action or a dereliction of duty, subject to review in the Supreme Court in the manner provided for review of causes decided by a court of appeal.

"(d) A judge retired by the Supreme Court shall be considered to have retired voluntarily. A judge removed by the Supreme Court is ineligible for judicial office and pending further order of the court is suspended from practicing law in this State.

"(e) A recommendation of the Commission on Judicial Performance for the censure, removal or retirement of a judge of the Supreme Court shall be determined by a tribu-ity to perform the duties of a judge, and other conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice. (See ante, fn. 12.) (5) The Commission does not have the authority to investigate a "court." Its inquiry must be limited to misconduct or disability of an individual judge.[13] The Commission has authority to conduct hearings, make findings of fact (see Gov. Code, §§ 68750-68755; Cal. Rules of Court, rules 901-922), and recommend to the Supreme Court that a given judge be censured or removed or retired from the court. (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (c).) The Commission may privately admonish a judge for improper action or a dereliction of duty, but it has no power to censure, remove, retire or otherwise discipline a judge. It can only make certain recommendations to the Supreme Court, which then reviews the evidence and makes its own findings. (Geiler v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1973) 10 Cal.3d 270, 276 [110 Cal.Rptr. 201, 515 P.2d 1]; Spruance v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1975) 13 Cal.3d 778 [119 Cal.Rptr. 841, 523 P.2d 1209].) Although the Commission's findings are given great weight by the Supreme Court, they are inconclusive except where the Commission, having made a preliminary investigation, concludes that there is insufficient evidence to charge a judge with judicial misconduct.

The confidentiality of investigations and hearings before the Commission was considered essential to the success of the Commission from the outset. As adopted by the people in November 1960, article VI, section 10b, paragraph three, expressly provided that "[a]ll papers filed with and proceedings before the Commission on Judicial Qualifications or masters appointed by the Supreme Court, pursuant to this section, shall be confidential..." until the Commission filed the record in the Supreme Court.[14] The ballot argument in favor of this mearure stated:

nal of 7 court of appeal judges selected by lot.

"(f) The Judicial Council shall make rules implementing this section and providing for confidentiality of proceedings."

[13]According to certain resolutions adopted by the Judicial Council and the Commission, each body purportedly resolved to investigate the "Supreme Court." As Commission counsel has conceded, however, the Commission has no constitutional authority to investigate the "Supreme Court" or any other "court." Its investigation must be limited to misconduct or disability of a judge.

[14]In its entirety paragraph three of former section 10b, article VI, provides: "All paper filed with and proceedings before the Commission on Judicial Qualifications or masters appointed by the Supreme Court, pursuant to this section, shall be confidential, and the filing of papers with and the giving of testimony before the commission or the masters shall be privileged; but no other publication of such papers or proceedings shall be privileged in any action for defamation except that (a) the record filed by the commission in the Supreme Court continues privileged and upon such filing loses its confidential character and (b) a writing which was privileged prior to its filing with the commission or the masters does not lose such privilege by such filing. The Judicial

"To avoid the unfairness of publicizing complaints of merely disgruntled litigants, proceedings before the Commission will not be public, unless and until it recommends to the Supreme Court the removal or retirement of the judge."

(6) The confidentiality of investigations and hearings by the Commission is based on sound public policy. Confidentiality encourages the filing of complaints and the willing participation of citizens and witnesses by providing protection against possible retaliation or recrimination. (McCartney v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1974) 12 Cal.3d 512, 521 [116 Cal.Rptr. 260, 526 P.2d 268]; Landmark Communications, Inc. v. Virginia (1978) 435 U.S. 829 [56 L.Ed.2d 1, 98 S.Ct. 1535, 1539].) Confidentiality protects judges from injury which might result from publication of unexamined and unwarranted complaints by disgruntled litigants or their attorneys (Landmark Communications, Inc. v. Virginia, supra), or by political adversaries. Confidentiality of investigations by the Commission preserves confidence in the judiciary as an institution by avoiding premature announcement of groundless claims of judicial misconduct or disability. (Landmark Communications, Inc. v. Virginia, supra.) Confidentiality of proceedings before the Commission is essential to protecting the judge's constitutional right to a private admonishment (see Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (c)), if the circumstances so warrant. When removal or retirement is justified by the charges, judges are more likely to resign or retire voluntarily without the necessity of a formal proceeding if the publicity that would accompany such a proceeding can thereby be avoided.[15] (Landmark Communications, Inc. v. Virginia, supra,

Council shall by rule provide for procedure under this section before the Commission on Judicial Qualifications, the masters, and the Supreme Court. A justice or judge who is a member of the commission or Supreme Court shall not participate in any proceedings involving his own removal or retirement."

435 U.S. 829.)[16] Leading writers have recognized that confidentiality of investigations and hearings by the Commission is essential to its success. (See Frankel, Judicial Conduct and Removal of Judges for Cause in California (1962) 36 So.Cal.L.Rev. 72; Frankel, Removal of Judges: California Tackles an Old Problem (1963) 49 A.B.A. J. 166, 170; Traynor, Rising Standards of Courts and Judges (1965) 40 State Bar J. 677, 688; 1965 Rep. of the Com. on Judicial Qualifications to the Governor, p. 2.)

In November 1966, as part of an overall revision of the California Constitution, sections 10a and 10b of article VI were eliminated and replaced with the present section 18. (See ante, fn. 12.) The revision eliminated the language of paragraph three of section 10b, which required that all papers filed with and proceedings before the Commission or special masters "shall be confidential" until the record is filed in the Supreme Court. The language was replaced by section 18, subdivision (e), now subdivision (f), which provides: "The Judicial Council shall make rules implementing this section and providing for confidentiality of proceedings." The question is whether the people of the State of California, in adopting the 1966 amendment of article VI, intended to eliminate the constitutional mandate that all proceedings before the Commission shall be confidential, and to vest the Judicial Council with discretionary rule-making authority to provide for confidential (i.e., nonpublic) or public proceedings as circumstances might warrant, or whether the people intended no substantive change in the confidentiality requirement.

[16]In Landmark Communications, Inc. v. Virginia, supra, the Supreme Court noted that 47 states, the District of Columbia and Puerto Rico have established by constitution, statute or court rule some type of judicial inquiry and disciplinary procedures, and that all these jurisdictions (with the apparent exception of Puerto Rico) provide for the confidentiality of judicial disciplinary proceedings, at least until a formal complaint is filed with the state Supreme Court or equivalent body.

(7) Generally, a substantial change in the language of a statute or constitutional provision by an amendment indicates an intention to change its meaning. But a mere change in phraseology, incident to a revision of the Constitution or statute, does not result in a change of meaning unless the intent to make such a change clearly appears. (Hammond v. McDonald (1942) 49 Cal.App.2d 671, 681 [122 P.2d 332]; cf. Tillie Lewis Foods, Inc. v. City of Pittsburg (1975) 52 Cal.App.3d 983, 1003 [124 Cal.Rptr. 698]; Forde v. Cory (1977) 66 Cal.App.3d 434, 438 [135 Cal.Rptr. 903].) The Commission concedes that article VI, section 18, subdivision (f), mandates that the Judicial Council shall make rules which provide for confidentiality of proceedings.[17] The Commission, nevertheless, argues that when section 18, subdivision (f), is considered in light of the former language requiring confidentiality of all proceedings before the Commission, it should be construed to mean that not all proceedings before the Commission need to be confidential; and that the words "providing for confidentiality" vest the Judicial Council with discretion and broad authority to determine when, and under what circumstances, proceedings before the Commission shall be confidential. The Commission argues that this is the practical and common sense interpretation of this provision.

As Justice Mosk argues, however, the words "providing for confidentiality" must be given their ordinary and usual meaning. (8) The words "provide for" are generally used to mean "to take precautionary measures" or "to make a proviso" or "to supply or furnish" in view of a possible need. (See Webster's New Internat. Dict. (3d ed. 1965) p. 1827; see also Words and Phrases, "Provide For.") (9) Section 18, subdivision (f), requires the Judicial Council "to establish" rules for confidentiality of proceedings before the Commission. While the Judicial Council is delegated discretionary power to establish rules which provide for confidentiality, section 18, subdivision (f), does not, on its face, give the council discretionary power to make exceptions to the confidentiality requirement by authorizing public investigations and hearings.

The Commission disputes this interpretation on the basis that if arti-

[17]Article I, section 26, of the California Constitution provides: "The provisions of this Constitution are mandatory and prohibitory, unless by express words they are declared to be otherwise." This rule of construction applies to all provisions of the Constitution and to all branches of the state government, including the judiciary. (State Board of Education v. Levit (1959) 52 Cal.2d 441, 460-461 [343 P.2d 8]; see also Jenkins v. Knight (1956) 46 Cal.2d 220, 224 [293 P.2d 6].) As applied to article VI, section 18, subdivision (f), the Constitution mandates that the Judicial Council make rules which provide for confidentiality of proceedings before the Commission.

cle VI, section 18, subdivision (f), merely means that the Judicial Council shall make rules requiring confidentiality in all proceedings, there would be no need for any rules on the subject. However, a close analysis of the confidentiality requirement indicates a number of areas where court rules may be helpful or necessary. For example, specific court rules may be helpful in resolving such problems pertaining to confidentiality of discovery procedures in judicial disciplinary proceedings (see, e.g., People ex rel. the Ill. Jud. Inquiry Bd. v. Hartel (1978) 72 Ill.2d 225 [380 N.E.2d 801]), and whether the judge under investigation may make public statements without violating the confidentiality requirement (see, e.g., Matter of Buford (Mo. 1979) 577 S.W.2d 809, 825). Other jurisdictions with provisions that all proceedings "shall be confidential" have adopted rules implementing that requirement. (See, e.g., Va. Const., art. VI, § 10; Va. Code, § 2.1-37.13.)

In the McCartney case, the judge under investigation by the Commission claimed a denial of due process in its refusal of his demand that certain hearings before special masters be opened to the public. (McCartney v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications, supra, 12 Cal.3d 512 at pp. 518, 520-521.) The Supreme Court rejected his contention on review, stating: "Equally unfounded is petitioner's complaint that he should have been accorded an open hearing. This state has adopted a constitutional policy that proceedings before the Commission shall be confidential (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (e), authorizing the Judicial Council to 'make rules...providing for confidentiality of proceedings.') While such a policy undoubtedly was adopted in part to protect the particular judge charged with misconduct and might, therefore, arguably be waived by him, we recognize that the provision for confidentiality also protects witnesses and citizen complainants from intimidation. Inasmuch as confidentiality is constitutionally authorized, is based on sound reason, and is imposed in proceedings which are neither criminal nor before a 'court of justice' we preceive no impropriety in the Commission's refusal to open the hearings before the special masters to the public." (12 Cal.3d at pp. 520-521 [citations omitted].)

The Commission argues that the McCartney court's reference to the cited constitutional source as "authorizing the Judicial Council to 'make rules...providing for confidentiality of proceedings'" supports the view that the source invests the Judicial Council with authority to provide for exceptions to the confidentiality requirement. The focus is on the word "authorizing." The operative portion of the sentence where the quoted words appear is the indisputable recital that "[t]his state has adopted a constitutional policy that proceedings before the Commission shall be confidential." The words follow this statement in a parenthetical citation of the constitutional source of the policy mentioned. Read in context, they identify the source but do not interpret it. The single word "authorizing" cannot be isolated from the context to import something the court did not say in the operative portion of the sentence. The related words used later in the context ("...confidentiality is constitutionally authorized...") convey no broader meaning. The passages quoted from McCartney do not support the Commission's interpretation of article VI, section 18, subdivision (f).

The conflicting contentions of the parties point to a latent ambiguity in article VI, section 18, subdivision (f).[18] (10) Where a provision in the Constitution is ambiguous, a court must ordinarily adopt that interpretation which carries out the intent and objective of the drafters of the provision and the people by whose vote it was adopted. (See Story v. Richardson (1921) 186 Cal. 162, 165 [198 P. 1057, 18 A.L.R. 750]; Bakkenson v. Superior Court (1925) 197 Cal. 504, 510-511 [241 P. 874]; Kaiser v. Hopkins (1936) 6 Cal.2d 537, 539 [58 P.2d 1278]; State Board of Education v. Levit, supra, 52 Cal.2d 441, 462-463; Flood v. Riggs (1978) 80 Cal.App.3d 138, 152 [145 Cal.Rptr. 573].) To ascertain the intent and objective of an ambiguous constitutional provision, a court may consider official reports of the California Constitution Revision Commission (District Election Committee v. O'Connor (1978) 78 Cal.App.3d 261, 270 [144 Cal.Rptr. 442]), the record of the debates (see State Board of Education v. Levit, supra, 52 Cal.2d at p. 462; Pitts v. Reagan (1971) 14 Cal.App.3d 112, 118 [92 Cal.Rptr. 27]), legislative committee reports (see Jolicoeur v. Mihaly (1971) 5 Cal.3d 565, 573 [96 Cal.Rptr. 697, 488 P.2d 1]; Miro v. Superior Court (1970) 5 Cal.App.3d 87, 99 [84 Cal.Rptr. 874]; Arellano v. Moreno (1973) 33 Cal.App.3d 877, 884 [109 Cal.Rptr. 421]), contemporaneous exposition or interpretation of the provision (Carter v. Commission on Qualifications of Judicial Appointments (1939) 14 Cal.2d 179, 185 [93 P.2d 140]), and written arguments in voter pamphlets (White v. Davis (1975) 13 Cal.3d 757, 775 [120 Cal.Rptr. 94, 533 P.2d 222]).

We have taken judicial notice, pursuant to Evidence Code sections 459 and 452, subdivision (c), of all material of the California Constitu-

[18]A law review writer states: "[A] latent ambiguity is said to exist where the language employed is clear and intelligible and suggests but a single meaning, but some extrinsic evidence creates a necessity for interpretation or a choice among two or more possible meanings." (See Note, Constitutional Law: The Doctrine of Latent Ambiguities As Applied to the California Constitution (1943) 31 Cal.L.Rev. 203, 205.)

tion Revision Commission (Revision Commission) relating to the 1966 revision of article VI. Those materials include minutes and drafts by the Revision Commission, the article VI committee, and the drafting committee which was composed of certain members of the article VI committee.[19] An examination of those materials demonstrates that the basic objectives of the Revision Commission were to delete provisions which were redundant, obsolete, or unnecessary for inclusion in the Constitution, such as procedural matters which could be prescribed or provided for by statute or court rule. (Cal. Const. Revision Com., Proposed Revision (1966) p. 82.) The Revision Commission contemplated few substantive changes in article VI.

The first draft of the proposed revision of article VI was completed in June 1964. It proposed no change in the confidentiality requirement as stated in then existing section 10b, paragraph three. Later drafts, identified as the first subcommittee draft, a second working draft, an amended second working draft, and a third working draft also left the confidentiality requirement unchanged.

*Source: Report of the Revision Commission, page 36, prepared for the Joint Rules Committee of the California Legislature, by J. Gould, formerly with the Office of Legislative Counsel.

At a meeting in May 1965, the Revision Commission decided to refer the proposed draft of what is now section 18 to the article VI committee with instructions to delete procedural portions which could be handled by statute. The article VI committee considered the matter and concluded that such transfers from the Constitution to statutes would be undesirable, and that in the sensitive area of disciplining judges the procedural safeguards were sufficiently important to be given "constitutional status."

At a meeting in July 1965, the Revision Commission approved a motion to delete paragraph three of existing section 10b (see ante, fn. 14), and referred the proposed draft to the article VI committee with instructions to delete the procedural portions of the draft. At a meeting in September 1965, the article VI committee discussed the meaning of the word "procedural" and the need for keeping confidential all records pertaining to the censure of judges. The article VI committee then approved a proposed draft which included the following provision: "The procedure under this section shall be prescribed by rules of the Judicial Council. The Judicial Council shall also prescribe rules implementing this section and providing for the confidentiality of proceedings hereunder." A subsequent draft changed this provision to read: "The Judicial Council shall prescribe rules implementing this section and provide for confidentiality of proceedings under it." The final draft, which was approved by the Revision Commission, read: "The Judicial Council shall make rules implementing this section and providing for confidentiality of proceedings." The Revision Commission's only comment on this provision was that it "gives exclusive rule-making power to the Judicial Council. It requires the council to make rules implementing the section and providing for confidentiality of proceedings before the Commission on Judicial Performance." (Cal. Const. Revision Com., Proposed Revision (1966) p. 98.) The summary and arguments in the voters pamphlet submitted to the electorate in November 1966 did not mention or explain the scope of the Judicial Council's authority to make rules providing for confidentiality of proceedings before the Commission on Judicial Performance.

Thus a review of the Revision Commission's materials and minutes fails to show that either the commission or the article VI committee considered the question whether the Judicial Council should be given discretionary rule-making authority to modify, or make exceptions to, the existing policy of confidential proceedings before the Commission on Judicial Performance. The minutes of meetings of the Revision Commission, and of the article VI committee, show that the constitutional language pertaining to the confidentiality requirement was changed as part of the Revision Commission's policy of deleting procedural matters from the Constitution without changing the substance. (Cf. District Election Committee v. O'Connor, supra, 78 Cal.App.3d 261, 270.) The Revision Commission concluded that the Constitution should expressly require the Judicial Council to make rules which provide for confidentiality of proceedings before the Commission on Judicial Performance. The Revision Commission did not contemplate that section 18, subdivision (e), now subdivision (f), would give the Judicial Council discretionary rule-making power to authorize public investigations and hearings by the Commission on Judicial Performance as circumstances might warrant.

Moreover, the Judicial Council itself did not immediately contemplate that article VI, section 18, subdivision (e), (now subd. (f)), gave it authority to modify the constitutional policy requiring confidentiality of proceedings before the Commission on Judicial Performance. (See Judicial Council of Cal., Annual Rep. (1967) p. 88.) Within four days after the electorate approved the proposed revision of article VI in November 1966, the Judicial Council adopted rule 902, which provided that all papers filed with and proceedings before the Commission, or before the masters appointed by the Supreme Court, shall be confidential until a record is filed by the Commission in the Supreme Court. This rule was adopted to continue in rule form, without change in substance, the confidentiality requirement as formerly stated in the Constitution. (Op. cit., supra, at p. 151.)

Effective July 1, 1971, the Judicial Council amended rule 902 by adding subdivision (b), which authorizes the Commission to release information regarding its proceedings under limited circumstances. Rule 902(b) was further amended in 1977 and 1978.[20] The Commission ar-

[20]Rule 902(b), California Rules of Court, provides: "The Commission may release information regarding its proceedings under the following circumstances:

"(1) If a judge is publicly charged with involvement in proceedings before the Commission resulting in substantial unfairness to him, the Commission may, at the request of the judge involved, issue a short statement of clarification and correction.

"(2) If a judge is publicly associated with having engaged in serious reprehensible conduct or having committed a major offense, and after a preliminary investigation or a formal hearing it is determined there is no basis for further proceedings or recommendation of discipline, the Commission may issue a short explanatory statement.

"(3) When a formal hearing has been ordered in a proceeding in which the subject matter is generally known to the public and in which there is broad public interest, and gues that these amendments of rule 902 indicate that the Judicial Council construed article VI, section 18, subdivision (f), to mean that it had authority to modify the constitutional policy requiring confidentiality of proceedings before the Commission, and that the council's contemporaneous construction is persuasive in determining the scope of the council's rule-making authority. (11) The Commission relies on the established rule that the contemporaneous administrative construction of an enactment by those charged with its enforcement and interpretation is entitled to great weight unless erroneous or unauthorized. (Wilkinson v. Workers' Comp. Appeals Bd. (1977) 19 Cal.3d 491, 501 [138 Cal.Rptr. 696, 564 P.2d 848].) However, the ultimate determination of the meaning of the provision rests with the court. (Morris v. Williams (1967) 67 Cal.2d 733, 748 [63 Cal.Rptr. 689, 433 P.2d 697].)

(4b) We conclude that in light of the history and purpose of article VI, section 18, the limited scope of the Commission's authority to investigate judicial misconduct, the strong public policy in favor of confidential investigations by the Commission, and the absence of any indication that the people of California intended to change the constitutional requirement of confidentiality by revision of article VI in 1966, the Judicial Council has authority to adopt rules which provide for confidentiality but it does not have the power to authorize public investigations and hearings before the Commission. Rule 902.5 is inconsistent with article VI, section 18, subdivision (f), which mandates confidentiality. For this reason Justice Mosk cannot constitutionally be compelled to testify at a public hearing before the Commission in C.J.P. No. 3012.[21] in which confidence in the administration of justice is threatened due to lack of information concerning the status of the proceeding and the requirements of due process, the Commission may issue one or more short announcements confirming the hearing, clarifying the procedural aspects, and defending the right of a judge to a fair hearing.

"(4) If a judge retires or resigns from judicial office following institution of formal proceedings, the Commission may, in the interest of justice or to maintain confidence in the administration of justice, release information concerning the investigation and proceedings to a public entity.

"(5) Upon completion of an investigation or proceeding, the Commission shall disclose to the person complaining against the judge that after an investigation of the charges the Commission (i) has found no basis for action against the judge, (ii) has taken an appropriate corrective action, the nature of which shall not be disclosed, or (iii) has filed a recommendation for the censure, removal, or retirement of the judge. The name of the judge shall not be used in any written communication to the complainant unless the record has been filed in the Supreme Court."

[21]Counsel has represented that Justice Mosk has testified at a private hearing before the Commission in this matter. The confidentiality requirement precludes the Commission from releasing Justice Mosk's confidential testimony to the public.

III

In an amici curiae brief in support of the Commission on Judicial Performance, the Union Tribune Publishing Company (a division of the Copley Press, Inc.), the California Newspaper Publishers Association, Inc., and the San Jose Mercury News argue that the pending investigation, which was open to the public before Justice Mosk challenged the constitutionality of rule 902.5 in court, should be completed at public hearings in order to maintain public confidence in the integrity of the Supreme Court and the judicial system. No such purpose warrants deviation from the constitutional requirement of confidentiality established by the people of this state. Amici curiae further argue that the hearings should be continued in public because the focus of the Commission's investigation is the conduct of the Supreme Court as an institution and not an investigation into the conduct of the justices. As we have previously stated, however, the Commission has no constitutional authority to investigate the "Supreme Court" or any "court." The scope of its authority is limited to investigations of misconduct or disability of a judge (see ante, fns. 12, 13), and those investigations must comply with the constitutional requirement of confidentiality.

(12) Amici curiae also argue that Justice Mosk should be precluded from asserting the constitutional requirement of confidentiality because he delayed the filing of his petition for a writ of mandate until after commencement of the public hearings he challenges. The record shows, however, that Justice Mosk delayed the filing of his petition at the request of the Commission, and that he had advised the Commission of his present position well in advance of the public hearings. The pertinent sequence of events was as follows.

Shortly after the election in November 1978, the Chief Justice asked the Commission to investigate news media reports that certain controversial decisions had been improperly delayed until after the election. The Chief Justice also asked the Commission to issue a public report of its investigation, pursuant to rule 902(b)(2). In December the Commission asked the Judicial Council to adopt a rule which would modify the rule requiring confidential proceedings before the Commission. In January the Judicial Council adopted rule 902.5. In a letter dated February 15, 1979, and addressed to the Commission chairman, Justice Mosk stated his opinion that the Judicial Council is not constitutionally empowered to authorize public hearings before the Commission, and that the Commission has no authority to proceed with any inquiry except in confidence. The Commission, nevertheless, proceeded with a preliminary investigation and, in April, made the findings required by rule 902.5 and decided to proceed with a public hearing. In another letter dated May 9, 1979, and addressed to the Commission chairman, Justice Mosk again objected to a public hearing on the ground that it would violate article VI, section 18, subdivision (f).

On or about June 11, all seven justices of the Supreme Court (and other court personnel) were served with subpoenas to appear as witnesses at the public hearing scheduled to begin on June 18. On or about June 13, Justice Mosk informed Commission counsel that if he were required to testify in public he would challenge the constitutionality of the public hearing by filing a petition for a writ of mandate in the superior court. A copy of the petition was apparently delivered to Commission counsel on that date. Pursuant to an understanding with Commission counsel, Justice Mosk delayed filing the petition until the Commission decided if and when Justice Mosk would be ordered to testify. The Commission proceeded with the public hearing, which received extensive coverage in the news media. Five of the Supreme Court justices and a number of court personnel testified in public. Justice Mosk, the last Supreme Court justice on the list of witnesses, was scheduled to appear before the Commission on July 9. He filed his petition for a writ of mandate on July 6, and the superior court denied it on July 12. His petition to the Court of Appeal was granted on July 17. The public hearing before the Commission terminated on that date. Justices Mosk and Newman subsequently testified at a Commission hearing which was closed to the public. In these circumstances, there is no merit to the assertations by amici curiae that Justice Mosk delayed his challenge of the constitutionality of rule 902.5.

IV

Appearing as amici curiae, the San Francisco Bar Association and the California Attorneys for Criminal Justice argue that if this court declares rule 902.5 unconstitutional, the court should also determine whether the Commission may publicly announce its findings and conclusions in this matter pursuant to rule 902(b). (See ante, fn. 20.) The narrow issue decided by this court is whether article VI, section 18, subdivision (f), of the Constitution precludes the Judicial Council from adopting rules, such as rule 902.5, which authorize public investigations and hearings by the Commission. The constitutionality of rule 902(b) is not an issue before this court, and we decline to express our views on the constitutionality of all the provisions of that section. (13) Because of the public importance of the question raised by amici curiae, we will nevertheless state that where a Commission investigation of alleged judicial misconduct is known to the public, as in the present case, the Commission may report the results or status of the investigation to the public without violating the constitutional requirement of "confidentiality of proceedings." Article VI, section 18, subdivision (f), prohibits public hearings and public reports of testimony and other evidence presented to the Commission. It does not preclude either the Commission or a judge under investigation from publicly announcing the results of an investigation already known to the public.

Let a peremptory writ of mandate issue directing the Los Angeles County Superior Court to vacate the order entered in the case of Mosk v. Commission on Judicial Performance, No. SOC 55720, on July 12, 1979, and to enter a new order quashing the Commission's subpoena of Justice Mosk in C.J.P. No. 3012.

On November 15, 1979, the opinion was modified to read as printed above.

G. DENNIS ADAMS, a Judge of the Superior Court, Petitioner, v. COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE,[1] Respondent.

SUMMARY

Pursuant to its authority granted by Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (f)(3), the Commission on Judicial Performance exercised its authority to open a judicial disciplinary hearing to the public, after determining that two counts of formal charges against a judge involved moral turpitude and corruption, and that another count involved moral turpitude, corruption, and dishonesty. The judge filed a petition for a writ of mandate with the Supreme Court seeking to stay issuance of a press release and to maintain the confidentiality of the proceedings before the commission. On transfer, the Court of Appeal, Fourth Dist., No. G014710, filed an unpublished, confidential opinion granting in part and denying in part the relief sought by the judge.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the Court of Appeal to the extent it granted the relief sought by the judge, and otherwise affirmed. The court held that the provisions on open hearings by the Commission on Judicial Performance on charges involving moral turpitude, dishonesty, or corruption (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (f)(3); Cal. Rules of Court, rule 907.2(c)) do not violate constitutional provisions for separation of powers (Cal. Const., art. III, § 3) and judicial powers (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 1). It also held that a determination that charges involve moral turpitude is based not on the particular language chosen by the commission in framing the

[1]The petition in this matter originally was filed under the caption "Inquiry Concerning a Judge, No. 104." We have changed the caption to reflect that the matter is a mandate proceeding against the Commission of Judicial Performance, and we have substituted the name of the petitoner, because the information reflecting the petitioner's identity has been unsealed.

This proceeding involves a challenge to a ruling by the Commission on Judicial Performance, ordering that a disciplinary hearing before the commission be open to the public. While this proceeding was pending before the Court of Appeal, the commission decided to proceed with a closed disciplinary hearing, and, after holding such a closed hearing, the commission filed a recommendation with this court proposing a disciplinary sanction againt petitioner. (See, post, p. 640, fn. 8.) Petitioner has filed a separate petition challenging the proposed sanction. (Adams v. Commission on Judicial Performance (S042149).) The present decision is concerned solely with the validity of the commission's order opening to the public the disciplinary hearing before the commission.

formal written charges, but rather on the commission's independent preliminary assessment of the judge's conduct and the reliability and truth of the allegations, including evidence relating to the motivation of the judge as well as his or her explanation for the alleged misconduct uncovered by the commission in its preliminary investigation. However, the commission is not required, prior to the determination to open a hearing, to render some form of preliminary formal findings relating to the defenses asserted by the judge in the answer to the formal charges. The court further held that even if the facts alleged in the notice of formal proceedings do not necessarily or unavoidably involve moral turpitude, the commission nevertheless has the discretion to determine that the particular facts established in the course of its investigation, and the decision to file formal charges, justify the conclusion that the judge's actions did involve moral turpitude, dishonesty, or corruption. Moreover, the Judicial Council acted within its authority in construing the constitutional language as authorizing the commission in its discretion to order an open hearing on all charges in the event one of the charges involves moral turpitude (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 907.2). The court held that the procedure does not violate equal protection provisions of the state and federal Constitutions by creating arbitrary classifications between judges facing charges involving moral turpitude and judges facing charges that do not fall within that category, and between judges facing no charges of moral turpitude and judges facing charges, one or more of which (but not all of which) involve moral turpitude. It held that the strict scrutiny standard for review for suspect classifications does not apply to an equal protection challenge to the procedure, since any "right" of a judge to maintain the confidentiality of disciplinary proceedings is not a constitutionally fundamental one. Finally the court held that the commission properly exercised its discretion in determining that certain counts of the formal charges against the judge, concerning the acceptance of benefits and favors, involved moral turpitude, dishonesty, or corruption. (Opinion by George, J., expressing the unanimous view of the court.)

HEADNOTES

Classified to California Digest of Official Reports

(1) Judges § 6.4 —Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Proceedings—Open Hearing Provisions—Separation of Powers.—The provisions for open hearings by the Commission on Judicial Performance on charges involving moral turpitude, dishonesty, or corruption (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (f)(3); Cal. Rules of Court, rule 907.2(c)) do not violate or contravene constitutional provisions for separation of powers (Cal. Const., art. III, § 3) and establishing judicial powers (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 1). Cal. Const., art. III, § 3, provides: "The powers of state government are legislative, executive, and judicial. Persons charged with the exercise of one power may not exercise either of the others except as permitted by this Constitution." The commission itself was created by constitutional amendment and the commission's authority to order that a hearing be open is established by Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (f), adopted by amendment in 1988. Thus, the commission was created to act as a constitutionally independent body, and the Constitution expressly authorizes the commission to provide public access to judicial disciplinary proceedings under appropriate circumstances. Appropriate judicial review of a commission order opening a hearing is available by way of petition for a writ of mandamus (Code Civ. Proc., § 1085), and a judge may seek an immediate stay of an order that a press release issue or that a hearing be open (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 56(c)).

[See 1 Witkin, Cal. Procedure (3d ed. 1985) Courts, § 23.]

(2) Judges § 6.4—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Proceedings—Open Hearing Provisions—Constitutionality.—The fact that Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, former subd. (f) (now subd. (h)), provides for confidentiality of proceedings before the Commission on Judicial Performance does not render the provisions for open hearings in Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (f)(3), unconstitutional. The California Supreme Court decision that so interpreted art. VI, § 18, former subd. (f), predated the 1988 constitutional amendment to Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, that provided for open hearings. The fact that the 1988 constitutional amendment did not eliminate former subd. (f), but rather retained and relabeled it, does not reflect any contrary intent. The newly relabeled subd. (h) simply affirms the continuing authority of the commission to promulgate rules implementing Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, including but not limited to provisions relating to confidentiality.

(3a, 3b) Judges § 6.4—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Proceedings—Open Hearing Provisions—Charges Involving Moral Turpitude—Defenses and Explanations.—Under the constitutional provision providing for open disciplinary hearings by the Commission on Judicial Performance in cases involving moral turpitude (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (f)(3)), a determination that charges involve moral turpitude is based not on the particular language chosen by the commission in framing the formal written charges, but rather on the commission's independent preliminary assessment of the judge's conduct and the reliability and truth of the allegations, including evidence relating to the motivation of the judge as well as his or her explanation for the alleged misconduct uncovered by the commission in its preliminary investigation. Thus, the commission does not make its determination whether charges warrant an open hearing based solely on the "four corners" of the pleading. However, the commission is not required, prior to the determination to open a hearing, to render some form of preliminary formal findings relating to the defenses asserted by the judge in the answer to the formal charges.

(4) Judges § 6.4—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Proceedings—Open Hearing Provisions—Construction of Constitutional Provision.—Under Cal. Const, art. VI, § 18, subd. (f)(3), stating that the "Commission on Judicial Performance may in the pursuit of public confidence and the interest of justice, issue press statements or releases or, in the event charges involve moral turpitude, dishonesty, or corruption, open hearings to the public," the phrase "may in the pursuit of public confidence and the interests of justice" modifies both the issuance of press statements or releases and the opening of commission hearings to the public.

(5) Judges § 6.4—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Proceedings—Open Hearing Provisions—Charges Involving Moral Turpitude—Construction.—Under Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (f)(3), authorizing an open hearing in judicial disciplinary proceedings when the charges involve moral turpitude, even if the facts alleged in the notice of formal proceedings do not necessarily or unavoidably involve moral turpitude, the Commission on Judicial Performance has the discretion to determine that the particular facts established in the course of its investigation, and the decision to file formal charges, justify the conclusion that the judge's actions did involve moral turpitude, dishonesty, or corruption within the meaning of art. VI, § 18, subd. (f)(3).

(6) Judges § 6.4—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Proceedings—Open Hearing Provisions—Charges Involving Moral Turpitude—Scope.—Under Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (f)(3), providing that the Commission on Judicial Performance "may in the pursuit of public confidence and the interest of justice . . . in the event charges involve moral turpitude, dishonesty, or corruption, open hearings to the public," the Judicial Council has acted within its authority in construing the language as authorizing the commission in its discretion to order an open hearing on all charges in the event one of the charges involves moral turpitude (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 907.2). The Judicial Council, as an independent agency charged with the specialized and focused task of promulgating rules implementing an open hearing procedure in judicial disciplinary proceedings, is the entity presumably equipped or informed by experience to perform such tasks, is entitled to deferential treatment by the court as to its findings. The single hearing procedure authorized by the rule does not constitute an improper expansion of the commission's grant of authority under the constitutional provision. However, the commission is not required to hold open hearings on all charges whenever any charge involves moral turpitude, as it may determine that the charges that do not involve moral turpitude are clearly distinct and severable from the charges that do, and that a closed hearing on those charges would not threaten public confidence in the proceedings or imperil the interests of justice.

(7a, 7b) Judges § 6.4—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Proceedings—Open Hearing Provisions—Charges Involving Moral Turpitude—Equal Protection—Rational Basis: Constitutional Law § 80—Equal Protection—Equality in Legal Proceedings—Judicial Disciplinary Proceedings—Open Hearings—Charges Involving Moral Turpitude.—Under Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (f)(3), authorizing open hearings and disciplinary proceedings against judges charged with misconduct involving moral turpitude, the open hearing procedure provided for under Cal. Rules of Court, rule 907.2, does not violate equal protection provisions of the state and federal Constitutions by creating arbitrary classifications between judges facing charges involving moral turpitude and judges facing charges that do not fall within that category, and between judges facing no charges of moral turpitude and judges facing charges, one or more of which (but not all of which) involve moral turpitude. Because the classifications do not impinge on a fundamental interest, the rational basis test is applicable. With respect to the first classification, the need to promote public confidence in the judiciary is a rational basis for treating proceedings involving charges of moral turpitude, dishonesty, or corruption differently from proceedings that do not involve such charges. As to the second classification, the significance and gravity of the moral turpitude charges may well be determined only in the context of the other charges, and public confidence in the fairness and final result of a disciplinary procedure may be diminished if the public is permitted to observe only a portion of the proceedings. A single hearing on all charges also may be a more efficient means of implementing the open hearing procedure.

(8) Constitutional Law § 76—Equal Protection—Nature and Scope of Equal Protection.—The equality granted by the equal protection clauses of the federal and state Constitutions is equality under the same conditions, and among persons similarly situated. The Legislature may make reasonable classifications of persons and other activities, provided the classifications are based on some legitimate object to be accomplished. The strict scrutiny standard of review applies only if a legislative classification involves a suspect classification or significantly infringes on a fundamental right.

[See 8 Witkin, Summary of Cal. Law (9th ed. 1988) Constitutional Law, § 599.]

(9) Constitutional Law § 87.2—Equal Protection—Classification—Judicial Review—Fixed Standard of Review—Particular Classifications—Judges Facing Charges of Moral Turpitude—Open Hearing Provision.—The determination to open to the public a judicial disciplinary proceeding before the Commission on Judicial Performance (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (f)(3)) does not impinge on any fundamental right of the subject judge, and, therefore, the strict scrutiny standard for review for suspect classifications does not apply to an equal protection challenge to the procedure. Any "right" of a judge to maintain the confidentiality of disciplinary proceedings is not a constitutionally fundamental one. Among the primary traditional purposes of confidentiality are the need to accommodate the interests of complainants and witnesses, to avoid unnecessary publicity related to unfounded complaints, and to encourage a judge guilty of serious misconduct to retire before the commencement of formal proceedings—and not solely, or even primarily, to avoid unwarranted damage to the reputation of the subject judge.

(10a, 10b) Judges § 6.2—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Grounds—Charges Involving Moral Turpitude, Dishonesty, and Corruption—Sufficiency of Evidence—Open Hearing Provisions.—Under Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (f)(3), authorizing open judicial disciplinary hearings on charges involving moral turpitude, dishonesty, and corruption, the Commission on Judicial Performance properly exercised its discretion in determining that certain counts of formal charges against a judge involved moral turpitude, dishonesty, and corruption. One charge alleged facts involving the judge's active solicitation of a favorable transaction involving the purchase of an automobile from a litigant at the same time the litigant's case was pending before the court. Another charge involved the alleged payment of substantial monetary amounts by a litigant's attorney for the judge's benefit shortly after the attorney and his client had prevailed in significant litigation before the judge. OPINION

GEORGE, J.—An impartial and independent judiciary is indispensable to our legal system. Of equal importance is public confidence in the independence and integrity of the judiciary, because the effective functioning of our legal system is dependent upon the public's willingness to accept the judgments and rulings of the courts. (Cal. Code Jud. Conduct, com. to canon 1.)[2] As a consequence, California judges must act in accordance with high standards of conduct that foster the utmost trust of the public.

In 1960, as a means of attempting to meet the public's expectations with regard to a fair and impartial judiciary, and in order to enforce rigorous standards of judicial conduct, California established the first permanent state judicial disciplinary commission in the nation, the Commission on Judicial Performance (hereafter the Commission). (See Cal. Const., art. VI, § 8;[3] Shaman & Begue, Silence Isn't Always Golden: Reassessing Confidentiality in the Judicial Disciplinary Process (1985) 58 Temple L.Q. 755, 756 [hereafter Silence Isn't Always Golden].) An independent state agency, the Commission is authorized to investigate complaints of judicial misconduct and other conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice, to file formal charges, to hold adjudicative hearings and make findings, to order less serious discipline on its own authority, and to recommend the imposition of more serious discipline—including removal from office—by this court. (Art. VI, § 18.) In its 1993 Annual Report, the Commission recognized that "[t]he importance of providing a forum for complaints about judicial misconduct cannot be overestimated in terms of public confidence in the judiciary." (Com. on Jud. Performance, Ann. Rep. (1993) p. 4.)

[2]The California Code of Judicial Conduct, adapted from the American Bar Association Code of Judicial Conduct of 1972, was adopted by the California Conference of Judges (later renamed the California Judges Association) on September 10, 1974, effective January 5, 1975. In 1992, the California Judges Association adopted a revised California Code of Judicial Conduct. All further references to the Code of Judicial Conduct are to the 1992 California Code.

Prior to November 1988, proceedings before the Commission relating to judicial performance remained confidential unless, and until, charges were filed with this court. Thus, public scrutiny of a judicial disciplinary proceeding occurred only when the Commission recommended serious discipline and the proceeding reached the final stage of review in this court.[4]

In November 1988, however, the voters of this state approved a legislative resolution pursuant to article XVIII, sections 1, 4—designated on the ballot as Proposition 92—that amended the provisions of the California Constitution relating to the judicial disciplinary process. Based upon the determination that, under appropriate circumstances, public scrutiny of the initial stages of a judicial disciplinary proceeding before the Commission is necessary and warranted in order to maintain public confidence in the judiciary, the constitutional amendment authorized the Commission to open its hearings to the public "in the event charges involve moral turpitude, dishonesty, or corruption . . . ." (Art. VI, § 18, subd. (f)(3).)

The present proceeding arises from the Commission's exercise of its authority to open a judicial disciplinary hearing to the public pursuant to the 1988 constitutional amendment. On December 10, 1992, following an extensive preliminary investigation (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 904.2)[5] that generated substantial publicity in the local media as well as in legal journals,[6] the Commission filed a notice of formal proceedings, charging Judge G. Dennis Adams of the San Diego County Superior Court (hereafter petitioner) with willful misconduct in office and conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute. (Art. VI, § 18, subd. (c).) Petitioner filed an answer denying the charges. On May 10, 1993, the Commission filed an amended notice of formal proceedings, and the judge answered, again denying the charges. Thereafter, the Commission concluded that counts 1 and 2 of the formal charges involved moral turpitude and corruption and that count 4 of the formal charges involved moral turpitude, corruption, and dishonesty, and that opening to the public the hearing on the charges would serve to maintain public confidence in the judiciary and would further the interests of justice. (Art. VI, § 18, subd. (f)(3); rule 907.2 (c).) On these grounds, the Commission determined to open the hearing, notified the parties of its decision, and scheduled a press release.

[4]Most other states adopted a similar system of limited public scrutiny. "From the beginning of the modern stage of judicial discipline, there has been widespread belief that the records and proceedings of judicial conduct organizations should be kept confidential, at least until a conduct organization files formal charges of misconduct against a judge." (Silence Isn't Always Golden, op. cit. supra, 58 Temple L.Q. at p. 756.)

In response, petitioner filed in this court, in the first instance, a petition for writ of mandate (or other appropriate relief), seeking to stay issuance of the press release and to maintain the confidentiality of the proceedings before the Commission. In his petition, he challenged, among other matters, the determination of the Commission that several of the charges alleged against him involved moral turpitude, dishonesty, or corruption. On August 12, 1993, we transferred the matter to the Court of Appeal, Fourth Appellate District, and ordered that the Commission maintain the confidentiality of the proceedings, and that the record remain sealed, during the pendency of the proceedings in the Court of Appeal.[7]

In August 1993, the Court of Appeal issued an order to show cause, subsequently filing an unpublished, confidential opinion, in which the court, in a two-to-one decision, granted in part and denied in part the relief sought by petitioner. The majority in the Court of Appeal construed the term "involve," in the context of the phrase "involve moral turpitude, dishonesty, or corruption" in article VI, section 18, subdivision (f)(3), to mean necessarily involve such behavior. The appellate court also concluded that if some, but not all, of the charges necessarily involved moral turpitude, dishonesty, or corruption, equal protection principles dictate that the Commission may open the hearing only on the charges that meet such criteria and must maintain the confidentiality of the proceedings relating to the charges that do not meet the criteria. Finally, the appellate court determined that certain charges alleged in counts 1 and 4 of the notice of formal proceedings necessarily involved moral turpitude, corruption, or dishonesty, but that the remaining charges did not meet that criteria, and that hearings on these other charges therefore should remain confidential.

Both petitioner and the Commission sought review of the decision of the Court of Appeal, challenging in a variety of respects the conclusions reached [7]On August 20, 1993, the Commission filed a second amended notice of formal proceedings, which contained new charges. The Commission determined that the amendments comprised additional instances of the same type of misconduct that was the subject of the first amended notice, and that the filing of the new charges did not alter the Commission's earlier determination that the criteria for an open hearing had been satisfied. In the briefing it filed with this court, the Commission indicates that, subsequently, additional amendments to the formal charges have been filed.

by the Court of Appeal. We granted the petitions for review filed by both parties.[5]

Petitioner contends that: (1) article VI, section 18, subdivision (f)(3), and rule 907.2(c), which authorize the Commission to open to the public a hearing on charges relating to judicial performance if certain criteria are met, violate the doctrines of separation of powers under article III, section 3, and judicial powers under article VI, section 1; (2) the adoption of article VI, section 18, subdivision (f)(3), in Proposition 92, did not repeal or vitiate section 18, subdivision (h) (former subd. (f)), which assertedly mandates confidentiality of hearings on judicial performance; (3) in determining whether to open to the public the hearing on charges relating to judicial performance, the Commission must consider not only the formal written charges, but also the evidence supporting the defenses asserted by a judge in response to the charges; (4) the distinction drawn under section 18, subdivision (f)(3), between judges facing charges involving moral turpitude, dishonesty, or corruption, and judges charged with misconduct that does not fall within that category, violates constitutional guarantees of equal protection of the laws; (5) rule 907.2(c), permitting an open hearing on all the charges of judicial misconduct if any of the charges meet the constitutional criteria, violates equal protection guarantees, and therefore should be declared void; and (6) none of the charges filed against petitioner involved moral turpitude, dishonesty, or corruption.

The Commission, in turn, contends that: (1) charges of misconduct that "involve moral turpitude, dishonesty, or corruption," under article VI, section 18, subdivision (f)(3), should be construed to signify charges that may prove to involve, rather than "necessarily" involve, moral turpitude, dishonesty, or corruption; (2) when a judge is charged with numerous acts of judicial misconduct, some (but not all) of which involve moral turpitude, dishonesty, or corruption, article VI, section 18, subdivision (f)(3), as implemented by rule 907.2(c), properly permits an open hearing on all the [5]Prior to the filing of the Court of Appeal's decision, the Commission, on October 25, 1993, commenced a confidential evidentiary hearing on the charges before the three special masters appointed by this court. (Rule 908.) The hearing concluded on April 6, 1994. On April 25, 1994, pursuant to rule 912(a), the special masters transmitted to the Commission their proposed report, together with findings of fact and conclusions of law. On September 13, 1994, the Commission filed with this court its findings of fact, conclusions of law, and recommendation. After the commission filed its recommendation with this court, we ordered that the record in the present proceeding be unsealed.

By separate motion, petitioner requests that this court take judicial notice pursuant to Evidence Code section 459 of the proposed report of the special masters. We decline to do so, concluding that this report is irrelevant to the issues involved in the present proceeding, relating to the Commission's determination, reached prior to the commencement of the hearing, to open the hearing on the charges.

charges; and (3) the Commission properly determined that counts 1 and 2 of the formal charges involved moral turpitude and corruption, and that count 4 of the formal charges involved moral turpitude, dishonesty, and corruption.

After reviewing the substance of the charges against petitioner, we shall turn to the numerous legal issues raised by the parties.

I

A. The charges.

The amended notice of formal proceedings (hereafter sometimes referred to as the notice) charged petitioner with willful misconduct in office and conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute, within the meaning of article VI, section 18, subdivision (c), based upon the following allegations:

Count 1: Petitioner received substantial financial benefits in the form of discounts and favorable prices for the purchase of automobiles and repairs from James Williams, who owned a car dealership, and who was a litigant in favor of whom the judge previously had awarded a substantial monetary judgment. In doing so, petitioner failed to conduct himself in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary.

Specifically, the notice alleged that, in 1986, petitioner presided over a court trial in litigation entitled Security Pacific National Bank v. Williams, and a related cross-action, and entered a $5 million judgment in favor of Williams, reserving jurisdiction to determine attorney fees and costs on appeal. Williams's counsel in that litigation was Patrick Frega. While the case was pending on appeal, petitioner contacted Williams regarding the purchase of a Mercedes automobile. In March 1989, Williams sold a used Mercedes to petitioner, personally handling the transaction. He set the sales price at $20,537, which, according to the notice, "appeared to be favorable" to petitioner.

The judgment in the Security Pacific litigation was affirmed on appeal, and on January 9, 1990, the remittitur issued. The notice alleged that "[i]n or about early 1990," petitioner again contacted Williams and asked the car dealer to locate a used automobile for his daughter. In March 1990, Williams sold and delivered a 1988 Jeep to petitioner, setting the sales price at $13,500, which "appeared to be favorable" to petitioner. The total sales price, including taxes and other charges, was $14,796.74. At the time of the purchase, the only consideration paid by petitioner for the Jeep was the trade-in of a 1983 Oldsmobile, having a value of $800. On April 16, 1990, petitioner caused to be issued to Williams's dealership a cashier's check in the amount of $5,000 as further payment for the Jeep. On or about June 4, 1990, "Patrick R. Frega, counselor at law, a professional corporation," issued to Williams a check for $9,796.74, a sum equal to the total sales price of $14,796.74, less the $5,000 Williams had received from petitioner on April 16. The check bore a notation to the title and docket number of the Security Pacific litigation (the case in which petitioner had awarded Williams a $5 million judgment). On June 7, 1990, petitioner wrote a check, payable to Frega personally, for $5,672.40. The check bore a notation indicating it was a "pay-off" on his daughter's vehicle.

In November and December 1991, Williams's dealership performed substantial repairs on the Jeep. After giving petitioner a 10 percent discount for parts and labor, Williams billed him for the amount of $8,500. On December 9, 1991, petitioner paid Williams the sum of $7,000 on this bill. On the same day, "Patrick R. Frega, counselor at law, a professional corporation" paid to Williams's dealership $1,500 as the balance owing on the bill.

In December 1990, the same year Williams received satisfaction of his $5 million judgment, Williams gave petitioner a gift of a sweater. Pursuant to Government Code section 87207, which requires judges to report gifts they have received having a value of $50 or more, petitioner reported the gift of the sweater, valuing it at $150.

Count 2: Petitioner received gifts from attorneys whose interests had or were likely to come before the judge. In proceedings involving these attorneys, petitioner failed to disqualify himself or make full disclosure on the record of his relationship with these attorneys or their firms, or obtain a written waiver of disqualification. In doing so, he failed to conduct himself in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary. This conduct was manifested by the following specific incidents:

i. Beginning in July 1987, through 1991, petitioner began to collaborate with Frega in the writing of a novel. During this period, petitioner reported accepting a loan from Frega of a laptop computer, valuing the loan at $1,300. On July 2, 1987, Frega took petitioner and petitioner's wife to dinner to celebrate Frega's award from the San Diego Trial Lawyers Association as "trial lawyer of the year," which was based upon the successful outcome in the Security Pacific v. Williams litigation. Petitioner reported the value of the dinner at $100.

ii. On or about June 4, 1990, Frega paid to Williams the sum of $9,796.74 toward the purchase of petitioner's daughter's Jeep. Of this sum, at least $4,124.34 constituted Frega's contribution for the purchase of the Jeep.

iii. Frega or members of his firm have appeared before petitioner in several cases since July 2, 1987.

iv. In 1985, petitioner was represented in a legal matter by members of the then-named law firm of Ault, Midlam, & Deuprey. In December 1986, petitioner accepted from that firm a legal fee "write-off" of $600. Since December 1986, members of that firm and its successors have appeared before petitioner in numerous cases.[9]

v. In October 1989, petitioner accepted the use of Attorney Michael Duckor's desert condominium for a weekend. In the Summer of 1989 or 1990, petitioner was a guest of Duckor's law firm, Duckor & Spradling, on a day fishing trip. Since 1989, members of Duckor & Spradling have appeared before petitioner in several cases, and petitioner has appointed Duckor regularly as a special master.

Count 3: Petitioner provided legal advice to Frega and members of his firm on cases being handled by that firm. In doing so, petitioner failed to conduct himself in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary. The notice charged the following incidents:

i. In 1988 or 1989, petitioner assisted Frega's associate, George Manning, in preparing a settlement conference brief for a case pending in the San Diego County Superior Court. In early 1989, petitioner assisted Manning in preparing a settlement conference brief in another case.

ii. In the spring of 1989, petitioner met with Frega to discuss a case pending in the San Diego County Superior Court in which Frega represented the plaintiff. Petitioner provided Frega with advice, recommending that he file a "Tarasoff motion" (Tarasoff v. Regents of University of California (1976) 17 Cal.3d 425 [131 Cal.Rptr. 14, 551 P.2d 334, 83 A.L.R.3d 1166].) The Frega firm subsequently filed such a motion.

iii. Petitioner communicated with Frega regarding litigation pending in Los Angeles County Superior Court, providing Frega with petitioner's opinion regarding a special verdict.

Count 4: In response to inquiries by the Commission regarding complaints of misconduct, petitioner made material omissions and misrepresentations and demonstrated a lack of candor. He thereby failed to conduct himself in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity of the judiciary. Count 4 charged the following incidents:

[9]In his answer filed in response to the notice of formal proceedings, petitioner submitted documentation indicating, in certain cases involving the appearance of members of the law firm of Ault, Midlam, & Deuprey, as well as the law firm of Duckor & Spradling (see subpt. v., post), before petitioner, that petitioner had made full disclosure to opposing counsel of the nature of his relationship with these firms.

i. In the course of its investigation, the Commission inquired of petitioner regarding the gift (which the judge had declared) of the $150 sweater received from Williams (discussed, ante), asking him to comment and supply information "regarding any appearances before [petitioner] by any of the donors [of gifts], or any attorney or entity associated with a donor, since January 1, 1985." Petitioner was directed to "[p]lease describe any appearance by a donor or associate and indicate whether you have taken any legal action affecting a donor or associate, or whether you have recused yourself from a case involving a donor or associate." Petitioner responded by letter that the sweater "was a Christmas gift from Williams who is a personal friend and has no business before me." Petitioner failed to disclose that Williams had been a litigant who had appeared before the judge in 1985 and 1986, and in favor of whom the judge had awarded a $5 million judgment.

ii. The Commission inquired regarding any gifts received by petitioner from any donor listed in a previous letter of the Commission, dated October 18, 1991, which had identified both Frega and Williams as donors. In response, petitioner asserted, "I received no gifts requiring disclosure and nothing from any of the donors listed in the letter of October 18." Petitioner failed to disclose the discount given by Williams's dealership for the repairs to the judge's daughter's Jeep or the $1500 payment made by Frega for those repairs.

iii. In a letter to the Commission, petitioner's attorney represented that "[a] separate check was written by Judge Adams in the amount of $5,672.40 to the dealership." This statement was false. The check was payable to Frega.

iv. The Commission inquired regarding petitioner's declaration of a gift of legal services by the law firm of Ault, Midlam, & Deuprey, requesting information regarding any appearances by that law firm in cases before petitioner. The judge responded: "Because of our friendship, Tom Ault has never appeared in front of me." He failed to disclose that members of the law firm had appeared before the judge on several occasions since January 1, 1985.

v. The Commission inquired regarding declared gifts from Frega, requesting information regarding any appearances by Frega or other members of Frega's law firm in cases before petitioner. Adams responded that "Pat Frega does not appear in front of me and I will not hear one of his cases." He also stated, "I will not hear a Frega case." In a follow-up letter, the Commission inquired whether Frega had appeared before him before he had given the gifts to petitioner. Petitioner falsely responded that "Mr. Frega last appeared before me in 1984." Petitioner failed to identify numerous cases involving Frega or his firm that had come before petitioner since 1984, including the Security Pacific litigation.

vi. The Commission inquired regarding petitioner's declared stay at Duckor's desert condominium. Petitioner responded: "I recuse myself from all Duckor matters although the court uses him as a special master in cases involving construction defects." He failed to disclose that the Duckor & Spradling firm had appeared before him in three cases.

B. Answer.

Petitioner submitted a lengthy response, dated June 10, 1993, to the amended notice of formal proceedings, denying all charges and providing detailed information, with supporting documentation. He asserted, among other matters, that he paid fair market value when he purchased the Mercedes from Williams's dealership, and, prior to the Commission's investigation, had no knowledge regarding any payments made by Frega toward the purchase of the Jeep or the repairs. He also explained he had not heard a contested matter in a case handled by Frega since the Security Pacific litigation, which was decided in early 1986, and that, on any occasion when settlement negotiations in a construction-defect case handled by a Frega associate reached an impasse, requiring that contested issues be decided, petitioner recused himself.

C. Order to open hearing.

Prior to the filing of petitioner's answer to the amended notice of formal proceedings, the Commission made a preliminary decision to conduct an open hearing and invited written arguments on the question. (Rule 907.2(a).) After considering the written briefing, on June 25, 1993, the Commission issued an order to open the hearing. In its order, the Commission determined that counts 1 and 2 of the formal charges involved moral turpitude and corruption, and that count 4 involved moral turpitude, corruption, and dishonesty. The Commission further determined that a formal hearing open to the public would further both public confidence in the judiciary and the interests of justice, because: (1) the judge allegedly received substantial financial benefits not previously revealed to the public and to the litigants appearing before the judge; (2) there had been substantial interest and concern expressed by the public, the litigants, and the judiciary in the conduct underlying the charges in these proceedings; and (3) the risk of further speculation and misinformation about the charges and the proceedings would continue if the hearing were closed to the public, thus "eroding public confidence in the judiciary and the process of judicial discipline."

Pursuant to its determination to open the hearing, the Commission authorized a press release containing a general description of the charges, stating that the judge denied the charges, and explaining the hearing procedure.

II

Under the authority of article VI, section 18, the Commission may initiate and oversee proceedings for the censure, removal, retirement, or private admonishment of a judge. Rule 904 directs that an inquiry be made by the Commission staff into verified complaints of misconduct that are not obviously frivolous or unfounded, followed if appropriate by a preliminary investigation to determine whether formal proceedings are necessary. The Commission also is allowed to make such inquiry and investigation on its own motion without receipt of a verified complaint. If the Commission commences a preliminary investigation, the judge must be notified of that fact and afforded a reasonable opportunity to respond. (Rule 904.2(a).) If, following the preliminary investigation, the Commission concludes that formal proceedings should be instituted to inquire into the charges, the Commission must issue a written notice to the judge advising him or her of the decision to so proceed. (Rule 905(a).) The notice of formal proceedings must specify the charges against the judge and the alleged facts upon which the charges are based. (Rule 905(b).) The judge may file an answer to the notice of formal proceedings, and the notice and answer constitute the "pleadings." (Rule 906.) The Commission thereafter orders a hearing on the charges and may request that the California Supreme Court appoint special masters to hear and take evidence and report their findings and conclusions to the Commission. (Rule 907.)

Prior to the passage, at the November 1988 General Election, of the legislative proposal to amend the constitutional provision, former subdivision (f) of article VI, section 18, provided: "The Judicial Council shall make rules implementing this section and providing for confidentiality of proceedings." In Mosk v. Superior Court (1979) 25 Cal.3d 474 [159 Cal.Rptr. 494, 601 P.2d 1030], the court concluded that this former version of subdivision (f) mandated confidentiality of investigations and proceedings before the Commission, and that, accordingly, the Judicial Council did not have the authority to promulgate rules providing for investigations and hearings open to the public. In reaching this conclusion, the court relied upon the language of former section 10b, paragraph (3), of article VI, as adopted by constitutional amendment in November 1960, which expressly provided for the confidentiality of all proceedings before the Commission, and concluded there was no indication "that the people of California intended to change the constitutional requirement of confidentiality by revision of article VI in 1966 . . . ." (25 Cal.3d at p. 499.)[10]

The constitutional provision interpreted in the Mosk decision remained unchanged until the November 1988 election. Prior to that election, the Senate resolved, with the Assembly concurring, to propose to the voters that article VI, sections 8 and 18, of the California Constitution, be amended to provide, inter alia, that, under some circumstances, hearings on judicial performance before the Commission could be opened to public scrutiny. (Sen. Const. Amend. No. 6, Stats. 1988 (1987-1988 Reg. Sess.) res. ch. 67, pp. 6115-6116.) The preamble to the legislative resolution proposing the constitutional amendment states: "WHEREAS, The Legislature finds and declares that maintaining public confidence in the integrity of the judicial system is essential to good government; and [¶] WHEREAS, The Commission on Judicial Performance bears a great public trust which it must currently fulfill in total secrecy; and [¶] WHEREAS, Because responsible public disclosure and accountability is proper, desirable, and consistent with the goal of public confidence, it is the intent of this measure that appropriate commission proceedings be open to public scrutiny, and that this measure be construed so as to accomplish this purpose which is hereby declared to be the public policy of this state . . . ." (Id., at p. 6115.)

The constitutional amendment was submitted to the voters as Proposition 92 and was approved, effective November 9, 1988. The amendment included the addition of the current versions of article VI, section 18, subdivisions (f) and (g), and the relabeling of former subdivision (f) as subdivision (h). Section 18, subdivision (f), now provides that if, after conducting a preliminary investigation, the Commission by vote determines that formal proceedings should be instituted against a judge, the Commission "may in the pursuit of public confidence and the interests of justice, issue press statements or releases or, in the event charges involve moral turpitude, dishonesty, or corruption, open hearings to the public." (Art. VI, § 18, subd. (f)(3).)

The Judicial Council, pursuant to the delegation of authority under section 18, subdivision (h), promulgated rule 907.2, governing open hearings. Subdivision (a) of rule 907.2 provides that, in the event a judge against whom charges have been filed does not request an open hearing in accordance with the rules, "the commission shall determine whether the proceeding may meet the constitutional criteria for opening hearings to the public." In the event the Commission makes a preliminary determination that the proceeding may meet the constitutional criteria under section 18, subdivision (f)(3), it must allow the parties to submit written arguments on this issue. (Rule 907.2(a).) After considering the written arguments submitted, the Commission must determine whether any charge in the notice of formal proceedings involves moral turpitude, dishonesty, or corruption (hereafter sometimes referred to collectively as moral turpitude.) (Rule 907.2(b).) Having determined that one or more of the charges involve moral turpitude, the Commission must decide whether an open hearing "would be (1) in the pursuit of public confidence, and (2) in the interests of justice." (Rule 907.2(c).)[11] Upon making this determination, the Commission may order that the hearing be open.

[10]The 1966 revisions of article VI included the replacement of former sections 10a and 10b with section 18, former subdivision (f).

III

(1) Petitioner initially contends that the open hearing provisions under article VI, section 18, subdivision (f)(3), as implemented by rule 907.2(c), violate the California Constitution's provisions for separation of powers under article III, section 3, and judicial powers under article VI, section 1, and that, accordingly, the open hearing procedure (established by the electorate's approval of the legislative resolution amending the Constitution) is void as an unconstitutional exercise of judicial power. Petitioner also maintains that rule 907.2(c) improperly authorizes the Commission to exercise judicial powers by granting the Commission unfettered discretion to determine whether the formal charges drafted by the Commission "involve moral turpitude, dishonesty, or corruption" and whether an open hearing on those charges would be in "the interests of justice" and "in the pursuit of public confidence." Petitioner argues that vesting such judicial powers in an administrative agency violates the separation of powers and judicial powers clauses, and the "principle of check" articulated by this court in McHugh v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (1989) 49 Cal.3d 348, 366 [261 Cal.Rptr. 318, 777 P.2d 91].

Even if we assume, arguendo, that the Commission's exercise of the authority to issue a press release concerning a pending proceeding, and to open the Commission's hearing related to such a proceeding, are "judicial-like" functions, petitioner's claim has no merit. Article III, section 3, provides: "The powers of State government are legislative, executive, and judicial. Persons charged with the exercise of one power may not exercise either of the others except as permitted by this Constitution." (Italics added.) The Commission itself was created by constitutional amendment (art. VI, § 8), and the Commission's authority to order that a hearing be open now is established by our Constitution in article VI, section 18, subdivision (f), adopted by amendment in 1988. Thus, the Commission was created to act as a constitutionally independent body. In jurisdictions where public access to information relating to investigation of judicial misconduct is not authorized by the state Constitution, the power of the Legislature or the public to obtain such information may be limited by confidentiality provisions. (See Silence Isn't Always Golden, op. cit. supra, 58 Temple L.Q. at p. 782.) The California Constitution, however, now expressly authorizes the Commission to provide public access to judicial disciplinary proceedings under appropriate circumstances.

[11]Rule 907.2(c) provides in full: "If the commission finds that no charge in the notice of formal proceedings involves moral turpitude, dishonesty, or corruption, the commission shall order that the hearing remain confidential. [¶] If the commission finds that any charge in the notice of formal proceedings involves moral turpitude, dishonesty, or corruption, the commission shall proceed to a determination of whether opening the formal hearing would be (1) in the pursuit of public confidence, and (2) in the interests of justice. [¶] The commission shall not order that a formal hearing be open to the public unless the commission finds that opening the hearing would be both in the pursuit of public confidence and in the interests of justice."

Petitioner's reliance upon McHugh v. Santa Monica Rent Control Bd., supra, 49 Cal.3d 348, and Walnut Creek Manor v. Fair Employment & Housing Com. (1991) 54 Cal.3d 245, 265 [284 Cal.Rptr. 718, 814 P.2d 704], is misplaced. Those decisions simply hold that administrative agencies not vested by the California Constitution with judicial powers may not exercise such powers, and may exercise only those powers reasonably necessary to effectuate the agency's primary, legitimate regulatory purposes. (McHugh, supra, 49 Cal.3d at pp. 356, 372; Walnut Creek Manor, supra, 54 Cal.3d at p. 256.) McHugh expressly recognizes, however, that various administrative agencies are authorized by the Constitution to exercise judicial powers, and that the exercise by these agencies of such powers does not contravene the judicial powers or separation of powers clauses. (49 Cal.3d at p. 355.) The "principle of check" articulated in McHugh, and applicable to decisions of administrative agencies not vested by the Constitution with judicial powers (see McHugh, supra, 49 Cal.3d at p. 366), is inapplicable to agencies vested with such powers.

Petitioner's argument is similar to one rejected by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in Matter of Seraphim (1980) 97 Wis.2d 485 [294 N.W.2d 485], involving a formal complaint brought by a judicial commission against a Wisconsin judge for alleged judicial misconduct. The judge under investigation challenged the constitutionality of the judicial disciplinary procedure established by the Wisconsin legislature on the grounds it invaded the province of an independent judiciary and emasculated the judicial power vested in the court under the separation of powers clause contained in the Wisconsin Constitution. Like the California Constitution, however, the Wisconsin Constitution expressly authorized the legislature to establish such a procedure, and the court concluded: "It is ludicrous to argue, as [the judge] appears to in his brief, that the legislature's establishment of the procedures to be used by this court in disciplining members of the judiciary is an unconstitutional exercise of judicial power when the constitution expressly provides that such procedures are to be 'established by the legislature by law.' [¶] Nor can it be said that the procedure established by the legislature offends any separation-of-powers principle embedded in the constitution. Nothing in the constitution requires that this court have exclusive control over the manner in which members of the judiciary are disciplined and removed from office." (Id., at p. 490.)

A Commission order opening a hearing is not analogous to a Commission recommendation for the censure or removal of a judge, the latter being subject to the ultimate, independent decision of this court. (Art. VI, § 18, subd. (c).) Some means of judicial review, however, of an order opening a hearing must be afforded the judge under investigation. As evidenced by the present proceeding, appropriate judicial review of a Commission order opening a hearing is available by way of petition for writ of mandamus (Code Civ. Proc., § 1085; Eisenberg et al., Cal. Practice Guide: Civil Appeals and Writs (The Rutter Group 1990) ¶ 15:32, p. 15-14), and a judge may seek an immediate stay of an order that a press release issue or that a hearing be open (rule 56(c)).

For these reasons, we conclude the Commission's authority to order an open hearing where the constitutional criteria are met does not constitute an unconstitutional usurpation of judicial power.

(2) Petitioner also asserts the provisions for open hearing are unconstitutional in light of our holding in Mosk v. Superior Court, supra, 25 Cal.3d 474, that former subdivision (f) (current subd. (h)) of article VI, section 18, mandates confidentiality of all proceedings before the Commission. Because, in drafting section 18, subdivision (f), in 1988, the Legislature relabeled subdivision (f) as section 18, subdivision (h), but did not repeal or abrogate that former provision of the California Constitution, petitioner contends that the Constitution continues to mandate complete confidentiality in such proceedings.

Petitioner's assertion is undermined in its entirety by the circumstance that the decision in Mosk v. Superior Court, supra, 25 Cal.3d 474, predated the 1988 constitutional amendment to article VI, section 18. The issue presented in Mosk was whether a public Commission investigation of the California

Supreme Court was unconstitutional in light of article VI, section 18, former subdivision (f), relating to confidentiality of proceedings. We observed that confidentiality had been considered an essential element of judicial discipline, and held that confidentiality was required under former subdivision (f), based upon, among other factors, "the absence of any indication that the people of California intended to change" the previous requirement of confidentiality when article VI was revised in 1966. (25 Cal.3d at p. 499.)

In 1988, however, the California electorate clearly manifested its intent to authorize, in appropriate cases, public access to proceedings before the Commission. The ballot arguments in favor of Proposition 92, presented to the voters, emphasized that, "[f]or our system of justice to work, it is absolutely necessary that we have complete faith in our judges," and that judicial abuses "must be addressed promptly, decisively and with sufficient openness to assure continued public confidence." (Ballot Pamp., Proposed Amends. to Cal. Const. with arguments to voters, Gen. Elec. (Nov. 8, 1988) argument in favor of Prop. 92, p. 58.) The ballot argument explained that "Proposition 92 proposes to open disciplinary proceedings against judges in a limited but reasonable way," allowing "an accused judge or the commission to open proceedings subsequent to formal charges in appropriate cases," because "every public official, no matter how high the office, must ultimately be accountable to the public. When the integrity of our courts comes under question, we can ill afford to be bound by a rule which concludes in every case that the public and press are better off in the dark. Such absolute secrecy is the antithesis of democracy." (Ibid.)

As noted in Mosk v. Superior Court, supra, 25 Cal.3d at page 491, however, confidentiality may serve several functions. These functions include: (1) encouraging participation in the disciplinary process, by protecting complainants and witnesses from retribution or harassment; (2) protecting the reputation of innocent judges, wrongfully accused of misconduct, from injury that might result from publication of unexamined and unwarranted complaints by disgruntled litigants, attorneys, or political adversaries; (3) maintaining confidence in the judiciary by avoiding premature disclosure of alleged misconduct; and (4) encouraging retirement as an alternative to costly and lengthy formal hearings. (See Silence Isn't Always Golden, op. cit. supra, 58 Temple L.Q. at p. 760.) In Landmark Communications, Inc. v. Virginia (1978) 435 U.S. 829, 835-836 [56 L.Ed.2d 1, 8-9, 98 S.Ct. 1535], cited extensively in our Mosk decision, the United States Supreme Court recognized that maintaining confidentiality before the commencement of formal proceedings involving judicial performance serves legitimate state interests by avoiding premature announcement of groundless claims of judicial misconduct, and, in cases where the alleged misconduct does not warrant removal or even censure, the confidentiality of the proceedings allows the judge to be made aware of minor complaints that appropriately may be called to his or her attention without public notice.

Many of the benefits served by confidentiality diminish, however, when, following a preliminary investigation during which the judge under investigation has been afforded an opportunity to respond to and defend against accusations, a determination is made that the complaint is not frivolous and that formal proceedings should go forward. By its passage of Proposition 92, the electorate determined that, at this point in the process, the public interest in the operation of the judicial disciplinary system may be of greater concern than the risk of unwarranted damage to a judge's reputation or unwarranted loss of public confidence.

An additional reason identified in Mosk v. Superior Court, supra, in favor of confidentiality, was a "judge's constitutional right to a private admonishment (see art. VI, § 18, subd. (c)), if the circumstances so warrant." (25 Cal.3d at p. 491.) Following the passage of Proposition 92, however, any "right" to a private admonishment necessarily is limited by the constitutional amendment permitting public scrutiny of proceedings relating to judicial performance when the charges involve moral turpitude, dishonesty, or corruption. Moreover, the Commission retains the authority to maintain the confidentiality of proceedings and thus to have an entirely private admonishment in the event it concludes that public confidence and the interests of justice would not be served by an open hearing.

The circumstance that the 1988 constitutional amendment did not eliminate article VI, section 18, former subdivision (f), but rather retained and relabeled it as subdivision (h), does not reflect any contrary intent. The newly relabeled subdivision (h) simply affirms the continuing authority of the Judicial Council to promulgate rules implementing section 18, including but not limited to provisions relating to confidentiality (e.g., procedures for private admonishment, and to determine whether or not a hearing should be open).[12]

[12]Similarly, the 1988 constitutional amendment did not repeal rule 902, which provides in part that, "[e]xcept as provided in this rule, all papers filed with and proceedings before the Commission, or before the masters appointed by the Supreme Court pursuant to rule 907, shall be confidential until a record is filed by the Commission in the Supreme Court. . . ." (Rule 902(a).) Construing this rule in the context of the open hearing provisions of the 1988 constitutional amendment and rule 907.2, as we must, in the event the Commission orders open a hearing the Commission's files relating to the matters that are the subject of the open hearing may be disclosed partially or fully by the Commission incident to, and as a necessary consequence of, the open hearing, and to that extent would not remain confidential.

IV

(3a) Petitioner next contends that, in determining whether the charges involve moral turpitude, the Commission must consider not only the charges specified in the notice of formal proceedings, but, in addition, the defenses and explanations asserted by the judge in his or her answer to the charges, together with the evidence submitted in support of those defenses and explanations. He argues that if there is evidence made available to the Commission that justifies or explains the conduct in question, or that demonstrates the charges are unfounded, the Commission should consider this evidence before taking the "drastic step" of deviating from the state's general policy of confidentiality and thereby possibly imposing irreparable damage to the judge's reputation and credibility.

The Court of Appeal, focusing upon the language of article VI, section 18, subdivision (f)(3), and specifically the term "charges," concluded that the determination whether charges involve moral turpitude, dishonesty, or corruption must be based solely upon the written charges set forth in the formal pleading filed by the Commission, and does not require consideration of the judge's proffered defenses or explanations.

In our view, neither the contention of petitioner nor the conclusion of the Court of Appeal properly recognizes or takes into account the circumstance that, prior to making the determination whether charges involve moral turpitude, the Commission, pursuant to the authority vested in it by article VI, section 18, already will have reviewed and assessed a significant body of information pertinent to the complaint of misconduct, including all material provided by the judge that he or she believes to be relevant and material to the evaluation of the accusations, and that may explain, justify, or place in context the conduct in question. As explained ante, in part II, the decision to initiate formal proceedings with the filing of formal charges is preceded by the Commission's preliminary investigation (rule 904.2) of complaints of misconduct, an investigation that may involve contacting witnesses, reviewing court records, and conducting such other investigation as the issues may warrant. (Com. on Jud. Performance, Ann. Rep., supra, at pp. 2-3.) The judge must be notified of the preliminary investigation and the nature of the charges, and afforded an opportunity to respond and to "present such matters as the judge may choose." (Rule 904.2(a).) Thereafter, in inviting briefing (pursuant to rule 907.2 (a)) in response to the preliminary decision to open a hearing, the Commission again in its discretion considers the evidence, information, and arguments that may be submitted by the judge in opposition to an open hearing, a step in the proceedings that may shed further light upon the judge's conduct.

Thus, a determination that charges involve moral turpitude is based not upon the particular language chosen by the Commission in framing the formal written charges, but rather upon the Commission's independent preliminary assessment of the judge's conduct and the reliability and truth of the allegations, including evidence relating to the motivation of the judge as well as his or her explanation for the alleged misconduct uncovered by the Commission in its preliminary investigation. (4)(see fn. 13.), (3b) The additional determinations requisite to an open hearing under article VI, section 18, subdivision (f)(3)—that such a hearing would promote public confidence and the interests of justice—also are based necessarily upon the Commission's broad, overall assessment of the judge's culpability.[13]

Contrary to the suggestion of the Court of Appeal, therefore, the Commission does not make its determination whether charges warrant an open hearing based solely upon the "four corners" of the pleading.

We reject, however, any suggestion by petitioner that the Commission, prior to the determination to open a hearing, must render some form of preliminary formal findings relating to the defenses asserted by the judge in the answer to the formal charges. Article VI, section 18, subdivision (f)(3), at this stage of the proceedings does not contemplate such a procedure, which would require the resolution of contested factual matters.

V

The Court of Appeal construed the criteria "involve moral turpitude, dishonesty, or corruption" under article VI, section 18, subdivision (f)(3), to signify charges that "necessarily" or "unavoidably" involve such conduct or behavior, and not charges that only possibly will prove to involve such [13]In the course of its opinion, the Court of Appeal suggested that the phrase "in the pursuit of public confidence and the interests of justice" in article VI, section 18, subdivision (f)(3), applies only to the Commission's decision to "issue press statements or releases . . . ." In our view, neither the structure nor the purpose of the constitutional provision supports the Court of Appeal's conclusion in this regard.

The provision states in full that "[t]he Commission on Judicial Performance may in the pursuit of public confidence and the interests of justice, issue press statements or releases or, in the event charges involve moral turpitude, dishonesty, or corruption, open hearings to the public." (Italics added.) If the reference to "the pursuit of public confidence and the interests of justice" had been intended to refer solely to the issuance of press statements or releases (and not additionally to the opening of hearings), the drafters would not have included a comma after the word "justice" and prior to the phrase "issue press statements or releases . . . ." Furthermore, it appears clear, from the preamble to the legislative resolution, setting forth the purpose of the amendment, quoted, ante, that the Commission should consider "the pursuit of public confidence and the interests of justice" in determining both whether to open its hearings to the public and to issue press statements or releases. Thus, the Judicial Council, in drafting rule 907.2, reasonably construed the phrase "may in the pursuit of public confidence and the interests of justice" as modifying both the issuance of press statements or releases and the opening of Commission hearings to the public.

conduct or behavior. The Court of Appeal concluded, with respect to the allegation of petitioner's purchase of the Mercedes from Williams's dealership, that because petitioner had reserved jurisdiction in the Security Pacific litigation for the purpose of determining attorney fees and costs on appeal, the implication was unavoidable that, when petitioner contacted Williams, he was soliciting a "good deal" for an automobile, a circumstance necessarily involving corruption. The Court of Appeal further concluded that petitioner's alleged misconduct in falsely representing to the Commission that Williams's attorney, Patrick Frega, had not appeared before him since 1984 necessarily entailed dishonesty.

With respect to the remaining charges, however, the appellate court determined that it was possible petitioner had been unaware, as a result of mere inadvertence, that his conduct gave rise to a conflict of interest or violated a canon of judicial ethics, or that the statements he made to the Commission in response to its inquiries were inaccurate. The court concluded, therefore, that these latter charges "may or may not involve moral turpitude, dishonesty, or corruption, depending on all the circumstances which come to light," but did not necessarily involve such behavior, and therefore did not meet the constitutional criteria for an open hearing.

In reaching its construction of the language of article VI, section 18, subdivision (f)(3), the Court of Appeal relied upon this court's application of the phrase "involving moral turpitude" in the context of professional license-revocation cases. These cases are not determinative of the issue in the present case, however, and the Court of Appeal's reliance upon them was misplaced.

In professional license-revocation cases, involving revocation based upon conviction of a crime involving moral turpitude, this court has considered the issue whether a license may be revoked on the basis of mere proof of conviction, without any consideration of the specific facts underlying the conviction. In these cases we have held: " 'Only if the minimum elements for a conviction necessarily involve moral turpitude and a conviction cannot be had without proof of facts showing moral turpitude, can the conviction be held to be of an offense involving moral turpitude.' " (Cartwright v. Board of Chiropractic Examiners (1976) 16 Cal.3d 762, 766-767 [129 Cal.Rptr. 462, 548 P.2d 1134], quoting Lorenz v. Board of Medical Examiners (1956) 46 Cal.2d 684, 687 [298 P.2d 537].) These cases, however, do not stand for the proposition that when the crime underlying the conviction, considered in the abstract, does not necessarily involve moral turpitude, a disciplinary authority such as the Commission is precluded from reviewing the specific facts in the particular case constituting proof of the crime, independent of the fact of the conviction, to determine whether the conduct of the charged individual actually involved moral turpitude. In Lorenz v. Board of Medical Examiners, supra, 46 Cal.2d at page 687, the court made clear that a licensee can be disciplined, even when the offense does not necessarily involve moral turpitude, provided he or she is charged with fraudulent or immoral acts and is afforded a hearing on that charge.

(5) With respect to judicial disciplinary proceedings before the Commission, however, article VI, section 18, subdivision (f)(3), authorizes an open hearing when the "charges" involve moral turpitude. As stated previously, the Commission does not make its moral turpitude determination based solely upon the language of the formal pleading, but rather does so upon the results of its investigation and assessment of the actual conduct of the judge, as determined preliminarily by the Commission. Thus, regardless whether the formal written charges encompass conduct that, in the abstract, may or may not involve moral turpitude, the Commission makes its independent overall assessment of the judge's culpability in determining whether the alleged misconduct involves moral turpitude.

Moreover, in a judicial disciplinary proceeding, the threshold requirements for an open hearing under article VI, section 18, subdivision (f)(3), serve a purpose different from that served by the criteria for revocation in professional-licensing cases. The policy supporting license revocation based upon conviction of a crime involving moral turpitude is the state's need to regulate a profession based upon criteria having a demonstrable bearing upon fitness to practice the profession. (Cartwright v. Board of Chiropractic Examiners, supra, 16 Cal.3d at p. 767.) In construing the meaning of the moral turpitude criteria under subdivision (f)(3), however, we must look to their purpose and the objective to be accomplished in the context of judicial disciplinary proceedings. In such a proceeding, the determination whether charges involve moral turpitude is not made for the purpose of a final adjudication of the merits of the charges, i.e., the determination is not made for the purpose of determining whether to censure or remove a judge for misconduct under article VI, section 18, subdivision (c). Instead, such a determination is made for the purpose of deciding whether public scrutiny should occur during the hearing process in order to further the policies to be served by an open hearing, including fostering public confidence in the integrity and accountability of the judiciary. The ultimate determination to be made is whether the charges should be heard by the public, not whether the charges necessarily involve certain behavior or reprehensible mens rea on the part of the judge under investigation.

Accordingly, in the present case, even if the facts alleged in the notice of formal proceedings did not necessarily or unavoidably involve moral turpitude, the Commission nevertheless had the discretion to determine that the particular facts established in the course of its investigation, and the decision to file formal charges, justified the conclusion that the judge's actions did involve moral turpitude, dishonesty, or corruption, within the meaning of article VI, section 18, subdivision (f)(3).

VI

Under article VI, section 18, subdivision (h), the Judicial Council is granted authority to promulgate rules implementing section 18. Pursuant to this provision, the Judicial Council adopted rule 907.2, establishing a procedure enabling the Commission, in the event any of the charges involve moral turpitude, to open the hearing on all charges, if doing so would promote public confidence and the interests of justice. Petitioner contends the open hearing procedure under rule 907.2, implementing the constitutional amendment, constitutes an erroneous construction by the Judicial Council of article VI, section 18, subdivision (f)(3), and violates the equal protection provisions of the federal and state Constitutions in two respects.

Article VI, section 18, subdivision (f)(3), provides that the Commission "may in the pursuit of public confidence and the interests of justice . . . in the event charges involve moral turpitude, dishonesty, or corruption, open hearings to the public." (6) Petitioner argues this constitutional language does not contemplate a single, open hearing on all the charges in the event some, but not all, of the charges meet the constitutional criteria for an open hearing, and that, accordingly, rule 907.2 constitutes an overly broad construction of, and improperly extends the Commission's authority under, the constitutional amendment.

The language of article VI, section 18, subdivision (f)(3), is ambiguous with respect to whether the Commission must restrict an open hearing only to those charges involving moral turpitude, or whether instead an open hearing may be held for the proceeding as a whole whenever at least one of the charges at issue involves moral turpitude. In promulgating rule 907.2, the Judicial Council construed the pertinent constitutional language as authorizing the Commission in its discretion to order an open hearing on all charges in the event one of the charges involves moral turpitude.

As a general rule, past or contemporaneous interpretation by an administrative entity of its constitutional authority, and of a constitutional provision it is charged with implementing, is accorded considerable weight (see Amador Valley Joint Union High Sch. Dist. v. State Bd. of Equalization (1978) 22 Cal.3d 208, 245 [149 Cal.Rptr. 239, 583 P.2d 1281]), and courts generally will not depart from such construction unless it is clearly erroneous or unauthorized. (See County of Alameda v. State Bd. of Control (1993) 14 Cal.App.4th 1096, 1106 [18 Cal.Rptr.2d 487]; South Bay Union School Dist. v. Public Employment Relations Bd. (1991) 228 Cal.App.3d 502, 506-507 [279 Cal.Rptr. 135].) The Judicial Council, as an independent agency charged with a specialized and focused task of promulgating rules implementing an open hearing procedure in judicial disciplinary proceedings, is the entity " 'presumably equipped or informed by experience' " to perform such task, and whose findings warrant deferential treatment by the court. (South Bay Union School Dist. v. Public Employment Relations Bd., supra, 228 Cal.App.3d at p. 506.) In the present case, rule 907.2, authorizing a single, open hearing if one, but not all, of the charges involve moral turpitude, effectuates the purpose of the constitutional amendment by diminishing the risk of public skepticism that might result if only a segment of the charges brought against a judge in a particular case were dealt with in an open hearing. The Judicial Council reasonably could conclude that, in this setting, the goal of public confidence in the judiciary and in the disciplinary procedure might not be furthered if the public were permitted to observe only a portion of the proceedings, leaving to speculation the nature and gravity of the other alleged misconduct and its relationship to the moral turpitude charges.

For these reasons, we conclude the single-hearing procedure authorized under rule 907.2 does not constitute an improper expansion of the Commission's grant of authority under article VI, section 18, subdivision (f)(3).

We emphasize, however, that the Commission is not required to hold open hearings on all charges whenever any charge involves moral turpitude, and in many cases the Commission may well determine that the charges that do not involve moral turpitude clearly are distinct and severable from the charges that do involve moral turpitude, and that a closed hearing on those charges would not threaten public confidence in the proceedings or imperil the interests of justice.

(7a) Petitioner next contends that the open hearing procedure under rule 907.2 violates the equal protection provisions of the state and federal Constitutions by creating arbitrary classifications (1) between judges facing charges involving moral turpitude and judges facing charges that do not fall within that category, and (2) between judges facing no charges of moral turpitude and judges facing charges, one or more of which (but not all of which) involve moral turpitude.

Petitioner asserts these classifications impinge upon a fundamental interest, namely the judge's right to confidentiality under article VI, section 18, subdivison (h) (former subd. (f)), as construed in Mosk v. Superior Court, supra, 25 Cal.3d 474, and his or her right to privacy under article I, section 1, of the California Constitution, and the federal Constitution. Because these classifications assertedly impinge upon a fundamental interest, he argues they are subject to strict scrutiny analysis and cannot withstand such scrutiny, because they do not further any compelling state interest.

(8) The equality guaranteed by the equal protection clauses of the federal and state Constitutions is equality under the same conditions, and among persons similarly situated. The Legislature may make reasonable classifications of persons and other activities, provided the classifications are based upon some legitimate object to be accomplished. (8 Witkin, Summary of Cal. Law (9th ed 1988) Constitutional Law, § 599, p. 51.) The strict scrutiny standard of review applies only if a legislative classification involves a suspect classification or significantly infringes upon a fundamental right. (In re Demergian (1989) 48 Cal.3d 284, 291-292 [256 Cal.Rptr. 392, 768 P.2d 1069].)

(9) Contrary to petitioner's contention, the determination to open a disciplinary proceeding before the Commission does not impinge upon any fundamental right of the subject judge. Generally, classifications inherent in judicial or State Bar disciplinary procedures do not implicate any fundamental interest of the judge or attorney who is under investigation or subject to discipline. (See Kennick v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1990) 50 Cal.3d 297, 310-311 [267 Cal.Rptr. 293, 787 P.2d 591] [classification inherent in disciplinary sanctions distinguishing an attorney's conduct while a judge from other conduct was subject to rational basis test]; In re Demergian, supra, 48 Cal.3d at pp. 291-292; see also Rittenband v. Cory (1984) 159 Cal.App.3d 410, 423 [205 Cal.Rptr. 576] [burdens imposed by judge's retirement law upon a judge's right to seek and retain elective office do not infringe upon any fundamental right].) Any "right" of a judge to maintain the confidentiality of disciplinary proceedings is not a constitutionally fundamental one. As we have explained, ante, among the primary traditional purposes of confidentiality are the need to accommodate the interests of complainants and witnesses, to avoid unnecessary publicity related to unfounded complaints, and to encourage a judge guilty of serious misconduct to retire before the commencement of formal proceedings—and not solely, or even primarily, to avoid unwarranted damage to the reputation of the subject judge.[14] (See Landmark Communications, Inc. v. Virginia, supra, 435 U.S. 829, 835-836 [56 L.Ed.2d 1, 8-9].) The commentary to canon 2A of the Code of Judicial Conduct explains that "[a] judge must expect to be the [14]Indeed, the interests and reputation of a judge likely will be served if the public is made aware of the evidence introduced at a hearing that leads to the judge's exoneration, thus subject of constant public scrutiny." Moreover, "[a]lthough judges have a discernible privacy interest pending investigation of the alleged misconduct," the rationale is far less compelling for retaining confidentiality beyond the commencement of formal proceedings, at which point the charges have been found to have a sufficient basis to require a formal hearing and the risk of unwarranted damage to reputation is decreased. (See Silence Isn't Always Golden, op. cit. supra, 58 Temple L.Q. at pp. 762-763.)

(7b) For these reasons, in reviewing petitioner's equal protection claim we apply the rational basis test: are the challenged classifications " 'rationally related to a legitimate governmental purpose' "? (Board of Supervisors v. Local Agency Formation Com. (1992) 3 Cal.4th 903, 913 [13 Cal.Rptr.2d 245, 838 P.2d 1198].) With respect to the first classification, the need to promote public confidence in the judiciary is a rational basis for treating proceedings involving charges of moral turpitude, dishonesty, or corruption differently from proceedings that do not involve such charges. In the abstract, an act of "moral turpitude" is defined as behavior that "gravely violates" accepted moral standards of a community (Black's Law Dict. (6th ed. 1990), p. 1009); dishonesty denotes a "lack of integrity" (id., at p. 468), and "corruption" is "[t]he act of an official or fiduciary person who unlawfully and wrongfully uses his station or character to procure some benefit for himself or for another person, contrary to duty and the rights of others." (Id., at p. 345.) Thus, moral turpitude, dishonesty, and corruption[15] generally refer to acts or a mens rea that adversely reflects upon a judge's integrity, honesty, and regard for the judicial office as a public trust. The independence and integrity of the judge therefore are seriously implicated when charges of this nature are involved. The policy promoted by an open hearing on such charges is that of responsible public disclosure and accountability, which will achieve the goal of public confidence in the integrity of the judicial system.

Therefore, we conclude the criteria of charges involving moral turpitude, dishonesty, or corruption constitute a reasonable, threshold requirement that must be met before the Commission, in its discretion, may open the hearing upon its determination that doing so would promote public confidence and the interests of justice.

This same purpose of promoting public confidence and reassurance in the integrity and accountability of the judiciary provides a rational basis for the avoiding public suspicion that the judge has eluded appropriate discipline or that the disciplinary system otherwise has failed.

[15]The criteria of "moral turpitude, dishonesty, or corruption" appear to have been adopted directly from the State Bar Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 6106 ["The commission of any act involving moral turpitude, dishonesty or corruption, whether the act is committed in the course of his relations as an attorney or otherwise, and whether the act is a felony or misdemeanor or not, constitutes a cause for disbarment or suspension."].)

second classification challenged by petitioner under rule 907.2(c), which permits a public hearing on all charges if any of the charges involve moral turpitude. The significance and gravity of the moral turpitude charges may well be determined only in the context of the other charges, for example, whether an alleged act of moral turpitude constitutes a single, isolated incident or part of a pattern of misconduct. Additionally, as explained, ante, public confidence in the fairness and final result of a disciplinary procedure may be diminished if the public is permitted to observe only a portion of the proceedings, and is left with an incomplete understanding of the conduct of the subject judge that gave rise to the institution of formal proceedings. A single hearing on all charges also may be a more efficient means of implementing the open hearing procedure.

Accordingly, we conclude that the single-hearing procedure under rule 907.2(c), permitting an open hearing on all the charges if any of the charges satisfy the criteria under article VI, section 18, subdivision (f)(3), for an open hearing, bears a rational relationship to a legitimate governmental objective.

For these reasons, the classifications embodied in the open hearing procedure under rule 907.2 do not violate petitioners right to equal protection of the laws under the federal or state Constitutions.

(10a) Turning to the specific charges contained in the amended notice of formal proceedings, we conclude the Commission properly exercised its discretion in determining that counts 1 and 2 of the formal charges involve moral turpitude and corruption and that count 4 of the formal charges involve moral turpitude, dishonesty, and corruption.

(11) In evaluating the alleged misconduct of a judge, moral turpitude, dishonesty, and corruption must be construed in the context of the duties and responsibilities of the judicial office, and the standards to which we hold judges and their fitness for office. (See Morrison v. State Board of Education (1969) 1 Cal.3d 214, 227-228 [82 Cal.Rptr. 175, 461 P.2d 375].)

The standards of conduct to which judges are held are reflected in part in the canons of the Code of Judicial Conduct. Although these canons do not have the force of law or regulation, "they reflect a judicial consensus regarding appropriate behavior" for California judges. (Kloepfer v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1989) 49 Cal.3d 826, 838, fn. 6 [264 Cal.Rptr. 100, 782 P.2d 239, 89 A.L.R.4th 235]; see Cannon v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1975) 14 Cal.3d 678, 707, fn. 22 [122 Cal.Rptr. 778, 537 P.2d 898].) The failure of a judge to comply with the canons "suggests performance below the minimum level necessary to maintain public confidence in the administration of justice." (Kloepfer v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 49 Cal.3d at p. 838, fn. 6.)

Canon 4D(4), pertaining to gifts, states that judges "should not accept . . . a gift, bequest, favor or loan from anyone except for: . . ." The canon proceeds to list seven exceptions (including "ordinary social hospitality") to what is otherwise an absolute prohibition against the receipt of gifts. (Cal. Code Jud. Conduct, canon 4D(4)(a)-(g).)[16] Therefore, unless the gift falls within one of the enumerated exceptions, the judge's acceptance of the gift is prohibited.

Canon 4D(5) of the Code of Judicial Conduct appears to state a separate rule, that judges should not accept gifts from lawyers and others who are likely to come before the judge. The commentary to canon 4D(5) explains that the canon "prohibits judges from accepting gifts, favors, bequests or loans from lawyers or their firms, if they have come or are likely to come before the judge; it also prohibits gifts, favors, bequests or loans from clients of lawyers or their firms when the clients' interests have come or are likely to come before the judge." (Cal. Code Jud. Conduct, com. to canon 4D(5).) By its express terms, canon 4D(5) does not apply if the gift otherwise falls within any of the exceptions listed in canon 4D(4). Canon 4D(5) serves to emphasize, however, that the receipt of a gift, like all other activities of a judge, must not cast reasonable doubt upon the judge's capacity to act impartially as specified in canons 2A and 4A(1).

The Code of Judicial Conduct does not define the word "gift." The California Fair Political Practices Commission defines it as "anything of value, whether tangible or intangible, for which equal or greater value is not provided." (Cal. Fair Political Practices Com., 1993-1994 Statement of Economic Interests, Schedule F.) In its formal opinion, the Judicial Ethics Committee observes in this regard: "It is the Committee's opinion that in applying the canons the word "gift" should be interpreted broadly, and consistent . . . with the policies which support the prohibition against gifts.

[16]In its formal opinion on the subject of acceptance of gifts from attorneys, the Judicial Ethics Committee of the California Judges Association has defined "ordinary social hospitality" (one of the exceptions to the prohibition of acceptance of gifts under canon 4D(4)) as follows: "It is that type of social event or other gift which is so common among people in the judge's community that no reasonable person would believe that (1) the donor was intending to or would obtain any advantage or (2) the donee would believe that the donor intended to obtain any advantage." (Cal. Judges Assn., Jud. Ethics Com., Opn. No. 43 (1994) at p. 4, published in Rothman, Cal. Judicial Conduct Handbook.)

Although generally a violation of a canon will constitute conduct below the standards expected of California's judges, not all such violations involve moral turpitude, dishonesty, or corruption. But a judge's solicitation, or knowing acceptance, of favors or benefits having a substantial monetary value from a litigant or attorney whose case presently is pending before the court is inherently corruptive, suggesting improper use of the prestige of office.

In judicial disciplinary proceedings in other states, a judge's receipt of gifts from attorneys or litigants, who appeared (or were likely to appear) before the judge, has been found to warrant discipline. In In re D'Auria (1975) 67 N.J. 22 [334 A.2d 332, 333], a lawyer, while acting as a workers' compensation judge, on numerous occasions was a luncheon guest of attorneys and insurance representatives who had matters pending before him. The court, although finding that none of the attorneys had expected or received any preferential treatment from the judge, concluded the judge's acceptance of the lunches was "unprofessional, improper and unethical," bearing an "obvious appearance of impropriety." (Ibid.) The court explained: "[A] [j]udge's acceptance of gratuities and favors from those who have business with the [court] is inherently wrong. It has a subtle, corruptive effect, no matter how much a particular judge may feel that he is above improper influence." (Ibid.) In In re Kral (1973) 1 Ill. Cts. Com. 20, a judge was disciplined for accepting a discount for wallpaper and other decorating materials from a litigant who had appeared before him, the judge paying only $2,000 for $2,900 worth of merchandise. The discount had been arranged by an attorney who previously had appeared before the judge.

In decisions involving the discipline of attorneys for favors conferred upon judges, the principles supporting the condemnation of such conduct are comparable to those applicable in judicial disciplinary cases, reflecting the serious impropriety of conferring gifts upon judges under inappropriate circumstances. For example, in In re D'Angelo (1988) 126 Ill.2d 45 [127 Ill.Dec. 779, 533 N.E.2d 861], an attorney was disbarred for expending thousands of dollars for car rentals for judges and politicians. The court characterized the attorney's conduct as displaying "dishonesty, fraud, deceit, or misrepresentation," which "brought the court and the legal profession into disrepute" and was prejudicial to the administration of justice. (Id., at p. 866; see also In re Weinstein (1989) 131 Ill.2d 261 [137 Ill.Dec. 72, 545 N.E.2d 725, 729] ["An attorney who performs a favor for a judge before whom he is likely to appear compromises the fairness and impartiality of the tribunal and prejudices the administration of justice."].)

(10b) In the present case, count 1 of the formal charges alleges facts involving petitioner's active solicitation of a favorable transaction, involving the purchase of an automobile, from a litigant at the same time the litigant's case was pending before the court. It is alleged that, shortly after awarding a $5 million judgment in favor of Williams in the Security Pacific v. Williams litigation, while retaining jurisdiction for a limited purpose (attorney fees and costs) pending appeal, petitioner contacted Williams, seeking to purchase a Mercedes, and ultimately purchased such a vehicle from this litigant at a price that appeared to be unduly favorable to petitioner. Seeking out and accepting a favorable transaction under these circumstances clearly would denote a lack of integrity, as well as corruption and conduct contrary to the moral standards required of the judicial office. Readily inferable from these allegations is that the judge was attempting to receive favors for past deeds, purposefully taking advantage of the power and prestige of his judicial office, and wrongfully using his office to procure a benefit for himself. Petitioner's alleged misconduct violated several canons of judicial conduct, particularly the proscription against acceptance of gifts from litigants whose interests have come, or are likely to come, before the judge (canon 4D(5)), as well as the more general proscription against conduct that may create an appearance of special influence over the judge (canon 2B) or that erodes public confidence in the integrity or impartiality of the judiciary (canon 2A).

The charges set forth in count 2, involving the alleged payment of substantial monetary amounts by Williams's attorney, Patrick Frega, for petitioner's benefit (for the purchase of a Jeep for the judge's daughter, and for automotive repairs), shortly after Frega and his client had prevailed in significant litigation before petitioner, also suggests petitioner's improper use of his office and lack of integrity. This alleged misconduct also constitutes a violation of canon 4D(5).

The remaining allegations of benefits and favors accepted by petitioner, including a discount on repairs for his daughter's Jeep, the celebratory dinner with Frega at the latter's expense, the loan of a computer from Frega, a weekend stay at a desert condominium owned by an attorney whom petitioner frequently appointed to serve as special master, and the $600 legal fee write-off, considered in the context of the other favors and benefits improperly accepted, suggest conduct going well beyond the inadvertent acceptance of trivial favors or gratuities, and depict a pattern of disregard for the high standards of ethical conduct required of our judiciary. Under these circumstances, the allegations relating to these gifts also denote corruption, poor moral conduct, and lack of integrity.

(12) We further conclude the Commission did not abuse its discretion in determining the charges set forth in count 4 of the notice of formal proceedings involved moral turpitude, dishonesty, and corruption. Providing information to the Commission—the governmental entity charged with the protection of the public from judicial corruption—that is false, inaccurate, and misleading in numerous, material respects clearly may fall within the scope of such reprehensible behavior and culpable mens rea.

Finally, although the Commission determined that the charges set forth in count 3 did not involve moral turpitude, we conclude that the Commission did not abuse its discretion in determining that the open hearing should encompass these charges as well. The latter charges are relatively minor in gravity in comparison to the charges set forth in the other counts, and evidence of the circumstances of these charges will place in better perspective the judge's relationship and dealings with Williams's attorney and his law firm.

THE RECORDER, Plaintiff and Respondent, v.
COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE, Defendant and Appellant.

[Opinion certified for partial publication.*]

SUMMARY

The trial court issued an order granting a legal newspaper's petition for a writ of mandate to compel the state Commission on Judicial Performance to disclose how individual commissioners voted in formal disciplinary proceedings concerning a county municipal court judge, and in all subsequent formal proceedings regarding judicial discipline. The court found that disclosure is required by Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (j), enacted as part of an initiative measure approved by the voters in 1994, which mandates that all proceedings subsequent to the filing of formal charges shall be open to the public. (Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, No. 987236, William J. Cahill, Judge.)

The Court of Appeal affirmed. The court held that the trial court did not err by ordering defendant to disclose the full results of the vote. Under Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (j), the vote of the individual commission members on whether to impose judicial discipline is an integral part of the proceedings of the commission that must be open to the public in any case in which the commission determines to initiate formal disciplinary proceedings against a California judge. Thus, in this case, defendant had no discretion to withhold from the public information about how the individual commissioners voted. However, the commission is not required to conduct its deliberations in public. Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (j), was clearly not intended as an open-meeting law but, rather, as a provision relating to adjudicatory proceedings, as to which the judicial thought process need not be publicly revealed. (Opinion by Phelan, J.,† with Corrigan, Acting P. J., and Walker, J., concurring.)

*Pursuant to California Rules of Court, rules 976(b) and 976.1, this opinion is certified for publication with the exception of part III.

†Retired Presiding Justice of the Court of Appeal, First District, assigned by the Chief Justice pursuant to article VI, section 6 of the California Constitution.

HEADNOTES

Classified to California Digest of Official Reports

(1) Courts § 29—Jurisdiction—Superior Courts—Challenge to Proceedings of Commission on Judicial Performance: Judges § 6.4—Disciplinary Proceedings—Commission on Judicial Performance.—The superior court had jurisdiction to rule on a legal newspaper's petition for a writ of mandate seeking to compel the state Commission on Judicial Performance to disclose how individual commissioners voted in formal disciplinary proceedings concerning a county municipal court judge, and in all subsequent formal proceedings regarding judicial discipline. Although Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subds. (g) and (h), make it clear that the state Supreme Court has exclusive jurisdiction over any legal proceeding of any sort brought against the commission by a judge, and that commissioners cannot be sued for any act undertaken in the course of their official duties, those provisions do not, expressly or otherwise, purport to limit the broad authority of the superior court, as conferred by Cal. Const., art. VI, § 10, and Code Civ. Proc., § 1085, to hear and decide petitions for writ of mandamus.

(2a, 2b) Judges § 6.4—Disciplinary Proceedings—Commission on Judicial Performance—Necessity to Disclose Full Results of Vote.—The trial court did not err in granting a legal newspaper's petition for a writ of mandate to compel the state Commission on Judicial Performance to disclose how individual commissioners voted in formal disciplinary proceedings concerning a county municipal court judge, and in all subsequent formal proceedings regarding judicial discipline. Under Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (j), enacted as part of an initiative measure approved by the voters in 1994, which mandates that all proceedings subsequent to the filing of formal charges shall be open to the public, the vote of the individual commission members on whether to impose judicial discipline is an integral part of the proceedings of the commission that must be open to the public in any case in which the commission determines to initiate formal disciplinary proceedings against a California judge. Thus, in this case, the commission had no discretion to withhold from the public information about how the individual commissioners voted. However, like an intermediate appellate court or an administrative agency acting in an adjudicative capacity, the commission is not required to conduct its deliberations in public. Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (j), was clearly not intended as an open-meeting law, but rather, as a provision relating to adjudicatory proceedings, as to which the judicial thought process need not be publicly revealed.

[See 2 Witkin, Cal. Procedure (4th ed. 1996) Courts, § 88.]

(3) Constitutional Law § 13—Construction of Constitutional Provisions—Language of Enactment—Amendment.—Constitutional provisions must be construed to give full force and effect to every portion thereof. It is the legal intendment that each and every clause has been inserted for a useful purpose and when rightly understood has some practical operation. Furthermore, a constitutional amendment should be construed in accordance with the natural and ordinary meaning of the words as generally understood at the time of its enactment. Accordingly, where it does not appear that words used in a constitutional amendment were used in a technical sense, the voters must be deemed to have construed the amendment by the meaning apparent on its face according to the general use of the words employed. In the absence of definition of words in the Constitution, words having no technical meaning will be taken in their ordinary and generally accepted sense.

(4) Constitutional Law § 13—Construction of Constitutional Provisions—Language of Enactment—Ambiguity.—Where a constitutional provision is ambiguous, a court must ordinarily adopt the interpretation that carries out the intent and objective of the drafters of the provision and the people by whose vote it was adopted. The argument submitted to the electors in support of a proposed constitutional amendment is not controlling but may be resorted to as an aid in determining the intention of the framers and the electorate. New constitutional provisions must be considered with reference to the situation intended to be remedied or provided for.

(5) Constitutional Law § 16—Construction of Constitutional Provisions—Past or Contemporaneous Construction—By Administrative Entity.—Past or contemporaneous interpretation by an administrative entity of its constitutional authority, and of a constitutional provision it is charged with implementing, is accorded considerable weight, and courts generally will not depart from such construction unless it is clearly erroneous or unauthorized. Past or contemporaneous agency interpretation can be particularly useful to resolve apparent ambiguities in a new enactment.

(6) Constitutional Law § 13—Construction of Constitutional Provisions—Language of Enactment—Latent Ambiguity.—A latent ambiguity exists where constitutional language is clear and intelligible and suggests but a single meaning, but some extrinsic evidence creates a necessity for interpretation or a choice among two or more possible meanings.

OPINION

PHELAN, J.—These consolidated appeals present important questions of first impression about an initiative measure, commonly known as Proposition 190, which was approved by a large majority of California voters in 1994. The Commission on Judicial Performance (the commission) timely appeals from an order granting a petition for writ of mandate filed in June 1997 by The Recorder, a legal newspaper published in San Francisco, in an effort to compel the commission to disclose how individual commissioners voted in formal disciplinary proceedings concerning the Honorable Jose Angel Velasquez of the Municipal Court of Monterey County, and in all subsequent formal proceedings regarding judicial discipline. The Recorder contends that such disclosure is required by California Constitution, article VI, section 18, subdivision (j), a provision enacted as part of Proposition 190.

The commission claims it acted within its rulemaking authority as conferred by California Constitution, article VI, section 18, subdivision (i)[1]—which was also enacted as part of Proposition 190—by adopting procedures allowing it to withhold information about how individual commission members voted with respect to imposition of judicial discipline following "formal proceedings," despite the fact that pursuant to section 18(j) all such proceedings must now be "open to the public." (Ibid.) In fact, the commission has not adopted any specific rule affirmatively authorizing it to withhold this information from the public. Rather, the commission asserts that, even after passage of Proposition 190, it can simply continue its "longstanding historical practice" of revealing only the total vote count.

We conclude the vote of the members on whether or not to impose judicial discipline is such an essential and integral part of the formal proceedings of the commission—perhaps the single most important act a member takes in his or her capacity as such—that it would be plainly unreasonable to accept the commission's interpretation of its authority under section 18(i) and 18(j). That is, when California voters overwhelmingly approved a requirement that all "proceedings" subsequent to the filing of formal disciplinary charges "shall be open to the public" (§ 18(j)), they must have intended the commission to vote in public or at least to disclose the full results of its vote, including how each commission member voted. We further conclude, however, that—like an intermediate appellate court, or an administrative agency acting in an adjudicative capacity—the commission is not required to conduct its "deliberations" in public. Section 18(j) was clearly not intended as an "open meeting" law but, rather, as a provision relating to adjudicatory proceedings, as to which it is well settled and universally recognized that the judicial "thought process" need not be publicly revealed.

Accordingly, in the published portion of this opinion, we affirm the order directing the commission to disclose the full results of the vote on discipline in Judge Velasquez's case and in all subsequent formal proceedings regarding judicial discipline under section 18(j). In the unpublished portion of the opinion, we consider and reject the commission's argument that the trial court abused its discretion by awarding The Recorder its attorney fees pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure section 1021.5 (hereinafter, section 1021.5). Thus, the order granting The Recorder's request for attorney fees is also affirmed.

I. BACKGROUND

A. The Enactment of Proposition 190 and Implementing Rules.

Proposition 190 was derived from Assembly Constitutional Amendment No. 46, and placed on the November 8, 1994, ballot by the Legislature. (Assem. Const. Amend. No. 46 (1994-1995 Reg. Sess.) res. ch. 111.) The voters of California approved Proposition 190 at the November 1994 election, and thereby substantially amended sections 8 and 18 of article VI of the California Constitution. By its terms, Proposition 190 became operative on March 1, 1995. (§ 18(j); and see Dodds v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1995) 12 Cal.4th 163, 168, fn. 1 [48 Cal.Rptr.2d 106, 906 P.2d 1260].)

Proposition 190 effected several significant changes in the system for imposing judicial discipline in California. It increased the total membership of the commission from nine to eleven, and the number of public members from two to six, so that the public members would constitute a majority. (§ 8(a).)[2] It vested the commission with ultimate authority to make censure and removal determinations, subject to discretionary review by the Supreme Court. (§ 18(d).) It created absolute immunity for commission members and staff "from suit for all conduct at any time in the course of their official duties." (§ 18(h).) Most importantly for our purposes, Proposition 190 shifted authority to make rules "for the investigation of judges" and "for formal proceedings" from the Judicial Council to the commission itself (§ 18(i)),[3] and required that "the notice of charges, the answer, and all subsequent papers and proceedings shall be open to the public for all formal proceedings instituted after February 28, 1995." (§ 18(j), italics added.)[4]

After Proposition 190 took effect, the commission undertook a review of its rules and procedures. Proposed rules were circulated for public comment early in 1996, and revised rules were adopted effective December 1, 1996. In the course of this rulemaking proceeding, one of The Recorder's attorneys, Stephen R. Barnett, submitted a letter urging the commission to amend its rules to provide that "in the case of any official action by the [c]ommission, the votes of the individual [c]ommission members shall be made public." This comment was considered by the commission, but rejected, as follows: "One comment was received suggesting that the votes of the individual commission members should be made public. After consideration, the commission determined not to make this suggested modification, noting that

[2]Since the effective date of Proposition 190, section 8(a) has provided in relevant part: "The Commission on Judicial Performance consists of one judge of a court of appeal, one judge of a superior court, and one judge of a municipal court, each appointed by the Supreme Court; 2 members of the State Bar of California who have practiced law in this State for 10 years, each appointed by the Governor; and 6 citizens who are not judges, retired judges, or members of the State Bar of California, 2 of whom shall be appointed by the Governor, 2 by the Senate Committee on Rules, and 2 by the Speaker of the Assembly." Prior to the effective date of Proposition 190, former section 8(a) provided for a commission membership of nine, including two judges of the Courts of Appeal, two judges of the superior courts, and one judge of the municipal court, plus two members of the State Bar of California and two citizen members. (Former § 8(a), as amended by Prop. 92, approved Nov. 8, 1988.)

[3]Section 18(i) provides in full: "The Commission on Judicial Performance shall make rules implementing this section, including, but not limited to, the following: [¶] (1) The commission shall make rules for the investigation of judges. The commission may provide for the confidentiality of complaints to and investigations by the commission. [¶] (2) The commission shall make rules for formal proceedings against judges when there is cause to believe there is a disability or wrongdoing within the meaning of subdivision (d)." (Italics added.)

[4]Section 18(j) provides in full: "When the commission institutes formal proceedings, the notice of charges, the answer, and all subsequent papers and proceedings shall be open to the public for all formal proceedings instituted after February 28, 1995."

disclosure does not appear to be required by Proposition 190 or any other provision of law. It is the commission's policy to release only the tally of total votes in favor of and against public discipline decisions in order to foster determinations unaffected by concerns extraneous to the impartial consideration of matters before the commission." (Italics added.)

B. The Recorder's Prelitigation Requests for the Commission's Voting Records.

Asserting a belief that Proposition 190 assured to the general public a right to know how individual commission members cast their votes in formal proceedings for judicial discipline, The Recorder wrote to the commission on September 5, 1996, asking for this information in each post-Proposition-190 case. The Recorder also took its case to its readership with an editorial entitled "Judicial Panel's Votes Should Be Public."

The commission refused to comply with these requests and, in a letter to The Recorder dated September 18, 1996, then Vice-Chair Robert C. Bonner explained its refusal as follows: "Proposition 190 did significantly open up the proceedings of the Commission on Judicial Performance through a series of broad, yet very specific changes. Nothing in Proposition 190, however, requires that the votes of individual members be made public, and individual commissioner's votes have never been made public during the commission's history. Because Proposition 190 vested in the commission the authority to promulgate its procedural rules, the issue of what voting information should be released was necessarily left to the commission. [¶] Important policy considerations weigh in favor of disclosing the total votes in support of and against commission action, but against disclosing the way each individual commissioner voted. Releasing only the total number of votes in favor and in opposition to the commission decision is intended to safeguard the independent voting of the commissioners. As distinct from the judiciary, the members of the commission do not serve full-time in their adjudicatory function. As the editorial recognizes, judges no longer comprise the majority of the commission's members. Today, the majority are public members and attorneys who may be appearing before the judges under the commission's jurisdiction. Disclosing how individual commissioners voted might well diminish the independence and objectivity so important to the commission's decision-making."

In a letter dated, October 1, 1996, the commission's director and chief counsel, Victoria B. Henley, added: "[T]he breakdown of commission votes according to individual members has never been made public and the commission has determined to continue making public only the total number of votes in support of and against commission action. Moreover, since the tally of votes for and against is the only information which has been made public historically, records have not been maintained by the commission of each member's individual voting."

Judge Velasquez was publicly censured following formal proceedings instituted in August 1996. At the conclusion of those proceedings, the commission issued a decision and order, dated April 16, 1997, which announced its vote as "8 to 2, with one [c]ommissioner abstaining." On April 30, 1997, The Recorder again wrote to the commission, requesting disclosure of the commissioners' votes in that proceeding. The Recorder's letter was signed by its counsel and stated that The Recorder was authorized to take legal action if the requested information was not provided.

After thus receiving notice of the instant lawsuit, the commission issued an order dated May 28, 1997, reporting a modified vote count of "7 to 2, with one [c]ommissioner recused."[5] The commission offered no explanation for the change in the vote tally and, in a letter signed by Mr. Bonner and dated June 2, 1997, reiterated its refusal to disclose how individual commission members voted. In the same letter, the commission asserted that it "does not vote by written ballots, secret or otherwise, nor does it maintain any other records identifying how individual members voted." However, Mr. Bonner did not explain how the commission was otherwise able to uncover the error in the vote count (and abstention) disclosed in the April 16 decision and order, or how it confirmed the correctness of the vote count (and recusal) disclosed over a month later on May 29.

C. The Instant Litigation.

On June 5, 1997, The Recorder filed a petition for writ of mandate in San Francisco Superior Court. Citing section 18(g),[6] the commission raised a jurisdictional objection to the mandate proceeding in superior court, contending that only the California Supreme Court has jurisdiction over it. The trial court reserved decision on the issue of jurisdiction and issued an alternative writ setting a hearing for June 26, 1997. On July 10, 1997, after considering the parties' briefs and arguments, the language of Proposition 190 and evidence of the voters' intent, the trial court issued an order requiring the commission "to reveal how individual commissioners voted" in the Velasquez matter and "in all subsequent formal decisions."[7] The commission timely appealed from this order on July 17, 1997, in No. A079881.

[5]The Recorder suggests this is evidence that the commission must have some physical recording of its votes, which would constitute "papers" within the meaning of section 18(j), that must be "open to the public." (Ibid.) The commission has denied it maintains any "written ballots" or "any other records identifying how individual members voted" but, as we have noted, has not explained how it was nevertheless able to correct the error in the vote tally in the Velasquez matter or, more generally, how it could confirm the accuracy of any given vote if asked to do so. In any event, we need not reach this issue because, as we will discuss, the vote of each commission member is such an integral part of the "proceedings" for judicial discipline as to be subject to mandatory public disclosure whether or not it is reduced to writing or recorded in the commission's "papers."

[6]In relevant part, section 18(g) provides: "No court, except the Supreme Court, shall have jurisdiction in a civil action or other legal proceeding of any sort brought against the commission by a judge."

On August 19, 1997, The Recorder filed a motion seeking attorney fees pursuant to section 1021.5. The commission vigorously opposed the motion. After a hearing on September 5, 1997, the trial court granted The Recorder's motion in full, applying a multiplier of 1.25 and awarding "fees on fees" for preparation of the motion, for a total award of $49,207.20. The trial court's order recited that it was granting The Recorder's fee request for "all the reasons stated in the Recorder's motion." The commission timely appealed from this order on September 30, 1997, in No. A080466.

II. DISCUSSION—APPEAL NO. A079881

In No. A079881, the parties' dispute centers on the commission's interpretation of its rulemaking authority under section 18(i), and its interpretation of section 18(j) insofar as it mandates that all "proceedings" subsequent to the filing of formal charges "shall be open to the public." The commission contends, and The Recorder does not dispute, that all the issues presented in this appeal are pure questions of law, subject to de novo review by this court. (Ghirardo v. Antonioli (1994) 8 Cal.4th 791, 799 [35 Cal.Rptr.2d 418, 883 P.2d 960].)

A. The Superior Court Had Jurisdiction to Adjudicate The Recorder's Petition for Writ of Mandate.

(1) Before turning to the merits of this appeal, we must address the commission's claim, based on sections 18(g) and 18(h), that the superior court lacks subject matter jurisdiction to issue a writ of mandate against it or its members or otherwise to review any determination it makes regarding judicial discipline.

Obviously sections 18(g) and 18(h) do not, by their express terms, support the commission's argument. Those provisions make it clear that our Supreme Court has exclusive jurisdiction over any "legal proceeding of any sort brought against the commission by a judge," and that commissioners cannot be sued for any act undertaken in the course of their official duties. (Italics added.) Sections 18(g) and 18(h) do not—expressly or otherwise—purport to limit the broad authority of the superior court, as conferred by article VI, section 10 of the California Constitution and Code of Civil Procedure section 1085 to hear and decide petitions for writ of mandamus.[8]

[7]The issue whether the commission's "deliberations" must be conducted in public was vigorously debated in the hearings before the trial court, but the Recorder did not (and does not) specifically seek to compel the commission to make any disclosure regarding the deliberations in either the Velasquez case or in any subsequent disciplinary proceedings.

The commission offers no cogent interpretation of the language used in section 18(g), and cites no ballot language or other historical data suggesting that the voters intended to insulate it from suit of any type in any judicial forum, save for actions by individual judges in the Supreme Court.[9] Indeed, the commission admits that section 18(g) does not "specifically address the issue of jurisdiction in writ proceedings brought against the commission by persons other than a judge." (Emphasis in original.)

Without recognizing even a hint of irony, the commission nevertheless contends that section 18(g) was designed to avoid the problem that arose in cases such as Dodds v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 12 Cal.4th 163, and Adams v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1995) 10 Cal.4th 866 [42 Cal.Rptr.2d 606, 897 P.2d 544], where individual judges brought proceedings in superior court seeking to block the commission from conducting open hearings. Vesting exclusive jurisdiction in the Supreme Court, the commission claims, was intended to prevent such ancillary actions from delaying or interfering with disciplinary proceedings. However, there is no indication that the instant writ proceeding did, or could, delay or interfere with the Velasquez matter or with any other case pending before the commission.[10]

The commission further contends that third parties should have no greater access to a judicial forum to litigate with the commission than do the judges

[8]We are in no way bound to accept the commission's interpretation of Code of Civil Procedure section 1085, pursuant to which it claims it is "evident" that it is not an "inferior tribunal, corporation, board, or person" subject to the broad jurisdiction of the superior court in writ proceedings. Nor does the fact the Legislature has seen fit to enact certain explicit statutory limits on the jurisdiction of the superior court to issue writs as against certain state administrative agencies (see Lab. Code, § 5955 [Workers' Compensation Appeals Board]; Pub. Util. Code, § 1759 [Public Utilities Commission]; Bus. & Prof. Code, § 23090.5 [Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control]) mean that we should imply such a limitation as to the commission.

[9]Since The Recorder did not name, serve, or otherwise join any individual member of the commission, either in their official or individual capacities, we refrain from further comment on the meaning and effect of section 18(h).

[10]The commission posits various scenarios under which a judge as to whom the commission has commenced formal proceedings might enlist the aid of a third party to bring a writ proceeding to challenge some aspect of commission procedure. We need not address this issue because there is no indication in this case that The Recorder is acting at the behest or for the benefit of any individual judge.

who are subject to discipline before that body. This is, however, just another way of saying that the voters intended to insulate the commission and its members from any lawsuit of any type in any judicial forum, except for actions by individual judges in the Supreme Court. As we have noted, the commission cites no statutory language or case law to support this sweeping claim of immunity, and we have found none in our research. Accordingly, we reject the commission's jurisdictional objections.

B. The Vote of the Commission Regarding Imposition of Judicial Discipline Is a Critical Stage of the "Formal Proceedings" Which Must Be "Open to the Public" Pursuant to Section 18(j).

(2a) The central issue presented in this appeal involves the commission's interpretation of sections 18(i) and 18(j). The commission claims it has fully complied with the mandate of section 18(j) by conducting all formal "proceedings" in open session, under rules it duly adopted after the passage of Proposition 190 regarding "Confidentiality and Disclosure." (Rules Com. Jud. Performance, rule 102.)[11] Specifically, during its rulemaking and before this court, the commission has interpreted the word "proceedings" in section 18(j) to mean "any proceeding which the affected judge and his or her counsel could attend," including "all evidentiary hearings before the [c]ommission or special masters and any oral arguments before the [c]ommission itself," but not "the [c]ommission's deliberations or voting." For reasons we shall explain, we reject this interpretation.

(3) The rules governing interpretation of constitutional amendments are well established: "Constitutional provisions must be construed to give full force and effect to every portion thereof. It is the legal intendment that each and every clause has been inserted for a useful purpose and when rightly understood has some practical operation. [Citations.] Furthermore, a constitutional amendment should be construed in accordance with the natural and ordinary meaning of the words as generally understood at the time of its enactment. [Citations.] Accordingly, where it does not appear that words used in a constitutional amendment were used in a technical sense, the voters must be deemed to have construed the amendment by the meaning apparent

[11]In relevant part, rule 102 of the Rules of Commission on Judicial Performance provides: "(a) (Scope of Rule) Except as provided in this rule, all papers filed with and proceedings before the commission shall be confidential. . . . [¶] (b) (Disclosure after institution of formal proceedings) When the commission institutes formal proceedings, the following shall not be confidential: [¶] (1) The notice of formal proceedings and all subsequent papers filed with the commission and the special masters, all stipulations entered, all findings of fact and conclusions of law made by the special masters and by the commission, and all disciplinary determinations made by the commission; [and] [¶] (2) The formal hearing before the special masters and the appearance before the commission." "The argument submitted to the electors in support of a proposed constitutional amendment is not controlling but may be resorted to as an aid in determining the intention of the framers and the electorate. [Citations.] [¶] New provisions of the Constitution must be considered with reference to the situation intended to be remedied or provided for. [Citations.]" (In re Quinn, supra, 35 Cal.App.3d at p. 483; Mosk v. Superior Court, supra, at p. 495 ["To ascertain the intent and objective of an ambiguous constitutional provision, a court may consider . . . written arguments in voter pamphlets."]; see also *Amador Valley Joint Union High Sch. (5) In addition, "As a general rule, past or contemporaneous interpretation by an administrative entity of its constitutional authority, and of a constitutional provision it is charged with implementing, is accorded considerable weight [citation], and courts generally will not depart from such construction unless it is clearly erroneous or unauthorized. [Citations.]" (Adams v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1994) 8 Cal.4th 630, 657-658 [34 Cal.Rptr.2d 641, 882 P.2d 358].) Past or contemporaneous agency interpretation can be particularly useful to resolve "apparent ambiguities" in a new enactment. (Amador Valley Joint Union High Sch. Dist. v. State Bd. of Equalization, supra, 22 Cal.3d at p. 245.)

1. Section 18(j) Is Ambiguous.

Maneuvering for an advantageous position on the battlefield of constitutional interpretation, the commission and The Recorder both contend, at least initially, that section 18(j) is unambiguous and that the "plain language" used in that provision favors their respective—but diametrically opposed—positions on the issue whether the votes of individual commission members must be disclosed to the public. That is, The Recorder contends that the term "papers" or the term "proceedings," or both, clearly encompass the casting and recording of votes by individual commissioners. For its "plain language" argument, the commission relies primarily on what is not found in section 18(j), i.e., on the absence of any specific provision requiring disclosure of the votes of individual commissioners. However, the commission also appears to contend that the "formal hearing before the special masters and the appearance before the commission" are its only "proceedings," and that those are the only activities it must conduct in public. (See Rules Com. Jud. Performance, rule 102(b).)

In its reply brief, the commission ultimately comes around to conceding that there is at least a "latent ambiguity" in the term "proceedings." This concession is appropriate. (See Mosk v. Superior Court, supra, 25 Cal.3d at p. 495 [The conflicting contentions of the parties regarding meaning of former section 18(f) point to a latent ambiguity in that provision].) (6) As the Mosk court explained: " '[A] latent ambiguity is said to exist where the language employed is clear and intelligible and suggests but a single meaning, but some extrinsic evidence creates a necessity for interpretation or a choice among two or more possible meanings.' " (25 Cal.3d at p. 495, fn. 18, italics in original, quoting Note, Constitutional Law: The Doctrine of Latent Ambiguities as Applied to the California Constitution (1943) 31 Cal.L.Rev. 203, 205.)

Indeed, the Legislature could hardly have chosen a more malleable term. "The word 'proceeding' necessarily has different meanings, according to the context and the subject to which it relates. . . . In section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and in similar statutory provisions of other states, it has a broader signification, and includes any step taken in a case, whether by the court or by one of the parties thereto. [Citations.] 'In its more general sense, in law, it means all the steps or measures adopted in the prosecution or defense of an action.' [Citations.]" (Burns v. Superior Court (1903) 140 Cal. 1, 5-6 [73 P. 597], italics added; and see id. at p. 9 [the term "proceedings" includes the issuance of a subpoena by a notary at the request of one party seeking to depose another, and the taking of a deposition]; see also Mann v. Cracchiolo (1985) 38 Cal.3d 18, 43 [210 Cal.Rptr. 762, 694 P.2d 1134] (conc. opn. of Bird, C. J.); Zellerino v. Brown (1991) 235 Cal.App.3d 1097, 1105 [1 Cal.Rptr.2d 222]; Lister v. Superior Court (1979) 98 Cal.App.3d 64, 70 [159 Cal.Rptr. 280].)

(2b) Given the inherent ambiguity of the term "proceedings," we must look beyond the plain language of section 18(j) to ascertain its meaning and scope in the present context. In particular, we must look to external sources to determine whether the drafters and the voters intended the term "proceedings" to encompass the "step" or stage of the process in which individual commissioners cast their votes and thereby decide whether to impose discipline upon a judge as to whom formal proceedings have been commenced. If so, it necessarily follows that that step of the proceedings must be "open to the public." We turn now to an examination of extrinsic "evidence" bearing on this issue.

2. Interpreting Section 18(j) to Mandate Disclosure of the Votes of Individual Commission Members Effectuates the Intent and Objectives of the Drafters of Proposition 190 and the Voters Who Approved It.

The commission offers a very simple, straightforward solution to the problem of ambiguity presented by the term "proceedings": that we should simply defer to its interpretation of section 18(j). The commission is, of course, correct that we must give "considerable weight" to its "past or contemporaneous interpretation . . . of its constitutional authority, and of a constitutional provision it is charged with implementing." (Adams v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 8 Cal.4th at pp. 657-658.) We may also look to the commission's interpretation to help resolve "apparent ambiguities" in the new enactment. (Amador Valley Joint Union High Sch. Dist. v. State Bd. of Equalization, supra, 22 Cal.3d at p. 245.) However, we must also examine "evidence" of the intent of the drafters and the voters who approved Proposition 190, including the ballot arguments prepared for the November 1994 elections. (Mosk v. Superior Court, supra, 25 Cal.3d at p. 495; Amador Valley Joint Union High Sch. Dist. v. State Bd. of Equalization, supra, 22 Cal.3d at pp. 245-246; In re Quinn, supra, 35 Cal.App.3d at p. 483; see also Arcadia Unified School Dist. v. State Dept. of Education (1992) 2 Cal.4th 251, 260 [5 Cal.Rptr.2d 545, 825 P.2d 438] ["The first step in interpreting an ambiguous constitutional provision is to look at the intent of the framers."]; White v. Davis, supra, 13 Cal.3d 757, 775 [the ballot arguments are the only available " 'legislative history' " for a constitutional amendment enacted by initiative].) After carefully considering these ballot materials and the commission's arguments about the proper construction of section 18(j), we respectfully decline to accept the commission's interpretation because we believe it is clearly erroneous, and because it is at odds with the express intent and objectives of the drafters of Proposition 190 and the voters who approved the constitutional amendments contained therein.

There are several problems with the commission's interpretation. It is, above all, far too grudging. In essence, the commission appears to treat the terms "proceedings" and "hearings" as interchangeable. California courts have long recognized that the term "proceedings" is broader than the term "hearings." (Forrest v. Trustees of Cal. State University & Colleges (1984) 160 Cal.App.3d 357, 367 [206 Cal.Rptr. 595]; Gipe v. Superior Court (1981) 124 Cal.App.3d 617, 625-626 [177 Cal.Rptr. 590], citing Burns v. Superior Court, supra, 140 Cal. at p. 6.) Indeed, as the Gipe court put it, any attempt to equate the two "flies in the face of the ordinary meaning of 'proceedings.' " (124 Cal.App.3d at p. 626.)[12]

The commission's attempt to equate the terms "proceedings" and "hearings" also "flies in the face" of the history of sections 8 and 18. The broad significance of the phrase "all subsequent . . . proceedings" in Proposition 190 and section 18(j) can, perhaps, best be understood by contrasting the new scheme with what it replaced. (See In re Quinn, supra, 35 Cal.App.3d at p. 483 [new provisions of the Constitution must be considered with reference to the situation intended to be remedied or provided for]; Resure, Inc. v. Superior Court (1996) 42 Cal.App.4th 156, 164 [49 Cal.Rptr.2d 354].)

In 1994, in Adams v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 8 Cal.4th 630, our Supreme Court described the evolution of the system of judicial discipline in California, and in particular the provisions of section 18, as follows: "Prior to the passage, at the November 1988 General Election, of the legislative proposal to amend the constitutional provision, former subdivision (f) of article VI, section 18, provided: 'The Judicial Council shall make rules implementing this section and providing for confidentiality of proceedings.' In Mosk v. Superior Court[, supra,] 25 Cal.3d 474 . . . , the court concluded that this former version of subdivision (f) mandated confidentiality of investigations and proceedings before the Commission, and that, accordingly, the Judicial Council did not have the authority to promulgate rules providing for investigations and hearings open to the public. In reaching this conclusion, the court relied upon the language of former section 10b, paragraph (3), of article VI, as adopted by constitutional amendment in November 1960, which expressly provided for the confidentiality of all proceedings before the Commission, and concluded there was no indication 'that the people of California intended to change the constitutional requirement of confidentiality by revision of article VI in 1966 . . . .' (25 Cal.3d at p. 499.)

[12]By asserting that issuance of a "signed" decision on matters it hears after a formal presentation of evidence is not an activity that must be held "open to the public," the commission even takes a narrow, truncated view of what constitutes a "hearing." As our Supreme Court recently noted, that term, too, is ambiguous and is subject to dispute. (Lewis v. Superior Court (1999) 19 Cal.4th 1232, 1247-1248 [82 Cal.Rptr.2d 85, 970 P.2d 872].) However, a long-standing definition found in the case law encompasses both the information-gathering and decisional aspects of such a proceeding: "A 'hearing' is generally understood to be a proceeding where evidence is taken to the end of determining an issue of fact and a decision made on the basis of that evidence.' " (People v. Pennington (1967) 66 Cal.2d 508, 521 [58 Cal.Rptr. 374, 426 P.2d 942], italics added.)

"The constitutional provision interpreted in the Mosk decision remained unchanged until the November 1988 election. Prior to that election, the Senate resolved, with the Assembly concurring, to propose to the voters that article VI, sections 8 and 18, of the California Constitution, be amended to provide, inter alia, that, under some circumstances, hearings on judicial performance before the Commission could be opened to public scrutiny. (Sen. Const. Amend. No. 6, Stats. 1988 (1987-1988 Reg. Sess.) res. ch. 67, pp. 6115-6116.) The preamble to the legislative resolution proposing the constitutional amendment states: 'WHEREAS, The Legislature finds and declares that maintaining public confidence in the integrity of the judicial system is essential to good government; and [¶] WHEREAS, The Commission on Judicial Performance bears a great public trust which it must currently fulfill in total secrecy; and [¶] WHEREAS, Because responsible public disclosure and accountability is proper, desirable, and consistent with the goal of public confidence, it is the intent of this measure that appropriate commission proceedings be open to public scrutiny, and that this measure be construed so as to accomplish this purpose which is hereby declared to be the public policy of this state . . . .' (Id., at p. 6115.)

"The constitutional amendment was submitted to the voters as Proposition 92 and was approved, effective November 9, 1988. . . . Section 18, subdivision (f), now provides that if, after conducting a preliminary investigation, the Commission by vote determines that formal proceedings should be instituted against a judge, the Commission 'may in the pursuit of public confidence and the interests of justice, issue press statements or releases or, in the event charges involve moral turpitude, dishonesty, or corruption, open hearings to the public.' (Art. VI, § 18, subd. (f)(3).)" (Adams v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 8 Cal.4th at pp. 646-647, fn. omitted, italics added.)

As the Adams court explained, the history of the constitutional provisions governing judicial discipline in California shows a trend toward greater openness and less secrecy, and that evolution continues with Proposition 190. (See Adams v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 8 Cal.4th at pp. 646-647.) The 1988 and 1994 amendments also reflect the growing desire of the voters of California to limit the discretion of those in charge of the machinery of judicial discipline to determine which aspects of the process may be conducted behind closed doors. Thus, the law prior to passage of Proposition 190 permitted open "hearings" in certain circumstances, while the language of the 1994 amendments mandates that "all . . . proceedings" subsequent to the filing of formal charges must be "open to the public." (§ 18(j).) This history suggests that the drafters of Proposition 190 purposefully chose the broader term "proceedings" over "hearings," the term that was being replaced, and meant to maximize the openness of formal disciplinary proceedings of the commission.[13]

The ballot arguments filed in connection with the November 1994 election support our conclusion on this point. A careful examination of those arguments reveals that the primary purposes of Proposition 190 were to eliminate secrecy in the commission's formal disciplinary proceedings and to ensure public accountability of the commission for its disciplinary determinations. The proponents of Proposition 190 could not have been more clear about this, as stated in their ballot argument: "Proposition 190 is an important and timely reform measure. Judges are public servants and play a critical role in our society. The public must have confidence and trust in those holding judicial office. PROPOSITION 190 PLACES JUDICIAL DISCIPLINE IN THE HANDS OF A BROAD PANEL OF PUBLIC CITIZENS, JUDGES AND ATTORNEYS AND OPENS ALL FORMAL PROCEEDINGS TO THE PUBLIC JUST AS OTHER STATES HAVE DONE IN RECENT YEARS. CALIFORNIA MUST ELIMINATE SECRECY AND ENSURE INTEGRITY IN THE DISCIPLINARY PROCESS." (Ballot Pamp., argument in favor of Prop. 190 as presented to the voters, Gen. Elec. (Nov. 8, 1994) p. 12, upper case and italics in original.) The ballot argument in favor of Proposition 190 also stated: "Under Proposition 190, the commission would be required to open all formal proceedings against judges to the public. Currently, all hearings and commission documents, including the actual charges against the judge, are secret. WITHOUT KNOWLEDGE OF CHARGES OR PROCEEDINGS, THE PUBLIC CANNOT HAVE CONFIDENCE IN THE JUDICIAL SYSTEM." (Ibid., upper case and italics in original.)

Perhaps the most fundamental problem with the commission's approach is that, by adopting rule 102(b) of the Rules of Commission on Judicial Performance, the commission has, in essence, established a sweeping rule of confidentiality with only a few narrow exceptions for aspects of formal disciplinary proceedings that will be held "open to the public." This is precisely the opposite of the regime the Legislature and the voters were attempting to establish by enacting Proposition 190 and section 18(j).[14] In short, the commission's interpretation cannot be sustained because it cannot be reconciled with the clearly expressed intent to inspire public confidence in the California system of judicial discipline by eliminating the secrecy that shrouded formal disciplinary proceedings in the past.

[13]Indeed, the formal hearings before the special masters and the commission are not the only "subsequent . . . proceedings" contemplated by section 18 and by the commission's own rules. They are not even the only types of "hearings" the commission is likely to hold. The commission does not explain why it appears to have excluded from the scope of "all subsequent . . . proceedings," all aspects of discovery, the issuance of subpoenas, depositions of witnesses who are unable or cannot be made to appear before the special masters, and any "pre-trial" motions a judge may wish to make, to name a few types of "proceedings" that are not included among the "exceptions" to confidentiality established by rule 102 of the Rules of Commission on Judicial Performance. Obviously, these additional proceedings are not at issue in this case, but we make this point to highlight how narrowly the commission has construed its constitutional mandate for "open" proceedings.

But the proponents of Proposition 190 did not simply make broad pronouncements of their intent to eliminate secrecy and open judicial disciplinary proceedings to public scrutiny. They also provided some useful guidance as to the procedural model they envisioned for formal judicial discipline by saying: "Just as we require criminal proceedings and attorney discipline proceedings to be open, we should also hold judges to the same standard where serious misconduct is at issue." (Ballot Pamp., argument in favor of Prop. 190 as presented to the voters, supra, at p. 12, italics added.) That the proponents singled out these two adjudicative systems goes a long way toward persuading us that they, and the voters who approved Proposition 190, intended the commissioners' votes to be "open to the public," at least in the sense of revealing how each individual commissioner voted.[15]

[14]Indeed, the instant case presents the flip side of Mosk v. Superior Court, supra, 25 Cal.3d 474. In that case, the Supreme Court held that in view of a constitutional provision which then required the Judicial Council to make rules providing for the confidentiality of proceedings, the commission had acted outside its authority by promulgating rules under its discretionary rulemaking authority providing for public hearings in some cases. (Id. at p. 499.) Here, by contrast, the commission asks us to find that, despite the enactment of a constitutional mandate that "all . . . proceedings" subsequent to the institution of formal disciplinary proceedings must be open to the public, it may, nevertheless, under its discretionary rulemaking authority, provide for confidential proceedings. Thus, to the extent the commission adopted rule 102(b) of the Rules of Commission on Judicial Performance to compel the confidentiality of the commissioners' individual votes, it acted outside its authority. (See Mosk v. Superior Court, supra, at p. 499.)

[15]As we have noted, the proponents of Proposition 190 also mentioned approvingly the many other states that have "PLACE[D] JUDICIAL DISCIPLINE IN THE HANDS OF A BROAD PANEL OF PUBLIC CITIZENS, JUDGES AND ATTORNEYS AND OPEN[ED] ALL FORMAL PROCEEDINGS TO THE PUBLIC . . . IN RECENT YEARS." (Ballot Pamp., argument in favor of Prop. 190 as presented to the voters, supra, at p. 12.) In its brief and appendices, The Recorder has set forth detailed descriptions of the system of judicial discipline in 10 such states—Georgia, Kansas, Nevada, New York, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Utah, Vermont, and Washington—all of which have attorney and public members, and all of which apparently disclose the individual votes of their members, usually by issuing a signed decision. (See, e.g., Ga. Const., art. VI, § VII, ¶ VI; Rules Ga. Jud. Qualifications Com., rule 14; Kan. Supreme Ct. Rules Jud. Conduct, rules 602, 608, 622; Nev. Const., art. 6, § 21, subd. 2; Rules Nev. Com. Jud. Discipline, rule 7; N.Y. Jud. Law, § 44, subd. 7; Or. Rev. Stat. § 1.420, subd. (3); Pa. Const., art. V, § 18, subd. (b); Tenn. Code Ann. §§ 10-7-503, 17-5-201, 17-5-304, subd. (e); Utah Code Ann. § 78-7-27; Rules Utah Jud. Conduct Com. 595-1-10(h); Vt. State Disciplinary Control Rules 4(1), 6(15), 6(20)(b); Wash. Const., art. IV, § 31, subds. (1), (3), (4); Wash. Rev. Code, § 2.64.020.) The commission contends that The Recorder's survey of the law of these 10 states constitutes a tacit concession that the "overwhelming majority of states have a

In criminal proceedings, whether in the trial court or in the Court of Appeal, California judges always make their decisions and "cast their votes" publicly, with no mask of anonymity.[16] Even jurors, after rendering a verdict, are regularly required to confirm—individually and in open court—that they have indeed voted in support of the verdict. (Pen. Code, § 1163.)[17] We note, however, that the commission is less like a trial court, and more different procedure," and that "other states whose judicial discipline bodies, like the commission here, do not make a disclosure" of individual votes. (Emphasis in original.) However, the commission provides us with citations regarding only three such states—Connecticut, Mississippi, and Missouri. (See In re Honorable Bruce L. Levin (Conn. Jud. Review Council, Sept. 21, 1995) 1995 WL 908006; Rules Miss. Com. Jud. Performance, rule 8F, G; Mo. Com. Retirement, Removal and Discipline, Internal Proc. art. VIII.) The foregoing does not conclusively prove the merit of either the commission's or The Recorder's interpretation of section 18(j). It does, however, undercut the commission's argument that disclosing the votes of individual commissioners gravely jeopardizes the integrity of proceedings for judicial discipline. In any event, we need not rely on the laws of other states because we believe the voters of California have spoken quite clearly by approving a measure designed to "eliminate secrecy" in proceedings for judicial discipline.

[16]During the trial court hearing on The Recorder's petition, the commission suggested that the Court of Appeal sometimes issues anonymous decisions by designating an opinion as authored "By the Court." This is simply incorrect. California Rules of Court, rule 23.5 requires attribution of the votes of individual justices on a panel deciding a case in the California Courts of Appeal. That rule provides: "The opinion of a Court of Appeal shall identify the judges participating in the decision, including the author of the majority opinion and of any concurring or dissenting opinion, or the three judges participating when the opinion is designated " 'by the court.' " (Ibid.) Thus, although the author of a "by the court" opinion may remain anonymous, it is always clear that the author (whoever he or she may be) and both of the other named justices all concurred in—i.e., "voted" in agreement with—the opinion. Similarly, our Supreme Court occasionally issues opinions without designating the author, especially in attorney and judicial disciplinary matters. (See, e.g., In re Wright (1973) 10 Cal.3d 374 [110 Cal.Rptr. 348, 515 P.2d 292]; Siegel v. Committee of Bar Examiners (1973) 10 Cal.3d 156 [110 Cal.Rptr. 15, 514 P.2d 967]; Geiler v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1973) 10 Cal.3d 270 [110 Cal.Rptr. 201, 515 P.2d 1].) Indeed, some of the Supreme Court's "Per Curiam" or "By the Court" decisions have not been unanimous. (See e.g., In re Michael L. (1985) 39 Cal.3d 81 [216 Cal.Rptr. 140, 702 P.2d 222] [unsigned majority opinion, signed concurring and dissenting opinions by named justices]; Seaman's Direct Buying Service, Inc. v. Standard Oil Co. (1984) 36 Cal.3d 752 [206 Cal.Rptr. 354, 686 P.2d 1158] [majority opinion unsigned; one opinion concurring and dissenting], overruled on other grounds by Freeman & Mills, Inc. v. Belcher Oil Co. (1995) 11 Cal.4th 85, 88 [44 Cal.Rptr.2d 420, 900 P.2d 669]; Stanton v. Panish (1980) 28 Cal.3d 107 [167 Cal.Rptr. 584, 615 P.2d 1372].) It is, nevertheless, always disclosed how each of the participating justices "voted" in each decision.

closely analogous to an intermediate appellate court such as the Court of Appeal, insofar as it "reviews" decisions of the special masters (Rules Com. Jud. Performance, rules 129-135)[18] subject to further discretionary "review" in the Supreme Court. (See § 18(d); Cal. Rules of Court, rule 935.)

Even more closely analogous to the commission, however, is the State Bar Court.[19] Under Business and Professions Code section 6086.1 and rule 20 of the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, formal attorney disciplinary proceedings (with certain exceptions) are held in public. Public hearings and trials are conducted before hearing judges (see Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 2.58, 3.16, 20, 23), with review afforded in the Review Department of the State Bar Court (id., rule 300 et seq.). Decisions of the Review Department—the counterpart of the commission—always identify the participating judges, including the author of the majority opinion and of any concurring or dissenting opinion. (See, e.g., In the Matter of Hindin (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 657; In the Matter of Jennings (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 337.) Thus, it is always disclosed how each of the participating State Bar Court judges "voted" in each case.

Like the votes of the judges of this court in criminal cases, or those of State Bar Court judges in attorney discipline cases, the commissioners' votes are the object and culmination of formal disciplinary proceedings against a

We also note the recent enactment of provisions requiring the trial courts to seal identifying information about trial jurors and to maintain the confidentiality of same absent further order of the court. (Code Civ. Proc., § 237; and Cal. Rules of Court, rule 33.6; see also People v. Goodwin (1997) 59 Cal.App.4th 1084, 1088 [69 Cal.Rptr.2d 576].) However important and effective these new laws may be in protecting the privacy and safety of citizen jurors, they do not apply to publicly appointed members of the commission. Moreover, to the extent there is a "jury" in formal proceedings for judicial discipline in California, that factfinding role is played primarily by the special masters, not commissioners. (See Rules Com. Jud. Performance, rules 121-129.) As the commission itself contends, the "ultimate" responsibility for judicial discipline rests with the commissioners, subject only to review by the Supreme Court when discipline is imposed. Thus, the role of the commissioners is more akin to that played by trial and intermediate appellate court judges in criminal proceedings.

[18]The special masters' decision is rendered in a "final report," which must contain "findings of fact and conclusions of law, along with an analysis of the evidence and reasons for the findings and conclusions, but shall not contain a recommendation as to discipline." (Rules Com. Jud. Performance, rule 129(d).) The respondent judge and/or the examiner may file with the commission a brief containing specific objections to the special masters' report, followed by response and reply briefs, and an opportunity to be heard orally before the commission. (Id., rules 130, 132.) The commission may order the taking of additional evidence. (Id., rule 133; cf. Code Civ. Proc., § 909 [Court of Appeal may take additional evidence on appeal and make additional findings of fact]; Cal. Rules of Court, rules 23 & 41 [procedures for same].) After a "determination" of the commission to impose discipline, the judge may seek review in the Supreme Court. (§ 18(d); Cal. Rules of Court, rule 935.)

[19]Unlike the commission, which originates in the state Constitution (§§ 8, 18), however, the State Bar Court is a creature of statute (see Bus. & Prof. Code, § 6086.5).

judge. They are essential to a valid exercise of the commission's authority, which requires the concurrence of a majority of its members. (Gov. Code, § 68704; Rules Com. Jud. Perf., rule 134.) The commission's final vote represents its " '. . . formal expression of a will, preference, wish or choice . . .' " with respect to imposition of judicial discipline. (See California School Employees Assn. v. King City Union Elementary School (1981) 116 Cal.App.3d 695, 702 [172 Cal.Rptr. 368].) Indeed, in all these respects, the vote of the membership is the most critical step in the commission's proceedings.

Given the broad mandatory language of Proposition 190, the clearly expressed intent of its proponents to eliminate secrecy in formal proceedings for judicial discipline, and the "legislative history" describing the adjudicative model the proponents were seeking to establish, it quite simply defies common sense to suggest that the votes of individual commissioners are not part of the "proceedings" that must, under the express terms of section 18(j), be "open to the public." Accordingly, we conclude that the commission's interpretation of section 18(j) is neither faithful to the language of the constitutional provision, nor " 'reasonable, fair and harmonious with its manifest purpose' " (see Western Oil & Gas Assn. v. Monterey Bay Unified Air Pollution Control Dist. (1989) 49 Cal.3d 408, 425 [261 Cal.Rptr. 384, 777 P.2d 157]), and must be rejected.[20]

[20]For the first time at oral argument, the commission made an argument based on former rule 902 of the California Rules of Court, which provided, in relevant part: "Except as provided in this rule, all papers filed with and proceedings before the Commission . . . shall be confidential until a record is filed by the Commission in the Supreme Court." (Id., subd. (a), italics added.) Former rule 902 was first adopted in 1966 (see Mosk v. Superior Court, supra, 25 Cal.3d at p. 498) and remained in effect until it was repealed in 1996 in response to passage of Proposition 190. Noting that the commission's consistent practice throughout that period was to disclose only numerical vote totals and not to reveal how individual commissioners voted in disciplinary "proceedings," counsel for the commission contended that, by drafting Proposition 190 to include language similar to that of former rule 902, the Legislature must be deemed to have understood the term "proceedings" to exclude the commissioners' voting practices. The commission has waived this argument by failing to raise it in its opening or reply briefs. (Stevenson v. Baum (1998) 65 Cal.App.4th 159, 167 [75 Cal.Rptr.2d 904]; Chatterjee v. Kizer (1991) 231 Cal.App.3d 1348, 1366, fn. 4 [283 Cal.Rptr. 60].) Even assuming it was not waived, however, we do not find this argument particularly enlightening. Whatever the meaning of the term "proceedings" in 1966 when the commission had no authority to hold public investigations or hearings (see Mosk v. Superior Court, supra, 25 Cal.3d at pp. 499-500), and even as late as 1994 when the commission was authorized to conduct public "hearings" in limited circumstances (see Adams v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 8 Cal.4th at p. 647), the presumption of confidentiality that previously attached to all commission "proceedings" and "hearings" has now been reversed for "all . . . proceedings" in cases of formal discipline (§ 18(j)). As we have discussed, the drafters of Proposition 190 and the voters who approved it clearly expressed their intent to "eliminate secrecy" in our system of formal judicial discipline and to open all formal disciplinary

3. Interpreting the Term "Proceedings" in Section 18(j) to Require Disclosure of the Votes of Individual Members Will Not Produce "Harmful" or "Absurd" Consequences.

The commission issues dire warnings about the dangers of requiring public disclosure of the individual commissioners' votes, contending that only its interpretation of section 18(j) can ensure integrity in judicial disciplinary proceedings. It claims it must be allowed to continue its "long-standing historical practice" of secret voting because, otherwise, commissioners will be subject to political pressure and (especially with respect to the attorney members) retaliation by the judges who have been or may be called to appear before it. We will not dignify the latter suggestion with any extended discussion. As to political pressure, however, we fail to see how allowing the commissioners to act anonymously promotes, much less guarantees, integrity in the process. On the contrary, if the public is not allowed to see how the individual appointees are dispensing judicial discipline, it will be unable to determine what, if any, political pressure might be at work, or the sources of that pressure. Moreover, while the voters do not have direct control over who serves on the commission, they expressly reserved to themselves a fair measure of indirect control over commission membership insofar as a majority of the commissioners are now appointed by elected officials who must answer to the voters for, inter alia, their appointments to the commission and the conduct of their appointees.[21] Denying public access to full information about the commission's disciplinary decisions deprives the voters of an "ability to understand how the system operates and, in turn, its ability [to] make informed decisions regarding the need for positive changes to the system . . . ." (San Bernardino County Dept. of Public Social Services v. Superior Court (1991) 232 Cal.App.3d 188, 203 [283 Cal.Rptr. 332].)

The commission further suggests that the voters acted to open up formal disciplinary proceedings only because they were concerned with California judges' domination of their own disciplinary apparatus. The proponents of Proposition 190 did, of course, state that a chief purpose of the measure was to "eliminate judicial domination of the commission in favor of a public majority," and that "A PUBLIC MAJORITY WILL ENSURE A FAIR AND FIRM SYSTEM OF JUDICIAL DISCIPLINE." (Ballot Pamp., argument in favor of Prop.

proceedings to the public as the California courts do in criminal cases and the State Bar Court does in attorney discipline proceedings. It is, thus, immaterial that the commission has in the past narrowly construed its obligations to open its proceedings to public view.

[21]As The Recorder points out, without identifying how individual commissioners vote, it is impossible to know whether they are even showing up for work or whether members have (or should have) disqualified themselves for some reason. The vote tally in the Velasquez matter, and the change therein, suggests both problems, but there is no way to clarify what happened.

190 as presented to the voters, supra, at p. 12, upper case in original.) Obviously, however, they accomplished that objective by amending section 8(a), not section 18(j). Indeed, had elimination of judicial domination been the proponents' only objective, they could have cured that problem by changing the composition of the panel—to provide a majority of public members—without dispensing with the absolute "confidentiality" of all "proceedings" discussed in Mosk v. Superior Court, supra, 25 Cal.3d 474, or the more limited "confidentiality" for "hearings" at issue in Adams v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 8 Cal.4th 630.

The commission has also claimed it will be difficult to find citizens willing to serve if prospective commissioners know their votes will be publicly disclosed. This is, however, a bald claim without support in the record. In any event, we fail to see the merit of a system in which public officials, sitting in judgment of other public officials regarding charges of official misconduct, are allowed to hide behind a veil of secrecy when making the "tough calls" necessary to any adjudicatory regime. A certain amount of courage and a "thick skin" are essential attributes for anyone who purports to perform "judicial" functions. We should expect, and accept, no less from members of the commission. (Cf. New York Times Co. v. Sullivan (1964) 376 U.S. 254, 273 [84 S.Ct. 710, 722, 11 L.Ed.2d 686, 95 A.L.R.2d 1412] ["If judges are to be treated as 'men [and women] of fortitude, able to thrive in a hardy climate,' . . . surely the same must be true of other government officials, such as elected city commissioners."].)

Finally, the commission contends that interpreting the term "proceedings" in section 18(j) to require disclosure of the votes of individual members leads inexorably to the "absurd result" that its "deliberations" (and even those of the Supreme Court upon review of commission decisions) must also be conducted in public. The commission reasons that deliberations and voting are "dual components of the collective decision-making process" (Sacramento Newspaper Guild v. Sacramento County Bd. of Suprs. (1968) 263 Cal.App.2d 41, 47 [69 Cal.Rptr. 480]), and that, if we hold that voting is part of the formal "proceedings" of the commission, there is no way to draw a line to shield its deliberations from public disclosure. The commission warns that The Recorder is, thus, seeking to "intrude into the judge's chamber and witness the deliberations of the justices," to observe "the deliberations and votes of the jury," and to " 'sit at the table' during the [c]ommission's deliberations."

The commission's argument on this point is vastly overstated. Indeed, we agree with the commission that it would be "absurd" to interpret the term "proceedings," as used in section 18(j), to include its deliberations. Unlike the commission, however, we believe there is a principled way to define those "proceedings" that must be held "open to the public" to include the vote of the commissioners, but to exclude the deliberative process that produces those votes.

The argument that the term "proceedings" includes the "deliberations" of the commission is easily dispatched by reference to the "natural and ordinary meaning" (In re Quinn, supra, 35 Cal.App.3d at p. 482) of the term "proceedings" as generally understood when section 18(j) was enacted, and as intended by the proponents of Proposition 190. At the risk of sounding repetitious, the point is that when the commission acts in an adjudicatory capacity—as it does when it conducts "formal proceedings" for judicial discipline—the proponents of Proposition 190 intended the commission to conduct its formal "proceedings" as a court does in a criminal case and as the State Bar Court does in attorney discipline cases. It was and is widely understood that internal "deliberations" of American and California courts are, and always have been, conducted in secrecy and that the "judicial thought process" need not be disclosed to the public. Likewise, the deliberations of the judges of the State Bar Court are excluded from the provision requiring all State Bar Court proceedings to be public. (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 24.)[22]

There are, of course, good and sufficient reasons for secret deliberations in each of these settings.[23] As Professor Laurence Tribe has observed, protecting the confidentiality of "judicial" deliberations is "vitally needed to [22]Similarly, although state administrative agencies subject to the Administrative Procedure Act are required to conduct their "adjudicative proceedings" openly (Gov. Code, §§ 11120, 11425.10, subd. (a)(3), 11425.20, 54950), the agency may conduct its deliberations in private (id., § 11126, subd. (c)(3); and see Cal. Law. Revision Com. com., 32C West's Ann. Gov. Code, § 11425.20 (1998 pocket supp.) p. 94). Of course, thereafter, the agency's decision must be filed as a public record (Gov. Code, § 11517, subd. (e)), and must contain a written statement of the factual and legal basis for the decision (Cal. Law Revision Com. com., 32C West's Ann., Gov. Code, §§ 11425.10, subd. (a)(6), 11425.50, subd. (a)). One commentator has noted that the "vote" of the agency is not generally included in the decision because there is no specific statutory provision requiring such disclosure. (Cal. Administrative Hearing Practice (Cont.Ed.Bar 1997) § 8.31, p. 384.) However, a quick survey of case reporters from state administrative agencies reveals that many—including the Public Employment Relations Board, the Workers' Compensation Appeals Board, and the Public Utilities Commission—do, in adjudicatory matters, identify the participating commissioners, and identify the author of the panel's opinion and any dissenting, concurring, or nonparticipating members.

[23]As we have noted, we express no opinion about the scope of the term "papers," as used in section 18(j). We note, however, that it is a fairly simple matter to draw a line between "deliberative" written work product of a court or other adjudicatory body (draft decisions, memoranda, notes, or other critical analyses exchanged between and among adjudicators for the purpose of reaching a decision), and the opinion filed in a given case. Only the latter "speaks for" and constitutes the official "action" of the adjudicatory body. (Copley Press, Inc. v. Superior Court (1992) 6 Cal.App.4th 106, 114 [7 Cal.Rptr.2d 841].)

encourage collegiality, candor, and courage—both political and intellectual—protection needed not for the benefit of judges but for the benefit of society as a whole." (Tribe, Trying California's Judges on Television: Open Government or Judicial Intimidation? (1979) 65 A.B.A. J. 1175, 1179.) Similarly, California courts have recognized the critical importance of allowing state administrative agencies, when acting in an adjudicative capacity, "to review the evidence before it, to exchange views and to deliberate thereon under conditions conducive to calm, orderly and frank discussion." (California State Employees' Assn. v. State Personnel Bd. (1973) 31 Cal.App.3d 1009, 1011-1013 [108 Cal.Rptr. 57].) We agree with the commission when it claims the same values are at stake when it deliberates to evaluate the evidence and legal arguments in a formal, adjudicatory proceeding for judicial discipline.[24]

In sum, then, we conclude the vote of the individual members is an integral part of the "proceedings" of the commission that must be "open to the public" in any case in which the commission determines to initiate formal disciplinary proceedings against a California judge. (§ 18(j).) Thus, the commission had no discretion to withhold from "the public" information about how the individual commissioners voted, and the trial court did not err by issuing a writ of mandamus to compel its release.[25]

[24]The commission's reliance on "open meeting" cases such as Sacramento Newspaper Guild v. Sacramento County Bd. of Suprs., supra, 263 Cal.App.2d 41, is misguided. "[T]he term 'meeting,' as used in the Brown Act ([Gov. Code,] §§ 54950, 54953), is not limited to gatherings at which action is taken by the relevant legislative body; 'deliberative gatherings' are included as well. [Citation.] Deliberation in this context connotes not only collective decisionmaking, but also 'the collective acquisition and exchange of facts preliminary to the ultimate decision.' [Citations.]" (Frazer v. Dixon Unified School Dist. (1993) 18 Cal.App.4th 781, 794 [22 Cal.Rptr.2d 641]; Sacramento Newspaper Guild v. Sacramento County Bd. of Suprs., supra, 263 Cal.App.2d at p. 48.) However, the commission is expressly exempt from the Bagley-Keene Open Meeting Act (Gov. Code, § 11120 et seq.), and that just drives home the point that the constitutional amendments enacted by Proposition 190 might have been—but were not—cast as "open meeting" laws. By requiring only the formal "proceedings" of the commission to be "open to the public," the Legislature and the voters undoubtedly understood they were dealing with an adjudicatory system—an apparatus for "judging" the judges of California—and not with an ordinary state or local administrative agency that conducts "meetings" to perform a variety of "legislative" and "judicial" or "quasi-judicial" functions.

[25]The commission appears to object to issuance of mandamus on the ground that the courts are thereby requiring it to account for the individual votes in the Velasquez matter and create a record of individual votes in future cases. The commission suggests it has discretion with respect to the creation and maintenance of such information. This objection rings hollow because the commission has imposed upon itself a mandatory duty to "maintain records of all actions taken by the commission concerning a judge." (Rules Com. Jud. Performance, rule 135.)

IV. CONCLUSION

For all the foregoing reasons the judgment of the trial court, including the order granting The Recorder's motion for attorney fees, is affirmed. The Recorder shall recover its costs on appeal, including reasonable attorney fees in an amount to be determined by the trial court on remand. COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE, Petitioner, v.
THE SUPERIOR COURT OF LOS ANGELES COUNTY, Respondent;
ERIC DAVIDSON, Real Party in Interest.

SUMMARY

The trial court directed the Commission on Judicial Performance to produce, for an in camera hearing, a judge's statements to the commission in response to a criminal defendant's complaint about the judge's handling of a motion to suppress evidence. The complaint about the judge did not lead to public formal proceedings. The criminal case was assigned to another judge, who presided over a jury trial that resulted in a conviction. A new trial motion was filed, along with a Pitchess motion and a subpoena duces tecum seeking information from the commission about any statements made by the first judge in response to the commission's investigation of the complaint. The commission sought mandate relief. (Superior Court of Los Angeles County, No. SA052588, Antonio Barreto, Jr., Judge.)

The Court of Appeal granted the commission's petition and issued a peremptory writ of mandate commanding the trial court to vacate its order and to issue new orders denying the Pitchess motion and quashing the subpoena duces tecum. The court held that the commission's records are confidential and are not subject to discovery by means of a Pitchess motion or a subpoena duces tecum. Evid. Code, § 1040, prohibits the disclosure of confidential official records unless the need for disclosure outweighs the necessity for preserving the confidentiality of the information sought. The commission's records qualify for the official records privilege under § 1040. Moreover, as provided in Rules of Com. on Jud. Performance, rule 102, all nonpublic papers and proceedings of the commission are absolutely confidential except as stated in that rule. The rule contains no exception permitting disclosure to a trial court for in camera review or at all. (Opinion by Vogel, Acting P. J., with Rothschild, J., and Jackson, J.,* concurring.)

*Judge of the Los Angeles Superior Court, assigned by the Chief Justice pursuant to article VI, section 6 of the California Constitution.

HEADNOTES

(1) Witnesses § 16.3—Privileged Relationships and Communications—Official Information—Criminal Cases.—Even upon a showing of good cause, the right of an accused to obtain discovery is not absolute and, in criminal cases, the trial court has wide discretion to protect against the disclosure of information that might unduly hamper the prosecution or violate some other legitimate governmental interest. When the accused seeks discovery of official information (typically complaints made to a law enforcement agency about its officers), the official information privilege created by Evid. Code, § 1040, represents the exclusive means by which a public entity may assert a claim of governmental privilege based on the necessity for secrecy.

(2) Judges § 6.4—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Proceedings—Confidential Investigation.—The Commission on Judicial Performance is a constitutional body vested with the ultimate power to censure, remove, or retire judges, after which the judge may petition the Supreme Court for review of the commission's decision (Cal. Const., art. VI, §§ 8, 18, subd. (d)). More specifically, Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subds. (i)(1), (j) give the commission the power to make rules for the investigation of judges, which rules may provide for the confidentiality of complaints to and investigations by the commission provided only that, when the commission institutes formal proceedings, the notice of charges, the answer, and all subsequent papers and proceedings are open to the public for all formal proceedings.

(3) Judges § 6.4—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Proceedings—Confidential Investigation.—Rules of Com. on Jud. Performance, rule 102, provides that, except as stated in the rule, all nonpublic papers and proceedings are absolutely confidential.

(4) Judges § 6.4—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Proceedings—Confidential Investigation—Exceptions to Confidentiality.—If public reports concerning a proceeding of the Commission on Judicial Performance result in substantial unfairness to the judge involved in the proceedings, the commission may issue a statement of clarification (Rules of Com. on Jud. Performance, rule 102(d)). Upon completion of an investigation, the commission may disclose to the complainant that it has found no basis for action, or determined not to proceed, or taken appropriate corrective action, the nature of which shall not be disclosed, or has publicly admonished, censured, removed, or retired the judge (rule 102(e)). When the commission receives information concerning a threat to the safety of any person, that information may be provided to the person threatened and to law enforcement (rule 102(f)). Information revealing possible criminal conduct by a judge or former judge may be released to prosecuting authorities (rule 102(g)). When a judge or former judge consents to the release of records to a public entity, those records may be released (rule 102(h)). Upon written request, information may be disclosed to appointing authorities (rule 102(i), (j)). There may be limited disclosure to the State Bar and the Chief Justice about retired judges, and to presiding judges about incapacitated judges and about subordinate judicial officers who are the subject of complaints (rule 102(k), (l), (m), (n)).

(5) Judges § 6.4—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Proceedings—Confidential Investigation.—There is no exception in Rules of Com. on Jud. Performance, rule 102(d), permitting disclosure to a trial court for in camera review or at all.

(6) Witnesses § 16.3—Privileged Relationships and Communications—Official Information—Confidential Investigation of Judicial Conduct.—The Pitchess standards do not apply to the Commission on Judicial Performance. Evid. Code, § 1040, represents the exclusive means by which a public entity may assert a claim of governmental privilege based on the necessity for secrecy, and § 1040 makes it clear that the commission qualifies for the official records privilege. Case law has not applied the relatively relaxed Pitchess standards of discoverability to anything other than law enforcement personnel records where the privacy rights of individual officers in the contents of their personnel files must be balanced against a criminal defendant's ability to prepare his or her defense. Even under Pitchess, § 1040 prohibits the disclosure of confidential official records unless the need for disclosure outweighs the necessity for preserving the confidentiality of the information sought.

(7) Witnesses § 16.3—Privileged Relationships and Communications—Official Information—Confidential Investigation of Judicial Conduct.—The records of the Commission on Judicial Performance are confidential and are not subject to discovery by means of a Pitchess motion or subpoena duces tecum. Consequently, the trial court erred in ordering the commission to produce, for an in camera hearing, a judge's statements to the commission in response to a criminal defendant's complaint about the judge's handling of a motion to suppress evidence.

OPINION

VOGEL, Acting P. J.—A few months after Eric Davidson was charged with four felony counts, the trial court (Hon. Keith L. Schwartz) denied his pro se motion to suppress evidence. (Pen. Code, § 1538.5.) In response, Davidson complained to the Commission on Judicial Performance about Judge Schwartz. The case was thereafter assigned to another judge (Hon. Antonio Barreto, Jr.) who presided over a jury trial at which Davidson was convicted as charged. Davidson moved for a new trial, filed a Pitchess motion (Pitchess v. Superior Court (1974) 11 Cal.3d 531 [113 Cal.Rptr. 897, 522 P.2d 305]) in which he sought information from the Commission on Judicial Performance about all complaints filed against Judge Schwartz, and served a subpoena duces tecum on the Commission ordering it to produce the same information.[1] Over the Commission's objection that the requested records are confidential, the trial court denied the Commission's motion to quash the subpoena and ordered it to produce for an in camera hearing "any declaration or statement made by Judge Schwartz in response to [any] inquiry made by [the] Commission [in response to Davidson's] complaint about Judge Schwartz."

In response to the Commission's petition for a writ of mandate, we stayed the trial court's order and issued a Palma notice (Palma v. U.S. Industrial Fasteners, Inc. (1984) 36 Cal.3d 171, 180 [203 Cal.Rptr. 626, 681 P.2d 893]) to advise the parties we were considering the issuance of a peremptory writ in the first instance (Lewis v. Superior Court (1999) 19 Cal.4th 1232, 1240–1241 [82 Cal.Rptr.2d 85, 970 P.2d 872]). No opposition was received, and we now issue the writ as prayed, explaining that the Commission's nonpublic records are not subject to a Pitchess motion.[2]

A.

(1) In Pitchess v. Superior Court, supra, 11 Cal.3d at pages 538, 540, our Supreme Court explained that, even upon a showing of good cause, the right of an accused to obtain discovery is not absolute and that, in criminal cases, the trial court has wide discretion to protect against the disclosure of information that might unduly hamper the prosecution or violate some other legitimate governmental interest. When the accused seeks discovery of official information (typically complaints made to a law enforcement agency about its officers), the official information privilege created by Evidence Code section 1040 represents the exclusive means by which a public entity may assert a claim of governmental privilege based on the necessity for secrecy.

As relevant to the Commission on Judicial Performance, Evidence Code section 1040 provides: "(a) As used in this section, 'official information' means information acquired in confidence by a public employee in the course of his or her duty and not open, or officially disclosed, to the public prior to the time the claim of privilege is made. [¶] (b) A public entity has a privilege to refuse to disclose official information, and to prevent another from disclosing official information, if the privilege is claimed by a person authorized by the public entity to do so and: [¶] (1) Disclosure is forbidden by an act of the Congress of the United States or a statute of this state; or [¶] (2) Disclosure of the information is against the public interest because there is a necessity for preserving the confidentiality of the information that outweighs the necessity for disclosure in the interest of justice . . . . In determining whether disclosure of the information is against the public interest, the interest of the public entity as a party in the outcome of the proceeding may not be considered."

B.

(2) The Commission on Judicial Performance is a constitutional body vested with the ultimate power to censure, remove, or retire judges, after which the judge may petition the Supreme Court for review of the Commission's decision. (Cal. Const., art. VI, §§ 8, 18, subd. (d).) More

[2] It is clear from the reporter's transcript of the hearing at which the order was made that the parties understood this petition would be filed and presumed the record made in the trial court would be sufficient to present both sides of the issue. It is.

specifically, subdivisions (i)(1) and (j) of section 18 of article VI of the California Constitution give the Commission the power to make rules for the investigation of judges, which rules "may provide for the confidentiality of complaints to and investigations by the commission" provided only that, when the Commission institutes formal proceedings, the notice of charges, the answer, and all subsequent papers and proceedings are open to the public for all formal proceedings.[3] (See The Recorder v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1999) 72 Cal.App.4th 258, 262–263 [85 Cal.Rptr.2d 56].)

The confidentiality of the Commission's investigations is based on sound public policy. Confidentiality encourages the filing of complaints and the willing participation of citizens and witnesses by providing protection against possible retaliation or recrimination. It protects judges from injury which might result from the publication of unexamined and unwarranted complaints by disgruntled litigants or their attorneys, or by political adversaries, and preserves confidence in the judiciary as an institution by avoiding premature announcement of groundless claims of judicial misconduct or disability. Confidentiality is essential to protecting the judge's constitutional right to a private admonishment if the circumstances so warrant, and when removal or retirement is justified by the charges, judges are more likely to resign or retire voluntarily without the necessity of a formal proceeding if the publicity that would accompany such a proceeding can thereby be avoided. Leading writers have recognized that confidentiality of investigations and hearings by the Commission is essential to its success. (Mosk v. Superior Court (1979) 25 Cal.3d 474, 491–492 [159 Cal.Rptr. 494, 601 P.2d 1030]; see Adams v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1994) 8 Cal.4th 630, 646–648 [34 Cal.Rptr.2d 641, 882 P.2d 358].)

(3) To these ends, the Commission's rule 102 provides that, except as stated in that rule, all nonpublic papers and proceedings are absolutely confidential.[4] (4) These are the exceptions: If public reports concerning a Commission proceeding result in substantial unfairness to the judge involved in the proceedings, the Commission may issue a statement of clarification. (Rule 102(d).) Upon completion of an investigation, the Commission may disclose to the complainant that it has found no basis for action, or determined not to proceed, or taken appropriate corrective action, "the nature of which shall not be disclosed," or has publicly admonished, censured, removed, or retired the judge. (Rule 102(e).) When the Commission receives information concerning a threat to the safety of any person, that information may be provided to the person threatened and to law enforcement. (Rule 102(f).) Information revealing possible criminal conduct by a judge or former judge may be released to prosecuting authorities. (Rule 102(g).) When a judge or former judge consents to the release of records to a public entity, those records may be released. (Rule 102(h).) Upon written request, information may be disclosed to appointing authorities (governors, the President, the Commission on Judicial Appointments). (Rule 102(i), (j).) There may be limited disclosure to the State Bar and the Chief Justice about retired judges, and to presiding judges about incapacitated judges and about subordinate judicial officers who are the subject of complaints. (Rule 102(k), (l), (m), (n).)

[4] All rule references are to the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance.

(5) None of these exceptions apply here, and there is no exception permitting disclosure to a trial court for in camera review or at all.

C.

Davidson's Pitchess motion and subpoena duces tecum asked for all sustained complaints alleging that Judge Schwartz had engaged in any acts of judicial misconduct, including but not limited to the complaint Davidson himself had submitted to the Commission, plus the names and addresses of all the complaining parties, and the "full record of discipline imposed on Judge Schwartz as the result of any and all investigations resulting from any such sustained complaints of alleged judicial misconduct." Two hearings were held at which the trial court (Judge Barreto) viewed the Commission's records as relevant because there "might be a declaration from Judge Schwartz himself" that might "constitute an admission that the ruling [o]n the [Penal Code section] 1538.5 motion was based upon evidence outside of the record of [that] motion."

The trial court overruled the Commission's objection to an in camera review, and ordered it to disclose to the court under seal "any statement or declaration of Judge Schwartz [made in response to an inquiry by the Commission about Davidson's complaint] so that [the trial court could] review same to see if there's anything discoverable using the type of Pitchess rationale, whether or not there's anything that might be favorable to the defense in [its] effort to seek a new trial." The trial court acknowledged Judge Schwartz's right to be informed when and if disclosure was ordered, but held that he need not be notified about the court's proposed in camera review.

D.

(6) Pitchess does not apply to the Commission on Judicial Performance.

First, Evidence Code section 1040 represents the exclusive means by which a public entity may assert a claim of governmental privilege based on the necessity for secrecy (Pitchess v. Superior Court, supra, 11 Cal.3d at

p. 540), and Evidence Code section 1040 makes it clear that the Commission qualifies for the official records privilege.

Second, we know of no case applying the "relatively relaxed" Pitchess standards of discoverability to anything other than law enforcement personnel records where the privacy rights of individual officers in the contents of their personnel files must be balanced against a criminal defendant's ability to prepare his defense. (People v. Gutierrez (2003) 112 Cal.App.4th 1463, 1473 [6 Cal.Rptr.3d 138]; People v. Mooc (2001) 26 Cal.4th 1216, 1219–1220 [114 Cal.Rptr.2d 482, 36 P.3d 21]; City of Santa Cruz v. Municipal Court (1989) 49 Cal.3d 74, 81–84 [260 Cal.Rptr. 520, 776 P.2d 222].) Even under Pitchess, Evidence Code section 1040 prohibits the disclosure of confidential official records unless the need for disclosure outweighs the necessity for preserving the confidentiality of the information sought. (Shepherd v. Superior Court (1976) 17 Cal.3d 107, 123–125 [130 Cal.Rptr. 257, 550 P.2d 161], overruled on another ground in People v. Holloway (2004) 33 Cal.4th 96, 131 [14 Cal.Rptr.3d 212, 91 P.3d 164]; Marylander v. Superior Court (2000) 81 Cal.App.4th 1119, 1126 [97 Cal.Rptr.2d 439].)

Third, a rule allowing discovery of the Commission's nonpublic records would encourage mischief without a concomitant benefit to a criminal defendant. No prescience is needed to foresee the flood of unfounded complaints that would follow our endorsement of the trial court's unprecedented extension of Pitchess. Any defendant could then submit a real or imagined complaint to the Commission, after which he could demand disclosure of any document provided by the judge in response to the Commission's inquiry about the complaint—thereby making a mockery of the rationale for the Commission's confidentiality rules (to encourage willing participation by witnesses, candor by judges, and to protect judges from the injury that might result from the publication of unexamined and unwarranted complaints by disgruntled litigants or their attorneys, all of which are essential to the Commission's success). (Mosk v. Superior Court, supra, 25 Cal.3d at pp. 491–492.)

Fourth, the order directing the Commission to produce any statements made by Judge Schwartz accomplishes indirectly that which Davidson cannot do directly—that is, question Judge Schwartz about his thought processes in reaching his decision to deny Davidson's motion to suppress evidence. (Cf. Chicago, B. & Q. Ry. Co. v. Babcock (1907) 204 U.S. 585, 593 [51 L.Ed. 636, 27 S.Ct. 326] [jurors cannot be called, even on a motion for a new trial in the same case, to testify to the motives and influences leading to their verdict]; United States v. Morgan (1941) 313 U.S. 409, 422 [85 L.Ed. 1429, 61 S.Ct. 999].)[5]

Fifth, courts in other states with similar commissions have rejected attempted encroachments into their confidentiality rules. (E.g., Garner v. Cherberg (1988) 111 Wn.2d 811 [765 P.2d 1284, 1288] [quashing state Legislature's subpoena duces tecum issued to the Commission on Judicial Conduct, finding that confidentiality of the commission's process was "essential to the preservation of fundamental judicial independence"]; Matter of Stern v. Morgenthau (1984) 62 N.Y.2d 331 [476 N.Y.S.2d 810, 465 N.E.2d 349, 353] [quashing grand jury's subpoena to state's Commission on Judicial Conduct, notwithstanding that discovery was in furtherance of a criminal investigation involving two judges because the "responsibilities of the Commission . . . transcend the criminal prosecution of individuals"].)

Finally, the trial court's in camera review is just as improper as disclosure to Davidson. Because the Commission's records are not discoverable by means of a Pitchess motion, any in camera review would be a wasted effort. More to the point, the superior court judge presiding over the proceedings in which the Commission's confidential records are requested has no more right to see the Commission's records than does any other member of the public. (But see Evid. Code, § 915, subd. (b).)

(7) For these reasons, we conclude the Commission on Judicial Performance's records are confidential and are not subject to discovery by means of a Pitchess motion or subpoena duces tecum. (See People v. Superior Court (Barrett) (2000) 80 Cal.App.4th 1305, 1313–1315 [96 Cal.Rptr.2d 264] [a criminal defendant's discovery rights apply to the prosecution and agencies considered a part of the prosecution team, not to third parties].)

DISPOSITION

The petition is granted, and a peremptory writ of mandate shall issue commanding the trial court to vacate its order of July 23, 2007, and issue new orders denying Davidson's Pitchess motion and quashing the subpoena duces

Private Admonishments

2020

The judge initiated an improper ex parte communication with an individual with an interest in a matter. In a separate matter, the judge improperly barred a witness from consulting with counsel before the witness testified under oath in a proceeding. In that matter, the judge also made remarks reflecting embroilment. In another matter, the judge improperly instructed an attorney to stop filing peremptory challenges in a particular type of case. (Ann. Rept. (2020), Private Admonishment 1, p. 54.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; Disqualification/disclosure/post-disqualification conduct; Ex parte communications; Failure to ensure rights.]

In infraction matters, the judge accepted pleas without advising the parties of their right to confront their accuser and their privilege against self-incrimination, and without calling their cases, although the parties had been ordered to appear in court. The judge's misconduct was aggravated by prior discipline. (Ann. Rept. (2020), Private Admonishment 2, p. 54.) [Failure to ensure rights.]

The judge made false statements to litigants that tended to harm public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary. (Ann. Rept. (2020), Private Admonishment 3, p. 54.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; Demeanor/decorum; On-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

The judge used the judge's court email, which included the judge's judicial title, to advance a personal interest. (Ann. Rept. (2020), Private Admonishment 4, p. 54.) [Off-bench abuse of office/misuse of court information.]

The judge inadvertently used the judge's court email to communicate with opposing parties in a matter over which the judge did not preside. In part, the judge acted as a mediator by seeking to facilitate an agreement between the parties. In part, the judge engaged in the practice of law by acting as an advocate on behalf of one of the parties. (Ann. Rept. (2020), Private Admonishment 5, p. 54.) [Miscellaneous off-bench conduct.]

In a civil case, the judge misused the contempt power, engaged in improper ex parte communication, and abused the judge's authority by recalling the case three times when no issue was pending before the court. The judge also elicited testimony from one of the parties in the absence of the other party, and instructed one party to report the other party's conduct to law enforcement. (Ann. Rept. (2020), Private Admonishment 6, p. 54.) [Abuse of contempt/sanctions; Ex parte communications; Failure to ensure rights; On-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

During a campaign for judicial office, the judge engaged in violations of the Political Reform Act. (Ann. Rept. (2020), Private Admonishment 7, p. 54.) [Improper political activities.]

During a campaign for judicial office, the judge engaged in violations of the Political Reform Act. (Ann. Rept. (2020), Private Admonishment 8, p. 54.) [Improper political activities.]

The judge maintained an email account and social media accounts with identifying information that cast doubt on the judge's capacity to act impartially. The judge posted a comment on social media that constituted an improper use of the judge's title and position to promote the pecuniary interest of another. The judge's misconduct was aggravated by prior discipline. (Ann. Rept. (2020), Private Admonishment 9, p. 54.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; Improper business, financial or fiduciary activities.]

2019

The judge improperly questioned an attorney about a peremptory challenge, engaged in conduct that appeared retaliatory and reflected embroilment, and failed to recuse when required. The judge also made discourteous remarks (some of which included profanity) in several cases, some of which involved pro per litigants. The judge also made comments that gave the appearance of prejudgment. (Ann. Rept. (2019), Private Admonishment 1, p. 34.) [Demeanor/decorum; Disqualification/disclosure/post-disqualification conduct.]

The judge made discourteous comments about a criminal defense attorney that could reasonably be expected to impair the attorney-client relationship. The judge threatened to incarcerate an attorney without a legal basis, and made comments that conveyed the appearance of bias. (Ann. Rept. (2019), Private Admonishment 2, p. 34.) [Abuse of contempt/sanctions; Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; Demeanor/decorum.]

In several matters, the judge made discourteous comments to attorneys and litigants, and, in one matter, improperly injected the judge's personal experience. The judge's misconduct was aggravated by prior discipline. (Ann. Rept. (2019), Private Admonishment 3, p. 34.) [Demeanor/decorum.]

The judge engaged in improper ex parte communications with a criminal defendant and with a criminal defendant's attorney. The judge also spoke with a criminal defendant outside the presence of the defendant's counsel. In aggravation, the judge was previously disciplined for similar misconduct. (Ann. Rept. (2019), Private Admonishment 4, p. 34.) [Ex parte communications; Failure to ensure rights.]

In numerous matters involving pro per litigants, the judge wrote discourteous, gratuitous comments on form orders. The judge also improperly threatened sanctions. The judge also failed to respect and comply with the law while engaging in off-bench misconduct in the courthouse. (Ann. Rept. (2019), Private Admonishment 5, p. 34.) [Abuse of contempt/sanctions; Demeanor/decorum; Miscellaneous Off-bench conduct.]

2018

The judge failed to provide a party with notice and an opportunity to be heard on a motion, despite counsel informing the judge that there had not been proper notice. In a separate matter, the judge made a sarcastic remark about an attorney. The judge's misconduct was aggravated by prior discipline. (Ann. Rept. (2018), Private Admonishment 1, p. 27.) [Demeanor/decorum; Failure to ensure rights.]

The judge failed to exercise diligence in monitoring social media associated with the judge's name. The judge disregarded court directives regarding the setting of hearings and inappropriately handled a business transaction on the court's behalf. The judge made undignified remarks of an overly personal nature to a member of court staff. The judge engaged in a private conversation with an attorney that created the appearance of impropriety. (Ann. Rept. (2018), Private Admonishment 2, p. 27.) [Administrative malfeasance/improper comments, treatment of colleagues and staff; Demeanor/decorum; Ex parte communications; Improper political activities; Off-bench abuse of office/misuse of court information.]

The judge improperly accepted gifts from an attorney, and failed to make proper disclosure of one of the gifts on the judge's FPPC Form 700. The judge also failed to disclose certain contacts with that attorney. The judge failed to disclose or disqualify when two other attorneys with whom the judge had personal relationships appeared before the judge. (Ann. Rept. (2018), Private Admonishment 3, p. 27.) [Disqualification/disclosure/post-disqualification conduct; Gifts/loans/favors/ticket-fixing.]

The judge improperly accepted a gift from an attorney, and failed to make any disclosure of that gift when that attorney appeared before the judge. The judge failed to disclose or disqualify when another attorney with whom the judge had a personal relationship appeared before the judge. (Ann. Rept. (2018), Private Admonishment 4, p. 27.) [Disqualification/disclosure/post-disqualification conduct; Gifts/loans/favors/ticket-fixing.]

The judge made remarks that gave the appearance that the judge was trying to dissuade an attorney from filing a statement of disqualification for cause. The judge's remarks and handling of the matter reflected poor demeanor and gave the appearance of bias and embroilment. (Ann. Rept. (2018), Private Admonishment 5, p. 27.) [Demeanor/decorum; Disqualification/disclosure/post-disqualification conduct.]

The judge improperly denied a fee waiver, where eligibility was clear, and thereby denied a litigant the right of access to the courts. On different dates, while presiding over a small claims calendar, the judge made discourteous remarks to litigants. The judge's misconduct was aggravated by prior discipline. (Ann. Rept. (2018), Private Admonishment 6, p. 27.) [Demeanor/decorum; Failure to ensure rights.]

The judge conveyed the impression that candidates for a nonjudicial public office were in a special position to influence the judge, and lent the prestige of the judicial office to advance the pecuniary or personal interests of the candidates. The judge also permitted one candidate to convey the impression that the candidate was in a special position to influence the judge. (Ann. Rept. (2018), Private Admonishment 7, p. 27.) [Off-bench abuse of office/misuse of court information.]

During different hearings in a matter, the judge made comments that were undignified and discourteous, and made other comments that would reasonably be perceived as reflecting bias and prejudice toward a particular class. (Ann. Rept. (2018), Private Admonishment 8, p. 28.) [Bias/appearance of bias toward a particular class; Demeanor/decorum.]

The judge engaged in an act of dishonesty in a writing that was not related to court administration or the adjudication of a case. (Ann. Rept. (2018), Private Admonishment 9, p. 28.) [Miscellaneous Off-bench conduct.]

In entering a recusal order, the judge included information about a litigant that was gratuitous and not completely accurate. The judge's misconduct was aggravated by prior discipline. (Ann. Rept. (2018), Private Admonishment 10, p. 28.) [Disqualification/disclosure/post-disqualification conduct.]

On the record during proceedings, the judge mentioned information received ex parte about one of the litigants, without providing that litigant an opportunity to be heard. The judge made gratuitous and discourteous remarks in open court. The judge created the appearance of prejudgment and lack of impartiality by describing personal experiences on the record. (Ann. Rept. (2018), Private Admonishment 11, p. 28.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; Demeanor/decorum; Ex parte communications.]

2017

In multiple family law cases, the judge made discourteous remarks to counsel and to self-represented litigants. In one case, the judge made comments that suggested prejudgment and embroilment. The judge also failed to allow a litigant to present evidence and to accord that litigant a full right to be heard. The judge also appeared not to have undertaken the preparation necessary to preside over the matter. (Ann. Rept. (2017), Private Admonishment 1, p. 23.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; Demeanor/decorum; Failure to ensure rights.]

In multiple criminal cases, the judge failed to advise defendants of their right to court-appointed counsel and the right against self-incrimination before questioning them. The judge also made an improper independent investigation of the facts in one of the cases. (Ann. Rept. (2017), Private Admonishment 2, p. 23.) [Ex parte communications; Failure to ensure rights.]

In multiple family law matters, the judge made remarks to litigants that were discourteous and sometimes undignified. On one occasion, the judge improperly threatened a litigant. The judge failed to recuse from a case in which the judge's disqualification was required by law. The judge also engaged in improper political activity at the courthouse. The discipline included additional conditions. (Ann. Rept. (2017), Private Admonishment 3, p. 23.) [Demeanor/decorum; Disqualification/disclosure/post-disqualification conduct; Improper political activities; On-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

A judge engaged in an abuse of authority by making an appointment not permitted by law and in violation of a litigant's rights without affording the litigant notice and an opportunity to be heard. The judge also failed to comply with disclosure requirements for judicial campaign contributions. (Ann. Rept. (2017), Private Admonishment 4, p. 23.) [Disqualification/disclosure/post-disqualification conduct; Failure to ensure rights; On-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

A judge engaged in a course of conduct that violated canon 4F, which prohibits a judge from acting as an arbitrator or mediator or otherwise performing judicial functions in a private capacity unless expressly authorized by law. (Ann. Rept. (2017), Private Admonishment 5, p. 23.) [Miscellaneous Off-bench conduct.]

Without any matter pending before the court, a judge issued an order purporting to exempt an individual from a particular regulation. (Ann. Rept. (2017), Private Admonishment 6, p. 23.) [On-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

A judge used the court's email and mailing address in connection with business activities unrelated to court business. The judge also misused the prestige of office in communicating with law enforcement about a matter not related to official court business. (Ann. Rept. (2017), Private Admonishment 7, p. 24.) [Misuse of court resources; Off-bench abuse of office/misuse of court information.]

A judge engaged in improper charitable activities and improper political activity. (Ann. Rept. (2017), Private Admonishment 8, p. 24.) [Improper political activities; Miscellaneous Off-bench conduct .]

A judge made repeated remarks about female attorneys that were discourteous and unjudicial. (Ann. Rept. (2017), Private Admonishment 9, p. 24.) [Demeanor/decorum.]

A judge issued an order that a judge knew was beyond the judge's lawful authority for an improper purpose. (Ann. Rept. (2017), Private Admonishment 10, p. 24.) [On-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

A judge engaged in conduct that could reasonably be perceived as bias or sexual harassment. The judge also misused court resources. The judge displayed a lack of candor during the investigation of the judge's conduct. The discipline included additional conditions. (Ann. Rept. (2017), Private Admonishment 11, p. 24.) [Administrative malfeasance/improper comments/treatment of colleagues and staff; Bias/appearance of bias toward a particular class; Demeanor/decorum; Misuse of court resources; Sexual harassment/inappropriate workplace gender comments.]

A judge engaged in decisional delay in two matters and submitted five false salary affidavits (Ann. Rept. (2017), Private Admonishment 12, p. 24.) [Decisional delay/false salary affidavits .]

A judge's orders, denying a criminal defendant a fundamental right, reflected embroilment and appeared to retaliate against the defendant. (Ann. Rept. (2017), Private Admonishment 13, p. 24.) [Failure to ensure rights; On-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties .]

2016

A judge initiated an ex parte communication with a prosecutor regarding the merits of anticipated motions and settlement prospects in a criminal case pending before the judge. In another case, the judge made comments at sentencing that gave the appearance that the judge rejected probation department recommendations based on considerations outside the record. (Ann. Rept. (2016), Private Admonishment 1, p. 26.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; ex parte communications.]

A judge's treatment of a criminal defense attorney gave rise to an appearance of embroilment. Without an adequate legal basis, the judge set a hearing for an order to show cause re contempt against the attorney, but then failed to follow the procedures required for an order to show cause. When the attorney filed a motion to disqualify the judge for cause, the judge improperly questioned witnesses and argued with the attorney about the facts alleged in the motion. (Ann. Rept. (2016), Private Admonishment 2, p. 26.) [Abuse of contempt/sanctions; disqualification/disclosure/post-disqualification conduct; bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class.]

During Marsden hearings, the judge made comments that conveyed that the judge had a special relationship with defense counsel and made discourteous remarks about the prosecutor that gave the appearance of a lack of impartiality. The judge exceeded the scope of the authorization for ex parte communications in a Marsden hearing by discussing the merits of the case and the defense, stating negative opinions about the governing law, and giving advice to the defendant. In another case, the judge threatened to revoke a defendant's pro per status without sufficient grounds and handled the defendants complaints about access to the law library without giving the defendant the opportunity to have the matter fairly adjudicated. The judge also disparaged the defendant for representing himself. (Ann. Rept. (2016), Private Admonishment 3, p. 26.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; failure to ensure rights; ex parte communications; demeanor/decorum.]

In multiple criminal cases, the judge failed to disclose a social relationship with the prosecutor. In a traffic matter, the judge did not schedule a hearing to settle the statement on appeal until seven months after the proposed statement was filed, in violation of the rule of court that requires the court to promptly set a hearing date. (Ann. Rept. (2016), Private Admonishment 4, p. 27.) [Disqualification/disclosure/post-disqualification conduct; decisional delay/false salary affidavits.]

A judge made a disparaging remark to a defendant and appeared to be reacting punitively by refusing to recall a bench warrant or allowing the defendant's attorney to be heard about bail. In other cases, the judge made gratuitous, discourteous remarks to prosecutors. (Ann. Rept. (2016), Private Admonishment 5, p. 27.) [Demeanor/decorum; failure to ensure rights; on-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

During a pretrial hearing, the judge threatened to relieve defense counsel without adequate grounds. The judge also made statements that highlighted defense counsel's lack of experience and that were likely to undermine the attorney-client relationship. In another case, the judge's demeaning remarks in open court about a defense attorney who was not in court gave the appearance of retaliation. (Ann. Rept. (2016), Private Admonishment 6, p. 27.) [Demeanor/decorum; on-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties; failure to ensure rights.]

A judge misused the prestige of office in connection with a personal legal matter in a manner that gave the appearance that the judge was seeking to advance the judge's personal interest. (Ann. Rept. (2016), Private Admonishment 7, p. 27.) [Off-bench abuse of office/misuse of court information.]

During remarks delivered prior to the start of calendars, the judge made derogatory comments about small claims litigants and the small claims process and repeatedly announced an arbitrary time limit for presentation of cases, which gave the impression that litigants should not expect a full and fair opportunity to be heard. (Ann. Rept. (2016), Private Admonishment 8, p. 27.) [Demeanor/decorum; bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class.]

A judge submitted information ex parte to the reviewing court about a case decided by the judge. (Ann. Rept. (2016), Private Admonishment 9, p. 27.) [Ex parte communications.]

A judge used a court clerk for personal business and gave instructions to the clerk which could reasonably be construed as a directive to issue an order in a matter from which the judge was disqualified. The judge failed to fulfill continuing professional obligations to a former client. While under investigation by the commission, the judge approached the clerk about the investigation in a manner that carried the potential to improperly influence the clerk. (Ann. Rept. (2016), Private Admonishment 10, p. 27.) [Misuse of court resources; miscellaneous off-bench conduct; administrative malfeasance/improper comments, treatment of colleagues and staff.]

A judge signed and submitted a letter to a sentencing judge on behalf of a defendant, whom the judge knew personally. (Ann. Rept. (2016), Private Admonishment 11, p. 27.) [Off-bench abuse of office/misuse of court information.]

2015

A judge engaged in various off-bench activities which created an appearance of bias, cast reasonable doubt on the judge's capacity to act impartially or otherwise created an appearance of impropriety. Some activities also involved a misuse of court resources. The judge failed to avoid nepotism. The judge accepted a gift from a lawyer that did not fall within an exception in the Code of Judicial Ethics, which also created an appearance of impropriety and gave the impression that the attorney was in a special position to influence the judge. The judge also failed to disclose certain discounts as gifts on the judge's Statement of Economic Interests. (Ann. Rept. (2015), Private Admonishment 1, p. 23.) [Administrative malfeasance/improper comments, treatment of colleagues and staff; bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; gifts/loans/favors/ticket-fixing.]

In multiple dependency proceedings over an extended period, a judge made rude and demeaning remarks to parents, social workers, and lawyers. In one case, the judge made a remark suggesting that the judge was considering matters outside of the court record. In another matter, the judge made comments improperly suggesting that where a victim's allegations of sexual abuse are standing alone and disputed, they are presumptively insufficient to establish abuse. (Ann. Rept. (2015), Private Admonishment 2, p. 23.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; demeanor/decorum.]

Without any involvement of a prosecutor, a judge added criminal contempt charges to a defendant's misdemeanor cases after the defendant failed to surrender to jail to serve the defendant's sentence. After a peremptory challenge was filed, the judge recused from the cases but reassigned the cases to another judge, rather than sending them to the presiding judge for reassignment, as required by statute. (Ann. Rept. (2015), Private Admonishment 3, p. 23.) [Disqualification/disclosure/post-disqualification conduct; on-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

A judge created an appearance of impropriety by publicly discussing a "hypothetical" case that was virtually identical to a case pending before the judge. During another public presentation, the judge made remarks that created the appearance of bias against a particular group of people, and disclosed confidential information. In a civil case, the judge made statements about an attorney when dismissing an order to show cause re: sanctions that gave the appearance that the judge was embroiled in the matter. (Ann. Rept. (2015), Private Admonishment 4, p. 23.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; comment on a pending case; miscellaneous off-bench conduct; off-bench abuse of office/misuse of court information.]

A judge failed to respect criminal defendants' right to counsel by questioning them directly when they had counsel or had the right to have counsel appointed. The judge also allowed a defendant in a criminal matter to serve as interpreter for a co-defendant, even though the individual was not qualified. (Ann. Rept. (2015), Private Admonishment 5, p. 24.) [Failure to ensure rights.]

A judge failed to issue a decision on a submitted matter for 190 days. During the period that the case was under submission for more than 90 days, the judge twice signed salary affidavits stating that the judge had no matters under submission for more than 90 days. (Ann. Rept. (2015), Private Admonishment 6, p. 24.) [Decisional delay/false salary affidavits.]

A judge failed to make reasonable efforts to keep informed about the judge's personal financial interests and failed to disqualify from multiple cases while the judge held stock worth over $2,000 in a party. (Ann. Rept. (2015), Private Admonishment 7, p. 24.) [Disqualification/disclosure/post-disqualification conduct.]

In two criminal cases, the judge made remarks to defendants at sentencing that improperly injected religion into the proceedings. (Ann. Rept. (2015), Private Admonishment 8, p. 24.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class.]

After the Court of Appeal reversed a criminal conviction, the judge who had presided over the trial sent the prosecutor an ex parte email that was apparently intended to influence the prosecution to seek review in the Supreme Court. (Ann. Rept. (2015), Private Admonishment 9, p. 24.) [Ex parte communications.]

A judge made rude and sarcastic remarks to an attorney, in open court and, in the presence of the attorney's client, threatened to relieve the attorney as counsel and report the attorney to the State Bar, when the attorney sought to continue a preliminary hearing on the day of the hearing (without advance notice to prosecution) and contended that the attorney was unable to proceed. (Ann. Rept. (2015), Private Admonishment 10, p. 24.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; demeanor/decorum.]

A defendant appeared before the judge with counsel and submitted forms to plead guilty to DUI. The judge dismissed the case on the court's own motion, contrary to law, and made remarks creating the impression that the judge was dismissing the case based upon the defendant's occupation. (Ann. Rept. (2015), Private Admonishment 11, p. 24.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; on-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

2014

In pretrial and jury trial proceedings in a criminal case involving a pro per defendant, the judge made comments disparaging the defendant and the defendant's defense, made a statement reflecting bias against pro per defendants, and sometimes appeared to assume a prosecutorial role in questioning the defendant. In another criminal case, the judge engaged in a pattern of discourteous treatment toward defense counsel, and asked a witness a question that created the appearance that the judge was not impartial and was biased against the defendant. (Ann. Rept. (2014), Private Admonishment 1, p. 21.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; demeanor/decorum.]

After a prospective juror failed to return to court during jury selection, the judge held the juror in contempt without giving the juror an opportunity to explain or apologize. There were aggravating factors. (Ann. Rept. (2014), Private Admonishment 2, p. 21.) [Abuse of contempt/sanctions.]

A judge made a gratuitous disparaging remark about a defendant in a criminal matter. There were aggravating factors. (Ann. Rept. (2014), Private Admonishment 3, p. 21.) [Demeanor/decorum.]

In numerous cases, mostly involving pro per litigants, the judge injected the judge's personal views or made remarks that were discourteous or created the appearance that the judge was acting as an advocate or lacked impartiality. There were mitigating factors, including corrective measures taken by the judge to change the judge's behavior. (Ann. Rept. (2014), Private Admonishment 4, p. 21.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; demeanor/decorum.]

A judge threatened to report an attorney to the State Bar without a valid basis. In another case, the judge failed to disclose information relevant to the issue of disqualification. The judge also left court early on multiple occasions to play sports. (Ann. Rept. (2014), Private Admonishment 5, p. 21.) [Non-performance of judicial functions/attendance/sleeping; disqualification/disclosure/post-disqualification conduct; on-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

A judge issued a restraining order in a confidential matter without jurisdiction over the restrained individual and without affording due process. The judge later engaged in an improper discussion of the matter with a non-party. In another case, the judge made a comment that conveyed the impression that a defendant's employer was in a position to influence the judge. In other proceedings, the judge made discourteous remarks to litigants or to counsel. (Ann. Rept. (2014), Private Admonishment 6, p. 21.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; demeanor/decorum; on-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

Without jurisdiction, a judge required an attorney to appear in the judge's courtroom for an unauthorized proceeding, at which the judge failed to advise the attorney of the nature of the proceeding or of the attorney's rights. (Ann. Rept. (2014), Private Admonishment 7, p. 21.) [Failure to ensure rights; on-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

A judge issued what was tantamount to a restraining order against an individual over whom the judge lacked jurisdiction, without providing the individual notice or an opportunity to be heard. At a later hearing at which the order was rescinded, the judge made a statement that created the appearance that the judge was requiring a party to accept responsibility for the restrained individual's future conduct in exchange for rescinding the restraining order. The judge also made a remark at the hearing reflecting gender bias. (Ann. Rept. (2014), Private Admonishment 8, p. 21.) [Bias/appearance of bias toward a particular class; failure to ensure rights; on-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

A judge's handling of an administrative matter gave rise to an appearance of partiality. (Ann. Rept. (2014), Private Admonishment 9, p. 21.) [Administrative malfeasance/improper comments, treatment of colleagues and staff; bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class.]

2013

A judge displayed poor demeanor toward counsel and embroilment, and assumed a prosecutorial role in various criminal proceedings. The judge made demeaning and discourteous remarks to a defendant and made undignified remarks about court personnel. The judge also criticized a jury's verdict, in violation of canon 3B(10). (Ann. Rept. (2013), Private Admonishment 1, p. 20.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; demeanor/decorum; sexual harassment/inappropriate workplace gender comments.]

A judge made demeaning and sarcastic remarks to counsel during trial. There were aggravating factors. (Ann. Rept. (2013), Private Admonishment 2, p. 20.) [Demeanor/decorum.]

A judge failed to timely decide multiple family law matters that had been taken under submission. The judge also received salary in violation of law and submitted false salary affidavits while matters were under submission for more than 90 days; however, there was no evidence that any affidavit was knowingly false. There were mitigating factors, including that the judge self-reported the affidavits and most of the delays to the commission. (Ann. Rept. (2013), Private Admonishment 3, p. 20.) [Decisional delay/false salary affidavits.]

A judge used the prestige of office and court resources to advance the pecuniary and personal interests of a relative. (Ann. Rept. (2013), Private Admonishment 4, p. 20.) [Off-bench abuse of office/misuse of court information.]

A judge responded to the filing of peremptory challenges against another judge in a manner that appeared retaliatory. The judge engaged in political activity on behalf of a candidate for a nonjudicial office that was contrary to canon 5; the activity also involved abuse of the prestige of office. (Ann. Rept. (2013), Private Admonishment 5, p. 20.) [Disqualification/disclosure/post-disqualification conduct; improper political activities; off-bench abuse of office/misuse of court information.]

When the defendant's attorney announced ready for trial, the judge made a remark about sentencing that created the appearance that the judge was attempting to coerce a plea. There were aggravating factors. (Ann. Rept. (2013), Private Admonishment 6, p. 20.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class.]

A judge directed court staff to place the court's official certification on a document that was not a court record, to help a relative. (Ann. Rept. (2013), Private Admonishment 7 p. 20.) [Misuse of court resources; off-bench abuse of office/misuse of court information.]

2012

A judge independently conducted online investigations and considered information not part of the record and not properly subject to judicial notice. The judge also relied on and drew inferences from this information before giving the parties notice or an opportunity to be heard, thereby prejudging the matter. (Ann. Rept. (2012), Private Admonishment 1, p. 24.) [Failure to ensure rights; ex parte communications.]

While presiding over a family law matter, a judge made remarks that failed to promote public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary. For example, the judge suggested that newer judges made rulings on the basis of whom they do not like, rather than on the merits. The judge also made other remarks that were undignified or discourteous. (Ann. Rept. (2012), Private Admonishment 2, p. 24.) [Demeanor/decorum.]

On the date that a dissolution trial was scheduled to resume, a judge who was soon to be transferred, declared a mistrial without taking the bench. The judge did not give the parties, who were present and ready to proceed, the opportunity to be heard on this issue. Prior to this date, the parties had not been informed of the possibility of a mistrial, and the case had been pending before the judge for over three years. (Ann. Rept. (2012), Private Admonishment 3, p. 24.) [Failure to ensure rights.]

A judge disregarded a litigant's right to notice and a hearing and engaged in an abuse of authority when the judge improperly vacated the litigant's fee waiver application on the stated ground that the litigant had counsel. The judge improperly disclosed in open court confidential information submitted in the fee waiver application. The judge also made rude and disparaging remarks in open court about the plaintiff's attorney. The judge also issued a sanctions order that included an order to show cause as to why the sanctions had not been paid, although there had been no failure to pay at that point. (Ann. Rept. (2012), Private Admonishment 4, p. 24.) [Abuse of contempt/sanctions; demeanor/decorum; failure to ensure rights.]

A judge imposed an enhanced sentence based on the judge's belief that a defendant, who had not testified at trial, had lied to defense counsel. There were no facts concerning the defendant's alleged dishonesty in the record at trial. The judge's conduct and remarks at sentencing gave an appearance of retaliation for the defendant's exercise of the right to trial. The judge also routinely locked the courtroom door during arraignments and told a defense attorney that the judge "preferred" that the defense attorney not be present in the courtroom during pro per arraignments. (Ann. Rept. (2012), Private Admonishment 5, p. 24.) [On-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

A judge failed to disclose or to disqualify from post-trial proceedings in a case in which the judge commenced a social relationship with an alternate juror between the verdict and sentencing. In another matter, the judge improperly accused an attorney of misconduct in front of the jury. (Ann. Rept. (2012), Private Admonishment 6, p. 24.) [Demeanor/decorum; disqualification/disclosure/post-disqualification conduct.]

2011

In a family law case, the judge ordered a change of custody at a hearing without prior notice to the parties and failed to rule on one party's request for accommodations under the Americans with Disabilities Act. In another family law case, the judge made inappropriate, overly personal remarks to a child during a chambers interview. The judge improperly sealed the transcript of the chambers interview over the objection of counsel and without complying with court rules governing the sealing of court records. (Ann. Rept. (2011), Private Admonishment 1, p. 23.) [Demeanor/decorum; failure to ensure rights; on-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties; decisional delay/false salary affidavits.]

A judge used sexist and demeaning terms and gestures to female court staff. The judge sent an inappropriate flirtatious email to another female court employee. The judge also used a court secretary to prepare personal correspondence and improperly used judicial stationery for the letters. In one of the letters, the judge abused the prestige of judicial office to advance the personal interests of another. (Ann. Rept. (2011), Private Admonishment 2, p. 23.) [Misuse of court resources; off-bench abuse of office/misuse of court information; sexual harassment/ inappropriate workplace gender comments.]

On the date a criminal case was set for trial, after relieving the defendant's attorney, the judge remanded the defendant for failing to obey the judge's order to be quiet, without following any of the procedures required for contempt. Before new counsel appeared, on the judge's own motion and off the record, the judge increased the defendant's bail significantly, which gave the appearance that the judge was acting out of pique and trying to coerce a guilty plea from the defendant. (Ann. Rept. (2011), Private Admonishment 3, p. 23.) [Abuse of contempt/sanctions; failure to ensure rights.]

After becoming a candidate for judicial office, the judge did not promptly remove endorsements of non-judicial candidates which the judge had made prior to becoming a candidate. When contacted by the State Bar about these endorsements, the judge provided a date on which the judge became a candidate, without ensuring that the date was accurate. The date provided was inaccurate, which created the impression that the judge had promptly removed the improper endorsements. The judge also failed to file the paperwork required by law to begin soliciting campaign contributions. After taking office, to assist an attorney, the judge asked a specialized legal question of a judicial colleague and then forwarded the response to the attorney. (Ann. Rept. (2011), Private Admonishment 4, p. 23.) [Failure to cooperate/lack of candor with regulatory authorities; improper political activities; ex parte communications; off-bench abuse of office/misuse of court information.]

While presiding over two related cases, a judge engaged in a course of conduct that gave the appearance that the judge was embroiled. The judge contacted one litigant at home in the absence of counsel or any representative and discussed the case. The judge contended the parties consented to ex parte communications; however, there was no clear record of the consent of all parties, nor was the consent specific. The judge dismissed one of the proceedings without prior notice to the parties. The judge treated the attorneys who appealed that decision rudely, and made a comment in an order that undermined the integrity of the judicial system. In a separate matter, the judge bought stock in a company while that company was a party in a case pending before the judge, which necessitated the judge's recusal from the case. (Ann. Rept. (2011), Private Admonishment 5, p. 23.) [Demeanor/decorum; disqualification/disclosure/post-disqualification conduct; ex parte communications; failure to ensure rights; bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class.]

A judge publicly commented in news articles on a case pending in another court. The judge also appointed counsel in a case without disclosing a past professional relationship between the judge and counsel, and engaged in an improper ex parte communication with the attorney about the case. The judge also improperly struck a motion to disqualify the judge for cause, and made comments in an order on another disqualification motion that appeared to be false, undermining public confidence in the integrity of the judiciary. (Ann. Rept. (2011), Private Admonishment 6, p. 24.) [Comment on a pending case; disqualification/disclosure/post-disqualification conduct; ex parte communications.]

A judge threatened to order parties and attorneys to appear at monthly settlement conferences if they did not agree to mediation, creating an appearance of coercion. (Ann. Rept. (2011), Private Admonishment 7, p. 24.) [On-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

A judge had a pro per litigant taken into custody without following proper contempt procedures. The judge claimed the litigant had failed to follow an order by the judge, but no clear order was disobeyed. (Ann. Rept. (2011), Private Admonishment 8, p. 24.) [Abuse of contempt/ sanctions.]

A presiding judge failed to take appropriate corrective action after receiving reliable information about serious wrongdoing by another judge on the court. (Ann. Rept. (2011), Private Admonishment 9, p. 24.) [Administrative malfeasance/improper comments, treatment of colleagues and staff.]

A judge issued a peremptory writ of mandate without setting a briefing schedule as required by law, and before the time to respond to the petition had expired. (Ann. Rept. (2011), Private Admonishment 10, p. 24.) [Failure to ensure rights.]

2010

In two civil cases, a judge failed to be patient, dignified and courteous, and engaged in conduct giving rise to an appearance that the judge was not impartial. In one of the cases, the judge made a statement that reflected prejudgment while a party was testifying before the jury. In the other case, the judge made sarcastic and discourteous comments to an attorney at a hearing. Later at the jury trial, the judge chastised a testifying party and that party's expert witness, and made statements that made it appear that the judge was assuming an adversarial role. The judge also delayed decision in four civil cases; delays ranged from a few days to more than three months beyond the 90-day limit. Also, in a number of cases, the judge required jurors to return daily at 10:00 a.m. even though the judge's morning calendar did not finish until late morning and sometimes trial did not resume until after lunch, causing the jurors to wait in the hallway for several hours. (Ann. Rept. (2010), Private Admonishment 1, p. 23.) [Administrative malfeasance/ improper comments, treatment of colleagues and staff; bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; demeanor/decorum; decisional delay/false salary affidavits.]

A judge failed to appreciate limits to the judge's role in certain matters. The judge tried to order a juvenile to court to check up on the juvenile when no case was pending. In another matter, the judge enlisted court staff to drive a juvenile, whose case was pending before the judge, to a medical appointment. The judge also attended the appointment and participated in the execution of a medical release form. In a criminal matter, the judge applauded while sentencing a defendant to prison and encouraged courtroom spectators to wave good-bye. In another criminal case, the judge improperly completed a report for a state agency that only the prosecutor was authorized to complete. (Ann. Rept. (2010), Private Admonishment 2, p. 24.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; miscellaneous off-bench conduct; misuse of court resources; on-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

During restraining order proceedings, a judge ordered the respondent into custody without following any contempt procedures or imposing a sentence for contempt, and improperly kept the respondent in custody for about six hours before conducting a hearing. (Ann. Rept. (2010), Private Admonishment 3, p. 24.) [Abuse of contempt/sanctions.]

A judge engaged in an abuse of authority by issuing an overbroad restraining order. (Ann. Rept. (2010), Private Admonishment 4, p. 24.) [On-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

For over a year, in collection cases in which the defendant had been granted a full or partial fee waiver, a judge maintained a practice of requiring the prevailing plaintiff to pay the defendant's first appearance fee before a judgment would be issued. The appearance fee was then added to the judgment to be recovered from the defendant. There was no legal authority for such fee shifting. (Ann. Rept. (2010), Private Admonishment 5, p. 24.) [On-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

Due to embroilment, a judge failed to appoint a deputy public defender ("DPD") in a case, contrary to law; failed to subsequently disqualify from the DPD's cases; stated, in open court, that the DPD was incompetent; and had an ex parte discussion about a pending case with the DPD's supervisor. (Ann. Rept. (2010), Private Admonishment 6, p. 24.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; demeanor/ decorum; disqualification/disclosure/post-disqualification conduct; ex parte communications; on-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

A judge repeatedly used profanity while being interviewed by a reporter and the profanity appeared in the newspaper article. The judge used profanity with counsel in chambers. (Ann. Rept. (2010), Private Admonishment 7, p. 24.) [Demeanor/decorum.]

A judge delegated responsibility to conduct case management conferences and status conferences to the judge's clerk. On one occasion, the judge used stationery imprinted with the judge's official title and court address to advance the judge's personal interests. The judge also used the judge's official title and court address on the judge's personal checks. (Ann. Rept. (2010), Private Admonishment 8, p. 24.) [Off-bench abuse of office/misuse of court information; on-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

2009

During trial, a judge contacted one of the counsel's supervisors ex parte to criticize the attorney's performance. The judge also threatened to order the court reporter to stop reporting, which would be contrary to a statute requiring that all proceedings be reported. In another matter, the judge shouted at counsel, failed to comply with the law regarding contempt and engaged in an abuse of authority in conducting the contempt proceeding. In a different case, the judge refused to appoint counsel when required to do so by law. In a separate matter, the judge made an inappropriately personal remark to a lawyer. (Ann. Rept. (2009), Private Admonishment 1, p. 18.) [Abuse of contempt/sanctions; demeanor/decorum; ex parte communications; on-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties; failure to ensure rights.]

A judge engaged in inappropriate fundraising efforts on behalf of a candidate for judicial office, that included distribution of written materials that demeaned the judicial office. The judge also used court resources in connection with campaign activities. (Ann. Rept. (2009), Private Admonishment 2, p. 18.) [Improper political activities; off-bench abuse of office/misuse of court information; misuse of court resources.]

A judge sent a letter to a local business on judicial stationery in which the judge complained about the termination of an employee and stated that the court and the judge would no longer use the business. The Commission found that the letter could be perceived as punitive and bullying. (Ann. Rept. (2009), Private Admonishment 3, p. 18.) [Off-bench abuse of office/misuse of court information.]

2008

A judge used demeaning and unduly harsh language toward a pro per litigant seeking a protective order, and told her that she should blame herself if she could not present her case and should hire a lawyer. On another occasion, in open court, the judge used demeaning and unduly harsh language toward a member of court staff and threatened the individual's employment with the court. (Ann. Rept. (2008), Private Admonishment 1, p. 25.) [Demeanor/decorum.]

A judge appeared at court under the influence of intoxicants. The judge engaged in a course of inappropriate and unwelcome conduct toward a member of court staff. The judge retired from office and agreed not to seek judicial office or sit on assignment. (Ann. Rept. (2008), Private Admonishment 2, p. 25.) [Substance abuse; sexual harassment/inappropriate workplace gender comments.]

A judge engaged in multiple displays of improper demeanor including threatening to slap a deputy sheriff and a lawyer. The judge also told an attorney whose client previously had been released on bail that the judge hoped, if the client reoffended while released, the attorney or someone close to the attorney would be the client's next victim. While presiding over a trial, the judge became embroiled, questioning a witness and sustaining objections in a manner that suggested the judge lacked impartiality. The judge agreed to retire and not to seek judicial office or to sit on assignment. (Ann. Rept. (2008), Private Admonishment 3, p. 25.) [Demeanor/decorum; bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class.]

A judge became impatient with a defendant who had not made restitution payments and claimed to lack the ability to pay. The judge ordered the defendant into custody before allowing him to speak and without ascertaining whether the defendant could make the payments. (Ann. Rept. (2008), Private Admonishment 4, p. 26.) [Demeanor/decorum; failure to ensure rights.]

A judge had a witness taken into custody in a manner that suggested retaliation for the witness's assertion of Fifth Amendment rights. The judge did not follow contempt procedures or procedures to have the witness secured for examination. In another matter, the judge failed to be patient, dignified and courteous to an attorney, and the judge improperly threatened to report the attorney to the State Bar in a manner that gave the appearance of retaliation. (Ann. Rept. (2008), Private Admonishment 5, p. 26.) [On-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties; abuse of contempt/sanctions; demeanor/decorum.]

A judge gave oral instructions to jurors, without a court reporter present, and responded to jurors' inquiries in the jury room in the absence of attorneys or the defendant. (Ann. Rept. (2008), Private Admonishment 6, p. 26.) [Ex parte communications; on-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

A judge failed to recuse or disclose on the record various relationships with attorneys appearing before the judge, including an intimate and prior professional relationship with an attorney whose partners were appearing before the judge, a financial connection with the attorneys' law firm, and ownership of real estate with another member of the firm. (Ann. Rept. (2008), Private Admonishment 7, p. 26.) [Disqualification/disclosure/post-disqualification conduct.]

2007

A judge engaged in a practice of reading police reports prior to arraignments in violation of applicable law. The judge engaged in ex parte communications in two cases and displayed inappropriate demeanor, including using profanity in expressing frustration during a bench conference when a case did not settle. In a separate case, the judge exhibited a lack of impartiality towards a pro per criminal defendant and also displayed inappropriate demeanor, including telling the defendant at the end of the proceeding to "Shut up and get out of here, please." (Ann. Rept. (2007), Private Admonishment 1, p. 30.) [Demeanor/decorum; on-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties; ex parte communications; bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class.]

A judge was inconsistent in making disclosures and in disqualification in cases involving the judge's former law partner who was also a close friend. The judge also made inappropriate remarks with sexual overtones to court staff. (Ann. Rept. (2007), Private Admonishment 2, p. 30.) [Disqualification/disclosure/post-disqualification conduct; sexual harassment/inappropriate workplace gender comments.]

A judge delayed in issuing decisions in seven cases over a period of several months. The judge executed three false salary affidavits during this period but stopped executing them when the judge became aware of delays in submitted matters. The judge also failed to disclose information about an out-of-court dispute with a party who appeared regularly before the judge. (Ann. Rept. (2007), Private Admonishment 3, p. 30.) [Disqualification/disclosure/post-disqualification conduct; decisional delay/false salary affidavits.]

A judge made remarks to jurors after trial that constituted improper comment on a pending case. The judge failed to take appropriate corrective action when the judge believed an attorney had engaged in misconduct and also failed to be patient, dignified and courteous in remarks about counsel in the proceeding. (Ann. Rept. (2007), Private Admonishment 4, p. 30.) [Administrative malfeasance; demeanor/decorum; comment on a pending case.]

A judge incarcerated courtroom spectators without following the procedures necessary for the proper imposition of contempt. (Ann. Rept. (2007), Private Admonishment 5, p. 30.) [Abuse of contempt/sanctions.]

In admonishing the defendant in a misdemeanor case about the consequences of not accepting a plea bargain, the judge told the defendant that the judge would immediately remand the defendant into custody to serve the maximum sentence if convicted at trial. After acknowledging the impropriety of the remarks, the judge made similar remarks in two other cases. (Ann. Rept. (2007), Private Admonishment 6, p. 30.) [Failure to ensure rights.]

A judge's comments regarding a pending proceeding violated the prohibition on judges making public comments regarding a pending proceeding or non-public comments that might interfere with a fair trial or hearing. In other matters, the judge failed to disclose the judge's relationship with an attorney and law firm appearing before the judge. The judge also failed to comply with campaign reporting requirements. (Ann. Rept. (2007), Private Admonishment 7, p. 31.) [Comment on a pending case; disqualification/ disclosure/post-disqualification conduct; improper political activities.]

A judge made offensive remarks to counsel and court personnel relating to litigants appearing before the judge. (Ann. Rept. (2007), Private Admonishment 8, p. 31.) [Demeanor/decorum.]

A judge's conduct in public, some of which was alcohol related, demeaned the judicial office. The judge also abused the prestige of judicial office on multiple occasions. The private admonishment was conditioned upon the judge's retirement and agreement not to seek judicial office or assignments. (Ann. Rept. (2007), Private Admonishment 9, p. 31.) [Miscellaneous off-bench conduct; off-bench abuse of office; substance abuse.]

2006

To expedite the calendar, a judge routinely refused to consider own recognizance release of defendants at arraignment in misdemeanor cases, telling defendants not to even ask for one. During the Commission's investigation, the judge ceased that practice. The judge displayed anger and bias and engaged in ex parte communications in a case. The judge then recused, but thereafter communicated with the newly assigned judge and one of the counsel. (Ann. Rept. (2006), Private Admonishment 1, p. 31.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; demeanor/decorum; ex parte communications; disqualification/disclosure/post-disqualification conduct; failure to ensure rights; on-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

A judge's off-bench activities with law enforcement over a period of time might have created the impression that the judge had assumed a law-enforcement role and cast doubt on the judge's capacity to act impartially. (Ann. Rept. (2006), Private Admonishment 2, p. 31.) [Miscellaneous off-bench conduct; bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class.]

A judge was irritated at an attorney's insistence on setting separately a minor case the judge thought should trail a more serious case and dismissed or threatened to dismiss the minor case. When the attorney appealed, the judge contacted the attorney ex parte to discuss the appeal. (Ann. Rept. (2006), Private Admonishment 3, p. 31.) [Ex parte communications; on-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

A judge continued issuing orders finding a waiver of a fundamental right despite an unambiguous Court of Appeal decision, in a prior case presided over by the judge, which prohibited such a waiver. (Ann. Rept. (2006), Private Admonishment 4, p. 31.) [On-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

A judge's e-mail to other judges gave the appearance of ethnic bias in the discharge of administrative responsibilities. (Ann. Rept. (2006), Private Admonishment 5, p. 31.) [Bias/appearance of bias toward a particular class.]

A judge had lunch during trial with a juror in the case. (Ann. Rept. (2006), Private Admonishment 6, p. 31.) [Miscellaneous off-bench conduct.]

A judge berated an attorney in front of the attorney's client, opposing counsel and others in the courtroom, and detained the attorney in the courtroom in excess of the judge's authority. In another matter, after being disqualified from the case, the judge reassigned the case to another judge, an action a disqualified judge is not permitted to take. (Ann. Rept. (2006), Private Admonishment 7, p. 31.) [Abuse of contempt/sanction; disqualification/disclosure/post-disqualification conduct; demeanor/decorum.]

2005

In two matters, a judge failed to disclose on the record the judge's relationship with a party. In orders in which the judge consented to be disqualified from two cases, the judge made gratuitous, harsh comments about the attorneys in the cases. (Ann. Rept. (2005), Private Admonishment 1, p. 25.) [Disqualification/disclosure/post-disqualification conduct.]

A judge's handling of guardianship proceedings gave the appearance of bias in favor of the petitioners, with whom the judge had interacted socially and in volunteer activities for a number of years. (Ann. Rept. (2005), Private Admonishment 2, p. 26.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class.]

After forming the impression during jury voir dire that a potential juror was attempting to avoid jury service, a judge ordered the potential juror, who was not selected for the jury panel, to sit through two days of the trial under threat of a contempt finding and without following contempt procedures. (Ann. Rept. (2005), Private Admonishment 3, p. 26.) [Abuse of contempt/ sanctions.]

After refusing to cooperate with a judicial colleague and a court administrator, a judge defied a directive of the presiding judge of the court concerning a proceeding not pending before the judge. (Ann. Rept. (2005), Private Admonishment 4, p. 26.) [Administrative malfeasance.]

A judge made inappropriate comments and jokes involving sexual conduct and made improper overtures toward court staff and attorneys in the courthouse. The judge failed to disclose a social relationship with an attorney appearing before the judge. The judge also misused court resources. The discipline included additional conditions. (Ann. Rept. (2005), Private Admonishment 5, p. 26.) [Disqualification/disclosure/post-disqualification conduct; sexual harassment/inappropriate workplace gender comments; miscellaneous off-bench conduct; misuse of court resources; off-bench abuse of office; improper business, financial or fiduciary activities.]

A judge's practices at arraignments failed to ensure defendants' rights in a number of respects. The judge interfered with the attorney-client relationship in one matter. The judge also engaged in ex parte communications and delayed in ruling on a submitted matter. (Ann. Rept. (2005), Private Admonishment 6, p. 26.) [Decisional delay/false salary affidavits; failure to ensure rights; ex parte communications.]

2004

After initiating a perjury complaint, a judge gave the appearance of attempting to influence the district attorney's investigation by contacting witnesses and repeatedly contacting the district attorney. (Ann. Rept. (2004), Private Admonishment 1, p. 22.) [Off-bench abuse of office.]

In a criminal matter, a judge had ordered the defendant to appear for trial but then set a hearing on a motion to dismiss the case for violation of the defendant's right to a speedy trial. The hearing was set for a date after the scheduled trial date. The defense attorney assumed that the trial date had been vacated and told the defendant not to appear. The judge issued a bench warrant when the defendant did not appear on the trial date. After the defendant was arrested on the warrant, the judge refused to reinstate the defendant's own recognizance release although the defendant's explanation that he relied on counsel's advice was undisputed. In another matter, the judge remanded a spectator into custody, for allegedly contemptuous conduct, without following any contempt procedures; the spectator was held over the lunch hour. (Ann. Rept. (2004), Private Admonishment 2, p. 22.) [Abuse of contempt/sanctions; on-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

While presiding over a trial, a judge investigated one party's expert witness on the Internet, questioned that party's witnesses in an adversarial manner, and made disparaging and intimidating remarks to and about that party's witnesses and counsel, thereby appearing biased against that party. (Ann. Rept. (2004), Private Admonishment 3, p. 22.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; demeanor/ decorum.]

A judge served as a private arbitrator in violation of canon 4F. In addition, the judge failed to disclose to the parties the extent of the judge's relationship with one party to the arbitration. The judge also failed to report receipt of a campaign contribution as required by law. The judge lacked candor concerning aspects of the judge's conduct in responding to the Commission's investigation. (Ann. Rept. (2004), Private Admonishment 4, p. 22.) [Miscellaneous off-bench conduct; improper political activities; failure to cooperate/lack of candor with regulatory authorities; improper business, financial or fiduciary activities.]

A judge engaged in extensive use of a court computer during court hours over a period of at least two years for a purpose specifically prohibited by court policy. (Ann. Rept. (2004), Private Admonishment 5, p. 22.) [Misuse of court resources.]

A judge made sarcastic, demeaning and intimidating statements to counsel during court proceedings. The judge had been previously disciplined for similar conduct. (Ann. Rept. (2004), Private Admonishment 6, p. 22.) [Demeanor/decorum.]

A judge failed to disqualify in numerous collection matters involving financial institutions that had pending lawsuits against the judge for unpaid debt which were not contested. In mitigation, the judge's rulings did not evidence bias. (Ann. Rept. (2004), Private Admonishment 7, p. 22.) [Disqualification/disclosure/post-disqualification conduct.]

While ruling on a motion, a judge made a number of statements attempting to deflect responsibility for the ruling to another judge. The judge made these statements to avoid displeasing the party against whom the ruling was made. (Ann. Rept. (2004), Private Admonishment 8, p. 22.) [On-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

2003

A judge made sexually suggestive gestures and comments to a court reporter, an employee of the prosecutor's office and a courthouse visitor. The judge behaved offensively in front of court staff. The judge also failed to disclose when a friend and former law partner appeared before the judge, under circumstances that required disclosure but not recusal. The judge also engaged in an ex parte contact with an attorney immediately prior to a hearing at which the attorney appeared before the judge. (Ann. Rept. (2003), Private Admonishment 1, p. 25.) [Demeanor/decorum; disqualification/ disclosure/post-disqualification conduct; ex parte communications; sexual harassment/ inappropriate workplace gender comments.]

A judge's remarks concerning litigants in two separate matters displayed bias and offensive demeanor. (Ann. Rept. (2003), Private Admonishment 2, p. 25.) [Bias/ appearance of bias toward a particular class; demeanor/decorum.]

2002

In one civil matter, the judge ordered a party's spouse, over whom the judge did not have authority, to appear to defend the party's excuse for being absent. The judge also displayed prejudgment through flattering and solicitous comments to a witness who was testifying in the proceedings. In another case, the judge failed to follow the statutory requirements for due process in conservatorship proceedings, engaged in ex parte communication, displayed bias against an attorney, and made an appointment of counsel despite the counsel's obvious conflict of interest. In a third matter, the judge made remarks evidencing prejudgment and imposed sanctions without affording notice, a hearing, or a statement of reasons. (Ann. Rept. (2002), Private Admonishment 1, p. 22.) [Abuse of contempt/sanctions; ex parte communications; on-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties; failure to ensure rights; bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class.]

In four juvenile dependency matters, the judge violated the parents' due process rights. In one case, the judge removed siblings of a dependent child from their parent's custody at a six-month review hearing without prior notice or the filing of a supplemental dependency petition. In another matter, the judge issued orders affecting parental rights without notice to the affected parent and without making the findings regarding notice that are required by law. In another case, the judge ordered custody of a child transferred from one parent to the other without notice and without a finding that the child was a dependent of the court. In another case, the judge ordered the removal of a child from the custodial grandparents without notice to the parents or the grandparents and without affording them a reasonable opportunity to be heard on the matter. After institution of formal proceedings by the Commission, the judge retired and stipulated to a private admonishment, which the judge agreed could be made available to the public. The judge also agreed not to serve as a judge in the future by appointment or assignment. (Ann. Rept. (2002), Private Admonishment 2, p. 22.) [Failure to ensure rights.]

A judge failed to recuse or to fully disclose information relevant to the question of disqualification. The judge also received improper gifts from attorneys and engaged in off-bench activities that raised an appearance of partiality. In addition, the judge sent a letter on judicial stationery that did not concern official court business and that detracted from public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary. (Ann. Rept. (2002), Private Admonishment 3, p. 22.) [Disqualification/disclosure/post-disqualification conduct; gifts/loans/favors/ticket-fixing; miscellaneous off-bench conduct; off-bench abuse of office; bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class.]

A judge failed to disclose a past attorney-client relationship with an attorney appearing before the judge. In aggravation, the judge previously had received an advisory letter for a similar failure to disclose. (Ann. Rept. (2002), Private Admonishment 4, p. 22.) [Disqualification/disclosure/post-disqualification conduct.]

A judge initiated an angry and profane confrontation with a member of court staff on courthouse property. On a different occasion, the judge berated another member of court staff in open court. (Ann. Rept. (2002), Private Admonishment 5, p. 22.) [Demeanor/ decorum.]

A judge was convicted of a misdemeanor offense that did not involve alcohol, controlled substances or moral turpitude. (Ann. Rept. (2002), Private Admonishment 6, p. 22.) [Non-substance abuse criminal conduct.]

2001

A judge's off-bench conduct undermined public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary. In addition, in a matter over which the judge had presided, the judge made comments that appeared to criticize the jury after its verdict. (Ann. Rept. (2001), Private Admonishment 1, p. 19.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; miscellaneous off-bench conduct.]

During a trial, the judge made comments to the jury reflecting bias about the case. In another matter, the judge abused the judge's authority in an order involving payment of fees. In a third matter, the judge improperly threatened an attorney with contempt. (Ann. Rept. (2001), Private Admonishment 2, p. 19.) [Abuse of contempt/sanction; bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; on-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

In two separate civil matters, the judge made remarks during court proceedings that disparaged the litigants and counsel. Some remarks appeared to advocate one side of the case, and some remarks appeared to reflect bias against a particular class; some of the remarks had been made in the presence of the jury. In a third matter, the judge demeaned a potential juror. (Ann. Rept. (2001), Private Admonishment 3, p. 19.) [Demeanor/ decorum; bias/appearance of bias toward a particular class; bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class.]

A judge delayed in ruling on four matters and executed an inaccurate salary affidavit. (Ann. Rept. (2001), Private Admonishment 4, p. 19.) [Decisional delay/false salary affidavits.]

At arraignment on a failure to appear, the judge proceeded without appointed counsel despite the defendant's statements that he wanted counsel. The judge made comments that disparaged the defendant's version of the case and fostered the appearance that the judge was attempting to pressure the defendant into pleading guilty. (Ann. Rept. (2001), Private Admonishment 5, p. 19.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; demeanor/decorum; on-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties; failure to ensure rights.]

2000

A judge attempted to engage the judge's clerk in questionable financial transactions that would have involved substantial sums of money and were intended to benefit the judge. (Ann. Rept. (2000), Private Admonishment 1, p. 20.) [Improper business, financial or fiduciary activities.]

A judge's response to an inquiry from the Commission lacked candor. The judge misinformed a member of court staff concerning the employee's obligation to speak with the Commission and appeared to be attempting to influence the employee's interview with the Commission. (Ann. Rept. (2000), Private Admonishment 2, p. 20.) [Failure to cooperate/lack of candor with regulatory authorities.]

A judge was arrested for driving under the influence and convicted following a plea of no contest. In mitigation, the judge was cooperative with the police, self-reported to the presiding judge and to the Commission, and issued a public statement expressing embarrassment and remorse. The Commission's investigation revealed no evidence of an on-going alcohol problem. (Ann. Rept. (2000), Private Admonishment 3, p. 20.) [Alcohol or drug related criminal conduct.]

A judge delayed in deciding two matters and improperly signed salary affidavits. In response to the Commission's inquiry, the judge offered defenses that the judge later conceded were disingenuous and misleading. (Ann. Rept. (2000), Private Admonishment 4, p. 20.) [Decisional delay/false salary affidavits; on-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties; failure to cooperate/lack of candor with regulatory authorities.]

A judge used and threatened to use excessive force to control litigants. (Ann. Rept. (2000), Private Admonishment 5, p. 20.) [On-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

A judge engaged in a pattern of erratic and inappropriate conduct toward court personnel and attorneys appearing before the judge. (Ann. Rept. (2000), Private Admonishment 6, p. 20.) [Miscellaneous off-bench conduct; sexual harassment/inappropriate workplace gender comments; off-bench abuse of office; bias/appearance of bias toward a particular class; demeanor/decorum; misuse of court resources.]

1999

In a number of cases, a judge inappropriately introduced religion into the proceedings, creating the appearance that the judge's rulings were influenced by the judge's personal religious views. (Ann. Rept. (1999), Private Admonishment 1, p. 21.) [Bias/appearance of bias toward a particular class.]

A judge conducted a proceeding in such an informal manner that some of the participants were unaware that the judge would rule on the matter at that time; consequently, they did not introduce evidence and testimony. The judge – not wearing the judicial robe – sat at counsel table with the litigants and informally explored their positions. (Ann. Rept. (1999), Private Admonishment 2, p. 21.) [Failure to ensure rights.]

A judge made improper use of court resources and displayed a lack of candor in responding to the Commission's inquiries about the judge's conduct. (Ann. Rept. (1999), Private Admonishment 3, p. 21.) [Failure to cooperate/lack of candor with regulatory authorities; misuse of court resources.]

1998

On the judge's own initiative and after being informed that the action was contrary to law, a judge reduced a misdemeanor charge under circumstances which created the appearance that the judge had acted for the purpose of depriving the defendant of a jury trial and representation by court appointed counsel. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Private Admonishment 1, p. 26.) [Failure to ensure rights; on-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

After receiving an advisory letter from the Commission for similar conduct, a judge displayed a weapon in open court, causing some observers to be concerned or fearful. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Private Admonishment 2, p. 26.) [Demeanor/decorum.]

A judge failed to observe high standards of conduct in the judge's personal, off-bench activities which undermined confidence in the integrity of the judiciary. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Private Admonishment 3, p. 26.) [Miscellaneous off-bench conduct.]

Abuse of Contempt/Sanctions

The judge failed to follow required contempt procedures and made a litigant attend a contempt hearing that the court lacked the jurisdiction to hold. (Ann. Rept. (2019), Advisory Letter 1, p. 34.)

The judge threatened to impose fees and costs to improperly attempt to deter a litigant from making a good faith legal argument. (Ann. Rept. (2019), Advisory Letter 2, p. 34.)

A judge imposed a sanction not authorized by law for an attorney's failure to appear. (Ann. Rept. (2014), Advisory Letter 1, p. 21.)

After a court proceeding, the bailiff asked if a court spectator had recorded the proceeding. The spectator denied having done so. The judge ordered the spectator taken into custody; the individual was handcuffed and detained briefly. The judge then questioned the individual about recording the proceedings, without advising that contempt was being contemplated. The judge apologized to the spectator at a later date, and reported the incident to the commission. (Ann. Rept. (2013), Advisory Letter 1, p. 21.)

At a settlement conference in a family law case, after learning of misconduct by an attorney in the handling of discovery in the case, a judge sanctioned the attorney without providing the attorney notice or an opportunity to be heard. (Ann. Rept. (2012), Advisory Letter 1, p. 24.)

After courtroom spectators had been detained for allegedly speaking with an in-custody defendant, a judge stated to them that they could resolve their case that day for a $150 fine or hire an attorney and have a hearing, which did not constitute an opportunity to be heard prior to imposition of sanctions and appeared coercive. (Ann. Rept. (2012), Advisory Letter 2, p. 25.)

A judge sanctioned an attorney without giving notice and an opportunity to be heard and failed to issue an order setting forth the conduct that gave rise to the sanctions, as required by law. (Ann. Rept. (2012), Advisory Letter 3, p. 25.)

A judge sanctioned an attorney for an alleged direct contempt without complying with statutory or due process requirements for contempt or sanctions. (Ann. Rept. (2012), Advisory Letter 4, p. 25.)

A judge issued two sanctions orders to a party without notice in the manner prescribed by law. (Ann. Rept. (2011), Advisory Letter 1, p. 24.)

A judge granted a motion to set aside a dismissal for excusable neglect by plaintiff's counsel. In the attorney's absence and without providing notice or a hearing, the judge ordered the attorney to pay sanctions. Also, the minute order failed to specify the reason for the sanctions. (Ann. Rept. (2011), Advisory Letter 2, p. 24.)

During a hearing at which the opposing party and counsel were appearing by telephone, a litigant hit the mute button, briefly preventing the opposing party and attorney from hearing or participating in the proceedings. The judge immediately imposed monetary sanctions, without providing the litigant notice or an opportunity to be heard as required by law. (The transcript showed the litigant was seeking to tell the judge privately about the litigant's mental and medical issues that were hampering the litigant's participation in the proceedings.) (Ann. Rept. (2011), Advisory Letter 3, p. 24.)

A judge engaged in an abuse of authority by issuing sanctions without following due process procedures. (Ann. Rept. (2010), Advisory Letter 5, p. 25.)

A judge's conduct in contempt proceedings against counsel gave rise to an appearance of embroilment and lack of impartiality. The judge did not follow procedures required for indirect contempt and failed to disqualify from the contempt proceedings when disqualification was required. In the order to show cause re: contempt and in verified answers to statements of disqualification, the judge made statements that were factually inaccurate and that made allegations against counsel appear more egregious. The advisory was strong. (Ann. Rept. (2010), Advisory Letter 6, p. 25.) [Abuse of contempt/sanctions; disqualification/disclosure.]

A judge held an attorney in contempt without adhering to the substantive and procedural requirements for contempt. The judge was new to the bench. The advisory was strong. (Ann. Rept. (2010), Advisory Letter 7, p. 25.)

A judge held a juror in contempt without following required procedures and displayed sarcasm toward the juror. The judge later improperly remanded the juror to a lockup area before adjudicating further contempt by the juror. (Ann. Rept. (2008), Advisory Letter 16, p. 27.) [Abuse of contempt/sanctions; demeanor/decorum.]

In dealing with an alleged indirect contempt — for conduct not occurring in the court's presence — a judge failed to provide due process by not giving the contemnor proper notice of the contempt charge and appointing counsel as required under the circumstances. The judge immediately remanded the contemnor to serve a jail sentence. The Commission took note that the contemnor was a difficult litigant. (Ann. Rept. (2004), Advisory Letter 8, p. 23.)

A judge engaged in an abuse of authority by imposing additional conditions to a sanctions order after the sanctions were paid. (Ann. Rept. (2003), Advisory Letter 9, p. 27.)

A judge commenced a contempt proceeding without affording the alleged contemnor notice of the charges or the hearing, and gave him an opportunity to be heard only after finding him in contempt. Because the judge had become embroiled, the judge should have recused. (Ann. Rept. (2003), Advisory Letter 14, p. 27.) [Abuse of contempt/ sanctions; bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class.]

A judge failed to follow procedures required to sanction indirect contempt. (Ann. Rept. (2001), Advisory Letter 16, p. 21.)

A judge sanctioned an attorney without affording due process. The sanctions order also failed to provide the requisite details of the attorney's conduct, on which the award of sanctions was based. (Ann. Rept. (1999), Advisory Letter 8, p. 22.)

A judge imposed sanctions on attorneys and pro per litigants without notice or hearing for violation of local delay reduction rules. (Ann. Rept. (1999), Advisory Letter 10, p. 22.)

In a civil case, a judge had a litigant handcuffed for contempt without conducting contempt proceedings. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Advisory Letter 14, p. 27.)

A judge had a prospective juror taken into custody by the bailiff for a short period of time for contempt without following proper contempt procedures. The judge's order of contempt failed to recite the facts constituting contempt. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Advisory Letter 15, p. 27.)

A judge ordered a litigant briefly taken into custody for contempt without conducting contempt proceedings. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Advisory Letter 16, p. 27.)

A judge imposed sanctions against attorneys without notice or hearing in two cases, giving the appearance of embroilment and bias. In a separate matter, the judge considered ex parte communications during the case. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Advisory Letter 17, p. 27.) [Abuse of contempt/sanctions; ex parte communications.]

Without notice or a hearing, a judge ordered sanctions against an attorney who failed to attend a mandatory settlement conference. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Advisory Letter 18, p. 27.)

A judge failed to afford notice and to comply with other requirements for issuance of an order to show cause re: sanctions. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Advisory Letter 19, p. 27.)

Administrative Malfeasance/Improper Comments/Treatment of Colleagues and Staff

A judge failed to take appropriate corrective action when made aware that another judge was engaged in conduct that violated the Code of Judicial Ethics. (Ann. Rept. (2017), Advisory Letter 1, p. 24.)

A presiding judge failed to diligently discharge administrative responsibilities with respect to case management and timely disposition of cases. (Ann. Rept. (2015), Advisory Letter 1, p. 24.)

A judge was absent from court for two days without notice to or permission from the presiding judge. (Ann. Rept. (2015), Advisory Letter 2, p. 24.)

A judge permitted the judge's close relative to remain employed in the judge's courtroom for a substantial period of time. (Ann. Rept. (2014), Advisory Letter 2, p. 22.)

A presiding judge did not properly respond to a complaint about a delay of more than a year in the issuance of a final statement of decision by a commissioner in a family law case. The judge's closing letter to the litigant stated there was no merit to the complaint even though the commissioner had admitted the substantial delay. (Ann. Rept. (2010), Advisory Letter 22, p. 27.)

A supervising judge failed to report a written reprimand of a subordinate judicial officer to the Commission on Judicial Performance as required by California Rules of Court, rule 10.703. (Ann. Rept. (2009), Advisory Letter 12, p. 19.)

A judge who was responsible for the handling of complaints against subordinate judicial officers under California Rules of Court, rule 10.703, failed to ensure the appropriate handling of litigants' complaints about a subordinate judicial officer. (Ann. Rept. (2009), Advisory Letter 13, p. 19.)

A judge who was responsible for handling complaints about subordinate judicial officers under California Rules of Court, rule 10.703, failed to ensure timely responses to litigants' complaints about a subordinate judicial officer. (Ann. Rept. (2009), Advisory Letter 14, p. 19.)

A judge who was responsible for handling complaints against subordinate judicial officers under California Rules of Court, rule 10.703, approved a supervising judge's decision not to report a written reprimand of a subordinate judicial officer to the Commission on Judicial Performance, notwithstanding the reporting requirements of rule 10.703. (Ann. Rept. (2009), Advisory Letter 15, p. 19.)

A judge failed to obtain prior approval from the presiding judge for absences of more than one-half day, as required by California Rules of Court, rule 10.603. (Ann. Rept. (2008), Advisory Letter 15, p. 27.)

A judge participated in the decision to enter into a financial transaction on behalf of the court with an individual who was a close personal friend of the judge and with whom the judge had financial ties. (Ann. Rept. (2005), Advisory Letter 8, p. 27.)

A presiding judge did not respond to a litigant's complaint about a subordinate judicial officer in a timely manner, or to a letter from the Commission inquiring about the status of the matter. (Ann. Rept. (2002), Advisory Letter 1, p. 23.)

A judge failed to take any action when information revealing potential serious wrongdoing by a judicial colleague was before the judge. (Ann. Rept. (2002), Advisory Letter 2, p. 23.)

A judge performed administrative functions in a manner that appeared to reflect abuse of authority and a lack of impartiality. (Ann. Rept. (2001), Advisory Letter 7, p. 20.)

A presiding judge failed to respond in a timely manner to a complaint about a court commissioner. (Ann. Rept. (2000), Advisory Letter 17, p. 22.)

A presiding judge promptly acknowledged and investigated a complaint against a court commissioner and took informal corrective action but delayed five months before notifying the complainant of the outcome of the investigation. (Ann. Rept. (2000), Advisory Letter 18, p. 22.)

A judge was unduly harsh in his treatment of court staff. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Advisory Letter 13, p. 27.)

A judge failed to respond to a complaint against a court commissioner. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Advisory Letter 26, p. 28.)

A judge appeared to retaliate against a court employee for remarks made outside of work by the employee. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Advisory Letter 27, p. 28.)

A supervising judge failed to respond to a complaint against two court commissioners. In another matter, the judge failed to respond timely to a complaint against a court commissioner. There were mitigating circumstances. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Advisory Letter 28, p. 28.)

A supervising judge failed to respond to a complaint about a court commissioner. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Advisory Letter 29, p. 28.)

Bias/Appearance of Bias Toward a Particular Class

During a hearing, the judge made comments that reflected bias toward a particular class. (Ann. Rept. (2018), Advisory Letter 2, p. 28.)

A judge used the court computer to forward to judicial officers a satirical e-mail that promoted negative stereotypes about people from a certain country, apparently realizing that it would be offensive to at least one judge whose ancestors were from that country. (Ann. Rept. (2008), Advisory Letter 6, p. 26.)

A judge's remarks in a public setting appeared to reflect negative racial and ethnic stereotypes. (Ann. Rept. (2007), Advisory Letter 12, p. 32.)

During a chambers proceeding in a civil case, a judge referred to the case by the national origin of the litigants and made other comments which appeared to disparage persons from that nation. The judge acknowledged that the remarks were inappropriate and indicated regret for having made them. (Ann. Rept. (1999), Advisory Letter 14, p. 23.)

A judge's remarks about sexual orientation may have created the appearance of bias. (Ann. Rept. (1999), Advisory Letter 16, p. 23.)

A judge made remarks during a court proceeding that gave the appearance of bias against a litigant based on the litigant's country of origin. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Advisory Letter 32, p. 28.)

Bias/Appearance of Bias Not Directed Toward a Particular Class

During a hearing and jury trial in a criminal matter, the judge made comments to and about a witness that were discourteous and reflected embroilment. (Ann. Rept. (2020), Advisory Letter 1, p. 55.)

During a hearing, the judge improperly interjected a personal story. (Ann. Rept. (2018), Advisory Letter 1, p. 28.)

A presiding judge made remarks about a litigant that created an appearance of bias. (Ann. Rept. (2016), Advisory Letter 1, p. 27.)

During a criminal calendar not staffed by the district attorney's office, the judge made comments to a defendant that gave the appearance that the judge was not impartial and was trying to give the defendant an advantage in the proceedings. In another matter, the judge made statements about refiling a case that appeared to intrude on the district attorney's charging decision. (Ann. Rept. (2016), Advisory Letter 2, p. 27.)

A judge made remarks that gave the appearance that the judge had prejudged a motion and decided to deny it before it was filed. In another matter, the judge made comments to attorneys that created the impression that the judge believed that an attorney, who was not present, had been deliberately untruthful in an unrelated case. (Ann. Rept. (2014), Advisory Letter 3, p. 22.)

A judge's off-bench activities gave rise to an appearance of impropriety and cast reasonable doubt on the judge's capacity to act impartially. (Ann. Rept. (2014), Advisory Letter 4, p. 22.)

A judge usurped the prosecutorial role and gave the appearance of bias when the judge required a defendant to plead guilty to an uncharged misdemeanor failure to appear in order to resolve pending charges. There were mitigating factors. (Ann. Rept. (2014), Advisory Letter 5, p. 22.)

A judge's treatment of a witness gave the appearance that the witness had special access to the judge or that the judge was coaching the witness. (Ann. Rept. (2014), Advisory Letter 6, p. 22.)

A judge's off-bench activities gave rise to an appearance of impropriety and cast reasonable doubt on the judge's capacity to act impartially. (Ann. Rept. (2014), Advisory Letter 7, p. 22.)

A judge's remarks at sentencing created the appearance that the sentence was based in part on considerations not relevant to sentencing, such as the defendant's ethnicity or family's national origin. The judge also made sarcastic remarks directed to the defendant's parents. (Ann. Rept. (2014), Advisory Letter 8, p. 22.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; demeanor/decorum.]

A judge's social media activities created an appearance of impropriety and an appearance of partiality. (Ann. Rept. (2014), Advisory Letter 9, p. 22.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; disqualification/disclosure/post-disqualification conduct.]

During a jury trial with a difficult pro per criminal defendant, the judge made a number of statements in the presence of the jury to the effect that the defendant was misrepresenting facts and was attempting to manipulate the proceedings; this created an appearance of lack of impartiality. (Ann. Rept. (2011), Advisory Letter 4, p. 24.)

During a traffic calendar, the judge announced that the judge wanted to meet with the police officers privately. When one of the traffic defendants expressed concern about the meeting, the judge called the defendant a demeaning name. The judge previously had met with law enforcement supervisors about their ticketing practices and presentation of evidence, which gave the appearance of alignment with law enforcement. (Ann. Rept. (2011), Advisory Letter 5, p. 24.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; demeanor/decorum.]

During a telephonic appearance, a pro per inmate plaintiff was able to hear the judge and the opposing counsel, but they could not hear the inmate and believed the inmate was not on the line. The judge made remarks that created the appearance the judge was coaching counsel about responding to the inmate's legal position. The judge also made a remark about the inmate's case being no different from other inmate cases, suggesting stereotyping of inmates' cases. (Ann. Rept. (2011), Advisory Letter 6, p. 25.)

In setting a probation violation hearing, a judge told the probationer that the judge was going to send the probationer to prison, and made other remarks that reflected prejudgment and a lack of impartiality. (Ann. Rept. (2010), Advisory Letter 1, p. 24.)

During the lengthy criminal trial of an obstreperous pro per defendant, a judge made disparaging and demeaning comments to the defendant and made improper threats, sometimes in the presence of the jury, in an attempt to control the defendant. At one point, the judge ordered the out-of-custody defendant placed in a holding cell without following proper procedures. The judge engaged in conduct suggesting assumption of a prosecutorial role rather than that of an impartial arbiter. The advisory was strong. (Ann. Rept. (2010), Advisory Letter 2, p. 24.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; demeanor/decorum; failure to ensure rights; abuse of contempt.]

After learning that a defendant's probation had terminated, a judge made several remarks that reflected embroilment, including asking the prosecutor to "keep tabs" on the defendant. The judge also failed to promote public confidence in the impartiality of the judiciary by suggesting that the judge would not hear challenges to an order the judge had signed when the judge lacked jurisdiction. (Ann. Rept. (2010), Advisory Letter 3, p. 25.)

After a preliminary hearing, a judge ordered a defendant to undergo drug testing in a manner that suggested that the judge was assuming a law enforcement role rather than that of a neutral magistrate. The judge engaged in an ex parte communication with a sheriff's deputy about the testing. The advisory was strong. (Ann. Rept. (2010), Advisory Letter 4, p. 25.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; ex parte communications.]

While meeting with counsel in chambers, a judge professed dislike of one parent in a dependency matter just prior to a hearing regarding custody. (Ann. Rept. (2009), Advisory Letter 4, p. 19.)

Before conducting a hearing directed by the Court of Appeal, a judge made angry remarks to counsel that suggested prejudgment and a lack of impartiality, for example, "Let the Court of Appeal reverse." (Ann. Rept. (2008), Advisory Letter 4, p. 26.)

In a civil matter, a judge appeared to display deference to the defendant, who was a celebrity. When counsel for the plaintiff brought the plaintiff's concerns to the judge's attention, the judge overreacted and displayed a lack of patience and dignity in responding to counsel. (Ann. Rept. (2008), Advisory Letter 5, p. 26.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; demeanor/decorum.]

A judge, who had just ordered an arrest warrant and increased bail, suggested to the police officer that the judge should be contacted if the defendant later appeared to be about to make bail. While the judge appeared to be motivated by concern for public safety, the judge's conduct created the appearance of embroilment and lack of impartiality. (Ann. Rept. (2008), Advisory Letter 7, p. 26.)

A judge, while presiding over post-trial proceedings, made comments about the parties and the prospects of settlement that reflected embroilment and created an appearance of lack of impartiality. (Ann. Rept. (2008), Advisory Letter 8, p. 27.)

A judge made remarks suggesting bias against counsel that appeared to be based on off-bench comments made by another judicial officer about the attorney. The judge made additional remarks that were sarcastic and demeaning. (Ann. Rept. (2007), Advisory Letter 10, p. 32.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; demeanor/decorum.]

In a dependency matter, a judge made remarks demonstrating bias and remarks that failed to demonstrate patience, dignity and courtesy. (Ann. Rept. (2007), Advisory Letter 11, p. 32.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; demeanor/decorum.]

A judge's off-bench conduct might have created the impression that the judge had assumed a law enforcement role, and cast doubt on the judge's capacity to act impartially. The judge expressed contrition. (Ann. Rept. (2006), Advisory Letter 15, p. 33.) [Miscellaneous off-bench conduct; appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class.]

A judge assigned to a criminal case predicted that the defendant would be convicted and made disparaging comments about the defendant's case that reflected a lack of impartiality and suggested prejudgment. (Ann. Rept. (2004), Advisory Letter 4, p. 23.)

A judge's comments gave the appearance that the judge was biased and embroiled and had prejudged a contempt matter that was to be heard at a later date and the likely sanction. (Ann. Rept. (2004), Advisory Letter 5, p. 23.)

In a civil matter, a judge fraternized with one of the litigants during trial recesses by conversing and examining one of the trial exhibits with the litigant. (Ann. Rept. (2003), Advisory Letter 1, p. 26.)

A judge made disparaging remarks at a hearing about an attorney who was not present but was a member of the firm representing one of the parties. The remarks, made after the attorney had prevailed on a writ, suggested bias against the attorney. (Ann. Rept. (2002), Advisory Letter 3, p. 23.)

A judge's remarks in open court at the outset of a criminal trial about the likelihood that the defendant would be convicted conveyed the appearance of prejudgment and a lack of impartiality. (Ann. Rept. (2002), Advisory Letter 4, p. 23.)

In two juvenile dependency matters, a judge made comments to parents that were demeaning and created the appearance of a lack of impartiality. (Ann. Rept. (2001), Advisory Letter 3, p. 19.)

A judge made rude and disparaging remarks to a witness and improperly raised the prospect of incarceration of the witness in a manner that implied prejudgment. (Ann. Rept. (2001), Advisory Letter 18, p. 21.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; demeanor/decorum.]

A judge made remarks during a sentencing hearing that evidenced embroilment and a lack of impartiality. The judge's highly disparaging remarks reflected the judge's personal view that the case – which had resulted in a conviction – should not have been pursued. (Ann. Rept. (2000), Advisory Letter 5, p. 21.)

A judge's letter to the sheriff urging administrative action against an inmate demonstrated embroilment and a lack of impartiality. (Ann. Rept. (2000), Advisory Letter 6, p. 21.)

A judge used a vulgar expression in response to a party's presentation and stated that the judge would rule regardless of the applicable law, which fostered an appearance of prejudgment and bias. (Ann. Rept. (1999), Advisory Letter 17, p. 23.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; demeanor/decorum.]

In open court, a judge accused an attorney of unethical conduct. The attorney was not present in court when the remarks were made. The judge's comments were unfounded. (Ann. Rept. (1999), Advisory Letter 18, p. 23.)

After a jury returned a verdict of not guilty, but before the jury was discharged, a judge referred to prejudicial and incriminating facts about the defendant, thereby creating the appearance of a lack of impartiality. The judge's remarks also posed the risk of influencing jurors with respect to future jury service. (Ann. Rept. (1999), Advisory Letter 19, p. 23.)

While a case was still pending but no longer before the judge, the judge initiated a private conversation with one of the litigants about the case when the litigant's counsel was not present. The judge made derogatory comments about the litigant's attorney. When information was sought about the contact in other litigation, the judge gave inaccurate information about the incident. (Ann. Rept. (1999), Advisory Letter 20, p. 23.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; disqualification/disclosure /post-disqualification conduct.]

A judge appeared to provide legal assistance outside of court to a pro per litigant in a case pending in another department of the judge's court. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Advisory Letter 31, p. 28.)

During a break in proceedings, a judge left the bench to shake hands in the courtroom with a litigant in the case being tried before the judge. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Advisory Letter 33, p. 28.)

A judge made extraneous remarks to a jury which were determined in a subsequent proceeding to have prejudiced a litigant's rights. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Advisory Letter 35, p. 28.)

A judge's repeated remarks to a jury fostered the appearance of encouraging them to identify with one of the parties. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Advisory Letter 36, p. 28.)

In a criminal case, a judge made disparaging remarks about the defendants and appeared to remand one of the defendants into custody out of pique. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Advisory Letter 37, p. 28.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; demeanor/decorum; on-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

Comment on a Pending Case

A judge commented publicly on pending proceedings involving another judge. (Ann. Rept. (2014), Advisory Letter 10, p. 22.)

A judge gave advice to an attorney friend about a case over which a different judge on the judge's court was presiding. (Ann. Rept. (2014), Advisory Letter 11, p. 22.)

A judge made a comment to a news reporter in support of a federal judge's ruling while the case was on appeal. (Ann. Rept. (2012), Advisory Letter 22, p. 26.)

A judge made public comments about the litigants in a pending, highly publicized case. (Ann. Rept. (2010), Advisory Letter 25, p. 27.)

In a published interview, a judge made comments about a case the judge had heard, which was pending before the Court of Appeal, that violated the prohibition on public comment regarding pending cases. (Ann. Rept. (2009), Advisory Letter 16, p. 20.)

A judge participated in a public meeting where a case pending before the judge and related claims were discussed with both parties to the litigation and non-parties. (Ann. Rept. (2004), Advisory Letter 9, p. 23.)

A judge made an improper public comment on a pending case. (Ann. Rept. (2002), Advisory Letter 5, p. 23.)

A judge made an improper public comment on a pending case. (Ann. Rept. (2001), Advisory Letter 12, p. 20.)

A judge made public comments to the media concerning a pending case. (Ann. Rept. (2000), Advisory Letter 13, p. 22.)

A judge made comments to the media concerning a pending case. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Advisory Letter 23, p. 28.)

A judge made comments to the media concerning a pending case. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Advisory Letter 24, p. 28.)

Decisional Delay/False Salary Affidavits

The judge delayed, beyond statutory deadlines, decisions and rulings on more than one petition for writ of habeas corpus, and received salary payments when one habeas matter was pending and undetermined for more than 90 days. The judge's misconduct was mitigated by various factors, including remedial actions undertaken by the judge. (Ann. Rept. (2020), Advisory Letter 2, p. 55.)

An appellate justice delayed decision in an appeal by finalizing an opinion in the case several years after the case was fully briefed and assigned to the justice. (Ann. Rept. (2020), Advisory Letter 3, p. 55.)

An appellate justice delayed decision in a matter. (Ann. Rept. (2018), Advisory Letter 3, p. 28.)

The judge delayed decision in a matter, which led to related and unnecessary proceedings and a waste of public resources. (Ann. Rept. (2018), Advisory Letter 4, p. 28.)

The judge failed to timely rule on two habeas corpus petitions, without extending the deadlines for ruling for good cause. The judge failed to monitor and supervise the matters to avoid or reduce dilatory practices and delays. (Ann. Rept. (2018), Advisory Letter 5, p. 28.)

In a family law case, a judge's post-trial statement of decision was not issued for six months after briefing concluded. (Ann. Rept. (2017), Advisory Letter 2, p. 24.)

A judge delayed issuing decisions on submitted matters in two family law cases. The decisions were issued approximately 110 days after submission. (Ann. Rept. (2016), Advisory Letter 3, p. 28.)

A judge delayed in ruling on a submitted matter in a family law matter. The decision was issued about 120 days after the matter was submitted. The judge also signed one salary affidavit while the matter was under submission. There was no showing that the affidavit was knowingly false. (Ann. Rept. (2016), Advisory Letter 4, p. 28.)

A judge engaged in substantial delays in ruling on two habeas petitions. The delays were each about seven months long. (Ann. Rept. (2016), Advisory Letter 5, p. 28.)

Instead of either denying or returning post-conviction motions for discovery that were deficient and not properly served, the judge delayed acting on the motions for almost 10 months and then issued an order that did not dispose of any of the motions. (Ann. Rept. (2016), Advisory Letter 6, p. 28.)

A judge signed a prospective salary affidavit declaring that no cause remained pending and undetermined that had been submitted to the judge for decision for a period of 90 days prior to the effective date of the affidavit, at which time an undecided matter would be pending for 92 days. The judge also received judicial salary in violation of law when the same undecided matter was pending for more than 90 days. (Ann. Rept. (2015), Advisory Letter 3, p. 24.)

A judge delayed signing a proposed judgment in a civil case for more than nine months. (Ann. Rept. (2014), Advisory Letter 12, p. 22.)

A judge failed to timely rule on two requests for needs-based attorney's fees. (Ann. Rept. (2013), Advisory Letter 2, p. 21.)

A judge delayed making decisions in numerous cases by issuing orders designated as "tentative rulings" that contained no substantive rulings and only delayed hearing dates or postponed issuance of tentative rulings indefinitely. (Ann. Rept. (2013), Advisory Letter 3, p. 21.)

A judge did not rule on a habeas petition for more than 18 months after the judge received it. Although the underlying case file was missing for most of that time, the commission believed that the judge should have made a greater effort to locate the documents needed to make a ruling given the length of the delay and the fact that the judge was aware of the delay. (Ann. Rept. (2012), Advisory Letter 5, p. 25.)

A judge failed to rule on two motions until 137 days after they were taken under submission. During the period that the matters were under submission for more than 90 days, the judge signed one false salary affidavit and received one month's salary in violation of law. There was no showing that the affidavit was knowingly false. (Ann. Rept. (2012), Advisory Letter 6, p. 25.)

A judge failed to rule promptly on five peremptory challenges. The delays ranged between 12 and 42 days. (Ann. Rept. (2011), Advisory Letter 7, p. 25.)

A judge ruled on a habeas petition 114 days after it was filed; Rule of Court 4.551(a)(3)(A) requires a ruling within 60 days. (Ann. Rept. (2011), Advisory Letter 8, p. 25.)

A judge delayed 10 months in deciding a motion to disqualify another judge, which had been assigned by the Judicial Council. (Ann. Rept. (2011), Advisory Letter 9, p. 25.)

A pro per family law litigant brought a motion to modify child support which was heard the same day as the opposing party's motion to modify spousal support. The judge gave the parties two weeks for further briefing, after which the motions would be deemed submitted. Two months later, the judge decided only the spousal support motion. Two months thereafter, the pro per litigant began inquiring about the child support motion. The judge took no action until three months later, when the judge ordered a further hearing on child support issues. (Ann. Rept. (2010), Advisory Letter 23, p. 27.)

A judge did not to rule on a habeas petition for six months, and failed to rule on two subsequent habeas petitions filed by the same petitioner shortly before the judge's ruling on the initial petition. (Ann. Rept. (2009), Advisory Letter 17, p. 20.)

A judge delayed ruling in a family law matter for almost a year and a half. There were mitigating circumstances. (Ann. Rept. (2007), Advisory Letter 7, p. 31.)

A judge contributed to excessive delay in a habeas matter by ordering 16 extensions of time for filing the return, over a three-year period. Extensions were requested informally by petitioner's assigned counsel; the judge's orders contained no statement of good cause as required. The judge also failed to take action regarding petitioner's claim that petitioner had been abandoned by counsel. (Ann. Rept. (2006), Advisory Letter 6, p. 32.) [Decisional delay/false salary affidavits; failure to ensure rights.]

A judge failed to issue a decision on a custody issue in a family law case for 112 days after telling the parties a decision would be issued within 10 days. (Ann. Rept. (2006), Advisory Letter 7, p. 32.)

A judge did not decide a motion for child support for almost seven and one half months, and did not decide a request for attorneys' fees in the same case for almost a year. (Ann. Rept. (2006), Advisory Letter 8, p. 32.)

A judge failed to rule on a petition for habeas corpus for nearly seven months. (Ann. Rept. (2005), Advisory Letter 9, p. 27.)

At a time when the law required a judge to act on petitions for writs of habeas corpus within 30 days, a judge failed to take action on a petition for almost six months. (Ann. Rept. (2004), Advisory Letter 6, p. 23.)

Although the law now requires a judge to act on petitions for writs of habeas corpus in 60 days, a judge did not act on a habeas petition for 128 days. The judge issued two extensions of time for the court to act that were not met. (Ann. Rept. (2004), Advisory Letter 7, p. 23.)

A judge failed to render a decision on submitted matters in a family law proceeding for six months and had failed to adequately track the matters. (Ann. Rept. (2002), Advisory Letter 6, p. 23.)

In a family law matter, a judge delayed over five months between the filing of objections to a proposed statement of decision and the issuance of a signed statement. (Ann. Rept. (2001), Advisory Letter 2, p. 19.)

A judge delayed more than a year in issuing a final order on attorneys' fees. A tentative decision had issued earlier. (Ann. Rept. (1999), Advisory Letter 26, p. 24.)

A judge failed to rule for 12 months on a submitted matter, despite inquiries from one of the parties. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Advisory Letter 45, p. 29.)

A judge failed to rule on a submitted matter for over 22 months. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Advisory Letter 46, p. 29.)

A judge failed to rule on submitted matters in a family law case – including child and spousal support – for four months. The judge executed one false salary affidavit. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Advisory Letter 47, p. 29.)

A judge failed to review and act on a habeas petition for over six months. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Advisory Letter 48, p. 29.)

Demeanor/Decorum

During a hearing in a case with the litigant present, the judge addressed the litigant's attorney in a manner that was impatient, discourteous, and demeaning. Some of the judge's remarks were of a nature that could be expected to impair the attorney-client relationship. (Ann. Rept. (2020), Advisory Letter 4, p. 55.)

During a hearing, the judge made discourteous comments and also improperly injected the judge's personal experience into the hearing. (Ann. Rept. (2019), Advisory Letter 3, p. 35.)

The judge made a discourteous comment about an attorney. (Ann. Rept. (2019), Advisory Letter 4, p. 35.)

The judge made disparaging remarks about a party appearing before the judge. (Ann. Rept. (2018), Advisory Letter 6, p. 28.)

The judge made discourteous remarks in a raised voice to a witness. (Ann. Rept. (2018), Advisory Letter 7, p. 28.)

The judge made improper remarks concerning the parties' minor child during a custody dispute. (Ann. Rept. (2018), Advisory Letter 8, p. 28.)

The judge displayed anger and directed an intemperate comment to an attorney after the attorney stated an objection to the judge's ruling. (The judge's prompt apology to the attorney for the intemperate comment was a factor in mitigation.) (Ann. Rept. (2018), Advisory Letter 9, p. 28.)

During a hearing, the judge addressed an attorney in a hostile manner with a raised voice. (Ann. Rept. (2018), Advisory Letter 10, p. 28.)

A judge made a gratuitous reference to malpractice in describing an attorney's conduct during a hearing in open court. (Ann. Rept. (2017), Advisory Letter 3, p. 24.)

A judge made discourteous remarks to a self-represented litigant during trial. (Ann. Rept. (2017), Advisory Letter 4, p. 24.)

A judge made sarcastic remarks to a witness during trial in the presence of the jury. (Ann. Rept. (2017), Advisory Letter 5, p. 24.)

A judge made a profane remark while conducting court business. (Ann. Rept. (2017), Advisory Letter 6, p. 24.)

During court proceedings, the judge made discourteous, demeaning and disparaging remarks to an attorney, many of which were likely to undermine the attorney-client relationship. (Ann. Rept. (2017), Advisory Letter 7, p. 24.)

A judge's remark to a self-represented litigant demonstrated a lack of patience, dignity, and courtesy. (Ann. Rept. (2017), Advisory Letter 8, p. 24.)

A judge's remark in open court about an absent attorney demonstrated a lack of patience, dignity, and courtesy. (Ann. Rept. (2017), Advisory Letter 9, p. 25.)

A supervising judge chastised and disparaged an individual for complaining about a subordinate judicial officer's handling of a case because the complainant was not a party to the case. (Ann. Rept. (2016), Advisory Letter 7, p. 28.)

In a family law case, the judge made an undignified and discourteous remark about a pro per litigant's weight during a hearing on the litigant's motion to reduce support payments. (Ann. Rept. (2014), Advisory Letter 13, p. 23.)

A judge made sarcastic remarks ridiculing an unemployed parent who was seeking to reduce child support payments. (Ann. Rept. (2013), Advisory Letter 4, p. 21.)

During a criminal trial, in the presence of the jury, the judge made a remark expressing a negative personal opinion of the defense attorney. (Ann. Rept. (2013), Advisory Letter 5, p. 21.)

In the presence of an attorney's client, a judge criticized the attorney and threatened to refer the attorney to the State Bar, in a manner that appeared to interfere with the attorney-client relationship. (Ann. Rept. (2012), Advisory Letter 7, p. 25.)

A judge tossed small rewards from the bench to drug court participants. The commission did not take issue with giving these items to defendants, but emphasized concern that they be delivered in a manner that does not either demean the defendants or diminish the dignity of the court. (Ann. Rept. (2012), Advisory Letter 8, p. 25.)

A family law judge made denigrating remarks to an attorney, including questioning where the attorney went to law school and in what country the attorney thought the attorney was practicing law. (Ann. Rept. (2012), Advisory Letter 9, p. 25.)

During a hearing, the judge made a denigrating remark about a minor seeking a protective order. (Ann. Rept. (2011), Advisory Letter 10, p. 25.)

A judge made denigrating comments to a pro per litigant who said he was an attorney in another state, but had a different profession here. The judge's comments included a statement that the judge hoped the litigant was better at his other profession than at practicing law. (Ann. Rept. (2011), Advisory Letter 11, p. 25.)

A judge made disparaging comments about an attorney during a hearing on the attorney's motion for attorney's fees and in a tentative ruling that the judge posted on the court's Web site. (Ann. Rept. (2010), Advisory Letter 14, p. 26.)

At the conclusion of a settlement conference in a civil case, a judge made a disparaging remark to the plaintiff, to the effect that the plaintiff should be institutionalized. (Ann. Rept. (2010), Advisory Letter 15, p. 26.)

In a published interview, a judge used profanity, once in reference to a litigant. (Ann. Rept. (2009), Advisory Letter 1, p. 18.)

A judge took two personal cell phone calls in open court during court proceedings and left the bench for at least five minutes for each call, returning without explanation or apology. The judge also made a disparaging remark to a small claims litigant. (Ann. Rept. (2009), Advisory Letter 2, p. 18.)

A judge inappropriately stated in open court, in the presence of an attorney's client, that the judge was considering reporting the attorney to the State Bar. (Ann. Rept. (2009), Advisory Letter 3, p. 18.)

In the presence of the jury, a judge displayed anger and used profanity toward counsel at a side bar conference for not following the judge's rule requiring attorneys to stand to make objections. (Ann. Rept. (2008), Advisory Letter 1, p. 26.)

In front of other jurors, a judge accused two potential jurors of lying to get out of jury duty. (Ann. Rept. (2008), Advisory Letter 2, p. 26.)

A judge was rude to counsel and litigants in three cases. (Ann. Rept. (2008), Advisory Letter 3, p. 26.)

On three occasions, a judge was loud and demeaning in dealing with court personnel. (Ann. Rept. (2007), Advisory Letter 1, p. 31.)

A judge displayed improper demeanor in two cases, making unduly harsh remarks. Some of the remarks concerned a litigant, others involved a witness, and others were directed to an attorney in a settlement conference. The advisory letter was issued after a six-month period of monitoring revealed no additional incidents of poor demeanor by the judge. (Ann. Rept. (2007), Advisory Letter 2, p. 31.)

A judge made sarcastic and demeaning remarks to a pro per litigant in family court, including mocking the litigant's use of a legal term. (Ann. Rept. (2007), Advisory Letter 3, p. 31.)

A judge used profanity in a sidebar conference with counsel while the jury and others were present in the courtroom. (Ann. Rept. (2007), Advisory Letter 4, p. 31.)

A judge made numerous sarcastic and demeaning remarks to both counsel in the presence of the jury in a criminal case. (Ann. Rept. (2007), Advisory Letter 5, p. 31.)

A judge made a vulgar remark to a pro per respondent in a domestic violence matter. (Ann. Rept. (2007), Advisory Letter 6, p. 31.)

A judge used profanity and vulgar language in two cases. The judge expressed contrition and gave assurances that the conduct would not be repeated. (Ann. Rept. (2006), Advisory Letter 1, p. 32.)

At sentencing, a judge made gratuitous remarks disparaging the criminal justice system in other jurisdictions. The remarks were likely to undermine public confidence in the judiciary, prosecutors and law enforcement. (Ann. Rept. (2006), Advisory Letter 2, p. 32.)

In an angry outburst during court proceedings, a judge expressed frustration with the judicial system and made rude and undignified remarks to a pro per family law litigant. (Ann. Rept. (2006), Advisory Letter 3, p. 32.)

During trial, a judge made numerous sarcastic and demeaning remarks to counsel in the presence of the jury. (Ann. Rept. (2006), Advisory Letter 5, p. 32.)

A judge questioned defense counsel in a criminal matter about the attorney's qualifications and competence. The questioning, some of which was demeaning, was done in open court, in front of the defendant and over the objection of defense counsel. (Ann. Rept. (2006), Advisory Letter 13, p. 33.)

A judge's treatment of a juror was not patient, dignified and courteous. (Ann. Rept. (2005), Advisory Letter 10, p. 27.)

In two separate matters a judge was rude and harsh toward lawyers. In another incident, the judge reprimanded a court clerk in a manner that was inappropriate under the circumstances. In another matter, during proceedings in open court, the judge suggested – without sufficient basis – that a lawyer had committed malpractice in advice given to a client; the client was present during the judge's remarks. (Ann. Rept. (2004), Advisory Letter 1, p. 23.) [Demeanor/decorum; administrative malfeasance.]

In a public area adjacent to the courthouse, a judge berated and insulted a law enforcement witness in a case pending before the judge for talking with jurors during a break. Later, in open court, the judge also made insulting remarks to the prosecutor. (Ann. Rept. (2004), Advisory Letter 2, p. 23.)

After determining not to pursue contempt proceedings against an attorney, a judge made humiliating and insulting remarks to the attorney. The judge did not allow the attorney to address the judge's accusations. (Ann. Rept. (2004), Advisory Letter 3, p. 23.)

A judge failed to be "patient, dignified and courteous" toward a medical witness, and improperly threatened the witness with contempt. (Ann. Rept. (2003), Advisory Letter 2, p. 26.) [Demeanor/decorum; abuse of contempt/sanctions.]

While ruling on an attorney's request, the judge's treatment of the attorney was discourteous and callous. (Ann. Rept. (2003), Advisory Letter 3, p. 26.)

A judge made a gratuitous comment about sending a pro per litigant to jail that was likely to be perceived as a threat. (Ann. Rept. (2003), Advisory Letter 4, p. 26.)

During jury selection, a judge made disparaging comments about jury service, court administration, and another judge. The judge also made a discourteous remark to a potential juror. (Ann. Rept. (2002), Advisory Letter 7, p. 23.)

A judge made demeaning remarks and expressed hostility in open court toward an attorney who sought correction of an inaccurate order. On another occasion, the judge made gratuitous and disparaging remarks in open court about an attorney, in the attorney's absence. (Ann. Rept. (2001), Advisory Letter 4, p. 20.)

A judge displayed anger and rudeness toward an attorney in open court. (Ann. Rept. (2001), Advisory Letter 5, p. 20.)

A judge displayed sarcasm and derision in remarks toward a pro-per litigant in a civil harassment matter. (Ann. Rept. (2001), Advisory Letter 6, p. 20.)

A judge made demeaning comments to a pro per defendant that impugned the defendant's intelligence. (Ann. Rept. (2000), Advisory Letter 3, p. 21.)

In questioning prospective jurors about their attitudes concerning race in a criminal trial, a judge repeatedly used a racial epithet and negative stereotypes in reference to the defendant's race, with the defendant's apparent consent. The Commission urged the use of other means to accomplish the judge's stated purpose of ferreting out attitudes of racial bias. (Ann. Rept. (1999), Advisory Letter 6, p. 22.)

A judge made undignified and sexually suggestive comments to defendants in two cases. (Ann. Rept. (1999), Advisory Letter 7, p. 22.)

A judge's comment to a jury appeared unduly harsh and punitive toward the jurors. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Advisory Letter 8, p. 27.)

A judge made an insensitive joking comment in a family law matter. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Advisory Letter 9, p. 27.)

During a court session, a judge made harsh and intimidating comments to one pro per defendant and used inappropriate humor in the judge's remarks to three other pro per defendants. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Advisory Letter 11, p. 27.)

A judge presided over a court trial without wearing a judicial robe, in violation of Government Code section 68110. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Advisory Letter 12, p. 27.)

Disqualification/Disclosure/Post-disqualification Conduct

In two matters, the judge failed to disclose information reasonably relevant to the question of disqualification. (Ann. Rept. (2019), Advisory Letter 5, p. 35.)

After being disqualified, the judge initiated an inappropriate communication about the disqualification. (Ann. Rept. (2017), Advisory Letter 10, p. 25.)

After being disqualified, the judge's contact with another judge created the appearance that the disqualified judge was choosing the successor judge. (Ann. Rept. (2016), Advisory Letter 8, p. 28.)

After being disqualified from a case, the judge responded to an inquiry from the successor judge about the basis for an earlier ruling in the case. (Ann. Rept. (2016), Advisory Letter 9, p. 28.)

Over an extended period, the judge failed to disclose a relative's employment with the district attorney's office when attorneys from that office appeared before the judge. (Ann. Rept. (2016), Advisory Letter 10, p. 28.)

After an attorney filed a disqualification motion, the judge questioned the attorney about the attorney's intention to proceed. (Ann. Rept. (2016), Advisory Letter 11, p. 28.)

A judge failed to disclose a close personal relationship with an attorney who supervised other attorneys appearing before the judge. (Ann. Rept. (2016), Advisory Letter 12, p. 28.)

A judge failed to disclose on the record a relationship with a witness in a case before the judge. (Ann. Rept. (2015), Advisory Letter 4, p. 25.)

A judge failed to recuse from cases in which a public entity was a party despite representation of the public entity by the judge's former law firm within the previous two years. (Ann. Rept. (2015), Advisory Letter 5, p. 25.)

A judge failed to disclose out-of-court activities with attorneys who had cases pending before the judge at the time; the activities were relevant to the issue of disqualification. (Ann. Rept. (2014), Advisory Letter 14, p. 23.)

A judge presided over proceedings without disclosing financial dealings with one of the litigants that may have required disqualification. (Ann. Rept. (2014), Advisory Letter 15, p. 23.)

A judge failed to make reasonable efforts to keep informed of personal financial interests and failed to disqualify from multiple cases involving a corporation in which the judge owned stock valued at over $100,000. (Ann. Rept. (2014), Advisory Letter 16, p. 23.)

A judge failed to disclose in a criminal matter investigated by a law enforcement agency that the judge's close relative was employed by the agency, although the close relative was not involved in the case. (Ann. Rept. (2014), Advisory Letter 17, p. 23.)

A judge failed to disclose on the record in open court that the judge's child works for the local district attorney's office. (Ann. Rept. (2013), Advisory Letter 6, p. 21.)

A judge entered into a financial transaction with an attorney and failed to disqualify when the attorney appeared before the judge or to disclose the pending transaction on the record when members of the attorney's office appeared before the judge. The judge canceled the transaction when questions were raised and reported the conduct to the commission. (Ann. Rept. (2013), Advisory Letter 7 p. 21.)

A judge failed to timely recuse when the judge had a disqualifying financial conflict of interest. (Ann. Rept. (2013), Advisory Letter 8, p. 21.)

A judge failed to timely recuse when the judge had a disqualifying financial conflict of interest. (Ann. Rept. (2013), Advisory Letter 9, p. 21.)

By transferring a new trial motion alleging judicial misconduct during trial to another judge, a judge was disqualified from the case. When the judge later presided over the same case after the second judge ruled on the motion, the judge presided while disqualified. (Ann. Rept. (2012), Advisory Letter 10, p. 25.)

A judge ruled on two habeas petitions relating to a criminal case in which the judge had appeared nine times as a deputy district attorney seven to eight years earlier, including at the change of plea. (Ann. Rept. (2012), Advisory Letter 11, p. 25.)

A judge had a romantic relationship with a deputy district attorney whose colleagues appeared before the judge in criminal cases. The judge did not disclose the relationship on the record at all relevant times. (Ann. Rept. (2012), Advisory Letter 12, p. 25.)

In a criminal case, the judge failed to disclose until the first day of trial that the judge's spouse worked for the district attorney's office. The defendant had made multiple appearances before the judge prior to trial. (Ann. Rept. (2011), Advisory Letter 12, p. 25.)

A judge ruled upon a post-conviction petition without disclosing that the judge was married to the individual who, as district attorney, had prosecuted the petitioner. The judge's conflict was apparent from the file. (Ann. Rept. (2011), Advisory Letter 13, p. 25.)

A judge disclosed to the parties in a civil matter that one of the law firms in the case was representing a member of the judge's family, but did not disclose either that the judge had previously shared office space with the law firm or that the judge had social contacts with one of the firm's partners. (Ann. Rept. (2010), Advisory Letter 24, p. 27.)

A judge failed to disclose a relationship with an attorney appearing before the judge until the end of a hearing, after the judge had granted the relief sought by the attorney's client. (Ann. Rept. (2008), Advisory Letter 12, p. 27.)

A judge observed a defendant committing a misdemeanor. The following day, the judge initiated proceedings – over which the judge improperly presided – to revoke the defendant's own-recognizance release based on the conduct the judge had observed. (Ann. Rept. (2007), Advisory Letter 8, p. 31.)

A judge presided over a litigant's motion to disqualify another judge without the litigant's agreement, in violation of Code of Civil Procedure section 170.3(c)(5). (Ann. Rept. (2007), Advisory Letter 9, p. 32.)

A judge's disclosure of information relevant to the question of disqualification was not made on the record, as required by canon 3E(1) of the Code of Judicial Ethics. (Ann. Rept. (2006), Advisory Letter 9, p. 32.)

A judge failed to disclose a longtime friendship with an attorney appearing before the judge in a family law matter, even after the issue of a possible undisclosed conflict was raised. (Ann. Rept. (2005), Advisory Letter 11, p. 27.)

A judge presided over a hearing on a motion and issued a ruling before disclosing a conflict of interest. The judge then recused from further proceedings. (Ann. Rept. (2002), Advisory Letter 8, p. 23.)

A judge failed to fully disclose on the record the judge's relationship with one of the counsel, and failed to place the parties' waiver of disqualification on the record. (Ann. Rept. (2001), Advisory Letter 14, p. 20.)

A judge responded to a litigant's exercise of a peremptory challenge by criticizing the litigant's attorney and delaying the transfer of the case to the presiding judge for reassignment. (Ann. Rept. (2001), Advisory Letter 15, p. 20.)

A judge failed to recuse when an attorney who was representing the judge in a civil case appeared before the judge. When the attorney appeared before the judge after the attorney withdrew from the case, the judge failed to recuse and did not disclose that the attorney was the judge's former counsel. (Ann. Rept. (2000), Advisory Letter 2, p. 21.)

A judge failed to disclose that the judge was in a business partnership with a member of a law firm whose associate was appearing before the judge and that the partnership received income from the law firm. (Ann. Rept. (1999), Advisory Letter 1, p. 21.)

At sentencing, a judge failed to disclose an association between the judge and the prosecutor and failed to disclose that the judge and the prosecutor had attended a weekend function the week before the sentencing hearing. (Ann. Rept. (1999), Advisory Letter 2, p. 21.)

A judge appeared to retaliate against attorneys who had disqualified the judge. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Advisory Letter 1, p. 26.)

A judge used profanity in open court concerning a litigant's actions. After recusing for bias, the judge continued to preside over a second proceeding involving the same litigant. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Advisory Letter 2, p. 26.) [Demeanor/decorum; disqualification/ disclosure/post disqualification conduct.]

A judge recused and then discussed the case with a judge who subsequently handled the case. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Advisory Letter 3, p. 26.)

While recusing from a case, a judge made comments which were disparaging and unnecessary, creating an appearance of bias and the perception that a hearing was being conducted for a purpose other than the discharge of judicial duties. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Advisory Letter 4, p. 27.)

A judge ruled upon the merits of a motion for the judge's own disqualification in contravention of Code of Civil Procedure section 170.3(c)(5). (Ann. Rept. (1998), Advisory Letter 5, p. 27.)

Ex Parte Communications

The judge had an improper ex parte communication with a potential juror. (Ann. Rept. (2019), Advisory Letter 6, p. 35.)

In a family law matter, the judge had an improper ex parte communication with a mediator. (Ann. Rept. (2019), Advisory Letter 7, p. 35.)

A judge engaged in ex parte communications with a prosecutor concerning a matter pending before the judge. (Ann. Rept. (2017), Advisory Letter 11, p. 25.)

A judge contacted an individual ex parte about a temporary restraining order that the judge had signed, which resulted in the judge's disqualification from further proceedings. (Ann. Rept. (2016), Advisory Letter 13, p. 28.)

A judge engaged in an ex parte meeting with a prosecutor about a pending case. (Ann. Rept. (2016), Advisory Letter 14, p. 28.)

A judge contacted a probation officer ex parte about a report the probation officer had submitted. (Ann. Rept. (2016), Advisory Letter 15, p. 28.)

A judge communicated with the judge who had been disqualified from the case about the basis of an order made by the disqualified judge. (Ann. Rept. (2015), Advisory Letter 6, p. 25.)

Before a pro per defendant was brought into the courtroom for a preliminary examination, the judge permitted the prosecutor and the complaining witness to talk to the judge about the witness's fear of testifying. The judge then encouraged and ordered the witness to testify and made remarks that gave the appearance of lack of impartiality. In addition to engaging in an improper ex parte communication, the judge failed to promptly inform the defendant of the discussion or give the defendant an opportunity to respond, as required by the Code of Judicial Ethics. (Ann. Rept. (2015), Advisory Letter 7, p. 25.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; ex parte communications.]

A judge engaged in an improper ex parte communication. (Ann. Rept. (2014), Advisory Letter 18, p. 23.)

During a hearing in drug court, the judge engaged in a sidebar conference with a deputy district attorney and a representative of a residential drug treatment program. The defendant, who was present in court in custody but whose counsel was not present, was not included. The judge then considered and acted upon the ex parte information. (Ann. Rept. (2013), Advisory Letter 10, p. 21.)

A judge met with two attorneys and discussed a disqualification challenge filed against the judge by another attorney in the case, outside the presence of that attorney. The judge also solicited declarations from the attorneys to be filed in opposition to the disqualification motion. (Ann. Rept. (2012), Advisory Letter 13, p. 25.)

A judge engaged in multiple ex parte communications with attorneys and others while presiding over a criminal case, which ultimately necessitated the judge's recusal from the case. The ex parte communications exceeded the scope and terms of the attorneys' consent. (Ann. Rept. (2011), Advisory Letter 14, p. 25.)

Without counsel present, a judge spoke in chambers with a juror during deliberations in a homicide case. (Ann. Rept. (2010), Advisory Letter 16, p. 26.)

After conducting a hearing and making a ruling, a judge advised a litigant ex parte, through a court clerk, that the litigant could submit additional evidence. The opposing party was not informed of these discussions or that the judge's ruling might be changed. Later that day, the judge changed the ruling based on the judge's ex parte review of the additional evidence. (Ann. Rept. (2010), Advisory Letter 17, p. 26.) [Ex parte communications; failure to ensure rights.]

A judge considered multiple ex parte communications from members of the public, including a message left on a court phone line, while presiding over sentencing in a criminal case. (Ann. Rept. (2009), Advisory Letter 18, p. 20.)

A judge acted on an unnoticed, ex parte motion for continuance of a traffic trial. The defense did not have notice of the motion at any time before it was granted, and had no opportunity to object to the continuance or to have any input into setting a new trial date. (Ann. Rept. (2009), Advisory Letter 19, p. 20.)

A judge participated in an ex parte communication by email with a district attorney about a pending case. (Ann. Rept. (2007), Advisory Letter 13, p. 32.)

A supervising judge signed an order in a case to which the judge was not assigned, at the request of a judicial officer, knowing that the judicial officer was recused from the case. (Ann. Rept. (2006), Advisory Letter 10, p. 32.) [Ex parte communications; failure to ensure rights.]

A judge engaged in an improper ex parte communication about a trial over which the judge was presiding. (Ann. Rept. (2006), Advisory Letter 11, p. 32.)

A judge received information ex parte from one party's attorney and, without notice to the other parties, took action in the case based on that information. (Ann. Rept. (2006), Advisory Letter 12, p. 32.) [Ex parte communications; failure to ensure rights.]

A judge received ex parte information about a pending case. The judge then transmitted the information ex parte in a manner that gave the appearance that the judge had been investigating the case and was not impartial. (Ann. Rept. (2005), Advisory Letter 5, p. 26.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; ex parte communications.]

A judge twice engaged in ex parte communications about a case pending before the judge and failed to promptly disclose the communications. (Ann. Rept. (2005), Advisory Letter 6, p. 26.)

A judge engaged in an ex parte communication. The judge also improperly received confidential information about a person who was the subject of the ex parte communication but who was not present. (Ann. Rept. (2005), Advisory Letter 7, p. 27.) [Ex parte communications; failure to ensure rights.]

Several hours after a judge presided over a hearing in a family law case at which the judge set the respondent's monthly support payments, the respondent's counsel returned to court and told the judge, in the absence of opposing counsel, that the judge had made mistakes in calculating support. Without notifying the petitioner's counsel, the judge issued an order that significantly reduced the respondent's monthly support obligation. (Ann. Rept. (2004), Advisory Letter 11, p. 24.) [Ex parte communications; failure to ensure rights.]

Responding to an improper ex parte communication from a party's attorney, a supervising judge, without notice or a hearing, modified a judgment entered against that party by a pro tem judge. (Ann. Rept. (2004), Advisory Letter 12, p. 24.) [Ex parte communications; failure to ensure rights.]

A judge met ex parte with representatives of the prosecution to discuss a pending motion. (Ann. Rept. (2002), Advisory Letter 9, p. 24.)

A judge initiated an ex parte discussion with a juror in a case tried before the judge while post-trial proceedings were pending. (Ann. Rept. (2001), Advisory Letter 17, p. 21.)

A judge initiated an ex parte discussion with attorneys present in court about a legal issue that was pending in another case before the judge. (Ann. Rept. (1999), Advisory Letter 11, p. 22.)

A judge engaged in ex parte communications with a defendant and his attorney about a possible sentence modification and then – without prior notice to the prosecutor – the judge modified the sentence. (Ann. Rept. (1999), Advisory Letter 12, p. 22.) [Ex parte communications; failure to ensure rights.]

A judge assigned to a case discussed the case with a judge who had been disqualified from the case. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Advisory Letter 20, p. 28.)

A judge denied a motion based on an ex parte communication from a litigant. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Advisory Letter 21, p. 28.)

A judge initiated an ex parte contact with an attorney in a family law matter pending before the judge. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Advisory Letter 22, p. 28.)

Failure to Ensure Rights

The judge failed to comply with procedural requirements for an attorney's motion to withdraw as counsel and denied the client the right to be heard. (Ann. Rept. (2020), Advisory Letter 5, p. 56.)

The judge failed to assure advisement and waiver of fundamental rights before accepting guilty pleas from defendants. (Ann. Rept. (2018), Advisory Letter 11, p. 29.)

The judge entered a proposed order without according all of the parties to the action an opportunity to object and to be heard. (Ann. Rept. (2018), Advisory Letter 12, p. 29.)

A judge renewed a restraining order without notice to the restrained party and an opportunity to be heard. (Ann. Rept. (2017), Advisory Letter 12, p. 25.)

A judge improperly allowed an attorney to be present with a party for a small claims proceeding after earlier advising the party that attorneys were not allowed to appear in small claims. (Ann. Rept. (2016), Advisory Letter 16, p. 28.)

Over a year, the judge repeatedly extended a temporary conservatorship and continued the hearing on the conservatorship petition without ever requiring or receiving a current medical report or capacity declaration or directing that the conservatee be brought to court to be advised of the conservatee's rights. (Ann. Rept. (2016), Advisory Letter 17, p. 28.)

A judge regularly advised traffic defendants that traffic school was not generally available after trial, although judges had made exceptions to this practice. The advisory was strongly worded, pointing out that the law requires a court to base its decision to grant or deny traffic school on the individual circumstances of the case, that attendance should be authorized if the court believes a defendant's circumstances indicate that the defendant would benefit from attending traffic school, and that it is an abuse of discretion to rely on court policy to deny a defendant permission to attend traffic school after trial. The commission pointed out that the court may not punish defendants for exercise of their right to trial or discourage them from exercising their right to trial by telling them they will receive harsher sentences if convicted at trial. (Ann. Rept. (2015), Advisory Letter 8, p. 25.)

The judge, in a small claims trial, believing the plaintiff's evidence was insufficient to prove one theory of recovery, did not allow the plaintiff, whose claim included other theories, to speak at all. (Ann. Rept. (2015), Advisory Letter 9, p. 25.)

During a hearing, a judge disclosed confidential information submitted by one party in connection with an application for a fee waiver in another proceeding, thereby violating the party's right of privacy. The judge relied on the confidential information in making a ruling, without affording the party notice or an opportunity to be heard. (Ann. Rept. (2013), Advisory Letter 11, p. 22.)

A judge's handling of a defendant's motion to discharge privately retained counsel reflected intentional disregard of the applicable law and disregard of the defendant's right to counsel of choice. (Ann. Rept. (2012), Advisory Letter 14, p. 26.)

A judge improperly refused to hold a hearing on a defendant's motion to discharge appointed counsel, under circumstances that reflected prejudgment and disregard of the litigant's full right to be heard according to law. (Ann. Rept. (2012), Advisory Letter 15, p. 26.)

A judge delayed turning over to counsel a note from a juror pertaining to possible juror misconduct. (Ann. Rept. (2011), Advisory Letter 15, p. 25.)

During a criminal trial, the judge summarily precluded the defense from presenting surrebuttal evidence, improperly ruling that the defense has no such right. The judge displayed impatience toward the defense attorney when the attorney objected. (Ann. Rept. (2011), Advisory Letter 16, p. 25.) [Failure to ensure rights; demeanor/decorum.]

At sentencing after a negotiated plea, the judge failed to afford the crime victim the opportunity to present a victim impact statement in person in open court, as required by law. The judge had read a victim impact statement submitted earlier. (Ann. Rept. (2011), Advisory Letter 17, p. 26.)

A judge with administrative responsibilities adopted procedures for filings by pro per litigants that raised an appearance that the litigants received unequal treatment based on their indigency or lack of counsel. (Ann. Rept. (2011), Advisory Letter 18, p. 26.)

While presiding over a misdemeanor probation violation, the judge refused the defendant's attorney's request to be heard on the issue of bail, denied the defendant bail and remanded the defendant into custody. (Ann. Rept. (2011), Advisory Letter 19, p. 26.)

A judge to whom a case had been assigned for all purposes told the attorneys that their case was not going to trial because the judge settles every case, which appeared coercive and intended to deny their clients' right to trial. (Ann. Rept. (2011), Advisory Letter 20, p. 26.)

A judge heard that a judgment debtor, who had failed to appear at a debtor's examination and therefore was subject to arrest, was going to be in the courthouse at a particular time on other business. Without notice to the debtor, the judge had a clerk telephone the plaintiff's attorney ex parte and set another debtor's examination at the time the debtor was expected to be at court. While the debtor was at the courthouse, the judge had the debtor escorted to the judge's courtroom for the examination. (Ann. Rept. (2010), Advisory Letter 18, p. 26.) [Ex parte communications; failure to ensure rights.]

A judge allowed a member of the judge's family to attend a juvenile dependency calendar in the judge's courtroom, although the litigants were entitled to have proceedings be confidential. (Ann. Rept. (2010), Advisory Letter 19, p. 26.)

In a criminal case, a judge refused to hear a motion to suppress that was properly before the judge. (Ann. Rept. (2009), Advisory Letter 8, p. 19.)

A judge imposed an illegal and unconstitutional probation condition that reflected disregard of fundamental rights. (Ann. Rept. (2009), Advisory Letter 9, p. 19.)

During the hearing on an application for a restraining order, a judge denied the petitioner's right to be heard by improperly refusing to consider the statutorily permitted grounds on which the application was based, namely, a pattern of harassing conduct. (Ann. Rept. (2009), Advisory Letter 10, p. 19.)

A judge excused a represented party from the stand without offering the opposing party, a pro per litigant, an opportunity for cross-examination; the judge had offered the represented party's counsel the opportunity to cross-examine the pro per litigant. (Ann. Rept. (2009), Advisory Letter 11, p. 19.)

When a criminal defendant's counsel of record failed to appear for trial, the judge said that the defendant was nevertheless going to trial or pleading that day. The defendant pled that day, assisted by another attorney. (Ann. Rept. (2008), Advisory Letter 14, p. 27.)

At arraignment, a judge waived a defendant's right to a speedy trial. The judge gave assurances that the conduct would not be repeated. (Ann. Rept. (2006), Advisory Letter 14, p. 33.)

A judge went forward with a brief hearing in the absence of the pro per defendant. (Ann. Rept. (2005), Advisory Letter 1, p. 26.)

A judge failed to ensure fundamental rights of a witness appearing before the court. (Ann. Rept. (2005), Advisory Letter 2, p. 26.)

A judge failed to ensure fundamental rights of a witness appearing before the court. (Ann. Rept. (2005), Advisory Letter 3, p. 26.)

A judge met ex parte with jurors during deliberations. (Ann. Rept. (2003), Advisory Letter 5, p. 26.)

A judge granted an ex parte application for modification of child visitation without notice of the ex parte application having been given to the affected parent. (Ann. Rept. (2003), Advisory Letter 8, p. 26.)

A judge conducted all or portions of some criminal proceedings without the prosecutor being present. (Ann. Rept. (2001), Advisory Letter 8, p. 20.)

A judge imposed attorney's fees on a defendant represented by the public defender's office without holding a hearing or inquiring regarding ability to pay as required by law. (Ann. Rept. (2000), Advisory Letter 4, p. 21.)

After discovering an error in sentencing, the judge changed details of the disposition of the case without notice to the parties or a hearing. (Ann. Rept. (1999), Advisory Letter 4, p. 22.)

In two cases, a judge terminated parental visitation in violation of the parents' fundamental rights. In one of the cases, the parent did not receive either notice or a hearing. (Ann. Rept. (1999), Advisory Letter 13, p. 23.)

A judge modified a defendant's conditions of probation without notice to the parties. The judge also made a remark which suggested a lack of neutrality. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Advisory Letter 6, p. 27.) [Failure to ensure rights; bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class.]

A judge failed to provide a habeas petitioner with notice and an opportunity to be heard, as required by law, regarding information which the judge was authorized to receive ex parte. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Advisory Letter 25, p. 28.)

Gifts/Loans/Favors/Ticket-fixing

The judge accepted donations in violation of the no-gifts rule. The judge received mitigation as the result of challenging personal circumstances. (Ann. Rept. (2020), Advisory Letter 6, p. 56.)

While serving as a commissioner and before becoming a judge, the judge handled a traffic matter for the relative of an acquaintance without requiring the relative to be present. The disposition was not lenient or otherwise favorable to the relative. (Ann. Rept. (2002), Advisory Letter 10, p. 24.)

A judge ordered the own-recognizance release of the spouse of a member of the judge's staff after discussing the case with the employee and giving advice about the spouse's release. (Ann. Rept. (2000), Advisory Letter 1, p. 21.)

A judge exchanged gifts with a court vendor whose contract was supervised by the judge. There were mitigating circumstances. (Ann. Rept. (2000), Advisory Letter 14, p. 22.)

A judge appointed an attorney with whom the judge had a social relationship; the judge appointed that attorney far more frequently than the judge appointed other attorneys, giving rise to an appearance of favoritism in appointments. On at least one occasion, the judge failed to disclose the judge's relationship with the attorney. (Ann. Rept. (2000), Advisory Letter 15, p. 22.) [Gifts/loans/favors/ticket-fixing; disqualification/disclosure/ post disqualification conduct.]

A judge ordered the own-recognizance release of a professional acquaintance who called the judge personally to request the release. The defendant was released before being booked and visited the judge in chambers after being released, creating an appearance of preferential treatment. (Ann. Rept. (2000), Advisory Letter 16, p. 22.)

A judge directed the jury commissioner to excuse an employee of a friend of the judge from jury duty without following the court's requirements for release from jury duty. (Ann. Rept. (1999), Advisory Letter 5, p. 22.)

A judge improperly interceded with jail officials to help an acquaintance and contacted the judge assigned to the case. (Ann. Rept. (1999), Advisory Letter 24, p. 23.)

Improper Business, Financial or Fiduciary Activities

A judge served as a trustee and attorney-in-fact for a person who was not a member of the judge's family. (Ann. Rept. (2000), Advisory Letter 9, p. 22.)

A new judge failed to ensure that the judge was no longer counsel of record in a number of cases after taking the bench. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Advisory Letter 43, p. 29.)

A new judge failed to ensure that the judge was no longer counsel of record in a pending case. The judge remained counsel of record for a lengthy period after taking the bench. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Advisory Letter 44, p. 29.)

Improper Political Activities

During an election campaign, the judge failed to comply with applicable laws and regulations. (Ann. Rept. (2019), Advisory Letter 8, p. 35.)

The judge misused public resources in connection with a judicial campaign. (Ann. Rept. (2018), Advisory Letter 14, p. 29.)

The judge violated election law reporting requirements. (Ann. Rept. (2018), Advisory Letter 13, p. 29.)

A judge engaged in improper political activity in the courthouse. (Ann. Rept. (2017), Advisory Letter 13, p. 25.)

A judge failed to comply with a Political Reform Act regulation regarding election campaign committees. (Ann. Rept. (2016), Advisory Letter 18, p. 29.)

A judge failed to comply with a Political Reform Act regulation regarding election campaign committees. (Ann. Rept. (2016), Advisory Letter 19, p. 29.)

A judge made a misrepresentation in campaign materials regarding the judge's experience. (Ann. Rept. (2015), Advisory Letter 10, p. 25.)

A judge used the court's email system to send an email to court personnel endorsing a judicial candidate. (Ann. Rept. (2014), Advisory Letter 19, p. 23.)

While a judge was a candidate for judicial office, the judge's campaign materials created a false impression about the judge's prior judicial experience. (Ann. Rept. (2011), Advisory Letter 21, p. 26.)

A judge engaged in improper political activity during the judge's campaign for judicial office by distributing campaign literature on county property. (Ann. Rept. (2010), Advisory Letter 8, p. 25.)

A judge publicly endorsed a candidate for non-judicial office. The judge promptly arranged to have the endorsement removed. (Ann. Rept. (2010), Advisory Letter 9, p. 25.)

A candidate for judicial office misrepresented the qualifications and present position of an opponent in the campaign. (Ann. Rept. (2010), Advisory Letter 10, p. 25.)

A judge's campaign literature misrepresented the judge's professional experience. (Ann. Rept. (2002), Advisory Letter 11, p. 24.)

Miscellaneous Off-bench Conduct

A judge failed to make reasonable efforts to keep informed about the judge's spouse's law firm and failed to disclose required information about the judge's financial interests in the law firm on Statements of Economic Interests filed with the Fair Political Practices Commission over a three-year period. (Ann. Rept. (2012), Advisory Letter 16, p. 26.)

A judge met with an officer seeking issuance of a warrant on a weekend when the judge was serving as duty judge. After the judge signed the warrant, the judge's teenage child expressed interest in accompanying the officer when the warrant was executed. The judge ascertained that it was acceptable to the officer for the judge's child to accompany the officer. The judge's child was thereby able to bypass the ordinary process for going on a police ride-along. (Ann. Rept. (2011), Advisory Letter 23, p. 26.)

A judge's active participation in a civil deposition of the person to whom the judge was engaged created the appearance that the judge was using the prestige of office to benefit that person and was acting as a legal advocate. Although the judge was not identified as a judge at the deposition, both parties knew of the judge's judicial position. When agreeing to testify at trial, the judge failed to exercise diligence to prevent the use of the judge's position and title at trial. The advisory was strong. (Ann. Rept. (2010), Advisory Letter 11, p. 25.)

Under circumstances that warranted inquiry, a judge failed to inquire whether benefits from a lender might have been extended based on the judge's judicial status. The judge also failed to keep informed of the judge's financial interests and failed to accurately report those interests on the judge's Statements of Economic Interests. The advisory was strong. (Ann. Rept. (2010), Advisory Letter 12, p. 25.) [Gifts/loans/favors/ticket-fixing; improper business, financial or fiduciary activities; miscellaneous off-bench conduct.]

The circumstances of a judge's consumption of alcoholic beverages in a bar during court hours created an appearance of impropriety. (Ann. Rept. (2009), Advisory Letter 7, p. 19.)

A judge failed to cooperate with the presiding judge in administrative matters concerning time off from court. (Ann. Rept. (2008), Advisory Letter 13, p. 27.)

A judge circulated an email over the court's computer system that contained offensive material. Recipients of the email included court personnel. (Ann. Rept. (2007), Advisory Letter 15, p. 32.)

A judge sent inappropriate emails, apparently intended as humor, over the court's computer system. Recipients of the emails included court personnel. (Ann. Rept. (2007), Advisory Letter 16, p. 32.)

A judge served in a non-judicial position incompatible with judicial office. (Ann. Rept. (2002), Advisory Letter 12, p. 24.)

A judge smoked in chambers in violation of law and despite being reminded of the prohibition by the presiding judge. (Ann. Rept. (2001), Advisory Letter 10, p. 20.)

A judge engaged in off-bench activities that appeared to denigrate the judicial system and had the potential to undermine juror respect for the court and public confidence in the judicial system. (Ann. Rept. (2000), Advisory Letter 8, p. 22.) [Administrative malfeasance; miscellaneous off-bench conduct; bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class.]

A judge publicly participated in fundraising in violation of canon 4C. The judge also used court resources for the fundraising. (Ann. Rept. (1999), Advisory Letter 23, p. 23.) [Miscellaneous off-bench conduct; misuse of court resources.]

A judge smoked in chambers in violation of law. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Advisory Letter 39, p. 29.)

A judge smoked in chambers in violation of law. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Advisory Letter 40, p. 29.)

A judge smoked in chambers in violation of law. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Advisory Letter 41, p. 29.)

A judge smoked in chambers in violation of law. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Advisory Letter 42, p. 29.)

Misuse of Court Resources

A judge engaged in a pattern of extensive use of court secretaries and other resources for purposes unrelated to court business, the law, the legal system or the administration of justice. (Ann. Rept. (2000), Advisory Letter 7, p. 21.)

Non-performance of Judicial Functions/Attendance/Sleeping

A judge fell asleep during portions of trials. (Ann. Rept. (2017), Advisory Letter 14, p. 25.)

The judge frequently arrived at the courthouse after the judge's calendar was scheduled to start. (Ann. Rept. (2016), Advisory Letter 20, p. 29.)

Due to a lack of diligence, a judge issued an order in excess of the court's jurisdiction. (Ann. Rept. (2016), Advisory Letter 21, p. 29.)

A judge was repeatedly late arriving at court in the morning, over an extended period of time. (Ann. Rept. (2013), Advisory Letter 12, p. 22.)

A judge was habitually late in taking the bench for the morning calendar. (Ann. Rept. (2010), Advisory Letter 26, p. 27.)

A judge handled the multiple cases of a pro per probationer without the files and without ascertaining or reciting the case numbers on the record. The judge failed to implement previously promised action in the cases, including vacating future court dates. This failure, combined with errors by others, led to the probationer's being arrested and incarcerated for more than a week. (Ann. Rept. (2009), Advisory Letter 20, p. 20.)

A judge engaged in activities away from the courthouse during working hours that undermined public confidence in the integrity of the judiciary. (Ann. Rept. (2001), Advisory Letter 1, p. 19.) [Non-performance of judicial functions/attendance/sleeping; miscellaneous off-bench conduct.]

A judge was routinely late taking the bench for morning calendars. (Ann. Rept. (2000), Advisory Letter 10, p. 22.)

A judge engaged in activities away from the courthouse during working hours that undermined public confidence in the integrity of the judiciary. (Ann. Rept. (2000), Advisory Letter 11, p. 22.) [Non-performance of judicial functions/attendance/sleeping; miscellaneous off-bench conduct.]

A judge engaged in activities away from the courthouse during working hours that undermined public confidence in the integrity of the judiciary. (Ann. Rept. (2000), Advisory Letter 12, p. 22.) [Non-performance of judicial functions/attendance/sleeping; miscellaneous off-bench conduct.]

A judge appeared to be sleeping during court proceedings. (Ann. Rept. (2000), Advisory Letter 19, p. 22.)

A judge failed to perform certain assigned judicial duties. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Advisory Letter 49, p. 29.)

A judge failed to perform certain assigned judicial duties. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Advisory Letter 50, p. 29.)

A judge failed to perform certain assigned judicial duties. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Advisory Letter 51, p. 29.)

Off-bench Abuse of Office/Misuse of Court Information

The judge engaged in conduct that raised an appearance of undue influence on court staff. (Ann. Rept. (2019), Advisory Letter 9, p. 35.)

A judge misused the prestige of office to advance the judge's personal interests. (Ann. Rept. (2017), Advisory Letter 15, p. 25.)

A judge misused the prestige of office to advance the personal interests of another person. (Ann. Rept. (2017), Advisory Letter 16, p. 25.)

A judge, while visiting a private building, failed to adhere to a directive from security personnel. (Ann. Rept. (2015), Advisory Letter 11, p. 25.)

A judge participated in the auction of donated goods at a fundraiser and failed to take steps to ensure that the judge's name and title were not used during the auction and in the promotional materials for the fundraiser. (Ann. Rept. (2015), Advisory Letter 12, p. 25.)

A judge failed to observe high standards of conduct in having certain personal material delivered by mail to the judge at the courthouse. (Ann. Rept. (2015), Advisory Letter 13, p. 25.)

A judge invoked the judge's judicial title during a traffic stop. (Ann. Rept. (2015), Advisory Letter 14, p. 25.)

A judge sent a letter to the district attorney concerning problematic conduct by a deputy district attorney. The wording of the letter created the appearance that the judge was not merely taking appropriate corrective action but encouraging the district attorney to reassign the deputy district attorney and/or take disciplinary action against the attorney. The judge sent copies of the letter to other judges and court administrators. (Ann. Rept. (2015), Advisory Letter 15, p. 26.)

A judge served as an auctioneer at a fundraising event, contrary to canon 4C(3)(d). (Ann. Rept. (2013), Advisory Letter 13, p. 22.)

A judge invoked the judicial office while reporting another driver to law enforcement. (Ann. Rept. (2013), Advisory Letter 14, p. 22.)

A judge used judicial stationery to write to a court in another county regarding payment of the judge's traffic ticket because the judge was having trouble getting the court clerk to acknowledge that payment had been made. (Ann. Rept. (2011), Advisory Letter 22, p. 26.)

A judge became involved in litigation in another county concerning a member of the judge's family. The judge filed a complaint with the Commission on Judicial Performance about the judge presiding over the case. The judge's family member thereafter filed a motion to disqualify that judge. The judge who complained gave the family member a copy of the CJP complaint, which clearly indicated the complainant was a judge, to attach to the disqualification motion. (Ann. Rept. (2010), Advisory Letter 13, p. 26.)

A judge used official court stationery to advance a personal business purpose. (Ann. Rept. (2007), Advisory Letter 14, p. 32.)

A judge used stationery bearing the judge's official title for correspondence related to a personal business dispute. (Ann. Rept. (2007), Advisory Letter 17, p. 32.)

A judge sent letters to public officials on judicial stationery concerning a personal dispute. (Ann. Rept. (2002), Advisory Letter 13, p. 24.)

A judge used judicial stationery to obtain an advantage in a personal business matter. (Ann. Rept. (2001), Advisory Letter 9, p. 20.)

A judge used chambers stationery in connection with a personal business dispute. (Ann. Rept. (2001), Advisory Letter 11, p. 20.)

A judge sent two complaint letters to a company regarding its billings, using official court stationery and the judge's title. The language and tone of the letters gave the appearance of trying to obtain special treatment for the judge. (Ann. Rept. (1999), Advisory Letter 22, p. 23.)

On-bench Abuse of Authority in Performance of Judicial Duties

In deciding a matter, the judge made comments giving the appearance of relying on evidence outside the record, based on a personal observation outside of court. (Ann. Rept. (2019), Advisory Letter 10, p. 36.)

A judge threatened an attorney's license to practice law during a court hearing. The client was not present. (Ann. Rept. (2017), Advisory Letter 17, p. 25.)

A judge engaged in an abuse of authority in ordering a defendant physically restrained during court proceedings without the necessary showing. (Ann. Rept. (2016), Advisory Letter 22, p. 29.)

Before the conclusion of a judgment debtor examination, the judge exceeded the court's authority by ordering a self-represented debtor to give the debtor's wallet to the bailiff, who searched it and turned over the money found in the wallet to the judgment creditor. (Ann. Rept. (2015), Advisory Letter 16, p. 26.)

In a child custody proceeding, the judge ordered a grandparent to have no contact with the parties' two minor children, even though the grandparent was not a party to the proceeding and had no notice that a stay-away order was being contemplated. (Ann. Rept. (2014), Advisory Letter 20, p. 23.)

A judge repeatedly abused the judge's authority with respect to the appointment of counsel in criminal cases. (Ann. Rept. (2014), Advisory Letter 21, p. 23.)

After hearing that an attorney had made an unflattering remark about the judge, when the attorney appeared, the judge told the attorney to leave the courtroom and that the attorney could not appear there. The attorney and the judge later resolved the situation. (Ann. Rept. (2014), Advisory Letter 22, p. 23.) [Demeanor/decorum; on-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

After an attorney appeared for a defendant pursuant to Penal Code section 977, which permits a defendant charged with a misdemeanor to appear through counsel, the attorney failed to appear on the next court date. A judge issued a bench warrant for the defendant, notwithstanding the authorization for the attorney to appear on the defendant's behalf and the fact that the defendant had not been ordered to appear. The commission concluded that the judge's conduct involved disregard of fundamental rights and abuse of authority, and was of a nature that could seriously undermine the attorney-client relationship. (Ann. Rept. (2013), Advisory Letter 15, p. 22.)

In dealing with a probationer, the judge engaged in conduct that created the impression that the judge had abandoned the role of impartial judge and had undertaken a law enforcement function. (Ann. Rept. (2013), Advisory Letter 16, p. 22.)

A judge issued a bench warrant for the legal representative of a third party to the case who had received a subpoena duces tecum for the production of documents; the attorney was neither a party nor a personally-served witness, nor had the attorney previously been ordered by the court to appear. When the attorney appeared on the date to which the judge had ordered the warrant held, the judge appeared to impose conditions on the withdrawal of the warrant. Because there was no legal basis to issue the warrant and no reason for the judge to believe that the attorney was properly the subject of a bench warrant, the commission determined that the judge had abused the judge's authority. (Ann. Rept. (2013), Advisory Letter 17, p. 22.)

A judge engaged in abuse of authority in the appointment of counsel. (Ann. Rept. (2013), Advisory Letter 18, p. 22.)

A defendant in a criminal case sought to substitute in new counsel. A judge allowed the substitution but tripled the defendant's bail and remanded the defendant into custody, creating the impression that the judge was punishing the defendant for seeking new counsel or causing a delay in the case, neither of which is a valid basis for raising bail. (Ann. Rept. (2012), Advisory Letter 17, p. 26.)

A judge threatened a defendant appearing for arraignment on a traffic infraction with revocation of the defendant's own recognizance release and remand to custody if the defendant did not enter a plea. Since the defendant was charged only with an infraction, not punishable by jail, the defendant was not subject to being taken into custody. (Ann. Rept. (2012), Advisory Letter 18, p. 26.)

A defendant was brought back into court by law enforcement after a proceeding had been concluded, and was interrogated by the judge without the judge advising the defendant of the nature of the proceeding or advising the defendant of the right to counsel. (Ann. Rept. (2012), Advisory Letter 19, p. 26.)

A judge took action on a matter, contrary to a local court rule adopted in response to statutory and case law. (Ann. Rept. (2012), Advisory Letter 20, p. 26.)

A judge took action on a matter, contrary to a local court rule adopted in response to statutory and case law. (Ann. Rept. (2012), Advisory Letter 21, p. 26.)

A judge occasionally spoke in a language other than English during court proceedings, including while giving criminal defendants group advisements of their constitutional rights. In a civil case, the judge made a ruling based only on speculation that a litigant had not fulfilled a certain procedural requirement, and misstated the law in articulating a different basis for the ruling, thus creating a misleading record. (Ann. Rept. (2011), Advisory Letter 24, p. 26.)

When a judge was notified that an attorney was complaining to the court's executive officer about the court's trial setting practices, the judge ordered the attorney to the judge's courtroom, where the judge chastised the attorney and ordered the attorney to remain there while the judge summoned opposing counsel in one of the attorney's cases that was awaiting trial. That case was not pending before the judge. The advisory was strong. (Ann. Rept. (2010), Advisory Letter 20, p. 26.) [Demeanor/decorum; on-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

At the conclusion of a small claims hearing, a judge engaged in an abuse of authority by ordering one party to stay away from the other party and ordering a party to receive counseling. The advisory was strong. (Ann. Rept. (2010), Advisory Letter 21, p. 26.)

A judge, who was advisor and supervisor of the grand jury, exceeded the judge's authority by sending a letter to individuals who had submitted information and requests to the grand jury, ordering them to "cease and desist" contact with the grand jury on any matter as to which they had been advised that the grand jury no longer needed or desired contact. The letter also advised them that violation of this order could result in sanctions including contempt, which could result in fines or incarceration. (Ann. Rept. (2009), Advisory Letter 5, p. 19.)

A judge issued orders sealing court records without the requisite showing of cause and without following the procedures mandated by law. (Ann. Rept. (2009), Advisory Letter 6, p. 19.)

A judge threatened to terminate the reporting of a juvenile proceeding, contrary to Welfare and Institutions Code section 677 which requires that "all of the testimony and statements and remarks" of the judge and all persons appearing at all juvenile court proceedings be reported. (Ann. Rept. (2008), Advisory Letter 9, p. 27.)

During a probation revocation proceeding, a judge used a bail order for the improper purpose of collecting restitution by setting bail in cash and requiring the bail depositor to sign over the funds deposited as bail to pay restitution. (Ann. Rept. (2008), Advisory Letter 10, p. 27.)

A judge's use of a research attorney to confer with counsel regarding a motion appeared inconsistent with according the parties a full right to be heard and created an appearance of impropriety. (Ann. Rept. (2008), Advisory Letter 11, p. 27.)

During pretrial discussions with counsel, a judge angrily slapped the judge's hand down on the bench; one attorney then left the courtroom. When the attorney returned, the judge had the bailiff remove the attorney without sufficient cause. (Ann. Rept. (2007), Advisory Letter 19, p. 32.) [Demeanor/decorum; on-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

A judge chastised the attorneys in the presence of the jury and threatened to declare a mistrial over momentary confusion about the availability of a witness. (Ann. Rept. (2006), Advisory Letter 4, p. 32.) [Demeanor/decorum; on-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

On multiple occasions, a judge spoke directly to defendants in Spanish — often on matters of substance and even when interpreters were present — in violation of Code of Civil Procedure section 185(a), which requires all judicial proceedings to be conducted in English. (Ann. Rept. (2006), Advisory Letter 16, p. 33.)

In a case not pending before the judge and without notice to the parties, a judge rescinded another judge's order that a defendant be released on the defendant's own recognizance. (Ann. Rept. (2005), Advisory Letter 12, p. 27.)

A judge improperly invoked judicial authority in addressing an administrative problem. (Ann. Rept. (2003), Advisory Letter 6, p. 26.)

A judge's revocation of a criminal defendant's own-recognizance release gave the appearance of punishing the defendant for delays in the proceedings. (Ann. Rept. (2003), Advisory Letter 7, p. 26.)

While investigating a prospective juror's medical excuse, the judge contacted the juror's supervisor and disclosed the claimed medical excuse. The prospective juror had not consented to the release of this confidential information to the employer. (Ann. Rept. (2002), Advisory Letter 14 p. 24.)

A judge improperly required defendants to address the courtroom audience. (Ann. Rept. (2001), Advisory Letter 13, p. 20.)

After a criminal defendant requested representation by the public defender, the judge directed the bailiff to search the defendant's wallet. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Advisory Letter 7, p. 27.)

Sexual Harassment/Inappropriate Workplace Gender Comments

A judge engaged in conduct toward a member of court staff that reflected unwelcome and excessive personal interest. (Ann. Rept. (1999), Advisory Letter 21, p. 23.)

A judge engaged in displays of affection toward court employees which were unwelcome to some. In mitigation, the judge attended training in appropriate workplace conduct. The judge also made a comment to an attorney appearing before the judge which reflected gender bias. (Ann. Rept. (1998), Advisory Letter 38, p. 29.)

More Than One Type of Misconduct

The judge made improper and undignified comments to a litigant at a hearing. The judge proceeded with another hearing in the absence of the litigant's attorney. In another matter, the judge improperly commented on an exercise of a challenge for cause. (Ann. Rept. (2020), Advisory Letter 7, p. 56.) [Demeanor/decorum; Disqualification/disclosure/post-disqualification conduct; Failure to ensure rights .]

During a trial, the judge made a statement to the jury that reflected embroilment and raised an appearance of lack of impartiality. The judge later made statements to an attorney in the action that were argumentative, discourteous, and reflected embroilment. In another action, the judge addressed a party in a manner that was discourteous. (Ann. Rept. (2020), Advisory Letter 8, p. 56.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; Demeanor/decorum.]

In two proceedings, the judge issued orders without allowing the affected parties a full opportunity to be heard and to cross-examine witnesses. In a separate proceeding, the judge altered a previously-issued order out of pique. (Ann. Rept. (2020), Advisory Letter 9, p. 56.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; Failure to ensure rights.]

The judge conducted a hearing and ruled against a litigant in the absence of the litigant's attorney, and denied the litigant an opportunity to be heard. At another hearing, the judge disparaged an attorney and interfered with the attorney-client relationship. (Ann. Rept. (2019), Advisory Letter 11, p. 36.) [Demeanor/decorum; Failure to ensure rights.]

During several hearings, the judge displayed hostility and impatience, made sarcastic comments, and engaged in conduct that gave the appearance of embroilment. The judge also improperly threatened to sanction an attorney and report that attorney to the State Bar. (Ann. Rept. (2019), Advisory Letter 12, p. 36.) [Abuse of contempt/sanctions; Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; Demeanor/decorum.]

After remanding a defendant whom the judge believed was self-represented, the judge refused to recall the matter later that day at the request of the defendant's counsel. The judge also engaged in an improper political activity. (Ann. Rept. (2019), Advisory Letter 13, p. 36.) [Failure to ensure rights; Improper political activities.]

The judge intentionally made physical contact with an attorney (which was mitigated by an immediate and sincere apology to the attorney). The judge improperly handled hearings in some matters, including juvenile delinquency matters. The judge made discourteous remarks to an attorney in the presence of the attorney's client. The judge also engaged in misconduct in connection with a social media account. (Ann. Rept. (2018), Advisory Letter 15, p. 29.) [Demeanor/decorum; Disqualification/disclosure/post-disqualification conduct; Improper political activities; On-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

The judge improperly accepted gifts from an attorney, and failed to properly disclose one of the gifts on the judge's Fair Political Practices Commission Form 700. The judge also failed to disclose a personal relationship with that attorney when the attorney appeared before the judge. (Ann. Rept. (2018), Advisory Letter 16, p. 29.) [Disqualification/disclosure/post-disqualification conduct; Gifts/loans/favors/ticket-fixing.]

During a hearing, the judge displayed poor demeanor by using a raised voice and making intemperate comments about an attorney, and, through repeated interruptions, denied the attorney a complete opportunity to be heard. The judge also improperly threatened to have the attorney removed from the courtroom. (Ann. Rept. (2018), Advisory Letter 17, p. 29.) [Demeanor/decorum; Failure to ensure rights.]

During a hearing, the judge asked an attorney, unrelated to the proceeding, for legal advice. The judge also exhibited inappropriate demeanor toward the parties during that hearing. (Ann. Rept. (2018), Advisory Letter 18, p. 29.) [Demeanor/decorum; On-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

The judge imposed an unauthorized non-monetary sanction against attorneys who were not before the court, and failed to follow proper contempt procedures. (Ann. Rept. (2018), Advisory Letter 19, p. 29.) [Abuse of contempt/sanctions; On-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

The judge made a comment on social media about a matter over which he did not preside. In a particular circumstance, the judge made no effort to preclude or avoid the use by others of the prestige of the judicial office or the judge's title. (Ann. Rept. (2018), Advisory Letter 20, p. 29.) [Comment on a pending case; Off-bench abuse of office/misuse of court information.]

During a hearing, the judge made a series of comments that constituted poor demeanor and embroilment; the judge also improperly threatened to report an attorney to the State Bar, failed to disqualify when required to do so, and ruled on a matter after the need to disqualify was apparent. (Ann. Rept. (2018), Advisory Letter 21, p. 29.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; Demeanor/decorum; Disqualification/disclosure/post-disqualification conduct; On-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

The judge engaged in conduct during a criminal case (including improperly going off the record) that created the appearance of retaliation against the defendant. The judge also displayed poor demeanor in comments that the judge made to the defendant. (Ann. Rept. (2018), Advisory Letter 22, p. 29.) [Demeanor/decorum; Failure to ensure rights.]

The judge denied a criminal defendant's own-recognizance release for improper reasons, including a reason that reflected bias toward a particular class. (Ann. Rept. (2018), Advisory Letter 23, p. 29.) [Bias/appearance of bias toward a particular class; Failure to ensure rights.]

A judge failed to appropriately discharge various administrative responsibilities and made undignified and discourteous remarks to court personnel. The judge also failed to personally observe high standards of conduct by not complying with a regulation. (Ann. Rept. (2017), Advisory Letter 18, p. 25.) [Administrative malfeasance/improper comments, treatment of colleagues and staff; Demeanor/decorum; Miscellaneous Off-bench conduct.]

While presiding over a criminal case, the judge engaged in independent investigation, which the judge failed to promptly disclose to the litigants. The judge failed to disqualify from the case when circumstances in the case warranted recusal. (Ann. Rept. (2017), Advisory Letter 19, p. 25.) [Disqualification/disclosure/post-disqualification conduct; Ex parte communications.]

A judge's off-bench remarks created the appearance of bias and lent the prestige of office to advance the personal interests of others. (Ann. Rept. (2017), Advisory Letter 20, p. 25.) [Bias/appearance of bias toward a particular class; Off-bench abuse of office/misuse of court information.]

At a hearing, the judge made repeated remarks suggesting bias against a party and prejudgment in a case. When the party moved to disqualify the judge, setting forth sufficient allegations in the statement of disqualification to cause a reasonable member of the public to doubt the judge's impartiality, the judge improperly struck the disqualification motion, rather than having it heard by another judge, as required by law. (Ann. Rept. (2017), Advisory Letter 21, p. 26.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; Disqualification/disclosure/post-disqualification conduct.]

After making efforts to comply with the requirement that a habeas petitioner be afforded the opportunity to reply to informal responses to habeas petitions, a judge denied the petitioner the opportunity to submit a reply. On one occasion, the judge denied a petition on the basis of an informal response that the judge knew had not been served on the petitioner. (Ann. Rept. (2016), Advisory Letter 23, p. 29.) [Ex parte communications; failure to ensure rights.]

A judge made injudicious remarks about a pro per defendant that suggested bias. When the remarks were cited in a motion to disqualify the judge for cause, the judge struck the motion on the grounds that the judge was not biased and no reasonable person would think that the judge was biased, thereby ruling on the merits of the disqualification motion, rather than having the matter decided by an assigned judge as required by law. (Ann. Rept. (2016), Advisory Letter 24, p. 29.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; disqualification/ disclosure/post-disqualification conduct.]

A judge received and acted upon an ex parte communication from the plaintiff in a case who arrived late to court after the case had been dismissed and the opposing party had left the courtroom. The judge did not give the opposing party notice or an opportunity to be heard before vacating the order of dismissal and resetting the matter for trial. (Ann. Rept. (2016), Advisory Letter 25, p. 29.) [Ex parte communications; failure to ensure rights.]

A judge attempted, in a private capacity, to help resolve a legal dispute between persons with whom the judge had a personal relationship, in violation of the prohibition on judges serving as mediators. After suit was filed, the judge engaged in other activities that appeared to lend the prestige of judicial office to advance the personal interests of another person. (Ann. Rept. (2016), Advisory Letter 26, p. 29.) [Off-bench abuse of office/misuse of court information; miscellaneous off-bench conduct.]

A judge entered judgment against a nonparty in a small claims case. In another matter, the judge was discourteous and demeaning to a self-represented civil litigant. During trial in a third case, the judge failed to be patient, dignified, and courteous toward counsel. (Ann. Rept. (2015), Advisory Letter 17, p. 26.) [Demeanor/decorum; on-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

In a family law matter in which the judge had ordered that there be no contact between the parties' children and a non-party, the judge also ordered that there be no contact between the nonparty and the non-party's own child, who lived in the same household as the other children. The judge did not give the non-party notice or an opportunity to be heard, and did not have jurisdiction over the individual's child. The judge also made a derogatory remark to one of the parties reflecting prejudgment. (Ann. Rept. (2015), Advisory Letter 18, p. 26.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; failure to ensure rights.]

In traffic court, a judge allowed court clerks to take pleas and impose sentences according to a fine schedule, without the involvement of a judicial officer. The judge also maintained a policy of not giving fine reductions after trial, and advising defendants that fines would not be reduced after trial, creating the appearance that defendants were being penalized for exercising their right to trial. In mitigation, the judge corrected the practices. (Ann. Rept. (2015), Advisory Letter 19, p. 26.) [Non-performance of judicial functions/attendance/sleeping; failure to ensure rights.]

A judge allowed the personal relationship with a criminal defendant appearing before the judge to influence the judge's conduct. Although the judge recused, the judge interacted with the defendant in a manner that breached court decorum and raised security concerns. (Ann. Rept. (2015), Advisory Letter 20, p. 26.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; demeanor/decorum.]

A judge solicited contributions for a candidate for judicial office from attorneys appearing before the judge. The judge also invoked the judicial office in correspondence to advance the judge's interests in a personal dispute. (Ann. Rept. (2015), Advisory Letter 21, p. 26.) [Improper political activities; off-bench abuse of office/misuse of court information.]

During a hearing, a judge engaged in a shouting match with an attorney, suggesting the attorney as playing games and not acting in the best interest of the attorney's client, which remarks were likely to undermine the attorney-client relationship. The judge also failed to follow proper contempt procedures by finding the attorney in contempt without giving the attorney an opportunity to be heard. (Ann. Rept. (2015), Advisory Letter 22, p. 26.) [Abuse of contempt/sanctions; demeanor/decorum; failure to ensure rights.]

In a family law case, the judge made comments to a litigant that were impatient and discourteous and gave the appearance of bias. In a separate matter, at the request of the mother, the judge issued a one-year restraining order against the out-of-state father specifically prohibiting visitation with his child, and awarding sole custody to the mother. The judge was aware of a pending family law case in the home state of the father and child, and had been told by the mother that the child essentially lived with the father, but did not consult with the other court before issuing the custody order, as required by law. (Ann. Rept. (2015), Advisory Letter 23, p. 26.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; demeanor/decorum; on-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

At a hearing in a civil matter, the judge used a derogatory term for a witness and made comments about potential witnesses for the defendant and their possible testimony that reflected bias against the defendant. (Ann. Rept. (2015), Advisory Letter 24, p. 26.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; demeanor/decorum.]

A judge revoked probation and imposed sentence on a defendant, without giving the defendant an opportunity to be heard on whether the probation should be revoked, without obtaining a waiver of the defendant's right to a hearing, and without the defendant admitting a probation violation. The judge also made disparaging remarks to and about the defendant. (Ann. Rept. (2015), Advisory Letter 25, p. 27.) [Demeanor/decorum; failure to ensure rights; on-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

At sentencing, a judge made remarks to the defendant that were undignified and gave the appearance that the judge was inappropriately injecting the judge's personal experience into consideration of the matter. (Ann. Rept. (2015), Advisory Letter 26, p. 27.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; demeanor/decorum.]

While an attorney was in chambers on a civil matter, the judge initiated an ex parte communication about another case, including questioning the attorney about the attorney's appeal of the judge's order and alternatives to appeal that were available. In another matter, the judge issued but held a bench warrant for an attorney on the date specified on a subpoena for the attorney's appearance, although the attorney had not been served with the subpoena, had not failed to appear on the date specified (which had already been continued due to the judge's unavailability), and had not consented to having a warrant issued and held. (Ann. Rept. (2014), Advisory Letter 23, p. 23.) [Ex parte communications; on-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

A judge failed to give a pro per litigant an opportunity to respond before holding the litigant in contempt. In another matter, the judge's treatment of a pro per family law litigant was discourteous and gave rise to an appearance of embroilment. (Ann. Rept. (2014), Advisory Letter 24, p. 23.) [Abuse of contempt/sanctions; bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; demeanor/decorum.]

In traffic court, a judge allowed the judge's clerk to take pleas and impose sentences according to a fine schedule, while the judge was in chambers. In a civil matter, after the prevailing party's attorney requested that the judge make findings, the judge appeared to act out of pique by stating that the judge was going to set aside the order and set the matter for further argument. The judge also displayed poor demeanor during the proceedings. In another matter, the judge denied an attorney an opportunity to be heard before imposing sanctions and displayed poor demeanor. (Ann. Rept. (2014), Advisory Letter 25, p. 24.) [Non-performance of judicial functions/attendance/sleeping; demeanor/decorum; failure to ensure rights; on-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

A judge made remarks about a pro per criminal defendant – impugning the defendant's character, referring to the defendant as a fraud, and accusing the defendant of being willing to make false statements to the court – in an attempt to persuade the defendant to waive the right to self representation. When the defendant raised the judge's accusations in a statement of disqualification, the judge improperly struck the challenge rather than allowing the motion to be decided by another judge as required by law. (Ann. Rept. (2014), Advisory Letter 26, p. 24.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; disqualification/disclosure/post-disqualification conduct.]

During a hearing in a criminal case, the judge repeatedly criticized defense counsel's brief in a sarcastic and demeaning manner, and questioned the attorney about the defendant in a sarcastic manner. In another criminal matter, the judge made remarks that created the appearance of bias based upon the defendant's occupation. (Ann. Rept. (2014), Advisory Letter 27, p. 24.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; demeanor/decorum.]

During a hearing in a criminal case, the judge was impatient and discourteous towards an attorney who was questioning a witness. Later, in open court, and in the presence of the attorney's client, the judge threatened to report the attorney to the State Bar if the attorney had engaged in improper conduct, which had not been determined. In another case, at a bail hearing, the judge made sarcastic, discourteous remarks about the probation department's recommendation that the defendant be released on the defendant's own recognizance. At sentencing later in the case, the judge referred to the judge's own experience as a victim of a crime similar to the one for which the defendant was being sentenced, which created the appearance of bias and prejudgment. The judge also made a discourteous remark to a person speaking on the defendant's behalf at sentencing. (Ann. Rept. (2014), Advisory Letter 28, p. 24.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; demeanor/decorum.]

A judge's off-bench activities created an appearance of bias. Some of the judge's activities involved a misuse of court resources. (Ann. Rept. (2014), Advisory Letter 29, p. 24.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; misuse of court resources.]

At the outset of a hearing on a temporary restraining order and without providing the petitioner an adequate opportunity to be heard, the judge ordered on the judge's own motion that the restrained parent would be allowed visitation as a condition of granting the restraining order. No notice had been given to the pro per petitioner that the visitation issue, which was previously set for hearing at a later date, would be addressed at the TRO hearing. The commission concluded that the judge abused the judge's authority and disregarded the litigant's fundamental right to due process. In another matter, the judge imposed sanctions on a pro per litigant without providing an adequate opportunity to be heard. (Ann. Rept. (2013), Advisory Letter 19, p. 22.) [Abuse of contempt/sanctions; failure to ensure rights; on-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

In a criminal matter, the judge failed to rule over a period of nine months on a pro per defendant's motion for appointment of an expert and engaged in an improper ex parte communication with the defendant's investigator. (Ann. Rept. (2013), Advisory Letter 20, p. 22.) [Comment on a pending case; miscellaneous off-bench conduct.]

A judge's remarks in emails to judicial colleagues failed to promote public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary. The judge also also made public comments about a pending case. (Ann. Rept. (2013), Advisory Letter 21, p. 23.) [Decisional delay/false salary affidavits; ex parte communications.]

Prior to arraigning a defendant and granting the defendant own recognizance release, a judge failed to disclose on the record that the judge had interacted with the defendant professionally and knew a number of the prosecution witnesses well. In another matter, the judge modified a temporary restraining order without providing notice to the petitioner. In a family law matter, the judge communicated to counsel for one litigant a disparaging courthouse joke about a party in another case who was represented by the counsel's law firm, and conveyed the judge's displeasure with the contentiousness of both cases. Opposing counsel was not present for the judge's remarks. (Ann. Rept. (2012), Advisory Letter 23, p. 26.) [Demeanor/decorum; disqualification/disclosure/post-disqualification conduct; ex parte communications; failure to ensure rights.]

During a contested family law proceeding, a judge made inappropriate personal comments and hugged one of the litigants at the conclusion of the hearing. In another matter involving a restraining order, the judge denied the respondent the opportunity to cross-examine the petitioner. The judge also repeatedly urged the respondent to consult with a particular doctor, thus lending the prestige of judicial office to advance the doctor's interests. (Ann. Rept. (2012), Advisory Letter 24, p. 27.) [Demeanor/decorum; failure to ensure rights; on-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

A judge made harsh comments to an attorney, in the presence of the attorney's client, including inviting the attorney to admit that the attorney was inept and making references to sanctions and a possible referral to the State Bar. The nature of the judge's comments created the appearance of embroilment. In another matter, the judge spoke to a represented defendant regarding disposition while the defendant's attorney was out of the courtroom. (Ann. Rept. (2012), Advisory Letter 25, p. 27.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; demeanor/decorum; failure to ensure rights.]

A judge displayed poor demeanor toward counsel or litigants in three family law cases. In one of the cases, after reprimanding counsel for the manner in which a motion was presented and continuing the hearing, the judge refused to allow counsel to be heard or to ask a clarifying question. (Ann. Rept. (2012), Advisory Letter 26, p. 27.) [Demeanor/decorum; failure to ensure rights.]

During a criminal trial, a judge expressed impatience and annoyance and reprimanded defense counsel in front of the jury. During the same trial when the judge began questioning the defendant about being late to court, defense counsel requested that the judge's questions be directed to counsel, not the defendant. The judge responded that the defendant's own recognizance release was revoked. The judge's revocation of the defendant's OR release appeared to be in retaliation for defense counsel's assertion of the defendant's right to have counsel, rather than the defendant, respond to questions. (Ann. Rept. (2012), Advisory Letter 27, p. 27.) [Demeanor/decorum; failure to ensure rights.]

A judge sent a highly accusatory and inaccurate email to the attorneys in a case that had been before the judge, without investigating the facts and ascertaining from the attorneys what had occurred. In another matter, the judge made remarks at a sentencing hearing that created a strong appearance that the judge had established a mandatory minimum sentence for a certain type of offense, when none was prescribed by law and without consideration of the individual facts and circumstances of each case. (Ann. Rept. (2012), Advisory Letter 28, p. 27.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; demeanor/decorum.]

After being appointed to the bench, a judge failed to ensure that a case in which the judge was the attorney of record was transferred to another attorney before taking the oath of office. The judge remained counsel of record for three weeks after taking the oath. (Ann. Rept. (2012), Advisory Letter 29, p. 27.) [Miscellaneous off-bench conduct; pre-bench misconduct.]

A judge used vulgar language and was unduly harsh with an attorney who volunteered court scheduling information in a case that was not the attorney's. The judge also engaged in abuse of authority by ordering the attorney to leave the courtroom. (Ann. Rept. (2012), Advisory Letter 30, p. 27.) [Demeanor/decorum; on-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

A judge made unduly harsh and disparaging remarks to a pro per criminal defendant during a pretrial hearing. The judge also denied the defendant's motion to disqualify the judge for cause. (Ann. Rept. (2011), Advisory Letter 25, p. 26.) [Demeanor/decorum; disqualification/ disclosure/post-disqualification conduct.]

A judge engaged in ex parte communications with a witness. The judge improperly inferred the consent of the pro per parties from the fact that they did not object when the judge stated the intention to telephone the witness. When one party continued to express concern about the judge's ruling, the judge threatened to make an adverse ruling and used unduly harsh language. (Ann. Rept. (2011), Advisory Letter 26, p. 26.) [Demeanor/decorum; ex parte communications.]

A judge made remarks, in open court, to an attorney that reflected impatience, were undignified and demeaned the competence of the attorney. In another case, immediately after ruling in favor of one party, the judge met with that party's counsel in chambers on an unrelated matter, without offering an explanation to the other party, which created the appearance of impropriety. (Ann. Rept. (2010), Advisory Letter 27, p. 27.) [Demeanor/decorum; miscellaneous off-bench conduct.]

A judge violated canon 3B(10) by commending two juries for their verdicts. In another case, the judge made a comment to an attorney that appeared sarcastic and may have reflected a lack of patience. (Ann. Rept. (2010), Advisory Letter 28, p. 27.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; demeanor/decorum.]

In an animal cruelty case, a judge failed to disclose the judge's extensive personal and professional activities involving animals. The judge also incarcerated the defendant under circumstances that appeared retaliatory and constituted an abuse of authority. (Ann. Rept. (2010), Advisory Letter 29, p. 27.) [Disqualification/disclosure/post-disqualification conduct; on-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

A judge's off-bench participation in law enforcement activities failed to promote public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary. Also, while on the bench, the judge directed the bailiff to take the car keys of pro per defendants who were charged but had not been convicted of driving without a valid license if they stated they had driven themselves to court. (Ann. Rept. (2010), Advisory Letter 30, p. 27.) [Miscellaneous off-bench conduct; on-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

A judge failed to provide a party an opportunity to be heard before sanctioning the party for failure to appear. The judge also presided over two hearings in a family law matter in the absence of the minors' counsel, without proof in the record of notice to the minors' counsel, under circumstances which should have compelled the judge to inquire about notice. The judge was new to the bench. (Ann. Rept. (2010), Advisory Letter 31, p. 28.) [Abuse of contempt/sanctions; failure to ensure rights.]

A judge improperly refused to hear a petition for temporary guardianship, thereby failing to provide the petitioner full right to be heard according to law. The judge also failed to be patient, dignified and courteous toward individuals appearing on the matter on two dates. (Ann. Rept. (2009), Advisory Letter 21, p. 20.) [Demeanor/decorum; failure to ensure rights.]

On several occasions, a judge failed to disclose on the record the close personal relationship between a member of the judge's courtroom staff and an attorney appearing before the judge. In another matter, the judge made demeaning remarks in open court about an attorney in the case. (Ann. Rept. (2009), Advisory Letter 22, p. 20.) [Demeanor/decorum; disqualification/disclosure/post-disqualification conduct.]

In a written recusal order, a judge made disparaging, gratuitous statements about an attorney in the case. The tenor of the remarks the judge made to the attorney before recusing also appeared inconsistent with the judge's duty to be patient, dignified and courteous. (Ann. Rept. (2009), Advisory Letter 23, p. 20.) [Demeanor/decorum; disqualification/disclosure/post-disqualification conduct.]

A judge wrote a letter - not on judicial stationery and not using the judicial title - on behalf of a litigant personally known to the judge for use in a case then pending before another judge in the judge's court. The letter contained what could be considered character testimony. In addition, the judge failed to disclose a relationship with an attorney appearing before the judge. (Ann. Rept. (2009), Advisory Letter 24, p. 20.) [Disqualification/disclosure/post-disqualification conduct; off-bench abuse of office/misuse of court information.]

A judge's conduct at a hearing in a criminal case reflected embroilment. At the outset of the hearing, in open court and on the record, the judge accused the defendant of perjury and his lawyer of submitting false evidence and libeling the court. The judge also accused the attorney of lack of judgment and credibility, reckless disregard for the truth, a lack of integrity, and willingness to aid and abet perjury. The judge then told the attorney he was not welcome in the judge's court. The judge did not recuse until after the hearing, even though grounds for disqualification existed at the beginning of the hearing. (Ann. Rept. (2009), Advisory Letter 25, p. 20.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; demeanor/decorum; disqualification/disclosure/post-disqualification conduct; on-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

During a hearing, when an attorney commented that the court reporter had apparently missed an answer, the judge interrogated counsel in an accusatory manner. In another matter, the judge inappropriately accused a prosecutor of unethical conduct for speaking to a defendant who was represented by counsel. The judge engaged in an abuse of judicial authority by ordering the prosecutor to call the prosecutor's supervisor and remain in the courtroom until the supervisor arrived. The judge's campaign disclosure form also failed to provide the street address of a donor, as required by law. (Ann. Rept. (2008), Advisory Letter 17, p. 28.) [Demeanor/decorum; on-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties; improper political activities.]

In open court, while presiding over a criminal matter, a judge accused the defendant's attorney, who was asserting the client's rights, of being unethical, and stated that the attorney's unethical practices disgraced the legal profession. When the attorney later filed a statement of disqualification, the judge gave the appearance of soliciting the prosecution's assistance in opposing it. (Ann. Rept. (2008), Advisory Letter 18, p. 28.) [Demeanor/decorum; disqualification/disclosure/post-disqualification conduct.]

A judge was discourteous to counsel in three proceedings; in one of the cases, the judge also demonstrated a lack of impartiality. In a fourth proceeding, the judge disregarded a misdemeanant's right to bail. (Ann. Rept. (2007), Advisory Letter 18, p. 32.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; demeanor/decorum; failure to ensure rights.]

A judge required an attorney to come into chambers after a preliminary hearing to listen to an explanation of the judge's decision and made comments, in an emotional and argumentative manner, that were intimidating. In a separate matter, the judge made discourteous remarks to one counsel that tended to improperly personalize the matter before the court. (Ann. Rept. (2007), Advisory Letter 20, p. 32.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; demeanor/decorum.]

A judge raised the bail of a defendant because a friend or family member of the defendant had caused a disturbance in court, which was not a proper reason to increase bail. In another matter, the judge failed to be patient, dignified and courteous to a defendant. (Ann. Rept. (2005), Advisory Letter 4, p. 26.) [On-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties; demeanor/decorum.]

During a trial, a judge improperly spoke to the jury about another case. The judge told the jury that an attorney who would be appearing on the other case had filed inadequate papers; the judge made comments suggesting prejudgment. When the attorney appeared, the judge was sarcastic and impatient. In another case, the judge made sarcastic, demeaning and disparaging remarks to two attorneys. (Ann. Rept. (2004), Advisory Letter 10, p. 23.) [Demeanor/decorum; ex parte communications; bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class.]

After a judge declined assignment in one case because of an association with a party, the judge presided over a second case involving the same parties. The judge set aside a default judgment entered against the party with whom the judge was associated, without notice or a hearing. When the other party objected in an ex parte letter, the judge vacated the prior order and set a hearing before another judge. In the order reassigning the case, the judge made statements about the pending motion that appeared intended to influence the decision of the other judge. (Ann. Rept. (2004), Advisory Letter 13, p. 24.) [Disqualification/disclosure/post-disqualification conduct; on-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties; failure to ensure rights; ex parte communications.]

In a family law matter, the judge made remarks concerning the litigants that were undignified and disparaging. In another family law matter, the judge's remarks reflected a pattern of embroilment. The judge responded to criticism of the case in a manner that appeared to constitute an abuse of authority. A more severe sanction was not imposed because the judge agreed to and did attend appropriate educational programs. (Ann. Rept. (2003), Advisory Letter 10, p. 27.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; demeanor/decorum; on-bench abuse of authority in performance of judicial duties.]

A judge's treatment of jurors undermined public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary. The judge also appeared to engage in campaign activities in the courthouse during court hours. (Ann. Rept. (2003), Advisory Letter 11, p. 27.) [Administrative malfeasance; improper political activities.]

In one matter, the judge failed to disclose on the record a relationship with the defendant's family. In another matter, the judge created the appearance of favoritism by issuing a ruling on the judge's own motion based in part on personal knowledge of the defendant and on information received ex parte. The judge failed to disqualify from the matter, notwithstanding the judge's personal knowledge of evidentiary facts, and failed to disclose on the record that the judge was familiar with the defendant's family. In a third matter, the judge discussed a pending case with an attorney who was not involved in the case. The Commission strongly urged the judge to obtain further ethics education. (Ann. Rept. (2003), Advisory Letter 12, p. 27.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; disqualification/disclosure/post-disqualification conduct; ex parte communications.]

In one case, the judge made remarks indicating prejudgment. In another matter, the judge improperly failed to recuse. In a third matter, the judge struck another judge's order disqualifying the judge from the case. In another matter, the judge made a disparaging remark about a government attorneys' office. In addition, the judge's treatment of court staff failed to comply with Canon 3B(4), requiring judges to be "patient, dignified and courteous" toward those with whom they deal in an official capacity. (Ann. Rept. (2003), Advisory Letter 13, p. 27.) [Bias/appearance of bias not directed toward a particular class; demeanor/decorum; disqualification/disclosure/post-disqualification conduct.]

A judge frequently used a member of court staff to assist the judge with personal matters. The judge presided over a criminal matter without disclosing the judge's past friendship with—and current antipathy toward—the victim. (Ann. Rept. (2003), Advisory Letter 15, p. 27.) [Disqualification/disclosure/post-disqualification conduct; misuse of court resources.]

A judge made misleading public statements that diminished public confidence in the integrity of the judiciary. During a court proceeding, the judge made a disparaging remark about other judicial officers. (Ann. Rept. (2003), Advisory Letter 16, p. 27.) [Demeanor/decorum; administrative malfeasance.]

A presiding judge failed to process a complaint about a court commissioner for nine months. In another matter, when the judge's former law partner appeared before the judge, the judge disclosed only the judge's past professional and financial relationship with the law firm, not the judge's ongoing social relationship with the former law partner. (Ann. Rept. (2002), Advisory Letter 15, p. 24.) [Administrative malfeasance; disqualification/disclosure/post-disqualification conduct.]

A judge failed to recuse or to adequately disclose the judge's prior association in practice with an attorney appearing before the judge. On occasions when the conflict was waived, the judge failed to obtain written waivers of disqualification as required by law. The judge also was verbally abusive toward court staff. (Ann. Rept. (2002), Advisory Letter 16, p. 24.) [Demeanor/decorum; disqualification/disclosure/post-disqualification conduct.]
