In early October 2007, attorney Marc Garcia's judicial appointment was announced. On November 29, 2007, an agreement dissolving the joint venture was signed by attorney Garcia on behalf of the Garcia Law Firm and by Pfeiff on behalf of Morse & Pfeiff, as follows:

DISSOLUTION OF JOINT VENTURE
(Merced Defense Associates)

> The Law Offices of Morse and Pfeiff (hereafter Morse and Pfeiff) and the Garcia Law Firm (hereafter Garcia), for due consideration, hereby dissolve the joint venture known as Merced Defense Associates. The entity known as Merced Defense Associates shall be the sole property of Morse and Pfeiff as of November 29, 2007.

A separate one-page agreement specifying the financial terms was also executed by attorneys Garcia and Pfeiff on November 29, 2007, as set forth below. It provided that MDA would pay Garcia $250,000, in monthly payments of $4,516 starting in January 2008, and that the payments would cease if the county terminated or did not renew the indigent defense services contract:

TERMS OF DISSOLUTION OF JOINT VENTURE
(Merced Defense Associates)

The parties to this agreement, the Law Offices of Morse and Pfeiff (hereinafter Morse and Pfeiff) and the Garcia Law Firm (hereinafter Garcia), agree to dissolve the joint venture known as Merced Defense Associates under the terms expressed in this agreement. Upon execution of this agreement the joint venture shall terminate on November 29, 2007 and the entity known as Merced Defense Associates shall become the sole property of Morse and Pfeiff. The Dissolution of Joint Venture executed by the parties is herein incorporated by this reference.

The parties agree to the following terms:

1. Merced Defense Associates shall pay to Garcia the sum of four thousand five hundred sixteen dollars ($4,516.00) on or about the first of each month commencing January 1, 2008. The funds shall be deposited into a blind trust account established by Garcia;
2. Said payments shall continue until any one of the following:
   A. Merced Defense Associates has paid a total of two hundred fifty thousand dollars ($250,000.00) into the account, or;
   B. The contract between the County of Merced and Merced Defense Associates to provide indigent defense services is terminated by Merced County, or;
   C. The contract between the County of Merced and Merced Defense Associates expires and is not renewed, or;
   D. The compensation currently provided for in the contract between the County of Merced and Merced Defense Associates is materially reduced.

> If at any time ownership of the entity known as Merced Defense Associates is transferred, for consideration, from Morse and Pfeiff to a buyer prior to payment of the entire amount mentioned in 2A above payments from Morse and Pfeiff shall continue until the entire amount is paid.

Pfeiff had emailed Garcia on November 28, attaching what he described as the two documents needed to dissolve the joint venture. He stated in the email that the "Dissolution to Dissolve the Joint Venture is the one we provide to the county," and that the "other one has the terms and incorporates the Dissolution" and "is for our business purposes only." Pfeiff's email stated that he did not plan to voluntarily relinquish the indigent defense contract at renewal time, but could not predict his intentions that far in advance, and had included a provision that the payments to Garcia would terminate if the contract was not renewed for any reason.

In January 2008, after taking the bench, Judge Garcia began receiving monthly payments of $4,516 pursuant to the Terms of Dissolution agreement. The payments were made by check payable to Marc Garcia, and were drawn on the account of "Law Offices of Morse & Pfeiff." The checks were signed by the Morse & Pfeiff office manager. The monthly payments continued through August 2012, until Judge Garcia had been paid $250,000. (In August 2011, during the normal course of processing all judicial mail, a judicial secretary opened an envelope addressed to Judge Garcia that contained a $4,516 check to the judge from Morse & Pfeiff. The judge instructed the secretary not to open any of his judicial mail in the future.)

In a June 2008 letter from Pfeiff to the county analyst who was the primary county contact for the indigent defense services contract from 2003 through 2012, Pfeiff stated, "You recently requested confirmation that Marc Garcia no longer has an interest in MDA. I have enclosed herewith a copy of our agreement terminating his interest." The one-page Dissolution of Joint Venture was attached. The Terms of Dissolution agreement was not attached.

When Judge Garcia took the bench in 2007, he was initially assigned to a civil department. In 2009, he was reassigned from a civil department to a criminal department. He heard preliminary hearings and felony trials in 2009, and misdemeanors in 2010. Since 2011 he had been assigned to a felony trial department. Pfeiff and other MDA attorneys regularly appeared before him. He did not disclose to his presiding judges the Terms of Dissolution agreement or that pursuant to the Terms of Dissolution agreement, he was receiving monthly payments as described above.

In mid-2009, Pfeiff presented the county with a request for approval of a contract extension. In October 2009, a three-year extension to the contract was approved, from fiscal year 2010/2011 through fiscal year 2012/2013 (Amendment No. 3). The fixed amount was set at approximately $1.7 million for 2011/2012, and $1.8 million for 2012/2013. In July 2011, a two-year extension was approved, for fiscal years 2013/2014 and 2014/2015 (Amendment No. 4).

The county was not at any point made aware, including in 2009 when it agreed to renew the indigent defense contract, by Judge Garcia or otherwise, of either the Terms of Dissolution agreement or that the judge was receiving ongoing payments pursuant to that agreement as described above.

On Judge Garcia's Statements of Economic Interests for the years 2008 through 2012, executed under penalty of perjury, he failed to disclose the $250,000 in income he received pursuant to the Terms of Dissolution agreement. In March 2014, he filed amended Statements of Economic Interests for the years 2008 through 2012. He reported the income on Schedule C as "Sale of Interest in joint venture agreement in MDA." The source of income is identified as "Merced Defense Associates/Morse & Pfeiff."

Judge Garcia's conduct violated the Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 1 (a judge shall uphold the integrity of the judiciary), 2 (a judge shall avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety in the integrity of the judiciary) and 2A (a judge shall respect and comply with the law and shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary).

From 2009 through August 2012, while Judge Garcia was assigned to a criminal department and payments to him pursuant to the Terms of Dissolution agreement were ongoing, the judge failed to disqualify himself in matters in which attorney Pfeiff appeared before him, including numerous MDA cases. Judge Garcia failed to disclose his ongoing financial relationship with Pfeiff and MDA. He also failed to disclose the ongoing financial relationship with Pfeiff and MDA in matters in which other MDA attorneys appeared before him.

Judge Garcia's conduct violated the Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 1, 2, 2A, 3E(1) (a judge shall disqualify himself or herself in any proceeding in which disqualification is required by law), 3E(2)(a) (in all trial court proceedings, a judge shall disclose information relevant to disqualification) and former canon 3E(2) (predecessor to canon 3E(2)(a)).

The Notice of Formal Proceedings alleged that the Terms of Dissolution agreement provided that Judge Garcia had an interest in future payments to be made under a government contract for which he would not be providing services, after he took the bench. It was alleged that by entering into that agreement and accepting payments pursuant to it, he violated the Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 1, 2, 2A, 4A(1) (a judge shall conduct all of the judge's extrajudicial activities so that they do not cast reasonable doubt on the judge's capacity to act impartially), 4D(1)(b) (a judge shall not engage in financial and business dealings that involve the judge in frequent transactions or continuing business relationships with lawyers or other persons likely to appear before the court on which the judge serves), and 4D(4) (a judge shall manage personal investments and financial activities so as to minimize the necessity for disqualification and as soon as reasonably possible, a judge shall divest himself or herself of investments and other financial interests that would require frequent disqualification). Judge Garcia disputed that there was any impropriety in the Terms of Dissolution agreement or in his receipt of funds pursuant to the agreement. In light of former judge Garcia's irrevocable resignation from judicial office and stipulation to the imposition of a censure and bar, it is not necessary to resolve these disputed issues as they would not affect the disposition of the case.

The Notice of Formal Proceedings further alleged that in furtherance of Judge Garcia's interest in continuing to receive payments under the Terms of Dissolution agreement, he concealed the fact that he had entered into an agreement in which he had an interest in future payments under the MDA contract, and concealed the fact that he was receiving payments from funds paid by the county to MDA after he took the bench and was no longer performing services under the MDA contract. Judge Garcia disputed that there was any intent on his part to conceal the agreement or payments under the Terms of Dissolution agreement, but admitted that his conduct could give rise to an appearance of concealment and thereby violate the Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 1, 2, and 2A. In light of former judge Garcia's irrevocable resignation from judicial office and stipulation to the imposition of a censure and bar, it is not necessary to further resolve these disputed issues as they would not affect the disposition of the case.

Judge Garcia's conduct was, at a minimum, conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute pursuant to article VI, section 18(d)(2) of the California Constitution.

Judge Garcia had no prior discipline.

DISCIPLINE

Article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution provides that the commission may "censure a judge or former judge ... for action ... that constitutes willful misconduct in office, ... or conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute . . . ." Former judge Garcia concedes that his conduct as stipulated was, at a minimum, prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute. The failure to disclose on state financial disclosure forms, filed under penalty of perjury, $250,000 received from the dissolution of a joint venture in a county contract for indigent defense, and the failure to disclose or disqualify when attorneys who had an interest in the contract appeared before the judge seriously undermine public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary.

The purpose of a commission disciplinary proceeding is "the protection of the public, the enforcement of rigorous standards of judicial conduct, and the maintenance of public confidence in the integrity ... of the judicial system." (Broadman v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1998) 18 Cal.4th 1079, 1112, citing Adams v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1995) 10 Cal.4th 866, 912.) The commission believes that this purpose is best served by the discipline proposed in the Stipulation, which constitutes the maximum discipline that may be imposed on a former judge.

Accordingly, the commission hereby censures former judge Marc A. Garcia and bars him from receiving an assignment, appointment, or reference of work from any California state court.

Commission members Hon. Erica R. Yew; Anthony P. Capozzi, Esq.; Ms. Mary Lou Aranguren; Ms. Pattyl A. Kasparian; Hon. Thomas M. Maddock; Nanci E. Nishimura, Esq.; Hon. Ignazio J. Ruvolo; Mr. Lawrence J. Simi; Mr. Richard Simpson; Ms. Sandra Talcott; and Mr. Adam N. Torres voted to issue this decision and order imposing a public censure and bar pursuant to the Stipulation.

Date: May 18, 2015

Hon. Erica R. Yew, Chairperson

STIPULATION

RECEIVED
APR 09 2015
COMMISSION ON
JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

STATE OF CALIFORNIA

BEFORE THE COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

| | |
|---|---|
| INQUIRY CONCERNINGJUDGE MARC A. GARCIA,No. 195 | STIPULATION FOR DISCIPLINEBY CONSENT (Rule 127) |

Pursuant to Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance, rule 127, Judge Marc A. Garcia of the Merced County Superior Court, represented by counsel Edith R. Matthai of Robie and Matthai, and commission examiner Gary W. Schons, Esq. ("the parties") submit this proposed disposition of Inquiry No. 195. The parties request that the commission resolve this matter by imposition of a censure and bar.

The parties believe that the settlement provided by this agreement is in the best interests of the commission and Judge Garcia because, among other reasons, in light of the stipulated facts and legal conclusions, and the judge's agreement to resign from office, a censure and bar adequately protects the public and will avoid the delay and expense of further proceedings.

TERMS AND CONDITIONS OF AGREEMENT

1. This agreement resolves the matters alleged in the commission's pending preliminary investigation involving Judge Garcia.

2. The commission shall issue a censure and bar based on the agreed Stipulated Facts and Legal Conclusions set forth therein.

3. If the commission accepts this proposed disposition, the commission's decision and order imposing a censure and bar may articulate the reasons for its decision and include explanatory language that the commission deems appropriate.

4. Upon acceptance by the commission, this stipulation, the judge's affidavit of consent and the commission's decision and order shall be made public.

5. Judge Garcia waives any further proceedings and review in this matter, including formal proceedings (rules 118, et seq.) and review by the Supreme Court (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 9.60).

6. Pursuant to this agreement, Judge Garcia has agreed to irrevocably resign from his position as a judge effective May 15, 2015. Judge Garcia shall use accrued vacation or other leave time and be absent from the bench between the date of this agreement and May 15, 2015. Judge Garcia represents and warrants that he has sufficient vacation/leave time to be absent from the bench between the date of this agreement and May 15, 2015, and that his presiding judge will allow him to be absent during that period.

Judge Garcia shall tender his irrevocable resignation from judicial office in writing to the Governor of California, within two days of being notified by the commission in writing of its acceptance of the proposed disposition. The commission's decision imposing a censure and bar pursuant to this stipulation shall issue as soon as practicable after the effective date of the judge's resignation.

7. If Judge Garcia fails to resign in accordance with this agreement, the commission shall continue the pending formal proceedings. Failure to comply with the terms and conditions of this agreement may also constitute additional and independent grounds for discipline.

8. The commission may reject this proposed disposition and continue the formal proceedings. If the commission does so, nothing in this proposed disposition will be deemed to be admitted by Judge Garcia.

Accordingly, it is hereby stipulated and agreed that the commission shall issue a censure and bar on the above Terms and Conditions of Agreement, and based on the following Stipulated Facts and Legal Conclusions:

STIPULATED FACTS AND LEGAL CONCLUSIONS

In 1999, then attorney Marc Garcia was hired as an associate by the Merced law firm of Morse & Pfeiff. In 2001, he was made a partner and the firm name was changed to Morse, Pfeiff & Garcia. At the time, Merced County had separate contracts with about a dozen attorneys to provide indigent defense services when the Public Defender declared a conflict. That group included attorneys Garcia and Pfeiff, who was one of several attorneys with contracts for juvenile representation.

In January 2003, a request for proposal was issued by Merced County for a contract to provide alternate indigent defense services for a flat fee. The law firm of Morse, Pfeiff & Garcia submitted a proposal, and was awarded the indigent defense services contract for a five-year term starting in fiscal year 2003/2004 and ending with fiscal year 2007/2008 (contract number 2003093). The contract specified a fixed amount per year, increasing from $1 million to $1.15 million, for a total contract price of approximately $5.6 million. Payments were made by the county monthly.

The Morse, Pfeiff & Garcia firm acted as both administrator of the contract and a provider of legal services. The contract provided for subcontracts with 8 to 10 attorneys, and Garcia and Pfeiff also handled cases under the contract.

The party contracting with the county, referred to as "Attorney," was identified as the firm Morse, Pfeiff & Garcia. Attorney Pfeiff signed the contract and all later amendments. The contract and amendments were signed on behalf of the county by the Chair of the County Board of Supervisors, and approved as to form by County Counsel.

Shortly before January 2004, the firm of Morse, Pfeiff & Garcia dissolved and attorney Garcia opened his own law office in Merced, known as The Garcia Law Firm. On January 1, 2004, concurrent with the dissolution of the Morse, Pfeiff & Garcia general partnership, the Garcia Law Firm and the Law Offices of Morse & Pfeiff entered into a Joint Venture Agreement, which was signed by attorneys Garcia, Pfeiff and Morse.

The Joint Venture Agreement formed a "new general partnership" between the two firms. The joint venture was limited to the indigent defense contract: "This agreement forms a Joint Venture between the general partnership of Morse & Pfeiff and Garcia Law Firm to administer Merced County Contract 2003[0]93." The name of the joint venture was "Morse, Pfeiff & Garcia." Its location was the office address of Morse & Pfeiff. The Joint Venture Agreement provided that attorney Garcia was to receive 45.662 percent of the net profits annually under the indigent defense contract, payable monthly, and Morse & Pfeiff was to receive 54.33 percent.

On March 30, 2004, the Joint Venture Agreement was amended to provide that the County of Merced was to receive 90 days written notice prior to the withdrawal or suspension of a joint venturer and that it would be the duty of the non-withdrawing or non-expelled joint venturer to provide written notice to the county.

In April 2004, an "Assignment of Merced County Contract No. 2003093 and Consent of County of Merced" was executed to reflect the change in structure of the contracting "Attorney." Amendment No. 1 to the contract also was executed, to change the name of the contracting Attorney to the "Morse and Pfeiff and Garcia Joint Venture."

In May 2006, an amendment to the Joint Venture Agreement was executed by attorneys Garcia, Pfeiff and Morse, renaming the joint venture "Merced Defense Associates (M.D.A.)," which became known as MDA.

In July 2007, a two-year extension to the indigent defense contract was approved by the county, for fiscal year 2008/2009 through fiscal year 2009/2010 (Amendment No. 2). The number of subcontracting attorneys was increased and the fixed amount for fiscal year 2007/2008 was increased to $1.5 million. The fixed amount was set at approximately $1.6 million for 2008/2009 and $1.7 million for 2009/2010.

In early October 2007, attorney Marc Garcia's judicial appointment was announced. On November 29, 2007, an agreement dissolving the joint venture was signed by attorney Garcia on behalf of the Garcia Law Firm and by Pfeiff on behalf of Morse & Pfeiff, as follows:

DISSOLUTION OF JOINT VENTURE
(Merced Defense Associates)

The Law Offices of Morse and Pfeiff (hereafter Morse and Pfeiff) and the Garcia Law Firm (hereafter Garcia), for due consideration, hereby dissolve the joint venture known as Merced Defense Associates. The entity known as Merced Defense Associates shall be the sole property of Morse and Pfeiff as of November 29, 2007.

A separate one-page agreement specifying the financial terms was also executed by attorneys Garcia and Pfeiff on November 29, 2007, as set forth below. It provided that MDA would pay Garcia $250,000, in monthly payments of $4,516 starting in January 2008, and that the payments would cease if the county terminated or did not renew the indigent defense services contract:

TERMS OF DISSOLUTION OF JOINT VENTURE
(Merced Defense Associates)

The parties to this agreement, the Law Offices of Morse and Pfeiff (hereinafter Morse and Pfeiff) and the Garcia Law Firm (hereinafter Garcia), agree to dissolve the joint venture known as Merced Defense Associates under the terms expressed in this agreement. Upon execution of this agreement the joint venture shall terminate on November 29, 2007 and the entity known as Merced Defense Associates shall become the sole property of Morse and Pfeiff. The Dissolution of Joint Venture executed by the parties is herein incorporated by this reference.

The parties agree to the following terms:

1. Merced Defense Associates shall pay to Garcia the sum of four thousand five hundred sixteen dollars ($4,516.00) on or about the first of each month commencing January 1, 2008. The funds shall be deposited into a blind trust account established by Garcia;
2. Said payments shall continue until any one of the following:
   A. Merced Defense Associates has paid a total of two hundred fifty thousand dollars ($250,000.00) into the account, or;
   B. The contract between the County of Merced and Merced Defense Associates to provide indigent defense services is terminated by Merced County, or;

C. The contract between the County of Merced and Merced Defense Associates expires and is not renewed, or;

D. The compensation currently provided for in the contract between the County of Merced and Merced Defense Associates is materially reduced.

If at any time ownership of the entity known as Merced Defense Associates is transferred, for consideration, from Morse and Pfeiff to a buyer prior to payment of the entire amount mentioned in 2A above payments from Morse and Pfeiff shall continue until the entire amount is paid.

Pfeiff had emailed Garcia on November 28, attaching what he described as the two documents needed to dissolve the joint venture. He stated in the email that the "Dissolution to Dissolve the Joint Venture is the one we provide to the county," and that the "other one has the terms and incorporates the Dissolution" and "is for our business purposes only." Pfeiff's email stated that he did not plan to voluntarily relinquish the indigent defense contract at renewal time, but could not predict his intentions that far in advance, and had included a provision that the payments to Garcia would terminate if the contract was not renewed for any reason.

In January 2008, after taking the bench, Judge Garcia began receiving monthly payments of $4,516 pursuant to the Terms of Dissolution agreement. The payments were made by check payable to Marc Garcia, and were drawn on the account of "Law Offices of Morse & Pfeiff." The checks were signed by the Morse & Pfeiff office manager. The monthly payments continued through August 2012, until Judge Garcia had been paid $250,000. (In August 2011, during the normal course of processing all judicial mail, a judicial secretary opened an envelope addressed to Judge Garcia that contained a $4,516 check to the judge from Morse & Pfeiff. The judge instructed the secretary not to open any of his judicial mail in the future.)

In a June 2008 letter from Pfeiff to the county analyst who was the primary county contact for the indigent defense services contract from 2003 through 2012, Pfeiff stated, "You recently requested confirmation that Marc Garcia no longer has an interest in MDA. I have enclosed herewith a copy of our agreement terminating his interest." The one-page Dissolution of Joint Venture was attached. The Terms of Dissolution agreement was not attached.

When Judge Garcia took the bench in 2007, he was initially assigned to a civil department. In 2009, he was reassigned from a civil department to a criminal department. He heard preliminary hearings and felony trials in 2009, and misdemeanors in 2010. Since 2011 he has been assigned to a felony trial department. Pfeiff and other MDA attorneys regularly appeared before him. He did not disclose to his presiding judges the Terms of Dissolution agreement or that pursuant to the Terms of Dissolution agreement, he was receiving monthly payments as described above.

In mid-2009, Pfeiff presented the county with a request for approval of a contract extension. In October 2009, a three-year extension to the contract was approved, from fiscal year 2010/2011 through fiscal year 2012/2013 (Amendment No. 3). The fixed amount was set at approximately $1.7 million for 2011/2012, and $1.8 million for 2012/2013. In July 2011, a two-year extension was approved, for fiscal years 2013/2014 and 2014/2015 (Amendment No. 4).

The county was not at any point made aware, including in 2009 when it agreed to renew the indigent defense contract, by Judge Garcia or otherwise, of either the Terms of Dissolution agreement or that the judge was receiving ongoing payments pursuant to that agreement as described above.

On Judge Garcia's Statements of Economic Interests for the years 2008 through 2012, executed under penalty of perjury, he failed to disclose the $250,000 in income he received pursuant to the Terms of Dissolution agreement. In March 2014, he filed amended Statements of Economic Interests for the years 2008 through 2012. He reported the income on Schedule C as "Sale of Interest in joint venture agreement in MDA." The source of income is identified as "Merced Defense Associates/Morse & Pfeiff."

Judge Garcia's conduct violated the Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 1 (a judge shall uphold the integrity of the judiciary), 2 (a judge shall avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety in the integrity of the judiciary) and 2A (a judge shall respect and comply with the law and shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary).

From 2009 through August 2012, while Judge Garcia was assigned to a criminal department and payments to him pursuant to the Terms of Dissolution agreement were ongoing, the judge failed to disqualify himself in matters in which attorney Pfeiff appeared before him, including numerous MDA cases. Judge Garcia failed to disclose his ongoing financial relationship with Pfeiff and MDA. He also failed to disclose the ongoing financial relationship with Pfeiff and MDA in matters in which other MDA attorneys appeared before him.

Judge Garcia's conduct violated the Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 1 (a judge shall uphold the integrity of the judiciary), 2 (a judge shall avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety in the integrity of the judiciary), 2A (a judge shall respect and comply with the law and shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary), 3E(1) (a judge shall disqualify himself or herself in any proceeding in which disqualification is required by law), 3E(2)(a) (in all trial court proceedings, a judge shall disclose information relevant to disqualification) and former canon 3E(2) (predecessor to canon 3E(2)(a)).

The notice of formal proceedings alleged that the Terms of Dissolution agreement provided that Judge Garcia had an interest in future payments to be made under a government contract for which he would not be providing services, after he took the bench. It was alleged that by entering into that agreement and accepting payments pursuant to it, he violated the Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 1 (a judge shall uphold the integrity of the judiciary), 2 (a judge shall avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety in the integrity of the judiciary), 2A (a judge shall respect and comply with the law and shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary), 4A(1) (a judge shall conduct all of the judge's extrajudicial activities so that they do not cast reasonable doubt on the judge's capacity to act impartially), 4D(1)(b) (a judge shall not engage in financial and business dealings that involve the judge in frequent transactions or continuing business relationships with lawyers or other persons likely to appear before the court on which the judge serves), and 4D(4) (a judge shall manage personal investments and financial activities so as to minimize the necessity for disqualification and as reasonably possible, a judge shall divest himself or herself of investments and other financial interests that would require frequent disqualification). Judge Garcia disputes that there was any impropriety in the Terms of Dissolution agreement or in his receipt of funds pursuant to the agreement. In light of Judge Garcia's agreement to resign from judicial office and stipulation to the imposition of a censure and bar, it does not appear necessary to resolve these disputed issues as they would not affect the disposition of the case.

The notice of formal proceedings further alleged that in furtherance of Judge Garcia's interest in continuing to receive payments under the Terms of Dissolution agreement, he concealed the fact that he had entered into an agreement in which he had an interest in future payments under the MDA contract, and concealed the fact that he was receiving payments from funds paid by the county to MDA after he took the bench and was no longer performing services under the MDA contract. Judge Garcia disputes that there was any intent on his part to conceal the agreement or payments under the Terms of Dissolution agreement, but admits that his conduct could give rise to an appearance of concealment and thereby violate the Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 1 (a judge shall uphold the integrity of the judiciary), 2 (a judge shall avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety in the integrity of the judiciary), and 2A (a judge shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary). In light of Judge Garcia's agreement to resign from judicial office and stipulation to the imposition of a censure and bar, it does not appear necessary to further resolve these disputed issues as they would not affect the disposition of the case.

Judge Garcia's conduct was, at a minimum, conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute pursuant to article VI, section 18(d)(2) of the California Constitution.

II. Prior Misconduct

Judge Garcia has no prior discipline.

By signing this stipulation, in addition to consenting to discipline on the terms set forth, Judge Garcia expressly admits that the foregoing facts are true and that he agrees with the stated legal conclusions.

Dated: _____, 2015

Judge Marc A. Garcia
Respondent

Dated: April 4, 2015

Edith R. Matthai, Esq.
Attorney for Judge Garcia

Dated: April 2, 2015

Gary W. Schons, Esq.
Examiner

II. Prior Misconduct

Judge Garcia has no prior discipline.

By signing this stipulation, in addition to consenting to discipline on the terms set forth, Judge Garcia expressly admits that the foregoing facts are true and that he agrees with the stated legal conclusions.

Dated: April 6, 2015

Judge Marc A. Garcia
Respondent

Dated: April 4, 2015

Edith R. Matthai, Esq.
Attorney for Judge Garcia

Dated: April 2, 2015

Gary W. Schons, Esq.
Examiner

RECEIVED
APR 09 2015
COMMISSION ON
JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

STATE OF CALIFORNIA

BEFORE THE COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

| | |
|---|---|
| INQUIRY CONCERNINGJUDGE MARC A. GARCIA,No. 195 | STIPULATION FOR DISCIPLINEBY CONSENT (Rule 127) |

Pursuant to Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance, rule 127(d), Judge Marc A. Garcia submits the following affidavit of consent:

1. I consent to a public censure and bar from receiving assignments, appointments, or references of work from any California state court, and will irrevocably resign from judicial office, as set forth in the Stipulation for Discipline by Consent.

2. My consent is freely and voluntarily rendered.

3. I admit the truth of the charges in Count 1 A and B in the Notice of Formal Proceedings and Count 1 C only to the extent specifically set forth in the Stipulation for Discipline by Consent.

4. I waive all further proceedings and review by the Supreme Court.

I declare under penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct. Executed this 6th day of April 2015.

Judge Marc A. Garcia
Respondent

FILED
AUG 27 2015
COMMISSION ON
JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

STATE OF CALIFORNIA

BEFORE THE COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

| | |
|---|---|
| INQUIRY CONCERNING JUDGE JAMES M. PETRUCELLI, No. 193 | MODIFIED DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC CENSURE |

I

INTRODUCTION AND SUMMARY

This disciplinary matter concerns Fresno County Superior Court Judge James M. Petrucelli. The commission commenced this inquiry with the filing of its Notice of Formal Proceedings (Notice) on October 8, 2014. The Notice charged Judge Petrucelli with engaging in judicial misconduct by calling the Fresno County jail and ordering the own recognizance (OR) release of a person he knew socially, Jay Ghazal. The Notice charged the judge with ordering the OR release based on his personal knowledge of Ghazal and ex parte communications with Attorney Jonathan Netzer who was a personal friend of both Ghazal and the judge. Ghazal had been arrested on spousal abuse charges, and his release violated a statute that prohibits an OR release on such charges prior to a hearing in open court and notice to the prosecution. The Notice also charged Judge Petrucelli with misconduct in conversing with Ghazal at a fundraiser event held the evening of Ghazal's release and, at Ghazal's request, calling a local defense attorney about representing Ghazal in the criminal matter.

The Supreme Court appointed three special masters who held an evidentiary hearing and reported to the commission. The masters are the Honorable Stuart R. Pollak, Associate Justice of the Court of Appeal, First Appellate District, Division Three; the Honorable Bradley L. Boeckman, Judge of the Shasta County Superior Court; and the

* The commission's decision and order entered August 18, 2015, was modified by order entered August 27, 2015. The modification did not have an effect on the order imposing discipline.

Honorable Ronni B. MacLaren, Judge of the Alameda County Superior Court. Judge Petrucelli is represented by Kathleen M. Ewins, Esq. and David S. McMonigle, Esq. of Long & Levit, LLP in San Francisco, California. The examiners for the commission are Gary W. Schons, Esq. and Assistant Trial Counsel Valerie Marchant, Esq.

A three-day evidentiary hearing was held before the special masters commencing February 2, 2015. The masters filed their report containing their findings of fact and conclusions of law on April 10, 2015. The commission heard oral argument on July 8, 2015.

The masters concluded that Judge Petrucelli engaged in prejudicial misconduct in ordering the OR release of Ghazal under circumstances that violated the California Code of Judicial Ethics, canon 1 (a judge shall uphold the integrity of the judiciary), canon 2 (a judge shall avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety), canon 2A (a judge shall respect and comply with the law), canon 2B(1) (a judge shall not allow social relationships to influence judicial conduct), canon 2B(2) (a judge shall not lend the prestige of judicial office to advance the personal interests of others), canon 3B(2) (a judge shall be faithful to the law), and canon 3B(7) (a judge shall accord to every person who has a legal interest in the proceeding the right to be heard). The masters concluded, "In the eyes of the public, Ghazal's OR release tends to reflect special treatment obtained as a result of personal connections between Ghazal, Netzer and Petrucelli, and thereby tends to diminish public confidence in the objectivity and impartiality of the judiciary." We agree, and also determine that the judge engaged in conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute. In issuing this censure, the most severe discipline that may be imposed short of removal,[1] we seek to assure the public that judicial action reflecting preferential treatment to friends or family, even if undertaken in good faith, is seriously at odds with the standards of judicial conduct expected of judges in this state.

[1] See California Constitution, article VI, section 18, subdivision (d).

II

FINDINGS OF FACT AND CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

A. Findings of Fact

The examiner has the burden of proving the charges by clear and convincing evidence. (Broadman v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1998) 18 Cal.4th 1079, 1090 [77 Cal.Rptr.2d 408, 959 P.2d 715] (Broadman).) "Evidence of a charge is clear and convincing so long as there is a 'high probability' that the charge is true. [Citations.]" (Ibid.)

Factual findings of the masters are entitled to special weight because the masters have "the advantage of observing the demeanor of the witnesses." (Broadman, supra, 18 Cal.4th at p. 1090; Inquiry Concerning Freedman (2007) 49 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 223, 232 (Freedman).) In keeping with this standard of deference set by the Supreme Court, we adopt the factual findings of the masters in their entirety. When material to our decision, we make additional factual findings shown by clear and convincing evidence based on our independent review of the record. (Inquiry Concerning Spitzer (2007) 49 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 254, 261; Freedman, supra, 49 Cal.4th CJP Supp. at p. 232; Geiler v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1973) 10 Cal.3d 270, 275 [110 Cal.Rptr. 201, 515 P.2d 1] (Geiler).)

OR Release of Ghazal

Judge Petrucelli and Attorney Netzer had been close friends for several years, a friendship developed through their mutual patronage of a cigar shop in Fresno, international trips together in 2012 and 2013, and membership in a men's group referred to as "HBC"[2] that congregated at the cigar shop. HBC members hosted monthly or quasi-monthly get-togethers at their homes. Judge Petrucelli would disqualify from any matter in which Netzer appeared before him.

Fresno businessman Jay Ghazal and Judge Petrucelli met about 10 years ago and became socially acquainted through their mutual membership in HBC and social gatherings at the homes of HBC members, including a barbecue at the judge's home in August 2013. The judge would disqualify if Ghazal appeared before him as a criminal defendant.

[2] HBC stands for Having Big Cigars.

Ghazal was arrested on Friday night, July 12, 2013, on charges of felony spousal abuse related to an incident with his wife. Ghazal contacted Attorney Netzer from the holding cell. During that evening and into early Saturday morning, Netzer and Ghazal communicated several times by phone and during Netzer's visit to the jail. Ghazal was "scared and frazzled" because he had not been booked, and thus could not bail out.

At approximately 9:00 a.m. Saturday morning, Netzer sent the following text message to the judge:

> Good morning Jim. One of our HBC members was arrested last night on a domestic violence claim. He's asked that I bail him out this morning. In 22 years of practice, th[is] is a first for me. Do you have any suggestions for me before I head down to jail? Thanks!

The judge promptly called Netzer and was told that Ghazal was arrested after an incident with his wife in which he grabbed her by the wrist. Netzer told the judge that Ghazal had been in custody for 12 hours without being booked and was scared. The judge volunteered to call the jail.

The judge had heard that Ghazal and his wife were obtaining a divorce, but was not aware of prior domestic violence in the relationship. He was under the impression that Ghazal's wife had not been physically injured.

After talking with Netzer, Judge Petrucelli called the jail to ask about Ghazal's booking status, and when he would be available for release on bail. He was transferred to Officer Marylou Merancio who testified that, after he identified himself as Judge Petrucelli, the judge stated he wanted to have an inmate released. The masters found a more complete and accurate statement is that the judge asked when Ghazal would be available for release on bail. Officer Merancio told the judge she would have her supervisor, Officer Crystal Galindo, contact him.

Officer Galindo called the judge at 9:51 a.m., after ascertaining that Ghazal had recently been booked on several charges including felony spousal abuse. The masters found that either Officer Galindo first asked Judge Petrucelli if he wanted Ghazal to be released on his own recognizance or Judge Petrucelli first asked about an OR release, but in all events the judge stated that he would like, or would be comfortable with, an OR release.[3] As Judge Petrucelli concedes, who first mentioned the possibility of an OR release is largely immaterial since the judge is responsible for making the order.

Officer Galindo contacted a retired correctional officer for advice and was told that telephonic release orders were not frequent, but were not uncommon. After Judge Petrucelli's identity as a judge was verified and the judge confirmed that "he wanted to do an over the phone release of inmate Ghazal," Lieutenant Michael Porter authorized Ghazal's release. The judge told jail personnel he would be willing to come to the jail and sign any required paperwork, but was informed that would not be necessary. Lieutenant Porter had been familiar with what had been referred to as "honor releases"[4] or "telephonic releases" for 25 years; however, they were rare and it had been some 10 to

---

[3] The examiner requests that the commission find that the judge admitted he formed the intent to OR release Ghazal before he spoke to Officer Galindo. This request is based on Judge Petrucelli's testimony that he "probably" made the decision to OR release Ghazal while he was waiting for Officer Galindo to call him (after his initial phone contact with Officer Merancio). However, the judge also testified that if he was going to pinpoint a period in time when he decided to order the OR release, "it would probably be at the time or right before [he] talked with Officer Galindo, and she said, 'Did you want him released?' And [he] said, 'Yeah, I'm comfortable with that.' She said, 'Do you want to release him on his own recognizance?' [He] said, 'Yeah, let me know what I need to do, I'd like to do that.'" When Special Master Pollak asked who first raised or mentioned the possibility of an OR release, the judge responded that he did not recall and could not say unequivocally, but thinks he said something to Officer Galindo like "'I'm comfortable with that,'" but he "very well may have said I want him released." Because the judge's testimony on this point was equivocal, we conclude the masters correctly found that the first mention of an OR release could have come from either the judge or Officer Galindo.

[4] The term "honor release" was used by some witnesses in reference to a telephonic OR release.

15 years since he had last handled one. He instructed jail personnel to complete a written form that existed for that purpose. When the form could not be found, the "honor release" was entered in the jail's tracking system. Ghazal was released at 10:48 a.m. on Saturday morning.

The release was in violation of Penal Code section 1270.1 (hereafter section 1270.1). That statute provides that before any person arrested for certain offenses, including spousal abuse, may be released on his or her own recognizance, a hearing must be held in open court and the prosecuting attorney and defense attorney must be given "a two-court-day written notice and an opportunity to be heard on the matter."

We find the following facts which were not included in the masters' report concerning the information available to Judge Petrucelli at the time he ordered Ghazal's release to be relevant to our determinations and supported by clear and convincing evidence based on our independent review of the record. The judge had never met or talked to Ghazal's wife. The only information the judge obtained about the facts and circumstances of the arrest came from Netzer, and the judge assumed this information came from Netzer's communications with Ghazal. The judge failed to take any steps to check whether Ghazal had a prior criminal history, or to ask Netzer if there had been prior domestic violence incidents.

Contact at Fundraiser and Connecting Ghazal with an Attorney

On the evening of Ghazal's release, Judge Petrucelli attended a charitable fundraising event attended by approximately 2,000 people, including both Ghazal and Netzer. Ghazal approached the judge and mentioned his upcoming court date. The judge told Ghazal that he could not discuss the matter, but that Ghazal should stay away from his wife. Ghazal asked Judge Petrucelli if he could help him find an attorney and the judge responded that he would see what he could do. The following Monday morning, the judge called Attorney Roger Nuttall, a well-respected criminal defense attorney, and asked if he was willing to speak with an acquaintance who had been arrested on spousal abuse charges. Nuttall said he was, and the judge called Ghazal and gave him Nuttall's contact information.

Subsequent Events at Court

Monday morning following Ghazal's release, Gayle Sherwood, a supervisor at the superior court, received an email from a correctional officer at the jail advising that Judge Petrucelli had "honor released" Ghazal, but there was no paperwork to forward to the court reflecting the action. This triggered a series of phone calls and emails between court personnel and the judge and his clerk to determine what had occurred and how the situation should be handled. The judge confirmed that he had ordered the release and stated he would sign any required paperwork. The judge's courtroom clerk sent the following email to a supervising judicial assistant:

> After speaking further with Judge, this was not something out of the ordinary or special. He said that he has never been asked to sign anything before so he's not sure about the paperwork or procedures on their/our end. He will be happy to sign something if you need him to for paperwork purposes in order to have the calendar setting done correctly but neither of us are sure what that might be at this moment. (He tried to phone earlier but was unable to reach you. If you need anything from him, defendant information, etc. then he will be happy to provide that to you if you come up.) Hope that helps.

That afternoon, Judge Petrucelli called Sherwood expressing his concern for the apparent confusion caused by the absence of normal paperwork. Sherwood testified that the judge was irate and confused; the masters found the judge testified credibly that he was simply frustrated and embarrassed by the confusion and extra work he had caused. During his conversation with Sherwood, the judge confirmed that he had authorized Ghazal's release and indicated he would disqualify from presiding over Ghazal's case. Sherwood testified the judge said something to the effect of "you know how these DV [domestic violence] cases are."

Since neither Sherwood nor the more experienced supervisors she reached out to had any experience with this type of "honor release" from jail, they had to create documents. Ghazal's matter ultimately was placed on calendar before a different judge.

When the matter was brought to the attention of Presiding Judge Gary Hoff, he promptly spoke with Judge Petrucelli. Judge Hoff told Judge Petrucelli that it was improper for him to handle a matter that was not assigned to him. Judge Petrucelli looked "shocked" and "dumbfounded." He stated that he thought his conduct was proper based on his understanding that other judges granted telephonic releases, but assured Judge Hoff that he would not do it again.

Judge Hoff told the judge that the matter would need to be reported to the commission and that he would give the judge the opportunity to self-report. Shortly after this conversation, Judge Petrucelli reported the matter to the commission.[5]

Judge Petrucelli's State of Mind

After listening critically to Judge Petrucelli's testimony and observing his demeanor, the masters accepted "the truth of his testimony that he believed he was acting properly when he authorized the OR release" based on his awareness that other judges in the past had ordered telephonic OR releases. This finding is supported by the following evidence.

Judge Petrucelli was a deputy sheriff in Fresno between 1974 and 1989. While working in the jail, he was aware of judges ordering telephonic OR releases and had seen a standard form that was used in connection with such releases. Shortly after he took judicial office, the judge had a conversation with then-Presiding Judge James Quashnick who confirmed that telephonic releases were ordered from time to time. Based on the testimony of numerous judges, attorneys, and sheriffs, the masters found the practice was utilized occasionally in the past, and less frequently in recent years. Other witnesses confirmed their understanding that the practice was still in occasional use, tending to confirm that its discontinuance was not universally known, and corroborating Judge Petrucelli's testimony that he thought the practice still existed. Lieutenant Porter knew of a printed form to be completed for such a release, although the form could not be located at the time of Ghazal's release. During the judge's discussions with jail personnel, no one suggested that there was any impropriety in authorizing Ghazal's OR release.

[5] We do not consider Judge Petrucelli's self-report to the commission to be a mitigating factor when he did so at the direction of his presiding judge and was told the presiding judge would report him if he did not do so himself.

Based on his personal knowledge of Ghazal's reputation as an upstanding member of the community, Judge Petrucelli concluded Ghazal was not a flight risk or a danger to his wife or others. He believed Ghazal would be subject to an emergency protective order upon release.

The masters found that the judge's belief that his actions were proper was corroborated by his reaction when questioned by his presiding judge. Judge Petrucelli acknowledged what he had done without attempting to conceal or twist the facts and Judge Hoff perceived that Judge Petrucelli was truly "amazed" to learn he had done something improper and that the past practice with which he was familiar was no longer considered appropriate.

Based on the foregoing evidence, we adopt the masters' finding that Judge Petrucelli believed he was acting in accordance with an established practice. Nevertheless, we consider the judge to have been exceedingly remiss in failing to inquire whether the "honor release" practice he became aware of years earlier was still considered proper, whether it was ever considered proper in a matter in which the judge would otherwise be disqualified, and whether there had been any changes in the law that would prohibit such a release.[6] Such inquiries might have prevented the judge from going down the path that led to these proceedings and this censure. The following additional facts from the record which were not included in the masters' report support our finding in this regard.

Judge Petrucelli could not recall the last time he heard of a judge issuing a telephonic OR release, but thought it was probably years and years ago. Judge Hoff may have been aware of the telephonic OR release practice in the past, but since becoming a judge in 1994, he has not heard of any judge, other than Judge Petrucelli, issuing a telephonic OR release. Judge Hoff has had several terms as presiding judge since the early 2000's. When Justice Gene M. Gomes was a superior court judge in Fresno from 1982 to 2002, he occasionally received calls from attorneys requesting an OR release of their client. He does not know if the practice has ended, but believes if it does still occur, it is less frequent because of changes in the law, such as the Victims Bill of Rights, which limit a judge's authority to engage in this practice. Earlier in his practice, Attorney Nuttall occasionally called a judge on the weekend to request an OR release for a client, even in a domestic violence case. Although Nuttall believes the practice is still ongoing, but less frequent, he stopped asking for telephonic releases around 2000 because times had changed, he thought it put the judge in an awkward position, and he no longer felt comfortable doing this.

---

[6] In addition to section 1270.1, enacted in 1999, the Victim's Bill of Rights (Marsy's Law), enacted in 2008, significantly expands the rights of victims in California, including requiring the court to consider the safety of the victim and the victim's family in fixing the amount of bail and release conditions for the defendant. (Cal. Const., art. I, § 28, subd. (b).)

Significantly, witnesses who confirmed the existence of a telephonic release practice in Fresno County described it in terms that would not have authorized Ghazal's release based on the limited information obtained by Judge Petrucelli. When Justice James Ardaiz was a trial judge in Fresno from 1981 until 1988, he occasionally received calls at home from attorneys requesting an OR release of a client. He only considered the request for nonviolent offenses, he insisted on being apprised accurately of the facts by either speaking with the arresting officer or the district attorney (DA), and he would require that the DA be contacted to determine if he or she objected to an OR release. When Lenore Schreiber was a judge in Fresno County from 1978 until 1982, she occasionally received calls at home from attorneys requesting an OR release for their clients. She asked the attorneys a series of questions, including whether the arrestee had an arrest record or prior convictions, the circumstances of the arrest, and she tried to speak with the arresting officer. Before Judge Ralph Nunez retired from the Fresno County Superior Court in 2003, he sometimes received calls from attorneys over the weekend requesting an OR release. If the attorney could not provide information on the arrestee's criminal background and arrest history, he called the jail to get the information.

In contrast to the process used by other judges, Judge Petrucelli relied entirely on information provided by Netzer, information he assumed came from Ghazal, and made no effort to determine independently the facts that led to the arrest, whether the wife was injured, or whether Ghazal had a history of domestic violence or criminal convictions. Nor did he make any effort to determine if Ghazal's wife or the DA objected to the release.

The masters also found that the examiner failed to prove that Judge Petrucelli acted for the corrupt purpose of using his judicial office to benefit a friend – a purpose other than the faithful discharge of judicial duties. The masters found that the judge ordered Ghazal's release because he was "genuinely concerned that an individual was being held in jail for some 12 hours unable to obtain release either on bail or on his own recognizance," and not simply because of his acquaintance with Ghazal or his friendship with Netzer.

Based on a cold record of the transcript of the hearing, we have difficulty agreeing with the masters' factual finding that the judge acted out of concern for a citizen rather than for the sole purpose of helping Netzer and Ghazal, a friend and acquaintance. The fact that the judge did not inquire whether other citizens were being held in jail for a long period without being able to post bail might suggest otherwise. However, the special masters are experienced jurists who had the advantage of seeing and hearing Judge Petrucelli testify over two days. While the commission has the authority to override the findings of the special masters, we are mindful that credibility determinations of the special masters are to be given "special weight" where they are based on the masters' observations of the witness's demeanor at a hearing. (Broadman, supra, 18 Cal.4th at p. 1090; Freedman, supra, 49 Cal.4th CJP Supp. at p. 243.) Therefore, we defer to the masters' finding that the judge did not act for a corrupt purpose or in bad faith.

B. Conclusions of Law

1. OR Release

Level of Misconduct

The masters concluded that in ordering the OR release of Ghazal, Judge Petrucelli violated canons 1, 2, 2A, 2B(1), 2B(2), 3B(2), and 3B(7). We agree and adopt these legal conclusions as our own.[7]

A violation of the Code of Judicial Ethics constitutes one of three levels of judicial misconduct: willful misconduct, prejudicial misconduct, or improper action. A judge who engages in willful or prejudicial misconduct may be subject to censure or removal. (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (d).) The masters concluded that Judge Petrucelli engaged in prejudicial misconduct by ordering Ghazal's OR release. Prejudicial misconduct is "conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute." (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (d).) Prejudicial misconduct while acting in a judicial capacity does not require bad faith; rather, it is "conduct which a judge undertakes in good faith but which nevertheless would appear to an objective observer to be not only unjudicial conduct but conduct prejudicial to public esteem for the judicial office." (Geiler, supra, 10 Cal.3d at p. 284.) We concur with the masters that the judge's conduct in ordering the OR release of an acquaintance based on the request of a friend diminishes public confidence in the objectivity and impartiality of the judiciary.

The examiner maintains that the judge committed willful misconduct, the most serious form of judicial misconduct. Willful misconduct is unjudicial conduct that is committed in bad faith by a judge acting in a judicial capacity. (Broadman, supra, 18 Cal.4th at p. 1091.) Neither party disputes that Judge Petrucelli engaged in unjudicial conduct[8] and was acting in a judicial capacity when he ordered Ghazal's release. The issue in dispute is whether the judge acted in bad faith.

---

[7] The judge was also charged with violating canon 3E(1), which requires disqualification as required by law. The masters declined to reach a legal conclusion with respect to this canon. As discussed later, we conclude the judge violated canon 3E(1) in ordering an OR release in a matter for which he was disqualified.

A judge acts in bad faith "only by (1) performing a judicial act for a corrupt purpose (which is any purpose other than the faithful discharge of judicial duties), or (2) performing a judicial act with knowledge that the act is beyond the judge's lawful judicial power, or (3) performing a judicial act that exceeds the judge's lawful power with a conscious disregard for the limits of the judge's authority." (Broadman, supra, 18 Cal.4th at p. 1092.)

In Broadman, the Supreme Court held that the intentional commission of an act the judge "should have known" was beyond the judge's lawful authority is insufficient to prove that the judge acted in bad faith. However, the court stated:

> Because transgressing the limits of a judge's lawful authority is not the faithful discharge of judicial duties, a judge who performs such acts with no regard at all for whether they are legally permitted cannot be said to be acting with a purpose to faithfully discharge judicial duties. Thus, a judge's reckless or utter indifference to whether judicial acts being performed exceed the bounds of the judge's prescribed power is a state of mind properly characterized as bad faith.

(Broadman, supra, 18 Cal.4th at pp. 1091-1092.)

The examiner urges the commission to address whether the particular circumstances here establish that Judge Petrucelli acted in "conscious disregard" of the limits of his judicial authority, or with a "reckless or utter indifference" to whether he was acting within his judicial power. In the examiner's view, the judge's state of mind was "tantamount to willful ignorance," because he relied on a practice he learned of years earlier and made no inquiry as to any applicable law before acting. The examiner also contends that the judge acted for a corrupt purpose even if he believed the process he employed was proper because his purpose was not the faithful discharge of judicial duties, but to obtain the release of someone he knew whose well-being was the subject of a friend's concern.

---

[8] Failure to comply with the canons of judicial ethics is generally considered to constitute unjudicial conduct. (Adams v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1994) 8 Cal.4th 630, 662 [34 Cal.Rptr.2d 641, 882 P.2d 358].)

We consider the judge's failure to make inquiries into the current state of the law and the propriety of authorizing a telephonic release of an inmate charged with spousal abuse to be exceptionally careless and irresponsible. However, based on the factual findings of the masters to which we have deferred, we conclude that this state of mind does not constitute clear and convincing evidence that the judge acted with a conscious disregard or a reckless or utter indifference to the limits of his judicial authority or for a corrupt purpose. The masters provided the following persuasive support for their conclusion that Judge Petrucelli did not act in bad faith: the judge testified credibly that he believed he was acting within his authority; the judge's experience as a deputy sheriff and his conversation with then-Presiding Judge Quashnick shortly after he took the bench provided a basis for his belief that telephonic releases were appropriate; the evidence established the practice was ongoing, although to a far more limited extent; and correctional officers did not question the judge's authority to OR release Ghazal and mentioned a form that had been used for telephonic releases.

We agree with the examiner that Judge Petrucelli should have known to make further inquiries before relying on a practice he learned of years earlier and should have considered whether the practice he relied on included ordering the release of persons with whom a judge had a relationship requiring disqualification. However, should have does not constitute bad faith. In the context of willful misconduct, Broadman equates bad faith with actual malice. (Broadman, supra, 18 Cal.4th at pp. 1091-1092.) We do not suggest that bad faith can only be established through an admission by the judge that he or she consciously acted outside the bounds of judicial authority. In Freedman, supra, 49 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 223, the judge testified he was not conscious of his delayed matters when he signed salary affidavits attesting that he did not have delayed cases under submission. The masters found this testimony to be credible. The commission adopted the masters' factual finding concerning the judge's state of mind, but concluded that in those instances where the judge executed salary affidavits shortly after being informed of having delayed matters, he acted with an utter indifference to whether the affidavits were true or false.

However, under the circumstances of this case, the evidence does not prove by clear and convincing evidence that Judge Petrucelli acted with an utter indifference to whether his actions exceeded his judicial authority.

The examiner also urges us to reject the masters' finding that the judge did not act for a corrupt purpose, and instead find that he acted for the sole purpose of helping an acquaintance at the behest of his good friend, a purpose other than the faithful discharge of judicial duties. Although our review of the record has given us pause, we decline to reject the masters' finding that the judge did not act for a corrupt purpose in deference to the special weight to which the credibility findings of the special masters are entitled.

Commission decisions cited by the examiner do not convince us to reject the masters' conclusion that Judge Petrucelli did not act in bad faith. In each of those cases, the masters made factual findings that the judge acted in bad faith, supporting the conclusion that the judge engaged in willful misconduct. (Inquiry Concerning Stanford (2012) 53 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 1 (Stanford) [judge conceded he acted for a purpose other than the faithful discharge of judicial duties by, in nine instances, diverting traffic tickets of family and friends to his own court and suspending fees and fines]; Inquiry Concerning O'Flaherty (2010) 50 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 1 [judge issued no-contact order with knowledge that it was beyond his judicial authority to do so]; Inquiry Concerning Platt (2002) 48 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 227 [masters rejected the judge's testimony that he did not realize that his actions were wrong when he dismissed several traffic tickets not before him for people he knew and attempted to influence other judicial officers on behalf of people he knew].)

For these reasons, we adopt the masters' legal conclusion that Judge Petrucelli's conduct in authorizing the OR release of Ghazal constitutes prejudicial misconduct.

Canon 3E(1) Violation

The Notice charged the judge with violating canon 3E(1), which requires a judge to disqualify in any proceeding in which disqualification is required by law. Judge

Petrucelli does not dispute that he would have been disqualified from presiding over Ghazal's criminal case in court and from presiding over any matter in which Netzer represented a party. However, he maintains that a telephonic OR release from jail is not subject to disqualification because it does not constitute a "proceeding" within the meaning of canon 3E(1). The examiner urges the commission to find a violation of canon 3E(1) because the judge's failure to disqualify encompasses "the essence of the misconduct."

The terminology section of the Code of Judicial Ethics defines both "impending proceeding" and "pending proceeding." An "impending proceeding" is defined as:

> [A] proceeding or matter that is imminent or expected to occur in the near future. The words "proceeding" and "matter" are used interchangeably, and are intended to have the same meaning.

A "pending proceeding" is defined as:

> [A] proceeding or matter that has commenced. A proceeding continues to be pending through any period during which an appeal may be filed and any appellate process until final disposition. The words "proceeding" and "matter" are used interchangeably, and are intended to have the same meaning.

Both definitions refer to specific canons, but neither refers to 3E(1).

Judge Petrucelli took judicial action after Ghazal had been arrested, but before the matter appeared in court. Because canon 3E(1) refers only to "proceeding," rather than "pending" or "impending" proceeding, we must address the question of whether a proceeding requiring disqualification includes matters that are expected to occur in court in the near future or is limited to court proceedings.

The rules governing interpretation of statutes, constitutional provisions and voter initiatives provide guidance. First, words must be construed in accordance with their usual and ordinary meaning. (The Recorder v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1999) 72 Cal.App.4th 258, 268-269 [85 Cal.Rptr.2d 56] (Recorder); Lennane v. Franchise Tax Bd. (1994) 9 Cal.4th 263, 268 [36 Cal.Rptr.2d 563, 885 P.2d 976].) Second, where there is ambiguity, the language must be given a fair and reasonable interpretation, with due regard to the purpose sought to be accomplished. (Cedars of Lebanon Hosp. v. County of L.A. (1950) 35 Cal.2d 729, 734-735 [221 P.2d 31, 15 A.L.R.2d 1045].)

First, we look at the ordinary meaning of "proceeding" and "matter" (the terminology section of the Code of Judicial Ethics states that "proceeding" and "matter" are used interchangeably and are intended to have the same meaning). Common dictionary definitions of proceeding include event, official record of a thing said or done, legal action, and transaction. (Merriam-Webster's Collegiate Dict. (11th ed. 2012) p. 990; Santos v. Brown (2015) 238 Cal.App.4th 398, 416.) "Matter" in this context is defined as a subject under consideration, a subject of disagreement or litigation, something to be proved in law. (Merriam-Webster's Collegiate Dict. (11th ed. 2012) p. 766.)

The Supreme Court has described the term "proceeding" as malleable, the meaning of which depends on the context and subject to which it relates. (Recorder, supra, 72 Cal.App.4th at p. 270.) "'[P]roceeding' in a legal context generally refers to the conduct of judicial business." (Santos, supra, 238 Cal.App.4th at p. 416.) Judge Petrucelli does not dispute that he was taking judicial action when he ordered Ghazal's release. In the commission's view, the usual or ordinary meaning of proceeding, both in a common and legal context, encompasses judicial action in ordering an OR release from jail.

To the extent there is ambiguity, we interpret "proceeding" in a manner that effectuates the intent or purpose of the canon. The purpose of a canon requiring disqualification as required by law is to "assure the parties and the public of the integrity and fairness of the judicial process." (Rothman, Cal. Judicial Conduct Handbook (3d ed. 2007) § 7.00, p. 293.) Thus, disqualification benefits not only the parties, but the public as a whole. (Flamm, Judicial Disqualification (2d ed. 2007) § 17.5, p. 497.) If "proceeding" is limited to actions pending in court, a judge with a disqualifying interest would not be disqualified from making probable cause determinations and signing search and arrest warrants. (See In re Krull (Iowa 2015) 860 N.W.2d 38 [magistrate reprimanded for violating Iowa rule requiring disqualification from any "proceeding" in which the judicial officer's impartiality might reasonably be questioned by signing a pre-arrest warrant to search the residence of a person with whom the judge had a relationship requiring disqualification].) A narrow interpretation of "proceeding" that excludes judicial action taken before a criminal case is filed would defeat the intent of canon 3E(1) – to assure the public that judicial action will be exercised impartially. This purpose is best accomplished through an interpretation of "proceeding" that encompasses pre-filing judicial determinations.

Having determined that canon 3E(1) applies to the telephonic OR release process employed by Judge Petrucelli, we turn to the question of whether the judge was required to disqualify. Grounds for disqualification by law include when a person aware of the facts might reasonably entertain a doubt about the judge's impartiality, when the judge believes there is a substantial doubt as to his or her ability to be fair, and when the judge has personal knowledge of disputed facts. (Code of Civ. Proc., §§ 170.1(a)(6)(A)(ii), (iii); 170.1(a)(1)(A), (B).) Judge Petrucelli testified that he would disqualify from any matter in which Netzer appeared as an attorney and from any criminal case in which Ghazal was a defendant. Moreover, while the judge describes Ghazal as an "acquaintance," the relationship is sufficiently close that a person aware of the facts might reasonably entertain a doubt about the judge's impartiality. (Code of Civ. Proc., § 170.1(a)(6)(A)(iii).) The judge, Netzer, and Ghazal belonged to HBC, a group of 10 to 13 individuals who socialized together and hosted social events at their homes every month or two. Ghazal attended approximately half of these events. The judge made judicial determinations in relation to his decision to OR release Ghazal based on his personal knowledge and opinion of Ghazal. Further, through his contacts with HBC members, the judge acquired information about Ghazal's relationship with his wife that could be material to the spousal abuse charges for which Ghazal was arrested and prosecuted. He also considered facts he knew from his personal relationship with Ghazal, such as Ghazal's close relationship with his daughter, in making a judicial determination concerning his flight risk.

As Special Master MacLaren observed in her inquiry of the judge:

> [I]s this a fair statement, that factors that caused you [the judge] to believe that this would be an appropriate situation for an honor release, namely, that this was someone known in the community, a person of relative good standing, you were unaware of any past run-ins with the law, did not believe him to be a flight risk or a danger to the public, that that's what – that's what made you comfortable going forward with asking for the honor release . . . . [¶] . . . [¶] . . . And it was those same facts that also would have caused you to disqualify yourself because . . . that would be information you have about this individual and a prior relationship that would raise doubts about your ability to be fair?

The judge agreed this was a fair statement.

For these reasons, we conclude that Judge Petrucelli violated canon 3E(1) by failing to disqualify from making a determination concerning Ghazal's release from jail.

2. Contacts at Fundraising Event and Assisting Ghazal in Retaining an Attorney

The masters concluded that Judge Petrucelli's brief remarks to Ghazal at a fundraiser on the evening of his release and the calls he made to put Ghazal in touch with an attorney do not constitute misconduct. We agree that the brief remarks at the fundraiser, a contact initiated by Ghazal, do not constitute misconduct. However, we conclude that the judge's efforts to assist Ghazal in retaining an attorney constitutes a violation of canons 2 (judge shall avoid appearance of impropriety) and 2A (judge shall act in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary). The judge called Attorney Nuttall[9] about representing Ghazal after having just taken judicial action to obtain Ghazal's release. He then called Ghazal on his cell phone and gave him Nuttall's contact information. Under these circumstances, the judge's efforts to put Ghazal in touch with Nuttall reinforces the appearance that he was acting to benefit a friend and undermines public confidence in the impartiality of the judiciary.

[9] Judge Petrucelli recuses from hearing Nuttall's cases.

III

DISCIPLINE

Judge Petrucelli has engaged in serious misconduct involving the misuse of judicial office, conduct that reflects poorly on the impartiality and integrity of the judiciary. Considered together with his history of prior discipline, his misconduct might warrant removal. However, after careful consideration of the multiple factors discussed below, including that this is an isolated incident, and in deference to the masters' finding that the judge acted in good faith, we have determined to impose this severe censure rather than the ultimate sanction of removal.[10]

Determining the appropriate discipline depends to a large extent on the nature and number of incidents of misconduct. (Furey v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1987) 43 Cal.3d 1297, 1307, fn. 2 [240 Cal.Rptr. 859, 743 P.2d 919].) First, we look to whether the misconduct is an isolated incident or whether there are a number of incidents demonstrating a pattern of misconduct. (Fletcher v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1998) 19 Cal.4th 865, 918 [81 Cal.Rptr.2d 58, 968 P.2d 958].) Although Judge Petrucelli committed multiple ethical violations within a course of conduct, the crux of his misconduct involved the OR release of Ghazal. There is no indication that he has engaged in a pattern of similar misconduct. As such, we agree with the masters that the misconduct is an isolated incident and does not reflect a pattern.

It is not only the number of incidents of misconduct that guides our determination of the appropriate level of discipline. The nature and seriousness of the misconduct is an equally important consideration. A single incident of misconduct may itself be sufficiently serious, particularly if of a corrupt nature, to warrant severe discipline, including removal. (Inquiry Concerning MacEachern (2008) 49 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 289, 307.)

Judge Petrucelli has committed serious misconduct, though not of a corrupt nature. Not only did he abuse his authority by taking judicial action in a matter that had not been assigned to him and contrary to section 1270.1, he did so under circumstances that created the appearance that he was providing special treatment to his friend and acquaintance. The commission has repeatedly condemned conduct that creates the appearance of a "two-track system of justice – one for those with special access to the judge, and the other for everyone else." (E.g., Inquiry Concerning Wasilenko (2005) 49 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 26, 51; Platt, supra, 48 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 227; Stanford, supra, 53 Cal.4th CJP Supp. at p. 43; Inquiry Concerning Mills (2013) 57 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 1, 13.) Providing procedural shortcuts or lenient treatment to friends or family "subverts the impartiality of the judicial system and undermines respect for the judiciary as a whole." (Stanford, supra, 53 Cal.4th CJP Supp. at p. 25.) While many of the commission decisions in this regard involve traffic tickets, we consider the release of a person arrested for spousal abuse to be even more serious and detrimental to public esteem for the judiciary because it raises public safety concerns.

---

[10] In our analysis of the appropriate level of discipline, we include the aggravating and mitigating factors discussed in the masters' report to the extent we consider those factors to be aggravating or mitigating.

In aggravation, the judge failed to make independent inquiries concerning the facts and circumstances of the domestic abuse incident that led to Ghazal's arrest and failed to comply with section 1270.1. The limitations on issuing OR releases of defendants arrested for spousal abuse protect the victim by giving the prosecutor and the victim notice and an opportunity to object to the defendant's release.[11] Without that opportunity, the victim's safety could be jeopardized.

---

[11] The legislative history of section 1270.1 states in pertinent part: "The Legislature . . . finds that it is necessary that a judge or magistrate be fully informed of all aspects of the charged crimes and any and all possible relevant background information about the defendant, including prior violent acts, the threat of prior violent acts, possession of dangerous and deadly weapons, prior arrests and convictions, violations of law, jail incident reports, and the existence of any other relevant information and, in particular, information that may bear on the danger the defendant may present to the public and the likelihood that defendant may commit future crimes if released pending trial. [¶] . . . The Legislature further finds that it is necessary for both the victim or victims to have the opportunity to be heard regarding the setting of bail in order to bring relevant information to the court's attention." (Stats. 1999, ch. 703, § 1, p. 5082.)

Judge Petrucelli testified that he was not aware of section 1270.1. When asked whether, as a judge, he had a duty to be knowledgeable about the law, he testified, "Certainly that is my duty, but today as much as we do, I don't know that I can keep up with or any judge can keep up on all of the changes and all of the different laws that we deal with." Section 1270.1 was enacted in 1999 and the Victim's Bill of Rights (Marsy's Law), which includes other pertinent rights and protections guaranteed to victims, was enacted in 2008. The public has a right to expect that judges keep abreast of changes in the law before taking judicial action, particularly changes that affect public safety.

A Fresno County district attorney stated that the district attorney's office would be deeply concerned about anyone booked on domestic violence charges being released without notice and without an opportunity for the district attorney to be heard. He believes it diminishes the criminal justice system for one branch to act unilaterally without complying with the requirements of the statute. We agree.

Judge Petrucelli presented evidence of his background in working on domestic violence issues and his sensitivity to victims of domestic violence. He was instrumental in instituting a roundtable in Fresno County to work on ways to provide assistance to victims of domestic violence and to educate the public about domestic violence. He received awards for his work with domestic violence. This background makes it all the more troubling that Judge Petrucelli was not sensitive to the risks inherent in releasing a person arrested for spousal abuse without contacting the alleged victim, the police or the prosecutor or conducting a criminal background check. Instead, his conduct created the appearance that he allowed his personal relationships with Ghazal and Netzer to overshadow his judicial responsibility to ensure public safety and treated this case differently than he treated other domestic violence cases.

We have also taken into consideration Judge Petrucelli's history of prior discipline. Judge Petrucelli previously has been disciplined three times: he was publicly admonished in 2007 and received two advisory letters, in 2001 and 2002. For the most part, the basis of the prior discipline pertained to the judge's courtroom demeanor and did not involve conduct similar to the misconduct in this matter. However, the judge's 2002 advisory letter included his misconduct in failing to disqualify in matters involving an attorney with whom he had practiced and had a continued financial arrangement (he did disclose) in violation of canon 3E(1), the same canon he violated in this matter.

In mitigation, Judge Petrucelli acknowledges the impropriety and serious nature of his misconduct and immediately took responsibility when confronted by his presiding judge. This is an important factor since recognition of the impropriety and nature of wrongdoing is essential to a willingness and capacity to reform. (Platt, supra, 48 Cal.4th CJP Supp. at p. 248.)

Further, the record supports the masters' finding that Judge Petrucelli is a dedicated, hardworking judge who has contributed positively to the workings of the court and to his community. Judicial colleagues described his excellent work ethic and willingness to accept all assignments. Attorneys and others who appear or work in the judge's courtroom praised the judge's judicial behavior and performance. Members of the community described Judge Petrucelli's commitment to public service and to charitable causes and programs.

Balancing the foregoing factors, the commission concludes that the purposes of judicial discipline – protection of the public, enforcement of rigorous standards of judicial conduct, and the maintenance of public confidence in the integrity and independence of the judicial system – can be accomplished through a severe censure. Accordingly, pursuant to article VI, section 18 of the California Constitution, the commission hereby imposes this public censure of Judge Petrucelli.

Commission members Hon. Erica R. Yew, Ms. Pattyl A. Kasparian, Hon. Thomas M. Maddock, Hon. Ignazio J. Ruvolo, Mr. Richard Simpson, and Mr. Adam N. Torres voted in favor of all the findings and conclusions expressed herein and in the order imposing a severe public censure. Commission members Ms. Mary Lou Aranguren and Ms. Sandra Talcott voted in favor of imposition of a severe public censure and all the findings and conclusions expressed herein, except the commission's conclusion that the judge's conduct in ordering Ghazal's OR release does not constitute willful misconduct. Commission members Dr. Michael A. Moodian and Nanci E. Nishimura, Esq. did not participate. Commission member Anthony P. Capozzi, Esq. was recused.

Date: August 27, 2015

Hon. Erica R. Yew
Chairperson

FILED
FEB 04 2016
COMMISSION ON
JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

STATE OF CALIFORNIA

BEFORE THE COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

| | |
|---|---|
| INQUIRY CONCERNING JUDGE JOHN A. TRICE,No. 196 | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC CENSURE PURSUANT TO STIPULATION (Commission Rule 127) |

I

INTRODUCTION AND SUMMARY

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge John A. Trice, a judge of the San Luis Obispo County Superior Court since 2003. On October 23, 2015, the commission filed its Notice of Formal Proceedings (Notice) against Judge Trice.

The Supreme Court appointed three special masters to hold an evidentiary hearing and to report to the commission. The masters are Hon. M. Kathleen Butz, Justice of the Court of Appeal, Third Appellate District; Hon. Anthony J. Mohr, Judge of the Los Angeles County Superior Court; and Hon. Stanford E. Reichert, Judge of the San Bernardino County Superior Court.[1] Prior to the masters holding an evidentiary hearing, however, Judge Trice and his counsel, Eugene G. Iredale, Esq., and the examiner for the commission, Gary W. Schons, Esq., (the parties) proposed a stipulated resolution of this inquiry to the commission, as follows.

[1] On January 20, 2016, Judge Trice filed with the commission a "Suggestion for Recusal of Judge Anthony Mohr." On January 21, 2016, Judge Mohr filed an answer to Judge Trice's suggestion for recusal, and on January 25, 2016, filed a supplemental declaration. On January 22, 2016, Judge Trice filed a "Supplemental Memorandum in Support of Motion for Recusal." On January 22, 2016, the examiner filed a "Response to Respondent's Suggestion for Recusal of Judge Anthony Mohr." It was not necessary for the commission to make a determination on the judge's recusal motion, because the commission considered and accepted this Stipulation without the participation or involvement of the special masters, and the Stipulation resolves this matter without a hearing and without further involvement of the special masters. Subsequent to the filing of Judge' Trice's "Suggestion for Recusal," Judge Mohr did not participate in any decisions or proceedings related to this matter, other than filing his answer and supplemental declaration in connection with respondent's motion to recuse.

By a Stipulation for Discipline by Consent (Stipulation), the parties proposed, pursuant to Commission Rule 127(b), that this inquiry concerning Judge Trice be resolved with the imposition of a public censure based upon the stipulated facts and legal conclusions. Judge Trice expressly admits the truth of the stipulated facts and agrees with the stipulated legal conclusions. According to the terms of the Stipulation, Judge Trice also agrees that in its decision and order imposing a public censure, the commission may articulate the reasons for its decision and include explanatory language the commission deems appropriate. Pursuant to the Stipulation, Judge Trice waives further proceedings and review in this matter, including formal proceedings (rule 118, et seq.) and review by the California Supreme Court (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 9.60).

Judge Trice also executed on January 22, 2016, the requisite Affidavit of Consent (Affidavit) under rule 127(d) in which he admits the truth of the charges as modified by the Stipulation, consents to the imposition of a public censure, and waives review by the California Supreme Court.

This Decision and Order imposing a public censure is issued following the commission's vote to accept the stipulated agreement. The findings and conclusions, set forth herein, are based on the Stipulation and Affidavit, which are attached to this decision.

II

STIPULATED FACTS AND LEGAL CONCLUSIONS

Judge John A. Trice became a judge of the San Luis Obispo County Superior Court in 2003, following his election to that office. His current term began in January 2015.

Count One A

In 1990, judgment was entered in the marital dissolution matter of John A. Trice v. Dawna L. Trice, No. DR17310. Pursuant to the judgment, which was drafted by the judge's counsel, Judge Trice, then an attorney, was ordered to pay his ex-wife her interest in his future military retirement and pension benefits "as and when received." A formula was provided to calculate the ex-wife's share of the pension benefit ultimately awarded. This provision was also contained in a Marital Settlement Agreement (MSA), signed by Judge Trice, that was incorporated into the judgment. That provision provided as follows:

> The Court specifically retains jurisdiction over Petitioner's retirement benefits with the Un[it]ed States Air [F]orce and Petitioner is ordered to pay to Respondent her interest in the retirement and pension benefits as and when received on the following formula: Respondent's interest equals one-half (1/2) times the gross monthly benefits times a fraction, the numerator of which is 3,402 points and the denominator of which is the total number of points accumulated by Petitioner in past and future service in the United States Air [F]orce and/or Reserve duty.

Dawna[2] was represented in the dissolution proceeding by attorney Patrick Perry, a certified family law specialist. In 2004, Perry was appointed as a commissioner by the San Luis Obispo County Superior Court, and continues to serve in that capacity. In 1990, after the divorce was final, Dawna remarried and moved to Arizona where she has maintained the same residence (and same telephone number) to the present.

In late 2011 or early 2012, Judge Trice recognized that he would be eligible to retire from the Air Force in June 2012 on his 60th birthday (June 14, 2012) and to then begin to receive his military pension benefits. He also recognized that the divorce judgment entitled his ex-wife to a specific portion of those benefits based on the formula provided in the judgment and MSA. (Judge Trice retained a copy of the judgment and MSA in his chambers.) Judge Trice also knew, and had records of, the precise number of points he had earned during his active and Reserve military service (4,082), which had ended in 2002 when he ceased his Reserve service.

---

[2] In order to avoid confusion, Judge Trice's ex-wife and current wife, Mary Trice, are referred to, in this decision, by their first names.

In March 2012, Judge Trice received correspondence from the Air Force confirming his eligibility to retire and to begin to receive pension benefits in June. On March 26, 2012, he made application for his retirement benefits. In April 2012, Judge Trice received correspondence from the Air Force informing him that he would be placed on the Air Force Retired List, effective June 14, 2012, and that a pay account for his benefit was being established. The letter also provided an address and phone number for "any questions concerning retired pay." Judge Trice called the Air Force and advised an Air Force representative that his ex-wife had an interest in a portion of his pension benefits. Judge Trice was advised that in order for his ex-wife to receive direct payment from the Air Force, she would have to apply and provide certain documentation.

At about this time, Judge Trice recalls that he had a couple of informal conversations with his bench colleague Commissioner Perry, with whom he was on a friendly basis and with whom he would have lunch on a regular basis.

According to the judge, in both of these conversations, he posed hypothetical questions to Commissioner Perry concerning an ex-spouse's interest in his or her former spouse's military pension, where the military spouse had been promoted in rank after the divorce. The questions were posed as hypotheticals to avoid the conflict Commissioner Perry would have in advising the judge concerning his divorce from Dawna. One conversation concerned whether the ex-spouse's interest would be based on the military spouse's rank at the time of divorce, or at the time of retirement when the rank was higher. According to the judge, Commissioner Perry opined that it would be at the higher rank. The second conversation, according to the judge, concerned whether the military spouse was responsible for determining the amount the ex-spouse was entitled to where there had been a change in rank post-divorce, and whether the ex-spouse should be contacted. According to the judge, the commissioner opined that if the court had retained jurisdiction over the matter, it was up to the person who wished to modify the judgment to go back to court to obtain a subsequent order concerning the pension. According to the judge, he interpreted what the commissioner said to mean that if Dawna wanted her share of the pension, she could go back to court and get an order as to the specific amount she was entitled to. Judge Trice recalls that the second conversation ended with either he or the commissioner making a "joke" to the effect that if the ex-spouse did not make a claim on the pension, the military spouse could keep the money. The judge recalls that either he or the commissioner responded, "No, can't do that."

On a day subsequent to these informal conversations, Judge Trice had a conversation with Commissioner Perry about his military pension benefits. Judge Trice was in his chambers when Commissioner Perry happened to walk by. Judge Trice called the commissioner into his chambers. Judge Trice had the judgment and MSA out on his desk as he was trying to determine his ex-wife's share of the retirement benefits based on the formula provided in the judgment. According to Judge Trice, he told Commissioner Perry his final service points – 4,082 – and the commissioner, using the formula in the judgment, which included Dawna's "share" of the judge's points, and an estimate that Judge Trice provided of what his benefit amount would be based on his salary as a Lieutenant Colonel, calculated an estimate of Dawna's share. According to the judge, the commissioner calculated that Dawna's share was approximately 40 percent of the retirement benefit, that Judge Trice would retain approximately $900 per month, and that Dawna was entitled to approximately $700 per month.

In June 2012, Judge Trice became eligible to receive his monthly military retirement payments. That month he received correspondence from the Air Force which showed his gross retired pay ($2,394), deductions for taxes and his current wife's survivor benefit, and net pay ($2,076.38). On July 2, Judge Trice received his first monthly benefit payment for the period June 14-30, 2012, in the gross amount of $1,356.60, of which, after deduction for taxes, $1,228.44 was directly deposited into a savings account Judge Trice had designated at the San Luis Obispo Credit Union (SLOCU). That account was in the names of the judge and his current wife Mary Trice (Mary). On August 1, Judge Trice received his first full month's pension benefit – $2,076.38 – which was directly deposited into this credit union account. Thereafter, he received this payment (or an adjusted amount) monthly.

Judge Trice claims that at the time he did not pay attention to that portion of the judgment which required him to pay his ex-wife her share of the pension benefits "as and when received," despite having the judgment readily at hand in his chambers, and having recently referred to that precise provision of the judgment in order to derive the payment formula for his ex-wife's share. Judge Trice admits he did not advise Dawna that he had retired from the Air Force and was receiving the pension benefit. He assumed she would be able to determine that fact from several close relatives she had in the military. The judge has stated that he told his adult son and daughter that he had retired from the Air Force. The judge admitted that he did not want to notify his ex-wife and then have to do the work to get her share of the benefit to her directly from the Air Force.

Judge Trice admits that he had the means and ability to contact his ex-wife. In addition, Judge Trice spent three days in Arizona in September 2013, when he attended their son's wedding ceremony. He interacted with Dawna on each of those days, including at the rehearsal dinner and wedding. At no time did he advise her that he was retired and receiving the pension benefits. The judge has stated that he relied on his belief that in 1990, Dawna had received a copy of a forensic accountant's report which set out the specific date of his eligibility for retirement benefits. Finally, Judge Trice had no knowledge that any of Dawna's family relations knew that she was entitled to receive a portion of his military retirement benefits. Instead of paying Dawna her share of the pension benefits "as and when received," each month, Judge Trice directed a transfer from his credit union savings account, into which he received the benefit payment directly from the Air Force, into a separate checking account at the credit union. For the months of August, September, and October 2012 he transferred $700, the value of Dawna's share as estimated by Commissioner Perry, according to the judge, into the checking account. The checking account was owned solely by Judge Trice and Mary; it was not a trust account and Dawna was not named as a beneficiary of the account.

In September 2012, Judge Trice and Mary met with their financial advisor, Joan Parker, CFP. Judge Trice informed Parker that his ex-wife was entitled to a portion of his military retirement benefits, which he estimated was 30 percent of the benefit, and that he was setting aside $700 per month. The judge told Parker that his ex-wife had not claimed her share of his pension and that he was setting the money aside in a savings account in case she was to claim it at a later date. The judge said he assumed he would have to pay the money to his ex-wife or the government at some later date.

In a letter dated October 12, 2012, Parker advised Judge Trice that based on the information he had given her, he should set aside only $440 as his ex-wife's (net) share because he was paying taxes on the entire pension benefit. On October 19, Judge Trice withdrew $1,000 from the checking account (presumably to recover the "excess" payments into the account) and thereafter transferred $440 monthly into that account.

On April 17, 2014, Commissioner Perry contacted Dawna by phone. He asked if she was aware that the judge had retired from the military and if she was receiving her share of his military pension. Dawna informed the commissioner that she did not know the judge had retired and that she had not been receiving her share of his pension payments.

On April 25, 2014, Commissioner Perry submitted a letter of complaint to the commission concerning the judge's failure to have paid Dawna her share of his military pension.

On May 1, 2014, a final deposit of $440 was made into the SLOCU checking account (from the SLOCU savings account). As of that date, the balance in the checking account was $9,895.

Commissioner Perry provided the names of two family law attorneys to Dawna. Dawna subsequently hired attorney Christopher Duenow. On May 21, 2014, Duenow contacted the judge by phone. Duenow told the judge that he was in violation of the divorce judgment because he had not paid Dawna her share of his military pension benefits for two years. The judge told Duenow words to the effect of, "I assumed she didn't want it because she didn't make a claim for it."

On May 22, 2014, Duenow met with the judge in chambers for almost an hour to discuss a resolution to the pension arrears issue. On May 23, Duenow had a telephone conference with the judge and Mary. The judge offered to settle for $10,000. The judge made a statement to Duenow wherein he stated that he failed to make the pension payments to Dawna on advice he claimed to have received from Commissioner Perry. (This matter is discussed further below.)

Later that day, Duenow sent the judge and Mary an email that included as an attachment a calculation of the amount owed to Dawna, $22,769.17 ($20,819 in principal and $1,950.17 in interest).

On May 24, 2014, Dawna received an email from Mary, which stated:

> Hi Dawna,
>
> I want to share a little history with you.
>
> Two years ago John was notified that he could receive retirement income from the service. He knew of your judgment/order and sought professional CPA and legal advice to figure out the percentage because it is a complicated calculation.
>
> First he talked to Pat Perry, who said that since he no longer represented you, he could assist John in the calculation, which he did. He also specifically told John that it was not his responsibility to initiate the order and that it was yours. That advice was reiterated by the Air Force representative in Denver when John called them to start drawing his retirement. They indicated they needed a copy of the court order from you and could not make the calculation until you provided a W-4 and withholding information.
>
> He then contacted our financial advisor, who did the calculation again and came up with a figure that he should set aside for you, which he did. That money has been waiting for you and has amounted to approximately $9,800. We have paid state and federal taxes on the entire amount for the past two years, which further complicates the calculation. The figure that Duenow has come up with is about double what everyone advised John to set aside. He contacted our CPA again yesterday to re-run the numbers. There is obviously a mistake somewhere and if it is on John's side it will be corrected. There was absolutely no intention to defraud you.

> I have chosen to write this email because I feel you and I have had a friendly relationship and I am upset that you probably think John has done something dishonest when he was following professional advice. I am also upset because I am assuming that when you called Pat Perry, he neglected to give you this history and probably just flippantly said something to the effect of "Oh, he's been drawing retirement for two years."
>
> So there is John's side of the story.
> I hope this helps and we can get back to where we were.
>
> Mary

On June 9, 2014, the judge spoke with Parker by phone asking her to review Duenow's calculation of what the judge owed his ex-wife in arrears. The judge subsequently provided to Parker copies of pension statements for June 21, 2012, and June 20, 2013 through May 20, 2014, and a copy of the page from the MSA that contained the formula for dividing the pension. On the MSA page, the judge had handwritten in his service point total, 4,082.

On June 19, 2014, Parker wrote a letter to the judge and Mary wherein she provided her calculation of the amount owed to Dawna as of May 31, 2014, $15,600. In arriving at this figure, Parker calculated the interest owed to Dawna using the daily interest rates for 52-week Treasury Bills rather than the legal interest rate of 10 percent. Further, Parker noted in the letter that if she had been aware that Dawna's share of the judge's pension was about 41.7 percent, as indicated by the formula in the MSA, "and not 30%" (as the judge had told her on September 26, 2012), she would have recommended that he set aside $650 per month rather than $440.

On July 10, 2014, Duenow sent the judge and Mary an email setting forth the terms of Dawna's final counteroffer. Dawna offered to settle her claim for $20,000, which Duenow indicated was a discounted amount in consideration for the taxes the judge had paid on Dawna's share of the pension. Mary subsequently sent Duenow an email stating that the judge could pay $19,000 forthwith and $1,750 in August. Duenow responded that the judge's offer was agreeable.

Thereafter, in July 2014, the judge, Dawna, and Duenow signed a stipulation addressing the pension arrears, Stipulation Re Payment of Military Benefits Pending Direct Distribution Order. The stipulation stated that the 1990 dissolution judgment "provided that John pay Dawna her interest in John's retirement benefits with the United States Air Force as and when received." The stipulation stated that "[t]o satisfy all arrears for non-payment of Dawn's [sic] interest in John's retirement benefits through June, 2014, John shall pay Dawna $19,000 upon full execution of this stipulation." The stipulation further stated that John was to pay Dawna $1,750 for July and August 2014, and then $750 per month thereafter until Dawna began receiving direct payment of her share from the military.

In conjunction with the stipulation, the judge, Dawna, and Duenow also signed a Qualifying Court Order re: Military Retirement Benefits, the purpose of which was to allow Dawna to receive direct payment of her share from the military. This order provided that Dawna's share of the pension benefit was 44.6 percent (rather than 41.7 percent), because of the amount deducted from the gross pension amount to pay for a spousal survivor benefit for Mary.

The judge made the payments to Dawna that were required under the terms of the stipulation. Beginning on or about October 31, 2014, Dawna began receiving her share of the judge's military pension directly from the military.

Judge Trice's course of conduct with respect to complying with the provisions of the judgment requiring him to pay his ex-wife the designated portion of his military retirement benefits "as and when received on the following formula" demonstrated a disregard of the command of the judgment and his legal obligation to abide by it. Setting aside a rough approximation based on incomplete information of the ex-wife's share of the benefit in an account in the judge's name, and under his control, did not reflect a good faith effort to comply with the judgment. Additionally, the advice the judge received from the Air Force, and the opinions he recalls were expressed by Commissioner Perry in response to his hypothetical questions were not based on the complete provision of the facts necessary to obtain a valid legal opinion upon which Judge Trice was entitled to rely.

The information the judge received from the Air Force related solely to an ex-spouse obtaining an order for the Air Force to pay the ex-spouse directly. This was not what the judgment provided for; rather, the judgment required the judge to pay his ex-wife "as and when" he received the benefits. Dawna did not need to apply to the Air Force in order to receive her share of the pension benefits; the judge was obligated to pay her directly under the terms of the judgment.

The opinions the judge asserts that Commissioner Perry expressed in response to his hypothetical questions did not justify the judge's course of conduct. In particular, under the terms of the divorce judgment, the judge's rank at the time of his military retirement was not relevant to the calculation of Dawna's share of his military pension, and there was no need for her to obtain a further court order to obtain her share. If the judge wished to seek a modification of the judgment due to promotions in rank he received post-divorce, then it was incumbent on him to seek a modification order from the court.

Further, the advice the judge received from the Air Force and the opinions he recalls were expressed by Commissioner Perry did not take into account that the judge did not advise his ex-wife he was retired and receiving retirement benefits. Without this information, the judge's ex-wife had no reason to affirmatively seek direct payment from the Air Force or a modification or enforcement order from the court.

The judge's ex-wife's interest in his military pension was not contingent on her requesting it; rather, she was an owner of her community share of the pension, with a present, existing, and equal interest. (See Fithian v. Fithian (1977) 74 Cal.App.3d 397, 403.)

The judge's failure to advise his ex-wife he was retired and receiving the pension benefit, given the terms of the judgment, violated his fiduciary duties to his ex-wife as set forth in Family Code sections 721 and 2102.

Judge Trice's failure to make the pension payments to his ex-wife, Dawna, for nearly two years, and his deliberate failure to inform her that he was retired and receiving his pension, constituted prejudicial misconduct. His conduct violated the Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 1 (a judge shall personally observe high standards of conduct so that the integrity of the judiciary will be preserved); 2 (a judge shall avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety); and 2A (a judge shall respect and comply with the law and shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary).

Count One B

As discussed above, on May 23, 2014, the judge and Mary participated in a conference call with Dawna's attorney, Duenow, to discuss a resolution to the pension arrears issue. During the call, Judge Trice made a statement to the effect that the reason he had not made payments to Dawna is that Commissioner Perry had told him it was not his responsibility to initiate payments to her, and that it was Dawna's responsibility to initiate the process to obtain her share of his retirement benefit.

On or around July 15, after he had received and signed the Stipulation Re Payment of Military Benefits Pending Direct Distribution Order, Judge Trice met with Judge Barry LaBarbera in his chambers. Judge Trice informed Judge LaBarbera that he had signed a stipulation to pay pension benefit arrears to his ex-wife pursuant to their dissolution judgment and to arrange for future direct payment from the military. Judge Trice told Judge LaBarbera that he had not paid his ex-wife her share of the retirement benefits based on advice he had received from Commissioner Perry to the effect that it was not his responsibility to initiate payments to her, and that it was Dawna's responsibility to initiate the process to obtain her share of his retirement benefit. Judge Trice asked Judge LaBarbera if he would handle the stipulation by reviewing and signing it.

On Friday morning, July 18, 2014, Judge Trice called Court Executive Officer Susan Matherly on her cell phone. The purpose of the call was to make arrangements with Matherly to have the settlement stipulation given directly to Judge LaBarbera for judicial approval and his signing.

On July 21, 2014, Matherly spoke with the judge in chambers for about 30-45 minutes. The judge told Matherly that when he retired from the military he had talked to Commissioner Perry about what to do about his pension. The judge said he asked the commissioner, "Do I tell her? Give it to her?" or words to that effect. The judge said the commissioner told him, "You can put it in trust but can't cut her a check because you don't know what the withholdings are," and, "Don't spend it, put it in a trust and wait for her to ask for it," or words to that effect.

The statements the judge made to Duenow, Judge LaBarbera, and Matherly, which the judge attributed to Commissioner Perry, were untrue because they misstated Commissioner Perry's opinions, as described by the judge. Commissioner Perry never told the judge not to pay Dawna her share of the pension benefits. Nor did he tell the judge to put Dawna's share in a trust account and to wait for her to contact him. Dawna was the commissioner's former client, to whom he owed a continuing fiduciary obligation of loyalty and confidentiality. (Oasis West Realty LLC v. Goldman (2011) 51 Cal.4th 811, 821.)

The statements Judge Trice attributed to Commissioner Perry implied that Commissioner Perry had given him advice that was contrary to the interests of the commissioner's former client, and contrary to the terms of the Judgment of Dissolution and the MSA. By making these statements to Duenow, Judge LaBarbera, and Matherly, the judge was, intentionally or not, impugning the integrity of Commissioner Perry by asserting that he gave advice that was contrary to the interests of a former client, about the very matter he represented the former client in, and that was contrary to the terms of a court judgment.

Judge Trice's statements about advice he had received from Commissioner Perry constituted prejudicial misconduct. His conduct violated the Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 1, 2, and 2A. (See Gonzalez v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1983) 33 Cal.3d 359, 371 [judge's comments from the bench and in chambers impugning character and competence of judicial colleagues violated canon 2A]; Censure of Judge Jose A.

Velasquez (1997) p. 3 [judge's public statements disparaging judicial colleagues and local attorneys, made both on and off bench, constituted willful misconduct].)

Count One C

As previously discussed, on July 15, 2014, the judge signed two documents in connection with resolving the pension arrears issue with Dawna – a Stipulation Re Payment of Military Benefits Pending Direct Distribution Order, and a Qualifying Court Order re: Military Retirement Benefits. The terms of the stipulation are set forth above on page 10.

On July 15, Judge Trice called Duenow's office and spoke to Duenow's paralegal, Gina Goodwin. The judge informed Goodwin that he had signed the stipulation and that they would receive it shortly. The judge further stated that he had arranged for Judge LaBarbera to sign the stipulation, and that he wanted Duenow's office to submit it through CEO Matherly. The judge and Duenow had not previously discussed or agreed to this arrangement. On July 15, Goodwin prepared a memorandum to Duenow documenting her conversation with the judge, which states:

> Judge Trice just called. He says he is going to be busy now, but relayed some info for me to pass along to you. [¶] He is concerned about submitting the document to the Court here. He thinks the Judges will start DQing themselves to keep from signing this doc. He has arranged for Judge LaBarbera to sign off on the document. He would like for us to submit it through Susan Matherly (court executive officer). She is on vacation until Monday. He has signed the doc and sent it back to us with a check for Dawna enclosed. We should receive it shortly.

During the chambers conference with Matherly on July 21, 2014, the judge told Matherly that he had called her on the previous Friday (July 18) because the parties were stipulating that Judge LaBarbera would sign the stipulation, and he wanted her to process the stipulation.

Matherly subsequently received the stipulation and order from Duenow's office and, pursuant to her conversation with Judge Trice, she left the documents on Judge LaBarbera's desk. Matherly did not discuss the documents with Judge LaBarbera.

On July 28, 2014, Judge LaBarbera signed the stipulation and order. The documents were then returned to Matherly and she had them filed with the court.

As a party to the proceeding, Judge Trice was without authority to determine who would handle the stipulation and order. Even as a judge, Judge Trice had no authority to assign the handling of the stipulation and order he entered into with Dawna to Judge LaBarbera. The authority to assign and reassign cases rests with the presiding judge. (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 10.603(b).) (In July 2014, Judge Dodie Harman was the presiding judge.) Further, Judge Trice was disqualified from presiding over the matter because he had a financial interest in the proceeding and was a party. (Code Civ. Proc., § 170.1(a)(3)(A) & (4).) A judge who is disqualified from a case may take certain limited actions in the case, but those actions do not include assigning the case to another judge. (See Code Civ. Proc., § 170.4(a).)

In selecting a particular judge to act on the stipulation, Judge Trice was acting beyond the limits of his lawful judicial power and he knew or should have known that he was acting beyond the limits of a judge's authority. In his conversation with Duenow's paralegal, Gina Goodwin, on July 15, 2014, the judge told Goodwin that he had arranged for Judge LaBarbera to sign the stipulation because he was "concerned" that if the document was submitted to the court, the court's judges would "start DQing themselves to keep from signing" it. In other words, Judge Trice was motivated by a desire to have the stipulation signed and to avoid the possibility of the court's judges disqualifying themselves en masse.

By directing who would be assigned to handle the stipulation and order, Judge Trice abused his authority, failed to uphold the integrity of the judiciary (canon 1), failed to avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety (canon 2), failed to act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary (canon 2A), and used his judicial position to advance his personal interests (canon 2B(2)). Moreover, because the judge was acting in his judicial capacity when he directed CEO Matherly to submit the stipulation and order to Judge LaBarbera his conduct constituted willful misconduct.

Count Two A

On May 1, 2013, Judge Harman, who was the assistant presiding judge and supervising judge of the criminal team, which included Judge Trice, was looking for Judge Trice to discuss coverage of the next day's calendars. Judge Harman learned from the judicial secretary that Judge Trice had left for the day.

At 5:12 p.m., Judge Harman sent an email to Judge Trice. Before sending the email she spoke with Judge LaBarbera, who was the presiding judge, about Judge Trice leaving the courthouse earlier that afternoon. Judge LaBarbera directed her to inquire about Judge Trice's whereabouts that afternoon, as was her duty as a supervising judge, and reviewed and approved the following email, which Judge Harman drafted. Judge Harman sent this email to Judge Trice at 5:12 p.m.:

> I was trying to find you this afternoon to talk about tomorrow's calendars. I may need to get some help from you and wanted to see if you could help out. I was told you had left for the day so I was just wondering where you were because you did not check with me if we were covered before you left. If you could let me know where you were and if you are available to help with calendars tomorrow I would appreciate it.
>
> Thanks, Dodie

That evening at 9:34 p.m., Judge Trice responded to Judge Harman with the following email, which he copied to the CEO, Matherly, and three of the court's judges, Judges LaBarbera, Charles Crandall, and Michael Duffy:

> Dear Ms. Assistant Presiding Judge and Criminal Team "Supervising Judge" –

As I told you last week, we have Veteran's Treatment Court meetings every Wednesday until kick-off on June 14th.

I can't help tomorrow.

I handled my calendar today, DIO's morning calendar today, DIOs 2960 calendar today with two court trials and 3 search warrants. Then I went to the Vet's Hall for the meeting, which turns out – he cancelled, so I talked with the V.A. rep for about an hour and came home. I just got done handling an after hours search warrant and a 20 page Pen Register Request. I'm sure you are just as busy with your physical therapy, workout time and all.

I don't appreciate you checking on me – I don't work for you and never will. I was elected by the citizens of this county, unlike you. I would hope you and your pals upstairs would have better things to do with your time as Superior Court Judges than keep a journal on another Judge's comings and goings.

Pathetic. . . . get a life. I look forward to running against you for P.J. The Court will be a lot better off without you in some position of assumed power. Good luck in the campaign.

Have a really nice night.

My civil attorneys say I should have no more contact with you or [Judge] Tangeman without an impartial witness or reporter present. I plan to take their advice.

Sincerely,

John A. Trice, Judge
San Luis Obispo Superior Court

As supervising judge of the criminal team, Judge Harman was responsible for ensuring that there was judicial coverage for all of the criminal court calendars. Consistent with that responsibility, Judge Harman's May 1, 2013 email to Judge Trice advised him that she had been looking for him that afternoon to talk about the next day's calendars, asked where he had been that afternoon since he did not check with her before leaving, and asked if he would be available to help with the next day's calendars.

Judge Trice's email response to Judge Harman included comments that were disparaging ("I was elected by the citizens of our county, unlike you"), and comments that were undignified and discourteous ("Pathetic. . . . get a life," "The Court will be better off without you in some position of assumed power"). Judge Trice also implied that he would not speak to Judge Harman without a "witness or reporter" present.

Judge Trice's conduct violated canons 1, 2A, 3B(4), and 3C(2) (a judge shall cooperate with other judges and court officials in the administration of court business).

At a minimum, the judge's conduct constituted improper action.

Count Two B

The San Luis Obispo County Superior Court employs nine court reporters who work for the court under the supervision of Tammy Denchfield, Director of Court Operations. At a judges' meeting on October 3, 2014, the judges had agreed to continue a policy and practice that the nine court reporters would be randomly rotated and assigned to a judge for an eight-week period, this despite some of the judges complaining about having to work with court reporter Claire Trout.

On October 30, 2014, the court was scheduled for the next court reporter rotation (two months), effective November-December 2014. Tammy Denchfield was responsible for preparing the rotation and sending it out to the judges and court staff. Her office was sending the rotation out that afternoon.

Before sending the rotation schedule out, Denchfield addressed Judge Trice's request to keep court reporter Lisa Andrews, who was then assigned to his department, with Presiding Judge Harman. Judge Harman told Denchfield to do what she needed to do. Denchfield then directed Anna Hernandez, the supervising court reporter, to send the rotation out. Denchfield left for the day, around 4:30 p.m., her normal work schedule, and was starting a vacation leave the next day.

When Denchfield arrived home at 5:00 p.m. she received the following email from Judge Trice on her iPad:

> Tammy – I was notified that Claire Trout has been re-assigned to our courtroom. I will not work with her. She has been rude to my other staff, the public and attorneys assigned to our court. We have several high profile, high stress cases coming up on our calendar, we cannot have such a person with us when trying to serve the public.

At 5:04 p.m., Denchfield forwarded the email to Susan Matherly.

At 5:05 p.m., Matherly forwarded the email to Judge Harman.

The next day, October 31, at 8:14 a.m., Judge Harman responded to Matherly by email:

> Susan:
> I believe rotations should be the same for everybody. The same issues have been raised by a number of judges. Bottom line is if she does something then it should be reported by him and dealt with by her supervisor.
>
> None of us have been able to exclude a particular reporter from our courtroom. The problem should be dealt with if there is one instead of saying particular judges refuse particular reporters.

At 8:31 a.m., Matherly responded to Judge Trice by email, as follows:

> The first thing you should realize is that this is a labor issue. The rotations are part of a labor agreement between the court and SEIU. I believe rotations should be the same for everybody. As you may recall, the same issues have been raised by a number of judges at our most recent judges' meeting and it was agreed that if she does something it should be reported to her supervisor so we can deal with the behavior. None of the judges have been able to exclude a particular reporter from their courtrooms. The problem should be dealt with if there is one instead of saying particular judges can refuse particular reporters. The process should be fair to both the other judges and the reporters. I am happy to sit down and discuss this with you at your convenience.

At 8:47 a.m. on October 31, Judge Trice responded to Matherly by email as follows:

> I will not work with her. This has been a stressful year for Frances and I and we don't need to add more tension in our courtroom. If Chris Money, Barry [LaBarbera], Dodie [Harman] or Jeff Burke didn't want a bailiff or employee in their courtroom for a good reason, they were always moved. I will be given the same consideration. One male bailiff was moved completely out of this building a few years ago based on personal conflict with a female judge. Linda Hurst routinely refuses to accept certain personnel in her courtroom. I will be given the same consideration.
>
> Our department has always gone the extra mile to help out this court. We have a "well-oiled", efficient department.
>
> She either moves, or the P.J. can move me and my staff. I will not call my calendar on Tuesday with her in the courtroom. I will order her out of the room in public view.
>
> If there is still resistance to this, I would like a special Judge's meeting to be scheduled before Tuesday.

At 9:28 a.m., Matherly sent the judge the following email:

> I'm sorry but we cannot make an exception to the court reporter rotation policy.

At 9:36 a.m., the judge responded:

> Please schedule a special Judge's meeting.

On November 1, 2014, the judge sent Matherly the following email:

> I don't need a meeting. I'll suck it up for 8 weeks. [¶] Sorry for any stress this caused you.

Judge Trice may have had legitimate concerns about court reporter Trout, who had just been assigned to his courtroom. However, his concerns about Trout were based on conduct that had occurred in the past, and that predated the October 3, 2014 judges' meeting at which all of the judges agreed that Trout would be rotated through every department. Further, the assignment of courtroom staff is not a matter within the judge's purview. Judge Trice's statement to CEO Matherly that he would refuse to call his calendar if Trout was in the courtroom, and to "order her out of the room in public view," was intemperate, and inconsistent with his obligation to cooperate with court officials in the administration of court business.

The judge's conduct violated canons 1, 2A, 3B(4), 3C(1) (a judge shall not, in the performance of administrative duties, engage in speech, gestures, or other conduct that would reasonably be perceived as bias or prejudice), and 3C(2).

At a minimum, the judge's conduct constituted improper action.

Count Three

Judge Trice and criminal defense attorney David Hurst are close personal friends. The judge and Hurst became friends while they were both employed by the San Luis Obispo County District Attorney's (DA) Office in the 1980's. While with the DA's office, they socialized often, including playing golf together and occasionally taking vacations together. Hurst left the DA's office in 1996 and went into private practice. Since then, Hurst and the judge have continued their friendship. Hurst considers the judge one of his four "best friends." Hurst has been to the judge's house at least 20 times. They watch sports events together and Hurst typically goes to the judge's house on Thanksgiving. They socialize together outside of work approximately once a month. In 2014, when Hurst was suffering from a knee injury that made it difficult for him to drive his manual transmission Porsche automobile, he traded cars with the judge's wife at her suggestion. While the trade was in place, the judge on approximately four occasions drove Hurst's Porsche to work and parked it in the judges' parking lot.

Since the judge took the bench in 2003, Hurst has frequently appeared in his court representing criminal defendants. The judge does not disqualify himself in cases in which Hurst appears as counsel of record, nor does he disclose on the record the fact or nature of his relationship with Hurst.

Judge Trice's position is that he is not disqualified from handling cases in which Hurst represents a defendant, and that he need not disclose his personal relationship with Hurst because the opposing representative in all of his criminal cases are 20-year veterans of the DA's office who are aware of his relationship with Hurst, and who have never raised any concern of personal bias or prejudice, or the appearance of impropriety because of the relationship.

Under canon 3E(1), a judge is obligated to disqualify himself or herself in any proceeding in which disqualification is required by law. The circumstances under which a trial court judge is disqualified are set forth in Code of Civil Procedure section 170.1. Judge Trice's close friendship with Hurst would arguably appear to be a disqualifying circumstance under section 170.1(a)(6)(A)(iii), which provides that a judge shall be disqualified if "[a] person aware of the facts might reasonably entertain a doubt that the judge would be able to be impartial."

Even if the judge's friendship with Hurst did not require his disqualification, the judge nevertheless had an obligation to disclose their relationship on the record. Canon 3E(2)(a) provides that in all trial court proceedings, a judge shall disclose on the record "information that is reasonably relevant to the question of disqualification under Code of Civil Procedure section 170.1, even if the judge believes there is no actual basis for disqualification."

At a minimum, the judge's conduct violated canon 3E(2) and constituted improper action.

Prior Discipline

In 2012, Judge Trice received an advisory letter for continuing to preside over matters in a case after "voluntarily recusing" from a new trial motion.

Aggravating or Mitigating Factors

Judge Trice enlisted in the Air Force in 1972. He served eight years active duty, and thereafter 18 years in the Reserves. He was promoted to the rank of Lieutenant Colonel in 1997. He was awarded three Air Force Meritorious Service Medals during his military service.

Judge Trice worked for the San Luis Obispo County District Attorney's Office from 1984 through 2002. He was selected to serve as that office's first Felony Trial Team Leader in 1988. He handled over 140 jury trials and successfully prosecuted two of the county's four death penalty cases. Additionally, he served on the Governor's Arson Task Force.

In 2003, he started the county's first Mental Health Treatment Court, and in 2013 started the county's first Veteran's Treatment Court.

Count Two A

Judge Trice acknowledges that his conduct in stating that he would not call his calendar, and would order the court reporter out of the room in public view was both improper and intemperate. In mitigation, the evidence shows that he relented and apologized less than 24 hours after the inappropriate email: "I don't need a meeting. I'll suck it up for 8 weeks. Sorry for any stress this caused you."

Count Three

Judge Trice believed that disclosure of his friendship with attorney Hurst was not required because the deputy district attorneys in his court had actual knowledge of his long friendship with Hurst. Upon reflection, Judge Trice now appreciates that a formal disclosure to all parties, including defendants, was the required course of conduct. He will make formal disclosure in the future.

III.

DISCIPLINE

The commission has determined to accept the Stipulation and impose this public censure, the most severe sanction that may be imposed short of removal, because it fulfills the commission's mandate to protect the public and maintain public confidence in the integrity of the judicial system while resolving this matter without the delay of further proceedings. (See Broadman v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1998) 18 Cal.4th 1079, 1111-1112; Cal. Const., art. VI, §18, subd. (d).)

Judge Trice's failure to comply with a court order that he make payments to his ex-wife "as and when" his military benefits were received is an affront to the authority and dignity of the judicial system he serves. It is a fundamental principle of our system of government that no person is above the law. (Jenkins v. Knight (1956) 46 Cal.2d 220, 223.) This principle is particularly important as applied to those who are sworn to uphold the law. Our society depends upon our citizens' compliance with orders, decisions and judgements of our courts. That compliance, in turn, depends upon citizens' respect for the courts. When a judge fails to comply with a judgment or order of the court, public respect for the institution of the judiciary and the rule of law is undermined.

Judge Trice engaged in other misconduct that undermines public confidence in the integrity of the judiciary, including acting beyond his authority in directing what judge would be assigned to handle the stipulation and order in connection with the pension arrears owed to his ex-wife and attributing statements to Commissioner Perry that were untrue. The judge's misconduct related to his intemperate email exchanges with the supervising judge and the CEO were unprofessional and disparaging. A judge's failure to cooperate with supervising judges and court officials in a professional manner makes the demanding job of administering court business more difficult and stressful for those involved.

In determining that a public censure is the appropriate sanction, the commission has taken into consideration that Judge Trice acknowledged engaging in multiple incidents of misconduct as stated in the Stipulation, and that his history of prior discipline during his 13 years on the bench is limited to one advisory letter (the lowest level of discipline).

Commission members Hon. Erica R. Yew; Anthony P. Capozzi, Esq.; Ms. Pattyl A. Kasparian; Hon. Thomas M. Maddock; Dr. Michael A. Moodian; Nanci E. Nishimura, Esq.; Hon. Ignazio J. Ruvolo; Ms. Sandra Talcott; and Mr. Adam N. Torres voted to accept the parties' settlement proposal and to issue this decision and order imposing a public censure pursuant to the stipulated agreement. Commission member Ms. Mary Lou Aranguren voted to reject the Stipulation. Commission member Richard Simpson did not participate.

Dated: February 4, 2016

Hon. Erica R. Yew,
Chairperson

RECEIVED
JAN 25 2016
COMMISSION ON
JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

STATE OF CALIFORNIA

BEFORE THE COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

| | |
|---|---|
| INQUIRY CONCERNING JUDGE JOHN A. TRICE, No. 196 | STIPULATION FOR DISCIPLINE BY CONSENT (Rule 127) |

Pursuant to Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance, rule 127, Judge John A. Trice, of the San Luis Obispo Superior Court, represented by counsel, Eugene Iredale, and the examiner, Gary W. Schons, ("the parties") submit this proposed disposition of Inquiry No. 196. The parties request that the commission resolve this matter by imposition of a censure.

The parties believe that the settlement provided by this agreement is in the best interests of the commission and Judge Trice because, among other reasons, in light of the stipulated facts and legal conclusions, a censure adequately protects the public and will avoid the delay and expense of further proceedings.

TERMS AND CONDITIONS OF AGREEMENT

1. This agreement resolves the matters alleged in the Inquiry Concerning Judge Trice, No. 196.

2. The commission shall issue a censure based on the agreed Stipulated Facts and Legal Conclusions set forth herein.

3. If the commission accepts this proposed disposition, the commission's decision and order imposing censure may articulate the reasons for its decision and include explanatory language that the commission deems appropriate.

4. Upon acceptance by the commission, this stipulation, the judge's affidavit of consent, and the commission's decision and order shall be made public.

5. Judge Trice waives any further proceedings and review in this matter, including formal proceedings (rules 118, et seq.) and review by the Supreme Court (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 9.60).

6. The commission may reject this proposed disposition and resume formal proceedings. If the commission does so, nothing in this proposed disposition will be deemed to be admitted by Judge Trice.

Accordingly, it is hereby stipulated and agreed that the commission shall issue a censure on the above Terms and Conditions of Agreement, and based on the following Stipulated Facts and Legal Conclusions:

STIPULATED FACTS AND LEGAL CONCLUSIONS

Judge John A. Trice became a judge of the San Luis Obispo County Superior Court in 2003, following his election to that office. His current term began in January 2015.

Count One A

In 1990, judgment was entered in the marital dissolution matter of John A. Trice v. Dawna L. Trice, No. DR17310. Pursuant to the judgment, which was drafted by the judge's counsel, Judge Trice, then an attorney, was ordered to pay his ex-wife her interest in his future military retirement and pension benefits "as and when received." A formula was provided to calculate the ex-wife's share of the pension benefit ultimately awarded. This provision was also contained in a Marital Settlement Agreement (MSA), signed by Judge Trice, that was incorporated into the judgment. That provision provided as follows:

> The Court specifically retains jurisdiction over Petitioner's retirement benefits with the Un[it]ed States Air [F]orce and Petitioner is ordered to pay to Respondent her interest in the retirement and pension benefits as and when received on the following formula: Respondent's interest equals one-half (1/2) times the gross monthly benefits times a fraction, the numerator of which is 3,402 points and the denominator of which is the total number of points accumulated by Petitioner in past and future service in the United States Air [F]orce and/or Reserve duty.

Dawna was represented in the dissolution proceeding by attorney Patrick Perry, a certified family law specialist. In 2004, Perry was appointed as a commissioner by the San Luis Obispo County Superior Court, and continues to serve in that capacity. In 1990, after the divorce was final, Dawna remarried and moved to Arizona where she has maintained the same residence (and same telephone number) to the present.

In late 2011 or early 2012, Judge Trice recognized that he would be eligible to retire from the Air Force in June 2012 on his 60th birthday (June 14, 2012) and to then begin to receive his military pension benefits. He also recognized that the divorce judgment entitled his ex-wife to a specific portion of those benefits based on the formula provided in the judgment and Marital Settlement Agreement. (Judge Trice retained a copy of the judgment and Marital Settlement Agreement in his chambers.) Judge Trice also knew, and had records of, the precise number of points he had earned during his active and Reserve military service (4,082), which had ended in 2002 when he ceased his Reserve service.

In March 2012, Judge Trice received correspondence from the Air Force confirming his eligibility to retire and to begin to receive pension benefits in June. On March 26, 2012, he made application for his retirement benefits. In April, 2012, Judge Trice received correspondence from the Air Force informing him that he would be placed on the Air Force Retired List, effective June 14, 2012, and that a pay account for his benefit was being established. The letter also provided an address and phone number for "any questions concerning retired pay." Judge Trice called the Air Force and advised an Air Force representative that his ex-wife had an interest in a portion of his pension benefits. Judge Trice was advised that in order for his ex-wife to receive direct payment from the Air Force, she would have to apply and provide certain documentation.

At about this time, Judge Trice recalls that he had a couple of informal conversations with his bench colleague Commissioner Perry, with whom he was on a friendly basis and with whom he would have lunch on a regular basis.

According to the judge, in both of these conversations, he posed hypothetical questions to Commissioner Perry concerning an ex-spouse's interest in his or her former spouse's military pension, where the military spouse had been promoted in rank after the divorce. The questions were posed as hypotheticals to avoid the conflict Commissioner Perry would have in advising the judge concerning his divorce from Dawna. One conversation concerned whether the ex-spouse's interest would be based on the military spouse's rank at the time of divorce, or at the time of retirement when the rank was higher. According to the judge, Commissioner Perry opined that it would be at the higher rank. The second conversation, according to the judge, concerned whether the military spouse was responsible for determining the amount the ex-spouse was entitled to where there had been a change in rank post-divorce, and whether the ex-spouse should be contacted. According to the judge, the commissioner opined that if the court had retained jurisdiction over the matter, it was up to the person who wished to modify the judgment to go back to court to obtain a subsequent order concerning the pension. According to the judge, he interpreted what the commissioner said to mean that if Dawna wanted her share of the pension, she could go back to court and get an order as to the specific amount she was entitled to. Judge Trice recalls that the second conversation ended with either he or the commissioner making a "joke" to the effect that if the ex-spouse did not make a claim on the pension, the military spouse could keep the money. The judge recalls that either he or the commissioner responded, "No, can't do that."

On a day subsequent to these informal conversations, Judge Trice had a conversation with Commissioner Perry about his military pension benefits. Judge Trice was in his chambers when Commissioner Perry happened to walk by. Judge Trice called Commissioner Perry into his chambers. Judge Trice had the judgment and Marital Settlement Agreement out on his desk as he was trying to determine his ex-wife's share of the retirement benefits based on the formula provided in the judgment. According to Judge Trice, he told Commissioner Perry his final service points – 4,082 – and the commissioner, using the formula in the judgment, which included Dawna's "share" of the judge's points, and an estimate that Judge Trice provided of what his benefit amount would be based on his salary as a Lt. Colonel, calculated an estimate of Dawna's share. According to the judge, the commissioner calculated that Dawna's share was approximately 40% of the retirement benefit, that Judge Trice would retain approximately $900 per month, and that Dawna was entitled to approximately $700 per month.

In June 2012, Judge Trice became eligible to receive his monthly military retirement payments. That month he received correspondence from the Air Force which showed his gross retired pay ($2,394), deductions for taxes and his current wife's survivor benefit, and net pay ($2,076.38). On July 2, Judge Trice received his first monthly benefit payment for the period June 14-30, 2012, in the gross amount of $1,356.60, of which, after deduction for taxes, $1,228.44 was directly deposited into a savings account Judge Trice had designated at the San Luis Obispo Credit Union (SLOCU). That account was in the names of the judge and his current wife Mary Trice. On August 1, Judge Trice received his first full month's pension benefit – $2,076.38 – which was directly deposited into this credit union account. Thereafter, he received this payment (or an adjusted amount) monthly.

Judge Trice claims that at the time he did not pay attention to that portion of the judgment which required him to pay his ex-wife her share of the pension benefits "as and when received," despite having the judgment readily at hand in his chambers, and having recently referred to that precise provision of the judgment in order to derive the payment formula for his ex-wife's share. Judge Trice admits he did not advise Dawna that he had retired from the Air Force and was receiving the pension benefit. He assumed she would be able to determine that fact from several close relatives she had in the military. The judge has stated that he told his adult son and daughter that he had retired from the Air Force. The judge admitted that he did not want to notify his ex-wife and then have to do the work to get her share of the benefit to her directly from the Air Force.

Judge Trice admits that he had the means and ability to contact his ex-wife. In addition, Judge Trice spent three days in Arizona in September 2013, when he attended their son's wedding ceremony. He interacted with Dawna on each of those days, including at the rehearsal dinner and wedding. At no time did he advise her he was retired and receiving the pension benefits. The judge has stated that he relied on his belief that in 1990, Dawna had received a copy of a forensic accountant's report which set out the specific date of his eligibility for retirement benefits. Finally, Judge Trice had no knowledge that any of Dawna's family relations knew that she was entitled to receive a portion of his military retirement benefits. Instead of paying Dawna her share of the pension benefits "as and when received," each month, Judge Trice directed a transfer from his credit union savings account, into which he received the benefit payment directly from the Air Force, into a separate checking account at the credit union. For the months of August, September, and October 2012 he transferred $700, the value of Dawna's share as estimated by Commissioner Perry, according to the judge, into the checking account. The checking account was owned solely by Judge Trice and Mary; it was not a trust account and Dawna was not named as a beneficiary of the account.

In September 2012, Judge Trice and Mary met with their financial advisor, Joan Parker, CFP. Judge Trice informed Parker that his ex-wife was entitled to a portion of his military retirement benefit, which he estimated was 30% of the benefit, and that he was setting aside $700 per month. The judge told Parker that his ex-wife had not claimed her share of his pension and that he was setting the money aside in a savings account in case she was to claim it at a later date. The judge said he assumed he would have to pay the money to his ex-wife or the government at some later date.

In a letter dated October 12, 2012, Parker advised Judge Trice that based on the information he had given her, he should set aside only $440 as his ex-wife's (net) share because he was paying taxes on the entire pension benefit. On October 19, Judge Trice withdrew $1,000 from the checking account (presumably to recover the "excess" payments into the account) and thereafter transferred $440 monthly into that account.

On April 17, 2014, Commissioner Perry contacted Dawna by phone. He asked if she was aware that the judge had retired from the military and if she was receiving her share of his military pension. Dawna informed the commissioner that she did not know the judge had retired and that she had not been receiving her share of his pension payments.

On April 25, 2014, Commissioner Perry submitted a letter of complaint to the commission concerning the judge's failure to have paid Dawna her share of his pension.

On May 1, 2014, a final deposit of $440 was made into the SLOCU checking account (from the SLOCU savings account). As of that date, the balance in the checking account was $9,895.

Commissioner Perry provided the names of two family law attorneys to Dawna. Dawna subsequently hired attorney Christopher Duenow. On May 21, 2014, Duenow contacted the judge by phone. Duenow told the judge that he was in violation of the divorce judgment because he had not paid Dawna her share of his military pension benefits for two years. The judge told Duenow words to the effect of, "I assumed she didn't want it because she didn't make a claim for it."

On May 22, 2014, Duenow met with the judge in chambers for almost an hour to discuss a resolution to the pension arrears issue. On May 23, Duenow had a telephone conference with the judge and Mary Trice. The judge offered to settle for $10,000. The judge made a statement to Duenow wherein he stated that he failed to make the pension payments to Dawna on advice he claimed to have received from Commissioner Perry. (This matter is discussed further below.)

Later that day, Duenow sent the judge and Mary an email that included as an attachment a calculation of the amount owed to Dawna, $22,769.17 ($20,819 in principal and $1,950.17 in interest).

On May 24, 2014, Dawna received an email from Mary Trice, which stated:

> Hi Dawna,
>
> I want to share a little history with you.
>
> Two years ago John was notified that he could receive retirement income from the service. He knew of your judgment/order and sought professional CPA and legal advice to figure out the percentage because it is a complicated calculation.
>
> First he talked to Pat Perry, who said that since he no longer represented you, he could assist John in the calculation, which he did. He also specifically told John that it was not his responsibility to initiate the order and that it was yours. That advice was reiterated by the Air Force representative in Denver when John called them to start drawing his retirement. They indicated they needed a copy of the court order from you and could not make the calculation until you provided a W-4 and withholding information.
>
> He then contacted our financial advisor, who did the calculation again and came up with a figure that he should set aside for you, which he did. That money has been waiting for you and has amounted to approximately $9,800. We have paid state and federal taxes on the entire amount for the past two years, which further complicates the calculation. The figure that Duenow has come up with is about double what everyone advised John to set aside. He contacted our CPA again yesterday to re-run the numbers. There is obviously a mistake somewhere and if it is on John's side it will be corrected. There was absolutely no intention to defraud you.

> I have chosen to write this email because I feel you and I have had a friendly relationship and I am upset that you probably think John has done something dishonest when he was following professional advice. I am also upset because I am assuming that when you called Pat Perry, he neglected to give you this history and probably just flippantly said something to the effect of "Oh, he's been drawing retirement for two years."
>
> So there is John's side of the story.
> I hope this helps and we can get back to where we were.
>
> Mary

On June 9, 2014, the judge spoke with Parker by phone asking her to review Duenow's calculation of what the judge owed his ex-wife in arrears. The judge subsequently provided to Parker copies of pension statements for June 21, 2012, and June 20, 2013 through May 20, 2014, and a copy of the page from the MSA that contained the formula for dividing the pension. On the MSA page, the judge had handwritten in his service point total, 4,082.

On June 19, 2014, Parker wrote a letter to the judge and Mary wherein she provided her calculation of the amount owed to Dawna as of May 31, 2014, $15,600. In arriving at this figure, Parker calculated the interest owed to Dawna using the daily interest rates for 52-week Treasury Bills rather than the legal interest rate of 10 percent. Further, Parker noted in the letter that if she had been aware that Dawna's share of the judge's pension was about 41.7 percent, as indicated by the formula in the MSA, "and not 30%" (as the judge had told her on September 26, 2012), she would have recommended that he set aside $650 per month rather than $440.

On July 10, 2014, Duenow sent the judge and Mary an email setting forth the terms of Dawna's final counteroffer. Dawna offered to settle her claim for $20,000, which Duenow indicated was a discounted amount in consideration for the taxes the judge had paid on Dawna's share of the pension. Mary Trice subsequently sent Duenow an email stating that the judge could pay $19,000 forthwith and $1,750 in August. Duenow responded that the judge's offer was agreeable.

Thereafter, in July 2014, the judge, Dawna, and Duenow signed a stipulation addressing the pension arrears, Stipulation Re Payment of Military Benefits Pending Direct Distribution Order. The stipulation stated that the 1990 dissolution judgment "provided that John pay Dawna her interest in John's retirement benefits with the United States Air Force as and when received." The stipulation stated that "[t]o satisfy all arrears for non-payment of Dawn's [sic] interest in John's retirement benefits through June, 2014, John shall pay Dawna $19,000 upon full execution of this stipulation." The stipulation further stated that John was to pay Dawna $1,750 for July and August 2014, and then $750 per month thereafter until Dawna began receiving direct payment of her share from the military.

In conjunction with the stipulation, the judge, Dawna, and Duenow also signed a Qualifying Court Order re: Military Retirement Benefits, the purpose of which was to allow Dawna to receive direct payment of her share from the military. This order provided that Dawna's share of the pension benefit was 44.6% (rather than 41.7%), because of the amount deducted from the gross pension amount to pay for a spousal survivor benefit for Mary Trice.

The judge made the payments to Dawna that were required under the terms of the stipulation. Beginning on or about October 31, 2014, Dawna began receiving her share of the judge's military pension directly from the military.

Judge Trice's course of conduct with respect to complying with the provisions of the judgment requiring him to pay to his ex-wife the designated portion of his military retirement benefits "as and when received on the following formula" demonstrated a disregard of the command of the judgment and his legal obligation to abide by it. Setting aside a rough approximation based on incomplete information of the ex-wife's share of the benefit in an account in the judge's name, and under his control, did not reflect a good faith effort to comply with the judgment. Additionally, the advice the judge received from the Air Force, and the opinions he recalls were expressed by Commissioner Perry in response to his hypothetical questions were not based on the complete provision of the facts necessary to obtain a valid legal opinion upon which Judge Trice was entitled to rely.

The information the judge received from the Air Force related solely to an ex-spouse obtaining an order for the Air Force to pay the ex-spouse directly. This was not what the judgment provided for; rather, the judgment required the judge to pay his ex-wife "as and when" he received the benefits. Dawna did not need to apply to the Air Force in order to receive her share of the pension benefits; the judge was obligated to pay her directly under the terms of the judgment.

The opinions the judge asserts that Commissioner Perry expressed in response to his hypothetical questions did not justify the judge's course of conduct. In particular, under the terms of the divorce judgment, the judge's rank at the time of his military retirement was not relevant to the calculation of Dawna's share of his military pension, and there was no need for her to obtain a further court order to obtain her share. If the judge wished to seek a modification of the judgment due to promotions in rank he received post-divorce, then it was incumbent on him to seek a modification order from the court.

Further, the advice the judge received from the Air Force and the opinions he recalls were expressed by Commissioner Perry did not take into account that the judge did not advise his ex-wife he was retired and receiving retirement benefits. Without this information, the judge's ex-wife had no reason to affirmatively seek direct payment from the Air Force or a modification or enforcement order from the court.

The judge's ex-wife's interest in his military pension was not contingent on her requesting it; rather, she was an owner of her community share of the pension, with a present, existing, and equal interest. (See Fithian v. Fithian (1977) 74 Cal.App.3d 397, 403.)

The judge's failure to advise his ex-wife he was retired and receiving the pension benefit, given the terms of the judgment, violated his fiduciary duties to his ex-wife as set forth in Family Code sections 721 and 2102.

Judge Trice's failure to make the pension payments to his ex-wife, Dawna, for nearly two years, and his deliberate failure to inform her that he was retired and receiving his pension, constituted prejudicial misconduct. His conduct violated the Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 1 (a judge shall personally observe high standards of conduct so that the integrity of the judiciary will be preserved); 2 (a judge shall avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety); and 2A (a judge shall respect and comply with the law and shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary).

Count One B

As discussed above, on May 23, 2014, the judge and Mary Trice participated in a conference call with Dawna's attorney Duenow to discuss a resolution to the pension arrears issue. During the call, Judge Trice made a statement to the effect that the reason he had not made payments to Dawna is that Commissioner Perry had told him it was not his responsibility to initiate payments to her, and that it was Dawna's responsibility to initiate the process to obtain her share of his retirement benefit

On or around July 15, after he had received and signed the Stipulation Re Payment of Military Benefits Pending Direct Distribution Order, Judge Trice met with Judge Barry LaBarbera in his chambers. Judge Trice informed Judge LaBarbera that he had signed a stipulation to pay pension benefit arrears to his ex-wife pursuant to their dissolution judgment and to arrange for future direct payment from the military. Judge Trice told Judge LaBarbera that he had not paid his ex-wife her share of the retirement benefits based on advice he had received from Commissioner Perry to the effect that it was not his responsibility to initiate payments to her, and that it was Dawna's responsibility to initiate the process to obtain her share of his retirement benefit. Judge Trice asked Judge LaBarbera if he would handle the stipulation by reviewing and signing it.

On Friday morning, July 18, 2014, Judge Trice called Court Executive Officer Susan Matherly on her cell phone. The purpose of the call was to make arrangements with Matherly to have the settlement stipulation given directly to Judge LaBarbera for judicial approval and his signing.

On July 21, 2014, Matherly spoke with the judge in chambers for about 30-45 minutes. The judge told Matherly that when he retired from the military he had talked to Commissioner Perry about what to do about his pension. The judge said he asked the commissioner, "Do I tell her? Give it to her?" or words to that effect. The judge said the commissioner told him, "You can put it in trust but can't cut her a check because you don't know what the withholdings are," and, "Don't spend it, put it in a trust and wait for her to ask for it," or words to that effect.

The statements the judge made to attorney Duenow, Judge LaBarbera, and CEO Matherly, which the judge attributed to Commissioner Perry, were untrue because they misstated Commissioner Perry's opinions, as described by the judge. Commissioner Perry never told the judge not to pay Dawna her share of the pension benefits. Nor did he tell the judge to put Dawna's share in a trust account and to wait for her to contact him. Dawna was the commissioner's former client, to whom he owed a continuing fiduciary obligation of loyalty and confidentiality. (Oasis West Realty LLC v. Goldman (2011) 51 Cal.4th 811, 821.)

The statements Judge Trice attributed to Commissioner Perry implied that Commissioner Perry had given him advice that was contrary to the interests of the commissioner's former client, and contrary to the terms of the Judgment of Dissolution and the MSA. By making these statements to Duenow, Judge LaBarbera, and Matherly, the judge was, intentionally or not, impugning the integrity of Commissioner Perry by asserting that he gave advice that was contrary to the interests of a former client, about the very matter he represented the former client in, and that was contrary to the terms of a court judgment.

Judge Trice's statements about advice he had received from Commissioner Perry constituted prejudicial misconduct. His conduct violated the Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 1, 2, and 2A. (See Gonzalez v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1983) 33 Cal.3d 359, 371 [judge's comments from the bench and in chambers impugning character and competence of judicial colleagues violated canon 2A; Censure of Judge Jose A. Velasquez (1997) p. 3 [judge's public statements disparaging judicial colleagues and local attorneys, made both on and off bench, constituted willful misconduct].)

Count One C

As previously discussed, on July 15, 2014, the judge signed two documents in connection with resolving the pension arrears issue with Dawna – a Stipulation Re Payment of Military Benefits Pending Direct Distribution Order, and a Qualifying Court Order re: Military Retirement Benefits. The terms of the stipulation are set forth above on page 10.

On July 15, Judge Trice called Duenow's office and spoke to Duenow's paralegal, Gina Goodwin. The judge informed Goodwin that he had signed the stipulation and that they would receive it shortly. The judge further stated that he had arranged for Judge LaBarbera to sign the stipulation, and that he wanted Duenow's office to submit it through CEO Matherly. The judge and Duenow had not previously discussed or agreed to this arrangement. On July 15, Goodwin prepared a memorandum to Duenow documenting her conversation with the judge, which states:

> Judge Trice just called. He says he is going to be busy now, but relayed some info for me to pass along to you. [¶] He is concerned about submitting the document to the Court here. He thinks the Judges will start DQing themselves to keep from signing this doc. He has arranged for Judge LaBarbera to sign off on the document. He would like for us to submit it through

> Susan Matherly (court executive officer). She is on vacation until Monday. He has signed the doc and sent it back to us with a check for Dawna enclosed. We should receive it shortly.

During the chambers conference with CEO Matherly on July 21, 2014, the judge told Matherly that he had called her on the previous Friday (July 18) because the parties were stipulating that Judge LaBarbera would sign the stipulation, and he wanted her to process the stipulation.

Matherly subsequently received the stipulation and order from Duenow's office and, pursuant to her conversation with Judge Trice, she left the documents on Judge LaBarbera's desk. Matherly did not discuss the documents with Judge LaBarbera.

On July 28, 2014, Judge LaBarbera signed the stipulation and order. The documents were then returned to Matherly and she had them filed with the court.

As a party to the proceeding, Judge Trice was without authority to determine who would handle the stipulation and order. Even as a judge, Judge Trice had no authority to assign the handling of the stipulation and order he entered into with Dawna to Judge LaBarbera. The authority to assign and reassign cases rests with the presiding judge. (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 10.603(b).) (In July 2014, Judge Dodie Harman was the presiding judge.) Further, Judge Trice was disqualified from presiding over the matter because he had a financial interest in the proceeding and was a party. (Code Civ. Proc., § 170.1(a)(3)(A)&(4).) A judge who is disqualified from a case may take certain limited actions in the case, but those actions do not include assigning the case to another judge. (See, Code Civ. Proc., § 170.4(a).)

In selecting a particular judge to act on the stipulation, Judge Trice was acting beyond the limits of his lawful judicial power and he knew or should have known that he was acting beyond the limits of a judge's authority. In his conversation with Duenow's paralegal, Gina Goodwin, on July 15, 2014, the judge told Goodwin that he had arranged for Judge LaBarbera to sign the stipulation because he was "concerned" that if the document was submitted to the court, the court's judges would "start DQing themselves to keep from signing" it. In other words, Judge Trice was motivated by a desire to have the stipulation signed and to avoid the possibility of the court's judges disqualifying themselves en masse.

By directing who would be assigned to handle the stipulation and order, Judge Trice abused his authority, failed to uphold the integrity of the judiciary (canon 1), failed to avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety (canon 2), failed to act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary (canon 2A), and used his judicial position to advance his personal interests (canon 2B(2)). Moreover, because the judge was acting in his judicial capacity when he directed CEO Matherly to submit the stipulation and order to Judge LaBarbera his conduct constituted willful misconduct.

Count Two A

On May 1, 2013, Judge Harman, who was the assistant presiding judge and supervising judge of the criminal team, which included Judge Trice, was looking for Judge Trice to discuss coverage of the next day's calendars. Judge Harman learned from the judicial secretary that Judge Trice had left for the day.

At 5:12 p.m., Judge Harman sent an email to Judge Trice. Before sending the email she spoke with Judge LaBarbera, who was the presiding judge, about Judge Trice leaving the courthouse earlier that afternoon. Judge LaBarbera directed her to inquire about Judge Trice's whereabouts that afternoon, as was her duty as a supervising judge, and reviewed and approved the following email, which Judge Harman drafted. Judge Harman sent this email to Judge Trice at 5:12 p.m.:

> I was trying to find you this afternoon to talk about tomorrow's calendars. I may need to get some help from you and wanted to see if you could help out. I was told you had left for the day so I was just wondering where you were because you did not check with me if we were covered before you left. If you could let me know where you were and if you are available to help with calendars tomorrow I would appreciate it.

Thanks, Dodie

That evening at 9:34 p.m., Judge Trice responded to Judge Harman with the following email, which he copied to the CEO Susan Matherly, and three of the court's judges, Judges LaBarbera, Charles Crandall, and Michael Duffy:

> Dear Ms. Assistant Presiding Judge and Criminal Team "Supervising Judge" –
>
> As I told you last week, we have Veteran's Treatment Court meetings every Wednesday until kick-off on June 14th.
>
> I can't help tomorrow.
>
> I handled my calendar today, D10's morning calendar today, D10s 2960 calendar today with two court trials and 3 search warrants. Then I went to the Vet's Hall for the meeting, which turns out – he cancelled, so I talked with the V.A. rep for about an hour and came home. I just got done handling an after hours search warrant and a 20 page Pen Register Request. I'm sure you are just as busy with your physical therapy, workout time and all.
>
> I don't appreciate you checking on me – I don't work for you and never will. I was elected by the citizens of this county, unlike you. I would hope you and your pals upstairs would have better things to do with your time as Superior Court Judges than keep a journal on another Judge's comings and goings.
>
> Pathetic. . . . get a life. I look forward to running against you for P.J. The Court will be a lot better off without you in some position of assumed power. Good luck in the campaign.

Have a really nice night.

My civil attorneys say I should have no more contact with you or [Judge] Tangeman without an impartial witness or reporter present. I plan to take their advice.

Sincerely,

John A. Trice, Judge
San Luis Obispo Superior Court

As supervising judge of the criminal team, Judge Harman was responsible for ensuring that there was judicial coverage for all of the criminal court calendars. Consistent with that responsibility, Judge Harman's May 1, 2013 email to Judge Trice advised him that she had been looking for him that afternoon to talk about the next day's calendars, asked where he had been that afternoon since he did not check with her before leaving, and asked if he would be available to help with the next day's calendars.

Judge Trice's email response to Judge Harman included comments that were disparaging ("I was elected by the citizens of our county, unlike you"), and comments that were undignified and discourteous ("Pathetic ... get a life," "The Court will be better off without you in some position of assumed power"). Judge Trice also implied that he would not speak to Judge Harman without a "witness or reporter" present.

Judge Trice's conduct violated canons 1, 2A, 3B(4), and 3C(2) (a judge shall cooperate with other judges and court officials in the administration of court business).

At a minimum, the judge's conduct constituted improper action.

Count Two B

The San Luis Obispo County Superior Court employs nine court reporters who work for the court under the supervision of Tammy Denchfield, Director of Court Operations. At a judges' meeting on October, 3, 2014, the judges had agreed to continue a policy and practice that the nine court reporters would be randomly rotated and assigned to a judge for an eight-week period, this despite some of the judges complaining about having to work with court reporter Claire Trout.

On October 30, 2014, the court was scheduled for the next court reporter rotation (two months), effective November-December 2014. Tammy Denchfield was responsible for preparing the rotation and sending it out to the judges and court staff. Her office was sending the rotation out that afternoon.

Before sending the rotation schedule out, Denchfield addressed Judge Trice's request to keep court reporter Lisa Andrews, who was then assigned to his department, with Presiding Judge Harman. Judge Harman told Denchfield to do what she needed to do. Denchfield then directed Anna Hernandez, the supervising court reporter, to send the rotation out. Denchfield left for the day, around 4:30 p.m., her normal work schedule, and was starting a vacation leave the next day.

When Denchfield arrived home at 5:00 p.m. she received the following email from Judge Trice on her iPad:

> Tammy – I was notified that Claire Trout has been re-assigned to our courtroom. I will not work with her. She has been rude to my other staff, the public and attorneys assigned to our court. We have several high profile, high stress cases coming up on our calendar, we cannot have such a person with us when trying to serve the public.

At 5:04 p.m. Denchfield forwarded the email to Susan Matherly.

At 5:05 p.m., Matherly forwarded the email to Judge Harman.

The next day, October 31, at 8:14 a.m., Judge Harman responded to Matherly by email:

> Susan:
> I believe rotations should be the same for everybody. The same issues have been raised by a number of judges. Bottom line is if she does something then it should be reported by him and dealt with by her supervisor. None of us have been able to exclude a particular reporter from our courtroom. The problem should be dealt with if there is one instead of saying particular judges refuse particular reporters.

At 8:31 a.m., Matherly responded to Judge Trice by email, as follows:

> The first thing you should realize is that this is a labor issue. The rotations are part of a labor agreement between the court and SEIU. I believe rotations should be the same for everybody. As you may recall, the same issues have been raised by a number of judges at our most recent judges' meeting and it was agreed that if she does something it should be reported to her supervisor so we can deal with the behavior. None of the judges have been able to exclude a particular reporter from their courtrooms. The problem should be dealt with if there is one instead of saying particular judges can refuse particular reporters. The process should be fair to both the other judges and the reporters. I am happy to sit down and discuss this with you at your convenience.

At 8:47 a.m. on October 31, Judge Trice responded to Matherly by email as follows:

> I will not work with her. This has been a stressful year for Frances and I and we don't need to add more tension in our courtroom. If Chris Money, Barry [LaBarbera], Dodie [Harman] or Jeff Burke didn't want a bailiff or employee in their courtroom for a good reason, they were always moved. I will be given the same consideration. One male bailiff was moved completely out of this building a few years ago based on personal conflict with a female judge. Linda Hurst routinely refuses to accept certain personnel in her courtroom. I will be given the same consideration.
>
> Our department has always gone the extra mile to help out this court. We have a "well-oiled", efficient department.

> She either moves, or the P.J. can move me and my staff. I will not call my calendar on Tuesday with her in the courtroom. I will order her out of the room in public view.
>
> If there is still resistance to this, I would like a special Judge's meeting to be scheduled before Tuesday.

At 9:28 a.m., Matherly sent the judge the following email:

> I'm sorry but we cannot make an exception to the court reporter rotation policy.

At 9:36 a.m., the judge responded:

> Please schedule a special Judge's meeting.

On November 1, 2014, the judge sent Matherly the following email:

> I don't need a meeting. I'll suck it up for 8 weeks. [¶] Sorry for any stress this caused you.

Judge Trice may have had legitimate concerns about court reporter Trout, who had just been assigned to his courtroom. However, his concerns about Trout were based on conduct that had occurred in the past, and that predated the October 3, 2014 judges meeting at which all of the judges agreed that Trout would be rotated through every department. Further, the assignment of courtroom staff is not a matter within the judge's purview. Judge Trice's statement to CEO Matherly that he would refuse to call his calendar if Trout was in the courtroom, and to "order her out of the room in public view," was intemperate, and inconsistent with his obligation to cooperate with court officials in the administration of court business.

The judge's conduct violated canons 1, 2A, 3B(4), 3C(1) (a judge shall not, in the performance of administrative duties, engage in speech, gestures, or other conduct that would reasonably be perceived as bias or prejudice), and 3C(2).

At a minimum, the judge's conduct constituted improper action.

Count Three

Judge Trice and criminal defense attorney David Hurst are close personal friends. The judge and Hurst became friends while they were both employed by the San Luis Obispo County District Attorney's Office in the 1980's. While with the DA's office, they socialized often, including playing golf together and occasionally taking vacations together. Hurst left the DA's office in 1996 and went into private practice. Since then, Hurst and the judge have continued their friendship. Hurst considers the judge one of his four "best friends." Hurst has been to the judge's house at least 20 times. They watch sports events together and Hurst typically goes to the judge's house on Thanksgiving. They socialize together outside of work approximately once a month. In 2014, when Hurst was suffering from a knee injury that made it difficult for him to drive his manual transmission Porsche automobile, he traded cars with the judge's wife at her suggestion. While the trade was in place, the judge on approximately four occasions drove Hurst's Porsche to work and parked it in the judges' parking lot.

Since the judge took the bench in 2003, Hurst has frequently appeared in his court representing criminal defendants. The judge does not disqualify himself in cases in which Hurst appears as counsel of record, nor does he disclose on the record the fact or nature of his relationship with Hurst.

Judge Trice's position is that he is not disqualified from handling cases in which Hurst represents a defendant, and that he need not disclose his personal relationship with Hurst because the opposing representative in all of his criminal cases are 20-year veterans of the district attorney's office who are aware of his relationship with Hurst, and who have never raised any concern of personal bias or prejudice, or the appearance of impropriety because of the relationship.

Under canon 3E(1), a judge is obligated to disqualify himself or herself in any proceeding in which disqualification is required by law. The circumstances under which a trial court judge is disqualified are set forth in Code of Civil Procedure section 170.1. Judge Trice's close friendship with Hurst would arguably appear to be a disqualifying circumstance under section 170.1(a)(6)(A)(iii), which provides that a judge shall be disqualified if "[a] person aware of the facts might reasonably entertain a doubt that the judge would be able to be impartial."

Even if the judge's friendship with Hurst did not require his disqualification, the judge nevertheless had an obligation to disclose their relationship on the record. Canon 3E(2)(a) provides that in all trial court proceedings, a judge shall disclose on the record "information that is reasonably relevant to the question of disqualification under Code of Civil Procedure section 170.1, even if the judge believes there is no actual basis for disqualification."

At a minimum, the judge's conduct violated canon 3E(2) and constituted improper action.

Prior Discipline

In 2012, Judge Trice received an advisory letter for continuing to preside over matters in a case after "voluntarily recusing" from a new trial motion.

Aggravating or Mitigating Factors

Judge Trice enlisted in the U.S. Air Force in 1972. He served eight years active duty, and thereafter 18 years in the Reserves. He was promoted to the rank of Lieutenant Colonel in 1997. He was awarded three Air Force Meritorious Service Medals during his military service.

Judge Trice worked for the San Luis Obispo County District Attorney's Office from 1984 through 2002. He was selected to serve as that office's first Felony Trial Team Leader in 1988. He handled over 140 jury trials and successfully prosecuted two of the county's four death penalty cases. Additionally, he served on the Governor's Arson Task Force.

In 2003, he started the county's first Mental Health Treatment Court, and in 2013 started the county's first Veteran's Treatment Court.

Count 2A

Judge Trice acknowledges that his conduct in stating that he would not call his calendar, and would order the court reporter out of the room in public view was both improper and intemperate. In mitigation, the evidence shows that he relented and apologized less than 24 hours after the inappropriate email: "I don't need a meeting. I'll suck it up for 8 weeks. Sorry for any stress this caused you."

Count 3

Judge Trice believed that disclosure of his friendship with Mr. Hurst was not required because the deputy district attorneys in his court had actual knowledge of his long friendship with Mr. Hurst. Upon reflection, Judge Trice now appreciates that a formal disclosure to all parties, including defendants, was the required course of conduct. He will make formal disclosure in the future.

By signing this stipulation, in addition to consenting to discipline on the terms set forth, Judge Trice expressly admits that the foregoing facts are true and that he agrees with the stated legal conclusions.

Dated: 1/22, 2016

Judge John A. Trice
Respondent

Dated: 22 January, 2016

Eugene Iredale, Esq.
Attorney for Respondent

Dated: January 25, 2016

Gary W. Schons, Esq.
Examiner for the Commission

RECEIVED
JAN 25 2016
COMMISSION ON
JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

STATE OF CALIFORNIA
BEFORE THE COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

| | |
|---|---|
| INQUIRY CONCERNING JUDGE JOHN A. TRICE, No. 196 | AFFIDAVIT OF CONSENT FOR DISCIPLINE |

Pursuant to Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance, rule 127(d), Judge John A. Trice submits the following affidavit of consent in Inquiry No. 196:

1. I consent to a public censure, as set forth in the Stipulation for Discipline by Consent.

2. My consent is freely and voluntarily rendered.

3. I admit the truth of the charges as modified by the Stipulation for Discipline by Consent.

4. I waive review by the Supreme Court.

I declare under penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct. Executed this 22 day of January, 2016.

Judge John A. Trice

Respondent

FILED
JUL 17 2017
COMMISSION ON
JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

STATE OF CALIFORNIA

BEFORE THE COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

| | |
|---|---|
| INQUIRY CONCERNING JUDGE MICHAEL S. WILLIAMS,No. 200 | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC CENSURE PURSUANT TO STIPULATION (Commission Rule 127) |

I. INTRODUCTION AND SUMMARY

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge Michael S. Williams, a judge of the Napa County Superior Court. On June 14, 2017, the commission filed its Notice of Formal Proceedings (Notice) against Judge Williams in which it charges him with taking without permission at least two business card holders from The City Club of San Francisco while there attending a dinner held by the American Academy of Matrimonial Lawyers.

By Stipulation for Discipline by Consent (Stipulation), Judge Williams and his counsel, Edith R. Matthai, Esq., of Robie and Matthai, and the examiner for the commission, Mark A. Lizarraga, Esq., proposed that the commission resolve this matter by imposition of a censure, with the agreement that Judge Williams will tender his irrevocable resignation from office, effective December 5, 2017, and will not thereafter seek or hold judicial office, or accept a position or an assignment as a judicial officer, subordinate judicial officer or judge pro tem with any court in the State of California, or accept reference of work from any California state court. The judge has also agreed to take approved leave from the bench as of October 20, 2017. Pursuant to the Stipulation, Judge Williams waives any further proceedings and review in this matter, including formal proceedings (Rules of Com. on Jud. Performance, rule 118 et seq.) and review by the Supreme Court (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 9.60). (The Stipulation is attached to this decision.)

Pursuant to commission rule 127, the Stipulation was approved by the commission on July 12, 2017. Accordingly, the commission issues this censure based on the terms and conditions of the Stipulation and based on the following Stipulated Facts and Legal Conclusions.

II. STIPULATED FACTS AND LEGAL CONCLUSIONS

Judge Michael S. Williams became a judge of the Napa County Superior Court in 2012. His current term began in January 2015. Judge Williams previously served as a court commissioner from 2001 to 2012.

Count One

On the evening of March 9, 2016, Judge Williams attended a "Judges' Night" dinner held by the Northern California chapter of the American Academy of Matrimonial Lawyers ("AAML") at The City Club of San Francisco. On his way out of the event, Judge Williams took two business card holders belonging to The City Club. The cardholders were sitting on a table near the elevators on the 10th floor of the building. The cardholders contained the business cards of the City Club's managers. Judge Williams pocketed one cardholder, walked away, returned and took one more before taking an elevator down to the first floor. The cardholders were consistent with the art deco décor of The City Club, were of value to The City Club and its managers, and were estimated by The City Club to be worth between $30 and $50 each.

On March 28, 2016, an AAML Fellow told Judge Williams that he had been seen on video taking the cardholders and suggested that he return them to The City Club and self-report. On March 29, 2016, Judge Williams sent a package to The City Club that contained the cardholders and a letter of apology. In the letter, Judge Williams wrote, "I have no excuse but that I had a couple of glasses of wine and was not thinking of what I was doing." On March 30, 2016, Judge Williams sent the Commission on Judicial Performance a letter stating that on an "unexplainable impulse" he had taken two cardholders as he was leaving a bar dinner in San Francisco a couple weeks previously, but that he had returned them. Judge Williams later wrote to the commission that he took the cardholders so that he could display some "joke business cards" that he and a friend had printed about 40 years ago and that he recently found.

Judge Williams expresses deep remorse, embarrassment and regret over his actions.

Judge Williams's conduct violated the Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 1, 2, and 2A, and was conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute.

Prior Discipline

Judge Williams has no prior discipline.

III. DISCIPLINE

Article VI, section 18, subsection (d) of the California Constitution provides that the commission may "censure a judge . . . for action . . . that constitutes . . . conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute." Judge Williams concedes that he engaged in prejudicial misconduct.

The purpose of a commission disciplinary proceeding is not punishment, "but rather the protection of the public, the enforcement of rigorous standards of judicial conduct, and the maintenance of public confidence in the integrity . . . of the judicial system." (Broadman v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1998) 18 Cal.4th 1079, 1112, citing Adams v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1995) 10 Cal.4th 866, 912.) The commission believes that this purpose is best served by the discipline proposed in the Stipulation.

Judge Williams's conduct seriously undermines public confidence in the integrity of the judiciary. The judge's agreement to resign effective December 5, 2017, and not to seek or hold judicial office thereafter affords protection to the public and the reputation of the judiciary in the most expeditious manner by avoiding the delay of further proceedings.[1] Accordingly, we impose this censure pursuant to the terms and conditions of the attached Stipulation.

---

[1] Commission rules for formal proceedings provide for the appointment of special masters, an evidentiary hearing before the special masters, the filing of a special masters' report, briefing to the commission, and an appearance before the commission prior to the issuance of a commission decision. (Rules of Com. on Jud. Performance, rules 121, 123,

Commission members Hon. Ignazio J. Ruvolo; Mr. Richard Simpson; Ms. Mary Lou Aranguren; Anthony P. Capozzi, Esq.; Hon. Michael B. Harper; Ms. Sarah Kruer Jager; Ms. Pattyl A. Kasparian; Dr. Michael A. Moodian; Nanci E. Nishimura, Esq.; and Mr. Adam N. Torres voted to issue this decision and order imposing a public censure pursuant to the Stipulation. Commission member Hon. Erica R. Yew was recused.

Date: July 17, 2017

Hon. Ignazio J. Ruvolo
Chairperson

129, 130, 132, 134.) The commission notes that if this Stipulation were not accepted, this process would not be completed before December 5, 2017.

FILED
JUL 07 2017
COMMISSION ON
JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

STATE OF CALIFORNIA

BEFORE THE COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

| | |
|---|---|
| INQUIRY CONCERNINGJUDGE MICHAEL S. WILLIAMS,No. 200 | STIPULATION FOR DISCIPLINEBY CONSENT (Rule 127) |

Pursuant to Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance, rule 127, Judge Michael S. Williams of the Napa County Superior Court, represented by counsel Edith R. Matthai of Robie and Matthai, and commission examiner Mark A. Lizarraga, Esq. ("the parties") submit this proposed disposition of Inquiry No. 200. The parties request that the commission resolve this matter by imposition of a censure; a resignation from office effective December 5, 2017; and an agreement that Judge Williams will not seek or hold judicial office, accept a position or an assignment as a judicial officer, subordinate judicial officer, or judge pro tem with any court in the State of California, or accept a reference of work from any California state court, at any time after December 5, 2017.

The parties believe that the settlement provided by this agreement is in the best interests of the commission and Judge Williams because, among other reasons, in light of the stipulated facts and legal conclusions, and the judge's agreement to resign from office and not to serve as a judicial officer after his resignation, a censure adequately protects the public and will avoid the delay and expense of further proceedings. In addition, in the absence of a stipulated disposition, commission proceedings could not be completed before December 5, 2017. Should Judge Williams resign before commission proceedings are concluded, the highest discipline that the commission could impose would be a censure and a bar which, in effect, is the disposition proposed by this stipulation.

TERMS AND CONDITIONS OF AGREEMENT

1. This agreement resolves the matters alleged in the Inquiry Concerning Judge Williams, No. 200.

2. The commission shall issue a censure based on the agreed Stipulated Facts and Legal Conclusions set forth herein.

3. If the commission accepts this proposed disposition, the commission's decision and order imposing censure may articulate the reasons for its decision and include explanatory language that the commission deems appropriate.

4. Judge Williams waives any further proceedings and review in this matter, including formal proceedings (commission rule 118, et seq.) and review by the Supreme Court (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 9.60).

5. Pursuant to this agreement, Judge Williams has agreed to irrevocably resign from his position as a judge effective December 5, 2017. He also has agreed to be absent from the bench after October 19, 2017, and represents that he has sufficient leave time to be absent from the bench between October 20, 2017 and his permanent resignation date of December 5, 2017, and that his presiding judge will allow him to be absent from October 20, 2017, until his permanent resignation date of December 5, 2017.

6. Judge Williams also agrees that he will not seek or hold judicial office, accept a position or an assignment as a judicial officer, subordinate judicial officer, or judge pro tem with any court in the State of California, or accept a reference of work from any California state court, at any time after December 5, 2017.

7. If Judge Williams attempts to serve in a judicial capacity in violation of the foregoing paragraph, the commission may withdraw the censure and reinstitute formal proceedings as to all of the charges in the notice of formal proceedings. The commission may also refer the matter to the State Bar of California.

8. If Judge Williams fails to resign in accordance with this agreement, the commission may withdraw the censure and resume its formal proceedings as to all of the charges in the notice of formal proceedings. Failure to comply with the terms and conditions of this agreement may also constitute additional and independent grounds for discipline.

9. The commission may reject this proposed disposition and continue with the formal proceedings. If the commission does so, nothing in this proposed disposition will be deemed to be admitted by Judge Williams.

Accordingly, it is hereby stipulated and agreed that the commission shall issue a censure on the above Terms and Conditions of Agreement, and based on the following Stipulated Facts and Legal Conclusions:

STIPULATED FACTS AND LEGAL CONCLUSIONS

Judge Michael S. Williams became a judge of the Napa County Superior Court in 2012. His current term began in January 2015. Judge Williams previously served as a court commissioner from 2001 to 2012.

Count One

On the evening of March 9, 2016, Judge Williams attended a "Judges' Night" dinner held by the Northern California chapter of the American Academy of Matrimonial Lawyers ("AAML") at The City Club of San Francisco. On his way out of the event, Judge Williams took two business card holders belonging to The City Club. The cardholders were sitting on a table near the elevators on the 10th floor of the building. The cardholders contained the business cards of the City Club's managers. Judge Williams pocketed one cardholder, walked away, returned and took one more before taking an elevator down to the first floor. The cardholders were consistent with the art deco décor of The City Club, were of value to The City Club and its managers, and were estimated by The City Club to be worth between $30 and $50 each.

On March 28, 2016, an AAML Fellow told Judge Williams that he had been seen on video taking the cardholders and suggested that he return them to The City Club and self-report. On March 29, 2016, Judge Williams sent a package to The City Club that contained the cardholders and a letter of apology. In the letter, Judge Williams wrote, "I have no excuse but that I had a couple of glasses of wine and was not thinking of what I was doing." On March 30, 2016, Judge Williams sent the Commission on Judicial Performance a letter stating that on an "unexplainable impulse" he had taken two cardholders as he was leaving a bar dinner in San Francisco a couple weeks previously, but that he had returned them. Judge Williams later wrote to the commission that he took the cardholders so that he could display some "joke business cards" that he and a friend had printed about 40 years ago and that he recently found.

Judge Williams expresses deep remorse, embarrassment and regret over his actions.

Judge Williams's conduct violated the Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 1, 2, and 2A, and was conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute.

Prior Discipline

Judge Williams has no prior discipline.

By signing this stipulation, in addition to consenting to discipline on the terms set forth, Judge Williams expressly admits that the foregoing facts are true and that he agrees with the stated legal conclusions.

Dated: June 27, 2017

Judge Michael S. Williams
Respondent

Dated: July 6, 2017

Edith R. Matthai, Esq.
Attorney for Judge Williams

Dated: July 7, 2017

Mark A. Lizarraga, Esq.
Examiner

FILED
JUL 07 2017
COMMISSION ON
JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

STATE OF CALIFORNIA

BEFORE THE COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

| | |
|---|---|
| INQUIRY CONCERNINGJUDGE MICHAEL S. WILLIAMS,No. 200 | STIPULATION FOR DISCIPLINEBY CONSENT (Rule 127) |

Pursuant to Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance, rule 127(d), Judge Michael S. Williams submits the following affidavit of consent:

1. I consent to a public censure; agree not to seek or hold judicial office, accept a position or an assignment as a judicial officer, subordinate judicial officer, or judge pro tem with any court in the State of California, or accept a reference of work from any California state court, at any time after December 5, 2017; agree to irrevocably resign from judicial office, effective December 5, 2017; and agree to be absent from the bench after October 19, 2017, as set forth in the Stipulation for Discipline by Consent.

2. My consent is freely and voluntarily rendered.

3. I admit the truth of the charges in Count One of the Notice of Formal Proceedings only to the extent specifically set forth in the Stipulation for Discipline by Consent.

4. I waive all further proceedings and review by the Supreme Court.

I declare under penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct. Executed this 27 day of June, 2017.

Judge Michael S. Williams
Respondent

ACCEPTANCE OF STIPULATION FOR IMPOSITION OF DISCIPLINE
IN THE INQUIRY CONCERNING JUDGE MICHAEL S. WILLIAMS, NO. 200

The foregoing Stipulation for Discipline by Consent is accepted by the Commission on Judicial Performance.

Dated: July 13, 2017

Honorable Ignazio J. Ruvolo
Chairperson
Commission on Judicial Performance

FILED
AUG 17 2017
COMMISSION ON
JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

STATE OF CALIFORNIA

BEFORE THE COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

| | |
|---|---|
| INQUIRY CONCERNING JUDGE GARY G. KREEP, No. 198 | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC CENSURE |

I.

INTRODUCTION

This disciplinary matter concerns San Diego County Superior Court Judge Gary G. Kreep. The commission commenced this inquiry with the filing of its Notice of Formal Proceedings (Notice) on October 12, 2016.

Judge Kreep is represented by James A. Murphy, Esq., and Janet L. Everson, Esq., of Murphy, Pearson, Bradley & Feeney in San Francisco, California. The examiners for the commission are commission trial counsel Mark A. Lizarraga, Esq., and commission assistant trial counsel Sei Shimoguchi, Esq.

The Notice charged Judge Kreep with multiple acts of misconduct between 2012 and 2015, including misconduct during his judicial campaign, failing to take adequate steps to withdraw as counsel of record before taking the bench, issuing checks on his law practice account after taking the bench, making numerous comments in the courtroom reflecting a lack of courtroom decorum and an appearance of bias, engaging in improper ex parte communications, acting out of hostility toward the San Diego City Attorney's Office after they filed a "blanket" challenge against the judge, telling an African-American court employee that she should not say she did not win a Halloween costume contest "due to racism" or words to that effect, failing to give an adequate opportunity to be heard, and soliciting legal opinions from counsel not on the case.

The Supreme Court appointed three special masters who held an evidentiary hearing and reported to the commission. The masters were Hon. Dennis A. Cornell, Retired, Justice of the Court of Appeal, Fifth Appellate District; Hon. Louis R. Mauro, Justice of the Court of Appeal, Third Appellate District; and Hon. Randy Rhodes, Judge of the Los Angeles County Superior Court.

An eight-day evidentiary hearing was held before the special masters commencing February 6, 2017. The masters filed their report containing their findings of fact and conclusions of law on April 20, 2017. The commission heard oral argument on June 28, 2017.

The masters found that all charges were proven by clear and convincing evidence, except for counts three (alleged independent investigation in connection with ex parte temporary restraining order), six (alleged failure to afford opportunity to be heard), and 11 (alleged ex parte communication). The masters concluded that Judge Kreep engaged in 29 acts of misconduct, including one act of willful misconduct.[1] We conclude that the masters' factual findings are supported by clear and convincing evidence based on our independent review of the record, and adopt them in their entirety.[2] We adopt the masters' legal conclusions on all counts except count 1C (misrepresentation on statement of economic interest), where we determine that Judge Kreep engaged in prejudicial misconduct rather than improper action.

---

[1] The parties filed written objections to the masters' findings and conclusions. Judge Kreep objected only to the masters' findings and/or conclusions in counts 1D [authoring fundraising letters opposing a nonjudicial candidate], 1E [failure to report accrued election expenses], 1F [use of his personal bank account and credit card for campaign expenses], 4 [improper response to blanket challenge], and 5 [comment to court employee reflecting racial bias]. The examiner objected only to the masters' legal conclusions in counts 1C [misrepresentations on Fair Political Practices Commission financial disclosure form] and 7 [comment about Filipino accent].

[2] The factual findings of the masters we have adopted are either quoted verbatim from the masters' report or summarized and paraphrased, as indicated in this decision. Record citations have been omitted in quoted excerpts from the masters' report.

We agree with the special masters' general assessment of Judge Kreep's judicial style during the time of the charged conduct.

> Judge Kreep expressed sensitivity to how individuals appearing in his courtroom might perceive his prior activities as an attorney, yet he was tone deaf to how attorneys might react to the casual way he ran his courtroom or the comments he made about their appearance and ethnicity. Although he worked diligently on his assigned cases, participated in judicial education opportunities, and volunteered for community outreach, he nevertheless delegated, delayed or ignored some of his most pressing ethical responsibilities. He had a sincere desire to connect with people and to help them in the courtroom, but his approach was improper for a judicial officer. Despite the numerous complaints about his conduct during his first year or so as a judge, the evidence suggests he now has an assignment that works for him and for the public.

We have determined to issue a severe public censure, the highest level of discipline available under the California Constitution short of removal. (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18.) This decision is based largely on Judge Kreep's pervasive pattern of misconduct evidencing a lack of sensitivity to the adverse impact of his conduct on others and the public's esteem for the judiciary, and his failure to appreciate and accept the impropriety of some of his misconduct. While these factors might otherwise warrant removal from office, we have also taken into consideration that most of the judge's misconduct occurred during his first year on the bench and the record suggests he has since made efforts to modify his judicial style to avoid the type of conduct that led to these proceedings.

II.

LEGAL STANDARDS

The examiner has the burden of proving the charges by clear and convincing evidence. (Broadman v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1998) 18 Cal.4th 1079, 1090 (Broadman).) "Evidence of a charge is clear and convincing so long as there is a 'high probability' that the charge is true. [Citations.]" (Ibid.) Factual findings of the masters are entitled to special weight because the masters have "the advantage of observing the demeanor of the witnesses." (Ibid; Inquiry Concerning Freedman (2007) 49 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 223, 232.) Legal conclusions of the masters are entitled to less deference because the commission has expertise with respect to the law of judicial misconduct. (See, e.g., Broadman, supra, 18 Cal.4th at p. 1090*; Adams v. Commission on Judicial Performance* (1995) 10 Cal.4th 866, 880 (Adams); Fletcher v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1998) 19 Cal.4th 865, 878 (Fletcher).)

A violation of the California Code of Judicial Ethics constitutes one of three levels of judicial misconduct: willful misconduct, prejudicial misconduct, or improper action. (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (d).) Willful misconduct is (1) unjudicial conduct that is (2) committed in bad faith (3) by a judge acting in his judicial capacity. (Broadman, supra, 18 Cal.4th at p. 1091.) The second most serious level of misconduct is prejudicial misconduct, "conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute." (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (d).) The least serious level of misconduct, improper action, occurs when the judge's conduct violates the canons, but the circumstances do not rise to the level of prejudicial misconduct and do not bring the judiciary into disrepute. (Inquiry Concerning Saucedo (2015) 62 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 1, 82; Inquiry Concerning Ross (2005) 49 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 79, 89, citing Adams, supra, 10 Cal.4th at pp. 897-899.)

III.

FINDINGS OF FACT AND CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

COUNT ONE

A. Misrepresentations on judicial election campaign Web site.

Judge Kreep was charged with misrepresenting on his campaign Web site that he was the current president of the Family Values Coalition (FVC), the Justice Political Action Committee (JPAC), and the California Justice Political Action Committee (CALJPAC), and that FVC was a current nonprofit California corporation.

1. Findings of Fact.

We adopt the following factual findings of the masters as summarized and paraphrased.

While Judge Kreep was a candidate for judicial office in San Diego in 2012, he paid Darshan Brahmbhatt, his "quasi-adoptive son," to create an election campaign Web site for him.[3] The only instructions Judge Kreep gave Mr. Brahmbhatt was to include a list of his endorsers (which Judge Kreep provided) and a link for people who wanted to make donations.

The Web site created by Mr. Brahmbhatt included, among other things, a link to Judge Kreep's biography. Without informing Judge Kreep, Mr. Brahmbhatt copied the biography from the Web site for the United States Justice Foundation (USJF), an organization Judge Kreep co-founded. Judge Kreep was involved with the USJF until shortly before he was sworn in as a judge.

Judge Kreep did not receive a "final draft" of the Web site before it "went live" in April 2012, but he looked at the Web site once during his campaign. Shortly after the Web site first went up, Judge Kreep told Mr. Brahmbhatt he did not like the content of the Web site, but did not specify what he did not like or what he wanted changed.

The link to Judge Kreep's biography was in plain sight on his Web page. However, Judge Kreep did not review the biography when he looked at his election campaign Web site after the Web site went up.

The biography on Judge Kreep's election campaign Web site stated, in part, "Gary co-founded [JPAC] in 1985" and "served as President of JPAC since then." "Gary co-founded [CALJPAC] in 1996" and "served as President of CALJPAC since then." "Gary co-founded [FVC] in 1998" and he "has served as the President of FVC since then. FVC is a nonprofit California corporation organized under [Internal Revenue Code section] 501(c)(4)."

[3] Although this case includes time periods when Gary Kreep was not yet a judge, we will generally refer to him as Judge Kreep for ease of reference.

With respect to the accuracy of the representations made on the Web site, we adopt the following factual findings of the masters.

"The phrase 'President . . . since then' means Judge Kreep was the current president of FVC, JPAC, and CALJPAC. (Black's Law Dict. (6th ed. 1990) p. 1385 ['in its apparent sense . . . [since] includes the whole period between the event and the present time].) Judge Kreep's Web site represented that FVC was an existing nonprofit corporation in 2012.

"The statements about FVC and Judge Kreep's position with FVC, JPAC and CALJPAC were false at the time of Judge Kreep's 2012 campaign. Judge Kreep was not the president of FVC and FVC was not in operation in 2012. The State administratively terminated CALJPAC prior to 2012. Nevertheless, Judge Kreep resigned his position with JPAC and CALJPAC on February 24, 2012. Therefore, he was not the president of FVC, JPAC or CALJPAC at the time his Web site said he was the current president of those organizations."

2. Conclusions of Law.

A candidate for judicial office must comply with the provisions of canon 5. (Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canons 6E and 6F.) Canon 5B(2), as in effect in 2012, provided that a candidate for judicial office shall not knowingly or with reckless disregard for the truth misrepresent any fact concerning the candidate. (Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, former canon 5B(2) [now found at canon 5B(1)(b)].) False information provided during a campaign for judicial office may constitute prejudicial misconduct. (See, e.g., Inquiry Concerning Couwenberg (2001) 48 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 205, 220-221; Public Reproval of Judge Bruce Van Voorhis (1992) p. 2.) In addition, a candidate for judicial office is responsible for ensuring the veracity of the statements published on his or her judicial election campaign Web site, even when the statements are posted by campaign staff. (Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canon 5B(2) [a candidate shall review and approve the content of all campaign materials produced by the candidate or his or her campaign committee before their dissemination]; Public Admonishment of Judge Tara M. Flanagan (2017)

p. 4 (Flanagan); Public Admonishment of Judge Charles R. Brehmer (2012) p. 4 (Brehmer); Public Admonishment of Judge Paul E. Zellerbach (2011) p. 6 (Zellerbach).)

We concur with and adopt the following findings and conclusions of the masters.

"Judge Kreep acknowledged he was responsible for ensuring that his campaign Web site was accurate. The false statements could have been identified but Judge Kreep did not check all the links on his campaign Web site or review his biography. Although there is no evidence Judge Kreep made knowing misstatements on his campaign Web site, he engaged in a reckless disregard for their truth by failing to confirm the veracity of the statements contained on his campaign Web site, in violation of former canon 5B(2) of the California Code of Judicial Ethics.

"Candidate Kreep's false Web site statements constituted improper action."

Neither party objected to these conclusions.

B. Failure to resign as president or chairman of three political action committees.

Judge Kreep was charged with failing to resign as president of JPAC, president of CALJPAC, and chairman of the Republican Majority Campaign (RMC) before he became a candidate for judicial office, as required by canon 5A(1).

1. Findings of Fact.

We adopt the following factual findings of the masters.

"On February 13, 2012, Judge Kreep filed a Candidate Intention Statement and a Declaration of Intention to become a candidate for superior court judge (Office number 34) with the San Diego County Registrar of Voters. He paid his filing fee and declared his intention to be a candidate in the June 5, 2012 election. His Candidate Intention Statement was filed with the California Secretary of State on February 16, 2012.

"Also on February 13, 2012, Jim Sills posted an item on sdrostra.com announcing that Judge Kreep filed for Office 34. Mr. Sills was Judge Kreep's friend and was the person who suggested that Judge Kreep run for judicial office. Among other things, the posting said candidate Kreep 'heads the United States Justice Foundation in North County, a conservative law agency that specializes in Constitutional Law and protection of family rights.' The posting said Kreep's candidacy assured that voters would have options. The posting purported to include a statement from then-candidate Kreep about why he sought a judicial position.

"Eleven days later, on February 24, 2012, Judge Kreep resigned his positions as chairman of the RMC and as president of JPAC and CALJPAC. RMC is a political action committee formed in 2008. Judge Kreep was the chairman of RMC. JPAC is a political action committee formed in 1982. Judge Kreep was the chairman of JPAC. CALJPAC is a political action committee that was never operational."

2. Conclusions of Law.

A judicial candidate shall not act as a leader or hold any office in a political organization. (Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canon 5A(1).) An "office" "commonly suggests a position of . . . trust or authority." (Black's Law Dict. (6th ed. 1990) p. 1082, col. 2.) A political organization within the meaning of canon 5A(1) includes a political action committee. (Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, Terminology.)

A person becomes a judicial candidate as soon as he or she makes a public announcement of candidacy, declares or files as a candidate with the election authority, or authorizes solicitation or acceptance of contributions or support. (Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, Terminology.) To become a candidate for judicial office, a person must file the declaration of intention required in Elections Code section 8023, and pay a filing fee. (Elec. Code, §§ 8023, subd. (b), 8105, subd. (b).) Prior to the solicitation or receipt of any contribution or loan, an individual who intends to be a judicial candidate must file with the Secretary of State an original statement, signed under penalty of perjury, of intention to be a candidate. (Gov. Code, § 85200; Cal. Code Regs., tit. 2, § 18520, subd. (b).)

Judge Kreep testified he intended to run for judicial office only if no one else ran against the sole candidate for Office 34, and he did not consider himself "an official candidate" until February 23, 2012, when he learned no one else would run for that office. We agree with the masters that "regardless of his private intentions, Judge Kreep became a candidate for judicial office on February 13, 2012, when he filed his Candidate Intention Statement, allowing him to begin soliciting and accepting contributions and loans for his campaign, and when he made a public announcement of his candidacy on sdrostra.com."

We adopt the following legal conclusions of the masters.

"The prohibition [against acting as a leader or holding office in a political organization] under canon 5A(1) was effective immediately when Judge Kreep became a candidate for judicial office. (Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canon 6F.) [¶] The RMC, JPAC, and CALJPAC are political action committees and thus they are political organizations. Judge Kreep held offices or positions of leadership in those political organizations when he became a candidate of judicial office on February 13, 2012, and he did not resign until 11 days later. He violated canon 5A(1) of the California Code of Judicial Ethics.

"Judge Kreep's violation constituted improper action. Because he resigned within 11 days, we conclude his violation did not rise to the level of prejudicial misconduct."

Neither party objected to these legal conclusions.

C. Misrepresentation on Statement of Economic Interests (FPPC Form 700).

Judge Kreep was charged with misrepresenting on his Fair Political Practices Commission (FPPC) Form 700 that he served as chairman of the Beat Obama Political Action Committee (Beat Obama PAC) when he never held that position.

1. Findings of Fact.

We adopt the following factual findings of the masters.

"On March 5, 2012, then-candidate Kreep signed an FPPC Form 700 under penalty of perjury. He verified that he had reviewed the statement and that to the best of his knowledge, the information contained therein and in the attached schedules was true and complete. Candidate Kreep stated in an attached schedule that he received a salary of between $1,00[1] and $10,000 as chairman of the Beat Obama PAC. The statement was filed with the San Diego County Registrar of Voters on March 9, 2012.

"Candidate Kreep's representation that he was chairman of the Beat Obama PAC and received a salary from that organization was false. Judge Kreep was not chairman of the Beat Obama PAC; rather, he performed legal services for the Beat Obama PAC.

"On June 27, 2013, more than a year after filing the original, Judge Kreep signed an amended schedule stating he received income from the Beat Obama PAC in the form of attorney's fees. He included a comment that he erroneously listed himself as chairman of the Beat Obama PAC."

2. Conclusions of Law.

A candidate for judicial office must know and strictly adhere to all applicable election laws and shall not knowingly or with reckless disregard for the truth misrepresent any fact about himself or herself. (Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canons 5, 5B(1)(b) [formerly 5B(2)]; Inquiry Concerning Hall (2006) 49 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 146, 163.)

Whether he was a chairman or only an attorney for the Beat Obama PAC should have been within Judge Kreep's knowledge. Judge Kreep does not claim that his relationship with the Beat Obama PAC was unclear to him. However, there is not clear and convincing evidence that Judge Kreep intentionally misrepresented his position with the Beat Obama PAC. The fact that he disclosed income from the Beat Obama PAC indicates he did not intend to conceal his relationship with that organization.

We agree with the masters' conclusion that Judge Kreep submitted the FPPC Form 700 with reckless disregard for the truth and violated former canon 5B(2) of the California Code of Judicial Ethics. However, we respectfully decline to adopt the masters' legal conclusion that this conduct constitutes improper action, and instead conclude that the judge committed prejudicial misconduct. We agree with the examiner that an objective person would find a judge's conduct in signing an official document under penalty of perjury with a reckless disregard for the truth to be prejudicial to public esteem for the judicial office.

D. Publicly opposing former President Barack Obama's reelection in 2012.

The Notice charged Judge Kreep with publicly opposing former President Barack Obama's reelection to the office of the President of the United States during Judge Kreep's candidacy for judicial office in 2012, in violation of canon 5A(2).

1. Findings of Fact.

We adopt the following factual findings of the masters.

"Judge Kreep signed fundraising letters for USJF during his 2012 candidacy for judicial office. ([S]ee above discussion about when Judge Kreep became a candidate for judicial office[.]) One letter is dated May 14, 2012, and appears to be on USJF's letterhead. The letterhead stated, 'United States Justice Foundation [¶] IMPEACH AND PROSECUTE OBAMA! [¶] A Special Project of the United States Justice Foundation.' The letter urged the recipient to sign a congressional investigation petition to, among other things, force the House of Representatives to investigate the validity of the long form birth certificate that President Obama released to the public; hold a House hearing on the validity of President Obama's eligibility to hold the office of President of the United States; and launch impeachment proceedings if it was proven that President Obama falsely claimed he was a natural born citizen of the United States. The letter said Congress needed to take action before the November elections. The letter continued, '[w]e also do not believe that Barack Obama can, or will, be beaten this November by any of the Republican challengers . . . [¶] . . . and that our effort may be all that stands between four more years of Barack Obama in the White House and catastrophe for our economy, our liberty, and our security.' The letter announced an intention to 'lead a massive election year public education campaign, to ensure that millions of Americans know, by this fall, exactly what' crimes President Obama may have committed. Then-candidate Kreep solicited an 'emergency donation' to the USJF. The letter was signed by 'Gary G. Kreep, Executive Director.'

"Judge Kreep also signed as 'Executive Director' a letter dated May 31, 2012, which also appears to be on USJF letterhead. The letter urged the recipient to send an emergency gift to USJF before June 29; the letter said that could be the day the Supreme Court ruled in favor of USJF's challenge to President Obama's eligibility to be on the 2012 presidential ballot. The letter added that even if the Supreme Court ruled in USJF's favor, USJF could not 'simply sit out the rest of this crucial election year on the sidelines.' The letter explained, 'we will STILL have a great deal of work to do between now and Election Day.' It said the 2012 election may prove to be the most important election year since 1860, and USJF's grassroots and legal teams were working on projects that 'go right to the heart of this year's elections,' including USJF's efforts to counter, among other things, President Obama's suspicious campaign money machine. The letter stated that the stakes would only get higher as Election Day approached, and '[w]e sit back and hope that he is defeated in November at our own peril!' The letter declared that USJF was fighting to ensure President Obama could not and would not 'steal this year's elections.'

"The Examiner also presented evidence of a June 18, 2012 letter with the heading, 'From the Desk of GARY KREEP' and USJF's name at the bottom of the page. The letter was signed by 'Gary G. Kreep, Executive Director.' June 18, 2012 was after Judge Kreep won the June 5, 2012 election but before he was sworn in as a judge. The letter repeated the appeals from the May 31, 2012 letter and urged that 'we' cannot 'simply sit out the rest of this crucial election year on the sidelines.' The June 18 letter said there was a lot of work to do before Election Day. The letter repeated that USJF was working on projects that went to the heart of the 2012 elections, including efforts to expose and counter various misdeeds by President Obama. The letter added that USJF had plans for the weeks and months leading to November and the stakes would only get higher as Election Day approached. The letter then repeated, 'We sit back and hope that he is defeated in November at our own peril!' The letter assured that USJF had been fighting to ensure President Obama did not steal the election. Judge Kreep asked in the letter for a gift to USJF to help pay for its election year efforts.

"Judge Kreep did not know Rebecca Dorner, the recipient of the letters presented in evidence. He believed the letters were sent en masse to a list of people USJF obtained from vendors."

2. Conclusions of Law.

Canon 5 prohibits a judge or judicial candidate from engaging in "political activity that may create the appearance of political bias or impropriety." (Former canon 5, in effect at the time of his conduct, contained the same prohibition.) Also, judges and candidates for judicial office shall not publicly oppose a candidate for nonjudicial office. (Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canon 5A(2); Zellerbach, supra, at pp. 4-5.) The masters concluded Judge Kreep's solicitation letters violated canon 5A(2) and his conduct constituted prejudicial misconduct "in that it would appear to an objective observer to be unjudicial and harmful to the independence of the judicial office."

Judge Kreep objects to the masters' conclusion that his conduct constituted misconduct and argues that his letters did not oppose President Obama's reelection and that canon 5A does not restrict a judicial candidate from making public statements on behalf of a non-political organization. As did the masters, we reject these arguments as being unsupported by the facts and the law.

Judge Kreep asserts that the letters addressed a serious constitutional and public policy issue – the eligibility of a sitting president to serve as president as a matter of constitutional law. He states that the letters did not urge anyone to vote for or against a political candidate, but rather simply urged Congress to investigate whether President Obama was a "natural born citizen," and thus eligible to serve as president.

We agree with the masters that Judge Kreep's argument that his letters did not oppose former President Obama's reelection effort is disingenuous, and is belied by the plain language of the letters. For instance, the May 14 letter stated, "our effort may be all that stands between four more years of Barack Obama in the White House …"; the May 21 letter stated that USJF could not "simply sit out the rest of this crucial election year on the sidelines," "we STILL have a great deal of work to do between now and Election Day," and USJF was fighting to ensure that President Obama could not and would not "steal this year's elections"; and the June 18 letter stated "we cannot simply sit out the rest of this crucial election on the sidelines," and "[w]e sit back and hope that he is defeated in November at our own peril!" There can be only one reasonable interpretation of these and other similar statements in the letters – Judge Kreep was urging the recipients to oppose the reelection of President Obama.

Moreover, as the examiner contends, canon 5A(2) is broadly worded (shall not "publicly endorse or oppose") and applies whether the judge's public opposition to President Obama's reelection was made on constitutional, political, or other grounds.

Judge Kreep further argues that canon 5A(2) does not prohibit a judicial candidate from signing a letter that otherwise violates that canon if the candidate signs the letter on behalf of a group that is not a "political organization." The masters rejected this argument, noting the judge did not cite any authority for the proposition, and stating, "We reject that argument as unsupported by the language of canon 5A(2) and contrary to the goal of prohibiting political activity that may create the appearance of political bias or impropriety. (Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, former canon 5 [eff. Apr. 29, 2009].)" We agree.

Canon 5A provides:

> Judges and candidates for judicial office shall not
> **********
> (2) make speeches for a political organization or candidate for nonjudicial office, or publicly endorse or publicly oppose a candidate for nonjudicial office.

The clear intent of the canon is to prohibit political activity that may create an appearance of bias. Judge Kreep's position that a judicial candidate can publicly endorse or oppose a political candidate so long as it is done in the candidate's capacity as a leader of an organization is contrary to this purpose. A reasonable person reading these letters would attribute the views expressed as being those of Gary Kreep as well as those of USJF, particularly when he is identified as the executive director.

For these reasons, we determine that Judge Kreep violated canon 5A(2) and that his conduct constitutes prejudicial misconduct.

E. Failure to report accrued election campaign expenses.

Judge Kreep is charged with creating an appearance of impropriety and failing to adhere to election laws by violating provisions of the Political Reform Act in failing to disclose on his FPPC Recipient Committee Campaign Statement (FPPC Form 460) $6,135 in accrued campaign expenses for the period March 18 through May 19, 2012, and $2,700 in accrued campaign expenses for the period May 20 through June 30, 2012, and by not filing amended statements to include the omitted accrued campaign expenses before he took the bench.

1. Findings of Fact.

We adopt the following factual findings of the masters.

"Judge Kreep signed an FPPC Form 460 for the period March 18, 2012 through May 19, 2012, and the period May 20, 2012 through June 30, 2012. He verified, under penalty of perjury, that he used all reasonable diligence in preparing and reviewing those statements and that to the best of his knowledge the information contained therein and in the attached schedules was true and complete. But the schedules attached to the statement for the period March 18, 2012 through May 19, 2012 do not show $6,135 in accrued campaign expenses owed to four sub-vendors of Landslide Communications for slate mailers. And the schedules attached to the statement for the period May 20, 2012 through June 30, 2012 do not show $2,700 in accrued campaign expenses owed to Landslide Communications of Nevada for phone banking services. Judge Kreep's candidate-controlled campaign committee filed amended statements on June 28, 2013, listing the omitted accrued campaign expenses.

"Judge Kreep entered into a stipulation with the Enforcement Division of the FPPC on September 18, 2015, agreeing that he violated the Political Reform Act, in particular, Government Code section 84211, subdivision (k), by failing to timely disclose accrued campaign expenses totaling $8,835, the expenses owed to the sub-vendors of Landslide Communications and to Landslide Communications of Nevada."

2. Conclusions of Law.

We adopt the following legal conclusions of the masters.

"A candidate for judicial office must know and strictly adhere to all applicable election laws. (Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canon 5; Inquiry Concerning Hall, supra, 49 Cal.4th CJP at p. 163.) A judge violates canons 1, 2A and 5 by failing to read the law governing his or her election and then contravening that law. (Inquiry Concerning Hall, supra, 49 Cal.4th CJP Supp. at pp. 162-163 [strict standard of liability applies].)

Ignorance of the law aggravates a violation in this context. (Inquiry Concerning Hall, supra, 49 Cal.4th CJP at p. 163.)

"The Political Reform Act of 1974 (Gov. Code, § 81000 et seq.) requires full and truthful disclosure of expenditures in election campaigns so 'the voters may be fully informed and improper practices may be inhibited.' (Gov. Code, § 81002, subd. (a).) 'Public confidence in the integrity of the judicial campaign process and the judiciary is harmed when the public is deprived of important information, such as sources of contributions and amounts of expenditures made by a campaign.' (In the Matter Concerning Judge Charles R. Brehmer, supra, at p. 4.)

"Each campaign statement[4] required by Government Code section 84200 et seq. must contain, among other things, the following for each person to whom an expenditure of one hundred dollars ($100) or more has been made during the period covered by the statement: the full name, street address, amount of each expenditure, and description of the consideration for which each expenditure was made. (Gov. Code, § 84211, subd. (k).) 'Expenditure' includes accrued expenses. (Ibid.)

"Judge Kreep violated Government Code section 84211, subdivision (k) by failing to disclose accrued expenses for his judicial election campaign. His violation was not an isolated incident, but involved two reporting periods. His conduct contravened the purposes of the Political Reform Act."

We concur with the masters that the forgoing conduct violated the California Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 1 [a judge shall uphold the integrity and independence of the judiciary], 2A [a judge shall respect and comply with the law], 3B(2) [a judge shall be faithful to the law regardless of partisan interests, public clamor or fear of criticism], and 5 [judges and candidates for judicial office shall comply with all applicable election, election campaign, and election fundraising laws] and constituted prejudicial misconduct because it would appear to an objective observer that his failure to comply with the

[4] "Campaign statement" means an itemized report which is prepared on a form prescribed by the FPPC and which provides the information required by Government Code section 84100 et seq. (Gov. Code, § 82006.)

Political Reform Act (hereafter, 'the Act') was unjudicial and harmful to the public esteem for the judicial office.

Judge Kreep objects to the masters' conclusion that his conduct constitutes prejudicial misconduct, and maintains that, although he violated the Act, his conduct constitutes, at most, improper action. He contends that because his violations of the Act were unintentional, they are not prejudicial to public esteem for the judiciary. We disagree.

Prejudicial misconduct does not require proof of intent to violate the law or the canons. The commission has previously found unintentional violations of the Act to constitute prejudicial misconduct. (Brehmer, supra, at pp. 2-4; Flanagan, supra, at pp. 3-4 [unintentional violations of the Act, including failure to report true source of campaign contribution and commingling personal, business and campaign funds].) Failure to comply with reporting requirements deprives the public of "important information that has the potential to affect how votes are cast," and can undermine public respect for the judiciary. (Flanagan, supra, at p. 3.)

For these reasons, we concur with and adopt the masters' conclusions.

F. Using a personal bank account and credit card to pay for campaign expenses.

Judge Kreep is charged with the appearance of impropriety in failing to comply with election laws by using his personal credit card or personal bank account rather than his campaign contribution account to make campaign expenditures totaling $41,796.

1. Findings of Fact.

We adopt the following factual findings of the masters.

"During his 2012 judicial election campaign, Judge Kreep made 14 campaign expenditures totaling $41,796 using his personal credit card or personal bank account. He entered into a stipulation with the Enforcement Division of the FPPC on September 18, 2015, agreeing that he violated the Political Reform Act by making campaign expenditures totaling $41,796 from accounts other than his campaign bank account. He agreed his conduct violated Government Code section 85201, subdivision (e). The expenditures from Judge Kreep's personal accounts were approximately 82 percent of his total campaign expenditures for the audit period."

2. Conclusions of Law.

Upon filing a statement of intention pursuant to Government Code section 85200, a candidate must establish a campaign contribution account at a financial institution located in the State. (Gov. Code, § 85201, subd. (a).) All campaign expenditures must be made from that account. (Gov. Code, § 85201, subd. (e).)

Judge Kreep violated these provisions of the Act by making campaign expenditures using his personal bank account and personal credit card. We concur with the masters that Judge Kreep's conduct violated canons 2A and 3B(2) of the California Code of Judicial Ethics (Brehmer, supra, at pp. 3-5; Public Admonishment of Judge Stephen E. Benson (2006) pp. 2-4), contravened the purposes of the Political Reform Act, and constituted prejudicial misconduct.

Judge Kreep maintains his conduct did not constitute prejudicial misconduct because the violations of the Act were unintentional. We disagree for the reasons discussed in response to the same objection to count one E.

G. Failing to take adequate steps to withdraw as counsel of record.

Judge Kreep is charged with remaining as counsel of record in a federal action captioned Liberi v. Taitz for approximately six weeks after he was sworn in as a judge.

1. Findings of Fact.

We adopt the following factual findings of the masters as summarized and paraphrased.

Judge Kreep was designated in June 2011 as local counsel for Pennsylvania attorney Philip Berg in Liberi v. Taitz, a case in the United States District Court for the Central District of California. Mr. Berg represented three plaintiffs.

Judge Kreep testified he asked Mr. Berg to find a replacement as local counsel on a number of occasions after he was declared the winner of the judicial election on July 3, 2012. According to Judge Kreep, Mr. Berg promised he would do so.

On December 17, 2012, Presiding Judge Robert Trentacosta urged Judge Kreep to get his substitutions of counsel squared away before he was sworn in. By the end of December, Mr. Berg had still not filed a motion to substitute counsel.

Judge Kreep filed a motion to withdraw as counsel of record on January 4, 2013, three days before he was sworn in as a judge. On January 9, 2013, Mr. Berg filed a request for approval of substitution of attorney, but Judge Kreep did not sign the request indicating his consent to the substitution. The district court set a status hearing for January 14, 2013, because Judge Kreep's motion to withdraw did not set a hearing date and the court found it unclear. On January 22, 2013, the district court concluded Judge Kreep's motion to withdraw as counsel of record and Mr. Berg's request for approval of substitution of attorney were both deficient, noting that Mr. Berg represented he would file a corrected request that would address the deficiencies. Judge Kreep was not allowed to withdraw as counsel at that time.

On January 30, 2013, Judge Trentacosta again urged Judge Kreep to take care of substituting out of the federal case, and told Judge Kreep that to do so was a priority.

On February 7, 2013, Mr. Berg filed another request for approval of substitution of attorney, which was signed by Judge Kreep. Although the district court found there were continuing deficiencies that were "most troubling," the district court recognized that Judge Kreep's judicial duties prevented him from practicing law. The request for substitution was granted on February 14, 2013, over a month after Judge Kreep was sworn in as a judge.

2. Conclusions of Law.

"A judge shall not practice law." (Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canon 4G.) An attorney elected or appointed to judicial office must ensure he or she is no longer counsel of record in any case and see that clients' cases are transferred to another attorney before taking the oath of judicial office. (Com. on Jud. Performance, Ann. Rep. (2012) Advisory Letter 29, p. 27; Rothman, Cal. Judicial Conduct Handbook (3d ed. 2007) §§ 8.10-8.11, pp. 393-394.)

Judge Kreep remained counsel of record in Liberi v. Taitz after he was sworn in as a judge. As noted by the masters, "[e]ven if Judge Kreep did not perform any legal work and did not make any appearance in Liberi v. Taitz, his status as local counsel allowed Mr. Berg to continue to appear as counsel pro hac vice in the case. (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 9.40(a).)"

We conclude, as did the masters, that Judge Kreep did not exercise reasonable diligence in seeking to withdraw as counsel of record. For almost six months after he was elected, he simply relied on Mr. Berg to take care of the matter and did not file his own motion until three days before he was sworn in as a judge. Any delay in the court's ruling on his motion was because Judge Kreep filed a deficient motion, and the deficiencies still had not been corrected more than a month later. Further, Presiding Judge Trentacosta twice urged Judge Kreep to take care of this matter promptly.

Judge Kreep violated the California Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 1, 2 [a judge shall avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety], 2A, and 4G [a judge shall not practice law]. We concur with the masters that his conduct constitutes improper action "[b]ecause he made some effort to seek a substitution but did not use reasonable diligence." Neither party objected to these legal conclusions.

H. Giving the impression of practicing law after taking the bench.

Judge Kreep was charged with giving the appearance of practicing law after taking the bench by issuing four checks between March and May 2014 which identified the account holder as "Gary G Kreep Sole Prop, DBA The Law Offices of Gary G Kreep."

1. Findings of Fact.

We adopt the following factual findings of the masters.

"On December 3, 2013, an arbitrator issued an award of $14,914.65 in favor of Robert E. Thompson, one of Judge Kreep's former clients, and against Judge Kreep in relation to an attorney fee dispute. Judge Kreep paid Mr. Thompson using a check from the Attorney Client Trust Account of the Law Office of Gary G. Kreep.

"Judge Kreep had been on the bench for over a year at the time the check was written. Judge Kreep said he made the payment out of his law office account in order to keep track of expenses or obligations incurred in connection with his law practice."

2. Conclusions of Law.

It is inappropriate for a judge to be connected in any way with his or her former law firm or to give the appearance that the judge is practicing law. (Rothman, supra, at § 8.14, p. 396.) "Since it is improper to practice law after taking the oath of judicial office, a judge should not use legal stationery to communicate with former clients or others concerning a former client's legal matters." (Ibid.) In addition, a judge must take steps to have his or her name immediately removed from the letterhead of his or her former law firm, as well as any other place where the name of the firm is displayed. (Ibid.)

We concur with the masters that "[t]he check sent by Judge Kreep to his former client gave the appearance that Judge Kreep still maintained a law practice." As such, his conduct violated canons 1, 2 and 2A of the California Code of Judicial Ethics and constituted improper action. Neither party objected to these legal conclusions.

COUNT TWO

In count two, Judge Kreep is charged with 15 incidents of engaging in conduct reflecting a lack of proper courtroom decorum, poor demeanor, bias, and/or a lack of impartiality while presiding in Department 3 in 2013. Department 3 was the in-custody misdemeanor arraignment department of the San Diego County Superior Court in 2013. Before turning to a discussion of each incident of charged misconduct, we address Judge Kreep's general responses to his misconduct while presiding in Department 3.

Judge Kreep suggests that much of his misconduct in this count, which occurred during his first year on the bench, was the result of insufficient guidance and training from the court. We agree with the masters' conclusion that "Judge Kreep, who had been an attorney for about 37 years and had appeared in different courts before becoming a judge, received substantial guidance and training when he became a judge, arguably more than most other California judges." As stated by the masters, Judge Kreep "received guidance, advice and instructions from other judges on many occasions, including more guidance from the Presiding Judge, Assistant Presiding Judge and Supervising Judge than most judges usually receive."

After Judge Kreep was elected, and before he took the bench, the court provided him a copy of David Rothman's California Judicial Conduct Handbook, and arranged for him to observe commissioners and judges in various departments at the San Diego County Superior Court for about a week. Immediately following his assignment to Department 3, Judge Kreep sat with an experienced commissioner in Department 3 observing the proceedings in that department for three days. He attended monthly or bi-monthly judicial education courses offered by the San Diego County Superior Court.

Judge Kreep also completed his new primary assignment orientation presented by the California Center for Judicial Education and Research (CJER) in February or March 2013, attended a separate New Judge Orientation for a week in April 2013, and attended Judicial College, a two-week course, beginning on August 5, 2013. In addition, judicial scripts prepared by CJER and the San Diego County Superior Court, sentencing guidelines, benchbooks, online courses and other types of training were available to Judge Kreep.

Judge Kreep also contended during these proceedings that his misconduct in Department 3 was the result of the difficulty of that assignment. In response, the masters stated, "Department 3 may have been a difficult assignment for a new judge given its high volume, but perhaps no more difficult than new judges around the state are expected to handle." We adopt this finding, and further note that the inappropriate comments charged in count two had nothing to do with the difficulty of the assignment.

Judge Kreep testified that when he started as a judge, then-Presiding Judge Trentacosta told him to create a friendly courtroom environment. Creating an accessible and welcoming atmosphere does not include the type of inappropriate remarks made by Judge Kreep in Department 3. Judge Kreep explained that many of his remarks were misguided attempts at humor. The commission appreciates that each judge has his or her own style and that a certain level of levity or humor is not necessarily improper. "However, the cultivation of a particular judicial personality may not be used as an excuse for unethical conduct. . . . [R]egardless of the judge's style, she or he must respect the litigants and attorneys who appear in her or his court." (Inquiry of Judge Susanne S. Shaw (2000) 48 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 125, pp. 142-143.) Moreover, judicial humor should never be used in a courtroom in "a manner that diminishes the dignity of the judicial process." (Public Censure of Judge Deann M. Salcido (2010) p. 21 (Salcido); see Rothman, supra, at § 3.42, p. 140.) "Judges are expected to administer justice and resolve serious issues, not to provide entertainment." (Salcido, supra, at p. 22.)

A. Comments to Deputy Public Defender Leticia Hernandez.

1. Findings of Fact.

We adopt the following factual findings of the masters.

"Judge Kreep sat in Department 3, the in-custody misdemeanor arraignment department, from January 2013 to September 9, 2013. Deputy Public Defender Leticia Hernandez appeared before Judge Kreep in Department 3 to enter a change of plea in a criminal case on January 17, 2013. The following exchange occurred after Ms. Hernandez stated her appearance:

'THE COURT: I love her accent.

'[DEPUTY PUBLIC DEFENDER LETICIA] HERNANDEZ: I'm Mexican.

'THE COURT: Are you a citizen of the country of Mexico, Ms. Hernandez?

'[DEPUTY PUBLIC DEFENDER] HERNANDEZ: No.

'THE COURT: Okay. Okay. There is an attorney in town that I know that is actually a citizen of the - of Mexico who does immigration work here in California.

'[DEPUTY PUBLIC DEFENDER] HERNANDEZ: Oh no, your Honor. I am a U.S. citizen and proud of it.

'THE COURT: The -- I wasn't planning on having you deported.'

The exchange between Judge Kreep and Ms. Hernandez was reported in CityBeat magazine.

"Ms. Hernandez testified she was not offended by Judge Kreep's comments. But she reported the incident to Melvin Epley, a supervising attorney with the Public Defender's Office.

"Judge Kreep testified he did not intend to belittle Ms. Hernandez by commenting on her accent. He intended his comment as a compliment. Nevertheless, he acknowledges his reference to deportation was inappropriate. He says he was '[t]rying to get a laugh' and 'put people at ease.' Judge Kreep apologized to Ms. Hernandez for his statements."

2. Conclusions of Law.

Drawing attention to a person's ethnicity and questioning a person's citizenship when these are not issues in the matter before the judge, can reasonably be perceived as offensive and reflecting bias. Additionally, a judge should be sensitive to the possible impact of such comments on the attorney-client relationship when made in the presence of the attorney's client. Judge Kreep maintains that his comments were not meant to be offensive. However, as noted by the masters, regardless of his intent, "the comments were likely to offend members of the public and could be construed as discourteous, demeaning, or as suggesting bias based on ethnic or national origin." (See Gonzalez v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1983) 33 Cal.3d 359, 376 (Gonzalez); Public Admonishment of Judge Nancy Pollard (2011) pp. 1, 3; Public Admonishment of Judge Harvey Giss (2011) p. 1.)

We agree with the masters that Judge Kreep's comments to Ms. Hernandez about her accent, Mexican citizenship and deportation violated the following ethical standards set forth in the California Code of Judicial Ethics. "An independent, impartial, and honorable judiciary is indispensable to justice in our society. A judge should participate in establishing, maintaining, and enforcing high standards of conduct, and shall personally observe those standards so that the integrity and independence of the judiciary is preserved." (Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canon 1.) A judge shall avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety in all of the judge's activities. (Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canon 2.) "A judge shall respect and comply with the law and shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary. A judge shall not make statements, whether public or nonpublic, that . . . that are inconsistent with the impartial performance of the adjudicative duties of judicial office." (Cal. Code Jud.

Ethics, canon 2A.) In addition, "[a] judge shall require order and decorum in proceedings before the judge." (Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canon 3B(3).) "A judge shall be patient, dignified, and courteous to litigants, jurors, witnesses, lawyers, and others with whom the judge deals in an official capacity . . . ." (Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canon 3B(4).) "A judge shall perform judicial duties without bias or prejudice. A judge shall not, in the performance of judicial duties, engage in speech, gestures, or other conduct that would reasonably be perceived as (a) bias or prejudice, including but not limited to bias or prejudice based upon race, sex, gender, religion, national origin, ethnicity, disability, age, sexual orientation, marital status, socioeconomic status, or political affiliation, or (b) sexual harassment." (Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canon 3B(5).) We also agree with the masters that the comments to Ms. Hernandez would appear to an objective observer to be prejudicial to public esteem for the judiciary, and thus, constitute prejudicial misconduct. Neither party objected to these legal conclusions.

B. Using nicknames to address attorneys appearing before him.

1. Findings of Fact.

We adopt the following factual findings of the masters as summarized and paraphrased.

Terri Winbush, a Deputy City Attorney with the City Attorney's Office in San Diego in 2013, appeared in Judge Kreep's courtroom multiple times each week from January 2013 until August 2013. Judge Kreep referred to Ms. Winbush as "Star Parker" when she made appearances in his courtroom. There was dispute over how often the judge used the nickname. We adopt the masters' finding that "he used the nickname several times, enough that the repetition annoyed and upset Ms. Winbush."

Judge Kreep told Ms. Winbush she resembled Star Parker, who was a beautiful African American woman. Ms. Winbush was not flattered by the comparison, and it made her uncomfortable.

The judge told Judge Trentacosta that Star Parker was a friend and a beautiful woman and that Ms. Winbush looked like Star Parker.

Brianne McLaughlin, Thanh Ho and Nate Crowley made appearances in Department 3 before Judge Kreep while they were interns in the San Diego Public Defender's Office in 2013. While in Department 3, Judge Kreep referred to Ms. McLaughlin as "Bun Head," to Ms. Ho as "Ms. Dimples," and Mr. Crowley as "Shorty," all nicknames he came up with.

Ms. McLaughlin does not know how the judge came up with the nickname "Bun Head." She did not invite the judge to refer to her by that name, but did not take offense.

Judge Kreep frequently called Ms. Ho, "Ms. Dimples." Although the nickname "Ms. Dimples" did not bother Ms. Ho, she did not invite the judge to use that nickname and no other judge called her that name. She preferred that judges call her by her given name.

Judge Kreep called Mr. Crowley, who is six feet seven inches tall, "Shorty." Mr. Crowley recalled that Judge Kreep called him Shorty in open court about 10 to 15 times.

On August 1, 2013, Supervising Deputy City Attorney Mark Skeels complained to then-Supervising Judge Timothy Walsh about Judge Kreep's conduct toward Ms. Winbush and some other deputy city attorneys. That same day, Judge Kreep admitted to then-Assistant Presiding Judge David Danielsen that he referred to Ms. Winbush as Star Parker. The next day, Judge Kreep admitted to Judge Walsh that he used the nicknames Star Parker, Shorty, Bun Head, and Ms. Dimples.

Judge Trentacosta, Judge Danielsen and Judge Walsh met with Judge Kreep on August 2, 2013. Judge Trentacosta instructed Judge Kreep not to use nicknames. Judge Kreep stopped using nicknames after that meeting.

Judge Kreep admitted his use of nicknames was inappropriate.

2. Conclusions of Law.

We agree with the conclusion of the masters that Judge Kreep's "unilateral creation and use of nicknames for attorneys and interns appearing in his courtroom was discourteous and did not convey proper respect for them." Furthermore, his use of nicknames created an atmosphere in the courtroom that was too informal and lacked appropriate decorum. The nicknames used by the judge could suggest a lack of impartiality or a sense of inappropriate familiarity, which could undermine public confidence in and respect for the judiciary. As noted by the masters, "[i]n particular, Judge Kreep's comments to Ms. Winbush could have reasonably been perceived as improper attention based on her gender, race and physical appearance."[5]

We adopt the masters' conclusion that Judge Kreep's conduct violated the California Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 1, 2, 2A, 3B(3) and 3B(4) and constituted prejudicial misconduct. (See Kennick v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1990) 50 Cal.3d 297, 324-325, disapproved on other grounds in Doan v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1995) 11 Cal.4th 294, 319-320 [45 Cal.Rptr.2d 254, 902 P.2d 272]; Inquiry Concerning Willoughby (2000) 48 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 145, 151, 155-156; Public Admonishment of Judge John B. Gibson (2010) p. 2 [judge's conduct in, among other things, referring to a tall, thin female attorney with short hair who appeared before him as a "Q-tip" violated canons 1, 2A and 3B(4)]; Salcido, supra, at pp. 11, 13, 15 [judge engaged in prejudicial misconduct and violated canons 1, 2A, 3B(3) and 3B(4) by, among other things, referring to an attorney as "Mr. Federal Case" and referring to court staff as "cucumbers"].) Neither party objected to these legal conclusions.

C and D. Commenting on the physical appearance of attorneys.

1. Findings of Fact.

We adopt the following findings of fact of the masters as summarized and paraphrased.

On July 12, 2013, Judge Kreep said to someone in the courtroom, "She's a pretty girl, you know you could smile." That same day, Judge Kreep said (apparently to Deputy

[5] In the proceedings before the masters, the examiner argued that the judge's comments about the physical appearance of Ms. Winbush and other attorneys (counts Two E and G) could be perceived as sexual harassment. The masters concluded that although Judge Kreep engaged in a pattern of inappropriate behavior, his conduct did not meet the legal standard for sexual harassment. (Fisher v. San Pedro Peninsula Hospital (1989) 214 Cal.App.3d 590, 609.) Neither party objected to this conclusion to which we defer.

City Attorney Caroline Song's friend who was observing the proceedings), "We've got all sorts of very attractive, young PD's around here, so."

Deputy Public Defender Hernandez testified that Judge Kreep commented on the physical appearance of female attorneys who appeared before him. As an example, she said Judge Kreep said to a defendant, "the lovely attorney next to you went over the form, correct?" Deputy City Attorney Winbush and Deputy City Attorney Song also testified that Judge Kreep commented on the attractiveness of female attorneys who appeared before him.

Deputy City Attorney Paige Hazard, who appeared in Department 3 before Judge Kreep in 2013, testified Judge Kreep referred to a deputy public defender as "the pretty brown one."

Judge Kreep conceded he may have said to a defendant, "The lovely woman next to you is your public defender." He believed the comment was descriptive, not demeaning. He also admitted that on a date prior to August 2, 2013, during an appearance by a female defendant charged with prostitution who was represented by a male deputy public defender, he made a comment about how attractive the male deputy public defender was to a defendant. Judge Kreep said "he was going for a laugh" but now agrees his comment was wrong and he has not made such a comment since then.

At a meeting on August 2, 2013, Judge Trentacosta instructed Judge Kreep not to make such comments about the physical appearance of persons in the courtroom.

2. Conclusions of Law.

The masters concluded, "Judge Kreep's comments about the physical appearance of persons appearing in his courtroom were not relevant to the court proceedings, made others in the courtroom uncomfortable, did not afford proper respect to the individuals, diminished the dignity of the judicial process, and may have created the appearance of bias or impartiality." (See Judicial Council of Cal., Advisory Com. Access and Fairness, et al., Guidelines for Judicial Officers: Avoiding the Appearance of Bias (Aug. 1996) p. 15 [judicial officers should think before commenting on the physical appearance of others].) We concur.

We also concur in the masters' conclusion that the pattern of behavior in counts Two C and D violated canons 1, 2A, 3B(3), 3B(4) and 3B(5) of the California Code of Judicial Ethics and constituted prejudicial misconduct. (Inquiry Concerning Harris, (2005) 49 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 61, 71-72; see also Fitch v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1995) 9 Cal.4th 552, 556-558.) Neither party objected to these conclusions.

E. Comments referencing the pregnancy of Deputy City Attorney Danielle Stroud.

1. Findings of Fact.

We adopt the following factual findings of the masters.

"Deputy City Attorney Danielle Stroud appeared before Judge Kreep in 2013 when she was pregnant. During one appearance, Judge Kreep said to defense counsel, 'Let's get on with this case' and then added something like 'We don't want Ms. Stroud to have her baby in the courtroom.' On other occasions Judge Kreep made comments to Ms. Stroud about her pregnancy such as 'It's getting closer, Ms. Stroud' and 'She wants to go home and have her baby. I'll pick on her today.' Judge Kreep made these comments in open court, sometimes on the record.

"Judge Kreep testified he asked Ms. Stroud how she was doing and when she was due, but that was the extent of his comments about her pregnancy. However, Ms. Stroud's testimony, which we find more credible, contradicts Judge Kreep's version, and it is corroborated by the testimony of Department 3's bailiff, Deputy Sheriff Piper Paulk. Deputy Paulk said Judge Kreep told Ms. Stroud, 'Ooh, I hope you don't have this baby in here.'

"Judge Kreep explains his conduct by stating that he regularly overheard conversations between Ms. Stroud and other attorneys regarding her pregnancy. But Ms. Stroud denied that her pregnancy was a matter of regular discussion in the courtroom. Deputy Paulk likewise did not recall Ms. Stroud talking to anyone about her pregnancy when she was in Department 3. We find that while Ms. Stroud may have talked with people in Department 3 about her pregnancy, she did not do so regularly nor invite comments about her pregnancy from Judge Kreep. Judge Kreep's comments made Ms. Stroud uncomfortable."

2. Conclusions of Law.

"Unprofessional remarks made in the courtroom concerning an attorney's personal appearance, pregnancy, or sexuality, can have an impact on the credibility of women in court; and when addressed to a woman lawyer, such remarks make it difficult for her to effectively represent her clients." (Rothman, supra, at § 2.11, p. 52.)

We agree with the masters that "Judge Kreep's references to Ms. Stroud's pregnancy go beyond a show of concern or polite inquiry. His comments were indecorous, discourteous, and undignified and could reasonably be perceived as gender bias." As such, we adopt the masters' legal conclusion that the judge's comments to Ms. Stroud about her pregnancy violated canons 1, 2, 2A, 3B(3) and 3B(4) of the California Code of Judicial Ethics and constituted prejudicial misconduct. Neither party objected to these legal conclusions.

F. Comment regarding prostitution and Deputy City Attorney Karolyn Westfall.

1. Findings of Fact.

We adopt the following factual findings of the masters.

"Deputy City Attorney Karolyn Westfall appeared in Judge Kreep's courtroom during the period January through June 2013. On one occasion, when Ms. Westfall entered the courtroom Judge Kreep said, 'Speaking of prostitution, here's Miss Westfall.' Judge Kreep was on the bench and court staff and other attorneys were present when Judge Kreep made the comment. Ms. Westfall understood the remark as Judge Kreep trying to be funny, but she found the remark to be 'ridiculous.'

"Judge Kreep does not remember making the remark but concedes he may have used that language in referring to Ms. Westfall. He explains that he may have been referring to the prostitution cases handled by the City Attorney's office.

"We find Ms. Westfall's testimony credible and reject the suggestion in the closing argument by Judge Kreep's attorney that Judge Kreep may have actually said 'prosecution' rather than 'prostitution' but Ms. Westfall misheard what Judge Kreep said. No evidence supports that version of the incident."

2. Conclusions of Law.

Although Judge Kreep's comment was made in jest, it was disrespectful and undignified for a judge to suggest or imply that an attorney appearing before the court was a prostitute. As previously noted, humor should never be used in the courtroom in a manner that demeans the dignity of the court. Thus, we agree with the masters that the comment violated the California Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 1, 2, 2A, 3B(3) and 3B(4) and constituted prejudicial misconduct. Neither party objected to these conclusions.

G. Comments disclosing intimate personal facts.

1. Findings of Fact.

We adopt the following factual findings of the masters.

"Judge Kreep told someone in his courtroom he took care of a friend with whom he traveled because the friend had seizures. Judge Kreep shared that he showered and slept with the friend but '[t]here was no sex involved. We were just -- we were just friends. It was purely platonic.' "

2. Conclusions of Law.

As stated by the masters, "While it is not necessarily improper for a judge to share personal anecdotes in the courtroom, Judge Kreep's disclosure was an example of sharing too much information." The judge should have realized that sharing a gratuitous personal anecdote about sleeping and showering with a friend, with a reference to sex, was likely to make people in the courtroom uncomfortable and diminish the dignity of the judicial office.

As such, we adopt the masters' conclusion that Judge Kreep's comments violated canons 3B(3) and 3B(4) of the California Code of Judicial Ethics and constituted prejudicial misconduct. Neither party objected to these legal conclusions.

H. Comments to a female defendant in a prostitution case.

1. Findings of Fact.

We adopt the following factual findings of the masters as summarized and paraphrased.

During the taking of a plea on July 12, 2013, Judge Kreep asked a defendant charged with prostitution, "Ma'am, anything I can do to get you out of the life?" Later in the proceeding, Judge Kreep asked, "Is it you like the money? Or you just like the action?" When the defendant attempted to respond and discuss her plans for the future, Judge Kreep cut her off and asked, "Are you going to try to get a job at the Bunny Ranch in Nevada?" Judge Kreep subsequently told the defendant "I don't think it's a good lifestyle choice, but it's your lifestyle choice and it's your decision."

Judge Kreep testified he was trying to show support for the defendant but may also have been trying to shame her into changing her lifestyle. He was not trying to embarrass or demean the defendant.

2. Conclusions of Law.

We agree with and adopt the following conclusions of the masters.

"Judge Kreep's asserted goal may be laudable, but his questions -- 'you just like the action?' -- were insensitive, indecorous and discourteous to the defendant. Judge Kreep admitted he may have been attempting to shame her.

"Judge Kreep suggested his reference to the Bunny Ranch was in response to the defendant's statement that she was planning to go somewhere where prostitution was legal. But Judge Kreep's question about the Bunny Ranch followed the defendant's statement that she was 'certified for MT' and 'wanted to go to PT' and it was well after she discussed getting a passport and going somewhere where prostitution was allowed. We agree with the Examiner that Judge Kreep's questions created the appearance of embroilment. (Rothman, supra, at § 2.01, p. 37 [embroilment refers to the loss of "the necessary professional distance between" the judge and the attorneys, parties, or causes before the judge].)

"Judge Kreep's conduct violated canons 1, 2, 2A, 3B(3) and 3B(4) of the California Code of Judicial Ethics and constituted prejudicial misconduct."

Neither party objected to these legal conclusions.

I. Comment to Abraham William Tanoury.

1. Findings of Fact.

We adopt the following factual findings of the masters.

"Abraham William Tanoury was a law student intern with the City Attorney's Office in 2013. He appeared in Judge Kreep's courtroom for an arraignment on one occasion, along with his Supervising Deputy City Attorney Caroline Song. Before he went on the record, Judge Kreep picked up a plastic container of animal crackers, gestured at Mr. Tanoury, and said in the presence of Ms. Song and court staff, 'If you're good during your argument, I'll give you some cookies, little boy.' Mr. Tanoury was in his early 20's at the time and was taken aback by Judge Kreep's comment. Mr. Tanoury felt that Judge Kreep's statement was unprofessional and demeaning.

"Judge Kreep testified he did not intend to demean or embarrass Mr. Tanoury."

2. Conclusions of Law.

We agree with the masters that "[r]egardless of his intent, Judge Kreep's statement to Mr. Tanoury was demeaning, indecorous, discourteous, undignified, and prejudicial to the public esteem for the judicial office." Judge Kreep's conduct violated the California Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 3B(3) and 3B(4) and constituted prejudicial misconduct. (Public Admonishment of Judge Christine K. Moruza (2008) p. 10 [judge's comment to deputy district attorney, "How old are you? Eighteen?" was demeaning, undignified and contrary to canon 3B(4)].) Neither party objected to these legal conclusions.

J. Comment to Deputy City Attorney Caroline Song.

1. Findings of Fact.

We adopt the following factual findings of the masters.

"During a sidebar conference for a prostitution case in July or September 2013, Judge Kreep used the words 'Chinese prostitutes,' then turned to Deputy City Attorney Caroline Song and said, 'No offense to Chinese people.' Judge Kreep made the comment to Ms. Song in the presence of one of Ms. Song's supervisors along with a City Attorney's Office intern and Deputy Public Defender Chelsea Kopp. Judge Kreep explains he said '[n]o offense to Chinese people' because Ms. Song gave him an angry look when he used the term 'Chinese prostitutes.' We believe that in this context, Judge Kreep was actively trying not to offend Ms. Song, and yet still managed to upset her.

"Caroline Song testified she was bothered by the '[n]o offense to Chinese people' comment because Judge Kreep constantly mentioned her ethnicity. By way of example she mentioned a time when Judge Kreep introduced visitors from Korea. Judge Kreep told the visitors Ms. Song was from China and spoke Mandarin. Ms. Song is not from China.

"Judge Kreep testified he would not have indicated Ms. Song was from China or that she spoke Mandarin because he had no personal knowledge of those things. But in an audio recording of Judge Kreep's courtroom, Judge Kreep told individuals apparently visiting from Korea that Ms. Song was 'of Chinese heritage' and spoke Mandarin."

2. Conclusions of Law.

Gratuitously singling a person out based on ethnicity or national origin can be offensive to that person and can also be perceived as indicating bias. Under the circumstances, Judge Kreep's comments violated canons 1, 2, 2A, 3B(4) and 3B(5) of the California Code of Judicial Ethics and constituted improper action. We adopt the masters' conclusion that the charged conduct did not rise to the level of prejudicial misconduct because an objective observer would have understood that Judge Kreep was attempting not to offend Ms. Song. Neither party objected to these legal conclusions.

K. The Gift of the Day.

1. Findings of Fact.

We adopt the following factual findings of the masters as summarized and paraphrased.

When sentencing criminal defendants in Department 3, Judge Kreep on multiple occasions mentioned giving a defendant or defense counsel a "gift of the day," "gift for the day," or "gift for today" during sentencing. The statement was made in the presence of other criminal defendants.

On July 26, 2013, Judge Kreep said, "Here's your gift for your new child" before he vacated a fine. On July 30, 2013, he said, "I already gave the gift of the day," (although he appeared to stay the requirement to pay the balance of a $286 fine pending the successful completion of probation). In another case, after indicating he would stay the payment of a fine pending the defendant's successful completion of probation, he said to the defendant, "That's a gift, ma'am. [Unintelligible] don't take it for granted, alright. If you come back before me on another case, you'll have to pay that fine plus whatever you got to do on the other one." On July 31, 2013, Judge Kreep said he was giving a "[s]econd gift of the day since we're going so long."

Judge Kreep testified that he used the term "gift of the day" to convey that he was giving the defendant "a break" and the defendant needed to "live the straight and narrow," but conceded it was a mistake.

2. Conclusions of Law.

We agree with the masters that Judge Kreep's characterization of discretionary rulings as a gift suggested unequal treatment and bias and "may have improperly suggested to court participants that Judge Kreep was ordering something that was not deserved under the law, that he was dispensing favored treatment to certain defendants or defense counsel and withholding that special treatment from others, and that such special treatment was only available once a day to a lucky recipient." Such conduct undermines public confidence in the dignity and impartiality of the court.

As such, we conclude, as did the masters, that Judge Kreep's conduct violated the California Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 1, 2, 2A, 3B(3) and 3B(4) and constituted prejudicial misconduct. (Gonzalez, supra, 33 Cal.3d at p. 375; see also, Inquiry Concerning Velasquez (2007) 49 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 175, 213-215.) Neither party objected to these legal conclusions.

L. Advising defendants to say it was all a big mistake.

1. Findings of Fact.

We adopt the following factual findings of the masters as summarized and paraphrased.

In Judge Kreep's courtroom, the prosecution and defense attorneys often entered into agreements allowing for the withdrawal of the defendant's plea to a misdemeanor and dismissal of the case upon completion of the terms and conditions of diversion. On multiple occasions, Judge Kreep advised defendants whose cases were being dismissed under these terms, that if asked about their cases, including by employers or prospective employers, they should say "it was all a big mistake." In each instance, the advice was unsolicited.

On July 18, 2013, after the prosecution dismissed a defendant's case, Judge Kreep advised the defendant, "This conviction, this case, may pop up on a database. And if it does and they ask you about it, you say here, it was all a big mistake, the case was dismissed. Uh. If they want to know the details, it's really none of their business -- so."

On July 22, 2013, Judge Kreep advised a defendant, "If somebody asks you about it, you say hey, it was all a big mistake. Case was dismissed, here's the proof. It's really none of their business. So. Ok?" Judge Kreep provided the same advice to another defendant on that same day, stating "So if, if it comes up that you were charged and pled guilty or whatever. Uh, or they say, what's this theft conviction? You just say, it's all a big mistake, and it was [chuckle] on your part, and that the case has been dismissed and it's really none of their business all the details. Okay, sir."

On July 29, 2013, Judge Kreep said to a defendant, "If this pops up on a database, they say hey, what about this? Say it's all a big mistake. Case is dismissed and if they want to know the details, it's really none of their business. Okay?"

On August 1, 2013, the judge said to a defendant, "And if they, you're asked about it, you just say, hey, it was all a big mistake, case got dismissed. And if they wanna know the details, it's really none of their business. Okay?"

Judge Kreep testified he meant to advise defendants to explain that the defendant had made a mistake in committing the offense, not that the prosecution had made a mistake in charging the defendant. We agree with the masters' finding that "[o]n only one occasion did he suggest he was referring to a mistake made by the defendant; all other times his comments could have been interpreted to mean that the legal proceedings were flawed or that it had been a mistake to file charges against the defendant." In fact, the cases were not dismissed due to a defect or mistake.

2. Conclusions of Law.

It was improper for Judge Kreep to render an opinion on the legal effect of a theft conviction and counsel defendants on what they should say to potential employers. (Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canon 4G [a judge shall not practice law].) Moreover, the judge's comments could suggest that he was counseling defendants to mislead potential employers by implying that they were mistakenly prosecuted.

We adopt the masters' conclusions that Judge Kreep's conduct violated canons 1, 2, 2A and 4G of the California Code of Judicial Ethics and constituted improper action. Neither party objected to these legal conclusions.

M. Using crude language.

1. Findings of Fact.

We adopt the following factual findings of the masters as summarized and paraphrased.

On July 22, 2013, Judge Kreep was discussing the date for a continued criminal case with defense counsel. When defense counsel indicated he would like to have the hearing completed by 9:30 a.m. on the continued date, Judge Kreep responded, "if Ms. Song isn't here, I'll kick her in the butt." Deputy City Attorney Song was present when Judge Kreep made the statement.

Judge Kreep explained he simply wanted Ms. Song, who was routinely late for the morning calendar, to be on time. The testimony of other witnesses corroborates Judge Kreep's testimony that Ms. Song was habitually tardy. Judge Kreep acknowledged he used inappropriate language in this instance.

In another case the same day, the defense attorney informed Judge Kreep that the defendant was in an abusive relationship. Judge Kreep said to the defendant: "Just so you know, ma'am, I grew up in a relationship where I used to get the crap beat out of me on a regular basis by a stepfather [unintelligible] my mother. So I have some understanding of what you're going through, okay? From a child's perspective." Judge Kreep testified he wanted to convey that a person does not turn to a life of crime just because they are being abused.

On July 23, 2013, when a defense attorney requested reinstatement of probation for a client, Judge Kreep said: "Yeah, your client's no virgin . . . as far as these cases are going."

On July 29, 2013, Judge Kreep was counseling a defendant whose case was dismissed upon successful completion of diversion to stay off drugs. When the defendant's mother identified herself, Judge Kreep said, "His mother, okay. Slap him upside the head a few times, make sure he stays off the drugs." The mother did not ask Judge Kreep for advice on how to keep her son out of jail. Judge Kreep explained he did not really intend for the mother to beat her son, but wanted her to take an active role in making sure the defendant stayed off drugs. He testified he did not intend to demean or embarrass anyone, and he no longer uses such language in court.

2. Conclusions of Law.

As to each of the above matters, Judge Kreep used language that was crude and undignified. Swearing is "unbecoming, injudicious and unsuited to the proper decorum of a courtroom." (McCartney v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1974) 12 Cal.3d 512, 535 (McCartney).) Crude comments from a judge "have no place in a courtroom." (Salcido, supra, at p. 20.)

We concur with the following conclusions of the masters. "The words 'butt' and 'crap' may be relatively tame examples of crude language, particularly when compared to the vulgar language rampant in culture, social media, and entertainment. But a higher standard of conduct is required in our courtrooms, and for good reason. The Code of Judicial Ethics requires that judges conduct themselves in a manner that maintains the dignity of our courts and respect for our judicial institutions. (Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canon 3B(4).) Casual conduct and crude language are inconsistent with those requirements. (Salcido, supra, at pp. 4, 6, 15 [judge violated canons 1, 2A, 3B(3) and 3B(4) by, among other things, using crude language during proceedings (the word 'screwed')].) Judge Kreep's statements were indecorous and undignified, and in some cases did not convey proper respect for the individuals appearing in his courtroom."

Accordingly, we conclude, as did the masters, that the judge's use of crude language in the courtroom violated canons 1, 2, 2A, 3B(3), 3B(4) and 3B(5) of the California Code of Judicial Ethics and constituted improper action. Neither party objected to these legal conclusions.

The Notice alleged that on July 30, 2013, Judge Kreep told a defendant, "If you violate your OR, I'll throw his butt in jail." The Examiner did not present evidence on that allegation. Thus, we conclude that allegation is not proven.

N. Speaking Spanish during courtroom proceedings.

1. Findings of Fact.

We adopt the following factual findings of the masters.

"In January 2013, Presiding Judge Trentacosta received concerns about Judge Kreep using Spanish to address individuals with Hispanic surnames. In his January 30, 2013 meeting with Judge Kreep, Judge Trentacosta instructed Judge Kreep not to use Spanish when calling a case or communicating with a defendant.

"Nevertheless, Judge Kreep spoke Spanish during courtroom proceedings on July 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 29, 30, and 31 and September 5, 2013. He addressed Ms. Hernandez and other defense attorneys as señor or señora and sometimes spoke in Spanish to ask how they were doing.

"Judge Kreep also addressed some defendants as señor, señora, or señorita. He also greeted some defendants and court interpreters with 'buenos dias,' 'buenos [sic] tardes,' or 'vaya con Dios.'

"Judge Kreep claims he merely used Spanish in greetings or to wish defendants well. But his characterization is incorrect. He asked one defendant with the last name

Ontiveros, 'Habla Ingles?' When Mr. Ontiveros indicated he did not speak English, Judge Kreep said, 'Señor, we'll explain it to you all in Español. Un momento por favor.' Judge Kreep then asked Mr. Ontiveros' counsel, 'Would you explain to his mama, por favor?'

"Moreover, in telling a defendant with the last name Sanchez that she should retain certain paperwork, Judge Kreep said, 'Keep your paperwork, okay? Muy importante.' There is no indication in the recorded proceeding that Ms. Sanchez spoke Spanish. Ms. Sanchez did not appear with an interpreter and she responded in English when Judge Kreep greeted her.

"In a different case, Judge Kreep spoke to a defendant in Spanish even though a court interpreter was present. He asked the defendant, 'Culpable o no culpable?' Judge Kreep also referred to 'papeles.'

"Judge Kreep again addressed another defendant in Spanish even though a court interpreter was present. Judge Kreep told the defendant, 'No cerveza. No tequila. No alcohol. Nada.'

"Deputy City Attorney Terri Winbush testified that Judge Kreep used Spanish when the defendant was 'Hispanic-appearing' and the judge was not always correct that the defendant spoke Spanish. She recalled that in some cases the defendant responded, 'I actually speak English" and Judge Kreep stopped using Spanish.

"Consistent with Ms. Winbush's testimony, in a July 26, 2013 proceeding, Judge Kreep greeted a defendant with the last name Torres in Spanish even after the defendant said she understood the terms and conditions of her probation in English. And in a case heard on July 31, 2013, involving a defendant whose last name was Silva, Judge Kreep spoke in Spanish to the defendant's mother and girlfriend, who were in the courtroom. Judge Kreep asked the two women, in Spanish, whether they spoke English. They responded that they spoke English, and Judge Kreep addressed them in English.

"During an August 2, 2013 meeting, Presiding Judge Trentacosta again urged Judge Kreep not to speak Spanish in court. During an August 19, 2013 meeting, Presiding Judge Trentacosta counseled Judge Kreep for a third time not to speak Spanish in the courtroom. Judge Kreep testified that he stopped using Spanish in the courtroom after that instruction from Judge Trentacosta. But that is also incorrect. Judge Kreep referred to defendant Trujillo as señor on September 5, 2013. On the same date, Judge Kreep referred to defendant Arguenta as 'señor,' although he quickly apologized and called the defendant Mr. Arguenta.

"Deputy public defenders Katherine Tesch and Jose Orozco testified that Judge Kreep's use of Spanish did not upset their clients or make the clients feel uncomfortable. But according to Supervising Deputy Public Defender Melvin Epley, Deputy Public Defender Leticia Hernandez reported to him that although Judge Kreep's use of Spanish was not malicious, it 'could be naive and insensitive towards Hispanics.' "

2. Conclusions of Law.

Judicial proceedings must be conducted in English only. (Code Civ. Proc., § 185, subd. (a).) There is no express exception to that statutory mandate. While Judge Kreep may have thought he was simply being welcoming to litigants, he failed to recognize that speaking Spanish to people based on his perception that they were Hispanic could be perceived as offensive or suggest differential treatment. As stated by the masters, "[a]n assumption that a person with a Latino/Hispanic surname speaks Spanish can suggest stereotyping based on race, national origin, or ethnicity."

For these reasons, we concur with the masters' conclusion that "Judge Kreep's use of Spanish in the courtroom violated canons 1, 2, 2A and 3B(5) of the California Code of Judicial Ethics and, under the totality of the circumstances, including the January 2013 instruction from Presiding Judge Trentacosta not to use Spanish, constituted prejudicial misconduct. (Com. on Jud. Performance, Ann. Rep. (2011) Advisory Letter 24, p. 26; Com. on Jud. Performance, Ann. Rep. (2006) Advisory Letter 16, p. 33.)" Neither party objected to these legal conclusions.

O. Addressing insurance company representative as "Mr. Insurance Man."

1. Findings of Fact.

We adopt the following factual findings of the masters as summarized and paraphrased.

On October 3, 2013, while assigned to hear traffic and small claims matters at the Kearny Mesa Branch Courthouse, Judge Kreep heard a small claims matter entitled Liu v. Wood, involving an automobile accident. Dominic Figuera, a representative of the defendant's insurance company, was not a party but announced his presence on behalf of the insurance company. Judge Kreep repeatedly referred to Mr. Figuera as "Mr. Insurance Man" during the proceedings.

Judge Kreep testified he referred to Mr. Figuera as "Mr. Insurance Man" because he did not remember Mr. Figuera stating his name on the record. The judge asserted he did not mean to disrespect Mr. Figuera, but was simply trying to get through the case quickly.

2. Conclusions of Law.

We agree with the masters that "repeatedly referring to the insurance company representative as 'Mr. Insurance Man' rather than by his name was discourteous and did not convey proper respect for the individual appearing in Judge Kreep's courtroom" and could also suggest a lack of impartiality. Judge Kreep suggested that use of the nickname was proper because small claims proceedings are informal. (Code Civ. Proc., § 116.510.) However, the degree of informality permitted in small claims proceedings does not include the gratuitous creation of undignified and discourteous nicknames. Nor does the judge's desire to get through the proceeding promptly justify his unjudicial conduct. As the masters observed, "if he did not hear Mr. Figuera state his name, Judge Kreep could have asked for the name."

Judge Kreep's conduct violated the California Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 1, 2, 2A, 3B(3) and 3B(4) and constituted improper action. (See Inquiry Concerning Willoughby, supra, 48 Cal.4th CJP Supp. at pp. 151, 155; Public Admonishment of Judge John B. Gibson, supra, at p. 2; Salcido, supra, at pp. 11, 13, 15.) Neither party objected to these legal conclusions.

COUNT THREE

Judge Kreep was charged with engaging in misconduct by asking a deputy city attorney who was in the courtroom during a civil ex parte temporary restraining order (TRO) proceeding to contact the San Diego Police Department to inquire about the existence of a surveillance video referenced by the TRO applicant. It was alleged that the judge attempted to conduct an independent investigation of information outside the four corners of the TRO application in violation of canons 1, 2, 2A, 3B(7) [judge shall not independently investigate facts in a proceeding and shall consider only the evidence presented or facts that may be properly judicially noticed], and 3C(2) [judge shall cooperate with other judges and court officials in the administration of justice]. The masters concluded that the charges were not proven by clear and convincing evidence based on the following findings of fact, as summarized and paraphrased.

On May 17, 2013, Judge Kreep issued a requested TRO because the applicant made a prima facie case in her application. The TRO applicant reported in court that a police officer told her there was a video of the subject occurrence. With the applicant present, and after he had granted the TRO, Judge Kreep asked a deputy city attorney how the applicant could get a copy of the police video.

The masters found that Judge Kreep did not make his request outside the presence of the parties and he did not make the request to help him decide the case. The applicant desired to obtain the video and Judge Kreep inquired how she might do that.

Based on these factual findings, which we adopt, we agree with the masters that that there is not clear and convincing evidence that the judge attempted to obtain information outside the record to help him decide a TRO application, and that the charge has not been proven.

COUNT FOUR

Judge Kreep was charged with improperly responding to a "blanket" challenge from the City Attorney's Office by telling deputy public defenders and public defender interns to "watch out" because if the City Attorney's Office was "coming for" Judge Kreep, they were also likely coming for Deputy Public Defender Katherine Tesch. He was also charged with engaging in improper ex parte communications in that same incident by discussing pending cases with the deputy public defenders and interns.

1. Findings of Fact.

We adopt the following factual findings of the masters.

"On September 4 or 5, 2013, Supervising Deputy City Attorneys Marlea Dell'Anno and Mark Skeels informed Supervising Judge Walsh that, among other things, Judge Kreep had 'called out' deputy city attorneys who complained about him, and Judge Kreep's recent diversion case decisions appeared to be retaliatory. On September 5, 2013, the City Attorney informed Presiding Judge Trentacosta that his office would file 'blanket' challenges against Judge Kreep, i.e., Code of Civil Procedure section 170.6 challenges against Judge Kreep in each new Department 3 case.

"Upon learning that the City Attorney's Office planned to file blanket challenges against Judge Kreep, Judge Walsh informed Judge Kreep on September 9, 2013, that he was being reassigned to traffic court at the Kearny Mesa branch courthouse. Judge Walsh instructed Judge Kreep to report immediately to Commissioner Blair at the Kearney [sic] Mesa courthouse.

"Instead of proceeding immediately to the Kearny Mesa courthouse, Judge Kreep went to Department 1, a courtroom where he was not assigned, when he saw no attorneys in his courtroom. Although Department 1 was not in session at the time, it was fairly busy. Deputy city attorneys Eric Pooch and Taylor Garrot were in Department 1 discussing the morning calendar; deputy public defenders and public defender interns were also present in the courtroom. Judge Kreep approached the deputy public defenders and public defender interns and spoke with them; he did not speak with the deputy city attorneys.

"Judge Kreep told the deputy public defenders and public defender interns the City Attorney's Office had filed a blanket challenge against him. He said the challenge was because of a case in which he granted a request made by Deputy Public Defender Tesch to set a motion to enforce a plea agreement which the City Attorney's Office refused to honor. The motion referenced by Judge Kreep was pending in another courtroom when Judge Kreep made the statement. Judge Kreep also talked about how he would handle cases on his calendar for that afternoon. He mentioned specific cases during his conversation with the deputy public defenders and public defender interns.

"Judge Kreep asked the deputy public defenders and interns to tell Ms. Tesch something like the following: 'If they're coming for me, they are likely coming for you.' Judge Kreep then added something like, 'You know why I'm not talking to them,' gesturing toward Deputy City Attorneys Pooch and Garrot as he left Department 1. Mr. Pooch and Mr. Garrot found Judge Kreep's statements inappropriate. Mr. Garrot reported what he witnessed to his supervisors.

"According to Judge Kreep, he said 'they are likely coming for you' because it had become increasingly tense between Deputy City Attorney Caroline Song and Deputy Public Defender Katherine Tesch and he was concerned Ms. Song would attack Ms. Tesch's reputation. Judge Kreep said he simply went to Department 1 as a courtesy to tell the deputy public defenders another judge would hear their cases because he did not see any attorneys in Department 3 and he could not remember if any of his staff were present in Department 3 at the time. He said he could not have discussed any of the cases on the Department 3 calendar for that day because at that point he did not know what would be on the calendar.

"Judge Kreep's explanation is not credible. We find that he was angry and upset when he learned of the blanket challenge against him and he specifically went to Department 1 to discuss the challenge with the deputy public defenders in order to vent his anger and in contravention of his supervising judge's instruction. We further find that Judge Kreep talked about at least one case pending in another courtroom during his discussion with the deputy public defenders and public defender interns in Department 1:

the case in which he had granted the request made by Ms. Tesch to set a motion to enforce a plea agreement."

2. Conclusions of Law.

It is misconduct for a judge to display hostility toward an attorney who files a motion to disqualify the judge. (In re Rasmussen (1987) 43 Cal.3d 536; Spruance v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1975) 13 Cal.3d 778, 786-787, 797; McCartney, supra, 12 Cal.3d at p. 529; Inquiry Concerning Velasquez, supra, 49 Cal.4th CJP Supp. at pp. 208-210; Inquiry Concerning Hall, supra, 49 Cal.4th CJP Supp. at pp. 165-167.) Further, it is improper for a judge to initiate, permit, or consider an ex parte communication, that is, any communication to or from the judge outside the presence of the parties concerning a pending proceeding (with limited exceptions not applicable here). (Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canon 3B(7).)

The masters concluded that the judge's conduct violated canons 1, 2, 2A and 3B(7) of the California Code of Judicial Ethics and constituted willful misconduct. They concluded that the judge acted in bad faith, a requisite element of willful misconduct, because he acted for a purpose other than the faithful discharge of his judicial duties. The masters found that Judge Kreep had no legitimate reason to speak about the challenge, but went looking for deputy public defenders to vent his hostility about the challenge by the City Attorney's Office and discussed the motion to set aside a plea agreement, a matter that was still pending in another courtroom in the superior court.

Judge Kreep objects to the masters' conclusions that he acted in bad faith and engaged in willful misconduct. He agrees that it is misconduct for a judge to display hostility toward an attorney who files a challenge, but asserts that there is no evidence that he displayed hostility toward any city attorney. He maintains that he went to Department 1 as a courtesy to inform the deputy public defenders that he would not be hearing their cases and that he did not discuss pending cases. To the contrary, the masters found that Judge Kreep initiated the conversation to vent his anger at the City Attorney's Office for challenging him, mentioned specific cases, and discussed at least one case pending in another courtroom.

We give special weight to the masters' factual findings and credibility determinations and determine they are supported by clear and convincing evidence, including the testimony of two deputy city attorneys who overheard the conversation in Department 1. Moreover, the words the judge used ("If they are coming after me, they are likely coming after you") reflect hostility toward the City Attorney's Office. Significantly, there was no legitimate reason for the judge to go into Department 1 to inform the deputy public defenders of his disqualification since they would be notified by the court.

We concur with the masters' legal conclusion that Judge Kreep acted in bad faith and engaged in willful misconduct. A judge engages in bad faith when the judge performs a judicial act for a corrupt purpose, which is any purpose other than the faithful discharge of judicial duty. (Broadman, supra, 18 Cal.4th at p. 1092; Geiler v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1973)10 Cal.3d 270, 286 [judge acted in bad faith when he indulged in personal hostility]; Inquiry Concerning Clarke (2016) 1 Cal.5th CJP Supp. 1, 14 [judge acted in bad faith when he ordered prospective juror to wait in hallway out of pique and in retaliation for complaints against his clerk); Inquiry Concerning Van Voorhis (2003) 48 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 257 at p. 275 [judge acted in bad faith by acting out of anger in suggesting that a prosecutor was misleading the jury].) Judge Kreep was not acting in the faithful discharge of judicial duty, but became embroiled and went to Department 1 to vent his hostility toward the City Attorney's Office. Although he did not lash out directly at the deputy city attorneys in the courtroom, he expressed his anger within clear earshot of them.

Additionally, Judge Kreep engaged in improper ex parte communications about at least one pending case with the deputy public defenders who were in Department 1.

For these reasons, we agree with the masters that Judge Kreep's conduct on September 9, 2013, violated canons 1, 2, 2A and 3B(7) of the California Code of Judicial Ethics and constituted willful misconduct.

COUNT FIVE

Judge Kreep was charged with telling an African-American superior court employee who had participated in a Halloween costume contest that she should not say she "didn't win due to racism" or words to that effect.

1. Findings of Fact.

The masters made the following factual findings.

"Maurisa Young worked in the small claims division of the San Diego County Superior Court in 2013. She participated in a Halloween costume contest for court employees in October 2013. Judge Kreep was one of the contest judges. Ms. Young won third place in one of the contest categories.

"Ms. Young was talking with coworker Maria Fujita about the contest when Judge Kreep joined their conversation and gave his opinion about some of the costumes. Ms. Young asked Judge Kreep why third place winners did not get prizes. Judge Kreep responded that he did not have control over the prizes. He said the contest was conducted fairly and he did not want anyone to say 'I didn't win due to race.' Ms. Young is African American. According to Ms. Fujita's recollection, Judge Kreep used the word 'black' or 'colored' and said something about racism. Judge Kreep's statement shocked and offended Ms. Young. She later complained to her supervisor about Judge Kreep's comment.

"Judge Kreep denies making any comment about race.

"We find Ms. Young's testimony to be credible and find no evidence or indication of a motive or incentive for her to present a false account. We credit her version of the incident."

Judge Kreep objects to the masters' finding that he made the statement about race, and contends that the examiner did not prove this charge by clear and convincing evidence because he denied making the statement and Ms. Young and Ms. Fujita differed in their recollection of what he said.

A charge can be proven by clear and convincing evidence based on the testimony of one witness if believed, even when there is conflicting or divergent testimony. (People

v. Rincon-Pineda (1975) 14 Cal.3d 864; California Jury Instructions Civil [CACI] 107 [the testimony of one witness if believed is sufficient to prove any fact].) With respect to discrepancies between witness testimony, California jurors are instructed: "Sometimes a witness may say something that is not consistent with something else he or she said. Sometimes different witnesses will give different versions of what happened. People often forget things or make mistakes in what they remember. Also, two people may see the same event but remember it differently. You may consider these differences, but do not decide that testimony is untrue just because it differs from other testimony." (CACI 107.)

We conclude there is clear and convincing evidence to support the masters' finding that Judge Kreep told Ms. Young she should not say she "didn't win due to racism" or words to that effect. The fact that Ms. Fujita's recollection differed as to the exact words used does not discredit Ms. Young's testimony. Both witnesses remembered the judge referring to racism in relation to a conversation about why Ms. Young did not receive a prize, whether it be "black," "colored," "something about racism" or "due to racism." Ms. Fujita recalled Ms. Young appearing upset by the comment. Ms. Young's testimony is further corroborated by the fact that she emailed her supervisor with a complaint about the judge's comment when her supervisor returned from vacation. Finally, as noted by the masters, Ms. Young had no reason to present a false account.

Giving special weight to the credibility determinations of the masters who were in a position to observe the demeanor of the witnesses, we adopt the factual findings of the masters in their entirety.

2. Conclusions of Law.

The masters concluded the judge violated California Code of Judicial Ethics canons 1, 2, 2A and 4A [judge shall conduct extrajudicial activities so that they do not cast reasonable doubt on his capacity to act impartially or demean the judicial office] and engaged in prejudicial misconduct. We concur.

Judge Kreep injected race into the conversation about prizes for Halloween costume contest winners, without any prompting or suggestion by Ms. Young or Ms.

Fujita. The comment suggested unfairly that Ms. Young might question the results of the contest based on her race. Ms. Young was shocked and offended. We concur with the masters that the comment "was insensitive and demeaning and could reasonably have been perceived as racial or ethnic bias." "Expressions of bias or prejudice by a judge, even outside the judge's judicial activities, may cast reasonable doubt on the judge's capacity to act impartially as a judge. Expressions that may do so include inappropriate use of humor or the use of demeaning remarks." (Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canon 4A, Advisory Com. Commentary.)

We conclude that the remark would be found by an objective observer to be prejudicial to public esteem for the judiciary.

COUNT SIX

Judge Kreep was charged with giving the appearance of prejudging an unlawful detainer case by failing to offer the parties the opportunity to present evidence, cross-examine witnesses, or present argument, and with making comments reflecting prejudgment during the proceeding. The masters concluded that the examiner did not prove the charge by clear and convincing evidence.

The following is a summary of the masters' factual findings.

Vismara v. Coplin was before Judge Kreep for trial on September 26, 2014. Richard Hein, a representative of the plaintiff, was present at the trial with plaintiff's counsel Richard C. Alter. Defendants Ken Coplin, Alex Iatridis and Ed Kinney were also present.

After witnesses were sworn in, someone explained that defendants were no longer in possession of the premises. Judge Kreep asked the parties questions to determine who had personal property on the premises and what it was, so he could "figure . . . what's going on before we get too far into this case." Judge Kreep received and reviewed documents with the permission of the parties and questioned the parties about the lease and lease payments. When plaintiff's counsel clarified that the only issue for trial was possession of the premises because defendants' bankruptcy actions precluded a claim for damages against them, Judge Kreep responded, "I was trying to figure out what's going on, so. You understand that gentlemen? They're not seeking any money from you [¶] . . . [¶] They just want the property back." During the proceeding, Mr. Coplin and Mr. Iatridis did not challenge plaintiff's right to possession of the premises, and Mr. Kinney was dismissed as a defendant.

Judge Kreep urged the parties to reach a compromise about how much time defendants would have to remove their personal property from the premises. Plaintiff's counsel welcomed Judge Kreep's help. Judge Kreep asked Mr. Coplin to talk with the plaintiff to "work out" a timeframe to remove his property from the premises. Judge Kreep said, "If you're not willing to do that then I will -- then we'll go through the trial and I'll make a formal finding and, depending on the evidence, I'm not saying I'm going to rule against you -- uh -- but I, you know, just what I know of this case, there's -- there's somewhat of a prima facie case made unless you start paying rent and they agree to accept the rent now." Judge Kreep indicated he would make an enforceable order if they agreed on a timeframe, but otherwise they would go "through the formalities," and the defendants would get the "standard time" to vacate the premises. Plaintiff agreed to give defendants 30 days to remove their belongings after the parties conferred. Judge Kreep entered an order awarding possession of the premises to plaintiff, with the lockout stayed until October 31, 2014.

The masters concluded that the only issue for trial was possession of the premises and that issue had already been resolved. (Union Oil Co. v. Chandler (1970) 4 Cal.App.3d 716, 721 [in general, the sole issue before the court in an unlawful detainer proceeding is the right to possession of real property], disapproved on another point in Green v. Superior Court (1974) 10 Cal.3d 616, 633, fn. 19.) They further concluded that it was not improper under these circumstances for Judge Kreep to try to help the parties negotiate the removal of defendants' personal property. Moreover, the judge elicited information from both the defendants and the plaintiff and did not appear to be partial to either side.

The masters concluded Judge Kreep should not have said, "[W]e'll go through the formalities and I'll issue an order" if the parties could not agree, because "[s]uch comments can suggest prejudgment of the case." Nonetheless, the masters found that the evidence demonstrates that Judge Kreep's approach at the hearing was welcomed and appreciated by the parties and resolved their remaining issues. Thus, the masters concluded, "Although Judge Kreep should have been more cautious with some of his statements, his conduct was not coercive and did not constitute prejudgment of the case."

Based on the foregoing findings and conclusions of the masters, which we adopt, we conclude that this charge was not proven by clear and convincing evidence.

COUNT SEVEN

Judge Kreep is charged with stating during an unlawful detainer proceeding, "I had a Filipino teacher who always used to ask for a shit of paper." It was alleged that the comment was undignified and created an appearance of impropriety and bias.

1. Findings of Fact.

We adopt the following findings of fact of the masters as summarized and paraphrased.

On October 27, 2014, Judge Kreep presided over an unlawful detainer trial in a matter entitled Pinewood Park, LP v. Anderson. During the trial, defendant Paula Anderson was describing the circumstances ever since the owner had "filed" on her when the following colloquy ensued:

"THE COURT: Ever since she what on you?

"ANDERSON: Ever since she, um, gave me --

"THE COURT: Filed on you?

"ANDERSON: Yes, filed.

"THE COURT: I thought you said fouled on me. I'm sorry, filed on me.

"ANDERSON: Oh, sorry. We talk with, I got Texas, my parents are from Texas.

"THE COURT: Don't worry about it.

"ANDERSON: We might say y'all or something like that.

"THE COURT: Doesn't bother me a bit. I just misunderstood what you said.

"LANDLORD'S ATTY: My husband asks for a pin all the time, but it's a pen.

"THE COURT: That's okay I, I talk about doing the warsh [sic], so. Anyway, people look at me like, are you crazy? Anyway. And I had a Filipino teacher who always used to ask for a shit of paper."

Judge Kreep testified he made the "shit of paper" remark in response to Ms. Anderson's joke about her accent and the plaintiff's attorney's joke about her husband's accent. He said his remark was "made in an attempt to bring some levity and relaxation into the proceeding," but he admits it was inappropriate and he apologized for his comment.

2. Conclusions of Law.

Judge Kreep had been previously counseled by his presiding and supervising judges about commenting on accents and he was advised to filter what he said, share less with others and be more judicial. Thus, we agree with the masters that "he should have known not to make a comment about a Filipino teacher's accent and not to use the word 'shit' in the courtroom, even if it referred to a sheet of paper." (See McCartney, supra, 12 Cal.3d at p. 535; Salcido, supra, at p. 20.)

Judge Kreep's conduct violated canons 1, 2, 2A, 3B(3), 3B(4) and 3B(5) of the California Code of Judicial Ethics, and constituted improper action. The examiner contends that the comment was prejudicial to public esteem for the judiciary, and thus constituted prejudicial misconduct. We concur with the masters that given the context of the comment, in which other individuals initiated a discussion about how people with accents can be misunderstood, sometimes in a humorous way, the comment constituted improper action rather than prejudicial misconduct.

COUNT EIGHT

Judge Kreep was charged with improperly soliciting the legal opinion of attorneys who did not represent a party in the case before him.

1. Findings of Fact.

We adopt the following factual findings of the masters.

"In Gelb Revocable 2010 Trust v. Chapman, Judge Kreep held a hearing on October 2, 2014, regarding defendant Carlton Noble's ex parte application for an order staying a lockout and for an order shortening the time to hear a motion to set aside a default judgment. The plaintiff and Mr. Noble were represented by counsel at the hearing. During argument about whether Mr. Noble received proper service of the summons and complaint, Judge Kreep turned to attorney Patricia Coyne, who was sitting in the courtroom but did not represent the plaintiff or Mr. Noble, and asked her, 'Does the 30-day notice require the abandonment of property wording?' Ms. Coyne responded in the affirmative and Judge Kreep told plaintiff's counsel, 'You might want to try to settle this matter.' Ms. Coyne had appeared before Judge Kreep numerous times and testified it was not odd for Judge Kreep to ask her a question about a case she was not handling; similar occurrences had happened in the more than 26 years she had been representing landlords.

"In another case, during a hearing on a demurrer, Judge Kreep asked attorney Mark Feinberg, who was in Judge Kreep's courtroom to oppose a demurrer in a different case, whether an order overruling a demurrer should state that the defendant had five days to 'respond' or five days to 'answer.' Mr. Feinberg opined that the order should give the defendant five days to answer. Judge Kreep adopted Mr. Feinberg's suggestion. Later, in Mr. Feinberg's case, Judge Kreep overruled a demurrer and gave the defendant five days to answer. Like Ms. Coyne, Mr. Feinberg had been practicing for decades and appeared before Judge Kreep many times. There had been another instance in which Judge Kreep asked Mr. Feinberg for his legal opinion in a case Mr. Feinberg was not handling. And on one or two other occasions, Mr. Feinberg saw Judge Kreep ask attorneys for their legal opinion in cases they were not handling. Mr. Feinberg testified he had occasionally seen other judges make similar inquiries of lawyers in their courtrooms even when the lawyer did not represent a party in the case. Mr. Feinberg said such inquiries were usually made by a judge who was new to the unlawful detainer department or was a visiting judge.

"Judge Kreep likewise testified he had seen other judges ask attorneys for their legal opinions regarding cases they were not handling. Judge Kreep said he only did that in unlawful detainer cases and only in his first year in the unlawful detainer department.

According to Judge Kreep, he discontinued the practice after he was counseled about it in January or February 2015."

2. Conclusions of Law.

Soliciting the advice of attorneys in the courtroom who are not involved in the case could convey an impression that those attorneys hold a special position of influence over the judge and create an appearance of impropriety and partiality. Counsel in the case might rightly be troubled by the judge's soliciting advice on how he should handle the matter from attorneys unfamiliar with the case. Further, as noted by the masters, parties on the opposing side of Ms. Coyne and Mr. Feinberg in matters waiting to be called might also be concerned. They could see that Judge Kreep thought so highly of Ms. Coyne's and Mr. Feinberg's advice that he called on them in cases they were not handling.

Witnesses testified that other judges called on attorneys in the courtroom audience for their opinions on legal issues in unlawful detainer cases. Nevertheless, we agree with the masters that "the fact that it may be a common practice does not necessarily excuse inappropriate conduct."

For the forgoing reasons, we conclude, as did the masters, that the judge's conduct violated canons 1, 2, 2A and 2B(1) of the California Code of Judicial Ethics [a judge shall not convey or permit others to convey the impression that any individual is in a special position to influence the judge] and constituted prejudicial misconduct. (See McCartney, supra, 12 Cal.3d at pp. 529, 532-533 [holding benchside sentencing conferences with bailiff].) Neither party objected to these legal conclusions.

COUNT NINE

Judge Kreep was charged with creating an appearance of lack of impartiality and failing to afford a full opportunity to be heard by giving the plaintiff in Sleea v. Brown the choice of either (1) dismissing his small claims case and filing it as a limited or unlimited civil case, or (2) having Judge Kreep decide the case based on evidence which Judge Kreep told the plaintiff was insufficient to support his claim for $10,000 in damages.

1. Findings of Fact.

We adopt the following factual findings of the masters as summarized and paraphrased.

On January 8, 2015, Judge Kreep presided over Sleea v. Brown, a small claims action. Plaintiff Juhar Sleea sought $10,000 in damages for "stolen property, occasional hotel fees, food charges, clothing expenses, [and] hospital expenses." Mr. Sleea was present but the defendant did not appear.

Mr. Sleea was not sworn in. Upon questioning by Judge Kreep, Mr. Sleea said he rented a room from defendant but eventually defendant filed a restraining order against him and kept Mr. Sleea's belongings. He sought damages for the items kept by the defendant, including jewelry, cash, and a passport. Mr. Sleea said he also incurred hotel, food, and medical expenses as a result of the defendant's conduct.

Mr. Sleea presented Judge Kreep with receipts to support a portion of his damages claim. When Judge Kreep said Mr. Sleea had to present evidence of the cash left in the room and the value of the stolen jewelry, Mr. Sleea responded that he wrote down the amount of the cash and the value of the jewelry. Judge Kreep replied, "Just writing it down is meaningless. I could say you stole $10,000 from me. You have to give me some evidence, sir."

Judge Kreep pressed Mr. Sleea for some evidence that he had $10,000 in cash he claimed he had hidden in his room and for receipts for the allegedly stolen jewelry. Mr. Sleea said he got the jewelry "from the Holy Land" and the receipt "was in Arabic and it was [a] long time [ago.]" Judge Kreep responded, "I can only give you damages for what you can prove to me. And without some appraisal or estimate or receipt for the jewelry, you have no idea what it's worth, sir. I have no idea what it's worth, sir. I can't give you damages based on speculative values. That's the law."

Mr. Sleea said he knew the jewelry was worth $5,000 because he showed a photograph of the jewelry to a "jewelry owner" who told him so. Judge Kreep said Mr. Sleea's representation about the value of the jewelry was not admissible evidence.

Judge Kreep told Mr. Sleea that if the defendant had "taken all this stuff" from Mr. Sleea, Mr. Sleea should have brought a limited or unlimited civil action and not sued in small claims court. Mr. Sleea explained that even though his damages exceeded $10,000 he filed a small claims action because he did not have the money to file an unlimited civil action.[6]

Judge Kreep told Mr. Sleea: "Here's your options, sir, you can dismiss this case, uh, and file it in limited civil or unlimited civil. Or I can rule on the evidence you've given me. That's your choices. Which right now is looking -- from what you've -- all I've seen here in damages is two or three thousand dollars. It's what I've got [unintelligible], sir. If you have, if you have more receipts or something there, show them to me." Judge Kreep later repeated Mr. Sleea's options and added, "There are attorneys who may take it on a contingency basis. I don't know. If you have no income, you may be able to get a fee waiver. In fact, you got a fee waiver for this case. If you can get a fee waiver for this case, you can get a fee waiver for limited civil or unlimited civil."

When Mr. Sleea said he had no money to pay an attorney, Judge Kreep responded, "Sir, third time, here are your options, you dismiss this case and take it into limited civil or unlimited, or I rule on the evidence that you have given me so far, plus whatever other damage evidence. But doctors' bills, just because you could not pay them, unless this man physically attacked you and the doctors' bills are as a result, the doctors' bills are not relevant to this proceeding. So, what's your choice? You want me to rule on what you've given me? Or do you want to dismiss this and try to get more money in another court?" Mr. Sleea elected to dismiss his action but protested, "I don't think this is fair, Your Honor." Judge Kreep dismissed the action without prejudice.

---

[6] Except in circumstances not shown to be applicable here, the jurisdictional limit for a small claims action brought by a natural person is ten thousand dollars ($10,000). (Code Civ. Proc., § 116.221.)

Judge Kreep testified he believed he had authority to give Mr. Sleea the option of having his case dismissed without prejudice because Mr. Sleea did not have "concrete" evidence to prove his alleged damages.

2. Conclusions of Law.

The masters concluded that Judge Kreep failed to afford Mr. Sleea a full opportunity to be heard by refusing to consider Mr. Sleea's offer to prove his damages through his own sworn testimony or through hearsay evidence in a small claims case in which the defendant had not appeared. The judge did not swear Mr. Sleea in as a witness and informed Mr. Sleea that his testimony about the amount of cash in the room and what a jeweler told him about the current value of the missing jewelry was not evidence.

"The hearing and disposition of . . . [a] small claims action shall be informal, the object being to dispense justice promptly, fairly, and inexpensively." (Code Civ. Proc., § 116.510.) "While there are obviously some limits beyond which the court should not go, the statutes are clearly designed to afford both the parties and the court considerable flexibility in presenting their cases and ascertaining the truth." (Houghtaling v. Superior Court (1993) 17 Cal.App.4th 1128, 1135 (Houghtaling).)

The rules of evidence, including the hearsay rule, do not apply to small claims court proceedings. (Sanderson v. Niemann (1941) 17 Cal.2d 563, 573.) In small claims matters, the trial court should "listen patiently, even if it is mentally classifying the evidence as improbable, incredible, or preposterous." (Houghtaling, supra, at pp. 1137; Cal. Judges Benchguides: Small Claims Court (rev. 2016) § 34.32, p. 34-27 ["In most instances, the judge should admit all of a party's evidence, including hearsay evidence and evidence offered through witnesses, and thereafter determine its weight and trustworthiness."].)

"The obligation of a judge to dispose of matters promptly and efficiently must not take precedence over the judge's obligation to dispose of the matters fairly and with patience. For example, when a litigant is self-represented, a judge has the discretion to take reasonable steps, appropriate under the circumstances and consistent with the law and the canons, to enable the litigant to be heard." (Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canon 3B(8), Advisory Com. Commentary.)

Judge Kreep repeatedly commented on the insufficiency of the plaintiff's evidence and then pushed Mr. Sleea to either dismiss the matter and refile it as a civil action or continue with the small claims action and have the judge rule based on the evidence presented. Mr. Sleea had already told the judge that he had not filed an unlimited civil action because it was something he could not afford. As stated by the masters, "[u]nder the circumstances, the 'choice' Judge Kreep offered the indigent plaintiff was not much of a choice at all."

The issue before the commission is not whether Judge Kreep's legal rulings were correct or whether there was or was not sufficient evidence to prove damages. Rather, the ethical issue is whether he provided the plaintiff with an opportunity to fairly adjudicate his small claims matter. We agree with the masters that he did not.

The masters stated, "A disinterested observer in the courtroom might think Judge Kreep was working hard to avoid making a decision. Judge Kreep may have been trying to help Mr. Sleea by giving him a way out of an adverse ruling, but Mr. Sleea thought it was unfair, and we agree." We also agree.

The masters concluded that Judge Kreep's conduct violated canons 2A and 3B(8) of the California Code of Judicial Ethics [a judge shall manage the courtroom in a manner that provides all litigants the opportunity to have their matters fairly adjudicated in accordance with the law] and constituted improper action. However, the masters also concluded that there was not clear and convincing evidence to prove the charge that Judge Kreep created an appearance of favoritism and bias toward Mr. Sleea in violation of canon 3B(5) by offering him the option of dismissing without prejudice and refiling in limited or unlimited jurisdiction civil court. We reach the same legal conclusions. Neither party objected to these legal conclusions.

COUNT TEN

Judge Kreep was charged with creating an appearance of impropriety and lack of impartiality by repeatedly interjecting views based on his personal experience during a small claims hearing in Clendenin v. Pacific West Home Mortgage, LLC.

1. Findings of Fact.

We adopt the following factual findings of the masters as summarized and paraphrased.

Judge Kreep heard Clendenin v. Pacific West Home Mortgage, LLC, a small claims action, on February 11, 2015. Plaintiff William Clendenin was present at the hearing and Stephen Niednagel appeared as the representative for defendant.

Mr. Clendenin claimed damages for Pacific West's failure to disclose there was damage to the subfloors when they sold him the property. There was a dispute over whether the damage existed when the property was sold to Mr. Clendenin. Mr. Niednagel said Pacific West replaced the carpet before the property was sold and Mr. Niednagel would have known about damage to the subfloor when the carpet was replaced. As Mr. Niednagel was explaining that the carpet could not have been installed if the subfloor had been in the condition shown in Mr. Clendenin's photographs, Judge Kreep interjected that he had "bought and sold houses," was a landlord, and had "commercial and residential realty." Judge Kreep also stated that he had "replaced carpets" and had done a lot of construction and reconstruction to fix and sell property. He said, "So, although I don't claim to be a builder, I'm not a virgin when it comes to these types of matters."

Mr. Niednagel testified he had not seen the carpet being installed and that his testimony about the condition of the subfloor was based on what other people told him. Judge Kreep replied, "Alright. So, 'cause I've seen some pretty strange -- I was an attorney for over 37 years, sir, and I was involved in some lawsuits over houses that I don't ever even know how they got approved by code -- brand new houses that were sold that people walked in them and fell right through the floor. And they've been approved by code, okay. Just before selling, so, I mean strange things happen is the only point I'm making."

Judge Kreep prefaced his questions to Mr. Clendenin by stating, "I'm not an expert, I'm not a developer, I'm not a contractor, but I've been involved in real estate a little bit."

Mr. Niednagel presented a statement from the Vice President of Operations for Pacific West's carpet installation contractor, stating that Mr. Clendenin's photographs did not depict the condition of the subfloor when the carpet was installed in 2011. Judge Kreep commented that the statement was double hearsay. He continued, "[L]et's put it this way, I've been in enough lawsuits as an attorney, fortunately not as a party, to know that sometimes the truth gets left out when people are trying to cover their butts." Judge Kreep ultimately awarded Mr. Clendenin $2,500, plus costs.

2. Conclusions of Law.

We agree with the masters' conclusion that Judge Kreep's repeated comments about his prior experiences in real estate and as an attorney created an appearance that he was not impartial and that he based his rulings on his personal experiences rather than the evidence presented. Judge Kreep suggested he discredited Mr. Niednagel's testimony about the improbability of the subfloor being damaged when the carpet was installed because the judge had "seen some pretty strange" things happen with houses. He also suggested a letter from the Vice President of Operations for the carpet installation contractor stating that the floors were not damaged was not trustworthy because in Judge Kreep's experience as an attorney, "the truth gets left out when people are trying to cover their butts."

Judge Kreep testified he disclosed he was a landlord so the parties could file a Code of Civil Procedure section 170.6 challenge against him if they wished. However, the timing and nature of his comments suggest otherwise. He did not make the comments at the beginning of the proceeding, he made them after the proceeding had commenced and sprinkled them throughout the proceeding. Additionally, his comments went well beyond disclosing he was a commercial landlord so that the parties could disqualify him if they wished. Rather, his remarks about his personal experiences were in response to testimony on particular subjects.

We conclude, as did the masters, that Judge Kreep's conduct violated canons 2, 2A and 3B(5) of the California Code of Judicial Ethics and constituted improper action. (Public Admonishment of Moruza, supra, at pp. 7, 9; see also Inquiry Concerning Velasquez, supra, 49 Cal.4th CJP Supp. at pp. 201, 204.) Neither party objected to these legal conclusions.

COUNT ELEVEN

Judge Kreep was charged with violating canons 1, 2, 2A, 3B(7) and 3B(8) of the California Code of Judicial Ethics by engaging in an ex parte communication in REO Group v. Newman. The judge allegedly considered an ex parte letter from REO's counsel, Jennifer Freedman, requesting that a court date that had been continued from July 29, 2015 to August 5, 2015, be moved back to July 29. The judge granted the request and reset the date to July 29. Allegedly, the defendant George W. Newman was not given written notice of REO's request, and did not appear on July 29.

The masters found that Judge Kreep's courtroom clerk "did not accept Ms. Freedman's letter because it was hand-delivered to Department 7 without a proof of service showing service of the letter on Mr. Newman. A process server redelivered Ms. Freedman's letter later that day with a proof of service showing that a copy of Ms. Freedman's letter to the court was sent to Mr. Newman by mail on July 27, two days before the date Ms. Freedman sought for the hearing."

Based on this finding, the masters concluded that the charge was not proven by clear and convincing evidence. (Nguyen v. Superior Court (2007) 150 Cal.App.4th 1006, 1013, fn. 2 [letter from real party in interest to the court was not ex parte communication where it was served on petitioner's counsel].) The masters reasoned, "Ms. Freedman's letter is not an ex parte communication. Mr. Newman may have been prejudiced by the timing of the communications to him, but that was a procedural issue for which he had legal remedies and it did not amount to misconduct."

We adopt the masters' conclusion that the charge was not proven by clear and convincing evidence.

IV.

DISCIPLINE

The purpose of a commission disciplinary proceeding " 'is not punishment, but rather the protection of the public, the enforcement of rigorous standards of judicial conduct, and the maintenance of public confidence in the integrity and independence of the judicial system.' " (Broadman, supra, 18 Cal.4th at pp. 1111–1112, quoting Adams, supra, 10 Cal.4th at p. 912.)

In determining the appropriate level of discipline, we first consider the number of acts and the nature of the proven misconduct. Judge Kreep has engaged in one act of willful misconduct, 17 acts of prejudicial misconduct, and 11 acts of improper action. Under the California Constitution, improper action is not a basis for censure or removal. (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (d).) The proven acts of willful and prejudicial misconduct in this matter support our determination to severely censure Judge Kreep.

The number of acts of misconduct is relevant to discipline to the extent it shows isolated incidents, or a pattern which demonstrates that the judge lacks judicial temperament and the " ' "ability to perform judicial functions in an even-handed manner." ' " (Fletcher, supra, 19 Cal.4th at p. 918.) In addition to the number of acts of misconduct, the nature and seriousness of the misconduct is an important factor in the commission's consideration. (Broadman, supra, 18 Cal.4th at pp. 1112–1113; Policy Declarations of the Com. on Jud. Performance, policy 7.1(1)(b).)

Judge Kreep has engaged in a pattern of misconduct that demonstrates a lack of judicial temperament. During his campaign for judicial office he conducted himself in a manner that created an appearance of lack of impartiality and demonstrated a disregard for adhering to election laws and assuring the accuracy of his public representations. After taking office, he often ran his courtroom in a manner that was undignified and suggested bias or prejudgment. Further, he engaged in willful misconduct by acting out of hostility in discussing with deputy public defenders the City Attorney's blanket challenge to him.

Judge Kreep maintains that he never intended to demean or belittle anyone in his courtroom. While that may be the case, his failure to recognize that his comments could offend people or make them feel uncomfortable is troubling. Drawing attention to a person's ethnicity when not an issue in the case, questioning an attorney's citizenship, suggesting that a court employee might blame the results of a costume contest on racism, asking a defendant charged with prostitution if she did it for the money or the action, referring to attorneys by nickname, and commenting on the physical appearance and pregnancy of attorneys demonstrates an astonishing lack of sensitivity to how such comments could be perceived by others and a judicial style unbefitting the judicial office.

Judge Kreep's misconduct undermines public confidence in the dignity, integrity and impartiality of the judiciary. In addition, Judge Kreep's conduct has had a negative impact on the administration of the San Diego County Superior Court. His presiding and supervising judges were required to spend substantial time meeting and corresponding with Judge Kreep and preparing memoranda documenting repeated complaints about Judge Kreep's conduct, all at a time when the court was dealing with a budgetary crisis.

Other significant factors we take into consideration in determining the appropriate level of discipline are whether the judge acknowledges and appreciates the impropriety of his or her misconduct, and whether the judge has cooperated fully and honestly in the commission proceeding. (Policy Declarations of the Commission on Judicial Performance, policy 7.1(2)(a)(b).) "A judge's failure to appreciate or admit to the impropriety of his or her acts indicates a lack of capacity to reform." (Inquiry Concerning Platt (2002) 48 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 227, 248.)

In general, Judge Kreep admitted that he ran his courtroom too casually and that many of his comments could be perceived as improper and demonstrating a lack of decorum and bias. Specifically, he acknowledged wrongdoing in failing to report campaign expenses and use of his personal credit card and bank account for campaign expenses, commenting on an attorney's accent and citizenship, referring to attorneys by nickname, commenting on the attractiveness of a male public defender, referring to a "gift for the day" during sentencing, making certain crude comments, and the Filipino accent comment.

However, Judge Kreep also failed to see the impropriety as to many instances of misconduct, such as commenting on an attorney's pregnancy and the physical attractiveness of female public defenders, sharing intimate personal facts about his caretaking of a friend, asking a prostitute whether she did it for the money or the action, calling an adult man "little boy," unnecessarily referencing a person's ethnicity and speaking Spanish to litigants based on their surname. Particularly troubling are the disingenuous and specious explanations Judge Kreep offered in response to some of the charged conduct. For instance, he denied opposing President Obama in the USJF fundraising letters he signed during his judicial campaign despite unambiguous language in the letters to the contrary, and he claimed to have gone to Department 1 simply to inform the public defenders of the blanket challenge when there was no reason for him to do so and when his words conveyed anger. While admitting that he commented on an attorney's pregnancy, he minimized the extent of the comments. Further, the masters credited Ms. Young's testimony that Judge Kreep made a statement about race in relation to the Halloween costume contest, despite the judge's denial.[7]

While the number of incidents of misconduct and Judge Kreep's failure to fully and honestly acknowledge the extent of his misconduct might warrant removal from office, other considerations have persuaded us that a severe public censure is the appropriate discipline. Those considerations include that all but five of the 29 incidents of proven misconduct occurred either during Judge Kreep's judicial campaign or during his first year on the bench and the evidence before us suggests that Judge Kreep has made efforts to reform his judicial style and behavior. (Policy Declaration of the Commission on [7] Judge Kreep argued through his attorney that two witnesses may remember events differently, and that discrepancies between the testimony of witnesses does not necessarily mean that one witness is intentionally lying. While we think making a comment about race in this context is something a person is likely to remember, we cannot say based on this record that there is clear and convincing evidence that Judge Kreep intentionally lied in his testimony on this issue.

Judicial Performance, policy 7.1(c).)[8] There was a significant drop in incidents of misconduct after the judge's first year on the bench and after he was counseled by his supervising judges. For the most part, when specific improper conduct was brought to his attention, such as the use of nicknames, commenting on the physical appearance of attorneys and asking attorneys in the courtroom for advice, the conduct ceased.

However, Judge Kreep did not always heed the advice of his superiors. During a January 30, 2013 meeting with Judge Kreep, Presiding Judge Trentacosta counseled Judge Kreep about his statements to Ms. Hernandez and an article in CityBeat reporting those statements. Judge Trentacosta told Judge Kreep that statements singling out a person based on something that is not relevant to an issue before the judge, such as the person's accent or national origin could make the person uncomfortable. Judge Kreep apologized for his conduct and promised not to do it again. Yet, after that meeting, Judge Kreep made the "no offense to Chinese people" and Filipino accent comments. Also, the judge stopped speaking Spanish during court proceedings only after repeated admonishments from his presiding judge.

In mitigation, the masters noted the testimony of attorneys who appeared before Judge Kreep in the unlawful detainer department, and described him as fair and respectful of litigants. The masters also found in mitigation that Judge Kreep is hard working and has helped reduce the backlog on default matters at the superior court. Further, the judge has participated in continuing education, and extracurricular court and community activities and committees.

After careful consideration and balancing of the foregoing aggravating and mitigating factors, we have determined that imposition of a severe public censure, the highest level of discipline short of removal, best fulfills our mandate to protect the public and maintain public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary.

[8] Although Judge Kreep has no prior discipline, we do not consider that to be a mitigating factor in his case because most of the misconduct occurred while he was a judicial candidate and during his first year on the bench.

ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of article VI, section 18 of the California Constitution, we hereby impose a severe public censure on Judge Gary G. Kreep.

Commission members Mr. Richard Simpson; Anthony P. Capozzi, Esq.; Ms. Sarah Kruer Jager; Ms. Pattyl A. Kasparian; Nanci E. Nishimura, Esq.; and Mr. Adam N. Torres voted in favor of all the findings and conclusions expressed herein and in this order imposing a severe public censure. Commission members Hon. Ignazio J. Ruvolo, Hon. Michael B. Harper, Dr. Michael A. Moodian, and Hon. Erica R. Yew concur as to the factual findings and legal conclusions expressed herein, but dissent as to the order of severe public censure and would have ordered the removal of Judge Kreep from office. Commission member Ms. Mary Lou Aranguren did not participate.

Date: August 17, 2017

Mr. Richard Simpson
Vice-Chairperson

STATE OF CALIFORNIA

BEFORE THE COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

| | |
|---|---|
| IN THE MATTER CONCERNING FORMER COMMISSIONER JOSEPH J. GIANQUINTO | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC CENSURE PURSUANT TO STIPULATION (Commission Rule 116.5) |

This disciplinary matter concerns Joseph J. Gianquinto, formerly a commissioner of the Kern County Superior Court. Mr. Gianquinto and his counsel Katy A. Cummings, of Miller Law Associates, have entered into a stipulation with Gregory Dresser, Director-Chief Counsel of the Commission on Judicial Performance, pursuant to commission rule 116.5 to resolve the pending preliminary investigation involving Mr. Gianquinto by imposition of a public censure with Mr. Gianquinto's agreement to not seek or hold judicial office in the future. The Stipulation for Discipline by Consent (Stipulation) was approved by the commission on August 8, 2018, pursuant to the following terms and conditions and stipulated facts and legal conclusions.

TERMS AND CONDITIONS

1. This agreement resolves the matters alleged in the commission's pending preliminary investigation involving former commissioner Joseph J. Gianquinto.

2. The commission shall issue a public censure based on the agreed Stipulated Facts and Legal Conclusions set forth therein.

3. If the commission accepts this proposed disposition, the commission's decision and order imposing public censure may articulate the reasons for its decision and include explanatory language that the commission deems appropriate.

4. Upon acceptance by the commission, this stipulation and the commission's decision and order shall be made public.

5. Mr. Gianquinto waives any further proceedings and review in this matter, including formal proceedings (rules 118, et seq.), and review by the Supreme Court (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 9.60).

6. Mr. Gianquinto has agreed not to seek or hold judicial office, or accept a position or assignment as a judicial officer, subordinate judicial officer, or judge pro tem with any court in the State of California, or accept a reference of work from any California state court, at any time in the future.

7. If Mr. Gianquinto attempts to serve in a judicial capacity in violation of the foregoing paragraph, the commission may withdraw the public censure and resume the preliminary investigation as to all of the matters in the preliminary investigation letter. Additionally, the commission may refer the matter to the State Bar of California.

STIPULATED FACTS AND LEGAL CONCLUSIONS

1. Mr. Gianquinto was a commissioner of the Kern County Superior Court from December 20, 2007 to March 30, 2018.

2. In 2016 and 2017, Commissioner Gianquinto maintained a public Facebook page that identified him as "Jj Gianquinto," stated that he "works at Kern County," and contained photos of him recognizable by the public. Commissioner Gianquinto's Facebook page did not identify him as a commissioner.

3. On May 8, 2017, Presiding Judge Charles Brehmer notified Commissioner Gianquinto in writing that a number of his Facebook posts (described below) were "of significant concern," and attached copies of the posts. Judge Brehmer's letter stated that there was a concern about the "content and impression a member of the public might have upon review of the posts."

4. Judge Brehmer's letter included copies of the following original statements that Commissioner Gianquinto posted on his public Facebook page in 2016 and 2017:

- "When he said he was going to 'fundamentally transform' this nation, he was gaining success. He was going to transform it from a primarily Judeo-Christian nation into Islam. Got it now? Thank God for Trump." (Posted February 10, 2017.)
- "What a pity it is to watch the RINOs [Republican in name only] run from the immigration order like roaches when the light comes on. They are more interested in saving their positions, than in protecting the rest of us." (Posted January 31, 2017.)

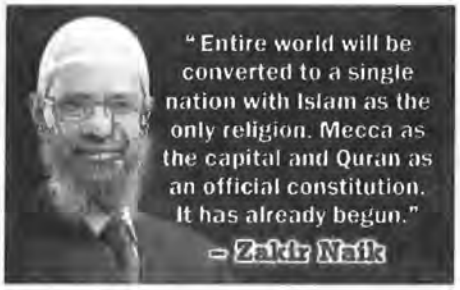
- "For the Indian Rez that will not permit the wall built on 75 miles of border on their land -- how about building the wall around that rez, fencing them into Mexico? That should please them." (Posted January 30, 2017.)
- "What would cause anyone to be depressed or disappointed over the Clinton thing? If you paid any attention, you had to know from the outset that nothing was going to happen to her. So, I have lost respect for the federal justice system, but I am not surprised." (Posted July 6, 2016.)
- "I am asking myself 'Why am I reading all the crap about the FBI and Hillary? It only causes me grief when I know nothing will EVER happen?' /so, [sic] I guess I will sign off for a little while during the complete destruction of a magnificent republic. We are no longer a nation of laws." (Posted July 5, 2016.)
- "As I drove to the gym this morning, my route goes past several low income housing units recently built, and some apartment buildings that are also low income. I did not see a single light on at 6:00. That is when people going to work arise." (Posted April 17, [year illegible].)



5. Judge Brehmer's letter also included copies of additional material that Commissioner Gianquinto posted on his public Facebook page during the same time period, for example:

| | |
|---|---|
|  | Commissioner Gianquinto's original statement accompanying the post: "Democrats are consistent, and they proved that at President Trump's address in Congress!" |
| LIBERALS ARE AMERICA'S CANCERAny doubt in your mind? | |
| [video]- SHOULD TRUMP ARREST THESE PROTESTORS? LIKE + SHARE = YES![The video shows protesters chanting "no border, no nation, fuck deportation" https://www.facebook.com/heyconservativepost/videos/713187405536217/?fallback=1] | |

| | |
|---|---|
|  | Commissioner Gianquinto's original statement accompanying the post:"Leftist values on full display. #WomensMarch" |
| It's time to stop messing around with people who cause chaos. Do you agree? | |

| | |
|---|---|
| Obama Says Requiring Employees To Speak English IS DISCRIMINATIONSHARE If you think Obama is an ANTI-AMERICAN MORON! | |
| Before the grand jury had a chance to interview witnesses and review the evidence of what happened in Ferguson, Barack. . .Obama Created Open Hunting Season on Police Officers | |
| The BlacksphereLet criminals out.Let illegals in.Let boys in girl's locker rooms.Let women kill their offspring.Prosecute innocent officers.Persecute Christians.Accept barbarity in the form of Islam.Over tax the hard working.Coddle the lazy.This is what Democrats have created in America. | Post remained on the commissioner's public Facebook page at least until August 2, 2017. |

| | |
|---|---|
|  | Post remained on the commissioner's public Facebook page at least until August 2, 2017. |
|  | |

| | |
|---|---|
| This is the dream and goal of most followers of terror religion ISLAM . . . Some show it openly and many hide their real face . . . [the text is cut off] | |
| Absolutely agree! | |
| Are you part of the 89%? | |

| | |
|---|---|
| Millions of illegal aliens are in the United States. We don't know who they are, where they're from or what their intentions are. If ...[comment is cut off] | |
| DAMN STRAIGHT#NoAmnesty[comment is cut off] | Post remained on the commissioner's public Facebook page at least until August 2, 2017. |

| | |
|---|---|
| Motor voter laws did this! | Post remained on the commissioner's public Facebook page at least until August 2, 2017. |
|  | |

| | |
|---|---|
|  | |
| VIDEO: Bachmann Calls Muslim Migration A "Planned Invasion" to Destroy Western Christendomhttps://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Pa4qMBN0St0 | Commissioner Gianquinto's original post accompanying the post:"I am glad SOMEONE is noticing and evaluating it correctly!" |
|  | |

| | |
|---|---|
| Attention, leftists: all people have natural rights, but only American citizens have constitutional rights. | |
|  | |
|  | |

Amen ... Absolutely I do! Anyone who may disagree is free to take it up with God. #OneManOneWoman One Nation Under God

| | |
|---|---|
|  | Post remained on the commissioner's public Facebook page at least until August 2, 2017. |
| Ok Kiddies, listen up. This BS needs to be shared. YOU ALL need to see how your elected officials think. You all need to see what you have been voting for. Are you OK with this shit? If you are in my friends list, you better not be.Prop 57 is going on the ballot as "Public Safety and Rehabilitation Act." Very similar to prop 47, which was School Safety Act (which reduced certain crimes to misdemeanors, including controlled substances offenses) The attached is a description of the "non violent" offenses that current state inmates can be released early for.I love it. "Rape by using a drug" "battery with serious bodily injury" "domestic violence" "Assault with a deadly weapon, on a peace officer", non violent!You tell me if you can get behind supporting this proposition and releasing "non violent" offenders early!!! You need to share (copy/paste/screenshot, you won't be able to share my post) this information and stop it in its tracks. | |

6. On May 15, 2017, Commissioner Gianquinto met with Presiding Judge Brehmer concerning the Facebook posts.

7. On June 20, 2017, Commissioner Gianquinto submitted a written response to Judge Brehmer, which stated: "After concerns about the posts were brought to my attention, I immediately deleted the posts and have refrained from sharing additional posts of this nature. I have also designated my Facebook account as 'private' which means only my friends can view any future posts."

8. On June 27, 2017, Commissioner Gianquinto self-reported to the commission that copies of his Facebook posts had been dropped off at the courthouse and delivered to Judge Brehmer. The commissioner's letter, which included copies of the referenced posts, stated: "Preliminarily, after Judge Brehmer brought this matter to my attention, I deleted the posts and have refrained from sharing additional posts of a political nature. I also designated my Facebook account as private."

9. On June 28, 2017, Judge Brehmer issued a private written reprimand to Commissioner Gianquinto, which stated in part:

> Your Facebook page contents, as of May 8, 2017, included content that was derogatory to certain members of our community and further was out of line with the Judicial Canons. At the very least, members of the public could get the impression that you were biased which impacts the trust of our judiciary and the belief of fairness and impartiality of the public appearing before you.

> You were advised to immediately remove the posts and restrict social media usage. You did comply with the advice, immediately removed the posts, acknowledged your errors in judgment and self-reported to the Commission on Judicial Performance.
>
> I am satisfied that you fully understand this significant issue and have appropriately addressed the errors in judgment and have taken corrective action.

10. Despite his written representations to Judge Brehmer on June 20, 2017, and to the commission on June 27, 2017, Commissioner Gianquinto did not immediately make his public Facebook page private or delete all of the posts included with Judge Brehmer's letter. The commissioner's Facebook page remained public, and six of the posts included with Judge Brehmer's letter were still on the page until at least August 2, 2017. Commissioner Gianquinto had intended to make his Facebook page private and delete the offending posts prior to his representations on June 20, 2017, and June 27, 2017; however, his unfamiliarity with the technology resulted in the changes not taking effect as intended. When alerted to the fact that the posts were still visible to the public, the commissioner immediately sought further assistance, deleted the offending posts, and increased the privacy settings on his Facebook profile.

11. In addition, Commissioner Gianquinto's public Facebook page contained posts of a similar nature that were not included in the presiding judge's investigation and that remained viewable by the public until at least August 2, 2017. These additional posts included the following:

- On August 21, 2016, the commissioner publicly shared a post with a photo of Hillary Clinton, with accompanying text stating, "The problem isn't that Hillary is an unethical, corrupt, lying criminal dirtbag -- Everyone knows that. The problem is that her supporters don't care. Are you people brain dead? Join us Facebook/Stop Hillary in 2016."
- On August 18, 2016, the commissioner publicly shared a post from Allen West stating, "The sad fact is NO previous Republican presidential candidate has had the guts to call ya'll out. We finally got one, and the left can't stand it.

Share this one folks." This text is followed by a photo of Hillary Clinton, captioned, "Yes, BIGOT. Trump is right."

- On August 17, 2016, the commissioner publicly posted the following original text: "When it comes to Democrats running for office, I have relatives who are not only willing and able, but WILL close their eyes to facts such as who has been disbarred, who was fired from the Nixon matter for lying and unethical conduct, and the rest of the unethical, dishonest conduct during the past thirty years. I do NOT know how they can do that."
- On August 16, 2016, the commissioner publicly shared a post stating, "When they asked him whether he thought Donald J. Trump was good for America [sic] What he said was the most HARDCORE response I've EVER heard! If this doesn't have you voting Trump, nothing will. Let's get 3,000 shares for a guy that knows that we don't need a politician, we need a LEADER! This Hispanic Billionaire UNLEASHED on Trump Haters, Says, 'Who Else Would You Have In A Fking Foxhole?'"
- On August 16, 2016, the commissioner publicly shared a post with a photo of Justices Sotomayor, Ginsburg, and Kagan, overwritten with text stating, "AS SOON AS HILLARY WINS THE ELECTION, WE'LL HAVE THE NUMBERS TO TAKE YOUR GUNS AWAY AND GIVE ILLEGALS CITIZENSHIP AND VOTING RIGHTS."
- On August 12, 2016, the commissioner publicly shared a post stating, "IF EVERY GUN OWNER VOTED AGAINST HER, HILLARY WOULD NOT WIN."
- On August 6, 2016, the commissioner publicly shared a post stating "JUST REMEMBER THAT THE PARTY OF SLAVERY, SEGREGATION, THE KKK, AND GOVERNMENT DEPENDENCY IS THE DEMOCRAT PARTY."

- On August 6, 2016, the commissioner publicly shared a post with a photo of Hillary Clinton winking, overwritten with text stating, "We were dead broke after leaving the White House and today we are worth over 110 million." Under this is a photo of Harry Truman, with the caption, "'You can't get rich in politics unless you're a crook.' Harry S. Truman."
- On August 2, 2016, the commissioner publicly shared a post showing a cartoon rendition of Hillary Clinton with text stating, "If Hillary Wins WE ALL LOSE! Yes = Share."
- On July 26, 2016, the commissioner publicly posted an image showing photos of Hillary Clinton, Barack Obama, Nancy Pelosi, Harry Reid, and Dianne Feinstein, accompanied by text stating, "DEMOCRATS A bunch of rich people convincing poor people to vote for rich people by telling the poor people that other rich people are the reason they are poor."
- On July 5, 2016, the commissioner publicly shared a post showing pictures of Hillary Clinton and James Comey, overwritten with text stating, "IF YOU FEEL BETRAYED BY THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT AND THE FBI PLEASE LIKE AND SHARE." This was originally posted by "Donald Trump for President."
- On July 5, 2016, the commissioner publicly shared a post with a photo of Hillary Clinton alongside text stating, "SHARE IF YOU ARE OUTRAGED HILLARY WON'T BE CHARGED BY THE FBI."
- On July 5, 2016, the commissioner publicly shared a post showing a photo of Hillary Clinton overwritten with text stating, "SILLY AMERICANS LAWS ARE FOR POOR PEOPLE."

Mr. Gianquinto was a subordinate judicial officer at the time of the conduct described herein. Canon 6A provides that a subordinate judicial officer is a judge within the meaning of the California Code of Judicial Ethics.

Mr. Gianquinto's conduct violated canon 1 (judge shall uphold the integrity and independence of the judiciary), canon 2 (judge shall avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety), canon 2A (judge shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary), canon 4A (judge shall conduct all of the judge's extrajudicial activities so that they do not cast reasonable doubt on the judge's capacity to act impartially or demean the judicial office), canon 5 (judge shall not engage in political activity that is inconsistent with the independence, integrity, or impartiality of the judiciary), canon 5A(2) (judge shall not publicly endorse or publicly oppose a candidate for nonjudicial office), and canon 5D (judge may engage in activity in relation to measures concerning improvement of the law, the legal system, or the administration of justice, only if the conduct is consistent with the code).

Mr. Gianquinto's conduct constituted conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute, as set forth in California Constitution, article VI, section 18, subdivision (d)(2).

Mr. Gianquinto admits that the foregoing facts are true and agrees with the stated legal conclusions.

DISCIPLINE

In 2016 and 2017, while a court commissioner, Mr. Gianquinto engaged in dozens of instances of misconduct by posting and re-posting information on his public Facebook page that reflected, among other things, anti-Muslim sentiment, anti-immigration sentiment, anti-Native American sentiment, anti-gay marriage sentiment, a position on the controversial issue of shooting deaths by police officers, strong opposition to then-presidential candidate Hillary Clinton, contrasting praise for then-presidential candidate Donald Trump, an accusation that President Barack Obama was trying to transform the United States from a Judeo-Christian nation into Islam, a lack of respect for the federal justice system, and contempt for the poor. In addition, after being contacted about the offending Facebook posts, Mr. Gianquinto represented to both his presiding judge and the commission that he had taken the posts down, which was not true, although, at the time he made these representations, he believed the posts were no longer publicly viewable. Mr. Gianquinto's conduct on Facebook was egregious, and is the type of conduct that inherently undermines public confidence in the judiciary and that brings the judicial office into disrepute.

Given that Mr. Gianquinto has retired from his position as a commissioner, the strongest discipline he could be subject to is a public censure and bar from receiving an assignment, appointment, or reference of work from any California state court. (Cal. Const., art. VI, §§ 18(d), 18.1.) The commission has determined that acceptance of the Stipulation is in the best interest of the public considering the extent and nature of Mr. Gianquinto's misconduct, and fulfills its mandate to protect the public, enforce rigorous standards of judicial conduct, and maintain public confidence in the integrity and independence of the judiciary. Furthermore, acceptance of the Stipulation resolves the matter in a manner that protects the public, while avoiding the delay and expense of further proceedings. For these reasons, the commission imposes this public censure upon the terms and conditions in the attached Stipulation.

Commission members Nanci E. Nishimura, Esq.; Hon. Michael B. Harper; Ms. Mary Lou Aranguren; Anthony P. Capozzi, Esq.; Hon. William S. Dato; Mr. Eduardo De La Riva; Ms. Sarah Kruer Jager; Dr. Michael A. Moodian; Mr. Adam N. Torres; and Hon. Erica R. Yew voted to accept the Stipulation and issue this public censure. Commission member Ms. Pattyl A. Kasparian did not participate.

Date: August 22, 2018

On behalf of the
Commission on Judicial Performance,

Nanci E. Nishimura
Chairperson

STATE OF CALIFORNIA

BEFORE THE COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

| | |
|---|---|
| IN THE MATTER CONCERNING FORMER COMMISSIONER JOSEPH J. GIANQUINTO | STIPULATION FOR DISCIPLINE BY CONSENT (Rule 116.5) |

Pursuant to Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance, rule 116.5, Joseph J. Gianquinto, formerly a commissioner of the Kern County Superior Court, represented by counsel Randall A. Miller, and commission trial counsel (the "parties") submit this proposed disposition of the matters set forth in the commission's preliminary investigation letter dated October 4, 2017. The parties request that the commission resolve this matter by imposition of a public censure. The parties believe that the settlement provided by this agreement is in the best interests of the commission and former Commissioner Gianquinto because, among other reasons, in light of the stipulated facts and legal conclusions, a public censure and the former commissioner's agreement not to serve as a judicial officer adequately protect the public and will avoid the delay and expense of further proceedings.

TERMS AND CONDITIONS OF AGREEMENT

1. This agreement resolves the matters alleged in the commission's pending preliminary investigation involving former Commissioner Gianquinto.

2. The commission shall issue a public censure based on the agreed Stipulated Facts and Legal Conclusions set forth therein.

3. If the commission accepts this proposed disposition, the commission's decision and order imposing public censure may articulate the reasons for its decision and include explanatory language that the commission deems appropriate.

4. Upon acceptance by the commission, this stipulation and the commission's decision and order shall be made public.

5. Former Commissioner Gianquinto waives any further proceedings and review in this matter, including formal proceedings (rules 118, et seq.), and review by the Supreme Court (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 9.60).

6. Former Commissioner Gianquinto has agreed not to seek or hold judicial office, or accept a position or assignment as a judicial officer, subordinate judicial officer, or judge pro tem with any court in the State of California, or accept a reference of work from any California state court, at any time in the future.

7. If former Commissioner Gianquinto attempts to serve in a judicial capacity in violation of the foregoing paragraph, the commission may withdraw the public censure and resume the preliminary investigation as to all of the matters in the preliminary investigation letter. Additionally, the commission may refer the matter to the State Bar of California.

8. The commission may reject this proposed disposition and resume its preliminary investigation. If the commission does so, nothing in this proposed disposition will be deemed to be admitted by former Commissioner Gianquinto.

Accordingly, it is hereby stipulated and agreed that the commission shall issue a public censure on the above Terms and Conditions of Agreement, and based on the following Stipulated Facts and Legal Conclusions.

STIPULATED FACTS AND LEGAL CONCLUSIONS

1. Joseph J. Gianquinto was a commissioner of the Kern County Superior Court from December 20, 2007 to March 30, 2018.

2. In 2016 and 2017, Commissioner Gianquinto maintained a public Facebook page that identified him as "Jj Gianquinto," stated that he "works at Kern County," and contained photos of him recognizable by the public. Commissioner Gianquinto's Facebook page did not identify him as a commissioner.

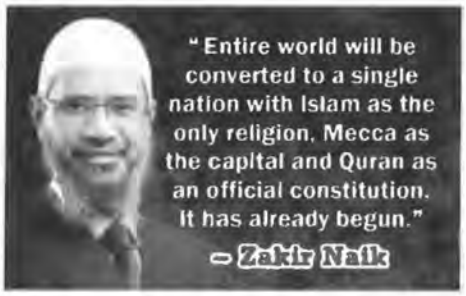
3. On May 8, 2017, Presiding Judge Charles Brehmer notified Commissioner Gianquinto in writing that a number of his Facebook posts (described below) were "of significant concern," and attached copies of the posts. Judge Brehmer's letter stated that there was a concern about the "content and impression a member of the public might have upon review of the posts."

4. Judge Brehmer's letter included copies of the following original statements that Commissioner Gianquinto posted on his public Facebook page in 2016 and 2017:

- "When he said he was going to 'fundamentally transform' this nation, he was gaining success. He was going to transform it from a primarily Judeo-Christian nation into Islam. Got it now? Thank God for Trump." (Posted February 10, 2017.)
- "What a pity it is to watch the RINOs [Republican in name only] run from the immigration order like roaches when the light comes on. They are more interested in saving their positions, than in protecting the rest of us." (Posted January 31, 2017.)
- "For the Indian Rez that will not permit the wall built on 75 miles of border on their land -- how about building the wall around that rez, fencing them into Mexico? That should please them." (Posted January 30, 2017.)
- "What would cause anyone to be depressed or disappointed over the Clinton thing? If you paid any attention, you had to know from the outset that nothing was going to happen to her. So, I have lost respect for the federal justice system, but I am not surprised." (Posted July 6, 2016.)
- "I am asking myself "Why am I reading all the crap about the FBI and Hillary? It only causes me grief when I know nothing will EVER happen? /so, [sic] I guess I will sign off for a little while during the complete destruction of a magnificent republic. We are no longer a nation of laws." (Posted July 5, 2016.)

- "As I drove to the gym this morning, my route goes past several low income housing units recently built, and some apartment buildings that are also low income. I did not see a single light on at 6:00. That is when people going to work arise." (Posted April 17, [year illegible].)

5. Judge Brehmer's letter also included copies of additional material that Commissioner Gianquinto posted on his public Facebook page during the same time period, for example:



| | |
|---|---|
|  | Commissioner Gianquinto's original statement accompanying the post: "Democrats are consistent, and they proved that at President Trump's address in Congress!" |
| LIBERALS ARE AMERICA'S CANCERAny doubt in your mind? | |

| | |
|---|---|
| [video]- SHOULD TRUMP ARREST THESE PROTESTORS? LIKE + SHARE = YES![The video shows protesters chanting "no border, no nation, fuck deportation" https://www.facebook.com/heyconservativepost/videos/713187405536217/?fallback=1] | |
|  | Commissioner Gianquinto's original statement accompanying the post:"Leftist values on full display. #WomensMarch" |

| | |
|---|---|
| It's time to stop messing around with people who cause chaos. Do you agree? | |
| Obama Says Requiring Employees To Speak English IS DISCRIMINATIONSHARE If you think Obama is an ANTI-AMERICAN MORON! | |

| | |
|---|---|
| Before the grand jury had a chance to interview witnesses and review the evidence of what happened in Ferguson, Barack. . .Obama Created Open Hunting Season on Police Officers | |
| The BlacksphereLet criminals out.Let illegals in.Let boys in girl's locker rooms.Let women kill their offspring.Prosecute innocent officers.Persecute Christians.Accept barbarity in the form of Islam.Over tax the hard working.Coddle the lazy.This is what Democrats have created in America. | Post remained on the commissioner's public Facebook page at least until August 2, 2017. |

| | |
|---|---|
|  | Post remained on the commissioner's public Facebook page at least until August 2, 2017. |
|  | |

| | |
|---|---|
| This is the dream and goal of most followers of terror religion ISLAM . . . Some show it openly and many hide their real face . . . [the text is cut off] | |
| Absolutely agree!SHARE IF YOU AGREE | |

| | |
|---|---|
| Are you part of the 89%? | |
| Millions of illegal aliens are in the United States. We don't know who they are, where they're from or what their intentions are. If ...[comment is cut off] | |

| | |
|---|---|
| DAMN STRAIGHT#NoAmnesty[comment is cut off] | Post remained on the commissioner's public Facebook page at least until August 2, 2017. |
| Motor voter laws did this! | Post remained on the commissioner's public Facebook page at least until August 2, 2017. |

| | |
|---|---|
|  | |
|  | |
| VIDEO: Bachmann Calls Muslim Migration A "Planned Invasion" to Destroy Western Christendomhttps://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Pa4qMBN0St0 | Commissioner Gianquinto's original post accompanying the post:"I am glad SOMEONE is noticing and evaluating it correctly!" |

Attention, leftists: all people have natural rights, but only American citizens have constitutional rights.

IF YOU ENTER THE U.S. ILLEGALLY, YOU ARE AN ILLEGAL ALIEN.
THAT'S NOT A RACIST STATEMENT. IT'S A FACTUALLY ACCURATE STATEMENT.
LIKE IF YOU AGREE

THEY CAME TO TAKE PART IN THE AMERICAN DREAM
EUROPEAN CHRISTIANS BUILT THIS NATION
THEY DIDN'T COME TO BITCH, COLLECT WELFARE, WAGE JIHAD, AND REPLACE THE AMERICAN CONSTITUTION WITH SHARIA LAW

IT TAKES A SPECIAL KIND OF LUNATIC TO THINK THAT IMPORTING WELFARE RECIPIENTS WHO WANT TO KILL US IS A GOOD IDEA.

Amen ... Absolutely I do! Anyone who may disagree is free to take it up with God. #OneManOneWoman One Nation Under God

| | |
|---|---|
|  | Post remained on the commissioner's public Facebook page at least until August 2, 2017. |

Ok Kiddies, listen up. This BS needs to be shared. YOU ALL need to see how your elected officials think. You all need to see what you have been voting for. Are you OK with this shit? If you are in my friends list, you better not be.

Prop 57 is going on the ballot as "Public Safety and Rehabilitation Act." Very similar to prop 47, which was School Safety Act (which reduced certain crimes to misdemeanors, including controlled substances offenses) The attached is a description of the "non violent" offenses that current state inmates can be released early for.

I love it. "Rape by using a drug" "battery with serious bodily injury" "domestic violence" "Assault with a deadly weapon, on a peace officer", non violent!

You tell me if you can get behind supporting this proposition and releasing "non violent" offenders early!!! You need to share (copy/paste/screenshot, you won't be able to share my post) this information and stop it in its tracks.

6. On May 15, 2017, Commissioner Gianquinto met with Presiding Judge Brehmer concerning the Facebook posts.

7. On June 20, 2017, Commissioner Gianquinto submitted a written response to Judge Brehmer, which stated: "After concerns about the posts were brought to my attention, I immediately deleted the posts and have refrained from sharing additional posts of this nature. I have also designated my Facebook account as 'private' which means only my friends can view any future posts."

8. On June 27, 2017, Commissioner Gianquinto self-reported to the commission that copies of his Facebook posts had been dropped off at the courthouse and delivered to Judge Brehmer. The commissioner's letter, which included copies of the referenced posts, stated: "Preliminarily, after Judge Brehmer brought this matter to my attention, I deleted the posts and have refrained from sharing additional posts of a political nature. I also designated my Facebook account as private."

9. On June 28, 2017, Judge Brehmer issued a private written reprimand to Commissioner Gianquinto, which stated in part:

> Your Facebook page contents, as of May 8, 2017, included content that was derogatory to certain members of our community and further was out of line with the Judicial Canons. At the very least, members of the public could get the impression that you were biased which impacts the trust of our judiciary and the belief of fairness and impartiality of the public appearing before you.
>
> You were advised to immediately remove the posts and restrict social media usage. You did comply with the advice, immediately removed the posts, acknowledged your errors in judgment and self-reported to the Commission on Judicial Performance.
>
> I am satisfied that you fully understand this significant issue and have appropriately addressed the errors in judgment and have taken corrective action.

10. Despite his written representations to Judge Brehmer on June 20, 2017, and to the commission on June 27, 2017, Commissioner Gianquinto did not immediately make his public Facebook page private or delete all of the posts included with Judge Brehmer's letter. The commissioner's Facebook page remained public, and six of the posts included with Judge Brehmer's letter were still on the page until at least August 2, 2017. Commissioner Gianquinto had intended to make his Facebook page private and delete the offending posts prior to his representations on June 20, 2017, and June 27, 2017; however, his unfamiliarity with the technology resulted in the changes not taking effect as intended. When alerted to the fact that the posts were still visible to the public, the commissioner immediately sought further assistance, deleted the offending posts, and increased the privacy settings on his Facebook profile.

11. In addition, Commissioner Gianquinto's public Facebook page contained posts of a similar nature that were not included in the presiding judge's investigation and that remained viewable by the public until at least August 2, 2017. These additional posts included the following:

- On August 21, 2016, the commissioner publicly shared a post with a photo of Hillary Clinton, with accompanying text stating, "The problem isn't that Hillary is an unethical, corrupt, lying criminal dirtbag -- Everyone knows that. The problem is that her supporters don't care. Are you people brain dead? Join us Facebook/Stop Hillary in 2016."
- On August 18, 2016, the commissioner publicly shared a post from Allen West stating, "The sad fact is NO previous Republican presidential candidate has had the guts to call ya'll out. We finally got one, and the left can't stand it. Share this one folks. This text is followed by a photo of Hillary Clinton, captioned, "Yes, BIGOT. Trump is right."
- On August 17, 2016, the commissioner publicly posted the following original text: "When it comes to Democrats running for office, I have relatives who are not only willing and able, but WILL close their eyes to facts such as who has been disbarred, who was fired from the Nixon matter for lying and unethical conduct, and the rest of the unethical, dishonest conduct during the past thirty years. I do NOT know how they can do that."

- On August 16, 2016, the commissioner publicly shared a post stating, "When they asked him whether he thought Donald J. Trump was good for America [sic] What he said was the most HARDCORE response I've EVER heard! If this doesn't have you voting Trump, nothing will. Let's get 3,000 shares for a guy that knows that we don't need a politician, we need a LEADER! This Hispanic Billionaire UNLEASHED on Trump Haters, Says, 'Who Else Would You Have In A Fking Foxhole?'"
- On August 16, 2016, the commissioner publicly shared a post with a photo of Justices Sotomayor, Ginsburg, and Kagen, overwritten with text stating, "AS SOON AS HILLARY WINS THE ELECTION, WE'LL HAVE THE NUMBERS TO TAKE YOUR GUNS AWAY AND GIVE ILLEGALS CITIZENSHIP AND VOTING RIGHTS."
- On August 12, 2016, the commissioner publicly shared a post stating, "IF EVERY GUN OWNER VOTED AGAINST HER, HILLARY WOULD NOT WIN."
- On August 6, 2016, the commissioner publicly shared a post stating "JUST REMEMBER THAT THE PARTY OF SLAVERY, SEGREGATION, THE KKK, AND GOVERNMENT DEPENDENCY IS THE DEMOCRAT PARTY."
- On August 6, 2016, the commissioner publicly shared a post with a photo of Hillary Clinton winking, overwritten with text stating, "We were dead broke after leaving the White House and today we are worth over 110 million." Under this is a photo of Harry Truman, with the caption, "'You can't get rich in politics unless you're a crook.' Harry S. Truman."

- On August 2, 2016, the commissioner publicly shared a post showing a cartoon rendition of Hillary Clinton with text stating, "If Hillary Wins WE ALL LOSE! Yes = Share."
- On July 26, 2016, the commissioner publicly posted an image showing photos of Hillary Clinton, Barack Obama, Nancy Pelosi, Harry Reid, and Dianne Feinstein, accompanied by text stating, "DEMOCRATS A bunch of rich people convincing poor people to vote for rich people by telling the poor people that other rich people are the reason they are poor."
- On July 5, 2016, the commissioner publicly shared a post showing pictures of Hillary Clinton and James Comey, overwritten with text stating, "IF YOU FEEL BETRAYED BY THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT AND THE FBI PLEASE LIKE AND SHARE." This was originally posted by "Donald Trump for President."
- On July 5, 2016, the commissioner publicly shared a post with a photo of Hillary Clinton alongside text stating, "SHARE IF YOU ARE OUTRAGED HILLARY WON'T BE CHARGED BY THE FBI."
- On July 5, 2016, the commissioner publicly shared a post showing a photo of Hillary Clinton overwritten with text stating, "SILLY AMERICANS LAWS ARE FOR POOR PEOPLE."

Commissioner Gianquinto was a subordinate judicial officer at the time of the conduct described herein. Canon 6A provides that a subordinate judicial officer is a judge within the meaning of the code.

Commissioner Gianquinto's conduct as described herein violated canon 1 (judge shall uphold the integrity and independence of the judiciary), canon 2 (judge shall avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety), canon 2A (judge shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary), canon 4A (judge shall conduct all of the judge's extrajudicial activities so that they do not cast reasonable doubt on the judge's capacity to act impartially or demean the judicial office), canon 5 (judge shall not engage in political activity that is inconsistent with the independence, integrity, or impartiality of the judiciary), canon 5A(2) (judge shall not publicly endorse or publicly oppose a candidate for nonjudicial office), and canon 5D (judge may engage in activity in relation to measures concerning improvement of the law, the legal system, or the administration of justice, only if the conduct is consistent with the code).

Commissioner Gianquinto's conduct described herein constituted conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute, as set forth in article VI, section 18, subdivision (d)(2) of the California Constitution.

By signing this stipulation, in addition to consenting to discipline on the terms set forth, former Commissioner Gianquinto expressly admits that the foregoing facts are true and that he agrees with the stated legal conclusions.

Dated: 20 July, 2018

Joseph J. Gianquinto

Dated: 20 July 2018

~~Randall A. Miller~~ Katy Cummings
Attorney for former Commissioner Gianquinto

Dated: July 31, 2018

Gregory Dresser
Director-Chief Counsel

ACCEPTANCE OF STIPULATION FOR DISCIPLINE BY CONSENT IN THE MATTER CONCERNING COMMISSIONER JOSEPH J. GIANQUINTO (SJO 2425)

The foregoing Stipulation for Discipline by Consent is accepted by the Commission on Judicial Performance.

Dated: August 22, 2018

/s/ Nanci E. Nishimura

Nanci E. Nishimura
Chairperson
Commission on Judicial Performance

FILED
AUG 28 2018
COMMISSION ON
JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

STATE OF CALIFORNIA

BEFORE THE COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

| | |
|---|---|
| INQUIRY CONCERNING FORMER JUDGE BRUCE CLAYTON MILLS, No. 201 | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC CENSURE AND BAR |

I.

INTRODUCTION AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge Bruce Clayton Mills, a former judge of the Contra Costa County Superior Court. Judge Mills was a judge of the Contra Costa County Municipal Court from 1995 to 1998, and a judge of the Contra Costa County Superior Court from 1998 until his retirement on May 30, 2018.

The commission commenced this inquiry with the filing of its Notice of Formal Proceedings (Notice) on October 13, 2017. The Notice charged Judge Mills with: (1) in the matter of Evilsizor v. Sweeney (hereafter Sweeney), modifying a contempt sentence to deny good time custody credits to the defendant, Joseph Sweeney, based on an ex parte communication and without providing notice or an opportunity to be heard; and then later granting good time credits, even though the judge did not believe it was necessarily required by law; and (2) in the matter of People v. Jeffers (hereafter Jeffers), engaging in an improper ex parte communication with the deputy district attorney while the jury was deliberating.

The Notice also charged Judge Mills with the following prior discipline:

- 2013 public admonishment for engaging in out-of-court communications about his son's infraction with a court clerk and the pro tempore (pro tem) judge handling the case;

- 2011 advisory letter for allowing his son to accompany a police officer in executing a search warrant the judge had signed, without going through the application process for going on a ride-along;
- 2008 advisory letter for improperly conditioning a defendant's release in a misdemeanor probation revocation proceeding on posting bail for the improper purpose of collecting restitution;
- 2006 public admonishment for engaging in a series of ex parte communications in a criminal case; assuming the role of the prosecutor in another criminal matter; and engaging in a pattern of making discourteous, demeaning, and belittling comments in criminal cases;
- 2001 private admonishment for remarks suggesting a lack of impartiality and for attempting to obtain a guilty plea from a defendant despite statements from the defendant indicating he wanted counsel.

Judge Mills filed an Answer to the Notice (Answer) on October 30, 2017, in which he denied engaging in misconduct as to either count.

On October 19, 2017, Judge Mills filed a letter demanding the dismissal of the Notice on the grounds that the entire commission, the commission's staff and the Director-Chief Counsel had conflicts of interest, were disqualified from undertaking an investigation of Judge Mills and filing charges, and were disqualified from future adjudication or involvement in these proceedings.[1] In a written order, dated November 13, 2017, the commission denied Judge Mills's demand for disqualification. On November 30, 2017, Judge Mills filed in the California Supreme Court a petition for writ of prohibition/mandate with request for stay of proceedings and disqualification of the commission and commission staff. On December 20, 2017, the Supreme Court denied the judge's petition for writ of mandate and application for stay of the proceedings.

[1] Judge Mills contended that disqualification was required because Joseph Sweeney was a public critic of the commission and was allegedly instrumental in convincing the California State Auditor to conduct an audit of the commission. The commission explained the reasons for denying the judge's demand in an eight-page public order issued November 13, 2017.

The Supreme Court appointed three special masters who held an evidentiary hearing and reported to the commission. The masters are Hon. Victoria G. Chaney, Associate Justice of the Court of Appeal, Second Appellate District, Division One; Hon. Jennifer R.S. Detjen, Associate Justice of the Court of Appeal, Fifth Appellate District; and Hon. Paul A. Bacigalupo, Judge of the Los Angeles County Superior Court. Judge Mills is represented by James A. Murphy, Esq., Janet L. Everson, Esq., and Joseph S. Leveroni, Esq., of Murphy, Pearson, Bradley & Feeney in San Francisco, California. The examiners for the commission are Mark A. Lizarraga, Esq., and Bradford Battson, Esq.

A two-day evidentiary hearing was held before the special masters commencing January 17, 2018. The masters' report to the commission, containing their findings of fact and conclusions of law, was filed on March 13, 2018. Oral argument before the commission was heard on July 11, 2018.

The masters found that the charges in the Notice were proven by clear and convincing evidence and concluded that Judge Mills engaged in three instances of willful misconduct, the most serious level of judicial misconduct. The masters also found, in aggravation, that Judge Mills gave evolving and inconsistent statements in response to the charges in the Sweeney matter. Upon careful review of the record in this matter, the commission has reached the same conclusions.

Given the seriousness of the misconduct, the judge's extensive history of discipline, his failure to appreciate the impropriety of his conduct, and his lack of candor as evidenced by his shifting explanations for his conduct, we conclude that there is a strong likelihood that Judge Mills will engage in subsequent misconduct if he were to serve in a judicial capacity in the future. In order to protect the public and maintain public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary, the commission has determined to censure and bar former Judge Bruce Clayton Mills from seeking or holding judicial office, or accepting a position or an assignment as judicial officer, subordinate judicial officer or judge pro tem with any court in the State of California, or accepting reference of work from any California state court, at any time in the future. This is the most severe level of discipline that may be imposed on a retired judge. (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18(d).)

II.

LEGAL STANDARDS

The examiner has the burden of proving the charges by clear and convincing evidence. (Broadman v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1998) 18 Cal.4th 1079, 1090 (Broadman).) "Evidence of a charge is clear and convincing so long as there is a 'high probability' that the charge is true. [Citations.]" (Ibid.) Factual findings of the masters are entitled to special weight because the masters have "the advantage of observing the demeanor of the witnesses." (Ibid; Inquiry Concerning Freedman (2007) 49 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 223, 232.) Legal conclusions of the masters are entitled to less deference because the commission has expertise with respect to the law of judicial misconduct. (See, e.g., Broadman, supra, 18 Cal.4th at p. 1090; Adams v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1995) 10 Cal.4th 866, 880 (Adams); Fletcher v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1998) 19 Cal.4th 865, 878 (Fletcher).)

A violation of the California Code of Judicial Ethics constitutes one of three levels of judicial misconduct: willful misconduct, prejudicial misconduct, or improper action. (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (d).) Willful misconduct is (1) unjudicial conduct that is (2) committed in bad faith (3) by a judge acting in his judicial capacity. Failure to comply with the canons of the judicial ethics is generally considered to constitute unjudicial conduct. (Adams v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1994) 8 Cal.4th 630, 662.)

A judge acts in bad faith by "(1) performing a judicial act for a corrupt purpose (which is any purpose other than the faithful discharge of judicial duties), or (2) performing a judicial act with knowledge that the act is beyond the judge's lawful judicial power, or (3) performing a judicial act that exceeds the judge's lawful power with a conscious disregard for the limits of the judge's authority." (Broadman, supra, 18 Cal.4th at pp. 1091-1092.)

The second most serious level of misconduct is prejudicial misconduct, "conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute." (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (d).) The least serious level of misconduct, improper action, occurs when the judge's conduct violates the canons, but the circumstances do not rise to the level of prejudicial misconduct and do not bring the judiciary into disrepute. (Inquiry Concerning Saucedo (2015) 62 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 1, 82; Inquiry Concerning Ross (2005) 49 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 79, 89 (Ross), citing Adams, supra, 10 Cal.4th at pp. 897-899.)

III.

FINDINGS OF FACT AND CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

A. COUNT ONE – EVILSIZOR V. SWEENEY

1. Findings of Fact

August 16 Order

On August 12, 2016, Judge Mills presided over a hearing on an order to show cause regarding contempt stemming from Joseph Sweeney's (Sweeney) violation of a protective order entered in divorce proceedings between Sweeney and Keri Evilsizor (Evilsizor). After the judge found Sweeney in contempt for violating the protective order, Evilsizor's attorney, Michelene Insalaco (Insalaco), requested that the maximum sentence be imposed. In response, Judge Mills told Insalaco "he's also going to get good time[] credits. You don't do criminal. But he's also going to get one day good time for each day that he serves, probably. . . . [¶] . . . [¶] So the reality is he'll only serve half of it to begin with." A discussion ensued about whether Sweeney was entitled to good time credits on a civil contempt sentence. The judge did not resolve the issue, but continued the matter for sentencing to August 16, because he thought Sweeney was entitled to a 72-hour stay before sentencing.

At the sentencing hearing on August 16, Judge Mills sentenced Sweeney to 25 days in jail, and remanded him to the custody of the sheriff's department.[2] During that hearing, Evilsizor's attorney argued that Sweeney was not entitled to good time credits, and asked the judge to make an explicit finding in this regard. Sweeney's attorney,

[2] At his appearance before the commission, Judge Mills urged the commission to read the transcript of the sentencing hearing. The transcript of the hearing was admitted at the hearing before the special masters and carefully reviewed by the commission.

James Morrison (Morrison), responded that denial of good time credits would be illegal. Following a discussion of other unrelated legal issues, Judge Mills stated he was in concurrence with the order drafted by Insalaco. The order prepared by Insalaco did not address good time credits. The written order the judge signed outlining the sentence was silent regarding good time credits. Judge Mills did not rule on the issue of whether Sweeney was entitled to good time credits.

Later the same day, the sheriff's department returned the sentencing order to Judge Mills's court, questioning whether the sentence included good time credits. After consulting with Judge Mills, his clerk, Lori Bogdan (Bogdan), handwrote on the order, "No good time credits to be given," and Judge Mills initialed the notation. Bogdan sent the form back to the jail, but did not serve it on the parties.

August 25 Order

On August 25, 2016, Sweeney's mother contacted Morrison concerned about the release date. Morrison then investigated and learned of the revised order when he received a copy from the jail. Morrison sent a letter to Judge Mills, copied to Insalaco, requesting that the judge correct the order and notify the sheriff. Insalaco sent a letter to the judge urging Judge Mills to leave the "no good time credits" order intact.

Upon receiving the parties' letters, Judge Mills consulted with his supervising judge, Judge John Kennedy. In his March 16, 2017 written response to the commission's preliminary investigation, Judge Mills stated that he and Judge Kennedy concurred that Sweeney was not entitled to good time credits on a civil contempt, but decided to avoid a "'constitutional crisis' and afford [Sweeney] the credits which he may not have actually been entitled to receive," because of "Sweeney's past litigation history of filing appeals, motions, as well as complaints against the Commission ... and others." On August 25, Judge Mills issued another order, this time granting Sweeney good time credits. For reasons discussed below, we adopt the masters' finding that Judge Mills issued the order because of Sweeney's past litigation history and complaints against the commission and others, rather than for any lawful purpose.

Findings on Disputed Facts and Credibility Determinations

The masters found that Judge Mills gave conflicting accounts and explanations concerning the foregoing events to suit his evolving defense to the charges. We concur. Although the judge did not testify at the hearing before the special masters, he personally verified his Answer to the charges and submitted numerous written statements through his attorney during the course of the commission's preliminary investigation and formal proceedings. Pursuant to Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance, rule 106, all statements made through counsel in a commission proceeding are deemed to be the statements of the judge.

The main issue of contention at the hearing before the special masters was whether Judge Mills's notation on the August 16 order denying good time credits, made after the sentencing hearing without notice to the parties, was an improper ex parte modification of his previous order, or a clarification of the order he had already made in the presence of the parties, which would not be improper. For the reasons discussed below, we find that Judge Mills modified, rather than clarified, his previous order, and that he knew he was modifying the order.

In his response to the preliminary investigation and in his Answer to the Notice, Judge Mills did not claim that he decided the issue of good time credits at the sentencing hearing. Rather, he stated that when he received the inquiry from the sheriff's department on August 16, he reviewed Penal Code section 4019 to determine whether Sweeney was entitled to good time credits and determined he was not.[3] If Judge Mills was merely clarifying an order he had made in court, there would be no need to research the law.

As noted by the masters, "[W]hen Judge Mills's objective was to curtail the Commission's supplemental investigation, he claimed that good time credits 'are usually available,' and that '[t]he sentencing minute order accompanying Mr. Sweeney to the jail is silent on the issue, as are all sentencing orders.'" The judge also stated in his written response to the preliminary investigation that it is up to the sheriff's department to determine the amount of credits allotted. If, as the judge explained, credits are usually available and the amount is determined by the sheriff's department, Judge Mills would have specified "no credits allowed" in the initial sentencing order if that had been his intent.

[3] In fact, Penal Code section 4019, subdivision (a), subsection (3) specifically states that good time credits are applicable to civil contempt.

By the time Judge Mills filed his prehearing briefs to the special masters, his explanation for amending the August 16 order had changed. There, he claimed that he was clarifying "'the order by specifically writing what the [sentencing] order already provided – no good time credits applied.'" Apparently realizing that this defense was inconsistent with his earlier statements that he researched the law to determine if Sweeney was entitled to good time credits after issuing his sentencing order, Judge Mills's attorney argued before the masters that the judge's memory of having researched the law was "erroneous."

The masters found that the judge did not make an order concerning good time credits when he imposed sentence on August 16. Rather, the masters found, the judge denied good time credits without notice to the parties later that day, after the sheriff's department questioned whether good time credits were to be given. We adopt this finding, which we conclude is supported by clear and convincing evidence.

The best evidence of whether Judge Mills ruled on the issue of credits at the August 16 sentencing hearing is the transcript of that proceeding. The transcript reflects that Evilsizor's attorney argued a number of legal issues regarding sentencing, including her contention that Sweeney was not entitled to good time credits, citing Penal Code section 1191.3. Judge Mills never responded to that particular issue or addressed good time credits at the August 16 hearing or in his sentencing order. He sentenced Sweeney to 25 days in custody without reference to good time credits.

At his appearance before the commission, Judge Mills suggested that he ruled Sweeney was not entitled to good time credits at the August 16 sentencing hearing when he stated that he was "in concurrence with the order as drafted by Ms. Insalaco." That order did not address good time credits. The judge's comment about concurring with the order followed a long discussion of other unrelated legal issues, which were expressly included in the order prepared by Insalaco. We find that the aforementioned comment cannot reasonably be interpreted to constitute an order that Sweeney was not entitled to good time credits.

The only on-the-record indication of whether Judge Mills intended to grant or deny good time credits is his statement in court on August 12 that Sweeney would be entitled to good time credits. That statement is inconsistent with his current position that his silence constituted a denial of good time credits.

Judge Mills objects to the masters' rejection of Bogdan's testimony that she recalled the judge making an order in court on August 16 denying good time credits. The masters made no general finding regarding Bogdan's credibility, but found that her memory that the judge issued a ruling on this issue was faulty and therefore not credible. We agree. Her testimony is not supported by the transcript of the proceeding, or the testimony of Morrison, Sweeney's attorney. Morrison recalled Judge Mills indicating on August 12 that Sweeney would get good time credits, but did not recall the judge saying anything about good time credits at the sentencing hearing on August 16.

Moreover, Bogdan's testimony on this issue was not definitive or consistent. She testified that she was "under the assumption" that they had discussed the issue of good time credits in court and that "no credits were to be given." Later, she testified that she recalled a discussion about whether Sweeney was entitled to good time credits but that she could not "tell you for sure which way it went."

The masters also concluded that the judge lacked candor in his shifting explanations about the circumstances of his August 25 order granting Sweeney good time credits. In his response to the preliminary investigation, Judge Mills claimed that when Sweeney's attorney objected to the handwritten order denying credits, he decided, in consultation with Judge Kennedy, to change the August 16 order and afford Sweeney good time credits because of Sweeney's litigation history and public complaints against the commission and to avoid a constitutional crisis, even though both judges were of the opinion that Sweeney was not entitled to good time credits in connection with a civil contempt. By the time Judge Mills filed his Answer to the Notice, his explanations had changed. He stated that he conferred with Judge Kennedy who "also opined that the application of the criminal statute to a civil contempt incarceration wasn't clear." In his prehearing brief to the special masters, Judge Mills shifted even more responsibility onto Judge Kennedy. He stated that he "conferred with Judge John Kennedy, [who] advised that if there was ambiguity with respect to the application of the criminal statute to a civil contempt incarceration, he ought to allow for the credit." (Italics added.) Judge Mills stated that he followed Judge Kennedy's advice in issuing a new minute order allowing for good time credits to be applied.

As did the masters, we find that the version of the conversation with Judge Kennedy Judge Mills gave the commission in his March 16, 2017 response to the preliminary investigation contains indicia of reliability and is supported by clear and convincing evidence. In the same response, Judge Mills stated that, after receiving an inquiry from the sheriff's department, he reviewed Penal Code section 4019 and concluded that Sweeney was not entitled to good time credits. This, of course, is inconsistent with his later statements that he decided to grant Sweeney good time credits because the law on the issue was not clear.

We share the masters' particular concern "with Judge Mills's attempt to justify his own misconduct by reference to his consultation with Judge Kennedy and Judge Kennedy's advice."

As did the masters, we find that that the judge's evolving explanations and defenses concerning the Sweeney matter portrayed a lack of candor and honesty.

2. Conclusions of Law

August 16 Order

The masters concluded that by changing the August 16 order to reflect "no good time credits," Judge Mills modified an earlier order based on an ex parte communication with the sheriff's department in violation of canon 3B(7) of the California Code of Judicial Ethics (all references to a canon are to the California Code of Judicial Ethics)

["A judge shall not initiate, permit, or consider ex parte communications, that is, any communication to or from the judge outside the presence of the parties concerning a pending or impending proceeding, and shall make reasonable efforts to avoid such communications ..."] We concur. Judge Mills's modification of the August 16, 2016 order, which he transmitted to the sheriff's department through Bogdan, is a communication from the judge outside the presence of the parties and concerning a pending proceeding. While there is an exception to the prohibition on ex parte communications for consulting with court personnel, the sheriff's department is not court personnel. (Canon 3B(7)(a) [court personnel does not include employees of other governmental entities].)

Judge Mills took action based on the communication from the sheriff's department without promptly notifying the parties and offering them an opportunity to respond. The masters concluded that Judge Mills's failure to set the matter for hearing upon determining that the credits issue remained undecided was an independent violation of canon 3B(7), which requires a judge to accord to every person who has a legal interest in the proceeding, or that person's lawyer, the full opportunity to be heard according to law. We concur.

Judge Mills contends that he did not violate canon 3B(7), because he was simply correcting the written order to reflect the order he made in court in the presence of the parties on August 16, 2016. As previously discussed, the masters made a factual finding that the judge did not previously make an order concerning good time credits in court in the presence of the parties, and we adopt that finding.

In addition to a violation of canon 3B(7), we conclude that the same conduct violated canons 1 [judge shall uphold the integrity and independence of the judiciary], 2 [judge shall avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety], 2A [judge shall respect and comply with the law and act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary], and 3B(8) [a judge shall dispose of all judicial matters fairly, promptly and efficiently and manage the courtroom in a manner that provides all litigants with the opportunity to have their matters fairly adjudicated in accordance with the law], as charged in the Notice. Issuing an order affecting a litigant's liberty interest without providing notice and an opportunity to be heard creates an appearance of impropriety, undermines public confidence in the integrity of the judiciary, and denies the litigant an opportunity to have his matter fairly adjudicated in accordance with the law.[4]

The masters concluded that Judge Mills's ex parte modification of the sentencing order constituted willful misconduct because he engaged in unjudicial conduct in a judicial capacity that exceeded his lawful power and that significantly impacted Sweeney's liberty interest and did so with at least a conscious disregard for the limits of his authority. (See Broadman, supra, 18 Cal.4th at p. 1092.) We reach the same conclusion.

Once Judge Mills signed the contempt and sentencing order, he had no authority to modify it. (Code Civ. Proc., § 1222; In re Baroldi (1987) 189 Cal.App.3d 101, 111, disapproved on other grounds in Boysaw v. Superior Court (2000) 23 Cal.4th 215, 221; County of Lake v. Superior Court (1977) 67 Cal.App.3d 815, 817-818.) Judge Mills was an experienced judge and ex-prosecutor. He has not suggested that he did not know that he could not modify an order; rather, he asserted that he was only clarifying the order. As previously discussed, we find that he knew he was modifying the order, an act that was beyond his judicial authority.

Further, Judge Mills consciously disregarded the limits of his authority by issuing an order involving a deprivation of liberty based on an ex parte communication and without providing the parties with an opportunity to be heard. (See Broadman, supra, 18 Cal.4th at p. 1092.) Judge Mills has been disciplined more than once in the past for engaging in improper ex parte communications.

Judge Mills contends that his conduct constitutes improper action, at most, since he erroneously accepted the law as presented by Attorney Insalaco in determining that [4] We do not find clear and convincing evidence that the judge violated canon 3B(5) [judge shall perform judicial duties without bias or prejudice] in count one or count two, as charged in the Notice.

---

Sweeney was not entitled to good time credits.[5] Judge Mills misses the point. It is not his interpretation of the law or his legal ruling that is at issue, it is the fact that he issued an ex parte modification of an order involving a deprivation of liberty without providing the parties an opportunity to be heard.

August 25 Order

The masters concluded that by again changing the sentencing order on August 25, 2016, to grant good time credits because of Sweeney's litigation history, and not because he believed Sweeney was legally entitled to the credits, Judge Mills violated canons 1 [judge shall uphold integrity and independence of the judiciary], 2 [judge shall avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety in all of the judge's activities], 2A [judge shall respect and comply with the law and shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary], 3B(2) [judge shall be faithful to the law and maintain professional competence in the law] and 3B(8) [judge shall dispose of all judicial matters fairly, promptly, and efficiently and manage the courtroom in a manner that provides all litigants the opportunity to have their matters fairly adjudicated in accordance with the law]. The masters stated: "Deciding an issue for reasons unconnected to the merits displays no compliance with the law, undermines the integrity and independence of the judiciary, and deprives litigants the opportunity to have their matters adjudicated in accordance with the law. Moreover, Judge Mills's attempt to deflect his decision to Judge Kennedy indicates a readiness to abdicate his own responsibility to adjudicate the matters that come before him." We concur.

---

[5] Judge Mills objects to the fact that the masters did not include Insalaco's testimony regarding Penal Code section 1191.3 in their findings of fact. Insalaco testified that section 1191.3, pertaining to the award of good time credits, applies to felonies, and was not applicable to Sweeney because he was sentenced on a civil contempt. In fact, that statute was not apposite to the issue before the masters. Section 1191.3 requires the court to make an oral statement at the time of sentencing in felony cases that statutory law permits the award of conduct and worktime credits. Penal Code section 4019 is the statute that governs when good time credits are available and that applies to Sweeney's sentence. (Pen. Code, § 4019(a)(3) [good time credits apply to persons confined to jail for "contempt pursuant to a proceeding other than a criminal action or proceeding"].)

The masters determined that Judge Mills engaged in willful misconduct by issuing the August 25, 2016 order even though he believed it was not a lawful order and thus was beyond his lawful judicial power. (See Broadman, supra, 18 Cal.4th at p. 1092.) We concur.

Judge Mills contends that he made the August 25, 2016 order because of the complexity of the law, and therefore, his conduct was, at most, improper action. Judge Mills ignores that he informed the commission of his reason for issuing the August 25 order in his response to the preliminary investigation, and his stated reason was not based on a legal analysis. He admitted that he concluded Sweeney was not entitled to good time credits, but decided to grant the credits because of Sweeney's litigation history and to avoid a constitutional challenge. This is the explanation the masters found to be true and that finding is supported by clear and convincing evidence. As discussed by the masters, the problem with the judge's August 25 ruling was not that it was legally erroneous, but that the judge decided "an issue for reasons unconnected to the merits . . . ." A judge who issues an order for a purpose other than the lawful discharge of judicial duties engages in willful misconduct. (Broadman, supra, 18 Cal.4th at p. 1092.)

For these reasons, we adopt the legal conclusions of the masters with regard to the August 25, 2016 order.

B. COUNT TWO – PEOPLE V. JEFFERS

1. Findings of Fact

Judge Mills presided over a driving under the influence jury trial (DUI) in People v. Jeffers. At trial, the defense presented an expert witness who challenged the accuracy of the breath machine. On March 23, 2016, as the jury was deliberating and Deputy District Attorney (DDA) William Moser (Moser) was gathering his papers to leave the courtroom, Judge Mills engaged in a conversation with Moser outside the presence of the defendant and defense counsel.

Judge Mills asked Moser, in the context of the Jeffers trial, "[D]o you want to know what I would have done?" and talked to him about an argument that might have "defeat[ed] the defense theory," or words to that effect. Judge Mills then offered Moser advice about how he could have countered the expert presented by the defense.

The jury in Jeffers deadlocked, resulting in a mistrial.

The next day, Moser reported the conversation to his supervisor, Nancy Georgiou, who reported the conversation to Jeffers's defense attorney and to Judge Kennedy, supervising judge of criminal courts. Judge Kennedy explained that he understood "from Ms. Georgiou's description of the conversation it did include suggestions of things that Mr. Moser could have done to be more effective in his performance, such as eliciting particular evidence and so forth."

On March 29, 2016, Presiding Judge Steven Austin learned of the conversation and met with Judge Mills. Judge Austin told the Judge Mills that the matter was "potentially serious," and that he (Judge Austin) might have to report it the commission.

On April 1, 2016, Judge Mills disclosed the conversation on the record before both parties, and recused himself from any further involvement in the case.

As Judge Austin was seeking an ethics opinion on his obligation to report the matter to the commission, Judge Mills self-reported to the commission.

Judge Mills's position at the hearing before the special masters was that he was simply sharing a "war story." The masters rejected this defense and instead found that the judge offered Moser advice about how he should have handled a specific part of the case, while the case was still pending.

Moser testified he did not recall exactly what advice the judge gave him, but thought the judge was giving him a suggestion on what he could do in trying this type of case in the future. In reliance on this testimony, Judge Mills maintains there is no clear and convincing evidence that he offered Moser advice about how he would have handled the case. But, while Moser did not recollect many details of the conversation or the exact words used, he was certain that Judge Mills was inquiring whether Moser wanted to know what he would have done if he were the prosecutor in the case. This is corroborated by the fact that Moser felt the need to report the conversation to his supervisor.[6]

Regardless of Moser's lack of recollection as to the specific advice he was given, Judge Mills's own disclosure statement in court supports the masters' finding that the judge offered Moser advice about how he could have responded to the defense expert. Judge Mills reported the conversation as follows:

> "After the jury went out, and here is the disclosure I want to make, Mr. Moser remained in court, as [sic] I am prone to do, I often work in court through inbox matters and whatnot . . . while I am awaiting the jury decision. I never ever discussed anything with Mr. Moser in chambers. Everything was out in open court. We discussed a number of matters, including innocuous things, such as where did he go to school, and what did he do before he came to the DA's office, and those types of things.
>
> "At one point – and this is where it may become an issue. I made the observation in relation to the expert witness that was presented by Mr. Smith [defense counsel] . . . [¶] . . . [¶] . . .that 29 years ago, when I last tried a DUI case that there had been an expert at the Contra Costa Crime Lab . . . named Grady Goldman, who actually tracked the accuracy of the breath machine.
>
> "And what I disclosed to Mr. Moser was that Mr. Goldman over a protracted period of time actually monitored the limited numbers of cases where there was actually a breath sample and a blood sample taken in the same case, and what I advised him was that they were able to have a known blood result in a small number of cases because sometimes you get a breath sample taken and they take a reference blood sample, and that they monitored in those limited number of cases where the breath machine measured at or below the actual blood sample so that they can tell in the real world,

---

[6] The masters found Moser's testimony credible. We adopt this finding in deference to the masters' ability to observe the demeanor of the witness, and because Moser's testimony is corroborated by the fact that he reported the conversation to his supervisor the day after it happened.

> back in the day, whether or not the machines were actually testing properly. [¶] . . . [¶]
>
> "And I said, 'But if there really is a problem with these machines that the defense expert suggests, then in the future someone may have to look at that because if the theory is that – because our machines here in our county don't have a temperature regulator, and that causes inaccurately high results of some type being registered, then somebody may[]be ought to take a look at that issue.' [¶] . . . [¶]
>
> "But in terms of what went on 29 years ago, and the fact that that used to be tracked – and frankly, if you had that data, Mr. Smith, it could potentially counter the defense that you presented in this case, but that data, to my knowledge, hasn't been monitored in 29 years, and it is not available." (Italics added.)

Based on our own independent review of the record, we adopt the masters' finding that Judge Mills's conversation with Moser was related to issues raised during the Jeffers trial, and that he offered Moser advice about how to handle a specific part of the case.

2. Conclusions of Law

The masters concluded that Judge Mills's conversation with Moser outside the presence of defense counsel constituted an improper ex parte communication in violation of canon 3B(7), and willful misconduct. As did the masters, we conclude that "Judge Mills's April 1, 2016 on-the-record disclosure version of the conversation alone" establishes a violation of canon 3B(7). That canon prohibits a judge from initiating, permitting, or considering ex parte communications, "that is, any communications to or from the judge outside the presence of the parties concerning a pending or impending proceeding." The jury was deliberating in Jeffers when Judge Mills engaged in an ex parte communication with Moser. Further, a case remains pending through any period during which an appeal may be filed. (Cal. Code of Judicial Ethics, Terminology.) By his own admission, Judge Mills described to Moser, "in relation to the expert witness that was presented by" the defense in Jeffers, how when he last tried a DUI case 29 years ago there was an expert witness who tracked the accuracy of a breath machine by looking at the cases in which both breath and blood samples had been taken to determine if the results matched. A reasonable person would interpret these comments as suggesting that the prosecution use an expert to track the accuracy of the Draeger machine (used in the Jeffers case) in the same manner.

Offering advice to an attorney in a case before the judge outside the presence of opposing counsel and while the matter is pending constitutes an improper ex parte communication. (Public Admonishment of Judge Stuart Scott (2016); see Rothman et al., Cal. Judicial Conduct Handbook (4th ed. 2017) § 2.24, pp. 90-93; Cal. Judges Assn., Judicial Ethics Update (2000) p. 2 ["If a judge is asked by trial attorney to critique attorney's performance after trial, judge may do so only after the matter is finally resolved so as to avoid any appearance of impropriety"].)

Judge Mills contends that he was simply sharing a "war story" that had no relation to the Jeffers case. There is no "war story" exception to the prohibition against ex parte communications. Further, Judge Mills admitted in his April 1, 2016 disclosure that he made his "observation in relation to the expert witness that was presented by [Jeffers's defense attorney] . . . ."

In addition to violating the prohibition against ex parte communication, we conclude that Judge Mills's conduct created an appearance of impropriety and undermined public confidence in the integrity of the judiciary in violations of canons 1, 2, and 2A.

The masters concluded that Judge Mills committed willful misconduct by engaging in an ex parte communication with a prosecutor and giving him advice while the case was still pending. We concur. His conduct took place in his judicial capacity and was "unjudicial," the first two elements of willful misconduct. Judge Mills acted in bad faith, the third element of willful misconduct, by engaging in the conversation with a conscious disregard for the rules prohibiting ex parte communications and for a purpose other than the faithful discharge of judicial duties. (See Broadman, supra, 18 Cal.4th at pp. 1091-1092.) As stated by the masters:

> "Judge Mills has been disciplined in the past for ex parte communication. (Ex. 24.) The leading treatise on California judicial ethics repeatedly refers to Judge Mills's earlier public admonishment in its discussion of improper ex parte communications. (See, e.g., Rothman et al., Cal. Judicial Conduct Handbook, supra, § 5.3, pp. 264, fn. 62, 265, fn. 65.) Judge Mills should have been well versed about ex parte communications. If he was not, we can only conclude it is because he chose not to be, and we conclude that is conscious disregard for the limits of his authority."

We reach the same conclusion.

IV.

APPROPRIATE LEVEL OF DISCIPLINE

The commission has identified various factors that are relevant in determining the appropriate level of discipline, including (1) the number of acts of misconduct, (2) the existence of prior discipline, (3) whether the judge appreciates the inappropriateness of his or her conduct, (4) the judge's integrity, (5) the likelihood of future misconduct, and (6) the impact on the judicial system. (Ross, supra, 49 Cal.4th CJP Supp. at pp. 137–138; Inquiry Concerning Van Voorhis (2003) 48 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 257, 295; see also Policy Declarations of Com. on Jud. Performance, policy 7.1[7] [nonexclusive factors relevant to sanctions].)

In this matter, Judge Mills has engaged in three acts of willful misconduct. (Policy declaration 7.1(1)(a) [number of acts of misconduct], (1)(b) [nature and seriousness of misconduct].) The Supreme Court has stated: "'The number of wrongful acts is relevant to determining whether they were merely isolated occurrences or, instead, part of a course of conduct establishing "lack of temperament and ability to perform judicial functions in an even-handed manner." [Citation.]'" (Fletcher, supra, 19 Cal.4th at p. 918, quoting Wenger v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1981) 29 Cal.3d 615, 653.) Especially when viewed in conjunction with Judge Mills's prior discipline, the misconduct reflects an inability or unwillingness to perform judicial functions in an even-handed manner that comports with the rigorous standards of conduct expected of the judiciary.

[7] Hereafter, Policy Declarations of the Commission on Judicial Performance are referred to simply as policy declaration.

Judge Mills has been previously disciplined five times over the course of his 23-year judicial career. (Policy declaration 7.1(2)(e) [history of prior discipline].) Between 2001 and 2013, he received two public admonishments, one private admonishment, and two advisory letters. (See ante at pp. 1-2.) Particularly troubling is the similarity between some of his prior misconduct and the misconduct in this matter. He was publicly admonished in both 2006 and 2013 for engaging in improper ex parte communications, and yet, again engaged in improper ex parte communications in both the Sweeney and Jeffers matters. In his 2006 public admonishment, Judge Mills was disciplined for multiple incidents of misconduct, including ex parte communications. He spoke privately with a represented defendant about the no contest plea she had just entered and the possibility of diversion; discussed the case with defense counsel and then the probation officer and set aside the plea and granted diversion in the absence of any prosecutor; and he spoke to a supervising attorney from the district attorney's office about the case in the absence of defense counsel.

In 2013, he was again publicly admonished for engaging in out-of-courtroom communications about his son's infraction case with a court clerk and the pro tem judge handling the case. In an in-chambers meeting, he convinced the pro tem judge to give his son credit for time served in an out-of-state residential rehabilitation program in lieu of previously ordered volunteer work.

Further, his conduct in Jeffers bears similarity with other conduct resulting in his 2006 public admonishment. In multiple cases included in the 2006 public admonishment, Judge Mills crossed the line from a neutral judicial officer to an advocate. In one matter, he assumed the role of a prosecutor by criticizing the DDA in strong and disparaging language for charging the defendants with a misdemeanor and instructed the DDA to "go back to the drawing board, have this reviewed by somebody that can intelligently assess what ought to have been charged, and I would think that it would be more likely than not that an amended pleading would come down the pike, charging, among other things, a violation of Section 182 of the California Penal Code, felony criminal conspiracy, between the two charged co-defendants." In another matter, he accused the deputy public defender of malpractice and incompetence because the defendant would not accept a plea bargain. The same public defender was accused of malpractice in another matter for filing a peremptory challenge against Judge Mills. In the Jeffers case, Judge Mills similarly blurred the boundaries between judge and advocate by counseling the prosecutor on how to try a DUI case.

Another important factor in our determination is the judge's lack of candor in these proceedings. (Policy declaration 7.1(2)(b) [whether the judge has cooperated fully and honestly in the commission proceedings].) As a factor in aggravation, the masters concluded that "Judge Mills's candor and honesty is placed in direct question" by his shifting explanations for his conduct in the Sweeney matter to suit his evolving defenses. (See ante, pp. 7-10, for discussion of conflicting defenses.) We concur.

While Judge Mills did not testify at the hearing before the special masters, he submitted numerous written communications to the commission and a personally verified Answer to the charges in the Notice. There were multiple inconsistencies and misrepresentations in these submissions and statements. Honesty is a "minimum qualification" that is expected of every judge. (Kloepfer v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1989) 49 Cal.3d 826, 865.) Written communications of counsel are deemed to be the written communications of the judge. (Rules of Com. on Jud. Performance, rule 106.) As such, a judge must take care to ensure that written submissions during commission proceedings are accurate and truthful, even when submitted through counsel.

Judge Mills's shifting defenses not only portray a lack of candor, they also reflect a failure to accept responsibility and acknowledge the impropriety of his conduct. (Policy declaration 7.1(2)(a) [whether the judge acknowledged the acts occurred and has shown an appreciation for the impropriety of his acts].) As emphasized by the masters, with his lengthy years of judicial experience and history of discipline, Judge Mills should recognize that he engaged in improper ex parte communications. (Policy declaration 7.1(2)(d) [length of service in judicial capacity].) Nonetheless, he continues to deny that any of his conduct was improper. Moreover, as were the masters, we are troubled by Judge Mills's attempt to justify his own misconduct by reference to the advice he received from Judge Kennedy.

"A judge's failure to appreciate or admit to the impropriety of his or her acts indicates a lack of capacity to reform." (Inquiry Concerning Platt (2002) 48 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 227, 248; see Policy declaration 7.1(2)(a).) Judge Mills's failure to appreciate or acknowledge the impropriety of his conduct, his willingness to give disingenuous explanations and shift blame to a judicial colleague, and his lengthy history of discipline suggest a high probability that he would reoffend if he were to serve in a judicial capacity in the future.

Judge Mills's misconduct had a negative impact on others and undermined public respect for the judiciary. (Policy declaration 7.1(1)(f), (h) [whether the conduct is injurious to others or undermines respect for the integrity of the judiciary or administration of justice].) Although Sweeney ultimately received the good time credits to which he was entitled, the judge's changing and conflicting orders required his lawyer to expeditiously file papers to prevent the unlawful denial of conduct credit and most likely caused stress to Sweeney. In Jeffers, Judge Mills's initiation of an ex parte communication put DDA Moser in the uncomfortable position of having to report the communication to his superiors who in turn had to report the conduct to Judge Mills's superiors. Additionally, when a judge who has been disciplined five times by the commission engages in subsequent misconduct, public confidence in the integrity of the judiciary and the administration of justice is undermined.

The masters found no mitigating factors. Judge Mills urges the commission to consider his dedication and service to the Contra Costa community over the past three decades in "determining whether or not to impose discipline." Judge Mills, however, presented no evidence of his asserted service to the community.

Judge Mills retired during the pendency of these proceedings. Article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution provides that the commission may "censure a judge or former judge ... for action ... that constitutes willful misconduct in office, ... or conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute . . . ." The commission may also bar a former judge who has been censured from receiving an assignment, appointment, or reference of work from any California state court. (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18(d).)

As stated by the Supreme Court, the purpose of judicial discipline "'is not punishment, but rather the protection of the public, the enforcement of rigorous standards of judicial conduct, and the maintenance of public confidence in the integrity and independence of the judicial system.'" (Broadman, supra, 18 Cal.4th at pp. 1111-1112, quoting Adams, supra, 10 Cal.4th at p. 912.) For the reasons discussed above, the commission concludes that these purposes are best served by the imposition of a public censure and bar.

ORDER

Good cause appearing, the commission hereby censures former Judge Bruce Clayton Mills and bars him from seeking or holding judicial office, or accepting a position or an assignment as judicial officer, subordinate judicial officer or judge pro tem with any court in the State of California, or accepting reference of work from any California state court, at any time in the future.

Commission members Nanci E. Nishimura, Esq.; Hon. Michael B. Harper; Ms. Mary Lou Aranguren; Anthony P. Capozzi, Esq.; Hon. William S. Dato; Mr. Eduardo De La Riva; Ms. Sarah Kruer Jager; Ms. Pattyl A. Kasparian; Dr. Michael A. Moodian; Mr. Adam N. Torres; and Hon. Erica R. Yew voted to issue this decision and order imposing a public censure and bar.

Dated: August 28, 2018

Nanci E. Nishimura
Chairperson

STATE OF CALIFORNIA

BEFORE THE COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

| | |
|---|---|
| IN THE MATTER CONCERNING JUDGE ARIADNE J. SYMONS | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING SEVERE PUBLIC CENSURE PURSUANT TO STIPULATION (Commission Rule 116.5) |

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge Ariadne J. Symons, a judge of the Santa Cruz County Superior Court. Judge Symons and her counsel, Kathleen M. Ewins of Long & Levit LLP, have entered into a stipulation with Gregory Dresser, Director-Chief Counsel of the Commission on Judicial Performance, pursuant to commission rule 116.5, to resolve the pending preliminary investigation involving Judge Symons by imposition of a severe public censure. The Stipulation for Discipline by Consent (Stipulation) was approved by the commission on May 8, 2019, pursuant to the following terms and conditions and stipulated facts and legal conclusions.

TERMS AND CONDITIONS

1. This agreement resolves the matters alleged in the commission's pending preliminary investigation involving Judge Symons.

2. The commission shall issue a severe public censure based on the agreed Stipulated Facts and Legal Conclusions set forth therein.

3. If the commission accepts this proposed disposition, the commission's decision and order imposing severe public censure may articulate the reasons for its decision and include explanatory language that the commission deems appropriate.

4. Upon acceptance by the commission, this stipulation and the commission's decision and order shall be made public.

5. Judge Symons waives any further proceedings and review in this matter, including formal proceedings (rules 118, et seq.), and review by the Supreme Court (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 9.60).

STIPULATED FACTS AND LEGAL CONCLUSIONS

Judge Ariadne J. Symons became a judge of the Santa Cruz County Superior Court in 2009, following election to that office. Her current term began in January 2015.

1. The red light ticket

On Tuesday, May 10, 2016, at 7:56 a.m., Judge Symons drove her 2007 Pontiac through a red light in violation of Vehicle Code section 21453(a). The violation was captured by a camera maintained by the City of Capitola Police Department. Judge Symons noticed a flash when she drove through the intersection and understood that she had triggered a red light camera. When Judge Symons arrived at the courthouse that morning, she told her colleague, Judge Jeffrey Almquist, that she had committed a red light violation that had been captured on camera. Judge Symons also told other people at court about the incident, and that she felt like a "scofflaw."

About a month later, a Notice of Violation (Notice) concerning the incident was sent to the judge's residence addressed to her husband. The Notice identified the registered owner of the vehicle as Judge Symons's husband, whose last name is different from Judge Symons's, "or Symoms [sic] Ariadne J." The Notice included color photos of the driver, the vehicle, and the license plate, and identified a website where the photos and a video of the incident could be viewed (www.violationinfo.com). The Notice did not set forth a bail amount.

The Notice included specific language on what to do if the recipient was not the driver:

> IF YOU WERE NOT THE DRIVER: If you were not the driver of the vehicle at the time of the violation, complete the "Affidavit of Non-Liability" below. By completing the Affidavit of Non-Liability, the citation issued to you will be cancelled after review and the approval of the court. The person named in the form will be cited and notified by mail.

The Affidavit of Non-Liability contained in the Notice included the following language:

> IF YOU DO NOT OWN OR WERE NOT DRIVING THE VEHICLE AT THE TIME OF THE VIOLATION, PLEASE COMPLETE THIS FORM WITH THE INFORMATION OF THE ACTUAL DRIVER.

(Emphasis in original.)

Judge Symons subsequently approached a court clerk in the staff-only area of the Watsonville Courthouse, of the Santa Cruz County Superior Court, concerning the Notice. The judge asked for assistance in determining the bail amount for the violation. The clerk looked into the matter and told the judge that the citation had not yet been processed in the system, and to check back later.

On or about June 24, 2016, the Santa Cruz County Superior Court sent Judge Symons's husband a "courtesy notice," which stated that he had been cited for violating Vehicle Code section 21453(a) on May 10, 2016, and that the amount due was $489.

Judge Symons and her husband discussed their options on how to handle the Notice. The judge's husband refused to provide information that the judge was the actual driver. The judge's husband prepared a Request for Trial by Written Declaration, which included a Statement of Facts wherein he denied responsibility for the citation, but did not identify the driver of the vehicle when the violation occurred. The Statement of Facts stated in full:

> I work at the Pebble Beach golf course in Pebble Beach (located next to Carmel). It is usually an hour drive from my home to work, each way. On May 10, 2016, I arrived at work at 6:17 a.m. My first break was at 10:50 a.m. The ticket was issued for a violation occurring at 7:59:09 a.m. in Capitola. I was not driving in the car ticketed at the time. There is no possibility I could have been in both places at the same time. [¶] The car is a family car and a number of people, family and friends, drive it. I looked at the photo attached to the citation. It is rather unflattering and unclear. It could perhaps be any slightly pudgy white guy, but it is not me. [¶] I am attaching a copy of my time card slips that document that I was in fact at work at the times stated.

The judge and her husband were unable to print out the completed Request for Trial by Written Declaration form at home. As a result, the next day, the judge either printed it, or re-typed and printed it, from her computer at the courthouse. The judge admits that she reviewed the document, including the Statement of Facts, before it was submitted for filing.

On July 14, 2016, the judge again approached the court clerk in the staff-only area of the courthouse and handed her the completed Request for Trial by Written Declaration form, signed by her husband under penalty of perjury, and a check for $489. The judge told the clerk that Commissioner Kim Baskett, who handled traffic matters, did not know her husband's last name, so there was no conflict. The clerk told the judge that a Waiver of Arraignment form was missing, and, using a court computer, showed her how to obtain the form online. The judge said her husband would need to sign the waiver form and that she would bring the signed form to the clerk the next day, which she did. The clerk then sent the Request for Trial by Written Declaration and the Waiver of Arraignment forms to the Santa Cruz Courthouse, where Commissioner Baskett sat, by interoffice mail. Judge Symons did not inform the presiding judge, or the court executive officer, of either the citation or the Request for Trial by Written Declaration filed on behalf of her husband.

When Commissioner Baskett received the Request for Trial by Written Declaration, she noted that it concerned the husband of a judicial officer. Commissioner Baskett reported the matter to then-Presiding Judge Denine Guy, who commenced an investigation.

On July 20, 2016, the Capitola Police Department served by mail a Notice of Correction dismissing the citation "in the interest of justice."

On July 20 and 21, 2016, Judge Symons met with Judge Guy about the citation. Judge Symons admitted that she had run the red light. Judge Symons told Judge Guy that her husband was refusing to complete the Affidavit of Non-Liability because he believed he had a right to a trial without implicating her. Judge Guy told Judge Symons that she needed to accept responsibility for the ticket by contacting the court and the citation-processing company.

Judge Symons sent letters to the court and the Capitola Police Department advising that she was the person responsible for the citation, not her husband. A new citation was never issued to Judge Symons.

On or about August 23, 2016, the County of Santa Cruz sent Judge Symons's husband a check for $489, as refund of bail. He negotiated the check.

Judge Symons knowingly assisted her husband in filing the Request for Trial by Written Declaration with the court, which was designed to have the citation dismissed and which did not identify the judge as the actual driver. Prior to filing the document, the judge took no steps to notify the Capitola Police Department or the citation-processing company that she was the person responsible for the citation, despite language on the citation itself that set forth a procedure for identifying the responsible party. The judge also failed to notify the court that her husband had a matter pending before it that involved her. Additionally, the judge misused the prestige of her office by seeking information and assistance concerning the citation from a court clerk in the non-public areas of the courthouse, including giving the clerk the Request for Trial by Written Declaration for filing rather than filing the document herself at the filing window.

Judge Symons's conduct violated the Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 1 (a judge shall uphold the integrity and independence of the judiciary), 2 (a judge shall avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety), 2A (a judge shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary), 2B(1) (a judge shall not allow family, social, or other relationships to influence the judge's judicial conduct), and 2B(2) (a judge shall not lend the prestige of judicial office to advance the pecuniary or personal interests of the judge or others). The judge's conduct constitutes, at a minimum, prejudicial misconduct.

2. People v. Karl Peterson. No. 18CR00369

From April 30, 2018 through May 3, 2018, Judge Symons presided over the jury trial of People v. Karl Peterson, No. 18CR00369. The defendant was charged with felony violations of a protective order and special allegations concerning prior convictions. The defendant was in custody and represented by public defender Micha Rinkus. The People were represented by Deputy District Attorney Xavier Mitchell.

On May 2, 2018, at 3:20 p.m., following closing arguments, the jury retired to the jury room to begin deliberations. At 3:40 p.m., while Ms. Rinkus and Mr. Mitchell were still in the courtroom, the bailiff in charge of the jury, Deputy Travis Rakes, returned from the jury room with written questions from the jury. (The questions are contained in the court file as court exhibits nos. 1 and 2.) Judge Symons discussed the questions with the attorneys in the courtroom, and, in their presence, prepared written responses to the questions on court forms maintained for that purpose. A separate form was used for each question. On each form, the judge handwrote the question and the court's response, and signed her name. The written responses were then given to Deputy Rakes, who took them to the jury room. (The responses are contained in the court file as court exhibits nos. 3, 4, and 5.) The process of responding to these questions took 20 minutes or less.

Later that afternoon, after Ms. Rinkus and Mr. Mitchell had left the courtroom, another written question from the jury was brought to the courtroom by Deputy Rakes. The question concerned the definition of the term "violence." Thereafter, at 4:20 p.m., the courtroom clerk, Georgina Robles, placed a call to Ms. Rinkus's cell phone. Ms. Rinkus did not answer and Ms. Robles left a voice message stating that the jury had a question, and asking that Ms. Rinkus come to court or call back. At 4:21 p.m., Ms. Robles placed a call to Mr. Mitchell's cell phone. Mr. Mitchell answered the call and Ms. Robles informed him that the jury had a question. During the call, Judge Symons got on the line and spoke with Mr. Mitchell about the jury's question. The judge told Mr. Mitchell that the jury had a question regarding the legal definition of violence, and that her inclination was to respond by referring them to the jury instructions and advising them that if the instructions did not contain a specific definition, they were to give the term its ordinary, everyday meaning. Mr. Mitchell responded, "O.K., sounds good." Mr. Mitchell was not asked to return to the courtroom. Judge Symons subsequently prepared a written response to the jury's question that directed the jury to refer to their previous instructions. The written response was transmitted to the jury that afternoon by Deputy Rakes. Judge Symons took no steps to notify Ms. Rinkus of her telephone conversation with Mr. Mitchell, or of her written response to the jury's question.

At 4:40 p.m., Ms. Robles contacted both Ms. Rinkus and Mr. Mitchell by phone, and advised them that the jury was being excused for the day.

On May 3, 2018, at 2:45 p.m., the jury returned with a verdict finding the defendant guilty on all charges. After the jury was excused, some of the jurors discussed the case with the attorneys and raised the jury's question concerning the definition of violence and the court's response. Ms. Rinkus and Mr. Mitchell immediately went to see Judge Symons in chambers. Ms. Rinkus told the judge that it had just come to her attention that a question from the jury had been asked, and answered, without her knowledge. The judge told Ms. Rinkus that there was nothing she could do at that point, and that Ms. Rinkus's recourse was to file a motion for new trial.

On July 10, 2018, Ms. Rinkus filed a motion for new trial on behalf of the defendant. The motion alleged that the defendant's due process rights had been violated by the court answering the jury's question about the definition of violence while defense counsel was not present.

On or about August 14, 2018, Judge Symons called Ms. Rinkus and Mr. Mitchell to the bench for a sidebar conference. The judge told the attorneys the motion for new trial raised issues that she assumed each side recognized may possibly have merit, and that in such circumstances the parties frequently explore whether a negotiated resolution was possible. The judge proposed, as a potential compromise, that she give the defendant a suspended prison sentence, conditioned on successful completion of two years in the Delancey Street drug program, in exchange for a waiver of appellate rights and withdrawal of the motion for new trial.

On August 31, 2018, the case was on calendar for sentencing and the motion for new trial. Prior to the hearing, Mr. Mitchell informed Ms. Rinkus of a new offer; a four-year suspended prison sentence, conditioned on successful completion of two years in the Delancey Street drug program. (Prior to trial, the offer was four years state prison.) The defendant accepted the offer and was sentenced accordingly that day.

Judge Symons's telephone conversation with Mr. Mitchell on May 2, 2018, and her written response to the jury's question constituted improper ex parte communications as they both occurred outside the presence of the defendant and Ms. Rinkus, and without their knowledge.

Judge Symons's conduct violated the Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 1, 2, 2A, 3B(5) (a judge shall not engage in speech, gestures, or other conduct that would reasonably be perceived as bias or prejudice), 3B(7) (a judge shall not initiate, permit, or consider ex parte communications, that is, any communications to or from the judge outside the presence of the parties concerning a pending or impending proceeding, and shall make reasonable efforts to avoid such communications), and 3B(8) (a judge shall dispose of all judicial matters fairly, promptly, and efficiently, and shall manage the courtroom in a manner that provides all litigants the opportunity to have their matters fairly adjudicated in accordance with the law). The judge's conduct constitutes prejudicial misconduct.

3. Hernandez v. Lopez, No. 16FL01113

On August 28, 2016, Judge Symons presided over the matter of Jeannette Hernandez v. Jesus Lopez, No. 16FL01113. Ms. Hernandez had filed a request for a domestic violence restraining order against Mr. Lopez, who was the father of their three children. Ms. Hernandez alleged that Mr. Lopez would drink alcohol before visiting the children and engage in behavior that scared them. Mr. Lopez admitted that was true. During the hearing, Judge Symons ordered Mr. Lopez not to consume alcohol before visiting the children or while visiting them. The judge told Mr. Lopez, "You can't down a couple of 40s before you go pick them up before a visit because that's not good. Do you understand?" Mr. Lopez responded, "I don't drink 40s."

Judge Symons's conduct violated the Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 2 (a judge shall avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety), 2A (a judge shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary), and 3B(4) (a judge shall be patient, dignified, and courteous to those with whom the judge deals in an official capacity). The judge's conduct constitutes improper action.

4. Kinda v. Carpenter, No. CV171252

In May 2013, Judge Symons presided over the civil jury trial of Margaret Kinda v. Scott Carpenter, No. CV171252, which involved a dispute between the owners of a rug cleaning business, Margaret Kinda and Aaron Kinda, and their landlord, Mr. Carpenter.

On May 21, 2013, while Margaret Kinda was testifying during the plaintiffs' case, Judge Symons questioned her about a matter in a manner that reflected disbelief in her testimony. The transcript reflects the following colloquy.

> THE COURT: All right. Now, Ms. Kinda, I have some questions. [¶] You made a reference to Exhibit Number 53, a notice of preservation of evidence.
>
> THE WITNESS [MS. KINDA]: I know what you're talking about. I'm flipping to it right now.
>
> THE COURT: All right. This is from the Baskin and Grant law firm, it's dated June 20th, and it puts you on notice to preserve documents and evidence which may be important or relevant to the litigation; right?
>
> THE WITNESS: Yes, among other things.
>
> THE COURT: This is absolutely standard in every single civil case that's filed, is it not?
>
> THE WITNESS: I can't answer that.
>
> THE COURT: You're an attorney, Ms. Kinda.
>
> THE WITNESS: I am.
>
> THE COURT: Come on.
>
> THE WITNESS: I have never done a civil case in my life.

> THE COURT: And you have absolutely no knowledge about this?
>
> THE WITNESS: I had no knowledge of what this was. They don't do this in divorce law. But the – my point was –

(R.T. 147:14-148:12, bold added.)

Plaintiffs rested their case on May 21, 2013.

On May 22, 2013, Mr. Carpenter was called as the first defense witness. At the conclusion of Mr. Carpenter's examination by counsel, Judge Symons allowed questions to be asked that the jurors had previously submitted in writing, and that the judge had reviewed and discussed with counsel. Before the jurors' questions were asked by counsel, the judge stated, and commented on, one of the questions, as follows:

> THE COURT: Ladies and gentlemen, there are a number of questions from our jurors. And [Counsel] will ask them on your behalf of Mr. Carpenter. [¶] I will share with you one question. "I'm unsure what the judgment award will or might be." That is a question indeed. We'll just have to keep listening carefully to the evidence to see if it's ever answered.

Judge Symons's comments created the appearance that the judge was conveying to the jury that she had not seen any evidence to support a damages award in plaintiffs' favor.

On December 10, 2013, Judge Symons presided over a hearing on Mr. Carpenter's post-trial motions for attorney fees and costs. Mr. Carpenter was represented by counsel at the hearing; Ms. Kinda appeared in pro per. During the hearing, the judge provided a lengthy explanation for why she found Mr. Carpenter to be the "prevailing party" in the case. In connection with her explanation, the judge read into the record some responses the jurors had given to a questionnaire sent to them by the court after the trial concluded. The responses the judge read focused on how the jurors viewed the case. Immediately after reading the last juror response, the judge made the following remark:

> So the Court has rarely received such strongly worded negative reactions, not merely to the case, but to the fact that the case was allowed to proceed at all; and I think the > information's valuable. I cannot avoid the observation that the party who represents himself has a fool for a client. That is a well-known quote. It's too bad that someone did not perform the older and more gracious function, not simply of attorney, but counselor at law. Counselors at law used to advise people not to go to court, to let the matter go and resolve it outside of court. And that might have been a kindness in this situation.

(R.T. 34:16-35:2, bold added.)

The judge's statement, "the party who represents himself has a fool for a client," was directed at Ms. Kinda, who had filed the initial complaint in pro per and was self-represented at the hearing.

Judge Symons's conduct violated the Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 1, 2, 2A, 3B(4), and 3B(5) (a judge shall not engage in speech, gestures, or other conduct that would reasonably be perceived as bias or prejudice). The judge's conduct constitutes prejudicial misconduct.

5. Prior discipline

In 2013, Judge Symons received an advisory letter for serving as an auctioneer at a fundraising event for CASA of Santa Cruz.

In 2015, Judge Symons received a private admonishment for (1) publicly discussing a factual scenario of a case pending before her for sentencing, (2) comments creating the appearance of bias against transients, and (3) creating the appearance of embroilment in connection with an Order to Show Cause against an attorney.

The matters for which Judge Symons received prior discipline serve as aggravating factors for the misconduct discussed herein.

6. Mitigation

By entering into this stipulation, Judge Symons has now admitted, accepted responsibility for, and expressed remorse for, her conduct as set forth herein.

A number of Judge Symons's colleagues, including her presiding and assistant presiding judges, submitted letters and declarations attesting to her work ethic, diligence, and her fair administration of justice.

Judge Symons has worked as a public servant, initially as an Assistant United States Attorney, then as a prosecutor in district attorney's offices, and then as a judge, since 1983.

Judge Symons's agreement to enter into this stipulation avoids the expenditure of time and resources that formal proceedings would entail.

Judge Symons admits that the foregoing facts are true and agrees with the stated legal conclusions.

DISCIPLINE

The commission has determined to accept the Stipulation and impose this severe public censure, which is the strongest sanction that may be imposed on a judge short of removal from the bench, because it fulfills the commission's mandate of protecting the public, enforcing rigorous standards of judicial conduct, and maintaining public confidence in the integrity of the judicial system, and it resolves this matter without the delay and expense of further proceedings. (See Broadman v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1998) 18 Cal.4th 1079, 1111-1112; Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (d).)

Judge Symons's handling of the red light ticket, including her failure to accept responsibility for the ticket until instructed to do so by her presiding judge, her knowing participation in her husband's actions, which resulted in the citation being dismissed, and her misuse of court staff in connection with the ticket, reflect an egregious disregard for the dignity of the very court where Judge Symons serves as a judicial officer. When a judge does not respect the law or the processes of the court, public respect for the judiciary is seriously undermined. Judge Symons concedes that her actions in connection with the red light ticket constitute, at a minimum, prejudicial misconduct.

Judge Symons also engaged in several other acts of misconduct that erode public confidence in the integrity of the judiciary. She engaged in two instances of improper ex parte communication during a jury trial, which she concedes constitute prejudicial misconduct. In addition, Judge Symons made an inappropriate remark to a litigant in a restraining order proceeding, which she admits constitutes improper action. Further, she made several remarks that reflected poor demeanor and bias to a different litigant, who was self-represented in a civil proceeding. Judge Symons acknowledges that those remarks constitute prejudicial misconduct.

In determining that a severe public censure is the appropriate sanction, the commission considered Judge Symons's history of prior discipline (an advisory letter and a private admonishment) as aggravating factors. The commission also considered as mitigating factors that Judge Symons acknowledges engaging in multiple acts of misconduct and has expressed remorse, as stated in the Stipulation.

Commission members Nanci E. Nishimura, Esq.; Hon. Michael B. Harper; Hon. William S. Dato; Mr. Eduardo De La Riva; Ms. Sarah Kruer Jager; Ms. Kay Cooperman Jue; Hon. Lisa B. Lench; Dr. Michael A. Moodian; Mr. Richard Simpson; and Mr. Adam N. Torres voted to accept the Stipulation and to issue this severe public censure. Commission member Anthony P. Capozzi, Esq. did not participate.

Date: May 20, 2019

On behalf of the
Commission on Judicial Performance,

Nanci E. Nishimura
Chairperson

STATE OF CALIFORNIA

BEFORE THE COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

| | |
|---|---|
| IN THE MATTER CONCERNINGJUDGE ARIADNE J. SYMONS | STIPULATION FOR DISCIPLINEBY CONSENT (Rule 116.5) |

Pursuant to Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance, rule 116.5, Judge Ariadne J. Symons of the Santa Cruz County Superior Court, represented by counsel Kathleen M. Ewins, and commission trial counsel (the "parties") submit this proposed disposition of the matters set forth in the commission's preliminary investigation letters dated September 16, 2016, July 11, 2017, January 3, 2018, and January 2, 2019. The parties request that the commission resolve this matter by imposition of a severe public censure. The parties believe that the settlement provided by this agreement is in the best interests of the commission and Judge Symons because, among other reasons, in light of the stipulated facts and legal conclusions, a severe public censure adequately protects the public and will avoid the delay and expense of further proceedings.

TERMS AND CONDITIONS OF AGREEMENT

1. This agreement resolves the matters alleged in the commission's pending preliminary investigation involving Judge Symons.

2. The commission shall issue a severe public censure based on the agreed Stipulated Facts and Legal Conclusions set forth therein.

3. If the commission accepts this proposed disposition, the commission's decision and order imposing severe public censure may articulate the reasons for its decision and include explanatory language that the commission deems appropriate.

4. Upon acceptance by the commission, this stipulation and the commission's decision and order shall be made public.

5. Judge Symons waives any further proceedings and review in this matter, including formal proceedings (rules 118, et seq.), and review by the Supreme Court (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 9.60).

6. The commission may reject this proposed disposition and resume its preliminary investigation. If the commission does so, nothing in this proposed disposition will be deemed to be admitted by Judge Symons.

Accordingly, it is hereby stipulated and agreed that the commission shall issue a severe public censure on the above Terms and Conditions of Agreement, and based on the following Stipulated Facts and Legal Conclusions.

STIPULATED FACTS AND LEGAL CONCLUSIONS

Judge Ariadne J. Symons became a judge of the Santa Cruz County Superior Court in 2009, following election to that office. Her current term began in January 2015.

1. The red light ticket

On Tuesday, May 10, 2016, at 7:56 a.m., Judge Symons drove her 2007 Pontiac through a red light in violation of Vehicle Code section 21453(a). The violation was captured by a camera maintained by the City of Capitola Police Department. Judge Symons noticed a flash when she drove through the intersection and understood that she had triggered a red light camera. When Judge Symons arrived at the courthouse that morning, she told her colleague, Judge Jeffrey Almquist, that she had committed a red light violation that had been captured on camera. Judge Symons also told other people at court about the incident, and that she felt like a "scofflaw."

About a month later, a Notice of Violation (Notice) concerning the incident was sent to the judge's residence addressed to her husband. The Notice identified the registered owner of the vehicle as Judge Symons's husband, whose last name is different from Judge Symons's, "or Symoms [sic] Ariadne J." The Notice included color photos of the driver, the vehicle, and the license plate, and identified a website where the photos and a video of the incident could be viewed (www.violationinfo.com). The Notice did not set forth a bail amount.

The Notice included specific language on what to do if the recipient was not the driver:

> IF YOU WERE NOT THE DRIVER: If you were not the driver of the vehicle at the time of the violation, complete the "Affidavit of Non-Liability" below. By completing the Affidavit of Non-Liability, the citation issued to you will be cancelled after review and the approval of the court. The person named in the form will be cited and notified by mail.

The Affidavit of Non-Liability contained in the Notice included the following language:

> IF YOU DO NOT OWN OR WERE NOT DRIVING THE VEHICLE AT THE TIME OF THE VIOLATION, PLEASE COMPLETE THIS FORM WITH THE INFORMATION OF THE ACTUAL DRIVER.

(Emphasis in original.)

Judge Symons subsequently approached a court clerk in the staff-only area of the Watsonville Courthouse, of the Santa Cruz County Superior Court, concerning the Notice. The judge asked for assistance in determining the bail amount for the violation. The clerk looked into the matter and told the judge that the citation had not yet been processed in the system, and to check back later.

On or about June 24, 2016, the Santa Cruz County Superior Court sent Judge Symons's husband a "courtesy notice," which stated that he had been cited for violating Vehicle Code section 21453(a) on May 10, 2016, and that the amount due was $489.

Judge Symons and her husband discussed their options on how to handle the Notice. The judge's husband refused to provide information that the judge was the actual driver. The judge's husband prepared a Request for Trial by Written Declaration, which included a Statement of Facts wherein he denied responsibility for the citation, but did not identify the driver of the vehicle when the violation occurred. The Statement of Facts stated in full:

> I work at the Pebble Beach golf course in Pebble Beach (located next to Carmel). It is usually an hour drive from my home to work, each way. On May 10, 2016, I arrived at work at 6:17 a.m. My first break was at 10:50 a.m. The ticket was issued for a violation occurring at 7:59:09 a.m. in Capitola. I was not driving in the car ticketed at the time. There is no possibility I could have been in both places at the same time. [¶] The car is a family car and a number of people, family and friends, drive it. I looked at the photo attached to the citation. It is rather unflattering and unclear. It could perhaps be any slightly pudgy white guy, but it is not me. [¶] I am attaching a copy of my time card slips that document that I was in fact at work at the times stated.

The judge and her husband were unable to print out the completed Request for Trial by Written Declaration form at home. As a result, the next day, the judge either printed it, or re-typed and printed it, from her computer at the courthouse. The judge admits that she reviewed the document, including the Statement of Facts, before it was submitted for filing.

On July 14, 2016, the judge again approached the court clerk in the staff-only area of the courthouse and handed her the completed Request for Trial by Written Declaration form, signed by her husband under penalty of perjury; and a check for $489. The judge told the clerk that Commissioner Baskett, who handled traffic matters, did not know her husband's last name, so there was no conflict. The clerk told the judge that a Waiver of Arraignment form was missing, and, using a court computer, showed her how to obtain the form online. The judge said her husband would need to sign the waiver form and that she would bring the signed form to the clerk the next day, which she did. The clerk then sent the Request for Trial by Written Declaration and the Waiver of Arraignment forms to the Santa Cruz Courthouse, where Commissioner Baskett sat, by interoffice mail. Judge Symons did not inform the presiding judge, or the court executive officer, of either the citation or the Request for Trial by Written Declaration filed on behalf of her husband.

When Commissioner Baskett received the Request for Trial by Written Declaration, she noted that it concerned the husband of a judicial officer. Commissioner Baskett reported the matter to then-Presiding Judge Denine Guy, who commenced an investigation.

On July 20, 2016, the Capitola Police Department served by mail a Notice of Correction dismissing the citation "in the interest of justice."

On July 20 and 21, 2016, Judge Symons met with Judge Guy about the citation. Judge Symons admitted that she had run the red light. Judge Symons told Judge Guy that her husband was refusing to complete the Affidavit of Non-Liability because he believed he had a right to a trial without implicating her. Judge Guy told Judge Symons that she needed to accept responsibility for the ticket by contacting the court and the citation-processing company.

Judge Symons sent letters to the court and the Capitola Police Department advising that she was the person responsible for the citation, not her husband. A new citation was never issued to Judge Symons.

On or about August 23, 2016, the County of Santa Cruz sent Judge Symons's husband a check for $489, as refund of bail. He negotiated the check.

Judge Symons knowingly assisted her husband in filing the Request for Trial by Written Declaration with the court, which was designed to have the citation dismissed and which did not identify the judge as the actual driver. Prior to filing the document, the judge took no steps to notify the Capitola Police Department or the citation-processing company that she was the person responsible for the citation, despite language on the citation itself that set forth a procedure for identifying the responsible party. The judge also failed to notify the court that her husband had a matter pending before it that involved her. Additionally, the judge misused the prestige of her office by seeking information and assistance concerning the citation from a court clerk in the non-public areas of the courthouse, including giving the clerk the Request for Trial by Written Declaration for filing rather than filing the document herself at the filing window.

Judge Symons's conduct violated the Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 1 (a judge shall uphold the integrity and independence of the judiciary), 2 (a judge shall avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety), 2A (a judge shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary), 2B(1) (a judge shall not allow family, social, or other relationships to influence the judge's judicial conduct), and 2B(2) (a judge shall not lend the prestige of judicial office to advance the pecuniary or personal interests of the judge or others). The judge's conduct constitutes, at a minimum, prejudicial misconduct.

2. People v. Karl Peterson, No. 18CR00369

From April 30, 2018 through May 3, 2018, Judge Symons presided over the jury trial of People v. Karl Peterson, No. 18CR00369. The defendant was charged with felony violations of a protective order and special allegations concerning prior convictions. The defendant was in custody and represented by public defender Micha Rinkus. The People were represented by Deputy District Attorney (DDA) Xavier Mitchell.

On May 2, 2018, at 3:20 p.m., following closing arguments, the jury retired to the jury room to begin deliberations. At 3:40 p.m., while Ms. Rinkus and Mr. Mitchell were still in the courtroom, the bailiff in charge of the jury, Deputy Travis Rakes, returned from the jury room with written questions from the jury. (The questions are contained in the court file as court exhibits nos. 1 and 2.) Judge Symons discussed the questions with the attorneys in the courtroom, and, in their presence, prepared written responses to the questions on court forms maintained for that purpose. A separate form was used for each question. On each form, the judge handwrote the question and the court's response, and signed her name. The written responses were then given to Deputy Rakes, who took them to the jury room. (The responses are contained in the court file as court exhibits nos. 3, 4, and 5.) The process of responding to these questions took 20 minutes or less.

Later that afternoon, after Ms. Rinkus and Mr. Mitchell had left the courtroom, another written question from the jury was brought to the courtroom by Deputy Rakes. The question concerned the definition of the term "violence." Thereafter, at 4:20 p.m., the courtroom clerk, Georgina Robles, placed a call to Ms. Rinkus's cell phone. Ms. Rinkus did not answer and Ms. Robles left a voice message stating that the jury had a question, and asking that Ms. Rinkus come to court or call back. At 4:21 p.m., Ms. Robles placed a call to Mr. Mitchell's cell phone. Mr. Mitchell answered the call and Ms. Robles informed him that the jury had a question. During the call, Judge Symons got on the line and spoke with Mr. Mitchell about the jury's question. The judge told Mr. Mitchell that the jury had a question regarding the legal definition of violence, and that her inclination was to respond by referring them to the jury instructions and advising them that if the instructions did not contain a specific definition, they were to give the term its ordinary, everyday meaning. Mr. Mitchell responded, "O.K., sounds good." Mr. Mitchell was not asked to return to the courtroom. Judge Symons subsequently prepared a written response to the jury's question that directed the jury to refer to their previous instructions. The written response was transmitted to the jury that afternoon by Deputy Rakes. Judge Symons took no steps to notify Ms. Rinkus of her telephone conversation with Mr. Mitchell, or of her written response to the jury's question.

At 4:40 p.m., Ms. Robles contacted both Ms. Rinkus and Mr. Mitchell by phone, and advised them that the jury was being excused for the day.

On May 3, 2018, at 2:45 p.m., the jury returned with a verdict finding the defendant guilty on all charges. After the jury was excused, some of the jurors discussed the case with the attorneys and raised the jury's question concerning the definition of violence and the court's response. Ms. Rinkus and Mr. Mitchell immediately went to see Judge Symons in chambers. Ms. Rinkus told the judge that it had just come to her attention that a question from the jury had been asked, and answered, without her knowledge. The judge told Ms. Rinkus that there was nothing she could do at that point, and that Ms. Rinkus's recourse was to file a motion for new trial.

On July 10, 2018, Ms. Rinkus filed a motion for new trial on behalf of the defendant. The motion alleged that the defendant's due process rights had been violated by the court answering the jury's question about the definition of violence while defense counsel was not present.

On or about August 14, 2018, Judge Symons called Ms. Rinkus and Mr. Mitchell to the bench for a sidebar conference. The judge told the attorneys the motion for new trial raised issues that she assumed each side recognized may possibly have merit, and that in such circumstances the parties frequently explore whether a negotiated resolution was possible. The judge proposed, as a potential compromise, that she give the defendant a suspended prison sentence, conditioned on successful completion of two years in the Delancey Street drug program, in exchange for a waiver of appellate rights and withdrawal of the motion for new trial.

On August 31, 2018, the case was on calendar for sentencing and the motion for new trial. Prior to the hearing, Mr. Mitchell informed Ms. Rinkus of a new offer; a four-year suspended prison sentence, conditioned on successful completion of two years in the Delancey Street drug program. (Prior to trial, the offer was four years state prison.) The defendant accepted the offer and was sentenced accordingly that day.

Judge Symons's telephone conversation with DDA Mitchell on May 2, 2018, and her written response to the jury's question constituted improper ex parte communications as they both occurred outside the presence of the defendant and Ms. Rinkus, and without their knowledge.

Judge Symons's conduct violated the Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 1, 2, 2A, 3B(5) (a judge shall not engage in speech, gestures, or other conduct that would reasonably be perceived as bias or prejudice), 3B(7) (a judge shall not initiate, permit, or consider ex parte communications, that is, any communications to or from the judge outside the presence of the parties concerning a pending or impending proceeding, and shall make reasonable efforts to avoid such communications), and 3B(8) (a judge shall dispose of all judicial matters fairly, promptly, and efficiently, and shall manage the courtroom in a manner that provides all litigants the opportunity to have their matters fairly adjudicated in accordance with the law). The judge's conduct constitutes prejudicial misconduct.

3. Hernandez v. Lopez*, No. 16FL01113

On August 28, 2016, Judge Symons presided over the matter of Jeannette Hernandez v. Jesus Lopez, No. 16FL01113. Ms. Hernandez had filed a request for a domestic violence restraining order against Mr. Lopez, who was the father of their three children. Ms. Hernandez alleged that Mr. Lopez would drink alcohol before visiting the children and engage in behavior that scared them. Mr. Lopez admitted that was true. During the hearing, Judge Symons ordered Mr. Lopez not to consume alcohol before visiting the children or while visiting them. The judge told Mr. Lopez, "You can't down a couple of 40s before you go pick them up before a visit because that's not good. Do you understand?" Mr. Lopez responded, "I don't drink 40s."

Judge Symons's conduct violated the Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 2 (a judge shall avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety), 2A (a judge shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary), and 3B(4) (a judge shall be patient, dignified, and courteous to those with whom the judge deals in an official capacity). The judge's conduct constitutes improper action.

4. Kinda v. Carpenter*, No. CV171252

In May 2013, Judge Symons presided over the civil jury trial of Margaret Kinda v. Scott Carpenter, No. CV171252, which involved a dispute between the owners of a rug cleaning business, Margaret Kinda and Aaron Kinda, and their landlord, Mr. Carpenter.

On May 21, 2013, while Margaret Kinda was testifying during the plaintiffs' case, Judge Symons questioned her about a matter in a manner that reflected disbelief in her testimony. The transcript reflects the following colloquy.

> THE COURT: All right. Now, Ms. Kinda, I have some questions. [¶] You made a reference to Exhibit Number 53, a notice of preservation of evidence.

THE WITNESS [MS. KINDA]: I know what you're talking about. I'm flipping to it right now.

THE COURT: All right. This is from the Baskin and Grant law firm, it's dated June 20th, and it puts you on notice to preserve documents and evidence which may be important or relevant to the litigation; right?

THE WITNESS: Yes, among other things.

THE COURT: This is absolutely standard in every single civil case that's filed, is it not?

THE WITNESS: I can't answer that.

THE COURT: You're an attorney, Ms. Kinda.

THE WITNESS: I am.

THE COURT: Come on.

THE WITNESS: I have never done a civil case in my life.

THE COURT: And you have absolutely no knowledge about this?

THE WITNESS: I had no knowledge of what this was. They don't do this in divorce law. But the – my point was –

(R.T. 147:14-148:12, bold added.)

Plaintiffs' rested their case on May 21, 2013.

On May 22, 2013, Mr. Carpenter was called as the first defense witness. At the conclusion of Mr. Carpenter's examination by counsel, Judge Symons allowed questions to be asked that the jurors had previously submitted in writing, and that the judge had reviewed and discussed with counsel. Before the jurors' questions were asked by counsel, the judge stated, and commented on, one of the questions, as follows:

THE COURT: Ladies and gentlemen, there are a number of questions from our jurors. And [Counsel] will ask them on your behalf of Mr. Carpenter. [¶] I will share with you one > question. "I'm unsure what the judgment award will or might be." That is a question indeed. We'll just have to keep listening carefully to the evidence to see if it's ever answered.

Judge Symons's comments created the appearance that the judge was conveying to the jury that she had not seen any evidence to support a damages award in plaintiffs' favor.

On December 10, 2013, Judge Symons presided over a hearing on Mr. Carpenter's post-trial motions for attorney fees and costs. Mr. Carpenter was represented by counsel at the hearing; Ms. Kinda appeared in pro per. During the hearing, the judge provided a lengthy explanation for why she found Mr. Carpenter to be the "prevailing party" in the case. In connection with her explanation, the judge read into the record some responses the jurors had given to a questionnaire sent to them by the court after the trial concluded. The responses the judge read focused on how the jurors viewed the case. Immediately after reading the last juror response, the judge made the following remark:

> So the Court has rarely received such strongly worded negative reactions, not merely to the case, but to the fact that the case was allowed to proceed at all; and I think the information's valuable. I cannot avoid the observation that the party who represents himself has a fool for a client. That is a well-known quote. It's too bad that someone did not perform the older and more gracious function, not simply of attorney, but counselor at law. Counselors at law used to advise people not to go to court, to let the matter go and resolve it outside of court. And that might have been a kindness in this situation.

(R.T. 34:16-35:2, bold added.)

The judge's statement, "the party who represents himself has a fool for a client," was directed at Ms. Kinda, who had filed the initial complaint in pro per and was self-represented at the hearing.

Judge Symons's conduct violated the Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 1, 2, 2A, 3B(4), and 3B(5) (a judge shall not engage in speech, gestures, or other conduct that would reasonably be perceived as bias or prejudice). The judge's conduct constitutes prejudicial misconduct.

5. Prior discipline

In 2013, Judge Symons received an advisory letter for serving as an auctioneer at a fundraising event for CASA of Santa Cruz.

In 2015, Judge Symons received a private admonishment for (1) publicly discussing a factual scenario of a case pending before her for sentencing, (2) comments creating the appearance of bias against transients, and (3) creating the appearance of embroilment in connection with an OSC against an attorney.

The matters for which Judge Symons received prior discipline serve as aggravating factors for the misconduct discussed herein.

6. Mitigation

By entering into this stipulation, Judge Symons has now admitted, accepted responsibility for, and expressed remorse for, her conduct as set forth herein.

A number of Judge Symons's colleagues, including her presiding and assistant presiding judges, submitted letters and declarations attesting to her work ethic, diligence, and her fair administration of justice.

Judge Symons has worked as a public servant, initially as an Assistant United States Attorney, then as a prosecutor in district attorney's offices, and then as a judge, since 1983.

Judge Symons's agreement to enter into this stipulation avoids the expenditure of time and resources that formal proceedings would entail.

By signing this stipulation, in addition to consenting to discipline on the terms set forth, Judge Symons expressly admits that the foregoing facts are true and that she agrees with the stated legal conclusions.

Dated: 19 April, 2019

Ariadne J. Symons

Dated: April 22, 2019

Kathleen M. Ewins
Attorney for Judge Symons

Dated: April 23, 2019

Gregory Dresser
Director-Chief Counsel

FILED
FEB 27 2019
COMMISSION ON
JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

STATE OF CALIFORNIA

BEFORE THE COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

| | |
|---|---|
| INQUIRY CONCERNING FORMER JUDGE STEVEN C. BAILEY, No. 202 | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC CENSURE AND BAR |

I.

INTRODUCTION AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge Steven C. Bailey, a former judge of the El Dorado County Superior Court. Judge Bailey was elected to the bench in 2008, and retired on August 31, 2017.

The commission commenced this inquiry with the filing of its Notice of Formal Proceedings (Notice) on February 20, 2018. The Notice, as amended on May 7, 2018, charged Judge Bailey with: (1) improperly allowing a business to use his testimonial on its website, without assuring that it did not use his judicial title; (2) failing to disclose that his son worked on commission for CHI Monitoring, LLC (CHI) and made reports to the court, when, in five cases, the judge ordered criminal defendants to use CHI services; (3) ordering a defendant to pay restitution to CHI in violation of the law, based on a letter from his son; (4) failing to disclose that the owner of CHI, Charles Holland, was his friend and former client, and attended strategy meetings for the judge's judicial campaign; (5) appointing Attorney Bradley Clark as a special master in a matter pending before the judge, without disclosing that Clark was a personal friend; (6) improperly receiving gifts from Court Appointed Special Advocates (CASA), Attorney Clark, and Lincoln Law School; (7) failing to report and inaccurately reporting travel-related payments or reimbursements the judge received in connection with judicial education programs he attended; (8) commenting in the courthouse to a member of court staff and two judges that he knew his shirt was nice because he bought it from a "gay guy" in Paris, and "gays only have nice clothes … gays really know how to dress"; (9) between August 2016 and August 2017, while a sitting judge, using his judicial title and lending the prestige of judicial office to raise funds for and promote his campaign, potential campaign, or exploratory committee to run as a candidate for California Attorney General, and engaging in political and campaign activity that is inconsistent with the independence, integrity, and impartiality of the judiciary; (10) failing to file a Candidate Intention Statement to run for Attorney General until after his campaign had received at least $17,749 in campaign contributions, in violation of the Political Reform Act; (11) while a sitting judge, authorizing or permitting his Southern California Campaign Coordinator, Martha Romero, to use his judicial title and the prestige of his judicial office to promote his candidacy by creating a "Judge Steven Bailey" Facebook page, with frequent references to his judicial title; and (12) while a sitting judge, allowing Romero to use her law firm's Facebook page to promote the judge's candidacy, with reference to his judicial title.

The Supreme Court appointed three special masters who held an evidentiary hearing and reported to the commission. The masters are Hon. Kenneth R. Yegan, Associate Justice of the Court of Appeal, Second Appellate District, Division Six; Hon. Louis R. Hanoian, Judge of the San Diego County Superior Court; and Hon. William D. Lehman, Judge of the Imperial County Superior Court. Judge Bailey is represented by James A. Murphy, Esq., Janet L. Everson, Esq., and Joseph S. Leveroni, Esq., of Murphy, Pearson, Bradley & Feeney, in San Francisco, California. The examiners for the commission are Mark A. Lizarraga, Esq., and Sei Shimoguchi, Esq.

A six-day evidentiary hearing was held before the special masters commencing September 4, 2018. The masters' report to the commission, containing their findings of fact and conclusions of law, was filed on November 15, 2018. Oral argument before the commission was heard on January 30, 2019.

The masters found that Judge Bailey engaged in misconduct as to each of the charges in the Notice, with the exception of count three (appointing Attorney Clark as a special master). The masters also found, in aggravation, that Judge Bailey received a strong advisory letter in 2013 for delaying 15 cases. The masters found no circumstances in mitigation.

The facts are largely undisputed. There is considerable disagreement between the parties, however, on the legal conclusions reached by the masters. As to many of the charges, Judge Bailey contends that his actions did not amount to misconduct or that he engaged in a lower level of misconduct than found by the masters. The examiner objects to the masters' conclusion that the judge did not engage in misconduct in appointing his friend as a special master without, at minimum, disclosing the relationship. As to a number of counts, the examiner objects to the masters' conclusion that the judge engaged in the lowest level of misconduct, improper action, rather than prejudicial conduct.

We adopt the factual findings of the masters, and, at times, include additional facts supported by clear and convincing evidence. For reasons we explain, we adopt the masters' legal conclusions in some instances, and reach our own independent legal conclusions in other instances. We respectfully disagree with the masters' determination that Judge Bailey did not engage in misconduct in appointing his friend as a special master without disclosure or disqualification. We conclude that Judge Bailey engaged in prejudicial conduct in seven of the counts charged in the Notice, which includes a course of prejudicial conduct over a period of a year while conducting an actual or exploratory campaign for nonjudicial office, and that he engaged in improper action in eight instances.

As the masters noted, Judge Bailey has his own views on appropriate conduct for a judge, and his views are misinformed and erroneous. Based on the breadth and nature of Judge Bailey's misconduct over the entire course of his judicial career, his prior discipline, and his failure to appreciate the impropriety of much of his misconduct, we conclude there is a strong likelihood that Judge Bailey would engage in subsequent misconduct if he were to serve in a judicial capacity in the future. In order to protect the public and maintain public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary, the commission has determined to censure and bar former Judge Steven C. Bailey from seeking or holding judicial office, or accepting a position or an assignment as a judicial officer, subordinate judicial officer or judge pro tem with any court in the State of California, or accepting reference of work from any California state court, at any time in the future. (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18(d).)

II.

LEGAL STANDARDS

The examiner has the burden of proving the charges by clear and convincing evidence. (Broadman v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1998) 18 Cal.4th 1079, 1090 (Broadman).) "Evidence of a charge is clear and convincing so long as there is a 'high probability' that the charge is true. [Citations.]" (Ibid.) Factual findings of the masters are entitled to special weight because the masters have "the advantage of observing the demeanor of the witnesses." (Ibid; Inquiry Concerning Freedman (2007) 49 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 223, 232.) Legal conclusions of the masters are entitled to less deference because the commission has expertise with respect to the law of judicial misconduct. (See, e.g., Broadman, supra, 18 Cal.4th at p. 1090*; Adams v. Commission on Judicial Performance* (1995) 10 Cal.4th 866, 880 (Adams); Fletcher v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1998) 19 Cal.4th 865, 878 (Fletcher).)

A violation of the California Code of Judicial Ethics constitutes one of three levels of judicial misconduct: willful misconduct, prejudicial misconduct, or improper action. (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (d).) Willful misconduct is (1) unjudicial conduct that is (2) committed in bad faith (3) by a judge acting in his judicial capacity. The second most serious level of misconduct is prejudicial conduct, "conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute." (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (d).) Prejudicial conduct is either conduct that occurs in good faith but which nevertheless would appear to an objective observer to be " 'prejudicial to public esteem for the judicial office' [citation]," or willful misconduct out of office. (Broadman, supra, 18 Cal.4th at p. 1092.) The least serious level of misconduct, improper action, occurs when the judge's conduct violates the canons, but the circumstances do not rise to the level of prejudicial misconduct and do not bring the judiciary into disrepute. (Inquiry Concerning Saucedo (2015) 62 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 1, 82; Inquiry Concerning Ross (2005) 49 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 79, 89, citing Adams, supra, 10 Cal.4th at pp. 897-899.)

III.

FINDINGS OF FACT AND CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

A. Count One

In April 2016, Judge Bailey retained the Redd Group to survey voters about a local attorney's judicial campaign. After the election, Judge Bailey called David Cooper, an employee of the Redd Group, to compliment him on the survey results. Cooper asked the judge if he could use the judge's comments as a testimonial for the Redd Group. Judge Bailey agreed. He did not ask Cooper how the comments would be used or where they would be published. Cooper testified that he told the judge that the testimonial would be published on the Redd Group's website; the judge testified he did not remember receiving this information. Judge Bailey did not authorize Cooper to use his judicial title, but did not tell him to avoid using the title. The judge was not compensated for the testimonial.

The testimonial, published on two separate pages of the Redd Group website, stated:

> I was helping a fellow attorney run for county judge. Our mail went out ahead of schedule and The Redd Group accommodated for our poll to be done accordingly with many more respondents than were promised. We got the detailed results in less than 24 hours. I recommend the Redd Group for all your polling needs. Excellent work!
>
> – Steven C. Bailey

One page of the website included a link to the judge's personal website, which identified him as a judge. Headings on the Redd Group website identified Steven Bailey as a superior court judge. The website also featured a photograph of Judge Bailey in his judicial robe. The judge did not provide the photograph or authorize its use. Cooper did not inform the judge that his photograph would be used.

The masters concluded that the judge engaged in improper action by allowing his name to be used on the website, without reviewing the final text of the testimonial or instructing the Redd Group to avoid using his judicial title and photograph in judicial robes. The masters concluded that the judge violated canons 2 (a judge shall avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety in all of the judge's activities), and 2B(2) (judges are prohibited from using the prestige of judicial office or judicial title to advance the personal or pecuniary interests of the judges or others). We reach the same legal conclusions.

Neither party objects to these factual findings or legal conclusions.

B. Count Two A

1. Findings of Fact

In five cases, between October 2009 and April 2014,[1] Judge Bailey released a defendant charged with an alcohol-related crime on the defendant's own recognizance, on the condition that the defendant participate in the Secure Continuous Remote Alcohol Monitoring (SCRAM) program. SCRAM monitors alcohol consumption through a bracelet device provided to defendants. At the time the orders were made, CHI was the only local provider of alcohol monitoring services.

Judge Bailey's son, John Bailey, was employed by CHI as a case manager and worked on commission. He received a percentage of the payments CHI received from every SCRAM participant he monitored. John Bailey installed the SCRAM device, monitored for violations, wrote reports for the court, and set up payments. In each of the five cases, John Bailey or another CHI employee sent correspondences directly to Judge Bailey concerning the defendants' participation in SCRAM.

[1] The five cases and the dates of the orders are (1) People v. Angelica Godinez, April 16, 2014; (2) People v. Julian Butler, March 10, 2014; (3) People v. Shawn Price, Feburary 19, 2014; (4) People v. Jason Jacobsen, October 30, 2009; and (5) People v. Camille DeSpain, October 23, 2009.

The judge did not disclose that his son was employed by CHI and might correspond with the court concerning defendants' participation in, and compliance with, the program.

In April 2009, Judge Bailey sought an ethics opinion from the California Judges Association (CJA) hotline, because he was confused about his responsibilities when referring defendants to the company where his son was employed. CJA gave Judge Bailey an informal opinion, based on the facts provided by the judge.

CJA's informal opinion stated:

> Inquiry:
> Newly appointed J's adult son is a commissioned salesperson with a company that provides monitoring ankle bracelets for J's county jail. The defendants utilizing this company's services all reside out of county. Son's company comes in contact with defendants when they are referred by the county probation department. Company assesses whether or not defendant meets the financial criteria to obtain the monitoring bracelet and if so, provides the bracelet and performs the monitoring function. Son occasionally comes in personal contact with a defendant. Neither J nor son has an ownership interest in Company. J asks whether there is anything about this arrangement that requires J to disqualify, disclose, or take any other action.
>
> Informal Response:
> No. However, J should disclose if son were to testify in J's court on an issue of violation of the terms and conditions of use of the bracelet by a defendant.[2]

The masters found the CJA opinion assumed that CHI comes into contact with the defendants when they are "referred by the county probation department." Further, the masters found that the judge did not inform CJA that his son corresponded directly with him concerning the defendants' enrollment and compliance in the program. We concur with these findings, which are supported by clear and convincing evidence.

[2] Sometime after Judge Bailey received the informal opinion, the CJA ethics committee modified its opinion to state that Judge Bailey should disqualify himself if his son were to testify. The evidence does not establish whether Judge Bailey was made aware of this modification.

Judge Bailey contacted the CJA hotline and spoke with Judge Robert Glusman. Judge Glusman testified that when he would receive a call from a judge, it was his practice to take notes and relay the facts back to the judge two or three times to make sure they were accurate. He further testified that Judge Bailey did not tell him that his son would provide written monitoring reports to the judge.

Judge Bailey asserts that he did not inform CJA that his son corresponded directly with him because, at the time he sought the opinion, he had not yet referred a defendant to SCRAM, and did not know he would be doing so. This is inconsistent with the judge's testimony and statement in his opening brief that he asked for an ethics opinion because he "was confused as to what his responsibilities were when he made referrals to SCRAM . . . ." (Italics added.) Further, the issue is whether the judge was justified in relying on the CJA informal opinion at the time the five cases were before him. By that time, he knew his son was reporting directly to him. He could have asked for another opinion once it became apparent that he would be making the referrals and his son would be reporting directly to him.

Judge Bailey objects to the masters' finding that, in each of the five cases, he personally ordered the defendant to participate in SCRAM monitoring, because there was no objection from the defendant or the district attorney in any of the cases. The evidence established through minute orders and transcripts admitted into evidence that the judge made a SCRAM order in each case. The fact that no one objected does not change the fact that the judge made the order.

2. Conclusions of Law

The masters concluded that the judge's conduct violated canon 3E(2), which requires a judge to disclose on the record all information relevant to disqualification. The masters further concluded that the judge engaged in improper action, rather than prejudicial conduct, because the failure to disclose was consistent with the advice he received from the ethics hotline. The examiner contends that the conduct constitutes prejudicial conduct because the judge provided CJA with inaccurate and incomplete facts. Judge Bailey contends that he did not engage in any misconduct because he followed the advice he was given.

We conclude that the judge engaged in prejudicial conduct. Judge Bailey failed to provide CJA with important facts relevant to the question of whether he was required to disclose that his son worked at CHI – that he, rather than the probation department, would be making the referrals, and that his son would be reporting directly to him concerning monitoring and compliance. While judges should be encouraged to seek ethics opinions when uncertain about their ethical obligations, when doing so, the judge must provide complete and accurate facts relevant to the ethical question presented.

A judge has a duty to disclose on the record information that is reasonably relevant to disqualification, even if the judge believes there is no actual basis for recusal. (Canon 3E(2).) A judge is required to recuse when a person aware of the facts might reasonably entertain a doubt that the judge would be able to be impartial. (Code Civ. Proc., § 170.1, subd. (a)(6)(A)(iii).)

We conclude that the fact that the judge's son worked on commission for CHI and reported directly to Judge Bailey concerning compliance with SCRAM was information reasonably relevant to disqualification and, thus, required disclosure before Judge Bailey ordered a defendant to participate in the program. Indeed, the CJA informal opinion specifically advised Judge Bailey that disclosure would be necessary if his son were providing testimony to the court. For these purposes, there is no meaningful distinction between written reports and testimony. They are merely different vehicles designed to provide relevant information to the court.

Further, we conclude that an objective person would find the judge's conduct in failing to disclose this information to be prejudicial to the public esteem for the judiciary. The fact that the judge relied on an ethics opinion that did not include pertinent facts would not, in our view, change the public's negative perception of the conduct. As such, we conclude that the judge violated canons 1 (a judge shall uphold the integrity and independence of the judiciary), 2, 2A (a judge shall respect and comply with the law and act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary), and 3E(2), and engaged in prejudicial conduct.

C. Count Two B

Judge Bailey is charged in count two B with ordering a defendant to pay restitution to CHI in violation of the law, based on a letter from his son who worked for CHI, in violation of canons 1, 2, 2A, 2B(1) (a judge shall not allow family relationships to influence the judge's judicial conduct or convey or permit others to convey the impression that any individual is in a special position to influence the judge), and 3B(2) (a judge shall be faithful to the law and maintain professional competence in the law). The masters did not address this count. We reach our own factual findings and legal conclusions based on our independent review of the record.[3]

1. Findings of Fact

The following undisputed facts are established by clear and convincing evidence.

On November 25, 2009, in the matter of People v. Jacobsen, a letter signed by John Bailey, Judge Bailey's son, on CHI letterhead and addressed to Judge Bailey was faxed to the court. The letter indicated that the defendant had completed the SCRAM program, but still owed $140 and had agreed to a payment plan, with payments to be completed on December 11, 2009.

On December 10, 2009, John Bailey faxed a letter to his father seeking restitution of $140 from Jacobson, and stating that Jacobsen had verbally agreed to a payment plan but has since decided not to honor it.

Neither letter indicated that it was copied to the parties.

On December 18, 2009, Jacobsen appeared before Judge Bailey with counsel for further proceedings on a violation of probation. Judge Bailey ordered Jacobsen to pay "victim restitution" to CHI in the amount of $140.

[3] Our determination of the appropriate level of discipline would be the same without our findings of misconduct on counts two B and two C.

2. Conclusions of Law

Direct victims of crime are entitled to restitution. (Cal. Const., art. I, § 28, subds. (b)(13) & (e).) CHI was not the victim of Jacobsen's crime, and thus was not entitled to restitution.

Judge Bailey asserts that he made an error in word choice, and that he was appropriately requiring the defendant to take responsibility for all aspects of his life, including paying his debts. The judge has not, however, cited any authority authorizing a court to order restitution or payment of a debt to a program that provided court-ordered services to a defendant.

Judge Bailey maintains that, at most, he committed legal error, not misconduct.

The judge's unauthorized order constituted more than legal error. Judge Bailey ordered victim restitution to CHI, a business that was clearly not a victim of the defendant's crime, based on a letter from his son who worked on commission for CHI. This created the appearance of favoritism, bias, and lack of impartiality.

We conclude that the judge violated canons 1, 2, 2A, 2B(1), and 3B(2). In our view, an objective person would find the judge's conduct in making an unauthorized restitution order to a company where his son was employed, based on a letter from his son, to be prejudicial to public esteem for the judiciary. As such, we conclude that the judge engaged in prejudicial conduct.

D. Count Two C

Judge Bailey is charged in count two C with failing to disclose his relationship with Charles Holland, the owner of CHI, when ordering defendants in the five cases identified in count two A to participate in SCRAM, in violation of canons 1, 2, 2A, 2B(1) and 3E(2). The masters did not address this count. We reach our own factual findings and legal conclusions based on our independent review of the record, and undisputed facts.

1. Findings of Fact

The record establishes the following facts by clear and convincing evidence.

Charles Holland is the owner of CHI and employed the judge's son John Bailey during the period of the five cases identified in count two A. In those cases, the judge ordered defendants to participate in SCRAM (two orders were made in 2009 and three orders were made in 2014). At the time, CHI was the only local provider of SCRAM.

Holland has known Judge Bailey for approximately 20 years. Over 11 years ago, before the judge took the bench in 2009, Holland retained the judge's services as an attorney. As a defense attorney, the judge referred clients to Holland, who at the time was a bail bondsman. Two of the judge's referrals to CHI occurred during the judge's first year on the bench.

Holland considers the judge to be his friend. Judge Bailey describes his relationship with Holland as "more of a relationship professionally and within the community," than a social relationship.

Holland has been to the judge's house on at least two occasions, once for a campaign kickoff event and once to pick up a gun safe. He attended two strategy meetings for Judge Bailey's judicial campaign in 2008. Holland had lunch with the judge and Clark after the judge took the bench. Judge Bailey is Holland's Facebook "friend," one of hundreds of Holland's Facebook "friends."

2. Conclusions of Law

A judge has a duty to disclose on the record information that is reasonably relevant to disqualification, even if the judge believes there is no actual basis for recusal. (Canon 3E(2).) Here, the applicable disqualification standard is whether a person aware of the facts might reasonably entertain a doubt that the judge would be able to be impartial. (Code Civ. Proc., § 170.1, subd. (a)(6)(A)(iii).)

For purposes of our analysis, we accept Judge Bailey's characterization of his relationship with Holland as being more professional than social. That relationship, however, went further than being members of the same professional organization or having contacts at professional events. Prior to taking the bench, Judge Bailey had represented Holland, and Holland had referred clients to him. Further, Holland had been to the judge's home, had attended strategy meetings for the judge's judicial campaign, and included the judge as one of his Facebook friends. Even if each of these facts taken alone did not require disqualification, we conclude that the totality of these circumstances was reasonably relevant to disqualification and required disclosure.[4] As such, we conclude that the judge violated canon 3E(2) by failing to disclose his prior contacts and relationship with Holland when he ordered defendants to participate in a CHI program.

In the commission's view, the conduct does not create an appearance of impropriety or diminish public respect for the judiciary in violation of canons 1, 2, and 2A, or convey the impression that any individual is in a special position to influence the judge in violation of canon 2B(1). We view the judge's failure to disclose his relationship with Holland differently than his failure to disclose that his son worked for CHI. The public is more likely to question a judge's integrity and impartiality when the judge fails to disclose a relationship with an immediate family member. Further, Holland was not monitoring SCRAM program participants or reporting to the court. As such, we conclude that the disclosure violation constitutes improper action.

E. Count Three

1. Findings of Fact

On June 28, 2011, in Dorcich v. Tahoe Keys Property, No. SC20090034, Judge Bailey appointed Attorney Bradley Clark as a special master, at the rate of $350 per hour in a matter concerning shared pier and access easements for the beneficial use of five lots located in the Tahoe Keys development in South Lake Tahoe. Judge Bailey had previously modified a preliminary injunction that had been in place for several months. Clark was appointed "to investigate violations of this order, review, approve and submit to the Court for approval all tentatively approved applications for docks, piers, and floating structures." Clark was not on a court-approved list of special masters, and was appointed without input from counsel.

[4] In this regard, we note that Holland was not a party or an attorney in these matters. (See Code Civ. Proc., § 170.1, subd. (a)(2)(B)(i) [Disqualification is required if a party in the proceeding was a former client of the judge within the past two years]; Public Admonishment of Judge Jeff Ferguson (2017) [a judge has a duty to disclose being Facebook "friends" with attorneys who have cases pending and who appear regularly before the judge].)

At the time of the appointment, Clark and the judge were friends and socialized together, many times with their spouses. The judge had stayed overnight at Clark's house on at least one occasion. Clark had given the judge gifts of tickets to charity events. Judge Bailey officiated at Clark's wedding. One of the judge's nephews was an associate attorney at Clark's law firm. Clark contributed to and consulted on the judge's campaign for judicial office. Judge Bailey did not disclose his personal relationship with Clark when he appointed him as a special master.

None of the parties in the litigation objected to Clark's appointment. At the time, Clark had a general civil practice in El Dorado County, and was also a real estate broker. The case settled shortly after Clark was appointed. He did not participate in the settlement discussions. On August 9, 2011, the judge approved Clark's fee of $1,715, to be paid by the defendant. Clark received payment of his fee.

2. Conclusions of Law

The masters concluded that the examiner did not prove that the appointment constitutes misconduct, because the judge had authority to appoint a special master and Clark was qualified. The masters were not convinced that the appointment of Clark was based on friendship, rather than competence. Based on this finding, to which we defer, we agree with the masters that Judge Bailey did not violate canon 2B(1), which prohibits a judge from allowing personal relationships to influence the judge's conduct. We respectfully disagree, however, with the masters' conclusion that the judge did not have a duty to, at minimum, disclose the nature of the relationship before making the appointment.

As previously noted, a judge has a duty to disclose on the record information that is reasonably relevant to disqualification, and disqualification is required when a person aware of the facts might reasonably entertain a doubt that the judge would be able to be impartial. (Code Civ. Proc., § 170.1, subd. (a)(6)(A)(iii).) Clear and convincing evidence establishes that the judge and Clark were friends who socialized together, at times with their spouses; the judge received gifts from Clark; the judge's nephew was employed by Clark; and the judge officiated over Clark's wedding. We concluded that, at minimum, these facts required disclosure on the record before Judge Bailey appointed

Clark as special master. Knowing these facts, a party might have thought the judge would be more inclined to approve Clark's findings and recommendations because of their friendship.

In finding no misconduct, the masters relied on the absence of an objection to the appointment from the parties and the fact El Dorado County is a "small legal community," and that most of its members, "are likely to have known about the social relationship between the judge and Clark." The examiner contends that these factors are not relevant to the issue of disclosure. We agree.

In determining the need to disclose, the same standard applies regardless of the size of the community. In Inquiry Concerning Wasilenko (2005) 49 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 26, 46, the commission stated:

> By their terms, the canons impose uniform statewide standards. Whenever an assigned case involves a party the judge "knows," the judge must be particularly vigilant to ensure the appearance and reality of independence and impartiality. The situation may arise more frequently in a small town than a major metropolitan area, but the judge's ethical duties are the same irrespective of population statistics.

The risk of applying a different disclosure standard in a small community based on the assumption that the parties and the attorneys know the judge's relationships "is that there may be someone involved in the proceeding who, in fact, does not know about the relationships." (Rothman et al., Cal. Judicial Conduct Handbook (4th ed. 2017) § 7:75, p. 500.) Moreover, the purpose of disclosure is not only to inform the attorneys and parties of information that may be relevant to disqualification but to uphold the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary. (See Id. § 7:73, p. 495.)

The fact that there was no objection from the attorneys in the Dorcich case did not relieve the judge of his obligation to disclose. There is no evidence that the attorneys and parties were aware of the extent of the judge's relationship with Clark at the time the judge made the appointment.

Thus, we conclude that the judge's failure to, at minimum, disclose his relationship with Clark constitutes a violation of canons 2, 2A, and 3E(2). In view of the masters finding that the appointment was not made on the basis of friendship, we conclude that the judge engaged in improper action, rather than prejudicial conduct.

F. Count Four

1. Findings of Fact

Between 2009 and 2012, Judge Bailey reported on his Fair Political Practices Commission (FPPC) Statement of Economic Interests (Form 700) that he received gifts from CASA, Bradley Clark, and Lincoln Law School.

CASA Gifts

The gifts from CASA were: (1) tickets to the September 2009 CASAblanca event, valued at $35; (2) tickets to the December 2009 Snowball fundraising event valued at $50; and (3) in January 2011, tickets to another CASA fundraising event valued at $200.

Judge Bailey worked closely with CASA in his capacity as presiding juvenile court judge. CASA volunteers routinely appear on behalf of children in adversary proceedings before juvenile court judges. There is no evidence that the judge ever acted in a judicial capacity to favor the organization.

Gifts from Bradley Clark

Clark gave Judge Bailey the following gifts: (1) in January 2010, $50 tickets to a fundraiser for MORE (Mother Lode Rehabilitation Enterprises, Inc.); (2) in September 2010, $150 ticket to a CASA fundraiser; (3) in January 2011, $50 tickets to MORE charity event; (4) in September 2011, a round of golf at Clark's country club, valued at $42; and (5) in January 2012, $50 ticket to another MORE event. The judge attended these events as Clark's guest. Both Clark and the judge had long supported the charities at issue.

At the time, Clark and the judge were friends.

Gift from Lincoln Law School

In March 2011, Judge Bailey accepted tickets to the Barristers Ball at his alma mater, Lincoln Law School. He was an honored guest because he is an alumnus and a local judge.

2. Conclusions of Law

Judges are precluded from accepting gifts from anyone, except under limited circumstances, which we have determined are not applicable here. (Canon 4D(6).) Even when the gift falls within one of the specified exceptions, the judge may not accept the gift if it could create an appearance of impropriety. (Canons 2, 2A.)[5]

Gifts from CASA

The masters concluded that Judge Bailey violated canons 1, 2, 2A, and 4D(6),[6] and engaged in prejudicial misconduct in accepting gifts from CASA. The masters reasoned that because CASA volunteers are frequent participants in juvenile court proceedings, Judge Bailey's acceptance of gifts from the organization could cause an objective observer to doubt his impartiality in matters concerning those volunteers. We agree and reach the same legal conclusions.

Judge Bailey maintains that his acceptance of tickets to the 2009 Snowball Event was proper because he was invited to that CASA event by his brother-in-law, Supervisor Ron Briggs, the event speaker. As such, he contends the gift fell within the exception for gifts from a relative whose appearance or interest in a case would require the judge's disqualification (former canon 4D(6)(f)).[7] The judge, however, identified the gift to have come from CASA on his Form 700, without any reference to Briggs. Further, even if the ticket came from Briggs, the judge's acceptance of the gift was improper because Briggs was a CASA director.

---

[5] Canon 4D(6) was amended, effective 2013, to state that the exceptions to the gift prohibition apply only if acceptance of the gift "would neither influence nor reasonably be perceived as intended to influence the judge in the performance of judicial duties."

[6] The masters also concluded that the judge violated canon 4D(5), which prohibits judges from accepting gifts from a "party" whose interests have come or are reasonably likely to come before the judge. While CASA has an interest in matters that come before Judge Bailey, CASA is not a party. Therefore, we do not find a violation of canon 4D(5).

The judge contends that his acceptance of the other CASA tickets was proper because there is no evidence that he acted in a judicial capacity in favor of CASA. The gift was improper under canon 4D(6), regardless of whether there was favorable judicial action in return for the gift.

Moreover, accepting gifts, even nominal gifts, from entities with interests that are reasonably likely to come before the court creates an appearance of impropriety and lack of impartiality in violation of canons 1, 2, and 2A.[8] CASA volunteers frequently appear in court and advocate for children. They may be called to testify and they may take a position contrary to the position or interests of parties in the proceedings, such as the parents. The CJA Ethics Committee has issued ethics opinions stating that a judge who sits in a juvenile court may not accept a gift of attendance at a CASA fundraiser event. (CJA, 2011/2012 Jud. Ethics Update, p. 5 [juvenile court judge may not accept an invitation to attend CASA fundraiser as guest of CASA]; CJA, 2003/2004 Jud. Ethics Update, p. 5 [commissioner in dependency court may attend CASA fundraiser but may not accept luncheon as gift from CASA].)

Judge Bailey argues that, given the laudable service CASA provides, acceptance of the gifts did not prejudice public esteem for the judiciary and does not constitute prejudicial conduct. He contends that judges should be involved in organizations that support at-risk children. The issue here is not the judge's involvement in a program for at-risk youth, but his acceptance of free attendance to CASA events as gifts.

---

[7] Former canon 4D(6)(f) was in effect at the time this gift was accepted. A similar exception is now in canon 4D(6)(a), which provides an exception for gifts from "a person whose preexisting relationship with the judge would prevent the judge under Canon 3E from hearing a case involving that person."

[8] In 2018, canon 4D(6) was amended to include subsection (i), which provides an exception to the gift prohibition for nominal gifts "provided the gift is not from a lawyer, law firm, or other person likely to appear before the court on which the judge serves." The commentary states a judge should carefully weigh acceptance of any nominal gift to avoid any appearance of impropriety or bias or any appearance that the judge is misusing the prestige of judicial office.

We agree with the masters that acceptance of three gifts, even nominal gifts, from an organization that frequently appears in court proceedings before the judge could cause an objective observer to doubt the judge's impartiality in matters involving those volunteers.

Gifts from Bradley Clark

The masters concluded that acceptance of the gifts from Clark constitutes improper action. We agree, and also conclude that the judge violated canons 1, 2, 2A, and 4D(6).

Judge Bailey contends that he did not commit misconduct because the gifts from Bradley fell within the exception under former canon 4D(6)(f) for gifts from close personal friends whose appearance before the court would require the judge's disqualification. We disagree. Clark testified that he considers the judge a friend, but not a close friend. Moreover, Judge Bailey's position is inconsistent with the position he took concerning count three, in which he maintained that he was not disqualified from appointing Clark to be a special master in Dorcich.

Further, gift exceptions are not absolute; a judge may not accept a gift if to do so would create an appearance of impropriety (canons 2, 2A).[9] Judge Bailey accepted a round of golf from Clark a few months after he appointed Clark as a special master in Dorcich and a month after he approved his fees. The judge asserts that there is no evidence that the round of golf was a gift for appointing Clark. The question, however, is whether it could have created that appearance. In the commission's view, it could reasonably create that appearance.

The examiner urges the commission to conclude that the judge engaged in prejudicial misconduct. While accepting the gifts could have created an appearance of [9] Canon 4D(6) currently states that the gift exceptions apply provided "that acceptance would not reasonably be perceived as intended to influence the judge in the performance of judicial duties."

impropriety, we agree with the masters that there is not clear and convincing evidence that the conduct would appear to an objective observer, knowing all the facts, to be "prejudicial to public esteem for the judicial office." (See Broadman, supra, 18 Cal.4th at p. 1092.) In this regard, we have considered that there is no evidence that Clark appeared before the judge as a party or an attorney representing a party, and that the judge reported the gifts on his Form 700, indicating that he was not attempting to conceal the gifts from the public.

Gift from Lincoln Law School

The masters concluded that Judge Bailey's acceptance of a ticket from Lincoln Law School violated canon 4D(6), and constitutes improper action. Neither party objects to this conclusion, which we adopt.[10]

G. Count Five

1. Findings of Fact

In November 2009, Judge Bailey attended a judicial education program at Northwestern University School of Law. The program paid for his travel, lodging, group meals, and related expenses. The judge did not report these payments on his 2009 Form 700.

In 2011, Judge Bailey attended a judicial education program at George Mason University School of Law (GMU) in Arlington, Virginia. The program paid for his lodging and group meals and reimbursed him for his travel expenses. The judge did not report the payments and reimbursements on his 2011 Form 700.

In his Answer to the Notice, the judge stated that he thought his attendance at the 2009 Northwestern program and 2011 GMU program did not have to be reported on his Form 700.

[10] As did the masters, we note that canon 4D(6)(h) provides an exception for invitations to events sponsored by educational institutions with which the judge is associated, if the same invitation is offered to persons who are not judges and are similarly situated. There is no evidence that other alumni were offered free tickets to this event.

The judge also attended two educational programs at GMU in March and October of 2014. The programs paid for his lodging and group meals and reimbursed him for his travel expenses.

In 2014, before he submitted his 2014 Form 700, Judge Bailey was informed by emails from both a court clerk and Presiding Judge Suzanne Kingsbury that any travel expenses associated with judicial education programs must be declared on the judge's Form 700.

On March 6, 2015, Judge Bailey filed his 2014 Form 700. On schedule E (Travel Payments, Advances and Reimbursements), he listed the two GMU programs he attended in 2014, and described the business activity of the source of income as "Judicial Education – tuition," but he did not fill in the amount of the payments received, or answer whether they were gifts or income. The programs did not charge tuition.

On March 11, 2015, the FPPC sent Judge Bailey a letter indicating that the judge had not reported the amount and type of payment. On April 1, 2015, the judge filed an amended Form 700 for 2014. On his amended Form 700, the judge inaccurately reported that he received $527.93 for the October GMU program. He actually received $1,348.51 for lodging and meals and $459.20 for travel.

The masters found that the judge inadvertently forgot to include some of his expenses. We defer to this finding.

2. Conclusions of Law

The masters concluded that Judge Bailey's incomplete and inaccurate reporting of payments on his Form 700 constitutes improper action, rather than prejudicial conduct, because his actions were inadvertent and negligent. Based on the masters' factual findings, to which we defer, we reach the same conclusion for the reasons discussed below.

The examiner contends that the judge engaged in prejudicial conduct in submitting inaccurate information on his amended 2014 Form 700, which was signed under penalty of perjury. In Inquiry Concerning Kreep (2017) 3 Cal.5th CJP Supp. 1, 10, the commission found that Judge Kreep engaged in prejudicial conduct in submitting a Form 700, which erroneously stated he was chairman of a political action committee and received salary from that committee. More than a year later, the judge filed an amended Form 700 and stated that he erroneously listed himself as chairman, and that the money he received was for legal services. The masters found that the judge acted with reckless disregard for the truth. The commission concluded that the judge committed prejudicial conduct, because, "an objective person would find a judge's conduct in signing an official document under penalty of perjury with a reckless disregard for the truth to be prejudicial to public esteem for the judicial office." (Id. at pp. 14-16.)

We agree with the examiner that a judge should be expected to take exceptional care in filling out FPPC forms, particularly when signed under penalty of perjury. Here, however, unlike in Kreep, the masters did not find that the judge acted with a reckless disregard for the truth. Instead, they found that Judge Bailey inadvertently forgot to include some of the income he received relating to the October 2014 program. Based on this finding, we are not convinced that an objective observer would find the judge's conduct to be prejudicial to public esteem for the judiciary. This does not mean Judge Bailey did not engage in misconduct. He violated canons 2, 2A, and 3 (judge shall perform the duties of the judicial office competently and diligently [a judge is required to file a Form 700]), and engaged in improper action.

H. Count Six

1. Findings of Fact

In May 2015, Judge Bailey had a conversation with administrative analyst Suzanne Thurman, Judge Vicki Ashworth, and Judge Dylan Sullivan, while standing in Thurman's cubicle in the court's administration building. Judge Sullivan complimented the judge on the outfit he was wearing. Judge Bailey said he bought the outfit in France, and the salesperson who put it together for him was gay. He explained that he knew it looked good because gay men are "snappy" dressers. The conversation took place in an open office area where other county employees would have been able to overhear the conversation.

The tone of the conversation was lighthearted. Judge Ashworth and Thurman testified they were offended by the comments, but Judge Sullivan was not offended.

2. Conclusions of Law

The masters concluded that the judge violated canons 2, 2A, and 3C(1) (judge to behave impartially in the performance of administrative duties and shall not engage in speech that would reasonably be perceived as bias or prejudice), and engaged in improper action. We concur and reach the same conclusions.

Because his remarks did not perpetuate invidious or hateful stereotypes, we agree with the masters that an objective observer would not view the remarks as prejudicial to public esteem for the judiciary, and thus the remarks constitute improper action, rather than prejudicial misconduct. This does not mean that such remarks are proper. As observed by the masters, the judge's comments "reflect stereotypical attitudes about gay men." It is improper for a judge to make remarks that reflect stereotypes based on sexual orientation, whether negative or positive. We agree with the masters that "[s]uch remarks indicate that the speaker has preconceived ideas about a particular group, a characteristic that is contrary to the qualities of impartiality and propriety required of judges by our Code of Judicial Ethics."

I. Counts Seven and Nine

1. Summary of Charges and Legal Issues

Count seven alleges in general terms that between August 2016 and August 2017, Judge Bailey used his judicial title and lent the prestige of judicial office to raise funds for his campaign, potential campaign, or exploratory committee to run for California Attorney General in 2018, personally solicited funds in support of his campaign for nonjudicial office, and accepted campaign contributions for a nonjudicial office without taking an unpaid leave of absence from his judicial office.

Count nine charges Judge Bailey with engaging in political and campaign activity that is inconsistent with the integrity, independence, and impartiality of the judiciary, and using his judicial title and prestige of his judicial office to promote his candidacy for Attorney General, including but not limited to 25 specific instances of campaign or potential campaign activity. In his Answer to the Notice, Judge Bailey admitted that he attended and participated in each of the events specified in count nine.

The California Code of Judicial Ethics prohibits an active judge from using the prestige of judicial office or the judicial title to advance the judge's own pecuniary and personal interests, and from personally soliciting funds for a nonjudicial candidate or engaging in political or campaign activity that creates an appearance of impropriety or lack of impartiality. (Canons 2B(2), 5, 5A(3).) A judge may, however, fundraise and campaign for nonjudicial office by taking an unpaid leave of absence. (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 17; canon 6H [a judge who is on leave while running for public office is exempt from complying with canons 2B(2), 4C(1) (appearance at public hearing) and 5].)

The masters concluded that the judge engaged in prejudicial conduct by raising funds and campaigning for a partisan, nonjudicial office while working as a judge, explicitly referring to his judicial title, and relying on the prestige of judicial office. This conduct, the masters concluded, is fundamentally inconsistent with the independence, impartiality and integrity of the judiciary. We agree.

Judge Bailey alleges that he did not engage in misconduct because he was conducting an exploratory, rather than actual, campaign. Further, he asserts that if the canons are interpreted to prevent him as a sitting judge from campaigning for nonjudicial office, without first taking an unpaid leave of absence, the canons violate his First Amendment rights. The masters rejected these arguments, as do we. Judge Bailey violated the Code of Judicial Ethics by soliciting contributions and conducting both an exploratory and actual campaign for nonjudicial office, and using the prestige of judicial office to do so. The applicable canons further a compelling state interest in preserving public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary, and fostering the appearance that judicial decisions are not politically motivated.

2. Findings of Fact

On September 7, 2016, Judge Bailey personally signed and filed California Form 410, Statement of Organization Recipient Committee for Judge Steven Bailey – Attorney General 2018. He solicited campaign contributions beginning in October 2016. The Judge Steven Bailey – Attorney General 2018 committee filed three campaign statements (Form 460) with the Secretary of State. Each statement was signed by Judge

Bailey. The statements indicated that the judge received the following contributions: $8,224 for the period January 1, 2016 through December 31, 2016; $15,353 for the period January 1, 2017 through June 30, 2017; and $3,609 for the period July 1, 2017 through December 31, 2017.

Between August 2016 and August 30, 2017, the judge's exploratory and actual campaigns made frequent use of his judicial title and photographs of himself wearing his judicial robe. He used email addresses and maintained a campaign website that featured the user names "judgestevenc.bailey" and "judgestevenbailey.ag2018." He distributed campaign donation envelopes and "rack cards" that referred to him as a "sitting judge" and stated that his "judicial experience and his legal and legislative skills make him uniquely qualified to be California's Attorney General in 2018."

Prior to his judicial retirement, Judge Bailey spoke at numerous political events, including in Whittier, Long Beach, Torrance, and Santa Fe Springs. He also attended the Patriots Award Breakfast and Charity Banquet in Whittier in September 2016, and the Mexican American Bar Association Judges Night & Awards Dinner in Los Angeles in November 2016. At these events, he usually handed out donation envelopes that referred to him as a sitting judge. Announcements for these events referred to his judicial title, and some included a summary of his judicial background and stated that Judge Bailey would be introducing his candidacy for California Attorney General. At the Santa Fe Springs event on October 7, 2016, he handed out flyers, identifying him as "Judge Steven Bailey," with photographs of himself in his judicial robe and judge's gavels.

When introduced at these events, Judge Bailey was referred to as both a sitting judge and a candidate or prospective candidate for California Attorney General. The judge did not instruct campaign staff members or the hosts of these events to avoid using his judicial title. His stump speech, delivered on some of these occasions, also referred to his judicial office and experience as a sitting judge. His speeches often included comments about his opinion on criminal justice legislation.

Between August 2016 and August 2017, Judge Bailey met or communicated with community, church, and Republican Party leaders to solicit support and endorsement for his candidacy or potential candidacy. Individuals associated with the Republican Party introduced the judge to supporters in Santa Clara County and San Mateo County. The judge held face-to-face meetings with a lobbyist for the California Building Industry Association and with the director of faith and public policy at a large evangelical church in Chino Hills in August 2016. The judge often arranged these meetings using his campaign email accounts that referenced his judicial title. During the meetings, he referred to himself as a judge.

In seeking a meeting with the lobbyist for the Building Industry Association, the judge sent an email with the signature line "Judge Steven Bailey," which stated, "While it might appear that the Office of the Attorney General has minimal impacts on the building industry, the Attorney General is the chief law officer for the people of this state. As such, the Attorney General is responsible for enforcing or not enforcing state air and water quality standards, CEQA and climate change. Having someone who has common sense is critical. The business community can no longer afford the selective enforcement of the law … I will be bringing my experience as a Judge to this office. As a Judge, I am committed to the fair application of the law using common sense."

In November 2016, Judge Bailey sought advice from Former Judge Julie Conger, a fellow director of the Alliance of California Judges (Alliance) and an expert on judicial ethics, about ethical prohibitions and standards he would be required to follow during his campaign. Judge Conger counseled Judge Bailey that he should not distribute flyers that included a photograph of him in his judicial robe, and urged him to remove his judicial title from emails related to his campaign and to avoid using the title in campaign literature until after he took a leave of absence from the bench. In May 2017, Judge Conger received a flyer from Judge Bailey's campaign that made numerous references to his judicial title and included a link for making monetary contributions. Judge Conger sent the judge an email stating that he had completely dismissed her advice and was using his judicial title inappropriately. She further suggested that he immediately take a leave of absence from his judicial office and resign his directorship with the Alliance. The judge resigned his directorship, but did not take a leave of absence from the bench and continued to use his judicial title to solicit support and contributions to his campaign for Attorney General.

Judge Bailey filed his Candidate Intention Statement with the Secretary of State on April 27, 2017. (The failure of the judge to file this statement before accepting contributions is the basis of the charges in count eight.)

Judge Bailey retired on August 31, 2017.

Judge Bailey filed his declaration of candidacy on February 25, 2018.

The masters found the evidence clearly established that Judge Bailey engaged in an exploratory campaign and an actual campaign for California Attorney General while he was a sitting superior court judge. Judge Bailey objects to the finding that he engaged in an actual campaign. He contends that he only engaged in an exploratory campaign and did not become an actual candidate until he filed his declaration of candidacy on February 25, 2018.

Based on our own review of the record, we find that the masters' finding is supported by clear and convincing evidence. The record is replete with references by the judge or his campaign staff to Judge Bailey's "campaign" for Attorney General. For instance, the block signature on some emails from his Southern California Campaign Coordinator included "Candidate for California Attorney General." In August 2016, the judge sent an email to numerous individuals stating that he would be introducing his new Southern California coordinator for "the campaign" and that she would be a great addition to the "campaign." In September 2016, the judge sent an email to "Andrea," stating that he would "like the opportunity to sit down and discuss [his] campaign for California Attorney General with [her]." Invitations to the Patriot Awards dinner stated "Congratulations to the 2016 Patriot Awards Honorees - Judge Steven Bailey California Attorney General Candidate November 2018." In an email to Douglas Boyd, the treasurer of the Los Angeles County Lincoln Club, the judge stated in reference to his appearance at an upcoming event, "As a candidate for Attorney General, I would plan on discussing . . . ." As early as October 7, 2016, the judge and/or his Southern California

Campaign Coordinator sent out business cards with the inscription, "Judge Steven Bailey, Candidate FOR CALIFORNIA ATTORNEY GENERAL."

3. Conclusions of Law

Canon Violations and Level of Misconduct

The masters concluded that by using his judicial title and lending the prestige of his judicial office to raise campaign funds and to promote his exploratory campaign and actual campaign for Attorney General, Judge Bailey violated canons 2B(2), 4A (a judge shall conduct all of the judge's extrajudicial activities so that they do not cast reasonable doubt on a judge's capacity to act impartially, demean the judicial office, interfere with the proper performance of judicial duties, or lead to frequent disqualification), 5 (a judge shall not engage in political activity that may create the appearance of political bias or impropriety), and 5A(3) (a judge shall not personally solicit funds for a nonjudicial candidate). We concur, and also conclude that the same conduct violated canons 2 and 2A.

A judge "considering running for nonjudicial office" may only engage in "private planning during time away from the courthouse" until the judge takes a leave of absence from the bench. (Rothman, supra, § 11:23, p. 747; see also Cal. Judges Assn., Judicial Ethics Update (2005), p. 2 [a judge "considering running for non-judicial office may not seek endorsements before taking [a] leave of absence."]) Further, canon 2B(2) prevents a sitting judge from using his or her judicial title to raise money in connection with a campaign for nonjudicial office. (Public Admonishment of Former Judge Paul E. Zellerbach (2011) [the judge took a leave of absence to campaign for nonjudicial office, but, when he returned to the bench, he allowed his judicial title to be used to solicit money to retire his campaign debt].) Judge Bailey went far beyond private planning. He actively solicited campaign contributions and endorsements, and spoke frequently at political and campaign events as a candidate or potential candidate for Attorney General.

Further, as the masters observed, Judge Bailey clearly used his judicial title and the prestige of his judicial office to promote his campaign:

> [Judge] Bailey's judicial title featured prominently in all of his campaign communications, from his Facebook page, email address and website names to his flyers, rack cards, and donation envelopes. He used his judicial title when seeking speaking engagements and introductions to potential supporters. [Judge] Bailey's campaign literature described him as a 'sitting judge' and stated his 'judicial experience' made him 'uniquely qualified' for the office of Attorney General. Even before he retired from the bench, [Judge] Bailey solicited and received thousands of dollars in campaign contributions.

We agree with the masters that Judge Bailey engaged in prejudicial conduct by raising funds and campaigning for a partisan, nonjudicial office while working as a judge, explicitly referring to his judicial title and relying on the prestige of his judicial office. This conduct is fundamentally inconsistent with the independence, impartiality and integrity of the judiciary, and is prejudicial to public esteem for the judicial office. (See, e.g., Williams-Yulee v. Florida Bar (2015)__ U.S.___ [135 S.Ct. 1656] (Williams-Yulee); Broadman, supra, 18 Cal.4th at p. 1103.)

The examiner requests that the commission find that Judge Bailey engaged in prejudicial conduct as to each of the 25 subcounts in count nine. The masters did not make specific factual findings or legal conclusions as to each subcount. We view the events and activities alleged in subcounts A through Y as evidence that the judge engaged in improper campaign and political activity on an ongoing basis for an extended period of time before he retired. As such, we conclude that between August 2016 and August 2017, the judge engaged in a course of prejudicial conduct by, without taking an unpaid leave of absence from judicial office, engaging in political and campaign activity that is inconsistent with the independence and integrity of the judiciary, and by using his judicial title and the prestige of his office to raise funds and promote his candidacy for Attorney General. The masters' factual findings, which we have adopted, support this conclusion.

First Amendment Challenge

Judge Bailey contends that enforcement of the prohibitions on political fundraising and campaigning in the California Code of Judicial Ethics, as applied to his campaign for Attorney General, violates the First Amendment of the United States Constitution. The masters found this argument unpersuasive, as do we.

We agree with and adopt the following analysis by the masters.

> 'The right to speak on political matters is the quintessential subject of our constitutional protections of the right of free speech. "Public discussion about the qualifications of those who hold or who wish to hold positions of public trust presents the strongest possible case for applications of the safeguards afforded by the First Amendment." [Citation.]' (Matson v. Dvorak (1995) 40 Cal.App.4th 539, 548; see also Macias v. Hartwell (1997) 55 Cal.App.4th 669, 673.)
>
> But the Supreme Court has also long recognized that 'the State has interests as an employer in regulating the speech of its employees that differ significantly from those it possesses in connection with regulation of the speech of the citizenry in general. The problem in any case is to arrive at a balance between the interests of the [employee], as a citizen, in commenting upon matters of public concern and the interest of the State, as an employer, in promoting the efficiency of the public services it performs through its employees.' (Pickering v. Board of Education (1968) 391 U.S. 563, 568 (Pickering); see also Broadman, supra, 18 Cal.4th at pp. 1102-1103 [applying Pickering balancing test to claim that former Canon 3A(6) violated judge's First Amendment rights].)
>
> A government entity may not strike this balance to prohibit an employee from speaking on issues of public concern in a manner that does not interfere with the employee's performance of his or her duties. (Pickering, supra, 391 U.S. at pp. 572-573.) It may, however, prohibit employees from actively participating in political activities such as becoming a candidate for elective office, fundraising, campaigning for another partisan candidate or managing such a campaign. (Civil Service Commission v. Letter Carriers (1973) 413 U.S. 548, 556, 564.) A state may also forbid civil servants from soliciting contributions to partisan campaigns, taking part in political rallies or meetings, soliciting votes and distributing partisan campaign literature. (Broadrick v. Oklahoma (1973) 413 U.S. 601, 616-617.)

Even greater restrictions may be imposed on elected office holders and members of the judiciary. For example, Clements v. Fashing (1982) 457 U.S. 957 (Clements), upheld a Texas state constitutional provision that prohibited elected officials, including judges, from running for the state Legislature during the official's term of office, even if the official resigned before becoming a candidate. In rejecting an equal protection challenge to the provision, the Supreme Court characterized the candidacy ban as a 'de minimis burden on the political aspirations of a current officeholder.' (Id. at p. 967, italics omitted.) The Court noted the provision furthers Texas' legitimate interest in safeguarding the integrity of its elected judiciary because a judge campaigning for legislative office might neglect his or her duties or 'be tempted to render decisions and take actions that might serve more to further his [or her] political ambitions than the responsibilities of his [or her] office.' (Id. at p. 968.)

The Court rejected a First Amendment challenge to the provision for similar reasons. It concluded the provision imposed an 'insignificant' burden on judges' First Amendment interests in candidacy because it required only that they wait until the end of their term in judicial office to run for the legislature. (Clements, supra, 457 U.S. at p. 972.)

*Williams-Yulee, supra,*___U.S.___ [135 S.Ct. 1656] upheld against a First Amendment challenge a canon of judicial ethics that prohibited judges and judicial candidates from personally soliciting campaign funds. The Court acknowledged that a state, 'may restrict the speech of a judicial candidate only if the restriction is narrowly tailored to serve a compelling interest.' (Id. at p. 1665.) States with elected judges have a 'compelling interest in preserving public confidence in the integrity of the judiciary . . . .' (Id. at p. 1666; see also Broadman, supra, 18 Cal.4th at p. 1103 [finding 'a compelling public interest in maintaining a judicial system that both is in fact and is publicly perceived as being fair, impartial, and efficient.'].) A canon of judicial ethics that prohibits a judge or judicial candidate from personally soliciting campaign donations is narrowly tailored to serve that compelling interest. (Williams-Yulee, supra, at p. 1666.) 'The way the Canon advances those interests is intuitive: Judges, charged with exercising strict neutrality and independence, cannot supplicate campaign donors without diminishing public confidence in judicial integrity.' (Ibid.)

By contrast, Minnesota violated the First Amendment when it adopted a canon of ethics stating that a ' "candidate for a judicial office, including an incumbent judge," shall not "announce his or her views on disputed legal or political issues." ' (Republican Party of Minnesota v. White (2002) 536 U.S. 765, 768.) Although the state has a compelling interest in preserving the impartiality of its judiciary and the appearance of judicial impartiality, the regulation was not narrowly tailored to serve that interest. (Id. at pp. 775, 788.) As Justice Kennedy explained in a concurring opinion, Minnesota may not 'censor what the people hear as they undertake to decide for themselves which candidate is most likely to be an exemplary judicial officer. Deciding the relevance of candidate speech is the right of the voters, not the State.' (Id. at p. 794.)

The Canons of Ethics at issue here – Canons 2B(2), 4A, 5 and 5A(3) — are more like those at issue in Clements, supra, and Williams-Yulee, supra, than Republican Party of Minnesota v. White, supra. Unlike the regulation at issue in Republican Party of Minnesota v. White, supra, our Canons of Ethics do not prohibit a judge from expressing an opinion on an issue of public concern. Instead, our Canons of Ethics strive to preserve both the reality and the appearance of judicial impartiality, integrity and independence, particularly from partisan politics. To that end, they require a judge to avoid extrajudicial activities that 'cast reasonable doubt on the judge's capacity to act impartially[,]' or 'may create the appearance of political bias or impropriety.' (Canon 4A, 5.) A judge may not use his or her judicial title or the prestige of judicial office to 'advance the pecuniary or personal interests of the judge [,]' including a personal interest in holding nonjudicial office. (Canon 2B(2), 5.) A judge may not personally solicit funds for a nonjudicial candidate. (Canon 5A(3).) Each of these restrictions falls away when a judge, seeking election to nonjudicial office, takes a leave of absence without pay from his or her judicial office. (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 17; Canon 6H.)

> Like the candidacy ban at issue in Clements, supra, article VI, section 17 of the Constitution and the Canons of Ethics require a judge to take an unpaid leave of absence or complete his or her term in judicial office before embarking on a campaign for nonjudicial office. California's compelling interest in preserving the independence, impartiality and integrity of its judiciary (Broadman, supra, 18 Cal.4th at pp. 1102-1103), is 'sufficient to warrant the de minimis interference with [judges'] interests in candidacy.' (Clements, supra, 457 U.S. at pp. 971-972, italics omitted.)
>
> Second, the restriction on fundraising for nonjudicial campaigns passes First Amendment muster for the reasons stated in Williams-Yulee, supra. As the Court noted, 'A State may assure its people that judges will apply the law without fear or favor - and without having personally asked anyone for money.' (Williams-Yulee, supra, 135 S.Ct. at p. 1662.)"

Judge Bailey contends that the masters incorrectly concluded that the canons are narrowly tailored to serve a compelling state interest (the strict scrutiny test). The examiner contends that this First Amendment issue here should be analyzed under the Pickering balancing test, a more permissive test than the strict scrutiny test.

We conclude that the canons pass constitutional muster under either test. As the Supreme Court pointed out in Williams-Yulee, since the judiciary's authority "depends in large measure on the public's willingness to respect and follow its decisions," public perception of judicial integrity is '"a state interest of the highest order.'" (Williams-Yulee, supra, 135 S.Ct. at p. 1666, citation omitted.)

When an active judge runs for nonjudicial office, particularly an office that litigates in state courts, there can be an appearance that the judge will make judicial decisions in a manner that will help his or her campaign, rather than based on the rule of law. This concern is illustrated in Judge Bailey's comments to the lobbyist for the Building Industry Association. The judge informed the lobbyist that the Attorney General has impact on the building industry through "enforcing or not enforcing state air and water quality standards, CEQA and climate change." A reasonable person could interpret this comment as suggesting that the judge would apply these laws in a manner favorable to the building industry while sitting as a judge running for Attorney General. Moreover, the concern may be even more pronounced when the judge is running for a position that includes criminal prosecution, such as the Attorney General, while presiding over criminal cases. This could lead to a perception that the judge will make rulings that appear to be "tough on crime" to promote the judge's candidacy.

In Wolfson v. Concannon (9th Cir. 2016) (en banc) 811 F.3d 1176, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals upheld an Arizona law prohibiting judges and judicial candidates from, among other things, personally endorsing or making speeches on behalf of other candidates for public office. The court concluded the law served a compelling state interest in preserving public confidence in the integrity of the judiciary, noting that "[w]hen a judicial candidate actively engages in political campaigns, a judge's impartiality can be put into question, and the public can lose faith in the judiciary's ability to abide by the law and not make decisions along political lines." (Id. at p. 1185.)

Judge Bailey also argues that even if there is a compelling state interest, the canons are not narrowly tailored to serve that interest. The Williams-Yulee Court stated that the First Amendment required that the canon be "narrowly tailored, not that it be 'perfectly tailored.'" (Williams-Yulee, supra, 135 S.Ct. at p. 1671, citation omitted.) "The impossibility of perfect tailoring is especially apparent when the State's compelling interest is as intangible as public confidence in the integrity of the judiciary . . . . [M]ost problems arise in greater and lesser gradations, and the First Amendment does not confine a State to addressing evils in their most acute form." (Ibid., citation omitted.) By applying canons 2B(2), 4C(1), and 5 only to judges who have not taken a leave of absence, the canons have been narrowly tailored to achieve the goals of preserving public confidence in the fairness and integrity of the judiciary, and fostering the appearance that judges do not make decisions for political reasons.

Judge Bailey contends that the canons are unconstitutionally vague. "A rule is not void for vagueness if it provides fair notice to those to whom [it] is directed." (Broadman, supra, 18 Cal.4th at pp. 1103-1104, quoting Gentile v. State Bar of Nevada (1991) 501 U.S. 1030, 1048, original brackets, interior quotation marks omitted.) The applicable canons provide fair notice to judges of their ethical obligations while campaigning for nonjudicial office. Canon 6H makes clear when a judge can use his or her judicial title and the prestige of judicial office in a campaign for nonjudicial office – when the judge takes a leave of absence without pay pursuant to article VI, section 17 of the California Constitution. In addition, canon 6H defines "political activity" to include "soliciting and accepting campaign contributions for the other [nonjudicial] public office."

The judge further contends that the canons are underinclusive and applied unequally because a judge running for judicial office in California can personally solicit funds, whereas a judge running for nonjudicial office cannot, without taking a leave of absence. With respect to a law being underinclusive, the United States Supreme Court has stated: "Although a law's underinclusivity raises a red flag, the First Amendment imposes no freestanding 'underinclusiveness limitation.' [Citation.] A State need not address all aspects of a problem in one fell swoop; policymakers may focus on their most pressing concerns." (Williams-Yulee, supra, 135 S.Ct at p. 1668.)

Moreover, there are compelling interests in treating judges differently when they are involved in nonjudicial campaigns. Solicitation of campaign funds for nonjudicial office may encroach on separation of powers and the independence of the judiciary. When a judge solicits funds for a nonjudicial political campaign, there can be a heightened perception that the judge's decisions will be politically motivated. Campaigns for nonjudicial office are inherently more political in nature than judicial campaigns. Candidates for judicial office are running for an office in which they are expected to follow the law, regardless of public opinion. Candidates for nonjudicial office, however, are running for office with a political point of view and are expected to express their political opinion. As the Williams-Yulee Court stated, "Judges are not politicians, even when they come on the bench by way of the ballot." (Williams-Yulee, supra, 135 S.Ct. at p. 1662.)

There is another compelling, and practical, reason for treating judges running for judicial office differently than judges running for nonjudicial office. Given that California judges are subject to periodic contested elections, requiring judges to take a leave of absence in order to campaign for and solicit funds for judicial office would be a significant burden on the administration of the judiciary, and could be subject to abuse. An attorney who is displeased with a judge's rulings could force the judge to take a leave of absence by running against the judge.

For these reasons, as did the masters, we reject Judge Bailey's First Amendment challenge to the Code of Judicial Ethics as applied to him.

J. Count Eight

1. Findings of Fact

Judge Bailey filed a Candidate Intention Statement (Form 501) for the Office of Attorney General on April 27, 2017. Government Code section 85200, a provision of the Political Reform Act, provides that, "[p]rior to the solicitation or receipt of any contribution or loan, an individual who intends to be a candidate for an elective state office . . . shall file with the Secretary of State an original statement, signed under penalty of perjury, of intention to be a candidate for a specific office." Judge Bailey's campaign committee organized in September 2016, and accepted monetary contributions of $17,749 before April 27, 2017.

Judge Bailey acknowledges that the campaign committee for his Attorney General campaign solicited and accepted contributions before he filed the Form 501 for that campaign. He asserts that the untimely filing was inadvertent and caused by the then-treasurer of his campaign. When the campaign hired a new treasurer, she discovered the mistake and filed a Form 501 for the campaign. The masters found the judge's untimely filing was an oversight, and the result of Judge Bailey's failure to properly supervise his campaign staff and attend to the administrative requirements of his campaign. We adopt this finding.

2. Conclusions of Law

Judge Bailey violated Government Code section 85200 by soliciting and accepting campaign contributions before filing his Candidate Intention Statement. In so doing, he violated canon 5, which requires judges to "comply with all applicable election, election campaign, and election campaign fundraising laws and regulations," and canon 2A.

The masters concluded that the judge's misconduct constitutes improper action. The examiner asks the commission to conclude that the judge engaged in prejudicial conduct.

A purpose of Political Reform Act is to ensure that receipts and expenditures in election campaigns are fully and truthfully disclosed in order that voters may be fully informed and improper practices inhibited. (Gov. Code, § 81002(a).) The commission has stated that even unintentional violations of campaign reporting laws can undermine public respect for the judiciary. (Public Admonishment of Judge Tara M. Flanagan (2017); Public Admonishment of Judge Charles R. Brehmer (2012).) In this case, however, the judge filed a campaign statement reporting contributions he received before he filed his Candidate Intention Statement. Thus, because the violation of the Political Reform Act was inadvertent and did not deprive the public of important information, we adopt the masters' conclusion that the judge engaged in improper action.

K. Count Ten

1. Findings of Fact

In 2016, Martha Romero, Judge Bailey's Southern California Campaign Coordinator, created the "Judge Steven Bailey" Facebook page for the judge's Attorney General campaign. Romero informed the judge that she had created the page by the end of 2016. In November and December 2016, she had made several posts on the page referring to Judge Bailey by his judicial title and promoting his campaign. Judge Bailey was informed of the Facebook page in a supplemental preliminary investigation letter from the commission dated December 16, 2016. He did not instruct Romero to stop using his judicial title in the posts.

Romero is a Los Angeles-area attorney who has known Judge Bailey since 2000. In August 2016, Judge Bailey told Romero that he was thinking of running for Attorney General and asked her to help with the exploratory campaign. The judge gave Romero the title of Southern California Campaign Coordinator. On August 13, 2016, Judge Bailey sent an email to numerous individuals introducing Romero by this title.

As the Southern California Campaign Coordinator, Romero made arrangements for the judge to meet people in Southern California, attended events with him, and made contacts with people on the judge's behalf. In September 2016, Judge Bailey, by email, tried to set up meetings with Southern California Republicans. He included Romero on the emails and asked the recipients to work with her to schedule the meetings. Romero's responsibilities included arranging for Judge Bailey to attend the Patriots Award event in Whittier and for his campaign to buy an advertisement in the event program; setting up other meetings with Republican groups; corresponding with people who attended the events and expressed interest in the campaign; and arranging for Judge Bailey to attend the Mexican American Bar Association Judges' Night and Awards Dinner in Los Angeles.

2. Conclusions of Law

The masters concluded that Judge Bailey violated canon 2B(2) and engaged in prejudicial misconduct by failing to supervise Romero and take any measures to guard against the impermissible use of his title. The masters noted: "Even after he learned about the Facebook page, [Judge] Bailey took no action to cure the improper use of his judicial title. He did not ask Romero to delete the page, edit her posts or even to avoid using his title in the future." We concur and reach the same legal conclusions, and find that the judge violated canons 2 and 2A, in addition to 2B(2).

Judge Bailey asserts that he cannot restrict the First Amendment rights of others to free speech. The examiner acknowledges that if Romero had no connection to Judge Bailey, he could not be held responsible for anything she posted on her personal Facebook pages. As the masters point out, however, Romero was the judge's Southern California Campaign Coordinator, and very involved in the judge's campaign. As such, we concur with the masters that the judge had an obligation to take some action to prevent the improper use of his title in connection with campaign communications and events, even if it was just to instruct Romero to ensure that the Facebook page did not refer to his judicial title and position. (Cal. Com. Jud. Ethics Opns., Opinion 2016-008, p. 21 ["[j]udges have an affirmative obligation to guard against impermissible uses of their judicial titles"].)

Judge Bailey further argues that he did not engage in prejudicial conduct because the public would have no way of knowing if he asked Romero not to use his title. The standard for prejudicial conduct, however, assumes that an objective observer is familiar with the facts. (Inquiry Concerning Van Voorhis (2003) 48 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 257, 266, citing Doan v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1995) 11 Cal.4th 294, 312.) In the commission's view, the judge's failure to supervise a campaign staffer and take any measures to guard against impermissible use of his judicial title would be considered prejudicial to public esteem for the judiciary in the eyes of an objective observer.

L. Count Eleven

1. Findings of Fact

Romero also maintained a Facebook page for her law firm, the Romero Law Firm. In a post on that page, dated October 29, 2016, Romero included photos of Judge Bailey and wrote, "My friend Judge Steven Bailey is running for California Attorney General 2018 [sic] He is not a politician. Please Help us!" and "Judge Steven Bailey. Candidate for Attorney General 2018. He will be the next Attorney General!!! Please repost. We need to win this!!"

Judge Bailey became aware of this post in December 2016, when he received a supplemental preliminary investigation letter from the commission. At that time, the judge asked Romero to remove any photographs she had posted of him in his judicial robes. He did not, however, ask her to make any other changes to her posts.

2. Conclusions of Law

For the reasons discussed with respect to count ten, the masters concluded that Judge Bailey engaged in prejudicial conduct in failing to take any measures to guard against the improper use by Romero of his judicial title. We reach the same conclusion and conclude that the conduct violated canons 2, 2A, and 2B(2).

As did the masters, we acknowledge that Judge Bailey could not force Romero to edit her posts about him or to avoid using his judicial title in future posts. He could, however, have asked her to modify her posts to be in compliance with his ethical obligations.

Judge Bailey suggests that by disciplining him for Romero's posts, the commission infringes on Romero's First Amendment rights. That is not the case. Romero's First Amendment rights are not implicated by requiring the judge to ask her to comply with a request to remove the Facebook posts.

IV.

DISCIPLINE

In determining the appropriate level of discipline, we first and foremost consider our mandate to protect the public, enforce rigorous standards of judicial conduct, and maintain public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary. (See Broadman, supra, 18 Cal.4th at pp. 1111-1112.) We have determined that this purpose is best served by imposition of a censure and bar based on the following considerations.[11]

The appropriate level of discipline depends to a large extent on the nature and number of incidents of misconduct. (Furey v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1987) 43 Cal.3d 1297, 1307, fn. 2.) We look to see whether the misconduct is an isolated incident or reflects a pattern of misconduct indicating that the judge lacks the integrity, impartiality, and temperament required of a judge. (See *Fletcher, supra,*19 Cal.4th at p. 918.) In this matter, Judge Bailey has engaged in numerous incidents of misconduct spanning the entire course of his judicial career, including a course of prejudicial conduct involving improper campaign activity over a period of a year. In addition, in 2013, he received a strong advisory letter for delays in ruling on at least 15 matters.

[11] Article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution provides that the commission may "censure a judge or former judge ... for action ... that constitutes willful misconduct in office, ... or conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute . . . ." The commission may also bar a former judge who has been censured from receiving an assignment, appointment, or reference of work from any California state court. (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18(d).) The acts of prejudicial conduct in this matter support our determination to censure and bar Judge Bailey.

The extent and nature of the judge's misconduct reflects an inability or unwillingness to comply with the standards of judicial conduct expected of every judge. Judge Bailey has violated the Code of Judicial Ethics both on the bench and off the bench. His misconduct involves a broad spectrum of ethical violations, including making judicial orders and an appointment without disclosing personal relationships reasonably related to disqualification, improper receipt of gifts, failing to make complete and accurate disclosures to the FPPC as required by law, making comments reflecting bias, and using the prestige of his judicial office to campaign for and solicit funds for his campaign for nonjudicial office, without taking a leave of absence from the bench. Judge Bailey demonstrated a conscious disregard of his ethical obligations by continuing to campaign for Attorney General without taking a leave of absence after being advised by a judicial ethics expert that he was in violation of the canons, and by failing to ask Romero to stop referring to him by his judicial title on Facebook posts after being alerted to the posts by the commission.

Significantly, the masters observed, "Judge Bailey has his own view on 1. being a judge, 2. acting with proper judicial demeanor, 3. Superior Court administration, and 4. appropriate conduct on the bench. We believe that his views are misinformed and erroneous." The masters also note that he is lacking in judicial temperament. Our own review of the record and observation of the judge at his appearance reveal a judge who plays by his own rules with little concern for whether his conduct comports with the rules applicable to all judges under the Code of Judicial Ethics.

Another important factor we consider is whether the judge has shown an appreciation for the impropriety of his conduct. "A judge's failure to appreciate or admit to the impropriety of his or her acts indicates a lack of capacity to reform." (Inquiry Concerning Platt (2002) 48 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 227, 248; see Policy declaration 7.1(2)(a).) Judge Bailey contends that much of his conduct was proper and in accordance with his ethical obligations. In our view, he interprets the canons in an unreasonably liberal manner in order to justify his conduct.

Judge Bailey claims he has "suffered a continuous onslaught of allegations from the Commission and Presiding Judge Suzanne Kingsbury." He suggests that Judge Kingsbury and the "toxic environment in the El Dorado Superior Court" are to blame for the charges he faced. Judge Bailey fails to recognize it is his improper conduct that is the basis of this inquiry, regardless of the motivations of those who brought forth the allegations. There is no evidence that a toxic environment in the court or any animosity between Judge Bailey and Judge Kingsbury resulted in misinformation being provided to the commission or inaccuracies in the evidence presented against the judge.

Another aggravating factor is Judge Bailey's failure to cooperate fully with the commission's investigation on one issue. (Policy declaration 7.1(2)(b).) During the preliminary investigation, the judge denied that he created the "Judge Steven Bailey" Facebook page. In a supplemental preliminary investigation letter and a follow up email, the judge was asked for the identity of the person or persons who created or maintained the "Judge Steven Bailey" Facebook page. The judge did not provide the requested information in response to either inquiry, even though he knew Romero was the person who created and controlled the Facebook page.

Whether the misconduct undermines the integrity of and respect for the judiciary is another factor the commission considers in determining the appropriate discipline. "The maintenance of the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary is severely impaired" when a judge uses the title or prestige of judicial office to obtain a personal advantage. (Rothman, supra, § 8.40, pp. 530-531.) Here, Judge Bailey used the prestige of his judicial office extensively to promote his own candidacy for Attorney General. Further, the judge repeatedly failed to abide by the Code of Judicial Ethics and requirements of the Political Reform Act. Citizens are expected to comply with the rule of law. Public respect for the judiciary cannot help but be eroded when a judge fails to abide by laws and rules applicable to the judiciary.

We believe there is a very high probability that Judge Bailey will engage in future misconduct if he were to return to the bench. There is little likelihood of reform when a judge has engaged in multiple ethical violations on and off the bench during the entire course of his or her judicial career, fails to appreciate the impropriety of the misconduct, and continues to engage in the same conduct despite being advised of the ethical impropriety.

In order to fulfill our mandate to protect the public, enforce rigorous standards of judicial conduct, and maintain public confidence in the integrity of the judiciary, we have determined that Judge Bailey should be censured and barred from sitting in a judicial capacity in the future.

ORDER

Good cause appearing, the commission hereby censures former Judge Steven C. Bailey and bars him from seeking or holding judicial office, or accepting a position or an assignment as judicial officer, subordinate judicial officer or judge pro tem with any court in the State of California, or accepting reference of work from any California state court, at any time in the future.

Commission members Nanci E. Nishimura, Esq.; Hon. Michael B. Harper; Anthony P. Capozzi, Esq.; Hon. William S. Dato; Mr. Eduardo De La Riva; Ms. Sarah Kruer Jager; Ms. Pattyl A. Kasparian; Dr. Michael A. Moodian; Mr. Richard Simpson; and Hon. Erica R. Yew voted to issue this decision and order imposing a public censure and bar. Mr. Adam N. Torres did not participate in deliberations or vote in this matter.

Dated: February 27, 2019

Nanci E. Nishimura
Chairperson

STATE OF CALIFORNIA

BEFORE THE COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

| | |
|---|---|
| INQUIRY CONCERNING JUDGE JEFFREY G. BENNETTNo. 206 | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC CENSURE PURSUANT TO STIPULATION (Commission Rule 127) |

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge Jeffrey G. Bennett, a judge of the Ventura County Superior Court. On March 2, 2020, the commission filed its Notice of Formal Proceedings against Judge Bennett. Judge Bennett and his counsel, Heather L. Rosing, Esq. of Klinedinst PC, have entered into a stipulation with the examiner for the Commission on Judicial Performance, Mark A. Lizarraga, Esq., pursuant to commission rule 127, to resolve the pending formal proceedings involving Judge Bennett by imposition of a public censure. The Stipulation for Discipline by Consent (Stipulation) was approved by the commission on March 18, 2020, pursuant to the following terms and conditions and stipulated facts and legal conclusions. A copy of the Stipulation is attached.

TERMS AND CONDITIONS OF AGREEMENT

1. This agreement resolves the matters alleged in the Inquiry Concerning Judge Jeffrey G. Bennett, No. 206.

2. The commission shall issue a public censure based on the agreed Stipulated Facts and Legal Conclusions set forth therein.

3. If the commission accepts this proposed disposition, the commission's decision and order imposing public censure may articulate the reasons for its decision and include explanatory language that the commission deems appropriate.

4. Upon acceptance by the commission, the Stipulation, the judge's affidavit of consent, and the commission's decision and order shall be made public.

5. Judge Bennett waives any further proceedings and review in this matter, including formal proceedings (rules 118, et seq.), and review by the Supreme Court (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 9.60).

6. The commission may reject this proposed disposition and resume formal proceedings. If the commission does so, nothing in this proposed disposition will be deemed to be admitted by Judge Bennett.

The parties stipulated and agreed that the commission shall issue a public censure on the above Terms and Conditions of Agreement, and based on the following Stipulated Facts and Legal Conclusions.

STIPULATED FACTS AND LEGAL CONCLUSIONS

Judge Bennett became a judge of the Ventura County Superior Court in 2009. His current term began in January 2015.

Count One

On March 11, 2015, Judge Bennett was presiding in the master calendar department. An African-American defendant appeared before him who had an outstanding warrant on a felony. In determining whether to remand the defendant into custody, Judge Bennett asked the defendant a series of questions and the defendant provided what the judge believed to be evasive answers. Judge Bennett then asked the defendant to stop "shucking and jiving."

The conduct described above violated the Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 1 (a judge should participate in establishing, maintaining, and enforcing high standards of conduct, and shall personally observe those standards so that the integrity and independence of the judiciary is preserved), 2 (a judge shall avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety in all of the judge's activities), 2A

(a judge shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary), 3B(4) (a judge shall be patient, dignified, and courteous to those with whom the judge deals in an official capacity), and 3B(5) (a judge shall not engage in speech, gestures, or other conduct that would reasonably be perceived as bias), and constitutes prejudicial misconduct.

Count Two

On May 17, 2016, Judge Bennett presided over the matter of People v. Gilbert Regalado, No. 2015027976. On that date, the People were represented by Deputy District Attorney (DDA) Marc Leventhal, and the defendant was represented by defense counsel Victor Salas. Judge Bennett met in chambers with the attorneys to discuss settlement. Salas entered chambers first and shook the judge's hand. Leventhal then greeted the judge and held out his hand. Judge Bennett looked at Leventhal's hand and stated, "I'm not sure I want to shake your hand," or words to that effect, but did shake his hand. Leventhal asked the judge if something was the matter. Judge Bennett replied with a statement to the effect of, "Do you know how much trouble you have caused me? Do you know how much money I have had to pay lawyers because of you?" Judge Bennett then spoke about the matter of People v. Thomas Campi, No. 2014032929, in which Leventhal had previously appeared before him, for about five minutes. The judge stated that someone had complained about him to the Commission on Judicial Performance, leading to a disciplinary hearing. The judge stated he had spent more than $10,000 on lawyers and had to obtain personal references and testimonials to "clear [his] name," or words to that effect.

Judge Bennett's comments and conduct toward DDA Leventhal created, at a minimum, the appearance of retaliation based on the belief that Leventhal had complained to the commission about the Campi matter, or had assisted or cooperated with an investigation that the commission had performed. The judge falsely stated that his name had been "clear[ed]" in the 2015 commission matter, and falsely stated that he had to pay lawyers $10,000 in connection with his defense in that matter.

The conduct described above violated the Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 1, 2, 2A, 3B(4), 3B(5), and 3D(5) (a judge shall not retaliate, directly or indirectly, against a person known or suspected to have assisted or cooperated with an investigation of a judge), and constitutes prejudicial misconduct.

Count Three

Judge Bennett engaged in undignified, discourteous, and offensive sexualized (or otherwise crude) conduct in the workplace, as follows.

A. Judge Bennett repeatedly stated, while in chambers and in the presence of DDA Elisabeth Main, that he was the "only one in the courthouse with the balls to make a ruling," or words to that effect. The last time the judge made such a statement in DDA Main's presence was in 2018.

B. On January 17, 2018, while seated on the bench and wearing his judicial robe, Judge Bennett engaged in conversation with others in the courtroom about recent mudslides in the area. Present in the courtroom were the judge's judicial assistant, a bailiff, and several attorneys. Judge Bennett told a personal story about living in a guest house in Montecito and being responsible for washing the homeowner's Rolls Royce automobile. The judge stated that he had driven the vehicle to a coffee shop. Judge Bennett made a statement to the effect of, "They're good cars, those Rolls Royces. They're sturdy cars, built like a tank." The judge further made a statement to the effect of, "Chicks really dug that car."

There is a factual dispute as to whether the judge stated that the Rolls Royce "had a big back seat, if you know what I mean," and then gestured "finger guns" with his bailiff. It does not appear necessary to resolve this dispute, as the inclusion of this matter would not affect the proposed discipline.

C. In 2016, while in chambers with DDA Michael Kern and a male defense attorney, Judge Bennett stated that he had installed a telescope on the roof of his home or an outbuilding. The judge stated that he would not spend so much time with his telescope if he had "a 20-year-old smoking hot blonde wife," or words to that effect.

There is a factual dispute as to whether the judge stated that his dental hygienist was "a smoking hot 10" and could "do whatever she wanted" to him. It does not appear necessary to resolve this dispute, as the inclusion of this matter would not affect the proposed discipline.

D. In 2014, DDA Amber Lee and Deputy Public Defender (DPD) Heather Tomka appeared before Judge Bennett for a hearing on a motion to suppress evidence. After the hearing concluded, the judge had his clerk ask the attorneys to return to his courtroom. While standing in the hallway, Judge Bennett told the attorneys that he had "the balls" to admit when he got something wrong. The judge made a statement to the effect of, "I have the biggest balls in the courthouse. I'm probably the only judge who has the balls to admit when I've made the wrong decision." The last time the judge mentioned his "balls," he gestured with his hand over his genital area.

E. On January 24, 2014, Judge Bennett presided over the matter of People v. Jesus Rangel, No. 2013023726. The people were represented by DDA Amber Lee, and the defendant was represented by DPD Justine Avtjoglou. While in chambers with the attorneys, the judge discussed his preferred method of receiving a flu shot. Judge Bennett said that he goes with the other judges to get a flu shot at the employee health center. He then said, "The difference between me and them is I like to take my shot in the ass," or words to that effect. Judge Bennett laughed and then made a statement to the effect of, "I mean it, man. You should see their faces. They start to roll up their sleeves, and I just drop 'trou' and take my shot in the ass." The judge then stood up and repeated the statement while pretending to unfasten [his] belt.

The conduct described above violated the Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 1, 2, 2A, and 3B(4), and constitutes prejudicial misconduct.

Count Four

Judge Bennett improperly commented about the filing of peremptory challenges, as follows.

A. On May 14, 2018, the matter of People v. Dustin Beverford, No. 2015038470, was before Judge Bennett for sentencing. The People were represented by DDA Amber Lee, and the defendant was represented by DPD Dusty Kawai. During the hearing, the judge heard argument from counsel concerning sentencing in case No. 2015038470, and in a separate case involving the defendant, ending in 7071, that had been tried before Commissioner Sabo. Judge Bennett determined to sentence the defendant in case No. 2015038470, and to send the other case back to Commissioner Sabo. The transcript reflects the following colloquy:

> THE COURT: Another thing I can do is I can just sentence him on the case that I have and I can send this other case back to the judge who did the trial and you can argue about it there. I can do that and that's exactly what I am going to do.
>
> MS. LEE: Fair enough.
>
> THE COURT: You can argue about it there. I think that's -- this all got fouled up, by the way, for purposes of [the] record because people are filing papers against judges all over the place, judges are recused. You know, it's a difficult problem for the same reasons that the courthouse is, quite frankly, a mess often around here because people have personal agendas.

Judge Bennett's comments referred to, or at a minimum, gave the appearance of referring to, peremptory challenges filed by the People. The People filed peremptory challenges against the judge in People v. Dustin Beverford, No. 2017042581, on April 16, 2018; People v. Santos, No. 2018003742, on May 7, 2018; and People v. McGuire, No. 2018004884, on May 11, 2018.

B. On a date between approximately November 2017 and April 2018, Judge Bennett was in chambers with DDA Brandon Ross and a defense attorney. Judge Bennett made a statement to DDA Ross to the effect of, "Why are you guys papering me?" or "I know who's papering me and I know why." The judge stated that a female prosecutor, who had moved to Orange County, told him that the Ventura County District Attorney's Office had a policy regarding filing peremptory challenges against him.

The conduct described above violated the Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 1, 2, and 2A, and constitutes prejudicial misconduct.

Count Five

In the summer or fall of 2018, DDA Elisabeth Main appeared in Judge Bennett's courtroom to handle a case involving possession of controlled substances in the jail. Judge Bennett previously recused from cases involving the jail because of a family member who works there. DDA Main spoke to the bailiff and was told the case would be sent back to Department 13 (master calendar). Main told the bailiff she was hoping that that would be done while there were still courtrooms available. When the case was called, Main stated that the bailiff had said the case would probably be sent back to Department 13. Judge Bennett stated in open court and in the bailiff's presence, "He doesn't know what the hell he's talking about," or words to that effect.

The conduct described above violated the Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 1, 2, 2A, and 3B(4), and constitutes, at a minimum, improper action.

Count Six

Judge Bennett engaged in a pattern of conduct that was undignified, discourteous, and offensive, and that conveyed, at a minimum, the appearance of bias against prosecutors, as follows.

A. On September 20, 2018, Judge Bennett met in chambers with DDA Amber Lee and defense counsel Anzac Jacobs regarding an expungement motion in case No. 2012020853. During the chambers discussion, the judge stated that he was transferring to the civil division and needed a change because he had "done 20 murder trials," having just completed one with "special circs," and a bunch of "big sex cases." Judge Bennett then stated, "Honestly, I'm tired of being called names, mostly by my former office," or words to that effect. Judge Bennett stated that he was being called "untrue names," despite being a "fair and honest guy," or words to that effect. Judge Bennett stated that he had eight more years to go before he could retire, and that he considered running for district attorney (DA) because he had "a shit-ton of money," or words to that effect. Judge Bennett stated that he may still consider running for DA if the civil assignment does not work out, but that he could not stay in a criminal department when people were calling him names.

B. Judge Bennett presided over the first trial in People v. Joseph William Allawos, No. 2017027912, a misdemeanor elder abuse case. On June 6, 2018, during deliberations, the jury submitted a note to the court. DDA Brandon Yeaton appeared for the trial prosecutor, who was unavailable at the time. DPD Cerise Fritsch made a comment on the record about "rotating DA's." Judge Bennett responded, "Reaching way down the bench, huh?" After the jury was subsequently seated, the judge stated on the record, "There's a new DA here. Apparently, the other ones were too busy."

C. There is a factual dispute as to whether, on May 17, 2018, during a chambers conference with counsel in People v. Carlos Lozano, No. 2018016122, the judge stated that he wished he had three hands, including one to "wipe [his] ass." It does not appear necessary to resolve this dispute, as the inclusion of this matter would not affect the proposed discipline.

D. On April 5, 2018, Judge Bennett presided over the jury trial in People v. Anthony Ross, No. 2017019548. The People were represented by DDA Brandon Ross, and the defendant was represented by DPD Monique Magar. In the jury's presence, DDA Ross requested a recess. Judge Bennett called the attorneys to the bench, and told them he did not like to waste time. The judge gestured toward the jury and made a statement to the effect of, "I care about them. You know why I care about them? Because they're voters. I don't care about you. I care about them because they're voters, and I don't care about you, and you can quote me on that."

E. On March 2, 2018, in People v. Antonio Herrera, No. 2016004078, Judge Bennett presided over a hearing on the People's motion for a continuance, and on the People's motion to conduct a conditional examination of a material witness, which had both been filed on January 18, 2018. The People were represented by DDA Jillian Ewan, and the defendant was represented by DPD Jennifer Rosenthal. During the hearing, Judge Bennett ordered DDA David Barnes to appear and questioned him about a declaration he had submitted. Following Barnes's testimony, the following colloquy occurred:

> THE COURT: So essentially, the People's position is that the motion for a conditional exam was timely filed. Uh, it's just that a function of the court process, uh, it looks like both sides were unable to litigate that request, that's what it looks like.
>
> MS. EWAN: Yes, Your Honor.
>
> THE COURT: Yeah. That would have been a better way for you to state it.
>
> MS. EWAN: I'll note that for the future, Your Honor.
>
> THE COURT: You can note it for right now.

F. On February 7, 2018, in People v. Antonio Viveros, No. 2017031420, Judge Bennett presided over a hearing on the People's motion for continuance due to the unavailability of a law enforcement officer. The People were represented by DDA Hayley Moyer, and the defendant was represented by DPD

Cerise Fritsch. During the hearing, DDA Moyer stated that a prior motion to advance had been denied by Judge Ayers, and that, at the time that motion was heard, the officer was available. The following colloquy then ensued:

> THE COURT: So, it's Judge Ayers is what you're saying.
>
> MS. MOYER: I'm, I'm -- I don't know why Judge Ayers --
>
> THE COURT: Is that what you're saying?
>
> MS. MOYER: I'm not saying it's her fault.
>
> THE COURT: What are you saying then?

Later in the hearing, in discussing the People's motion, the following colloquy ensued:

> THE COURT: So, in between the 22nd and the 26th, is when the People discovered, they're telling me in this declaration signed by Ms. Hayley Moyer as an officer of the Court, that they figured out that the cop wasn't going to be here, and that he was an essential witness. And that seems to be the problem to me.
>
> MS. MOYER: That's correct, Your Honor.
>
> THE COURT: And, I don't need a cheering section okay? So, if I need something from you, I'll ask you, all right.
>
> MS. MOYER: Of course.

G. On February 1, 2018, Judge Bennett presided over a hearing in People v. Jesus Lopez Cruz, No. 2017025833. The People were represented by DDA Heather Sweatman, and the defendant was represented by DPD Cerise Fritsch. During the hearing, DDA Sweatman stated that the parties had been unable to resolve the case because the defense wanted a charge that did not include moral turpitude, which was not supported by the facts of the case. Judge Bennett asked Sweatman if the facts stated in her trial brief were true, which led to the following colloquy:

> MS. SWEATMAN: Those are true. If I -
>
> THE COURT: Uh-huh.
>
> MS. SWEATMAN: -- may provide a little further detail.
>
> THE COURT: No, it's not necessary. I get it.
>
> MS. SWEATMAN: Well, your honor, if I may, the defendant --
>
> THE COURT: Uh, no - [Unintelligible] - you may not. I'm not finished talking yet. You interrupt me again, we're gonna have a problem. Do you understand that?

Later in the hearing, Judge Bennett told DDA Sweatman that she did not have enough evidence to "get past the [Penal Code section] 1118 motion." Sweatman responded that if that was the case, she would ask that the defense brief the issue and allow the People to respond in writing. Judge Bennett stated to Sweatman:

> THE COURT: ... I'm just being honest with you, I'm not trying to give you a hard time. I don't mind wasting the public's time on something like this, but I don't think it's the right thing to do if you can't prove it. It seems to me like you need to have the person here to prove those facts. But if you don't think you do, I mean, I'm not gonna dismiss the case. You can do what you want. You can embarrass the district attorney, if you like. That's fine.

H. In October 2017, Judge Bennett presided over the matter of People v. Julia Parker and Emilia Borcena, No. 2016010310. The People were represented by Deputy Attorney General (DAG) Melissa Zubi, defendant Parker was represented by defense attorney Donald Marks, and defendant Borcena was represented by defense attorney Arthur Khachatourians. During a chambers conference with Zubi and defense counsel, Judge Bennett made several comments about how bad the Attorney General was at prosecuting cases. Judge Bennett stated that he had just finished an environmental case with the Attorney General, and "that was an important case, and they messed that one up, too," or words to that effect.

During the chambers conference, Judge Bennett discussed with counsel motions in limine the defense said it wanted to bring. The judge made preliminary rulings that excluded most of the prosecution's evidence. DAG Zubi noted that she had no case if most of her evidence was excluded. Judge Bennett stated in response, "You can tell [Attorney General Xavier] Becerra that's what he gets for going against my president," or words to that effect. Judge Bennett also stated to Zubi, "It's my job to give the government a bad time," or words to that effect.

I. On August 9, 2017, Judge Bennett presided over a hearing on a motion to suppress evidence (Penal Code section 1538.5) in People v. Nicolas Macias-Hernandez, No. 2016031450. The People were represented by DDA Brandon Yeaton, and the defendant was represented by DPD Julie Taylor. On August 9, Judge Bennett granted the motion. On August 10, 2017, the judge called the attorneys back to his courtroom and told them that he had changed his mind and had determined to deny the motion. After excusing the attorneys, Judge Bennett asked DDA Yeaton to approach the bench on an unrelated matter, in which Yeaton needed the judge's signature for an order of forfeiture. Judge Bennett signed the order and then began telling Yeaton about his time as a police officer, Chief DDA, and judge. While speaking of supervisors in the DA's office, Judge Bennett made a statement to the effect of, "Tell [DDA Brent] Nibecker he's an idiot. I've told him to his face, I don't care."

J. On December 9, 2016, Judge Bennett presided over a hearing in People v. Dennis King, No. 2016030427. The People were represented by DDA

Elisabeth Main, and the defendant was represented by DPD Damon Jenkins. The pending case, No. 2016030427, had previously been consolidated with another case involving the same defendant, No. 2016028553, which had been deconsolidated and tried separately. During the hearing, DDA Main requested the release of medical records she had subpoenaed while the cases were consolidated, but which were now contained in the file for case No. 2016028553. Judge Bennett told Main there were no records associated with the subpoena in the file for case No. 2016030427. Judge Bennett called a recess until later that afternoon, and, at Main's request, said he would have the file in case No. 2016028553 brought up at that time. Later that day, Main submitted a subpoena duces tecum to Judge Bennett for the medical records in case No. 2016028553. After the judge granted a defense motion to quash the subpoena, Main requested that the pending case be sent back to Department 13. The following colloquy occurred:

> THE COURT: Well, they sent it here for trial. That's the problem. So it's here for trial. I don't make those decisions anymore. You're here for trial.
>
> MS. MAIN: So for the People's information, where physically will those records that the Court has right now be kept so that the People can make the proper request?
>
> THE COURT: Yeah. We have the records in case ending 553. They're here and they're still sealed. As I said before, there's probably 200 pages in here. I haven't opened them. I can open them and look at them, I suppose. [¶] Is that what you want me to do?
>
> MS. MAIN: If the Court is able to respond to the subpoena that [the] People just served. It was my understanding 553 was going to be on calendar here at 1:30.

> THE COURT: Well, hang on. [¶] You handed me a subpoena. Who's it to; to the Court?
>
> MS. MAIN: To the Court, which is in possession of the records, and we're asking that---
>
> THE COURT: I'm not going to respond to a subpoena. Do you know why? Because I don't have to. It's a court record.

Judge Bennett leaned into the microphone and spoke in a raised voice when he stated, "Because I don't have to."

Following the above exchange, Judge Bennett reviewed the subpoenaed documents contained in the file for case No. 2016028553, and released one page to Main, which he said was relevant and not subject to the motion to quash. When Main subsequently asked for clarification regarding the ruling, the judge walked off the bench while she was addressing the court. The transcript reflects the following colloquy:

> MS. MAIN: If the Court would bear with me. I'm a bit confused. [¶] Is case ending 553 before the Court today?
>
> THE COURT: No.
>
> MS. MAIN: Were those records -- but is the Court saying those records were part of case ending 553?
>
> THE COURT: They're from the documents that you subpoenaed.
>
> MS. MAIN: Yes. Which motion to quash did the Court grant?
>
> THE COURT: The only one that's filed.
>
> MS. MAIN: In 427?
>
> THE COURT: Anything else?

MS. MAIN: Yes, your Honor. I'm just trying to understand it.

THE COURT: Good luck. See you Monday morning for jury trial, 8:30.

MS. MAIN: Your Honor, it's my understanding --

THE COURT: We're off the record.

MS. MAIN: Your Honor, I thought that the Court --

(Proceedings concluded for day.)

K. On November 28, 2016, Judge Bennett presided over the preliminary hearing in People v. Jeffrey Dupont, No. 2016006770. The People were represented by DDA Amber Lee, and the defendant was represented by DPD Cynthia Ellington. The defendant was charged with kidnapping (Penal Code section 207(a)), criminal threats (Penal Code section 422), dissuading a witness by force or threat (Penal Code section 136.1(c)(1)), infliction of corporal injury (Penal Code section 273.5(a)), and false imprisonment (Penal Code section 236). During the hearing, while a victim of domestic violence was testifying, Judge Bennett referred to her as a "meth head." The transcript reflects the following colloquy:

Q. Okay. Well, isn't it true that you had methamphetamine in that compartment?

MS. LEE: Objection; relevance.

THE COURT: Why would that be relevant? Sustained.

MS. ELLINGTON: Your Honor, it's relevant because my ambition is to show that she was high during this entire time, that she has access to methamphetamine, and that she had it in her glove box and she had been using it. She has a pipe in her purse, and that goes to her credibility, her reliability and her ability to –

> THE COURT: Well, I've allowed you to ask all those related questions. You know, sounds like she was using meth and she's a meth head. Whether there's some methamphetamine in the glove box really isn't relevant. It wasn't opened. Sustained.

The judge's reference to the victim as a "meth head" was inappropriate. There is a factual dispute, however, as to whether this remark also reflected bias against the prosecution. It does not appear necessary to resolve this dispute, as the inclusion of this matter would not affect the proposed discipline.

L. In October 2016, Judge Bennett presided over the matter of People v. Scott Miller, No. 2016005977, which involved misdemeanor charges of elder abuse and battery. The People were represented by DAG Melissa Zubi and DAG Stephen Tokarz, and the defendant was represented by defense attorney Eric Luce. During a chambers conference with the attorneys, before any evidence was heard, Judge Bennett stated that he only did important cases – felonies and murders – and that he did not think the case should have been prosecuted.

While discussing the Miller case in chambers with counsel, Judge Bennett brought up a recent Ventura County case in which a mental patient had stabbed another person multiple times. (The defendant in Miller worked at a psychiatric ward and was charged with assaulting a resident.) Judge Bennett told the prosecutors to keep that case in mind if they wanted to go forward on the Miller case.

There is a factual dispute as to whether the judge also made reference to the recent Ventura County case in the presence of the prospective jurors. It does not appear necessary to resolve this dispute, as the inclusion of this matter would not affect the proposed discipline.

M. In the summer of 2016, Judge Bennett presided over a hearing on a motion to suppress evidence in which the People were represented by DDA Taylor Carr. At the conclusion of the hearing, the judge asked Carr to approach the bench and had an ex parte conversation with her. Judge Bennett stated to Carr, “You don’t have to act like a scared little girl in my courtroom,” or words to that effect. Carr responded that she was not scared of the judge, and disagreed that judicial notice had been required in the hearing. Judge Bennett then made a statement to Carr to the effect of, “You’re acting like a scared little girl out there. You don’t have to act like that.”

N. On January 20, 2015, Judge Bennett presided over the matter of People v. Richard Evirs, No. 2014035733, in which the defendant was charged with disturbing the peace, in violation of Penal Code section 415(2). The People were represented by DDA Marine Dermadzhyan, and the defendant was represented by defense attorney Jarrod Wilfert. During a chambers conference with counsel, Wilfert requested an infraction disposition. Judge Bennett asked DDA Dermadzhyan for her position on the matter. Dermadzhyan objected to an infraction disposition because the case had been referred to the DA’s office as a criminal threats offense (Penal Code section 422), and the People wanted a stay-away order for the victim. Judge Bennett stated that Dermadzhyan’s position was a “chicken shit position to have,” or words to that effect. The judge further stated that he had received emails regarding this “infamous 415,” and that things like this would not be tolerated when he became the judge in Department 13, the master calendar department.

O. On March 17, 2014, Judge Bennett presided over People v. Joshua Chase, No. 2013014492, a misdemeanor hit-and-run case that was assigned to him for trial. The People were represented by DDA Melissa Bohl, and the defendant was represented by DPD Anita Candelaria. Judge Bennett met with the attorneys in chambers prior to trial. During the chambers conference, Judge Bennett referred to the case as a “Mickey Mouse” case, or words to that effect. Judge Bennett pointed at DDA Bohl and stated, “I should make you pay for this,” or words to that effect.

P. On January 27 or 28, 2014, Judge Bennett presided over a probation violation hearing in People v. Nella Olsen, No. 2011028522. The People were represented at the hearing by a female DDA. During a recess, the judge asked to speak with DDA Amber Lee and DPD Heather Tomka, who were sitting in the courtroom and not involved in the Olsen hearing. While standing in a hallway, Judge Bennett told Lee and Tomka that the DDA handling the Olsen hearing was "dumb as shit," and that he wished Lee was conducting the hearing.

Q. On January 13 through 16, 2014, Judge Bennett presided over the jury trial of People v. Sergio Ortiz, No. 2012040964. The People were represented by DDA Melissa Bohl, and the defendant was represented by DPD Michele Castillo. On January 16 or 17, 2014, after the trial had concluded, Judge Bennett had his clerk ask DDA Bohl to return to the courtroom in order to share feedback regarding her performance during the trial. Judge Bennett met with Bohl in chambers for 20 to 30 minutes. The judge asked Bohl where she was from, and Bohl responded that she was from Temecula. Judge Bennett then made a statement to the effect of, "So your parents are farmers and you grew up with a silver spoon in your mouth?" Bohl responded that her parents were not farmers.

R. On October 17, 2011, while presiding over a misdemeanor hit-and-run case, Judge Bennett met in chambers with DDA Andrew Sullivant and DPD Randy Tucker to discuss a possible resolution. DPD Tucker asked for a case disposition of credit for time served, restitution, fines, and no probation. Judge Bennett asked DDA Sullivant if he was "going to make a big stink about that," or words to that effect. Sullivant stated that he was not going to make a "big stink," but would object to that disposition. In response, Judge Bennett became angry, raised his voice, and used profanity, including the words "fucking" and "shit." The judge stated that he had been waiting for an opportunity to address the issue of prosecutors "playing games like this," or words to that effect. The judge admonished Sullivant about prosecutors "agreeing to deals in chambers, then objecting on the record," or words to that effect. Judge Bennett criticized other judges in the courthouse for "playing along with the prosecutors' games," or words to that effect. The judge said he was "sick" of being "bad mouthed" by attorneys in the district attorney's office, both in the newspapers and otherwise, or words to that effect. The judge told Sullivant that, if he was going to object on the record, then he (the judge) was "going to bring up a panel and put on a jury trial," or words to that effect. The judge stated that there appeared to be pressure in the district attorney's office to push cases to trial that should not be going to trial. The judge stated that he got to where he was by "not going along with the program." Judge Bennett stated that he knew all of the policies in the district attorney's office, and he asked Sullivant if he knew how he (the judge) knew about the policies. Judge Bennett then stated, in a raised voice, "Because I wrote the fucking book," or words to that effect, and he pointed his index finger at Sullivant.

S. On January 19, 2010, Judge Bennett presided over the trial in People v. Ruben Cortez, No. 2009037770. The People were represented by DDA Jessica Gigueri, and the defendant was represented by DPD Josephine Banuelos. During the redirect examination of an officer, DDA Gigueri asked for the legal basis for an objection made by defense counsel, which Judge Bennett had sustained, in order to rephrase a question. Judge Bennett called the attorneys to the bench for a sidebar. At the bench, the judge made a statement to Gigueri, in a voice loud enough for the jury to hear, to the effect of, "Are you questioning my authority? Counselor, this is misconduct and I could hold you in contempt. Have you read my court rules? Have you read the rules of court? You know what you need to do? You need to go home tonight and you need to study the rules of court. I know you are new but the next hearing I have is going to be about you. Your questions are not relevant. Move on."

The conduct described above violated the Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 1, 2, 2A, 3B(4), 3B(5), and 3B(7) (a judge shall accord to every person's lawyer the full right to be heard according to law), and constitutes prejudicial misconduct.

In signing the Stipulation, in addition to consenting to discipline on the terms set forth, Judge Bennett expressly admitted that the foregoing facts are true and that he agrees with the stated legal conclusions.

In an affidavit of consent for discipline, Judge Bennett affirmed that his consent was freely and voluntarily rendered, and that he admits the truth of the charges as modified by the Stipulation.

DISCIPLINE

Judge Bennett concedes that he committed five acts of prejudicial misconduct and one act of improper action, comprised of 28 allegations of conduct that violated the Code of Judicial Ethics. Judge Bennett's misconduct mostly involves saying things no judge should say—comments and remarks that are offensive, undignified, discourteous, dishonest, sexist, profane, and create the appearance of bias and retaliation.

Judge Bennett's remark to an African-American criminal defendant about "shucking and jiving" reflects a disregard for the racial overtones of such a remark and manifests insensitivity to individuals appearing in court before him. Judges are expected to treat everyone who appears in court, no matter who they may be, with dignity, courtesy, and respect.

Judges are also expected to display appropriate demeanor and decorum, and not to use crass or sexist words and imagery, as Judge Bennett has done. For example, Judge Bennett's references to his "balls" and his "ass" diminish the dignity of his office. His gratuitous comments about "chicks" liking a car, and to not spending so much time with his telescope if he had a "20-year-old smoking hot wife," are sexist and unseemly. His use of profanity, such as "fucking" and "shit," degrades the decorum of the court and reflects negatively on the judiciary.

Judges are also expected to be honest. Judge Bennett's statements to an attorney, based on the judge's assumption that the attorney had complained about him to the commission, were improper because they appeared retaliatory and, even more troubling, because they were false. A judge's failure to be truthful significantly erodes public esteem for the judiciary, as well as for the individual judge.

Judge Bennett's comments and questions to attorneys about being the subject of peremptory challenges are improper because attorneys and litigants are entitled to file such challenges without being subjected to the judge's influence or interference. When a peremptory challenge is properly and timely filed, a judge must accept the disqualification without inquiry. (Inquiry Concerning Hall (2006) 49 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 146, 165, citing McCartney v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1974) 12 Cal.3d 512, 531–532.)

Finally, Judge Bennett's pattern of undignified, discourteous, and offensive remarks to and about prosecutors not only creates the appearance of bias against them, but also undermines public perception of the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary. Everyone appearing before Judge Bennett should feel that he will dispense justice fairly and respectfully. His remarks do not inspire confidence that he would do so.

Judge Bennett's prior discipline for discourteous and undignified remarks was an aggravating factor. In 2015, Judge Bennett received an advisory letter for making the following remarks about a criminal defendant during a sentencing hearing: "He's a dirtbag of the highest order . . . What's kind of burning me up right now is the fact that he was paid more than I'm paid, to sell cars, and then he stole money on top of it. How pathetic is that? You are really a piece of work."

The commission, nevertheless, considered Judge Bennett's acknowledgment of almost every charge in the Notice of Formal Proceedings to be a significant mitigating factor and determined to accept the Stipulation and impose this public censure, which is the strongest sanction that may be imposed on a judge short of removal from the bench, because it fulfills the commission's mandate of protecting the public, enforcing rigorous standards of judicial conduct, and maintaining public confidence in the integrity of the judicial system, while resolving this matter without the delay and expense of formal proceedings. (See Broadman v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1998) 18 Cal.4th 1079, 1111-1112; Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (d).)

Commission members Nanci E. Nishimura, Esq.; Hon. Michael B. Harper; Anthony P. Capozzi, Esq.; Hon. William S. Dato; Mr. Eduardo De La Riva; Ms. Kay Cooperman Jue; Hon. Lisa B. Lench; Dr. Michael A. Moodian; Mr. Richard Simpson; and Mr. Adam N. Torres voted to accept the Stipulation and to issue this public censure. Commission member Ms. Sarah Kruer Jager did not participate.

Date: March 25, 2020

On behalf of the Commission on Judicial Performance,

Nanci E. Nishimura
Chairperson

STATE OF CALIFORNIA

BEFORE THE COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

| | |
|---|---|
| INQUIRY CONCERNINGJUDGE JEFFREY G. BENNETTNo. 206 | STIPULATION FOR DISCIPLINEBY CONSENT (Rule 127) |

Pursuant to Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance, rule 127, Judge Jeffrey G. Bennett of the Ventura County Superior Court, represented by counsel Heather L. Rosing, Esq. of Klinedinst PC, and the examiner ("the parties") submit this proposed disposition of Inquiry No. 206. The parties request that the commission resolve this matter by imposition of a public censure. The parties believe that the settlement provided by this agreement is in the best interests of the commission and Judge Bennett because, among other reasons, in light of the stipulated facts and legal conclusions, a public censure adequately protects the public and will avoid the delay and expense of further proceedings.

TERMS AND CONDITIONS OF AGREEMENT

1. This agreement resolves the matters alleged in the Inquiry Concerning Judge Jeffrey G. Bennett, No. 206.

2. The commission shall issue a public censure based on the agreed Stipulated Facts and Legal Conclusions set forth therein.

3. If the commission accepts this proposed disposition, the commission's decision and order imposing public censure may articulate the reasons for its decision and include explanatory language that the commission deems appropriate.

4. Upon acceptance by the commission, this stipulation, the judge's affidavit of consent, and the commission's decision and order shall be made public.

5. Judge Bennett waives any further proceedings and review in this matter, including formal proceedings (rules 118, et seq.) and review by the Supreme Court (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 9.60).

6. The commission may reject this proposed disposition and resume formal proceedings. If the commission does so, nothing in this proposed disposition will be deemed to be admitted by Judge Bennett.

Accordingly, it is hereby stipulated and agreed that the commission shall issue a public censure on the above Terms and Conditions of Agreement, and based on the following Stipulated Facts and Legal Conclusions:

STIPULATED FACTS AND LEGAL CONCLUSIONS

Judge Bennett became a judge of the Ventura County Superior Court in 2009. His current term began in January 2015.

Count One

On March 11, 2015, Judge Bennett was presiding in the master calendar department. An African-American defendant appeared before him who had an outstanding warrant on a felony. In determining whether to remand the defendant into custody, Judge Bennett asked the defendant a series of questions and the defendant provided what the judge believed to be evasive answers. Judge Bennett then asked the defendant to stop "shucking and jiving."

The conduct described above violated the Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 1, 2, 2A, 3B(4), and 3B(5), and constitutes prejudicial misconduct.

Count Two

On May 17, 2016, Judge Bennett presided over the matter of People v. Gilbert Regalado, No. 2015027976. On that date, the People were represented by Deputy District Attorney (DDA) Marc Leventhal, and the defendant was represented by defense counsel Victor Salas. Judge Bennett met in chambers with the attorneys to discuss settlement. Salas entered chambers first and shook the judge's hand. Leventhal then greeted the judge and held out his hand. Judge Bennett looked at Leventhal's hand and stated, "I'm not sure I want to shake your hand," or words to that effect, but did shake his hand. Leventhal asked the judge if something was the matter. Judge Bennett replied with a statement to the effect of, "Do you know how much trouble you have caused me? Do you know how much money I have had to pay lawyers because of you?" Judge Bennett then spoke about the matter of People v. Thomas Campi, No. 2014032929, in which Leventhal had previously appeared before him, for about five minutes. The judge stated that someone had complained about him to the Commission on Judicial Performance, leading to a disciplinary hearing. The judge stated he had spent more than $10,000 on lawyers and had to obtain personal references and testimonials to "clear [his] name," or words to that effect.

Judge Bennett's comments and conduct toward DDA Leventhal created, at a minimum, the appearance of retaliation based on the belief that Leventhal had complained to the commission about the Campi matter, or had assisted or cooperated with an investigation that the commission had performed. The judge falsely stated that his name had been "clear[ed]" in the 2015 commission matter, and falsely stated that he had to pay lawyers $10,000 in connection with his defense in that matter.

The conduct described above violated the Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 1, 2, 2A, 3B(4), 3B(5), and 3D(5), and constitutes prejudicial misconduct.

Count Three

Judge Bennett engaged in undignified, discourteous, and offensive sexualized (or otherwise crude) conduct in the workplace, as follows.

A. Judge Bennett repeatedly stated, while in chambers and in the presence of DDA Elisabeth Main, that he was the "only one in the courthouse with the balls to make a ruling," or words to that effect. The last time the judge made such a statement in DDA Main's presence was in 2018.

B. On January 17, 2018, while seated on the bench and wearing his judicial robe, Judge Bennett engaged in conversation with others in the courtroom about recent mudslides in the area. Present in the courtroom were the judge's judicial assistant, a bailiff, and several attorneys. Judge Bennett told a personal story about living in a guest house in Montecito and being responsible for washing the homeowner's Rolls Royce automobile. The judge stated that he had driven the vehicle to a coffee shop. Judge Bennett made a statement to the effect of, "They're good cars, those Rolls Royces. They're sturdy cars, built like a tank." The judge further made a statement to the effect of, "Chicks really dug that car."

There is a factual dispute as to whether the judge stated that the Rolls Royce "had a big back seat, if you know what I mean," and then gestured "finger guns" with his bailiff. It does not appear necessary to resolve this dispute, as the inclusion of this matter would not affect the proposed discipline.

C. In 2016, while in chambers with DDA Michael Kern and a male defense attorney, Judge Bennett stated that he had installed a telescope on the roof of his home or an outbuilding. The judge stated that he would not spend so much time with his telescope if he had "a 20-year-old smoking hot blonde wife," or words to that effect.

There is a factual dispute as to whether the judge stated that his dental hygienist was "a smoking hot 10" and could "do whatever she wanted" to him. It does not appear necessary to resolve this dispute, as the inclusion of this matter would not affect the proposed discipline.

D. In 2014, DDA Amber Lee and Deputy Public Defender (DPD) Heather Tomka appeared before Judge Bennett for a hearing on a motion to suppress evidence. After the hearing concluded, the judge had his clerk ask the attorneys to return to his courtroom. While standing in the hallway, Judge Bennett told the attorneys that he had "the balls" to admit when he got something wrong. The judge made a statement to the effect of, "I have the biggest balls in the courthouse. I'm probably the only judge who has the balls to admit when I've made the wrong decision." The last time the judge mentioned his "balls," he gestured with his hand over his genital area.

E. On January 24, 2014, Judge Bennett presided over the matter of People v. Jesus Rangel, No. 2013023726. The people were represented by DDA Amber Lee, and the defendant was represented by DPD Justine Avtjoglou. While in chambers with the attorneys, the judge discussed his preferred method of receiving a flu shot. Judge Bennett said that he goes with the other judges to get a flu shot at the employee health center. He then said, "The difference between me and them is I like to take my shot in the ass," or words to that effect. Judge Bennett laughed and then made a statement to the effect of, "I mean it, man. You should see their faces. They start to roll up their sleeves, and I just drop 'trou' and take my shot in the ass." The judge then stood up and repeated the statement while pretending to unfasten your belt.

The conduct described above violated the Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 1, 2, 2A, and 3B(4), and constitutes prejudicial misconduct.

Count Four

Judge Bennett improperly commented about the filing of peremptory challenges, as follows.

A. On May 14, 2018, the matter of People v. Dustin Beverford, No. 2015038470, was before Judge Bennett for sentencing. The People were represented by DDA Amber Lee, and the defendant was represented by DPD Dusty Kawai. During the hearing, the judge heard argument from counsel concerning sentencing in case No. 2015038470, and in a separate case involving the defendant, ending in 7071, that had been tried before Commissioner Sabo. Judge Bennett determined to sentence the defendant in case No. 2015038470, and to send the other case back to Commissioner Sabo. The transcript reflects the following colloquy:

> THE COURT: Another thing I can do is I can just sentence him on the case that I have and I can send this other case back to the judge who did the trial and you can argue about it there. I can do that and that's exactly what I am going to do.
>
> MS. LEE: Fair enough.
>
> THE COURT: You can argue about it there. I think that's -- this all got fouled up, by the way, for purposes of [the] record because people are filing papers against judges all over the place, judges are recused. You know, it's a difficult problem for the same reasons that the courthouse is, quite frankly, a mess often around here because people have personal agendas.

Judge Bennett's comments referred to, or at a minimum, gave the appearance of referring to, peremptory challenges filed by the People. The People filed peremptory challenges against the judge in People v. Dustin Beverford, No. 2017042581, on April 16, 2018; People v. Santos,

No. 2018003742, on May 7, 2018; and People v. McGuire, No. 2018004884, on May 11, 2018.

B. On a date between approximately November 2017 and April 2018, Judge Bennett was in chambers with DDA Brandon Ross and a defense attorney. Judge Bennett made a statement to DDA Ross to the effect of, "Why are you guys papering me?" or "I know who's papering me and I know why." The judge stated that a female prosecutor, who had moved to Orange County, told him that the Ventura County District Attorney's Office had a policy regarding filing peremptory challenges against him.

The conduct described above violated the Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 1, 2, and 2A, and constitutes prejudicial misconduct.

Count Five

In the summer or fall of 2018, DDA Elisabeth Main appeared in Judge Bennett's courtroom to handle a case involving possession of controlled substances in the jail. Judge Bennett previously recused from cases involving the jail because of a family member who works there. DDA Main spoke to the bailiff and was told the case would be sent back to department 13 (master calendar). Main told the bailiff she was hoping that that would be done while there were still courtrooms available. When the case was called, Main stated that the bailiff had said the case would probably be sent back to department 13. Judge Bennett stated in open court and in the bailiff's presence, "He doesn't know what the hell he's talking about," or words to that effect.

The conduct described above violated the Code of Judicial Ethics, canons, 1, 2, 2A, and 3B(4), and constitutes, at a minimum, improper action.

Count Six

Judge Bennett engaged in a pattern of conduct that was undignified, discourteous, and offensive, and that conveyed, at a minimum, the appearance of bias against prosecutors, as follows.

A. On September 20, 2018, Judge Bennett met in chambers with DDA Amber Lee and defense counsel Anzac Jacobs regarding an expungement motion in case No. 2012020853. During the chambers discussion, the judge stated that he was transferring to the civil division and needed a change because he had "done 20 murder trials," having just completed one with "special circs," and a bunch of "big sex cases." Judge Bennett then stated, "Honestly, I'm tired of being called names, mostly by my former office," or words to that effect. Judge Bennett stated that he was being called "untrue names," despite being a "fair and honest guy," or words to that effect. Judge Bennett stated that he had eight more years to go before he could retire, and that he considered running for district attorney (DA) because he had "a shit-ton of money," or words to that effect. Judge Bennett stated that he may still consider running for DA if the civil assignment does not work out, but that he could not stay in a criminal department when people were calling him names.

B. Judge Bennett presided over the first trial in People v. Joseph William Allawos, No. 2017027912, a misdemeanor elder abuse case. On June 6, 2018, during deliberations, the jury submitted a note to the court. DDA Brandon Yeaton appeared for the trial prosecutor, who was unavailable at the time. DPD Cerise Fritsch made a comment on the record about "rotating DA's." Judge Bennett responded, "Reaching way down the bench, huh?" After the jury was subsequently seated, the judge stated on the record, "There's a new DA here. Apparently, the other ones were too busy."

C. There is a factual dispute as to whether, on May 17, 2018, during a chambers conference with counsel in People v. Carlos Lozano, No. 2018016122, the judge stated that he wished he had three hands, including one to "wipe [his] ass." It does not appear necessary to resolve this dispute, as the inclusion of this matter would not affect the proposed discipline.

D. On April 5, 2018, Judge Bennett presided over the jury trial in People v. Anthony Ross, No. 2017019548. The People were represented by DDA Brandon Ross, and the defendant was represented by DPD Monique Magar. In the jury's presence, DDA Ross requested a recess. Judge Bennett called the attorneys to the bench, and told them he did not like to waste time. The judge gestured toward the jury and made a statement to the effect of, "I care about them. You know why I care about them? Because they're voters. I don't care about you. I care about them because they're voters, and I don't care about you, and you can quote me on that."

E. On March 2, 2018, in People v. Antonio Herrera, No. 2016004078, Judge Bennett presided over a hearing on the People's motion for a continuance, and on the People's motion to conduct a conditional examination of a material witness, which had both been filed on January 18, 2018. The People were represented by DDA Jillian Ewan, and the defendant was represented by DPD Jennifer Rosenthal. During the hearing, Judge Bennett ordered DDA David Barnes to appear and questioned him about a declaration he had submitted. Following Barnes's testimony, the following colloquy occurred:

> THE COURT: So essentially, the People's position is that the motion for a conditional exam was timely filed. Uh, it's just that a function of the court process, uh, it looks like both sides were unable to litigate that request, that's what it looks like.

MS. EWAN: Yes, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Yeah. That would have been a better way for you to state it.

MS. EWAN: I'll note that for the future, Your Honor.

THE COURT: You can note it for right now.

F. On February 7, 2018, in People v. Antonio Viveros, No. 2017031420, Judge Bennett presided over a hearing on the People's motion for continuance due to the unavailability of a law enforcement officer. The People were represented by DDA Hayley Moyer, and the defendant was represented by DPD Cerise Fritsch. During the hearing, DDA Moyer stated that a prior motion to advance had been denied by Judge Ayers, and that, at the time that motion was heard, the officer was available. The following colloquy then ensued:

THE COURT: So, it's Judge Ayers is what you're saying.

MS. MOYER: I'm, I'm -- I don't know why Judge Ayers –

THE COURT: Is that what you're saying?

MS. MOYER: I'm not saying it's her fault.

THE COURT: What are you saying then?

Later in the hearing, in discussing the People's motion, the following colloquy ensued:

THE COURT: So, in between the 22nd and the 26th, is when the People discovered, they're telling me in this declaration signed by Ms. Hayley Moyer as an officer of the Court, that they figured out that the cop wasn't going to be here, and that he was an essential witness. And that seems to be the problem to me.

MS. MOYER: That's correct, Your Honor.

> THE COURT: And, I don't need a cheering section okay? So, if I need something from you, I'll ask you, all right.
>
> MS. MOYER: Of course.

G. On February 1, 2018, Judge Bennett presided over a hearing in People v. Jesus Lopez Cruz, No. 2017025833. The People were represented by DDA Heather Sweatman, and the defendant was represented by DPD Cerise Fritsch. During the hearing, DDA Sweatman stated that the parties had been unable to resolve the case because the defense wanted a charge that did not include moral turpitude, which was not supported by the facts of the case. Judge Bennett asked Sweatman if the facts stated in her trial brief were true, which led to the following colloquy:

> MS. SWEATMAN: Those are true. If I –
>
> THE COURT: Uh-huh.
>
> MS. SWEATMAN: -- may provide a little further detail.
>
> THE COURT: No, it's not necessary. I get it.
>
> MS. SWEATMAN: Well, your honor, if I may, the defendant --
>
> THE COURT: Uh, no – [Unintelligible] – you may not. I'm not finished talking yet. You interrupt me again, we're gonna have a problem. Do you understand that?

Later in the hearing, Judge Bennett told DDA Sweatman that she did not have enough evidence to "get past the [Penal Code section] 1118 motion." Sweatman responded that if that was the case, she would ask that the defense brief the issue and allow the People to respond in writing. Judge Bennett stated to Sweatman:

> THE COURT: … I'm just being honest with you, I'm not trying to give you a hard time. I don't mind wasting the public's time on > something like this, but I don't think it's the right thing to do if you can't prove it. It seems to me like you need to have the person here to prove those facts. But if you don't think you do, I mean, I'm not gonna dismiss the case. You can do what you want. You can embarrass the district attorney, if you like. That's fine.

H. In October 2017, Judge Bennett presided over the matter of People v. Julia Parker and Emilia Borcena, No. 2016010310. The People were represented by Deputy Attorney General (DAG) Melissa Zubi, defendant Parker was represented by defense attorney Donald Marks, and defendant Borcena was represented by defense attorney Arthur Khachatourians. During a chambers conference with Zubi and defense counsel, Judge Bennett made several comments about how bad the Attorney General was at prosecuting cases. Judge Bennett stated that he had just finished an environmental case with the Attorney General, and "that was an important case, and they messed that one up, too," or words to that effect.

During the chambers conference, Judge Bennett discussed with counsel motions in limine the defense said it wanted to bring. The judge made preliminary rulings that excluded most of the prosecution's evidence. DAG Zubi noted that she had no case if most of her evidence was excluded. Judge Bennett stated in response, "You can tell [Attorney General Xavier] Becerra that's what he gets for going against my president," or words to that effect. Judge Bennett also stated to Zubi, "It's my job to give the government a bad time," or words to that effect.

I. On August 9, 2017, Judge Bennett presided over a hearing on a motion to suppress evidence (Penal Code section 1538.5) in People v. Nicolas Macias-Hernandez, No. 2016031450. The People were represented by DDA Brandon Yeaton, and the defendant was represented by DPD Julie Taylor. On August 9, Judge Bennett granted the motion. On August 10, 2017, the judge called the attorneys back to his courtroom and told them that he had changed his mind and had determined to deny the motion. After excusing the attorneys, Judge Bennett asked DDA Yeaton to approach the bench on an unrelated matter, in which Yeaton needed the judge's signature for an order of forfeiture. Judge Bennett signed the order and then began telling Yeaton about his time as a police officer, Chief DDA, and judge. While speaking of supervisors in the DA's office, Judge Bennett made a statement to the effect of, "Tell [DDA Brent] Nibecker he's an idiot. I've told him to his face, I don't care."

J. On December 9, 2016, Judge Bennett presided over a hearing in People v. Dennis King, No. 2016030427. The People were represented by DDA Elisabeth Main, and the defendant was represented by DPD Damon Jenkins. The pending case, No. 2016030427, had previously been consolidated with another case involving the same defendant, No. 2016028553, which had been deconsolidated and tried separately. During the hearing, DDA Main requested the release of medical records she had subpoenaed while the cases were consolidated, but which were now contained in the file for case No. 2016028553. Judge Bennett told Main there were no records associated with the subpoena in the file for case No. 2016030427. Judge Bennett called a recess until later that afternoon, and, at Main's request, said he would have the file in case No. 2016028553 brought up at that time. Later that day, Main submitted a subpoena duces tecum to Judge Bennett for the medical records in case No. 2016028553. After the judge granted a defense motion to quash the subpoena, Main requested that the pending case be sent back to department 13. The following colloquy occurred:

> THE COURT: Well, they sent it here for trial. That's the problem. So it's here for trial. I don't make those decisions anymore. You're here for trial.

> MS. MAIN: So for the People's information, where physically will those records that the Court has right now be kept so that the People can make the proper request?
>
> THE COURT: Yeah. We have the records in case ending 553. They're here and they're still sealed. As I said before, there's probably 200 pages in here. I haven't opened them. I can open them and look at them, I suppose. [¶] Is that what you want me to do?
>
> MS. MAIN: If the Court is able to respond to the subpoena that [the] People just served. It was my understanding 553 was going to be on calendar here at 1:30.
>
> THE COURT: Well, hang on. [¶] You handed me a subpoena. Who's it to; to the Court?
>
> MS. MAIN: To the Court, which is in possession of the records, and we're asking that --
>
> THE COURT: I'm not going to respond to a subpoena. Do you know why? Because I don't have to. It's a court record.

Judge Bennett leaned into the microphone and spoke in a raised voice when he stated, "Because I don't have to."

Following the above exchange, Judge Bennett reviewed the subpoenaed documents contained in the file for case No. 2016028553, and released one page to Main, which he said was relevant and not subject to the motion to quash. When Main subsequently asked for clarification regarding the ruling, the judge walked off the bench while she was addressing the court. The transcript reflects the following colloquy:

> MS. MAIN: If the Court would bear with me. I'm a bit confused. [¶] Is case ending 553 before the Court today?
>
> THE COURT: No.

MS. MAIN: Were those records -- but is the Court saying those records were part of case ending 553?

THE COURT: They're from the documents that you subpoenaed.

MS. MAIN: Yes. Which motion to quash did the Court grant?

THE COURT: The only one that's filed.

MS. MAIN: In 427?

THE COURT: Anything else?

MS. MAIN: Yes, your Honor. I'm just trying to understand it.

THE COURT: Good luck. See you Monday morning for jury trial, 8:30.

MS. MAIN: Your Honor, it's my understanding --

THE COURT: We're off the record.

MS. MAIN: Your Honor, I thought that the Court --

(Proceedings concluded for day.)

K. On November 28, 2016, Judge Bennett presided over the preliminary hearing in People v. Jeffrey Dupont, No. 2016006770. The People were represented by DDA Amber Lee, and the defendant was represented by DPD Cynthia Ellington. The defendant was charged with kidnapping (Penal Code section 207(a)), criminal threats (Penal Code section 422), dissuading a witness by force or threat (Penal Code section 136.1(c)(1)), infliction of corporal injury (Penal Code section 273.5(a)), and false imprisonment (Penal Code section 236). During the hearing, while a victim of domestic violence was testifying,

Judge Bennett referred to her as a "meth head." The transcript reflects the following colloquy:

> Q. Okay. Well, isn't it true that you had methamphetamine in that compartment?
>
> MS. LEE: Objection; relevance.
>
> THE COURT: Why would that be relevant? Sustained.
>
> MS. ELLINGTON: Your Honor, it's relevant because my ambition is to show that she was high during this entire time, that she has access to methamphetamine, and that she had it in her glove box and she had been using it. She has a pipe in her purse, and that goes to her credibility, her reliability and her ability to --
>
> THE COURT: Well, I've allowed you to ask all those related questions. You know, sounds like she was using meth and she's a meth head. Whether there's some methamphetamine in the glove box really isn't relevant. It wasn't opened. Sustained.

The judge's reference to the victim as a "meth head" was inappropriate. There is a factual dispute, however, as to whether this remark also reflected bias against the prosecution. It does not appear necessary to resolve this dispute, as the inclusion of this matter would not affect the proposed discipline.

L. In October 2016, Judge Bennett presided over the matter of People v. Scott Miller, No. 2016005977, which involved misdemeanor charges of elder abuse and battery. The People were represented by DAG Melissa Zubi and DAG Stephen Tokarz, and the defendant was represented by defense attorney Eric Luce. During a chambers conference with the attorneys, before any evidence was heard, Judge Bennett stated that he only did important cases – felonies and murders – and that he did not think the case should have been prosecuted.

While discussing the Miller case in chambers with counsel, Judge Bennett brought up a recent Ventura County case in which a mental patient had stabbed another person multiple times. (The defendant in Miller worked at a psychiatric ward and was charged with assaulting a resident.) Judge Bennett told the prosecutors to keep that case in mind if they wanted to go forward on the Miller case.

There is a factual dispute as to whether the judge also made reference to the recent Ventura County case in the presence of the prospective jurors. It does not appear necessary to resolve this dispute, as the inclusion of this matter would not affect the proposed discipline.

M. In the summer of 2016, Judge Bennett presided over a hearing on a motion to suppress evidence in which the People were represented by DDA Taylor Carr. At the conclusion of the hearing, the judge asked Carr to approach the bench and had an ex parte conversation with her. Judge Bennett stated to Carr, "You don't have to act like a scared little girl in my courtroom," or words to that effect. Carr responded that she was not scared of the judge, and disagreed that judicial notice had been required in the hearing. Judge Bennett then made a statement to Carr to the effect of, "You're acting like a scared little girl out there. You don't have to act like that."

N. On January 20, 2015, Judge Bennett presided over the matter of People v. Richard Evirs, No. 2014035733, in which the defendant was charged with disturbing the peace, in violation of Penal Code section 415(2). The People were represented by DDA Marine Dermadzhyan, and the defendant was represented by defense attorney Jarrod Wilfert. During a chambers conference with counsel, Wilfert requested an infraction disposition. Judge Bennett asked DDA Dermadzhyan for her position on the matter. Dermadzhyan objected to an infraction disposition because the case had been referred to the DA's office as a criminal threats offense (Penal Code section 422), and the People wanted a stay-away order for the victim. Judge Bennett stated that Dermadzhyan's position was a "chicken shit position to have," or words to that effect. The judge further stated that he had received emails regarding this "infamous 415," and that things like this would not be tolerated when he became the judge in department 13, the master calendar department.

O. On March 17, 2014, Judge Bennett presided over People v. Joshua Chase, No. 2013014492, a misdemeanor hit-and-run case that was assigned to him for trial. The People were represented by DDA Melissa Bohl, and the defendant was represented by DPD Anita Candelaria. Judge Bennett met with the attorneys in chambers prior to trial. During the chambers conference, Judge Bennett referred to the case as a "Mickey Mouse" case, or words to that effect. Judge Bennett pointed at DDA Bohl and stated, "I should make you pay for this," or words to that effect.

P. On January 27 or 28, 2014, Judge Bennett presided over a probation violation hearing in People v. Nella Olsen, No. 2011028522. The People were represented at the hearing by a female DDA. During a recess, the judge asked to speak with DDA Amber Lee and DPD Heather Tomka, who were sitting in the courtroom and not involved in the Olsen hearing. While standing in a hallway, Judge Bennett told Lee and Tomka that the DDA handling the Olsen hearing was "dumb as shit," and that he wished Lee was conducting the hearing.

Q. On January 13 through 16, 2014, Judge Bennett presided over the jury trial of People v. Sergio Ortiz, No. 2012040964. The People were represented by DDA Melissa Bohl, and the defendant was represented by DPD Michele Castillo. On January 16 or 17, 2014, after the trial had concluded, Judge Bennett had his clerk ask DDA Bohl to return to the courtroom in order to share feedback regarding her performance during the trial. Judge Bennett met with Bohl in chambers for 20 to 30 minutes. The judge asked Bohl where she was from, and Bohl responded that she was from Temecula. Judge Bennett then made a statement to the effect of, "So your parents are farmers and you grew up with a silver spoon in your mouth?" Bohl responded that her parents were not farmers.

R. On October 17, 2011, while presiding over a misdemeanor hit-and-run case, Judge Bennett met in chambers with DDA Andrew Sullivant and DPD Randy Tucker to discuss a possible resolution. DPD Tucker asked for a case disposition of credit for time served, restitution, fines, and no probation. Judge Bennett asked DDA Sullivant if he was "going to make a big stink about that," or words to that effect. Sullivant stated that he was not going to make a "big stink," but would object to that disposition. In response, Judge Bennett became angry, raised his voice, and used profanity, including the words "fucking" and "shit." The judge stated that he had been waiting for an opportunity to address the issue of prosecutors "playing games like this," or words to that effect. The judge admonished Sullivant about prosecutors "agreeing to deals in chambers, then objecting on the record," or words to that effect. Judge Bennett criticized other judges in the courthouse for "playing along with the prosecutors' games," or words to that effect. The judge said he was "sick" of being "bad mouthed" by attorneys in the district attorney's office, both in the newspapers and otherwise, or words to that effect. The judge told Sullivant that, if he was going to object on the record, then he (the judge) was "going to bring up a panel and put on a jury trial," or words to that effect. The judge stated that there appeared to be pressure in the district attorney's office to push cases to trial that should not be going to trial. The judge stated that he got to where he was by "not going along with the program." Judge Bennett stated that he knew all of the policies in the district attorney's office, and he asked Sullivant if he knew how he (the judge) knew about the policies. Judge Bennett then stated, in a raised voice,

"Because I wrote the fucking book," or words to that effect, and he pointed his index finger at Sullivant.

S. On January 19, 2010, Judge Bennett presided over the trial in People v. Ruben Cortez, No. 2009037770. The People were represented by DDA Jessica Gigueri, and the defendant was represented by DPD Josephine Banuelos. During the redirect examination of an officer, DDA Gigueri asked for the legal basis for an objection made by defense counsel, which Judge Bennett had sustained, in order to rephrase a question. Judge Bennett called the attorneys to the bench for a sidebar. At the bench, the judge made a statement to Gigueri, in a voice loud enough for the jury to hear, to the effect of, "Are you questioning my authority? Counselor, this is misconduct and I could hold you in contempt. Have you read my court rules? Have you read the rules of court? You know what you need to do? You need to go home tonight and you need to study the rules of court. I know you are new but the next hearing I have is going to be about you. Your questions are not relevant. Move on."

The conduct described above violated the Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 1, 2, 2A, 3B(4), 3B(5), and 3B(7), and constitutes prejudicial misconduct.

By signing this stipulation, in addition to consenting to discipline on the terms set forth, Judge Bennett expressly admits that the foregoing facts are true and that he agrees with the stated legal conclusions.

Dated: March 10, 2020.

Judge Jeffrey G. Bennett
Respondent

Dated: March 10, 2020.

Heather L. Rosing, Esq.
Attorney for Respondent

Dated: March 11, 2020.

Mark A. Lizarraga, Esq.
Examiner for the Commission

STATE OF CALIFORNIA

BEFORE THE COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

| | |
|---|---|
| INQUIRY CONCERNINGJUDGE JEFFREY G. BENNETTNo. 206 | AFFIDAVIT OF CONSENTFOR DISCIPLINE |

Pursuant to Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance, rule 127(d), Judge Jeffrey G. Bennett submits the following affidavit of consent in Inquiry No. 206:

1. I consent to a public censure, as set forth in the Stipulation for Discipline by Consent.

2. My consent is freely and voluntarily rendered.

3. I admit the truth of the charges as modified by the Stipulation for Discipline by Consent.

4. I waive review by the Supreme Court.

I declare under penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct. Executed this 10 day of March, 2020.

Judge Jeffrey G. Bennett
Respondent

COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE
455 Golden Gate Avenue, Suite 14400
San Francisco, CA 94102

---

Contact: Gregory Dresser
Director-Chief Counsel
(415) 557-1200

FOR RELEASE
March 25, 2020

---

JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE COMMISSION ISSUES DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC CENSURE ON JUDGE JEFFREY G. BENNETT PURSUANT TO STIPULATION

The Commission on Judicial Performance has issued a decision and order imposing a public censure upon Judge Jeffrey G. Bennett of Ventura County Superior Court pursuant to stipulation (Commission Rule 127). Judge Bennett, through his counsel, and the examiner for the commission proposed a Stipulation for Discipline by Consent pursuant to Commission Rule 127(b). The Decision and Order Imposing Public Censure is issued pursuant to that Stipulation, which the commission approved.

The commission determined that it should issue a public censure of Judge Bennett for five acts of prejudicial misconduct and one act of improper action, comprised of 28 different acts of misconduct that violated the Code of Judicial Ethics.

Most of Judge Bennett's misconduct involved comments and remarks that are offensive, undignified, discourteous, dishonest, sexist, and profane, and that created the appearance of bias and retaliation.

Such comments included remarks to an African American criminal defendant about "shucking and jiving," making crude references to his anatomy, commenting about "chicks" liking a car and about not spending so much time with his telescope if he had a "20-year-old smoking hot wife," and using profanity in other remarks.

In another matter, Judge Bennett made statements to an attorney that were false and appeared retaliatory. Judge Bennett also improperly commented about being the subject of peremptory challenges.

Finally, Judge Bennett engaged in a pattern of undignified, discourteous and offensive comments to prosecutors that created an appearance of bias against them.

Judge Bennett's misconduct was aggravated by prior discipline for discourteous and undignified remarks he made to a criminal defendant. Judge Bennett's misconduct was mitigated by acknowledging almost all of the misconduct with which he was charged in, and stipulating to a resolution of, the current matter.

Judge Bennett stipulated to the truth of the facts that formed the basis for the public censure.

The public censure is available on the commission's website at http://cjp.ca.gov (under "Pending Cases - Press Releases & Documents" and "Public Discipline & Decisions") and at the commission's office. Judge Bennett is represented by Attorney Heather L. Rosing of San Diego.

* * *

The commission is composed of six public members, three judges and two lawyers. The chairperson is Nanci E. Nishimura, Esq.

For further information about the Commission on Judicial Performance, see the commission's website at http://cjp.ca.gov.

2 Cal.3d 617
471 P.2d 29, 87 Cal.Rptr. 709
(Cite as: 2 Cal.3d 617)

In re GERALD S. CHARGIN, a Judge of the Superior Court, on Censure.

S.F. No. 22741.

Supreme Court of California, In Bank.

June 10, 1970.

SUMMARY

The Commission on Judicial Qualifications made findings of fact and concluded, after review of proceedings before special masters, and a hearing, that the remarks of a superior court judge, made during the course of a juvenile bearing over which he presided constituted "conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute." The commission recommended that the judge be publicly censured.

The Supreme Court adopted the recommendation and by its order publicly censured the judge. (Opinion by the Court.)

THE COURT.

The Commission on Judicial Qualifications reviewed the report of the special masters appointed pursuant to rule 907 of California Rules of Court, documents filed by the examiner and Judge Chargin, and the record of the evidentiary hearing before the special masters at which it was established that Judge Chargin during the course of a juvenile court hearing over which be presided made certain improper and inflammatory remarks reflecting upon the juvenile's family and members of his ethnic group. Those remarks have been the subject of critical newspaper editorials and resolutions of public bodies.

At the evidentiary hearing the surrounding facts and circumstances were shown, and letters and testimony were received favorable to Judge Chargin, indicating that the remarks were foreign to his customary judicial attitude and conduct. 618

Following its review of the above matters and a hearing before it, the commission made certain findings of fact, concluded that the remarks of Judge Chargin constituted "conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute" (see art. VI, § 18, subd. (c), Cal. Const.), and recommended that Judge Chargin be publicly censured. The commission filed with this court the record and recommendation. This court, after reviewing the entire record and considering all the facts and circumstances, has concluded that the recommendation of the commission should be adopted. Accordingly, and by this order Judge Chargin is hereby publicly censured. 619

Cal.,1970.

In re Chargin

END OF DOCUMENT

In re BERNARD B. GLICKFELD, Judge of the Superior Court, on Censure.

S.F. No. 22782.

Supreme Court of California, In Bank.

Jan. 20, 1971.

SUMMARY

The Commission on Judicial Qualifications made findings of fact and concluded, after review of proceedings before special masters, and a hearing, that the remarks of a superior court judge, made during the course of a criminal prosecution and trial over which he presided, constituted "conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute." The commission recommended that the judge be publicly censured.

The Supreme Court adopted the recommendation and by its order publicly censured the judge. (Opinion by The Court.)

THE COURT.

The Commission on Judicial Qualifications reviewed the report of the special masters appointed pursuant to rule 907 of California Rules of Court, objections thereto filed on behalf of Judge Glickfeld, and the record of the evidentiary hearing before the special masters at which it was established that Judge Glickfeld, during a conversation in his chambers concerning the disposition of criminal charges pending in his court, referred to the victim of the alleged crimes in an insulting and inexcusable manner and on a later date made certain intemperate comments in open court in connection with the same case.

Following its review of the above matters and a hearing before it, the commission made certain findings of fact, concluded that Judge Glickfeld's conduct on each date constituted "conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute" (see art. VI, § 18, subd. (c), Cal. Const.), and recommended that Judge Glickfeld be censured. The commission filed with this court the record and recommendation. This court, after reviewing the entire record and considering 892 all the facts and circumstances, has concluded that the recommendation should be adopted.

Accordingly, and by this order Judge Glickfeld is hereby censured.

Sullivan, J., did not participate. 893

Cal.,1971.

In re Glickfeld

END OF DOCUMENT

9 Cal.3d 844
512 P.2d 302, 109 Cal.Rptr. 78
(Cite as: 9 Cal.3d 844)

In re LEOPOLDO SANCHEZ, a Judge of the Superior Court, on Censure

L.A. No. 30161.

Supreme Court of California.

August 2, 1973.

SUMMARY

The Commission on Judicial Qualifications, following a hearing before it and review of a report of special masters, objections to that report, and the record of the hearing before the special masters, found that a superior court judge had regularly furnished to a bail bondsman orders for the release of prisoners on bail, which were blank except for the judge's signature; that the bondsman thereafter filled in the orders, fixed bail without judicial authority, and used the orders to secure the release of prisoners arrested for felonies; and that copies of the used orders were furnished to the judge. No evidence was presented that the judge received any tangible consideration for his actions, but he persisted in such conduct despite its being in contravention of a superior court rule, despite warnings to him by others, including the then presiding judge, and despite having promised to cease signing release orders. The commission concluded that the judge was guilty of wilful misconduct in office and recommended that he be severely and publicly censured.

The Supreme Court adopted the conclusion of the commission, and, by its order, severely censured the judge.

In Bank. (Opinion by The Court.)

THE COURT.

The Commission on Judicial Qualifications, following a hearing before it and review of a report of special masters appointed pursuant to rule 907, California Rules of Court, objections to that report, and the record of the hearings before the special masters found, inter alia: Between December 1969 and October 1972 Judge Leopoldo Sanchez regularly furnished to a bail bondsman orders for the release of prisoners on 845 bail, which were blank except for the judge's signature. The bondsman thereafter filled in the orders, fixed bail without judicial authority, and used the orders to secure the release of prisoners arrested for felonies, and copies of the used orders were furnished Judge Sanchez. No evidence was presented that the judge received any tangible consideration for his actions. He persisted in the foregoing conduct despite its being in contravention of a superior court rule, despite warnings to him by others including the then Presiding Judge of the Los Angeles Superior Court, and despite having promised to cease signing release orders.

The commission concluded, inter alia, that Judge Sanchez was guilty of "wilful misconduct in office" (see Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18), and recommended that he be "severely and publicly censured."

Upon our review of the record we are satisfied that the foregoing conclusion of the commission is fully warranted and that the discipline recommended should be adopted. Accordingly, and by this order. Judge Sanchez is hereby severely censured. 846

Cal.,1973.

In re Sanchez

END OF DOCUMENT

9 Cal.3d 846
512 P.2d 303, 109 Cal.Rptr. 79
(Cite as: 9 Cal.3d 846)

In re ANTONIO E. CHAVEZ, a Judge of the Municipal Court, on Censure

L.A. No. 30162.

Supreme Court of California.

August 2, 1973.

SUMMARY

The Commission on Judicial Qualifications, following a hearing before it and review of a report of special masters, objections to that report, and the record of the hearings before the special masters, found that a municipal court judge had regularly furnished to a bail bondsman presigned orders for release of prisoners on bail and that the judge was aware that the bail bondsman subsequently filled in those orders, fixed bail without authority from a judicial officer, and used the orders to secure the release of prisoners arrested for felonies. There was no evidence that the judge received any consideration for the presigned orders. The commission concluded that the judge was guilty of wilful misconduct in office and recommended that he be censured.

The Supreme Court adopted the conclusion of the commission, and, by its order, censured the judge.

In Bank. (Opinion by The Court.)

THE COURT.

The Commission on Judicial Qualifications, following a hearing before it and review of a report of special masters appointed pursuant to rule 907, California Rules of Court, objections to that report, and the record of the hearings before the special masters, found, inter alia, that Judge Antonio E. Chavez regularly furnished to a bail bondsman presigned orders for release of prisoners on bail and that Judge Chavez was aware that the bail bondsman subsequently filled in those orders, fixed bail without authority from a judicial officer, and used the orders to secure the 847 release of prisoners arrested for felonies. There is no evidence that the judge received any consideration for the presigned orders.

The commission concluded, inter alia, that Judge Chavez was guilty of "wilful misconduct in office" (see Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18) and recommended that he be censured.

Upon our review of the record we are satisfied that the foregoing conclusion of the commission is fully justified and that the commission's recommendation should be adopted. Accordingly, and by this order Judge Chavez is hereby censured. 848

Cal.,1973.

In re Chavez

END OF DOCUMENT

12 Cal.3d 512
526 P.2d 268, 116 Cal.Rptr. 260
(Cite as: 12 Cal.3d 512)
<RED FLAG>

JAMES J. McCARTNEY, a Judge of the Municipal Court, Petitioner, v.
COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL QUALIFICATIONS, Respondent

L.A. No. 30217.

Supreme Court of California.

September 19, 1974.

SUMMARY

After lengthy hearings, special masters who had been appointed by the Supreme Court to take the evidence in proceedings before the Commission on Judicial Qualifications on charges constituting grounds for censure or removal of a judge from office, recommended censure, but on consideration of the masters' report, objections thereto, and oral argument, the commission recommended that the Supreme Court remove the judge from office.

The Supreme Court issued a writ of review on the judge's petition and concluded that censure, rather than removal, was the appropriate discipline. Accordingly, he was censured for injudicious conduct and admonished to desist from engaging in such misconduct. Clear and convincing evidence of conduct justifying censure or removal under Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, was found with respect to the judge's angry criticism of public defenders for filing affidavits of prejudice against him, his failure, before taking the stand as a witness in several cases, to tell counsel of the substance of his intended testimony, and improprieties in his examination of witnesses. On the other hand, it was noted that the judge had been in office only about a year and a half when the charges were filed and, thus, had been without much judicial experience, and that his conduct had been salutary in many respects, as, for example, in his unusual care in attempting to do justice, in insuring that defendants in criminal cases understood the procedural protections accorded them, and in avoiding "assembly line justice" in minor traffic cases. In the light of these and other mitigating factors, the court held that censure was adequate discipline. (In Bank. Opinion by The Court.) 513

HEADNOTES

Classified to California Digest of Official Reports

(1) Judges § 19--Censure and Removal--Constitutional Requirements.

In affording a judge charged with conduct constituting grounds for censure or removal, "reasonable opportunity in the course of the preliminary investigation to present such matters as he may choose," Cal. Rules of Court, rule 904(b), clearly affords him more procedural protection than is constitutionally required. At the stage of the proceedings to which this subdivision applies, the Commission on Judicial Qualifications has not yet commenced to perform any adjudicatory function. Accordingly, notice to him as to the nature of the complaints against him is not compelled as a matter of due process. Hence, relief from the deleterious effect, if any, of the commission's failure to follow this subdivision may be secured by him only on a showing of actual prejudice.

(2) Judges § 19--Censure and Removal--Effect of Procedural Defect.
In the absence of any evidentiary foundation for a judge's assertion that an admitted procedural irregularity in the Commission on Judicial Qualifications' notice to him of its investigation of charges against him had a shattering impact on its impartiality, the irregularity could not, of itself, impair the validity of the commission's subsequent recommendation that he be removed from office.

(3a, 3b) Judges § 19--Censure and Removal--Limitations on Discovery.
In proceedings against a judge, before the Commission on Judicial Qualifications, on charges of conduct constituting grounds for censure or removal, he was not denied due process by application of the commission's rule limiting discovery to items other than depositions, where he failed to make a minimal showing of good cause for depositions, and made his demand so general that witnesses sought to be deposed were not even specified.

(4) Judges § 19--Censure and Removal--Availability of Discovery.
Determination as to whether a discovery order shall issue in proceedings before the Commission on Judicial Qualifications is within the commission's sound discretion.

(5) Judges § 19--Censure and Removal--Confidentiality of Hearings.
There was no impropriety in the Commission on Judicial Qualifications' 514 refusal to open hearings on charges constituting grounds for censure or removal of a judge to the public, in view of the facts that confidentiality of such hearings is authorized by Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (e), is based on sound reason, and is imposed in proceedings which are neither criminal nor before a "court of justice."

(6) Judges § 19--Censure and Removal--Location of Hearings.
Selection of the place for the hearing of charges constituting grounds for censure or removal of a judge rests within the discretion of the Commission on Judicial Qualifications.

(7) Judges § 19--Censure and Removal--Proceedings--Review.
In proceedings to review the Commission on Judicial Qualifications' recommendation that a judge be removed from office, the Supreme Court would refuse to consider a contention, based on due process grounds, not raised before the commission or special masters appointed by that court, attacking Cal. Rules of Court, rule 911, relating to amendments to the commission's accusatory pleading.

(8) Judges § 19--Censure and Removal--Proceedings--Review.
In reviewing the Commission on Judicial Qualifications' recommendation made in proceedings on charges constituting grounds for censure or removal of a judge from office, the Supreme Court will independently evaluate the evidence adduced by special masters appointed by that court.

(9) Judges § 19--Censure and Removal--Constitutional Grounds.
As the expressions are used in Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, authorizing censure or removal of a judge, "wilful misconduct in office" connotes something graver than "conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute." The more serious charge should be reserved for injudicious conduct which a judge, acting in his judicial capacity, commits in bad faith, whereas the lesser charge should be applied to conduct which a judge undertakes in good faith but which would appear to an objective observer to be not only injudicious, but prejudicial to public esteem for the judicial office. In this connection, "bad faith" is intended to connote that a judge had intentionally committed acts which he knew or should have known were beyond his lawful power, engaging in a pervasive course of conduct of overreaching his authority. 515

(10) Judges § 46(3)--Disqualification--Grounds--Bias and Prejudice-- Statutory Provisions.
In enacting Code Civ. Proc., § 170.6, the Legislature guaranteed to litigants an extraordinary right to disqualify a judge. The right is automatic in the sense that a good faith belief in prejudice is sufficient without proof of any facts showing actual prejudice. Thus, once an affidavit of prejudice has been filed under that statute, the court has no jurisdiction to hold further proceedings in the matter except to inquire into the affidavit's timeliness or technical sufficiency under the statute. Where the affidavit is timely and properly made, immediate disqualification is mandatory.

[See Cal.Jur.2d, Judges, § 41; Am.Jur.2d, Judges, § 166.]

(11) Witnesses § 36--Competency--Judicial Officers.
Incident to his duty to conduct proceedings with a view toward the effective ascertainment of truth, a trial judge possesses inherent power to examine witnesses to elicit or clarify testimony. But in examining witnesses, he may not become an advocate for either party or cast aspersions or ridicule on a witness.

(12) Witnesses § 3--Attendance--Right to Compel--Court's Power to Call Witness.
The trial court has inherent power to call witnesses where the interests of justice require, but the power is subject to a limitation that it be impartially exercised.

(13) Judges § 19--Censure and Removal--Grounds.
A judge's conduct and language which tended to embarrass the other judges in his district, although repugnant to the venerable tradition that judges share the bench as brethren in a spirit of mutual respect and courtesy, did not constitute prejudicial conduct within Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, relating to censure and removal of judges, in the absence of any showing that public esteem for the judicial office was substantially impaired by what appeared to be an isolated incident.

(14) Judges § 19--Censure and Removal--Grounds.
A judge's muttered profanity and humming in court did not constitute prejudicial conduct, within Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, relating to censure and removal of a judge from office, where it appeared that the conduct was unintentional and did not actually prejudice the administration of justice, in the sense of drawing the courts into public disesteem. 516

(15) Judges § 19--Censure and Removal--Grounds.
A judge's inefficiency in conducting court was no ground for discipline, where it appeared that, among other things, the inefficiency did not arise from any neglect of responsibility on his part, but stemmed from his effort to attain a degree of diligence and studiousness in the application of the law which was unrealistic and frequently unjustified.

(16) Contempt § 1--Purpose of Contempt Powers.
A judge must not place the defense of his own character above his obligation to promote respect for the law in adjudicating contempts of court.

(17a, 17b) Judges § 19--Censure and Removal--Mitigating Factors.
In view of a judge's inexperience, his unusual care in attempting to do justice and to provide a fundamental fairness in sentencing, in creating opportunities for rehabilitation of alcoholic defendants, his dedicated approach to even minor traffic cases, and other redeeming qualities, censure, rather than removal from office, was proper discipline despite evidence that he was guilty of wilful misconduct and prejudicial conduct, within Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, in angrily criticising public defenders for filing affidavits of prejudice, ignoring proper limitations in his examination of witnesses, and failing, before taking the stand as a witness, to inform counsel of the substance of his impending testimony.

(18) Judges § 19--Censure and Removal--Proceedings--Review.
In the Supreme Court's review of the Commission on Judicial Qualifications' recommendation made in proceedings on charges constituting grounds for censure or removal of a judge from office, the recommendation made by the special masters appointed by that court to take the evidence is entitled to considerable weight.

COUNSEL

Kayashima & Tessier and Ben T. Kayashima for Petitioner.

Evelle J. Younger, Attorney General, Jack R. Winkler, Chief Assistant Attorney General, S. Clark Moore, Assistant Attorney General, James H. Kline and Robert F. Katz, Deputy Attorneys General, for Respondent. 517

THE COURT.

We issued a writ of review in response to the petition of Judge James J. McCartney, filed pursuant to rule 920 of the California Rules of Court, [FN1] that we modify or reject the recommendation of the Commission on Judicial Qualifications (hereinafter the Commission) that he be removed from office. [FN2] Judge McCartney contends that the Commission has denied him procedural due process, that the charges of misconduct against him have not been sufficiently proven, and that any proven misconduct should be mitigated by his inexperience in office or as a justifiable response to an unprofessional effort by the local public defender to prevent him from hearing criminal cases. For the reasons stated below we conclude that the Commission's recommendation that Judge McCartney be removed from office be rejected but we further conclude that he be censured.

> FN1 All references herein to specific rules are to the California Rules of Court.
>
> FN2 California Constitution, article VI, section 18, subdivision (c) provides: "(c) On recommendation of the Commission on Judicial Qualifications the Supreme Court may (1) retire a judge for disability that seriously interferes with the performance of his duties and is or is likely to become permanent, and (2) censure or remove a judge for action occurring not more than 6 years prior to the commencement of his current term that constitutes wilful misconduct in office, wilful and persistent failure to perform his duties, habitual intemperance, or conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute."

Following service as a deputy district attorney petitioner was elected a Judge of the Municipal Court for the San Bernardino Judicial District (Central Division) of San Bernardino County. He began his six-year term of office on January 4, 1971. As early as late March of that year the Commission began to receive letters from private citizens and attorneys alleging that petitioner had engaged in certain unbecoming conduct during a welfare fraud case. After consideration and examination of these complaints by informal letters of inquiry and a formal preliminary investigation (rule 904), the Commission charged petitioner with seven general counts (consisting of numerous subcounts) of wilful misconduct in office (hereinafter wilful misconduct) and conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute (hereinafter prejudicial conduct). In accordance with the usual procedure (rules 905, 906, and 907) the Commission served its accusatory Notice of Formal Proceedings (hereinafter notice) containing these charges, petitioner filed a verified answer thereto, and this court appointed three special masters to take the extensive evidence in this matter. [FN3] After lengthy confidential hearings upon the 518 original charges and some new allegations added after the proceedings had commenced, the special masters issued their report summarizing the evidence for the Commission. The masters found that petitioner had in five specific instances engaged in prejudicial misconduct, but had not committed any acts of wilful misconduct. Based on that finding, the master's report recommended censure.

> FN3 We appointed Thomas W. LeSage, Judge of the Superior Court of the County of Los Angeles (presiding master); William E. McGinley, Judge of the Superior Court of the County of Los Angeles; and Sam Cianchetti, Judge of the Municipal Court for the Citrus Judicial District of Los Angeles County.
> The hearings in this matter consumed 4 months during which the masters received the testimony of 175 witnesses and numerous exhibits. The record presented to us for review is comprised of 8,702 pages divided into 67 volumes.

Upon consideration of the masters' report, written objections thereto by both petitioner and the examiner, and oral arguments, the Commission thereafter filed with this court its own unanimous findings of fact and conclusions of law. Impliedly rejecting the contrary view of the masters, the Commission found that petitioner had engaged in both acts of wilful misconduct and prejudicial conduct. While the Commission dismissed 15 of the various subcounts against petitioner, it concluded that each of the general counts in the notice had been fully or partially sustained by the evidence. Consequently, the Commission recommended to this court that petitioner be removed from office. [FN4] (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18.) Pursuant to the provisions of the California Constitution, petitioner was thereby automatically disqualified from acting as a judge for as long as the Commission's removal recommendation remained pending before this court. (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (a).)

FN4 The Commission's vote was five for removal and two for censure.

Disputing the Commission's recommendation, petitioner filed his petition for the instant review. Beyond challenging the Commission's removal recommendation on its merits, however, Judge McCartney also renews before this court certain objections which he repeatedly raised to the Commission's jurisdiction and procedures. Contending broadly that the entire proceedings leading up to the Commission's recommendation were violative of his constitutional rights, petitioner specifically asserts that the Commission denied him due process of law in (1) failing to accord proper notice of its preliminary investigation under rule 904(b), by (2) permitting amendment to the charges after the commencement of evidentiary hearings, in (3) denying his demands for public hearing, change of venue, and discovery by deposition, in (4) failing to accord him the right to disqualify Commission members, and (5) by neglecting to indicate what evidentiary standard it applied in reviewing the masters' report. 519

In our view, these assertions that procedural defects in the Commission's proceedings amount to a denial of due process are without merit. The Commission's failure, for instance, to accord Judge McCartney notice of the preliminary investigation into the various incidents at issue other than the welfare fraud case, as prescribed in rule 904(b), entailed no fundamental unfairness. (1) In affording a judge "reasonable opportunity in the course of the preliminary investigation to present such matters as he may choose," rule 904(b) clearly affords to the judge more procedural protection than is constitutionally required. At the stage of the proceedings to which rule 904(b) applies, the Commission clearly has not yet commenced to perform any adjudicatory function, but is merely attempting to examine citizen complaints in a purely investigatory manner. [FN5] Accordingly, notice to the judge under investigation as to the nature of the complaints against him is not compelled as a matter of due process. (See Hannah v. Larche (1960) 363 U.S. 420 [4 L.Ed.2d 1307, 80 S.Ct. 1502].) Hence, relief from the deleterious effect, if any, of the Commission's failure to follow rule 904(b) may be secured by petitioner only upon a showing of actual prejudice. (Cf. Light v. State Bar (1939) 14 Cal.2d 328, 331-332 [94 P.2d 35], wherein the State Bar failed to accord notice as provided by statute; McPheeters v. Board of Medical Examiners (1947) 82 Cal.App.2d 709 [187 P.2d 116], wherein the board failed to provide notice of a continuance of hearings.) No such prejudice appears here. The record is clear that service of the notice detailing all seven general counts of misconduct against him, over three months before the evidentiary hearings gave petitioner adequate notice of charges and reasonable time to prepare his defense.

FN5 After the fashion of the Federal Trade Commission, the instant Commission combines investigatory and adjudicatory functions, conducting a field investigation into the citizen complaints it has received which may divulge information later used to initiate the formal adjudicatory hearings against the particular judge under scrutiny. Testimony by the executive officer of the Commission in this case conclusively establishes that the investigation is entirely separate from the Commission's adjudicative role. The sole purpose of the preliminary investigation is to determine whether there is any factual basis for considering the initiation of a formal hearing and the incident drafting of a formal accusatory pleading. Furthermore, the investigation is not conducted by the Commission itself or its staff, but by independent special investigators from the California Attorney General's office.

(2) Petitioner's related assertion that the Commission's periodic exposure to reports of the investigation, unchallenged by explanations he would have submitted had it complied completely with rule 904(b), had a shattering impact upon its impartiality is without any evidentiary foundation. 520 Hence, the admitted procedural irregularity [FN6] in the Commission's notice of the investigation cannot of itself impair the validity of its subsequent recommendation of removal. (Accord, In re Robson (Alaska 1972) 500 P.2d 657.)

FN6 Before this court, the Commission candidly concedes that there was no formal compliance with rule 904(b), except with respect to the LaCroix incident.

(3a) Nor does there appear to be any substantial merit in the assertions that petitioner was denied due process when the Commission, pursuant to its own special rule, limited discovery to items other than depositions. In requesting the opportunity to take depositions of witnesses (or, in the alternative, to serve written interrogatories) in addition to the discovery permitted by the Commission, petitioner sought the discovery expressly authorized by statute (Gov. Code, § 68753 empowering the Commission to order depositions "[in] any pending investigation or formal proceeding"). (4) As matters of discovery are generally within the sound discretion of the initial trier of fact, however, we consider that the determination as to whether a discovery order shall issue is within the sound discretion of the Commission.

(3b) We cannot say that there has been such an abuse of that discretion here that petitioner was deprived of due process. Without deciding which discovery standard - the civil practice rule requiring a showing of relevance and materiality (Code Civ. Proc., § 2036) or the slightly more liberal criminal law requirement that the information sought be demonstrated necessary for a fair trial (Pitchess v. Superior Court (1974) 11 Cal.3d 531, 536 [113 Cal.Rptr. 897, 522 P.2d 305]) - should apply to the Commission's proceedings, we believe that it was incumbent upon petitioner to make some minimal showing of good cause for the depositions. (See Shively v. Stewart (1966) 65 Cal.2d 475, 481-482 [55 Cal.Rptr. 217, 421 P.2d 65, 28 A.L.R.3d 1431]; Brotsky v. State Bar (1962) 57 Cal.2d 287, 303-304 [19 Cal.Rptr. 153, 368 P.2d 697, 94 A.L.R.2d 1310].) Petitioner made no showing of good cause whatsoever, entirely failing to support his demand with appropriate affidavits and making the demand itself so general that the particular witnesses to be deposed were not even specified. By reason of such lack of clarity in his demand, petitioner has no cause for complaint that the request was refused.

Equally unfounded is petitioner's complaint that he should have been accorded an open hearing. (5) This state has adopted a constitutional policy that proceedings before the Commission shall be confidential (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (e), authorizing the Judicial Council to "make rules ... providing for confidentiality of proceedings.") While such a 521 policy undoubtedly was adopted in part to protect the particular judge charged with misconduct and might, therefore, arguably be waived by him, we recognize that the provision for confidentiality also protects witnesses and citizen complainants from intimidation. Inasmuch as confidentiality is constitutionally authorized, is based on sound reason, and is imposed in proceedings which are neither criminal nor before a "court of justice" we perceive no impropriety in the Commission's refusal to open the hearings before the special masters to the public. (See Swars v. Council of City of Vallejo (1949) 33 Cal.2d 867, 873- 874 [206 P.2d 355]; see generally, Woolley v. United States (9th Cir. 1938) 97 F.2d 258, 262.)

We are likewise unpersuaded that there was an abuse of discretion in the Commission's refusal to return the proceedings to San Bernardino County. While neither the state Constitution itself nor the usual statutory venue rules make any provision as to venue for the Commission's proceedings, the Judicial Council, in the exercise of its constitutional power to fashion rules of court, has given the Commission authority to set the time and place for hearings. (Rule 907). (6) Accordingly, we perceive the place of hearing to be discretionary with the Commission. Furthermore, we find no abuse of that discretion in the Commission's determination here. Pomona was the city where the courtroom of the presiding special master was located. It was the available courtroom nearest to the courthouse in the City of San Bernardino where a rather undesirable emotion-charged atmosphere prevailed. At the same time, the Pomona location imposed only minimal inconvenience for the majority of witnesses who resided no more than 24 miles away in San Bernardino. Under these circumstances, the holding of the proceedings in Pomona was proper (see Gov. Code, § 68751 restricting the Commission's process to within 150 miles of where witnesses reside).

As to the merit of the contention that the examiner's amendments to the Commission's accusatory pleading after evidentiary hearings commenced was a denial of due process, we need not address ourselves. While there may be some force to petitioner's point that the provision for such amendment in rule 911 bears reconsideration in the light of the subsequent decision in In re Ruffalo (1968) 390 U.S. 544 [20 L.Ed.2d 117, 88 S.Ct. 1222] (finding a due process violation in somewhat similar amendment of the notice of charges in a state bar disciplinary matter), that issue is not properly before this court. (7) Petitioner's counsel expressly declined to challenge the validity of rule 911 before the special masters and proceeded to answer the new allegations. Such assertions of procedural defect will not be considered on review in the absence of a proper objection before the 522 masters or the Commission itself. (Cf. Rosenthal v. Harris Motor Co. (1953) 118 Cal.App.2d 403, 409 [257 P.2d 1034].)

Also without merit are each of petitioner's remaining assertions of procedural defect which are summarily rejected. [FN7]

FN7 Contrary to the assertion of certain amici curiae that the Commission improperly considered hearsay evidence, we find the Commission to have been in substantial compliance with rule 909. That rule's requirement that the Commission must receive only "legal evidence" clearly applies to hearings, not to the preliminary investigation during which the particular hearsay statements of which amici complain were taken. The rule was fully observed here in that the only hearsay evidence received by the special masters was admitted into evidence pursuant to well-established exceptions to the hearsay rule.

We also reject the additional assertions that the Commission's failure to articulate standards, imprecision in findings, and rejection of petitioner's effort to disqualify Commission members rise to the dignity of a deprivation of due process. In connection with the action of administrative tribunals similar to the Commission, we have often recognized in the past a presumption that the administrative body concerned has found the necessary facts based on the evidentiary standards prescribed by applicable law (e.g., City & County of S. F. v. Superior Court (1959) 53 Cal.2d 236, 251 [1 Cal.Rptr. 158, 347 P.2d 294]). We adhere to that presumption here in declining to assume, in the absence of affirmative evidence to the contrary, that the Commission has ignored the "clear and convincing evidence" standard which we articulated in Geiler v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications ((1973) 10 Cal.3d 270 [110 Cal.Rptr. 201, 515 P.2d 1]) in making what we find upon examination to be sufficiently detailed findings of fact. We similarly decline to assume that the Commission members entertained a prejudice toward petitioner merely because, as he asserts, they considered the field reports of the Attorney General's special agents during the investigatory stages of the proceedings. No fundamental unfairness or constitutional infirmity is inherent in such a combination of investigative and adjudicative functions.

Coming then to the merits of petitioner's case, we proceed to consider whether the allegations of misconduct against him have been proven "by clear and convincing evidence" sufficient to sustain them "to a reasonable certainty" ( Geiler v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications, supra, 10 Cal.3d 270, 275.)

By way of the numerous subcounts which comprise the seven general counts in its notice, the Commission has charged that petitioner has engaged in a number of acts constituting wilful misconduct or prejudicial conduct. It is alleged that petitioner has engaged in a course of "intemperate language, displays of uncontrolled temper ..., and ... unreasonable verbal abuse" in criminal cases (count One) which has included the bullying and badgering of pro. per. defendants in an argumentative manner abusive to their rights and harmful to the reputation of the judiciary and the administration of justice (count Four). The Commission has further alleged that petitioner has committed similar "displays of anger, improper language, and bullying" in his relations with court personnel, to the detriment of a 523 "proper working relationship" between the judges and personnel in his district and to the harm of the administration of justice (count Two). Petitioner is also charged with being no less disrespectful to his brothers on the bench, having allegedly "engaged in conduct and language unbecoming a member of the bench ... and tending to embarrass the members of the bench in [his] judicial district ..." (count Five). The Commission also alleges that petitioner has been "grossly incompetent" in his relations with counsel, engaging in "improper criticism of counsel, prolonged and unnecessary argument with counsel, improper colloquy with counsel regarding the filing of affidavits of prejudice ..., and badgering [of] ... counsel ..." (count Three). Furthermore, it is alleged that the foregoing mistreatment of defendants, personnel, and counsel has been coupled with "aggravated inefficiency and gross incompetence in conducting court" - including "long delays in issuing rulings from the bench" - which has resulted in the effective absence of any "competent judicial officer to perform the work normally" assigned to the judicial position which petitioner holds and which thereby materially impairs the administration of justice (count Six). Finally, it is alleged that petitioner has "not properly adhered to the judicial function," abdicating his judicial role on several occasions (count Seven).

(8) In accord with our duty to independently evaluate the evidence adduced by the special masters ( Geiler v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications, supra, 10 Cal.3d at p. 276), we have examined in full detail the record of proceedings before the Commission with respect to each of the foregoing charges. On the basis of that examination, we find the majority of the Commission's findings accurate, adopt them as our own, and enter the pertinent portions of those which we adopt in the margin.

[FN8] As the 524 remaining Commission findings are rejected, [FN9] we also enter several of our own independent findings of fact. [FN10] 525

FN8 The Commission's findings were as follows:

"Finding

"1. Respondent is, and since January 4, 1971 has been, a judge of the Municipal Court of the San Bernardino County Municipal Court District.

Finding (Count One C)

"2. In People v. Ornelas ..., Judge McCartney harassed the defendant by repetitious questioning and repetitious reference to certain words and conduct of the defendant. Judge McCartney engaged in unconscionable harassment of defense counsel through repetitious and uncalled for questioning of the legal position counsel was advancing. Judge McCartney used intemperate language and engaged in uncalled for and unreasonable verbal abuse of the defendant and counsel, and gave the impression of bias towards the defendant and her counsel, Lane Stuart.

"Judge McCartney, throughout the proceeding, acted as an advocate justifying the proceedings over which he had presided previously rather than as a judge hearing without bias and prejudice motions made in good faith by counsel for defendant.

"

. . . . .

"Finding (Count Two A)

"3. While presiding during probation and sentence in People v. LaCroix ... on March 24, 1971, and after holding Mrs. LaCroix in contempt, Judge McCartney turned to his clerk, Mrs. Carol Perry, and stated in a loud voice, 'I heard that. You are in contempt. You are going to jail.' Mrs. Perry asked, 'What did I do? What did I do?' Judge McCartney shouted, repeatedly, 'Apologize! Apologize!' Mrs. Perry said, 'Well, I'm sorry.' She was not jailed. Mrs. Perry did not say anything prior to Judge McCartney's outburst. Judge McCartney then left the bench, stating that he was going to see her supervisor. When he returned to the courtroom he shouted, 'Leave my courtroom, you're no longer my courtroom clerk.' Judge McCartney was obviously angry when addressing Mrs. Perry, and his language was intemperate. Mrs. Carol Perry did cry in the courtroom and Judge McCartney did bully Mrs. Perry.

"

. . . . .

Finding (Count Two B)

"4. Mrs. Nadine Waymire is the assistant clerk of the San Bernardino Municipal Court. Judge McCartney entered her office between 2:00 and 2:30 p.m., on March 24, 1971, and said, in a loud voice, 'I want another clerk, right now,' emphasizing each word by pounding his fist loudly on Mrs. Waymire's desk. Judge McCartney was upset and angry. ...

"

. . . . .

"Finding (Count Two D-1)

"5. Judge McCartney replaced Judge William Johnstone in the Victorville Division of the San Bernardino Municipal Court on July 28, 1971. Robert Atkinson, the regular court reporter, reported the morning proceedings for Judge McCartney. Mr. Atkinson telephoned Mrs. Frances Rea and requested that she report the afternoon proceedings beginning at 1:30 p.m. Judge McCartney ordered Mr. Atkinson to return to his court at 1:00 p.m. At 1:08 p.m. Mr. Atkinson advised Judge McCartney that he was leaving on vacation and would be replaced by another reporter. Judge McCartney expressed no concern. Mrs. Rea arrived in Judge McCartney's courtroom at 1:25 p.m. At approximately 1:30 p.m. Judge McCartney orally ordered Deputy Marshal Michael K. Friesen to 'find Mr. Atkinson, arrest him, and bring him back to the courthouse.' Judge McCartney was visibly upset.

"

. . . . .

"Finding (Count Three B)

"8. On June 25, 1971, Judge McCartney spent the court day in a preliminary hearing involving several counts of bookmaking (People v. Birch and Jennings). During the hearing Judge McCartney took several unexplained and unannounced recesses and, on many occasions, took an inordinate amount of time ruling on objections. After the matter was submitted, and before the defendants were held to answer, Judge McCartney sat back in his chair for a period of thirty to forty-five minutes, during which he did not speak but occasionally turned his chair around and faced the ceiling. This conduct was unexplained and the proceedings in the courtroom came to an uncertain halt during this period.

"

. . . . .

"Finding (Count Three D)

"10. On January 3, 1972, in the case of People v. Anderson, Deputy Public Defender Raymond Rager appearing on behalf of the defendant, Judge McCartney addressed the following remarks to Mr. Rager concerning the propriety of the filing of Affidavits of Prejudice by the Public Defender's Office:

'... If you think I'm going to take away the dignity of this Court and what the people elected me to do, then you're out of your mind.

'I'll you another thing: Unless I get fairness in this thing,

I might be running against other judges. I'm not going to sit up here and be the butt of abuse of the public defender.

'If I have to run again, I'm going to run again, I'm going to take this message to the people because it's unfair. I'm going to fight. I'm not about to put my tail between my legs. And if I have to run again for office, I'm going to do it. I'm not going to be pushed around by the Public Defender's Office and the abuse and the perversion that they have engaged themselves in emasculating an elected official of the people.

'And if you're ready to do it, I'll meet you anywhere, any time, any place, buddy, up to the United States Supreme Court, back down again to the court of public opinion and anywhere else where justice will stand up.

'I went to a conference in Monterey ...

'This thing is being abused badly, and I'm not about to stand for it, and I'll fight it every time, every place, every corner where justice will permit me to do it.

'You might as well make your mind up to that, mister.' "Judge McCartney made the above statement in a loud voice, with flushed face, and appeared to those present to be angry and excited.

"

. . . . .

"Finding (Count Four C)

"13. Allan B. Cossentine on January 21, 1972, in the courtroom of Judge McCartney, attempted to file an Affidavit of Prejudice without knowledge of the appropriate statute. Judge McCartney asked Mr. Cossentine his reasons for requesting transfer to another department. Mr. Cossentine stated that he had experience in paramedicine, and that it was his opinion that Judge McCartney was under intense emotional and nervous pressure. When Deputy Public Defender Friedman attempted to assist the defendant, Judge McCartney stated that the Public Defender would first have to be appointed in the case, refusing his profferred assistance as inappropriate interference. Judge McCartney carried on an irrelevant, unnecessary, argumentative and undignified colloquy with Mr. Cossentine, a traffic case defendant appearing in propria persona, despite efforts of the latter not to become so engaged. Judge McCartney further bullied and badgered Mr. Cossentine and abused his rights, all harmful to the reputation of the judiciary and to the administration of justice.

"

. . . . .

"Finding (Count Five A)

"14. The case of People v. Julia Campbell ... was called for arraignment and disposition of certain motions in the courtroom of Judge McCartney on August 25, 1971, at 1:30 p.m. The defendant, a clerk in the Superior Court of San Bernardino County, was charged with a violation of Penal Code Section 187

(Murder). Presiding Judge Roy E. Chapman, at approximately 1:30 p.m., through his bailiff, ordered Judge McCartney to transfer the Campbell case to Judge Chapman's courtroom. Judge McCartney was on the bench and had called the Campbell case when he received the order to transfer it. Judge McCartney ordered his bailiff, his court reporter, Mrs. Faith Hewitt, Clark Hansen, Deputy District Attorney, and Defense Attorneys Paul Steinman and Richard Beswick, to accompany him to Judge Chapman's chambers, where, in their presence, Judge McCartney had a discussion with Judge Chapman regarding the order for transfer which had been made. This discussion was reported by Mrs. Hewitt. Judge McCartney spoke in a high-pitched, excited voice and appeared to be angry. His voice was heard in the adjoining courtroom.

"

. . . . .

"Finding (Count Six B)

"18. On March 17, 1972, during argument on a motion for new trial in People v. Worley, and on an issue totally irrelevant to the motion, Judge McCartney called both his bailiff and his clerk as witnesses and questioned them. Judge McCartney then left the bench, entered his chambers, removed his robe, returned to the courtroom in a suit coat, was sworn as a witness, took the stand and testified narratively at some length on the same irrelevant issue, during which time there was no judge on the bench.

"

. . . . .

"Finding (Count Seven A)

"21. During the period from January to March, 1971, Judge McCartney conferred from time to time with his bailiff, Marshal John Fink, at the bench, on the subject of the propriety of his proposed sentencing, immediately prior to his pronouncement of judgment. At Mr. Fink's suggestion to make what they were doing less obvious, Judge McCartney later called his bailiff to the bench, on the pretext of the bailiff's running an errand, before the two would confer. This conduct occurred only with respect to defendants appearing in propria persona.

"

. . . . .

"Finding (Counts Seven B-1 and Seven B-2)

"22. On December 10, 1971, Judge McCartney heard a motion by counsel to set aside a guilty plea in the case of People v. Lujan (...), which plea had previously been entered by the defendant in propria persona. Petitioner was called as a witness, was examined by his counsel, was cross-examined by the deputy district attorney, and was also cross-examined extensively by Judge McCartney. At Judge McCartney's direction a San Bernardino police officer was called as a witness for the People. Judge McCartney conducted the examination of this witness during which he ruled on objections by defense counsel to questions propounded by the Court. Judge McCartney then stepped down from the bench, removed his robe, put on his suit jacket, and took the stand as a witness, testifying narratively and at length. At this time there was no judge presiding over the proceedings. Judge McCartney then removed his jacket, put on his robe and resumed the bench.

"Finding No. 18 (Count Six B) is incorporated herein by reference as though set forth in full.

"In both instances, Lujan and Worley, Judge McCartney became personally involved in the proceedings. His participation was strongly advocative in nature, was clearly directed in support of the prosecution's position, and constituted a partisan effort to defeat petitioner's position. By testifying in an adversary posture he created the impression that there was no impartial, truth-seeking judge in the courtroom."

In addition, we adopt with some modification the Commission's Finding 15: While at the bench, Judge McCartney whistled, hummed, and muttered profanities to himself during court sessions. These utterances were made in lower than conversational, but nevertheless audible, tones. The profanity was not directed at any individual or individuals but apparently was almost unwittingly uttered as a personal response to the proceedings. Yet, it was heard by numerous people and the practice continued after the judge had been informed that his comments were within hearing of persons in the courtroom.

FN9 The Commission's findings numbered 7, 11, 12, 16, 17, 19, 20, 23, and 26 are rejected for the reason that they are conclusory or duplicative of one of those which we have adopted. Commission findings numbered 6 and 9 are rejected as merely corroborative of finding number 10, involving the judge's heated reaction to the mass filing of affidavit of prejudice forms. Finding number 24 is similarly corroborative of the more explicit findings 18 and 22 as to petitioner's examination of witnesses. Also rejected is the Commission's finding 25, which concerns matters not charged in the accusatory notice and is by its terms merely corroborative of the central findings.

FN10 We independently find as follows:
Finding No. 1: During a probation and sentencing hearing in People v. LaCroix, a welfare fraud case, Judge McCartney's examination of the defendant LaCroix was repeatedly interrupted by Mrs. LaCroix' irate and boisterous outbursts. Without shouting, Judge McCartney allowed Mrs. LaCroix briefly to address the court and then firmly admonished her that she would be ordered from the courtroom if she continued to interrupt the proceedings. When Mrs. LaCroix thereafter persisted in her spontaneous outbursts, Judge McCartney - in a voice described by some witnesses as yelling and screaming - angrily told her to "shut up" or he would hold her in contempt. At Mrs. LaCroix' further interruption, Judge McCartney ordered her from the courtroom. As she was leaving, however, Judge McCartney directed her to return to the bench where he found her in contempt of court and ordered her immediate arrest and incarceration in the county jail. In imposing the contempt sentence, Judge McCartney stated to Mrs. LaCroix that she should have proper respect for the court and refrain from "making faces."

After a brief recess during which he rescinded the contempt sentence, Judge McCartney resumed the questioning of the defendant. In the course of reviewing prior instances of his fraudulent conduct, Judge McCartney strongly criticized him for his "cheating attitude," referring to LaCroix as a "deadbeat." He also angrily reprimanded Mr. LaCroix for lying to the court, calling him a "liar" and a "cheat," and for bringing his children into the courtroom as a blatant play upon the court's sympathy. Throughout the resumed proceedings, Mr. LaCroix became progressively hostile to the court, loudly and boisterously interrupting the judge. Judge McCartney reacted by threatening to increase the jail time to 180 days if Mr. LaCroix kept interrupting. Judge McCartney ultimately entered a modified sentence of 30 days in the county jail.

Finding No. 2: In People v. Myers, a driving-while-under-the-influence-of- alcohol case, the defendant entered a guilty plea before Judge McCartney and was sentenced. Before the plea was accepted, Judge McCartney fully advised Myers of his constitutional rights, including his right to enter a plea of not guilty. After adjournment of court for the noon recess, Myers approached Judge McCartney in the courthouse hallway and casually inquired about the availability of a blood alcohol test. Judge McCartney thereupon directed Myers to, "get in this courtroom or I'll have you arrested." After Myers re-entered the courtroom, Judge McCartney severely reprimanded him for accosting the court in the hallway and continued his case until the afternoon because no reporter was immediately available. In the subsequent proceedings Judge McCartney vacated the plea of guilty over Myers' protests and granted a continuance for the arraignment so that Myers could secure counsel.

Finding No. 3: While hearing an offer of proof in chambers in the case of People v. Worley, Judge McCartney muttered "god damn son-of-a-bitch" under his breath. Although audible to counsel, these utterances were not directed toward any individual.

Finding No. 4: Throughout his harassment of the defendant in People v. Ornelas, Judge McCartney assumed the role of an advocate in attempting to establish that he had treated the defendant fairly when she had previously appeared before him in pro. per. Although counsel was present for both the People and the defendant, the judge extensively questioned the defendant from the bench. Rather than directing inquiry to the material issue of the defendant's understanding of certain waivers she had signed previously in entering a plea, he examined her as to such irrelevant matters as her attitude toward him as a judge and her past conduct of bearing several illegitimate children. Judge McCartney thereby so seriously compromised his impartiality that he was subsequently restrained from proceeding further by the superior court.

Finding No. 5: Judge McCartney has engaged in delays in issuing rulings on numerous occasions. Indeed, he has been observed to routinely sit back in his chair, with his face tilted toward the ceiling and his eyes closed, to contemplate the most ordinary evidentiary objections. At these times, the judge meditated for 3 to 15 minutes at a time while the unrecessed courtroom remained in silence.

These adopted and independent findings may be briefly summarized, along with certain supplementary facts drawn from the record itself as 526 follows: We perceive clear and convincing evidence that in one welfare fraud case petitioner angrily told a pro. per. defendant's wife to "shut up" or be held in contempt when she persisted in making a series of boisterous outbursts which interrupted the proceedings. In the same case, petitioner 527 strongly criticized the pro. per. defendant, alleging that he had previously perpetrated frauds and stating that in an attempt to evoke the court's sympathy, he had brought his children to court. For an apparent misrepresentation 528 to the court, petitioner called the defendant a "liar," "cheat," and "deadbeat." Petitioner also responded to the latter's boisterous interruptions at the sentencing by angrily threatening to triple the jail sentence.

There are three other similar instances. Petitioner told another pro. per. defendant, who had previously appeared before him to plead guilty to a drunk driving charge, to "get in [the] courtroom or I'll have you arrested" when the defendant approached him in the courthouse hallway during the noon recess to casually inquire about the availability of a blood-alcohol test. In hearing a motion for withdrawal of a prior guilty plea in another case, petitioner harassed a defendant and her counsel by extensively examining her as to several irrelevant matters in a furious argumentative "Perry Mason type of dialogue." In a fourth case, where a pro. per. defendant sought the transfer of his case to another court because Judge McCartney seemed emotionally upset, Judge McCartney engaged in a verbal attack upon the defendant with respect to his experience as a paramedic in a deliberate effort to embarrass the defendant or provoke him into a contemptuous response.

There is also clear and convincing evidence that, during the hearing of 529 the previously mentioned welfare fraud case, petitioner for no apparent reason furiously threatened to hold his court clerk in contempt shouting at her to "Apologize!

Apologize!" He subsequently discharged her as his clerk in such a violent manner as to leave her crying at her desk in the courtroom. Following the incident, petitioner went to the office of the supervising assistant clerk of the court. Once there, he loudly demanded "another clerk, right now" while pounding the supervisor's desk with his fist. Petitioner was equally arbitrary with court personnel when sitting at nearby Victorville. There, in the courtroom, petitioner ordered the arrest of a court reporter after the reporter had arranged for a replacement for the afternoon session, had advised petitioner that he had done so, had departed for his annual vacation, and the replacement had arrived 25 minutes later than expected.

The record further includes clear and convincing evidence that almost immediately after petitioner took office the local public defender's office began to file "blanket" affidavits of prejudice against him for reasons that are not entirely apparent. In reaction, Judge McCartney engaged in angry and excited dialogues with deputy public defenders who filed the affidavits. In the course of these arguments, petitioner on one occasion threatened to "fight" the office. In doing so, the judge told one deputy: "I'll meet you anywhere, any time, any place, buddy, up to the United States Supreme Court .... You might as well make up your mind to that, mister." On another occasion, Judge McCartney displayed similar hostility to a private defense attorney who attempted to file an arguably untimely affidavit of prejudice.

We find, in addition, clear and convincing evidence that petitioner challenged the transfer of a preliminary hearing on a murder case that was about to commence in his courtroom by calling a recess, taking court personnel and counsel to the presiding judge's chambers and there, in the presence of court personnel and counsel, angrily demanding an explanation for the transfer from the presiding judge.

During an in-chambers offer of proof in a prostitution case, petitioner muttered profanities under his breath in what appeared to be a self-directed, personal emotional release. He has similarly whistled, hummed, and muttered profanities to himself on numerous occasions while at the bench when court has been in session.

The record also contains clear and convincing evidence that petitioner has held benchside conferences with one of his bailiffs in sentencing pro. per. defendants in traffic and misdemeanor cases. The record also discloses, and we deem it a fact, that the court actually imposed some of the sentences which the bailiff fashioned. 530

Moreover, the judge in several cases extensively examined witnesses - often over objection of counsel - in the manner of an advocate. In conducting such examinations he ruled on counsel's objections to questions which he himself propounded, thereby assuming an adversary posture antithetical to the impartial conduct of court proceedings. These examinations also expended judicial time on matters collateral or entirely irrelevant to the cases before him. While the examination of witnesses by the court was sometimes necessitated by the unavailability of deputy district attorneys, [FN11] petitioner did not hesitate to engage in such examination even when counsel was present.

> FN11 It is unmistakable from the record that throughout 1971 and 1972 the San Bernardino District Attorney's office did not have sufficient personnel to handle all matters upon which the People required representation.

In addition, petitioner in at least two cases stepped down from the bench, removed his robe, and took the stand. As a witness he then testified at length in a narrative form, leaving the court without a presiding officer to rule upon objections.

Finally, we find clear and convincing evidence that petitioner, while on the bench, has taken frequent and excessively lengthy unexplained pauses during which he meditated with his eyes closed while the unrecessed courtroom waited in silence. This has occurred before the rulings on ordinary evidentiary objections and other relatively uncomplicated matters.

Viewing the facts as we have found them in their totality, we agree with the Commission that the factual allegations of each of the seven general counts have been sustained "to a reasonable certainty." ( Geiler v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications, supra, 10 Cal.3d at p. 275.) We must, therefore, proceed to decide whether the conduct on petitioner's part which we have found to have occurred constituted "wilful misconduct in office" or "conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute" within the meaning of California Constitution, article VI, section 18. ( Geiler v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications, supra, 10 Cal.3d at p. 276.) In approaching that question, we are mindful that the decisional law on this subject remains in its infancy. As we observed in Geiler v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications, supra, the judiciary in this state has fortunately been of such quality that we have been confronted with few censure or removal recommendations from the Commission.

In removing a judge from the bench in the recent decision of Geiler v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications, supra, this court attempted for the first time to fashion an operable definition of the offenses "wilful misconduct" 531 and "conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice ...." We there stated that: "... the Commission in the instant matter concluded that the conduct proven in the previously discussed specifications constituted 'wilful misconduct in office' and 'conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into desrepute.' As we have noted above, the second ground for imposing discipline was added to the Constitution in 1966. (9) We believe this mandates our construing 'wilful misconduct in office' as connoting something graver than the 'lesser included offense' of 'conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute.' The more serious charge should be reserved for injudicious conduct which a judge acting in his judicial capacity commits in bad faith, while the lesser charge should be applied to conduct which a judge undertakes in good faith but which nevertheless would appear to an objective observer to be not only injudicious conduct but conduct prejudicial to public esteem for the judicial office." ( Geiler v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications, supra, 10 Cal.3d at pp. 283-284.) Moreover, we went on to hold that the term "bad faith" was intended to connote that a judge had "intentionally committed acts which he knew or should have known were beyond his lawful power," engaging in a "pervasive course of conduct of overreaching his authority." ( Geiler v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications, supra, 10 Cal.3d at p. 286.)

Applying those principles to the facts of the present case, we are of the opinion that petitioner's angry criticism of public defenders for filing affidavits of prejudice may reasonably be deemed to constitute "wilful misconduct" in office. His threat to "fight" the office was not the only invective hurled at the public defender's office. The judge also branded the affidavit filings a "libel" and "slander" on the court. His remarks were thus obviously volitional. The decisive issue, then, is whether such criticisms were acts which the judge should have known were beyond his lawful authority. We believe there is no question that petitioner overreached his authority and should have known that he was doing so.

(10) It is well recognized that in enacting Code of Civil Procedure section 170.6 the Legislature guaranteed to litigants an extraordinary right to disqualify a judge. The right is "automatic" in the sense that a good faith belief in prejudice is alone sufficient, proof of facts showing actual prejudice not being required. (E.g., Pappa v. Superior Court (1960) 54 Cal.2d 350, 353 [5 Cal.Rptr. 703, 353 P.2d 311]; Mayr v. Superior Court (1964) 228 Cal.App.2d 60, 63 [39 Cal.Rptr. 240].) Accordingly, the rule has developed that, once an affidavit of prejudice has been filed under section 170.6, the court has no jurisdiction to hold further proceedings in the matter except to inquire into the timeliness of the affidavit or its technical 532 sufficiency under the statute. (See, e.g., Andrews v. Joint Clerks etc. Committee (1966) 239 Cal.App.2d 285, 293-299 [48 Cal.Rptr. 646], upholding court's power to inquire as to timeliness; Lewis v. Linn (1962) 209 Cal.App.2d 394, 399-400 [26 Cal.Rptr. 6], upholding court's power to inquire into sufficiency.) When the affidavit is timely and properly made, immediate disqualification is mandatory. (Jacobs v. Superior Court (1959) 53 Cal.2d 187, 190 [1 Cal.Rptr. 9, 347 P.2d 9].) Hence, petitioner was bound to accept proper affidavits without further inquiry. A fortiori, his vehement criticism of public defenders for exercising such statutory power was clearly improper. (Cf. Calhoun v. Superior Court (1958) 51 Cal.2d 257 [331 P.2d 648], holding improper a trial court's striking of a Code Civ. Proc., § 170 statement as a "sham" and "frivolous.") Moreover, the highly personal hostility for the public defender's office which petitioner expressed in doing so was absolutely inappropriate. Precisely the same sort of abuse of position evident in a judge's arbitrary substitutions of counsel met with our condemnation as wilful misconduct in Geiler. As this court has noted in respect to the exercise of contempt powers, "[a] judge should bear in mind that he is engaged, not so much in vindicating his own character, as in promoting the respect due to the administration of the laws ...." (People ex rel. Field v. Turner (1850) 1 Cal. 152, 153.)

Equally reprehensible are the repeated and flagrant abdications of judicial functions engaged in by petitioner. These we also deem to be "wilful misconduct" in office. For example, petitioner's benchside sentencing conferences with his bailiff were in clear disregard of the most fundamental concepts of our legal system. By the bailiff's own admissions it was established that he directly participated in the sentencing process by proposing sentences to the court which the court then immediately pronounced upon various pro. per. defendants, and in effect thereby delegated to a non- judicial officer a power to impose punishment constitutionally vested in the judiciary. He thus deprived the defendants involved of a proper trial in the sentencing stage of the proceedings. (See In re Lee (1918) 177 Cal. 690, 693 [171 P. 958].) Such delegations of judicial authority to another, even if for momentary intervals, are unconstitutional and directly run afoul of previous decisions of this court holding very similar delegations of judicial powers to bail bondsmen to be censurable "wilful misconduct." (In re Chavez (1973) 9 Cal.3d 846 [109 Cal.Rptr. 79, 512 P.2d 303] and In re Sanchez (1973) 9 Cal.3d 844 [109 Cal.Rptr. 78, 512 P.2d 302], both censuring judges for furnishing presigned release orders to local bondsmen.)

Even if the bailiff's suggestions to the judge did not ultimately find their way into the actual sentence imposed, the visual image of the bailiff's active 533 presence at the bench immediately prior to sentencing undoubtedly carried the appearance that the bailiff had joined in the fashioning of the sentence (excepting, of course, those instances in which the court adopted the unconscionable subterfuge of ostensibly calling the bailiff to the bench to run errands). That appearance of impropriety should have been avoided in light of canons of judicial conduct with which petitioner was most certainly familiar.

As transparently injudicious as his sentencing conferences was Judge McCartney's periodic assumption of the role of an advocate.

His extended examinations of witnesses appear to have been particularly destructive of the image of the court as an impartial forum for the determination of truth. Although we appreciate the difficult position into which the San Bernardino judiciary was placed by a shortage of deputy district attorneys at the time, we are compelled by overwhelming evidence to conclude that petitioner's questioning went far beyond the bounds of judicial propriety.

(11) Incident to his duty to conduct proceedings with a view toward the effective ascertainment of truth (Pen. Code, § 1044), a trial judge possesses inherent power to examine witnesses to elicit or clarify testimony (e.g., People v. Rigney (1961) 55 Cal.2d 236, 241 [10 Cal.Rptr. 625, 359 P.2d 23, 98 A.L.R.2d 186]). Additionally, we have previously observed that "[t]he mere fact the judge examined ... at some length does not establish misconduct." (People v. Corrigan (1957) 48 Cal.2d 551 at p. 559 [310 P.2d 953].) A trial judge may not, however, in the course of examining witnesses become an advocate for either party or cast aspersions or ridicule upon a witness. ( People v. Rigney, supra, 55 Cal.2d at p. 241, and cases cited therein.) Moreover, he should properly undertake the examination of witnesses "only when it appears that relevant and material testimony will not be elicited by counsel." ( Id. at p. 243.) Clearly, these latter limitations have been persistently ignored by petitioner. Perhaps the most flagrant instance was his embarcation in one disturbing-the-peace case upon an argumentative dialogue devoted to a wholly irrelevant inquiry about the testifying defendant's illegitimate children and her attitude toward him as a judge.

Aside from raising such collateral matters in a manner approaching ridicule, the judge directed his inquiry in other cases clearly to support the prosecution's position. Petitioner's calling of witnesses sua sponte exhibits the same impropriety. (12) As with examination, a trial court has unquestioned inherent power to call witnesses (Evid. Code, § 775) where the interests of justice require. But that power is subject to a limitation that it be impartially exercised (accord, Law Revision Com. comment to Evid. Code, § 775 [Deering's 1966]) which was clearly exceeded here. 534

Similarly devoid of proper respect for limitations upon the exercise of judicial power are petitioner's assumptions of the stand as a witness in cases over which he presided. As there is no indication in the record that counsel in those cases objected to his testimony, we may assume that the judge had discretion to testify as provided in Evidence Code section 703, subdivision (d). The judge utterly neglected, however, to comply with the requirement of subdivision (a) of section 703 that he inform counsel of the substance of his impending testimony. Instead, petitioner removed his robe and impulsively stepped from the bench to commence an unexpected discourse. Furthermore, the self-serving and partisan nature of his testimony on each occasion effectively rendered his decision to take the stand an abuse of discretion. As the record indicates, the evidentiary objections to his statements were ruled upon by the judge himself, his narrative form of speaking tended to discourage cross- examination, and his remarks clearly reflected a partisan attitude. These characteristics of judicial testimony are precisely those which Evidence Code section 703 was designed to discourage (see Legislative Committee comment to Evid. Code, § 703.) Additionally, though the subject of this testimony was invariably of marginal relevance, it bore on issues that were more than merely formal or undisputed and was also improper for that reason. (See Wigmore on Evidence, § 1909, at p. 592.)

Examining the remaining incidents which we have found to be established in light of the controlling Geiler principles, we further conclude that the conduct which has prejudiced the administration of justice and cast the judicial office into disrepute is petitioner's proven intemperance with court personnel, defendants in criminal cases, and attorneys. The judge's pertinent dialogues were clearly injudicious and undoubtedly damaging to the esteem for the judiciary held by members of the public who observed such conduct. The fact that these volatile outbursts lacked the extreme vulgarity apparent in the court's treatment of counsel and personnel in Geiler does not mean that they are any less deserving of our unhesitant reproach. (See, e.g., People v. Black (1957) 150 Cal.App.2d 494, 499-503 [310 P.2d 472], reversing conviction for judicial misconduct; Etzel v. Rosenbloom (1948) 83 Cal.App.2d 758, 762-765 [189 P.2d 848], civil judgment reversed for judicial misconduct; see also, the account of the Tenth Circuit Judicial Council's removal of Judge Stephen S. Chandler from the bench in Note, The Chandler Incident and Problems of Judicial Removal (1967) 19 Stan.L.Rev. 448 at p. 450, indicating that Judge Chandler (inter alia) singled out one defendant as a "son of a bitch" and others as "shady characters, pirates, and vultures.")

Although we thus conclude that the majority of the formal charges 535 against petitioner are true and, in those instances we have indicated, are based on acts which constitute either wilful or prejudicial misconduct, we decline to further conclude that other conduct on his part which we have found proven by the evidence is of such character. These other actions we consider less than desirable judicial behavior, but not sufficiently reflective of "bad faith" or a diminution in public esteem to constitute cause for discipline by this court.

(13) The conduct and language engaged in by petitioner which tended to embarrass the other judges in his district is, in our view, repugnant to the venerable tradition that judges share the bench as brethren in a spirit of mutual respect and courtesy. That customary deference was unjustifiably shattered by petitioner's demand for an explanation regarding the transfer of a hearing in connection with a murder case in the presence of lawyers and court attaches. The disrespectful confrontation with the presiding judge was surely an uncalled-for embarrassment to the latter, and most certainly appeared injudicious to observing court personnel and lawyers. Yet, there has been no showing that public esteem for the judicial office was substantially impaired by that apparently isolated incident. Hence, the incident could not comprise the lesser offense of prejudicial conduct.

(14) We entertain a similar view with respect to the muttered profanity and humming. We strongly deplore such whistling, humming and swearing as unbecoming, injudicious, and unsuited to the proper decorum of a courtroom. Nevertheless, we somewhat reluctantly find ourselves unable to say in view of all the circumstances that this misconduct was so serious as to rise to the level of an offense or acts warranting removal or censure. The record is unequivocal that petitioner engaged in such conduct unintentionally, indeed almost unconsciously, in low tones and apparently as a matter of emotional release. Unlike the vulgar and profane expletives which we declared a cause for removal in Geiler, the profanities uttered here were relatively isolated and were not directed as a reprimand to court personnel, attorneys or any other specific individuals. In essence, the "music" and expletives were apparently "self-utterances" unintended for anyone to hear but the judge himself. Accordingly, while petitioner's utterances might be characterized as erratic and are not to be condoned as proper judicial behavior, they cannot be said to have been "wilful" or to have actually prejudiced the administration of justice in the sense of drawing the courts into public disesteem. (Cf. Eaton v. City of Tulsa (1974) 415 U.S. 697 [39 L.Ed.2d 693, 94 S.Ct. 1228], holding the isolated usage of street vernacular during a defendant's testimony, not directed to the judge or any officer of the court and not presenting any impairment to the administration of justice, to be an insufficient basis for the imposition of a contempt sentence.) 536

Somewhat more difficult for us to resolve has been the question whether petitioner's inefficiency in conducting court qualifies as a ground for discipline. Beyond the languor found by the Commission to be attributable to petitioner's frequent silent meditations, the record is replete with clear evidence of chronic delay in his courtroom. As master calendar judge, for example, he habitually ran far behind the normal time schedule in assigning cases and thereby caused such losses of trial time that a backlog of cases for the whole district was increased. Likewise, in handling his own assignments petitioner routinely fell behind schedule: he often failed to complete small claims hearings and custody arraignments during the morning as required by the presiding judge; trials in his courtroom frequently ran into the evening, some as late as midnight; and law and motion matters which counsel expected to receive summary disposition at the bench became unduly involved proceedings requiring long and arguably unnecessary in-chambers consultations. Not only did this absence of expeditiousness in the dispatch of judicial business place considerable strain on the municipal court calendar, but it also resulted in security, budgetary and manpower problems. Yet, the record is equally clear that this pattern of delay stemmed from no dereliction of duty. Indeed, petitioner has at all times made a conscientious and determined effort to conduct his share of the affairs before the court. (15) Rather than arising from any neglect of responsibility, his inefficiency appears to stem from an effort to attain a degree of diligence and studiousness in the application of the law which was unrealistic and frequently unjustified. Abundantly evident in the testimony of lawyers before the special masters is the opinion that undue caution and excessive attention to detail in all matters before him, even those of minor importance, is at the root of petitioner's inability to conduct court effectively.

On this state of the record, we believe petitioner's inefficiency has not been shown to be so serious as to warrant censure or removal on that ground. Here, the petitioner's shortcomings in the dispatch of judicial business involve no dereliction of responsibility and such shortcomings cannot be condemned as injudicious behavior. In a sense, the image conjured up by petitioner's handling of judicial tasks is somewhat reminiscent of the fog-mired "High Court of Chancery" in Dickens' Bleak House which was so dedicated to the intricacies of "Justice" that the estates probated before it were entirely depleted by court costs and legal fees. That infamous inefficiency, so well depicted by Dickens, was hardly cause for dispensing with the Lord Chancellor. Instead, it became the subject for reform in the Chancery's cumbersome procedures (e.g., Holdsworth, Bleak House and the Procedure of the Court of Chancery in Voices in Court (W. Davenport 537 ed. 1958) at pp. 363-377). The inefficiency beclouding petitioner's court, we believe, should similarly be dealt with as one of several problems in local court administration. These are by tradition more properly committed for their solution to the sound judgment of the presiding judge of the district (see rule 532.5) rather than to this court in the exercise of its disciplinary powers. Such a result seems particularly appropriate in light of the testimony by his fellow judges, who were generally critical of his penchant for exhaustive detail, that petitioner's excessive care in accepting tendered guilty pleas might be preferred to the more "efficient" summary approval of plea bargains having unconscionable terms. [FN12]

> FN12 We are also impelled toward the conclusion that a judge should not be disciplined for inefficiency absent proof of dereliction of duty by reference to the impeachment trial of Judge James H. Hardy during the early history of this state. In that case, articles of impeachment charged Judge Hardy, the then "district judge" for Calaveras County, with "causing great delays in the transaction of judicial business" by (inter alia) granting unwarranted continuances and in failing to rule expeditiously on various motions. These charges of inefficiency were dismissed by the state Senate for lack of evidence that the judge wilfully neglected to perform the duties of his office. (Appendix to Journals of Sen. & Assem., No. 36 (13th Sess. 1861-1862).)

Our foregoing conclusions of law, insofar as petitioner is deemed to have engaged in wilful misconduct and conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice, compel us to squarely face the question whether removal or censure is an appropriate sanction. While arguing for an outright dismissal of charges, petitioner also submits that "at worst, [he] should be censured, but not removed" from office. In that connection, he urges this court (inter alia) to excuse his misconduct as an understandable reaction to an improper campaign by public defenders to entirely preclude him from presiding over criminal trials.

We find this "defense" to be a slim reed at best. In the first place, the argument is simply no answer to petitioner's serious departures from a proper judicial role or his habitual intemperance toward defendants and court personnel. The benchside sentencing conferences with his bailiff, for example, usually took place when no counsel was present. Hence, they were entirely unrelated to any filing of affidavits of prejudice by public defenders.

More reason for rejection of the argument, however, is that it is utterly without exculpatory force even as to petitioner's outbursts at public defenders. It is true, as petitioner asserts, that the record contains some evidence suggesting that the public defender's deputies pursued the filing of affidavits with occasional disrespect to the court. In fact, the entire policy 538 itself may have been an affront to the court's dignity if it stemmed from public defenders' dissatisfaction with petitioner's "hard line" performance as a district attorney rather than a good faith belief in prejudice. [FN13] But, even assuming arguendo that the evidence was clear and convincing, disrespect on the part of the public defender cannot serve to justify petitioner's injudicious response. As previously indicated, the Legislature clearly foresaw that the peremptory challenge procedure would be open to such abuses but intended that the affidavits be honored notwithstanding misuse. (See Johnson v. Superior Court (1958) 50 Cal.2d 693, 697 [329 P.2d 5]; Mayr v. Superior Court, supra, 228 Cal.App.2d 60, 64.)

FN13 Soon after petitioner began his term of office the local public defender established an inter-office policy of filing affidavits of prejudice against him. A written statement requiring affidavits to be filed "on all trials" assigned to petitioner was first circulated within the public defender's office on January 25, 1971. Thereafter, on May 26 and 27, 1971, the policy was expanded to require that, "[an] Affidavit of Prejudice shall be used for all trials, preliminaries, arraignments, bail settings and any other appearances which require an act of judicial discretion." Pursuant to this policy, approximately 205 affidavits were filed by deputy public defenders against petitioner between July of 1971 and March of 1972.

While there is some evidence to suggest that this policy was adopted as part of a concerted effort on the part of public defenders to remove petitioner from the bench, there is an equally strong suggestion that it was rooted in legitimate concerns that the judge would be partial to the prosecution or would take an inordinate amount of time in trying their cases. Accordingly, we are unable to arrive at any definite conclusion about the precise basis for the policy.

The blanket nature of these filings, however, in itself reflects a measure of impropriety. As the objective of a verification is to insure good faith in the averments of a party (e.g., Hoffman v. City of Palm Springs (1959) 169 Cal.App.2d 645, 648 [337 P.2d 521]), the provision in Code of Civil Procedure section 170.6 for the showing of prejudice by affidavit requires a good faith belief in the judge's prejudice on the part of the individual party or counsel filing the affidavit in each particular case. (See Johnson v. Superior Court (1958) 50 Cal.2d 693, at p. 697 [329 P.2d 5], indicating the affidavit of prejudice must be a good faith declaration; accord Berger v. United States (1921) 255 U.S. 22, at pp. 33-35 [65 L.Ed. 481, at pp. 485-486, 45 S.Ct. 230], holding that substantially similar federal Judicial Code section 21 was satisfied by a good faith allegation of prejudice; see generally Austin v. Lambert (1938) 11 Cal.2d 73 [77 P.2d 849, 115 A.L.R. 849], holding invalid the predecessor section to current 170.6 and emphasizing the need of a provision that would require an averment of prejudice under oath, as required by federal law, in order to insure good faith.) The "blanket" nature of the written directive issued by the public defender arguably contravened this requirement of good faith by withdrawing from each deputy the individual decision whether or not to appear before petitioner. To phrase it another way, the office policy predetermined that prejudice would be claimed by each deputy without regard to the facts in each case handled by the office, thereby transforming the representations in each affidavit into bad faith claims of prejudice.

Moreover, even if the conduct of the public defenders was clearly contemptuous, petitioner's vehement expressions of personal hostility were 539 absolutely improper. (16) A judge must not, as previously noted, place the defense of his own character above his obligation to promote respect for the law in adjudicating contempts of court (e.g., Taylor v. Hayes (1974) 418 U.S. 488 [41 L.Ed.2d 897, 94 S.Ct. 2697], strongly criticizing a district judge for trying a contempt when he exhibited "marked personal feelings' of hostility toward the contemptuous lawyer). If petitioner thus could not vent his personal animosity in the face of contemptuous conduct, he certainly could not do so in the face of any disrespect attendant to the public defender's affidavit of prejudice policy. No matter how provocative are the personal attacks or innuendos by lawyers against a judge, the judge simply "should not himself give vent to personal spleen or respond to a personal grievance" because "justice must satisfy the appearance of justice. " (Mr. Justice Frankfurter writing for the court in Offutt v. United States (1954) 348 U.S. 11, 14 [99 L.Ed. 11, 16, 75 S.Ct. 11]; see also Cooke v. U.S. (1925) 267 U.S. 517, 539 [69 L.Ed. 767, 775, 45 S.Ct. 390], admonishing judges to "banish the slightest personal impulse to reprisal" in protecting the authority of the court.)

(17a) We find much more persuasive petitioner's additional argument that the court should be lenient in view of his inexperience on the bench. Unlike Judge Geiler who engaged in misconduct after almost a half-decade on the bench, petitioner had held his office for barely more than a year and a half before he was accused of misconduct. Notwithstanding his many years in the practice of law, he was undoubtedly unfamiliar with some modes of proper judicial behavior necessarily learned only by judicial experience. It is therefore conceivable that some of his prejudicial conduct may have been the product of such ignorance.

Even more salutary, however, was petitioner's unusual care in attempting to " do justice" in the cases before him. In advising criminal defendants of their constitutional rights at arraignment, he took extraordinary measures to insure that defendants understood the procedural protections accorded them. He prepared a detailed arraignment statement, had it translated into other languages when defendants did not speak English, and added a simple primer of trial procedure for defendants who appeared at trial in pro. per.

At the same time, petitioner strove for fundamental fairness in his sentencing. Where a jail sentence for a minor misdemeanor violation might result in defendant's loss of employment he imposed a weekend sentence. If a fine was to be imposed upon a defendant for whom payment in one sum would be unduly harsh, petitioner often permitted payment by installment deductions from the defendant's weekly salary over a period of time. He was liberal in assigning first-time vehicle offenders to traffic school. 540 He has also showed unusual initiative in creating opportunities for rehabilitative treatment of alcoholic defendants. He personally established a system whereby the municipal court judges could routinely refer alcoholics to local Alcoholics Anonymous programs and monitored the defendants' participation in rehabilitation. This careful and dedicated approach to even the most minor traffic cases was an admirable contrast to the "assembly-line justice " dispensed by some trial courts which is now drawing increasing public criticism (see Green, Judging the Judges, The Wall Street Journal (March 7, 1974)). Such obvious commitment to fairness and innovative procedural reform on the part of a judge is to be encouraged and may therefore properly be considered by this court in mitigation of proven misconduct when we are called upon by the Commission to fashion a disciplinary sanction.

In apparent deference to these mitigating factors, the masters recommended to the Commission that petitioner only be censured for his conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice in the five instances which they had specified. (18) Their recommendation, as we took care to point out in Geiler v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications, supra, 10 Cal.3d at pages 275-276, is entitled to considerable weight in view of the masters' better position to judge the credibility of the testimony presented to them. We believe the masters' view is especially entitled to that consideration here because the record evinces constructive contributions by petitioner which tend to offset some of the deleterious effects of his misconduct.

(17b) We therefore conclude that the recommendation of the Commission should be rejected, and that censure is the appropriate result. We cannot stress too strongly that were it not for the redeeming qualities which we have mentioned we would be inclined to agree with the Commission's recommendation of removal. But upon our review of the record as a whole we are satisfied that censure is appropriate in this case. Accordingly, we hereby enter an order of censure of Judge James J. McCartney for his injudicious conduct and admonish him to desist from engaging in such misconduct. This order is final forthwith. 541

Cal.,1974.

McCartney v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications

END OF DOCUMENT

24 Cal.3d 72
593 P.2d 200, 154 Cal.Rptr. 503
(Cite as: 24 Cal.3d 72)

In re ARDEN T. JENSEN, a Judge of the Superior Court, on Censure

L.A. No. 31020.

Supreme Court of California.

November 24, 1978.

SUMMARY

The Supreme Court adopted the conclusion and recommendation of the Commission on Judicial Performance that a judge's conduct constituted persistent failure to perform his duties within the meaning of Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (c), and that he be publicly censured. The commission found that despite an informal admonition by it, the judge, during a 6-year period, repeatedly failed to decide within 90 days cases that had been submitted to him for decision, and that he nevertheless regularly executed affidavits declaring that no cause remained pending and undetermined before him for 90 days after such submission, thus entitling him to his salary under Cal. Const., art. VI, § 19 and Gov. Code, § 68210. (Opinion by The Court.)

HEADNOTES

Classified to California Digest of Official Reports

(1) Judges § 1--Public Censure.
The Supreme Court, in a proceeding to review the performance of a judge, adopted the conclusion and recommendation of the Commission on Judicial Performance that the judge's conduct constituted persistent failure to perform his duties within the meaning of Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (c), and that he be publicly censured. The commission found that despite an informal admonition by it, the judge, during a 6-year period, repeatedly failed to decide within 90 days cases that had been submitted to him for decision, and that he nevertheless regularly executed affidavits declaring that no cause remained pending and undetermined before him for 90 days after such submission, thus 73 entitling him to his salary under Cal. Const., art. VI, § 19 and Gov. Code, § 68210.

[See Cal.Jur.3d, Judges, § 62; Am.Jur.2d, Judges, § 50.]

COUNSEL

No counsel listed for this case.

THE COURT.

(1) The Commission on Judicial Performance, following a factual stipulation in lieu of hearing, receipt of documentary evidence in mitigation, and oral argument, found that despite an informal admonition by the commission, between 1971 and 1977 Judge Arden T. Jensen repeatedly failed to decide within 90 days cases that had been submitted to him for decision, and that he nevertheless regularly executed affidavits declaring that no cause remained pending and undetermined before him for 90 days after such submission, thus entitling him to his salary. (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 19; Gov. Code, § 68210.)

The commission found that Judge Jensen's failure to decide his cases on time was not caused by an intentional disregard of his duties, but that with proper application he could have decided each of the matters within 90 days of submission. The commission therefore concluded that Judge Jensen's conduct constituted persistent failure to perform his duties (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (c)), and recommended that he be publicly censured.

After reviewing the record we are satisfied that the conclusion of the commission is justified and that its recommendation should be adopted. Accordingly, for the reasons stated Judge Jensen is hereby censured. 74

Cal.,1978.

In re Jensen

END OF DOCUMENT

28 Cal.3d 873
625 P.2d 219, 172 Cal.Rptr. 676
(Cite as: 28 Cal.3d 873)

In re ROBERT S. STEVENS, a Judge of the Superior Court, on Censure

L.A. No. 31304.

Supreme Court of California.

Feb 11, 1981.

SUMMARY

The Supreme Court entered an order publicly censuring a superior court judge based on findings of the Commission on Judicial Performance that for a period of over three years the judge repeatedly initiated conversations with a married couple employed by the Legislature in which he discussed his sexual experiences and fantasies and proposed that the couple engage in various kinds of sexual activity with him and with other persons, all in explicit, vulgar, and offensive language, which conversations were widely publicized in the press. The court concluded that such conduct constituted "conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute" (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (c)). (Opinion by The Court. Separate opinion by Richardson, J.)

THE COURT.

The Commission on Judicial Performance, following a hearing before it and review of a report of special masters, objections to that report, and related documents, found, inter alia: Judge Robert S. Stevens was a member of the California Legislature before he became a judge in 1977. From January 1975 until August 1979 Judge Stevens repeatedly initiated conversations with Mr. and Mrs. Edward Leon Murphy, employees of the Legislature, in which he discussed his sexual experiences and fantasies and proposed that the Murphys engage in various kinds of sexual activity with him and with other persons, all in explicit, vulgar, and offensive language. His purpose in doing so was to gratify his own sexual desires. The Murphys repeatedly objected to Judge Stevens about these conversations, but he persisted in conducting 874 them although he knew they harassed and distressed the Murphys. A number of public officials and employees learned of these conversations when the Murphys sought help in persuading Judge Stevens to discontinue his conduct, and in August 1979 the conversations were widely publicized in the press. Judge Stevens knew or should have known there was a substantial likelihood that his conduct would become known to many persons and thereby bring the judicial office into disrepute.

The commission concluded that Judge Stevens' conduct constituted "conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute" (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (c)), and recommended that he be censured.

Upon our review of the record we are satisfied that the foregoing conclusion of the commission is fully warranted and that the discipline recommended should be adopted. Accordingly, and by this order, Judge Stevens is hereby publicly censured.

RICHARDSON, J.

I would call for further briefing, set the matter for oral argument, and consider imposition of a more severe sanction. 875

Cal.,1981.

In re Stevens

END OF DOCUMENT

31 Cal.3d 919
647 P.2d 1075, 184 Cal.Rptr. 296
(Cite as: 31 Cal.3d 919)

In re HUGO FISHER, a Judge of the Superior Court, on Censure

L.A. No. 31504.

Supreme Court of California.

Jul 14, 1982.

SUMMARY

The Commission on Judicial Performance recommended that a judge of the superior court be censured for conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute. The judge did not request review of the recommendation.

The Supreme Court held that substantial evidence supported the conclusion that the judge had violated Cal. Code of Jud. Conduct, canon 3, part A(4), which states that "[a] judge should ..., except as authorized by law, neither initiate nor consider ex parte or other communications concerning a pending or impending proceeding," and, by its order, publicly censured the judge. The court pointed out that under Cal. Rules of Court, rule 919, failure to request review "may be deemed a consent to a determination on the merits based upon the record filed by the commission." (Opinion by The Court.)

THE COURT. [FN*]

FN* Mosk, J., did not participate.

The Commission on Judicial Performance has recommended that we censure Hugo Fisher, a Judge of the Superior Court of San Diego County, for "conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute." He has not requested review of the recommendation; and under California Rules of Court, rule 919, that failure "may be deemed a consent to a determination on the merits based upon the record filed by the Commission." 920

Substantial evidence supports the conclusion that Judge Fisher violated canon 3 of the California Code of Judicial Conduct, which states that "[a] judge should ..., except as authorized by law, neither initiate nor consider ex parte or other communications concerning a pending or impending proceeding." (Canon 3, part A(4).) Accordingly, by this order he is publicly censured. 921

Cal.,1982.

In re Fisher

END OF DOCUMENT

31 Cal.3d 403
645 P.2d 99, 183 Cal.Rptr. 48
(Cite as: 31 Cal.3d 403)

In re CHARLES S. STEVENS, a Judge of the Superior Court, on Censure

L.A. No. 31540.

Supreme Court of California.

May 20, 1982.

SUMMARY

The Commission on Judicial Performance, following a hearing before it and a review of a report of special masters, objections to that report, and related documents, concluded that the conduct of a superior court judge in repeatedly and persistently using racial and ethnic epithets, and making racially stereotypical remarks to counsel and court personnel, most of which occurred during in-chambers conferences rather than in open court, was "prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute" (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (c)) and recommended that he be censured.

The Supreme Court adopted the recommendation and by its order publicly censured the judge. (Opinion by The Court. Separate concurring opinion by Kaus, J., with Bird, C. J., Newman, Broussard and Reynoso, JJ., concurring. Separate dissenting opinion by Mosk, J.)

THE COURT.

The Commission on Judicial Performance, following a hearing before it and a review of a report of special masters, objections to that report, and related documents, found, inter alia: Judge Charles S. Stevens has served as judge of the Superior Court, County of Santa Barbara, since April 30, 1971. During his current term in office, and during the six years prior thereto, Judge Stevens repeatedly and persistently used racial and ethnic epithets, and made racially stereotypical remarks to counsel and court personnel. Most of these remarks occurred 404 during in chambers conferences rather than in open court. The commission further recited that, according to most witnesses, Judge Stevens has at all times performed his judicial duties fairly and equitably, and free from actual bias against any person regardless of race, ethnicity or sex, and that his remarks were both inappropriate and in poor taste.

The commission concluded that Judge Stevens' conduct was "prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute" (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (c)), and recommended that he be censured.

Upon our review of the record we are satisfied that the foregoing conclusion of the commission is fully warranted and that the discipline recommended should be adopted. Accordingly, and by this order, Judge Stevens is hereby publicly censured.

KAUS, J.

Concurring.

In view of the dissent, the majority opinion's lack of specificity fails to do justice to the commission's recommendation which we adopt. Therefore I feel compelled to detail some of the facts on which it is based.

During an in-chambers discussion regarding a criminal case involving two black defendants and a white victim, Judge Stevens remarked to counsel that black persons have to learn how to live in their own neighborhoods and that it was "typical" of black persons to fight unfairly.

Judge Stevens, during his term in office, referred to black persons as "Jig, dark boy, colored boy, nigger, coon, Amos and Andy, and jungle bunny." With one exception, Judge Stevens did not use these terms in open court or with reference to a party, witness or attorney in a case before him. In 1974, in a probate case involving a controversy between black litigants regarding burial of a loved one, Judge Stevens stated in the presence of court personnel only, "let's get on with this Amos and Andy show." On another occasion, he privately referred to his court clerk as being "lazier than a coon."

During another in-chambers discussion, Judge Stevens stated to a public defender that "Filipinos can be good, hard-working people and that they are clean, unlike some black animals who come into contact with the court." 405

In connection with a child abuse proceeding involving an Hispanic defendant with a Spanish surname, Judge Stevens observed from his prior experience that (in effect) Spanish persons live by different standards than we do; that wife abuse is common and more acceptable for them; and that such abuse might explain defendant's conduct toward her child.

In a civil settlement conference, Judge Stevens referred to Attorney Gonzales as "acting like a Mexican jumping bean" after he changed his position on settlement.

During his term in office, Stevens used such terms as "cute little tamales," "Taco Bell," "spic," and "bean" when referring to persons with Hispanic surnames in conversations with court personnel.

It is beyond me how it can be argued that such behavior is not "conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice" simply because Judge Stevens otherwise performed his judicial duties "fairly and equitably." "[J]ustice should not only be done, but should manifestly and undoubtedly be seen to be done." (Rex v. Sussex Justices (1924) 1 K.B. 256, 259 (Lord Hewart).) The administration of justice is prejudiced by the public perception of racial bias, whether or not it is translated into the court's judgments and orders.

I am particularly puzzled by the dissent's reference to Cohen v. California (1971) 403 U.S. 15 [29 L.Ed.2d 284, 91 S.Ct. 1780]. The facts of that case are too well known to require repeating. Can it be seriously contended that Judge Stevens would not be subject to censure if - before performing his duties "fairly and equitably" - he took the bench wearing a robe on the back of which he proclaimed that as far as "coons" and "spics" are concerned, his feelings were precisely the same as Mr. Cohen's toward the draft.

Bird, C. J., Newman, J., Broussard, J., and Reynoso, J., concurred.

MOSK, J.

I dissent.

The Commission on Judicial Performance (Commission) found that Judge Stevens has at all times performed his judicial duties fairly and equitably, and free from actual bias against any person regardless of race, ethnicity or sex. That is where the matter should have ended. Despite 406 that express finding, however, the Commission has elected to seek the judge's censure because of distaste for his colorful vocabulary. Thus while the Commission finds no fault with the judge's conduct, it proposes to have him disciplined because of his speech. In my view this is impermissible.

I must admit that I am morally offended by racial epithets, whether uttered in a courtroom or in a locker room. But under the constitutional prohibition against curbing freedom of expression, I am not permitted to allow my sensibilities to govern the speech, however uncouth, of any other person. Nor does the Commission have such power; it is authorized to discipline a judge for "conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice" (Italics added) (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (c)), not for its ipse dixit concept of the propriety of his speech.

It has often been said that the constitutional right of free expression is a powerful medicine in a society as diverse as ours. But, as Justice Harlan wrote in Cohen v. California (1971)

403 U.S. 15 [29 L.Ed.2d 284, 91 S.Ct. 1780], the right is "designed and intended to remove governmental restraints from the arena of public discussion, putting the decision as to what views shall be voiced largely into the hands of each of us, in the hope that such freedom will ultimately produce a more capable citizenry and more perfect polity and in the belief that no other approach would comport with the premise of individual dignity and choice upon which our political system rests."

The majority, and particularly the gratuitously lurid concurring opinion, attempt to transmute off-the-bench speech into judicial conduct because of the offensive nature of the speech, which they understandably resent, as do I. The result reveals a lack of full appreciation of the First Amendment and of article I, section 2, subdivision (a) of the California Constitution. It is easy to protect the free speech rights of a Republican or a Democrat; the real test arises when a court must give the same constitutional guarantees to a communist, a Nazi, a Ku Klux Klansman, an anti-Semite or any other species of bigot, regardless of his station in life. One of the immutable prerogatives of American citizenship is the right to speak freely, including "the freedom to speak foolishly and without moderation" (Baumgartner v. United States (1944) 322 U.S. 665, 674 [88 L.Ed. 1525, 1531, 64 S.Ct. 1240]). 407

My colleagues have also forgotten the lessons of the civil rights tensions of the 1960s. During that period many a red-neck sheriff interpreted civil rights speeches - particularly in and around court houses - as impermissible conduct. The United States Supreme Court refused to dilute the First Amendment, regardless of how objectionable the expressions were to local authorities, and consistently maintained the distinction between speech and conduct. (See, e.g., Gregory v. Chicago (1969) 394 U.S. 111 [22 L.Ed.2d 134, 89 S.Ct. 946]; Cox v. Louisiana (1965) 379 U.S. 536 [13 L.Ed.2d 471, 85 S.Ct. 453]; Edwards v. South Carolina (1963) 372 U.S. 229 [9 L.Ed.2d 697, 83 S.Ct. 680].)

Yes, the freedom of expression often creates discord and tumult, and is not infrequently offensive to some, or many, or even a majority in our society. But, as Justice Douglas reminded us: "a medley of voices is essential. That is why the First Amendment is our most precious inheritance." (Douglas, Go East Young Man (1974) p. 470.) Justice Harlan noted again in Cohen that while the words used may be more distasteful than others of their genre, still "one man's vulgarity is another's lyric. Indeed, we think it is largely because governmental officials cannot make principled distinctions in this area that the Constitution leaves the matters of taste and style so largely to the individual."

Nevertheless the Commission on Judicial Performance is seeking to impose on Judge Stevens its self-determined standard of appropriate taste and style in language. In so doing it reveals an imperious disregard for constitutional guarantees.

Unfortunately this is not the first time this agency has demonstrated disdain for constitutional limitations.

In 1979 the same Commission deliberately violated the state constitutional requirement of confidentiality in its proceedings (art. VI, § 18, subd. (f)) by holding public hearings of a mere investigative nature at a cost of more than a half million taxpayer dollars. (Mosk v. Superior Court (1979) 25 Cal.3d 474 [159 Cal.Rptr. 494, 601 P.2d 1030].) As recently as February of this year, the Commission considered material sent by a judge to a legislative committee, and while it found the "facts do not constitute grounds for proceeding," it issued a didactic press release on February 23, 1982, declaring that communications "although not improper or unethical in a disciplinary sense, when indulged in by judges, run the risk of appearing insensitive and lacking in discretion." 408 There can be no more clear indication that the Commission deems itself clothed with magisterial power to criticize any speech or writings of members of the judiciary that it unilaterally deems insensitive or indiscreet.

If the choice of the people of California is between an independent judiciary and self-assumed censorship of judges by a bureaucratic agency, I have not the slightest doubt that the people would deem it in their best interest to opt for an independent judiciary.

If the day comes - and in view of the majority opinion it may be here - when judges at any level are to be disciplined for their manner of expression, however primitive, then we no longer have an independent judiciary in California. Judges will inevitably become timid and stifled, even though the Constitutions of the United States and of California apply to all persons; nothing in their text suggests that judges are excluded from protection.

If any discipline is indicated under the facts of this case, it is the Commission on Judicial Performance which should be censured for its overreaching assumption of authority, not the judge whose judicial conduct has been found to be free of bias.

I would dismiss the proceedings.

Cal.,1982.

In re Stevens

END OF DOCUMENT

33 Cal. 3d 788
662 P.2d 108, 191 Cal.Rptr. 171
(Cite as: 33 Cal.3d 788)

In re BOBBY D. YOUNGBLOOD, a Judge of the Municipal Court, on Censure

L.A. No. 31727.

Supreme Court of California.

May 5, 1983.

SUMMARY

The Commission on Judicial Performance, following a hearing before it and review of the report of the special masters appointed pursuant to Cal. Rules of Court, rule 907, objections to that report, and the record of the hearing before the special masters, found a municipal court judge had on one occasion ordered persons to appear before him under false pretenses and had brought about the incarceration of one of them without legal cause or compliance with applicable procedure. On another occasion, the judge had presided in a case involving a telephone company at a time when he himself was involved in litigation with the same party, had thereafter altered the previously rendered judgment in that case, after an ex parte communication with the plaintiff and without notice to the telephone company, and had then contacted employees of the telephone company and threatened incarceration if the plaintiff's service was interrupted because of the case. The commission concluded that the judge was guilty of wilful misconduct in office (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18) and recommended that he be "severely publicly censured."

The Supreme Court adopted the recommendation and by its order publicly censured the judge. (Opinion by The Court. Broussard, J., did not participate.)

THE COURT.

The Commission on Judicial Performance, following a hearing before it and review of the report of the special masters appointed pursuant to rule 907 of the California Rules of Court, objections to that report, and the record of the hearing before the special masters, found: Judge Youngblood on one occasion ordered persons to appear before him under false pretenses and brought about the incarceration of one of them without legal cause or compliance with applicable procedure. On another occasion Judge Youngblood 789 presided in a case involving Pacific Telephone at a time when he himself was involved in litigation with Pacific Telephone. Judge Youngblood thereafter altered the previously rendered judgment in that case, after an ex parte communication with the plaintiff and without notice to the defendant Pacific Telephone. Judge Youngblood then contacted employees of Pacific Telephone and threatened incarceration if the plaintiff's service was interrupted because of the case.

The commission concluded that Judge Youngblood was guilty of wilful misconduct in office (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18) and recommended that he be "severely publicly censured."

After reviewing the record we are satisfied that the conclusion of the commission is fully warranted and that the discipline recommended should be adopted. Accordingly, Judge Youngblood is hereby censured.

Broussard, J., did not participate. 790

Cal.,1983.

In re Youngblood

END OF DOCUMENT

[S.F. No. 24436. Apr. 25, 1983.]

HARRY R. ROBERTS, a Judge of the Superior Court, Petitioner, v. COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE, Respondent.

SUMMARY

Following a hearing by the Commission on Judicial Performance subsequent to a report to it by three special masters, the commission recommended that a judge of the superior court be publicly censured. The commission found several instances of misconduct warranting censure, including impermissible personal involvement in litigation; rude, hostile, and intimidating treatment of litigants, witnesses and counsel; and a misdemeanor conviction for resisting, delaying, or obstructing public officers (Pen. Code, § 148) in the course of their investigation of a possible intoxicated driving offense of the judge's son, all of which constituted either wilful misconduct or conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute. In addition, the commission found that the judge had improperly made an ex parte communication to an appellate court justice regarding an original writ proceeding arising from a suppression order by the judge in a criminal case.

The Supreme Court, after reviewing the record, determined the commission's recommendation was fully warranted and should be adopted. The court ordered the judge publicly censured. The court also concluded that the commission's public disclosure of its recommendation was authorized by law under the circumstances in the case. Cal. Rules of Court, rule 902(a), provides that all proceedings before the commission shall be confidential until the record is filed by the commission in the Supreme Court, and rule 902(b) permits the commission to issue short announcements concerning a hearing, under limited circumstances. The commission made its public announcement simultaneously with filing the record with the Supreme Court. Furthermore, the confidentiality requirement of Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (f) does not preclude the commission from publicly announcing results of an investigation already known to the public, and the proceeding in issue was publicly reported prior to the filing of the commission's findings and recommendations. Therefore, the court held, the commission properly followed the applicable rules. (Opinion by The Court. Separate dissenting opinion by Mosk, J.)

HEADNOTES

Classified to California Digest of Official Reports, 3d Series

(1) Judges § 6.4—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Proceedings—Review by Supreme Court.—In reviewing the findings and conclusions of the Commission on Judicial Performance, the Supreme Court undertakes an independent examination of the record to determine if the charges are supported by clear and convincing evidence, giving weight to the findings and conclusions of the commission and its masters, especially as to factual issues turning on the credibility of testimony.

(2a-2c) Judges § 6.2—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Grounds—Personal Involvement in Litigation—Ex Parte Communications—Threatening Behavior.—The conduct of a superior court judge with respect to writ proceedings, arising from the judge's order suppressing certain evidence in a criminal case, demonstrated an impermissible personal involvement in the litigation, accompanied by overly aggressive or threatening behavior toward both the district attorney and the public defender and an inexcusable ex parte communication with an appellate court justice who participated in the writ proceeding. The superior court judge threatened the district attorney after being informed that a writ to review the judge's ruling was being filed, engaged in ex parte communications on the matter with the public defender, and contacted the justice, advising him the appellate court's decision was wrong. The judge's attempt to exert pressure upon these persons disclosed an unhealthy and wholly improper concern with the protection of his own rulings from appellate reversal and constituted conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (c)). Thus, the recommendation of the Commission on Judicial Performance that the judge be publicly censured was warranted.

(3a, 3b) Mandamus and Prohibition § 58—Mandamus—Parties—Judge of the Superior Court.—Cal. Rules of Court, rule 56(b), which authorizes a respondent court to join the real party in opposing a writ reviewing an order of the court, does not authorize a trial judge to participate personally in ex parte communications with the real party regarding the writ proceedings. Although the trial court becomes a party respondent to the proceeding, the court is usually represented by its county counsel, and the individual judge whose order is being reviewed is not a proper party to the proceeding.

(4a, 4b) Judges § 6.4—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Proceedings—Notice of Charges.—In proceedings before the Commission on Judicial Performance, the failure of the commission to include a judge's allegedly improper telephone communication with a justice of the appellate court regarding the court's review of the judge's suppression order in a criminal case among those counts of misconduct originally included in the notice of formal proceedings did not preclude the commission from considering the matter. The count was added by the special masters in an amended notice, as authorized by Cal. Rules of Court, rule 911, and the judge had an ample opportunity to rebut the amended charges.

(5) Judges § 6.2—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Grounds —Personal Involvement in Litigation—Hostility Toward Counsel, Litigants, and Witnesses.—In a child neglect proceeding in the superior court, the judge's serious concern for the welfare of the minor and his firm conviction regarding the lack of credibility shown by the mother and her witnesses did not justify the judge's rude and intimidating treatment of witnesses, litigants, and counsel. The judge expressed his legitimate concern in an unacceptable, nonobjective, and nonneutral manner, demonstrating unwarranted impatience, disbelief, and hostility toward counsel, litigants, and witnesses. This conduct constituted conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice, casting the judicial office into disrepute and it warranted censure. Furthermore, the findings of the Commission on Judicial Performance that the judge threatened to report the mother's attorney to the State Bar if she advised her client to appeal his decision, and that the judge later requested the attorney's successor to discuss with the client the possibility of dismissing the appeal, was supported by clear and convincing testimony and reflected improper personal involvement and advocacy on the part of the judge.

(6) Judges § 6.2—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Grounds —Hostility Toward Counsel.—In a hearing before the Commission on Judicial Performance, evidence of the actions of a judge of the superior court in calling an attorney for the defendant in a felony case into his chambers, accusing the attorney of being incompetent to represent the defendant, and quizzing her regarding her legal experience, reflected censurable impatience or hostility in the judge's professional relationship with others, in light of other instances of similar misconduct present in the record. Although the record indicated the judge had a good faith concern regarding the attorney's competence to litigate a felony case, it also indicated that the judge's interrogation was handled in a callous and abusive manner.

(7) Judges § 6.2—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Grounds —Conviction of Obstructing Public Officers.—The conviction of a superior court judge for resisting, delaying, or obstructing public officers (Pen. Code, § 148) in the course of their investigation of a possible intoxicated driving offense by the judge's son afforded the Supreme Court an independent and self-sufficient basis for sustaining the recommendation of the Commission on Judicial Performance that the judge be publicly censured. Such an offense is not akin to such other misdemeanors as fishing without a license or playing unauthorized bingo games. Furthermore, it was entirely appropriate for the special masters and the commission to examine the facts and circumstances underlying the offense, including evidence that supported the allegations of a dismissed count against the judge of improperly attempting to use his judicial office. The judge was not entitled to prevent the commission's review of the underlying facts merely by stipulating that a judgment of conviction had been entered. Furthermore, in the hearing before the special masters, the judge made no objection to the masters' dual use of the evidence; it was not until the masters filed their unfavorable report with the commission that he urged the commission's own decision should be confined to the face of the stipulated conviction. In any event, the conviction afforded a sound basis for censure, even without considering the surrounding circumstances.

(8) Judges § 6.4—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Proceedings—Commission on Judicial Performance—Public Disclosure of Recommendation.—In proceedings relating to the discipline of a superior court judge, the Commission on Judicial Performance properly followed the rules applicable to disclosure of the proceedings, when it simultaneously filed its record in the Supreme Court and publicly announced its recommendation of public censure. Cal. Rules of Court, rule 902(a), requires all proceedings before the commission to be confidential until the record is filed, and rule 902(b) permits the commission to issue short announcements concerning the hearing under limited circumstances. In addition, the confidentiality requirement of Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (f), does not preclude the commission from publicly announcing the results of an investigation already known to the public, and the proceeding was publicly reported prior to the filing of the commission's findings and recommendations.

COUNSEL

Arne Werchick, Justin A. Roberts and Werchick & Werchick for Petitioner.

George Deukmejian, Attorney General, Robert H. Philibosian, Chief Assistant Attorney General, Arnold O. Overoye, Assistant Attorney General, Gregory W. Baugher and W. Scott Thorpe, Deputy Attorneys General, for Respondent.

OPINION

THE COURT.—We issued a writ of review in response to the petition of Harry R. Roberts, Judge of the Mono County Superior Court, which was filed pursuant to rule 919 of the California Rules of Court, requesting that we reject the recommendation of the Commission on Judicial Performance (the commission) that he be publicly censured. Judge Roberts contends that the commission's findings are unsupported by the evidence, and that his conduct does not warrant censure. He also complains of the commission's public disclosure of its censure recommendation prior to our consideration of his petition. We have concluded that the commission's recommendation is fully justified by the record and that petitioner should be publicly censured. We further conclude that the commission's public disclosure of its recommendation was authorized by law under the circumstances in this case.

The commission's findings were based upon the report to it of three special masters, who conducted extensive hearings. The findings concerned eight separate instances of misconduct. Because at least one of those matters (conviction under Pen. Code, § 148 for resisting, delaying or obstructing an officer) involves misconduct which clearly warrants censure, we only briefly summarize the testimony developed before the masters on the other counts.

1. The Fish/District Attorney Matter

After petitioner had granted a motion to suppress certain evidence in a criminal case (People v. Fish), Mono County District Attorney C. informed petitioner that he intended to file with the Court of Appeal a petition for mandate to review the ruling. According to C., petitioner became visibly angry, told C. that he was "chicken to take the case to trial," poked C. in the chest with his finger, and told C. "Buddy boy, you're not going to get away with this." Petitioner further stated "I'm going to see that you lose this case big." When C. protested the threat, petitioner replied "I'll threaten you anytime I feel like it."

In his defense, petitioner minimized the confrontation and testified that he was simply concerned about the impact of an anticipated delay upon his court calendar as a result of the writ proceeding. He denied referring to C. as "Buddy boy."

2. The Fish/Public Defender Matter

Following his conversation with C., petitioner met with Fish's counsel, Public Defender F., and had several ex parte conversations with him regarding the writ proceedings. During one such conversation, petitioner told the defender that "You'd better win this or I won't grant another motion for you." The defender testified that he believed that petitioner's statement was serious.

Petitioner admitted that he was engaged in ex parte conversations with the defender, and that the merits of the writ proceeding were discussed. He also admitted making a remark regarding denial of the defender's further motions, but he stated that he was referring only to future similar search motions in the Fish case.

3. The Fish/Puglia Matter

Presiding Justice Robert Puglia of the Third Appellate District participated in the Fish writ proceeding which ultimately resulted in granting the People's petition for mandate. According to Justice Puglia, petitioner became angered at the decision and, before the rehearing time had expired, telephoned Justice Puglia advising him that the appellate decision was wrong, and asking him to "take a look at it and indicated . . . something to the effect that if we didn't change it, there would be a petition for hearing in the Supreme Court."

Petitioner testified that, at the time of this conversation, he assumed that the Court of Appeal opinion was final, and that he called Presiding Justice Puglia simply to inform him that a petition for hearing had been filed and that he had a new theory indicating the Court of Appeal opinion was incorrectly decided.

4. The Jeremy C. Hearing Matter

In this child neglect proceeding, the commission found that petitioner "improperly acted as an advocate, prejudged issues, abusively curtailed the presentation of evidence, and treated witnesses, litigants and an attorney in a rude, intimidating and demeaning manner." No purpose would be served in describing at length such misconduct; a few examples will suffice. In response to Attorney M.'s objection to petitioner's observation regarding her client's unfitness as a mother, petitioner replied "I don't care whether you object to it or not . . . . I will hear no further objections of this kind, do you understand, Miss [M.]?" After the minor's mother attempted to correct one of petitioner's statements, he admonished her, saying "If you have anything to offer you are going to be sworn. You have no credibility with this court. When you are sworn, let alone volunteer statements, . . . I don't believe a word you have testified to in this courtroom." Petitioner demonstrated similar impatience toward witness C., who supported the mother's fitness as a parent. Interrupting C.'s testimony in mid-sentence, petitioner stated "You may step down. I wouldn't believe you under oath. I don't want any more testimony like this. This witness doesn't know in one breath, and in the next breath it makes no difference. She would have [the mother], who had abused her own child, babysit hers. Now, I don't have to listen to that kind of evidence."

5. The Jeremy C./Attorney M. Matter

Following the Jeremy C. hearing, according to Attorney M., petitioner approached her, told her that it would be a "disservice" to her client to appeal his decision, and threatened to report her to the State Bar if she advised her client to appeal. Petitioner denied making this threat, and claimed that he merely advised M. that if she brought a frivolous appeal she might find herself before the State Bar.

6. The Jeremy C./Attorney F. Matter

After the minor's mother retained Attorney F. in place of M., petitioner engaged F. in an ex parte conversation and asked him to discuss with his client the possibility of dismissing the appeal from petitioner's ruling. Petitioner denied making this request.

7. The Attorney A. Matter

Attorney F. assigned one of his newer associates, Attorney A., to try a felony case, People v. LaChuga. When she appeared before petitioner, he called a recess and, in unreported proceedings in his chambers, he accused her of being incompetent to represent the defendant, and rudely quizzed her regarding her legal experience. As a result of petitioner's loud and angry manner, Miss A. began to cry and left the conference to summon F.

Petitioner defended his actions on the basis of his earlier experience with A., a complaint filed regarding her competence, and her failure to cross-examine witnesses effectively.

8. The Misdemeanor Conviction

On February 3, 1981, following a jury trial, petitioner was convicted of violating section 148 of the Penal Code (resisting, delaying or obstructing a public officer). The conviction is now final. Although petitioner objected to the commission's consideration of the underlying facts, we briefly outline those facts based upon evidence which was introduced at the commission hearing. (See also People v. Roberts (1982) 131 Cal.App.3d Supp. 1 [182 Cal.Rptr. 757].)

On July 18, 1981, uniformed highway patrol officers stopped a car which was being driven erratically by petitioner's son in Marin County. The officers commenced to administer to the son a field sobriety test. According to the officers' testimony, petitioner exited the car, told the officers that they "had no business stopping" the car, and in a loud voice directed obscenities at the officers. After being told to stop interfering and reenter the car, petitioner repeated his obscene language and advised the officers that they did not know who he was. Eventually, petitioner produced a card identifying himself as a judge and handed it to the officers, stating that he would not reenter the car, that the officers had no right to examine his son, and that he was going to watch everything that the officers did.

The officers continued to urge petitioner to return to the car, but he refused; petitioner's obscenities made it difficult for them to conduct their tests. After being threatened with arrest, petitioner walked quickly toward Officer Rogers, told him that "he [petitioner] was sick and tired of me [the officer] telling him what to do," and demanded his name and badge number. Petitioner stood next to the officer and struck him in the chest, grabbing the officer's shirt. The officer thereupon declared petitioner under arrest, but petitioner continued to struggle and eventually pulled the officer to the ground.

Petitioner, his son and daughter-in-law each denied that petitioner sought preferential treatment, and they blamed the officers' rude and discourteous conduct for escalating the confrontation. Petitioner denied that he struck Officer Rogers.

The commission found that petitioner's conduct with respect to each of the eight matters summarized above constituted either wilful misconduct in office or conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice which brings the judicial office into disrepute. (See Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (c).) In addition, the commission found that petitioner's conduct in the Puglia matter (pt. 3, ante) violated both section 68070.5, subdivision (b), of the Government Code (forbidding communications between the judge hearing an original writ matter and the judge named as party respondent), and canon 3(A)(4) of the Code of Judicial Conduct (forbidding ex parte communications concerning pending matters).

By a vote of six to one, the commission recommended that petitioner be publicly censured. The dissenting commissioner favored petitioner's removal from office.

(1) In reviewing the commission's findings and conclusions, we undertake an independent examination of the record to determine which, if any, of the charges are supported by clear and convincing evidence. (Wenger v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1981) 29 Cal.3d 615, 622 [175 Cal.Rptr. 420, 630 P.2d 954].) We give weight to the findings and conclusions of the commission and its masters, especially as to factual issues turning on the credibility of testimony. (Id., at pp. 622-623.)

Petitioner, refusing to acknowledge any misconduct deserving of censure, reargues the evidence supporting the commission's various findings and accuses the commission of "focusing on triviality" and exceeding its jurisdiction.

(2a), (3a) With respect to petitioner's apparent personal involvement with the Fish writ proceedings, petitioner argues that: (1) his discussion with the district attorney was "trivial in nature" and motivated by a legitimate concern over petitioner's court calendar; (2) his conversation with the public defender was permitted under rule 56(b) of the Rules of Court (authorizing the respondent "court" to join the real party in opposing the writ); and (3) his telephone conversation with Justice Puglia was made at a time when petitioner assumed the Court of Appeal had lost its jurisdiction over the Fish matter. (4a) Petitioner also argues that the commission failed to include the Puglia conversation among those counts of misconduct originally included in the notice of formal proceedings. Instead, the count was added by the special masters in an amended notice, pursuant to rule 911 of the Rules of Court.

(2b) Petitioner's course of conduct with respect to the Fish writ proceeding demonstrates an impermissible personal involvement in the litigation, accompanied by overly aggressive or threatening behavior toward both the district attorney and the public defender, and an inexcusable ex parte communication with Justice Puglia (see Gov. Code, § 68070.5, subd. (b)). Petitioner's attempt to exert pressure upon prosecutor, defense counsel and appellate court alike discloses an unhealthy and wholly improper concern with the protection of his own rulings from appellate reversal.

(3b) We reject petitioner's contention that rule 56(b) authorizes a trial judge to participate personally in ex parte communications with the real party regarding subsequent writ proceedings seeking review of the judge's order. Although the trial court becomes a party respondent to the proceeding, the court is usually represented (if at all) by its county counsel. (See Elysium, Inc. v. Superior Court (1968) 266 Cal.App.2d 763 [72 Cal.Rptr. 355].) The individual judge of the court whose order is being reviewed is not a proper party to the proceeding. (See Matter of De Lucca (1905) 146 Cal. 110, 113 [79 P. 853]; Lawson v. Superior Court (1957) 155 Cal.App.2d 755, 761 [318 P.2d 812]; Neblett v. Superior Court (1948) 86 Cal.App.2d 64, 66 [194 P.2d 22].)

(4b) We further reject petitioner's assertion that the commission was foreclosed from relying upon his telephone conversation with Justice Puglia by reason of its failure either to include that charge in the original notice of proceedings, or to amend that notice. Rule 911 of the Rules of Court authorizes the commission or the masters, at any time prior to the conclusion of the hearing, to amend the notice to conform to proof or set forth additional facts, so long as the judge is given a reasonable time to respond and defend against the amended charges. We see no constitutional deficiency in this procedure. (See McCartney v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1974) 12 Cal.3d 512, 519 [116 Cal.Rptr. 260, 526 P.2d 268].) Petitioner had an ample opportunity to rebut the amended charges.

(2c) We conclude that petitioner's conduct with respect to the Fish writ proceeding constituted "conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute." (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (c).) As explained in prior cases, the foregoing constitutional provision "do[es] not require notoriety, but only that the conduct be 'damaging to the esteem for the judiciary held by members of the public who observed such conduct.' [Citation.]" (Wenger v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 29 Cal.3d at pp. 622-623, fn. 4.)

(5) Although the commission's censure recommendation could be sustained on the basis of the foregoing conduct alone, we review petitioner's contentions with respect to the remaining charges. As indicated above, petitioner's treatment of witnesses, litigants and counsel in the Jeremy C. matter was found to be rude and intimidating. In addition, petitioner threatened to report Attorney M. to the State Bar if she advised her client to appeal petitioner's adverse ruling. Finally, petitioner asked Attorney F. to discuss with his client the possibility of dismissing that appeal.

Petitioner attempts to excuse his abusive conduct at the child neglect hearing on the ground of his serious concern for the welfare of the minor and his firm conviction regarding the lack of credibility shown by the mother and her witnesses. The fact remains, however, that petitioner expressed his legitimate concern in an unacceptable, nonobjective and nonneutral manner, demonstrating unwarranted impatience, disbelief and hostility toward counsel, litigant and witnesses. Such conduct constitutes conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice, casting the judicial office into disrepute, and warranting our censure. (Cf. McCartney v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications, supra, 12 Cal.3d at pp. 530, 533-535.) As we stated in McCartney, "A trial judge may not . . . in the course of examining witnesses become an advocate for either party or cast aspersions or ridicule upon a witness. [Citations.]" (P. 533, italics in original.)

As for petitioner's threat to report Attorney M. to the State Bar for advising her client to appeal, and his request to successor Attorney F. to discuss with the client the possibility of dismissing that appeal, such conduct reflects the same improper personal involvement and advocacy exhibited by petitioner in the Fish matter. Although petitioner denied both the threat and the request, the commission's contrary findings are supported by the clear and convincing testimony of both Attorneys M. and F.

(6) With respect to petitioner's treatment of Attorney A. in People v. LaChuga, the record reflects petitioner's good faith concern regarding the attorney's ability competently to litigate a felony case, and his surprise that Attorney F. had delegated the matter to A. Yet the record also indicates that petitioner's interrogation of her was handled in a callous and abusive manner. Petitioner offers no excuse for such conduct, merely observing that "Respondent made no critical or derogatory remarks in open court concerning Ms. [A.]." (Italics added.) As indicated above, the proceedings took place in chambers and were unreported (despite the presence and availability of a court reporter). Although petitioner's treatment of Attorney A., standing alone, might not warrant censure, nevertheless in the light of the entire record such conduct once again reflects a censurable impatience or hostility in his professional relationship with others, as previously discussed.

(7) Finally, petitioner's misdemeanor conviction affords an entirely independent and self-sufficient basis for sustaining the commission's censure recommendation. As previously noted, petitioner was convicted of violating Penal Code section 148 (resisting, delaying or obstructing a public officer). While admitting the conviction, petitioner objects to the consideration, by either the commission or this court, of the factual circumstances underlying the offense. According to petitioner, the commission's notice of proceedings "merely" alleged the fact of his conviction, and he subsequently stipulated to that conviction. Thereafter, at the evidentiary hearing before the special masters and citing his stipulation, petitioner objected to the admission of evidence regarding the offense. Accordingly, he asserts, the introduction of such evidence supposedly was limited to support the allegations of a dismissed count (improper attempt to use judicial office). Thus, petitioner argues, "the only question that can and must be answered by this Court is whether mere proof of a misdemeanor conviction, standing alone, can be the basis for judicial discipline by this Court." (Fn. omitted.)

The record shows, however, that at the conclusion of the hearing, one of the masters announced that although the underlying evidence relating to the misdemeanor conviction was elicited primarily with respect to the abuse-of-office count, it was also received, and would be considered, in connection with the conviction count. Petitioner made no objection at that time to the masters' dual use of the evidence. Once the unfavorable report was filed, however, petitioner thereupon urged that the commission's own decision should be confined to the face of the stipulated conviction, without consideration of any of the underlying facts.

Although we have found no authorities which discuss the issue, we have concluded it is entirely appropriate for the commission or its masters to examine the facts and circumstances underlying a misdemeanor conviction in determining whether the offense calls for discipline. Of course, the commission or masters in their discretion may limit the scope of such inquiry and thereby avoid a needless retrial of the criminal charges. But a judge may not be permitted to prevent the commission's review of the underlying facts merely by stipulating that a judgment of conviction had been entered. In the present case, therefore, petitioner's objection to the admission of evidence regarding his conviction should have been, and was, overruled. (As indicated above, petitioner failed to renew that objection when the masters announced their intent to rely upon such evidence in relation to both the conviction count and the abuse-of-office count.)

Petitioner suggests that he relied upon the masters' original ruling dealing with the fact of a conviction and failed to present additional exonerating testimony bearing upon the conviction count. He fails to specify, however, what additional evidence he would have submitted in this regard. In any event, it is uncontradicted that petitioner was convicted of resisting, delaying or obstructing public officers in the course of their investigation of a possible intoxicated driving offense by his son. That conviction is now final and affords an additional sound basis for censuring petitioner, even without considering the surrounding circumstances. We reject as frivolous his counsel's assertion that a "mere" offense of this kind is akin to such other misdemeanor offenses as fishing without a license or playing unauthorized bingo games.

(8) Petitioner's final contention challenges the apparent practice of the commission in making public its disciplinary recommendation when it is submitted to this court. Petitioner asserts that the release of advance publicity of this kind amounts to prejudgment of his case and a public censure improperly imposed before we have sanctioned such discipline.

The commission responds that the applicable rules appear to authorize such disclosure. Rule 902(a) of the Rules of Court states that "Except as provided in this rule, all papers filed with and proceedings before the Commission, or before the masters, . . . shall be confidential until a record is filed by the Commission in the Supreme Court." (Italics added; see also rule 902(b), permitting the commission to issue "short announcements" concerning the hearing under limited circumstances.) Apparently, the record was filed with us simultaneously with the commission's public announcement. Moreover, the confidentiality requirement of article VI, section 18, subdivision (f), of the state Constitution would "not preclude either the Commission or a judge under investigation from publicly announcing the results of an investigation already known to the public." (Mosk v. Superior Court (1979) 25 Cal.3d 474, 502 [159 Cal.Rptr.

494, 601 P.2d 1030].) Petitioner acknowledges that the proceeding herein was publicly reported prior to the filing of the commission's findings and recommendation. We conclude that the commission properly followed the applicable rules, and that any changes in those rules should be initiated by the Judicial Council, not this court. In any event, any impropriety by the commission in this regard would neither excuse petitioner's misconduct nor require dismissal of the proceedings against him.

Our review of the record persuades us that the commission's recommendation of censure is fully warranted and should be adopted. Accordingly, and by this order, Judge Roberts is hereby publicly censured.

MOSK, J.—I dissent.

I do not propose to discuss the merits of the public censure of Judge Roberts ordered by the court in this case. It is my view that the action of my colleagues is redundant: in effect the judge has already been publicly censured by the Commission on Judicial Performance. In so doing, however, the commission has improperly assumed a function which the Constitution authorizes only this court to perform.

Article VI, section 18, subdivision (c), carefully delineates the responsibilities of the commission and the Supreme Court. Only the court may retire, censure or remove a judge. The commission, by contrast, is limited to the power to "privately admonish a judge found to have engaged in an improper action or a dereliction of duty" (italics added), and even that is subject to court review.

In this instance the commission made a public release of its recommendation for reproval. Once reported to the world, the commission action was not the private admonishment which the Constitution and rule 920(a) of the Rules of Court authorize, but itself became a public reproval which only the court may properly administer.

The commission apparently bases its justification for this invasion of the court's prerogative on rule 902. If rule 902 can be read to permit press releases by the commission, then it clearly violates article VI, section 18, subdivision (f), of the Constitution, which authorizes only rules "providing for confidentiality," not rules to evade confidentiality.

However, I do not read rule 902 to justify the public notoriety that the commission seems to seek. Rule 902(a) requires that all papers and proceedings of the commission "shall be confidential." Rule 902(b) provides in subsection (1) that a public statement may be made "at the request of the judge involved"; in (2), a statement may be made "if there is no basis for further proceedings or recommendation of discipline"; in (3), when the administration of justice is threatened a statement may be made confirming the fact of a hearing and describing the "procedural aspects"; in (4), when a judge resigns a statement may be made "to a public entity"; and in (5), after investigation the commission may make certain disclosures "to the person complaining against the judge."

Nothing in rule 902 permits the commission, under the circumstances of this case, to violate the confidentiality which was always intended to be the hallmark of these proceedings. As stated above, if the commission persists in misinterpreting the rule to allow it to go public by announcing a recommendation of discipline then I would declare the rule invalid.

The majority refer to an unfortunate dictum in Mosk v. Superior Court (1977) 25 Cal.3d 474, 502 [159 Cal.Rptr. 494, 601 P.2d 1030], that arguably permits the commission to announce "the results of an investigation already known to the public." The dictum is inconsistent with the body of the opinion in that case, which discussed at considerable length the history and bases of the confidentiality concept and the public policy in support thereof. (Id., pp. 488-499.) Any conflict between the text and rationale of an opinion and an incidental dictum therein must, of course, be resolved in favor of the former. In any event, there was no actual discipline ordered in that case, then or subsequently; the issue involved the required confidentiality of a mere preliminary investigation which the commission unconstitutionally sought to undertake in a circus atmosphere not only open to the public but replete with radio and television coverage.

It might be argued that even if the commission met its responsibility of confidentiality, the recommendation for discipline would become known when it was filed with this court. That is not necessarily so. The material filed with the court does not identify the judge involved; in this instance the case was entitled "Inquiry Concerning a Judge No. 49." Only when the judge files a petition for writ of review, seeking a hearing in open court, does his identity become general knowledge. Thus, going public remains the choice of the judge, not of the commission.

In the event a judge does not seek a writ of review, this court determines on the basis of the commission record and recommendation the nature of the discipline, if any, to impose. The court is not required to adopt the commission recommendation. Under some circumstances the court may see fit to administer mere private censure by minute order, using the anonymous case title. But if the commission has previously made the matter public, private censure becomes an impossibility. I insist the commission has no right to so restrict the options available to this court.

In the instant matter, the release of the commission's conclusion tarred Judge Roberts with a broad brush. Before the matter was argued in court, the public was informed that he should be censured. Thus the actual order by this court is not only anticlimactic, it doubles the reflection on the judge's judicial performance in the eyes of his constituents. Not even the most heinous conduct merits infliction of the same discipline twice. Excessive punishment is not the path to rectitude.

In view of the action by the commission, and to discourage its repetition in future cases, I would dismiss these proceedings.

[L.A. No. 31751. Oct. 1, 1984.]

MARION E. GUBLER, a Judge of the Municipal Court, Petitioner, v. COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE, Respondent.

SUMMARY

The Commission on Judicial Performance recommended that a municipal court judge be publicly censured for "wilful misconduct in office" and "conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute." Most of the charges related to the judge's zealous efforts to obtain payment from criminal defendants to the county for the cost of the legal representation provided them by the public defender (Pen. Code, § 987.8). Other charges arose out of the judge's orders authorizing private sales of guns to peace officers by defendants whose convictions had subjected the guns to confiscation, destruction, or public auction by the police department.

The Supreme Court adopted the commission's recommendation and findings, although it concluded that some of the judge's acts that the commission deemed wilful misconduct amounted only to conduct prejudicial, and publicly censured the judge. The court held that the judge committed conduct prejudicial by ordering appearances by defendants for fee-collection purposes, causing fee orders to appear to be conditions of probation, ordering fees payable out of posted bail, even though part or all of a fine thereby remained unsatisfied, and making fees payable ahead of fines for the purposes of prolonging the availability of sanctions for nonpayment of the fine and creating the impression that such sanctions could also be used for nonpayment of fees. Because the court was not persuaded that the judge's wrongful fee-collecting practices were carried out in bad faith, it held he was not guilty of wilful misconduct in that regard. The court further held that the judge's act of doubling the public defender fees of one defendant because of irritation at the public defender's objections to his entering such order on a probation order was wilful misconduct. Also the judge committed conduct prejudicial by knowingly assessing unreasonable attorney fees. He committed wilful misconduct by giving unsolicited advice to a commissioner employed by the judge on a case from which the judge had been disqualified. While the judge's acts of approving the gun sales constituted a gross and negligent misuse of his judicial power, the court was not convinced his motives in committing those acts were malicious or corrupt, and concluded the acts amounted only to conduct prejudicial.

The court also ruled on the propriety of the commission's public release of its report when filing its record with the court, and directed the clerk of the court henceforth in any case in which the commission has recommended censure but not removal or retirement of a judge to keep all filed and received documents and exhibits under seal, and to conceal the identity of the judge, until either the judge files a petition for review or the time for such filing has expired. (Opinion by The Court. Separate concurring and dissenting opinion by Kaus, J.)

---

HEADNOTES

Classified to California Digest of Official Reports, 3d Series

(1) Judges § 6.4—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Review by Supreme Court.—On review of a recommendation by the Commission on Judicial Performance that a judge be publicly censured, the Supreme Court is concerned only with the charges the commission sustained and with what discipline, if any, should be imposed. It must determine from an independent evaluation of the record whether the findings against the judge are supported by clear and convincing evidence and must make its own conclusions of law and determination as to discipline. Special weight is given to the masters' findings that reflect their evaluation of the credibility of witnesses who testified before them.

(2a-2d) Judges § 6.2—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Grounds—Attorney Fees Collection Practices—Public Defender.—A municipal court judge's efforts under Pen. Code, § 987.8, to enforce orders for payment by criminal defendants for the cost of the public defender's legal services, by ordering appearances for fee collection purposes, causing fee orders to appear to be conditions of probation, ordering fees payable out of posted bail even though part or all of the fine thereby remained unsatisfied, making fees payable ahead of fines for the purpose of prolonging the availability of sanctions for nonpayment of the fine, and creating the impression that such sanctions could also be used for nonpayment of fees constituted conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice. The conduct was not wilful misconduct since it was not carried out in bad faith.

[See Cal.Jur.3d, Judges, § 62; Am.Jur.2d, Judges, § 51.]

(3) Criminal Law § 86—Rights of Accused—Aid of Counsel—Appointment of Public Defender—Reimbursement—Enforcement.—A municipal court judge's order for payment of public defender fees ahead of fines, purportedly authorized by Pen. Code, § 987.8, subd. (a), giving judges the authority to order payment of legal costs "in the manner in which the court believes reasonable and compatible with the defendant's financial ability," became an abuse of discretion when used to prolong the availability of sanctions for nonpayment of fines and to create the impression that such sanctions could also be imposed for nonpayment of fees.

(4) Criminal Law § 86—Rights of Accused—Aid of Counsel—Appointment of Public Defender—Reimbursement—Enforcement.—Pen. Code, § 987.8, providing for enforcement of orders for payments by defendants for the costs of public defender's services, did not authorize the issuance of orders in criminal proceedings to return defendant to court for purposes of collecting public defender's fees. The use of bench warrants to compel appearances for interrogation of why a defendant has not paid (as distinct from investigation of ability to pay) amounted to using the threat of incarceration for collection purposes.

(5) Criminal Law § 86—Rights of Accused—Aid of Counsel—Appointment of Public Defender—Reimbursement—Bail Deposits.—The provision in Pen. Code, § 1297, providing that if bail money remains on deposit at the time of a judgment for the payment of a fine, the clerk must, under the direction of the court, apply a defendant depositor's money in satisfaction thereof and after satisfying the fine and costs, must refund the surplus to defendant, enacted in 1878, was not intended to refer to costs of legal services, which first became reimbursable to the county under the initial enactment in 1971 of Pen. Code, § 987.8. However, if a judge relied on § 1297 in deducting attorney fees as well as the entire fine from bail deposited by a defendant, such reliance would not amount to misconduct.

(6) Criminal Law § 86—Rights of Accused—Aid of Counsel—Appointment of Public Defender—Reimbursement—Collection—Bail Money.—Orders made by a municipal court judge for application of bail deposits to pay for public defender's fees were clearly improper in the absence of consent by interested parties, where the bail money was applied to the entire amount of the attorney fee, but to only a part of a fine levied against defendant, leaving defendant with a balance of a fine enforceable by criminal sanctions, whereas use of the bail money to pay all the fine would have left simply an attorney fee balance, collectible only in the manner of a civil judgment.

(7) Judges § 6.2—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Grounds—Wilful Misconduct—Bad Faith.—Bad faith is the touchstone for testing whether misconduct committed by a judge while acting in a judicial capacity constitutes wilful misconduct. Bad faith is quintessentially a concept of specific intent, requiring consciousness of purpose as an antecedent to a judge's acting maliciously or corruptly. When a judge has intentionally committed acts which he knew or should have known were beyond his lawful power, bad faith entails actual malice as the motivation for a judge's actions. The requisite intent must exceed mere volition; negligence alone, if not so gross as to call its genuineness into question, falls short of bad faith. Even when the acts in question were within the judge's lawful power, they may involve bad faith, and thus constitute wilful misconduct, if committed for a corrupt purpose, that is, for any purpose other than the faithful discharge of judicial duties. Bad faith requires a malicious or corrupt purpose beyond mere active or constructive knowledge of lack of power.

(8) Judges § 6.2—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Grounds—Prejudicial Conduct.—Conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice, when committed in the course of acting in a judicial capacity, lacks the element of bad faith necessary for wilful misconduct but must be prejudicial to the administration of justice and bring the judicial office into disrepute. Bringing the judicial office into disrepute does not require notoriety, but only that the conduct be damaging to the esteem for the judiciary held by members of the public who observe such conduct.

(9) Judges § 6.2—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Grounds—Legal Error.—A judge should not be disciplined for mere erroneous determination of legal issues, including questions of limitations on the judicial power that are subject to reasonable differences of opinion.

(10) Criminal Law § 86—Rights of Accused—Aid of Counsel—Appointment of Public Defender—Reimbursement—Collection—Before Payment of Fine.—Under Pen. Code, § 987.8, providing for payments by defendants of the costs of public defender's services, ordering payment of such fees before payment of the remaining balance on a fine is not necessarily improper if defendant is not given the impression that payment of the fees may be enforced by criminal sanctions.

(11) Judges § 6.2—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Grounds—Fee Collection Practices.—The actions of a municipal court judge, acting under Pen. Code, § 987.8, providing for enforcement of orders for payments by criminal defendants of the costs of public defender's services, who threatened to increase another judge's order for such fees and also ordered the criminal defendant involved to return to court for the purpose of implementing collection of the fee, amounted to conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice.

(12a, 12b) Judges § 6.2—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Grounds—Increasing Public Defender Fees.—A municipal court judge's conduct in doubling a defendant's public defender fees out of irritation at the public defender's objections to entering the fees on a probation order, thereby making it appear payment of the fee was a condition of probation, was wilful misconduct, where doubling the fee was not based on any change in the judge's information concerning defendant's ability to pay or the legal services received, but was motivated by a desire to get even with the public defender for objecting to the form of the initial order.

(13) Judges § 6.2—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Grounds—Wilful Misconduct—Isolated Incident.—The fact that an act of misconduct by a judge is an isolated incident does not preclude a determination of wilful misconduct.

(14) Judges § 6.2—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Grounds—Unreasonable Public Defender Fees.—The actions of a municipal court judge in assessing against defendants public defender's fees that were unreasonable in light of the evidence available to the judge as to defendants' ability to pay constituted conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice.

(15a, 15b) Judges § 6.2—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Grounds—Advice After Disqualification.—A municipal court judge, disqualified in a criminal case on the filing by the public defender of a declaration of prejudice (Code Civ. Proc., § 170.6), who, after the criminal proceedings were terminated, wrote a note to the commissioner employed by the judge and serving at his pleasure, advising the commissioner that a Pen. Code, § 987.8, hearing on public defender fees to be collected from defendant should be held and suggesting an amount of such fees, was guilty of wilful misconduct in view of the judge's pattern of retaliatory conduct in other matters, plus the fact that the note dealt with the merits of a matter in which the judge was barred from acting in deference to a litigant's right to impartiality, and was addressed specifically to a subordinate judicial officer, which led to the conclusion that the writing of the note was for a corrupt purpose.

(16) Judges § 9—Disqualification—Effect.—A municipal court judge disqualified for prejudice in a criminal case under Code Civ. Proc., § 170.6, was barred from ordering public defender's fees against defendant under Pen. Code, § 987.8. The setting of an attorney fee under § 987.8 involves a contested issue of law or fact within the meaning of § 170.6, and the statute calls for the holding of the fee-setting hearing at the end of, and as a part of, the criminal action in which the legal services were rendered.

(17) Judges § 6.2—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Grounds—Authorizing Release of Confiscated Guns for Sale by Defendant.—A municipal court judge who on four occasions ordered the police department to release to the purchaser a firearm that had been purchased from an owner after having been confiscated in connection with the owner's criminal conviction was guilty of conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice where the judge knew or reasonably should have known that the sales were illegal and that the circumstances of the sales, particularly the participation of the bailiff, a friend of the judge, created at least the appearance of impropriety. Because the judge's motives in committing the acts were not malicious or corrupt, they did not constitute wilful misconduct.

(18) Judges § 6.4—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Proceedings—Commission on Judicial Performance—Public Disclosure of Recommendation.—The dissemination by the Commission on Judicial Performance of a press release and copies of its findings, conclusions and recommendations on the filing with the Supreme Court of its record of disciplinary proceedings against a municipal court judge did not constitute a public admonishment in violation of Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (c), authorizing the commission to issue only private admonishments, or violate Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (f), requiring the Judicial Council to make rules providing for confidentiality of its proceedings. Cal. Rules of Court, rule 902, subd. (a), provides that commission proceedings shall be confidential until a record is filed by the commission in the Supreme Court, which is consistent with the constitutional requirement of confidentiality. The constitutional ban on public disclosure terminated after the filing of the record in the Supreme Court. The publicizing of the commission's findings and recommendations on the filing of its record was not equivalent to public censure by the Supreme Court and did not restrict the options available to the court.

(19) Judges § 6.4—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Proceedings—Confidentiality—Record of Commission on Judicial Perform- ance.—The public interest in minimizing doubts about the judicial process arising from charges against judges that may not be upheld warrants a postponement of the release to the public of the report and record of proceedings by the Commission on Judicial Performance until either a petition for review by the Supreme Court has been filed or the time for filing such petition has expired. Accordingly, the clerk of the Supreme Court, in any case in which the commission has recommended censure but not removal or retirement of a judge, must keep all filed and received documents and exhibits under seal, and conceal the identity of the judge, until either the judge files a petition for review or the time for such filing has expired.

---

COUNSEL

Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, Richard Chernick, John E. Burns and Charles J. Stevens for Petitioner.

John H. Larson, County Counsel (Los Angeles), Donald K. Byrne, Chief Deputy County Counsel, Robert C. Lynch, Assistant Chief Deputy County Counsel, Gary M. Crane, Latham & Watkins, Boyd J. Black, Argue, Freston, Pearson, Harbison & Myers and Lew W. Cramer as Amici Curiae on behalf of Petitioner.

John K. Van de Kamp, Attorney General, S. Clark Moore, Assistant Attorney General, Gary R. Hahn and Robert R. Anderson, Deputy Attorneys General, for Respondent.

---

OPINION

THE COURT.—On petition of Judge Marion E. Gubler of the Municipal Court for the Burbank Judicial District of Los Angeles County, we review a recommendation of the Commission on Judicial Performance that he be publicly censured for "wilful misconduct in office" and "conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute." (hereinafter wilful misconduct and conduct prejudicial) (Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (c) set out at fn. 8, post). We adopt the commission's recommendation and findings, though we conclude that some of petitioner's acts that the commission deemed wilful misconduct amounted only to conduct prejudicial.

*Before Bird, C. J., Mosk, J., Kaus, J., Reynoso, J., Grodin, J., Sapunor, J.,† and Darrah, J.†

†Assigned by the Chairperson of the Judicial Council.

Most of the charges against petitioner relate to his zealous efforts to obtain payment from criminal defendants to the county for the cost of the legal representation provided them by the public defender. Other charges arise out of petitioner's orders authorizing private sales of guns to peace officers by defendants whose convictions had subjected the guns to confiscation, destruction, or public auction by the police department.

Hearings were held in November and December 1982 before three special masters, who made findings of fact and conclusions of law. (See Cal. Rules of Court, rule 907 et seq.) As to some charges, the masters concluded that no ground for discipline had been established, and as to others, they concluded that petitioner had engaged in conduct prejudicial.

The commission dismissed some of the charges that the masters had deemed unproved, but otherwise adopted substantially all the masters' findings adverse to petitioner and concluded that most of them established wilful misconduct while the rest showed conduct prejudicial. The commission voted six to three to recommend that petitioner be publicly censured; the three dissenters favored private admonishment.

(1) This court is concerned only with the charges the commission sustained and with what discipline, if any, should be imposed. (Spruance v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1975) 13 Cal.3d 778, 784, fn. 5 [119 Cal.Rptr. 841, 532 P.2d 1209].) We must determine from our independent evaluation of the record whether the findings against petitioner are supported by clear and convincing evidence and must make our own conclusions of law and determination as to discipline. (Geiler v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1973) 10 Cal.3d 270, 275-276 [110 Cal.Rptr. 201, 515 P.2d 1].) The commission's findings are consistent with, and generally similar to, findings of the masters, who, however, made additional findings, mostly exculpatory in nature, that were neither adopted nor rejected by the commission. We give special weight to the masters' findings that reflect their evaluation of the credibility of witnesses who testified before them. (Wenger v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1981) 29 Cal.3d 615, 623 [175 Cal.Rptr. 420, 630 P.2d 954].)

ATTORNEY FEES COLLECTION PRACTICES

(2a) Many of the commission's findings deal with improprieties in petitioner's efforts to enforce orders for payment by defendants to the county for the costs of the public defender's legal services. Those orders were made pursuant to Penal Code section 987.8, which provides that if, at the conclusion of a criminal proceeding in a trial court, the court determines that a defendant who was represented by the public defender or a court-appointed attorney has the ability to pay all or part of the cost of counsel, the court shall "order the defendant to pay that sum to the county in the manner in which the court believes reasonable and compatible with the defendant's financial ability. Execution may be issued on the order in the same manner as on a judgment in a civil action. The order . . . shall not be enforced by contempt."[1]

[1]All section references are to the Penal Code unless otherwise indicated. During the events described in the commission's findings, and at the time of the hearings before the masters, section 987.8 provided as follows (see Stats. 1978, ch. 1134, § 1):

"(a) In any case in which a defendant is provided legal assistance, either through the public defender or private counsel appointed by the court, upon conclusion of the criminal proceedings in the trial court, the court may, after a hearing, make a determination of the present ability of the defendant to pay all or a portion of the cost thereof. The court may, in its discretion, hold one such additional hearing within six months of the conclusion of the criminal proceedings. The court may, in its discretion, order the defendant to appear before a county officer designated by the court to make an inquiry into the ability of the defendant to pay all or a portion of the legal assistance provided. At a hearing, the defendant shall be entitled to have, but shall not be limited to, the opportunity to be heard in person, to present witnesses and other documentary evidence, and to confront and cross-examine adverse witnesses; disclosure of the evidence against the defendant, and a written statement of the findings of the court. If the court determines that the defendant has the present ability to pay all or part of the cost, the court shall set the amount to be reimbursed and order the defendant to pay that sum to the county in the manner in which the court believes reasonable and compatible with the defendant's financial ability. Execution may be issued on the order in the same manner as on a judgment in a civil action. The order to pay all or part of the costs shall not be enforced by contempt.

"(b) Prior to the furnishing of counsel or legal assistance by the court, the court shall give notice to the defendant that upon the conclusion of the criminal proceedings in the trial court, the court may, after a hearing, make a determination of the present ability of the defendant to pay all or a portion of the cost of counsel. The court shall also give notice that, if the court determines that the defendant has such present ability, the court shall order him to pay all or part of such cost. The notice shall inform the defendant that the order shall have the same force and effect as a judgment in a civil action and shall be subject to execution.

"(c) Definitions: (1) The term 'legal assistance provided' means legal counsel and supportive services including, but not limited to, medical and psychiatric examinations, investigative services, expert testimony and any other form of services provided to assist the defendant in the preparation and presentation of the defendant's case.

"(2) The term 'ability to pay' means the overall capability of the defendant to reimburse the costs, or a portion of the costs, of the legal assistance provided, and shall include, but not be limited to the defendant's: (i) Present financial position;

"(ii) Reasonably discernible future financial position. In no event shall the court consider a period of more than six months from the date of the hearing for purposes of determining reasonably discernible future financial position. Unless the court finds unusual circumstances, a defendant sentenced to state prison shall be determined not to have a reasonably discernible future financial ability to reimburse the costs of his defense;

"(iii) Likelihood that the defendant shall be able to obtain employment within a six month period from the date of the hearing;

"(iv) Any other factor or factors which may bear upon the defendant's financial capability

Making Attorney Fees Payable Before Fines

The commission found: In cases where both a fine was levied and an attorney fee order was imposed under section 987.8, and payment was postponed, petitioner's usual practice was to make the fee payable before the fine. The findings describe 29 cases between June 1979 and December 1980 in which petitioner made such orders. Most of the ordered fees were for $50 or $100; the fines were greater. The commission further found that the order of payment was not set at the request or with the consent of the defendant, that payments were routinely applied first to fees, leaving defendants subject to further proceedings with respect to fines, and that the order of payment might present an unreasonable obstacle to satisfaction of the fine where the defendant was unable to pay both fee and fine.

These findings are supported by clear and convincing evidence. The 29 described cases are documented by copies of court docket sheets, introduced as exhibits. A deputy public defender testified that between May and August 1979, petitioner ordinarily made the fee payable before the fine. Another deputy testified that from May 1979 to January 1980, petitioner would make the fee payable either at the same time as or before the fine; thereafter to February 1981 petitioner would require that the fee be paid first. A witness who had served as petitioner's courtroom clerk during 1979 and 1980 could recall cases in which petitioner ordered fees paid before fines but not vice versa; his "guess" was that it went both ways.

Deputy public defenders and the courtroom clerk testified that the proceedings by which petitioner set attorney fees were very short and that petitioner generally would tell the defendant little more than the amount of the fee and when it was payable. The exhibits include at least five cases in which, after payment of fees, the subsequently payable fines became delinquent, and sanctions (e.g., revocation of probation, issuance of bench warrant) were imposed for that and other delinquencies. The masters found, however, that there was no instance in evidence of incarceration for failure to pay a fine because of prior use of funds to pay fees ordered; this was due in part to a liberal continuance policy and a community service option with respect to fine obligations.

Petitioner testified it was not his general policy to require attorney fees to be paid before the fine and suggested, in testimony and in his briefs, that to reimburse the county for the costs of the legal assistance provided.

"(d) At any time during the pendency of the judgment rendered according to the terms of this section, a defendant against whom a judgment has been rendered may petition the rendering court to modify or vacate its previous judgment on the grounds of a change in circumstances with regard to the defendant's ability to pay the judgment. The court shall advise the defendant of this right at the time of rendering the judgment."

the exhibits introduced against him selectively omitted cases in which he ordered the fines paid first. But he introduced no evidence of such cases. He also testified that he always consulted defendants about the due dates for fines and fees and followed their suggestions if within reason.

(3) Petitioner also argues that his orders for payment of fees ahead of fines were within the broad authority given him by section 987.8, subdivision (a), to order payment of legal costs "in the manner in which the court believes reasonable and compatible with the defendant's financial ability." The Attorney General (representing the commission) replies, and we agree, that orders which otherwise would have been within petitioner's statutory discretion became an abuse of that discretion when used to prolong the availability of sanctions for nonpayment of fines and create the impression that such sanctions could also be imposed for nonpayment of fees.

As will be explained, the practice of making fees payable ahead of fines was only one among several improper means employed by petitioner to enforce attorney fee orders. That pattern of conduct, together with the weight given the masters' resolution of credibility issues, reinforces our determination that petitioner in fact engaged in the practice in question.

Ordering Appearances for Fee-Collecting Purposes

The commission found that petitioner established a practice of "unlawfully ordering repeated appearances for the sole purpose of collection of fee orders."

Petitioner testified as follows: He felt "some obligation," though not the "exclusive duty," to collect attorney fees assessed under section 987.8, but he had few available means of collection other than "[continuing] the case until [the defendant] was able to pay" or "continuing it and asking him if he needed more time." The form provided by the county's bureau of resources and collections "had no place on the form that said that you are ordered to return. So, we had a little stamp that said that the defendant is ordered to return, that we would stamp on there, and that is the only way that we could continue any control over the situation at all was to just have him come back within a reasonable period of time and ask him if he had paid it." The defendant would be "ordered by the court to come back on a particular date because it's necessary in order to resolve the case to ask him some questions about his ability: Why haven't you paid this thing? Are you still unemployed? Do you need more time? Would you like to do it some different way? Would you like to do community service? Somewhere along the line you find out that you can't do some of these things, then you refer it to the Department of Collections, and let them take care of it." "And there were occasions when people came back two or three times and didn't pay, or hadn't paid, when I do recall that we referred it to the Bureau of Resources and Collections at that time, and it hadn't been referred prior." If the defendant failed to appear as ordered, a bench warrant for his arrest would be issued, as in the case of a witness who disobeys an order to appear.

(4) This testimony is clear and convincing evidence that petitioner unlawfully ordered appearances for purposes of collection. Section 987.8 does not authorize issuance of orders in the criminal proceeding to return to court for that purpose. Even on the issue of ability to pay, a court that has initially determined that issue is limited to ordering one additional hearing before the court within six months plus an appearance before a designated county officer. Petitioner recognizes that the statute expressly forbids enforcement of fee orders by contempt, but his use of bench warrants to compel appearances for interrogation on why the defendant has not paid (as distinct from investigation of ability to pay) amounted to using the threat of incarceration for collection purposes.[2]

Mervin Anderson Incident

The commission found: On December 11, 1979, Judge Kaufman ordered defendant Mervin Anderson to pay a fine of $65 and an attorney fee of $25 by January 14, 1980. On January 15, the clerk refused to accept Anderson's check for $65 in payment of the fine only. Anderson consulted his assigned public defender, Edward Van Gelder, who advised Anderson to write "fine only" on the check and retender it to the clerk, and further advised the clerk that the check should be accepted. The clerk accepted the check, credited it to the fine, and reported the matter to petitioner the next day, January 16. On January 16, petitioner who was angry at what he believed was public defender interference with enforcement of attorney fee orders, had a conversation with Van Gelder on the subject. He told Van Gelder that Judge Kaufman's fee order was wholly insufficient, that Anderson was ordered to pay the $25 fee on or before a continued hearing date of February 6, 1980, and that if he neither paid nor appeared, a bench warrant would issue for his arrest and he would be assessed fees of $200 or $250. A written order was made on the docket: "Continued to 2-7-80 at 2:00 p.m. for payment of Public Defender fees of $25.00. If fees not paid, then defendant to be cited back into court and new order made." Anderson did not pay or appear, and petitioner continued the matter several times. After petitioner told Van Gelder he was going to issue a bench warrant for Anderson's arrest, Van Gelder personally paid the $25 fee to the clerk on March 3.

[2]In addition to petitioner, there was one other judge and a commissioner on the Burbank Municipal Court bench. Petitioner introduced testimony by the other judge, C. Bernard Kaufman, that he too would order defendants to appear in court if they did not comply with an order to pay attorney fees to the county (through the court clerk) by a prescribed date. A showing that other judges engaged in an improper practice does not make the practice proper though, as pointed out later, petitioner's knowledge of other judges' practices may be relevant to the issue of bad faith.

Petitioner testified: He called in Van Gelder on January 15, 1980, and confronted Van Gelder with a report petitioner had just received from the clerk that Van Gelder had told the clerk and Anderson that Anderson did not have to pay the attorney fees. Van Gelder said he had told Anderson only that he need not pay the attorney fees at that time. Petitioner reiterated he would not tolerate public defenders telling their clients not to pay ordered fees. He also told Van Gelder: "Now look at what kind of situation you have created here for us at the court: We have an unpaid $25, and we don't have any continuance date. The man isn't ordered to return back." Van Gelder agreed to have Anderson come back to court, by calling or writing him, and petitioner made the docket order continuing the matter to February 6.[3] He did not threaten to raise the fees to $200 or $250.

The making of that threat, however, was convincingly testified to by Van Gelder, who described at length his conversations with petitioner in connection with the Anderson matter. We conclude that the commission's findings on the subject are supported by clear and convincing evidence.

Similarities between the Anderson incident and other incidents described in the findings illuminate patterns in petitioner's approach to the making and enforcement of fee orders. Thus, there are other instances (Rueda, De Carolis) in which petitioner appears to have reacted to unwelcome actions of the public defender by threatening or attempting to increase the amount of attorney fees ordered without regard to redetermination of ability to pay. Apart from threats to raise fees, the Anderson incident illustrates two of petitioner's collection practices established by other findings: (1) making sure that fees were paid before petitioner lost power to enforce payment of the fine and (2) using orders to appear in court as a means of enforcing payment of fees.

Recording Fee Orders as Apparent Condition of Probation

The commission found: Fee orders were frequently recorded on the form of probation order without notation that the order was not a condition of

[3]Petitioner testified that when Van Gelder agreed to ask Anderson to come back to court, petitioner said: "Fine. We'll put it over. You can represent your client." That statement seems inconsistent with the masters' finding that petitioner had "the belief that the Public Defender has no legitimate interest in participating in the civil function of setting or collecting fees."

probation, thus creating the impression that it was a condition. Only if a public defender objected did petitioner make exceptions, e.g., by writing "not a condition of probation" on the form.

The exhibits include 10 cases in which petitioner's fee order appears on the probation order under the "Terms of Probation" opposite the space for "Other." These orders were made between June 27, 1979, and July 1, 1980. Petitioner calls to our attention, and we have found, only one exhibit (Orellana containing an order dated June 9, 1980) in which petitioner added, "Not a condition of probation" (or its equivalent) after such an entry. On another order (Rodriguez, May 20, 1980) petitioner apparently had entered and crossed out the fee order on the probation form, and made an equivalent order on a separate printed form on which boxes could be checked for payment of the fee through the court clerk or, instead, through the county bureau of resources and collections. In that case, petitioner provided for payment through the clerk. In still another case (Rueda) it appears that on June 3, 1980, petitioner similarly deleted a fee order on the probation form and made the order on the separate form but checked the box for payment through the county bureau. Three deputy public defenders testified that when petitioner entered the fee order on the probation form, he did not advise the defendant that the fee order was not a condition of probation.

Petitioner conceded in his testimony that payment of attorney fees cannot be made a condition of probation under section 987.8.[4] He testified that he did not write on the probation forms that the fee orders were not conditions of probation because he had discussed the issue with the deputy public defenders and had an understanding with them that a fee order was never to be treated as such a condition. He conceded, however, that many or most defendants, on seeing the fee order entered on the probation form without explanation, would fail to realize that it was not a condition of probation. He testified, in justification, that "we had no other form . . . to hand him [a defendant]," even though, as already explained, the exhibits contain two instances where a separate form was in fact used. (The notation "11-75" at the bottom of that separate fee-order form, which appears designed for all municipal courts in Los Angeles County, seems to indicate that it came into use in November 1975.)

[4]In In re Allen (1969) 71 Cal.2d 388 [78 Cal.Rptr. 207, 455 P.2d 143], this court unanimously concluded that a condition of probation requiring that the defendant reimburse the county for the cost of appointed counsel was invalid as an impediment to the right to counsel guaranteed by the Sixth Amendment. But in Fuller v. Oregon (1974) 417 U.S. 40 [40 L.Ed.2d 642, 94 S.Ct. 2116], a six-member majority of the high court criticized our reasoning in Allen as "wide of the constitutional mark" and affirmed a judgment imposing probation conditioned on compliance with a statute requiring convicted defendants to reimburse the state for legal expenses when they are able to do so. Thereafter, in People v. Amor (1974) 12 Cal.3d 20 [114 Cal.Rptr. 765, 523 P.2d 1173], a decision upholding the validity of an early version of section 987.8, this court acknowledged Fuller v. Oregon, but instead of deeming Allen overruled, distinguished it on the ground, inter alia, that violation of a condition of probation would subject the defendant to imprisonment whereas a fee order under section 987.8 is enforceable only by execution as on a civil judgment. (Id., at p. 25.) Finally, In re Elizabeth S. (1982) 138 Cal.App.3d 450, 454 [188 Cal.Rptr. 2] (no pet. for hg.) held that "Allen still stands for the proposition that imposing reimbursement as a condition of probation is absolutely prohibited in California courts." In light of Fuller v. Oregon, the Court of Appeal added: "Presumably the source of this prohibition is the right to counsel guaranteed by section 15 of article I of our state Constitution." (Id., at p. 54, fn. 2 [40 L.Ed.2d at p. 655].) (See Witkin, Cal. Crimes (1983 Supp.) § 1074C; Witkin, Cal. Criminal Procedure (1983 Supp.) § 370C.)

Petitioner presented testimony of two other judicial officers of the same court, Judge Kaufman and Commissioner Murphy, that they too wrote the fee orders opposite "Other" on the form for terms of probation, though Commissioner Murphy added that he crossed out the word "Other." Petitioner correctly points out in his brief that there was no direct evidence that any defendant was in fact misled into thinking that the fee order was a condition of probation. Petitioner also points to the masters' finding in Rueda that petitioner "to the knowledge of the Public Defender, had no intention of enforcing the fee order as a condition of probation." But the masters also found that "the unexplained presence of the fee order on the Rueda probation order had the potential of leading defendant Rueda to believe that payment of the fee order was a condition of probation."

The commission's finding as to petitioner's recording fee orders in a way that created the impression that they were conditions of probation thus is supported by evidence that is not only clear and convincing but also uncontradicted.

Extraction of Attorney Fees from Bail Deposits

The commission found that petitioner's "general practice was to extract from a defendant's posted bail the amount of money needed to satisfy the assessed attorney's fees" "whether or not the defendant requested or consented to same." The findings describe seven cases in which petitioner, between June 4, 1979, and September 22, 1980, ordered attorney fees paid from posted bail. Court records of those cases, confirming the findings, are in evidence.

A deputy public defender testified that petitioner ordered attorney fees taken from posted bail without giving defendants any choice in the matter. He recalled only one instance in which petitioner asked if there were objections to the order; there, the defendant responded by objecting to the amount of the fee. A defendant in one of the cases described in the findings (Hock) testified that he was not asked if he objected to application of his bail money to attorney fees, and that if he had been asked, he would have objected. Petitioner testified that he never ordered bail money applied to attorney fees without the defendant's consent.[5] The masters' and commission's findings to the contrary are supported by clear and convincing evidence.

(5) Petitioner now contends, however, that the following sentence in section 1297 authorized him to order bail deposits applied to attorney fees even without the defendant's consent: "If the money [for bail] remains on deposit at the time of a judgment for the payment of a fine, the clerk must, under the direction of the court, if the defendant be the depositor, apply the money in satisfaction thereof, and after satisfying the fine and costs, must refund the surplus, if any, to the defendant." (Italics added.)[6] Petitioner argues that the "costs" which section 1297 authorizes the clerk to withhold from the refund of a bail deposit include the "cost" of legal assistance which section 987.8 (see fn. 1, ante) empowers the court to order the defendant to pay to the county. The provision for "satisfying the fine and costs" has been part of section 1297 since 1872, and we do not think it was intended to refer to costs of legal services, which first became reimbursable to the county a century later under the initial enactment, in 1971, of section 987.8. Nonetheless, petitioner's argument has enough plausibility that if in fact he had relied on it in deducting attorney fees as well as the entire fine from bail deposited by a defendant, the reliance would not have amounted to misconduct.

(6) In other respects, however, orders made by petitioner for application of bail deposits to attorney fees were clearly improper in the absence of consent by interested parties. In three cases (Hock, Chavez, Stephens) the bail money was applied to the entire amount of the attorney fee but only part of the fine. The defendant was thereby left with a balance of a fine enforceable by criminal sanctions, whereas use of the bail money to pay all the fine would have left simply an attorney fee balance, collectible only in the manner of a civil judgment. Such orders clearly violated section 1297's command that the clerk "must . . . apply the money in satisfaction thereof"

[5]Petitioner's reply brief denies he said "never," citing his testimony on direct examination concerning his "normal procedure." The "never" testimony was given in subsequent cross-examination.

[6]Before an amendment that took effect on January 1, 1981, section 1297 provided as follows: "When money has been deposited, a receipt shall be issued in the name of the depositor. If the money remains on deposit at the time of a judgment for the payment of a fine, the clerk must, under the direction of the court, if the defendant be the depositor, apply the money in satisfaction thereof, and after satisfying the fine and costs, must refund the surplus, if any, to the defendant. If the person to whom the receipt for the deposit was issued was not the defendant, the deposit after judgment shall be returned to him within 10 days after he claims it by submitting the receipt, and, if a claim is not made within 10 days of the exoneration of bail, the clerk shall immediately notify the depositor of the exoneration of bail."

(necessarily referring to the fine); only then, after "satisfying the fine and costs," is the surplus to be refunded.

Another type of impropriety is seen in three cases (Munden, Callaway, Garcia) in which petitioner ordered attorney fees paid out of bail deposited by persons other than the defendant. Section 1297 provides that bail deposits must be returned to a nondefendant depositor on demand and authorizes no deductions. (See Rodman v. Superior Court (1939) 13 Cal.2d 262, 267 [89 P.2d 109].) Petitioner's testimony was that he would apply bail money furnished by a nondefendant depositor to attorney fees only with the depositor's consent. But the records of those three cases contain printed forms for "Assignment of Cash Bail Deposit," signed by the depositors, providing only for application of the deposit to a fine, not to attorney fees or any other costs.

Disputing the commission's finding that with respect to bail deposits he "usually ordered attorney fees to be paid before fines," petitioner cites two instances in which he imposed fines and ordered attorney fees but required that only the fines be taken out of bail. But even those cases are consistent with petitioner's apparent aim of avoiding, where possible, any situation that would leave a defendant with an obligation to pay attorney fees unaccompanied by any other obligation that could be enforced through criminal sanctions. In one of these cases (Fernandez) on January 28, 1980, petitioner ordered a fine and penalty assessment totaling $380 payable as follows: $300 forthwith from bail, with the balance of $80 due on March 10. An attorney's fee of $50, however, was made payable on February 29. In the other case (Warner), on Friday, January 11, 1980, petitioner ordered a $250 bail deposit applied to the fine and ordered immediate payment of $100 for legal fees; the latter was paid on Monday, January 14.

Finally, there is no evidence that petitioner relied on any particular legal theory when he made the orders to apply cash bail deposits to attorney fees without the defendant's consent or, where a third party had deposited the bail, the consent of that party. He testified that he always obtained that consent, but giving weight to the masters' resolution of testimonial conflicts and examining the pertinent exhibits, we conclude that during the period in question it was petitioner's practice not to obtain the consent, and that he engaged in that practice without regard to its legal justification.

Presence and/or Degree of Misconduct in Petitioner's Attorney Fees Collection Practices

(2b) The commission made a blanket finding that petitioner "engaged in a course of conduct concerning attorney's fees as set out above . . . which constitutes wilful misconduct in office and conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute." The conclusion applies to all the findings discussed hereinabove under the headings, "Making Attorney Fees Payable Before Fines," "Ordering Appearances for Fee-Collecting Purposes," "Mervin Anderson Incident," "Recording Fee Orders as Apparent Condition of Probation," and "Extraction of Attorney Fees from Bail Deposits."

The masters, on the other hand, concluded that none of those acts constituted wilful misconduct but that the following acts were conduct prejudicial: "leading defendants to believe that payment of attorney's fees was required as a part of compliance with criminal sanctions imposed" and, in the Mervin Anderson case, "threatening to increase another judge's fee order." The masters further concluded that petitioner's "practice in ordering payment of fees first from bail without the consent of the defendant, while legally erroneous," was neither wilful misconduct nor conduct prejudicial.

The masters bolstered those conclusions with additional findings on petitioner's professional standing and activities; these findings may be summarized as follows: Petitioner is an able and experienced municipal court judge, highly respected by the judicial officers of his court. He has become widely known and well respected by the judges of other Los Angeles County Municipal Courts, and has contributed to the efficiency of those courts, through his extensive activities in the Municipal Court Judges' Association of Los Angeles County and in the Presiding Judges' Association, of which he is a founder and has served in all offices. He was particularly involved in a project of the latter association for implementation of section 987.8, and since the county bureau of resources and collections found it uneconomic to attempt collection of fee orders of less than $100, he developed a procedure of ordering smaller fees paid through the clerk of his court for remission to the county. He believes that assessment and collection of fees under section 987.8 is in the public interest and cannot be accomplished "without unremitting and zealous attention by municipal court judges themselves to attempt to collect smaller fee orders, believing that if judges did not see to collections, no one else would."

Petitioner denies any misconduct and contends that even if he made mistakes, they were merely legal errors subject to correction on appeal or in writ proceedings. We disagree.

Though some of the acts in question, such as setting a date for payment of an attorney fee in advance of the date set for payment of a fine in a particular case, would not necessarily constitute misconduct or even legal error when viewed in isolation, they became misconduct as part of petitioner's larger scheme for using threats of criminal sanctions to collect attorney fees ordered paid to the county. That scheme violated the provisions of section 987.8 that provide for collection of attorney fee orders only by execution as on a judgment in a civil action and prohibit enforcement by contempt.

Central to the scheme was the practice of ordering defendants who failed to pay the fees by a set date to return to court, not because of any doubt about their ability to pay (which presumably had already been determined as a prerequisite to the § 987.8 order) but simply to coerce compliance by questioning them about why they had not yet paid, perhaps suggesting community service as an alternative to payment (a suggestion for which petitioner offers no legal justification), and then setting a new date on which the defendant was ordered either to have paid the fee or to reappear for a new round of interrogation. It was apparent concern over interference with this approach that provoked petitioner's anger at the deputy public defender who told Mervin Anderson that Anderson could pay a fine without simultaneously paying a fee that had been ordered paid on the same day.

The effectiveness of this periodic interrogation as a collection device was enhanced by petitioner's other practices. Making fee orders appear to defendants to be a condition of probation, regardless of petitioner's lack of intention to enforce them as such, necessarily suggested that failure to pay would jeopardize the defendant's probation status. Ordering the fine payable after the fee made sure that until and after the fee was paid, the defendant would remain subject to the court's jurisdiction for purposes of administering the criminal sanctions available to enforce payment of the fine. A similar result was achieved when, in violation of Penal Code section 1297, bail deposits were applied to ordered fees even though a balance remained due on a fine.

We accordingly concur in the commission's conclusion that petitioner's course of conduct described in the findings sustained hereinabove constituted misconduct subject to discipline. We next must decide whether it was wilful misconduct, as determined by the commission, or no more than conduct prejudicial, as determined by the masters.

(7) Bad faith is the touchstone for testing whether misconduct committed by a judge while acting in a judicial capacity constitutes wilful misconduct. (Geiler v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications, supra, 10 Cal.3d 270, 283-284.) " '[B]ad faith' is quintessentially a concept of specific intent, requiring consciousness of purpose as an antecedent to a judge's acting maliciously or corruptly." (Spruance v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications, supra, 13 Cal.3d 778, 796.) When the judge has " 'intentionally committed acts which he knew or should have known were beyond his lawful power,' [citation], . . . 'bad faith' entails actual malice as the motivation for a judge's acting ultra vires. The requisite intent must exceed mere volition; negligence alone, if not so gross as to call its genuineness into question, falls short of 'bad faith.'" (Id. at pp. 795-796.) Even when the acts in question were within the judge's lawful power, they may involve bad faith, and thus constitute wilful misconduct, if "committed for a corrupt purpose, i.e., for any purpose other than the faithful discharge of judicial duties." (Id. at p. 796.)[7]

(8) Conduct prejudicial, when committed in the course of acting in a judicial capacity, lacks the element of bad faith but must be "prejudicial to the administration of justice" and "[bring] the judicial office into disrepute." (Id. at p. 796; Const., art VI, § 18, subd. (c).)[8] "Bring[ing] the judicial office into disrepute" does "not require notoriety, but only that the conduct be 'damaging to the esteem for the judiciary held by members of the public who observed such conduct.' (McCartney v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1974) 12 Cal.3d 512, 534 [116 Cal.Rptr. 260, 526 P.2d 268])." (Wenger v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 29 Cal.3d 615, 622-623, fn. 4.)

(2c) We are not persuaded that petitioner's wrongful fee-collecting practices were carried out in bad faith. His interest in recovering county costs of legal representation appears to have originated in requests by Los Angeles County officials to the county's courts to find means of implementing

[7]Thus, we reject the argument in the commission's brief that "where a judge intentionally commits an act which he knew or reasonably should have known was beyond his judicial authority, the mere commission of the act under such circumstances constitutes bad faith and is sufficient in and of itself to constitute wilful misconduct." Bad faith requires a malicious or corrupt purpose beyond mere active or constructive knowledge of lack of power. The statements quoted in the brief from Spruance, supra, 13 Cal.3d at p. 796 ("'Bad faith' . . . encompasses acts which the judge knew or reasonably should have known were beyond his lawful power") and Gonzalez v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1983) 33 Cal.3d 359, 369 [188 Cal.Rptr. 880, 657 P.2d 372] ("wilful misconduct . . . embraces intentional conduct that a judge should have known was beyond his judicial authority") establish only that acts committed with such active or constructive knowledge may be done in bad faith and thus constitute wilful misconduct; it does not follow that any such act, without more, is necessarily one of wilful misconduct.

[8]Article VI, section 18, subdivision (c) of the California Constitution provides: "On recommendation of the Commission on Judicial Performance the Supreme Court may (1) retire a judge for disability that seriously interferes with the performance of the judge's duties and is or is likely to become permanent, and (2) censure or remove a judge for action occurring not more than 6 years prior to the commencement of the judge's current term that constitutes wilful misconduct in office, persistent failure or inability to perform the judge's duties habitual intemperance in the use of intoxicants or drugs, or conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute. The commission may privately admonish a judge found to have engaged in an improper action or a dereliction of duty, subject to review in the Supreme Court in the manner provided for review of causes decided by a court of appeal."

section 987.8. In seeking such means through his activities in the two judges' associations mentioned in the masters' findings and in his day-to-day handling of misdemeanor matters, we do not doubt that petitioner was endeavoring in good faith to serve the public interest as he saw it. Relevant to his good faith is his perception that other judges were engaged in similar practices.[9]

As already explained, good faith does not preclude a determination of conduct prejudicial. (9) It is true that a judge should not be disciplined

[9]Judge Kaufman, who sat on the same court with petitioner, testified that he too (1) ordered defendants either to comply with section 987.8 orders to pay attorney fees by a particular date or to appear in court and (2) entered fee orders opposite "Other" on the written order setting out terms of probation.

Attached to an amicus curiae brief filed by the 2 judges' associations in which petitioner was primarily active (as mentioned in the masters' findings) are declarations of some 55 judges and commissioners of Los Angeles County Municipal Courts, practically identical in substance. Besides deploring the present proceedings, these declarations include the following matter dealing with implementation of section 987.8 in the county's municipal courts:

"That subsequent to the passage of Proposition Number 13, the Los Angeles County Board of Supervisors began to request that the Municipal Court Judges in Los Angeles County make orders pursuant to California Penal Code Section 987.8.

"That the Presiding Judges' Association in approximately 1978 and thereafter took up the matter of P. C. 987.8 Orders at a number of its monthly meetings, and appointed a Committee to study the proper way to make and implement these orders.

"That there were no guidelines provided for implementation of P. C. 987.8, but it was discussed and decided by a majority of the Judges in Los Angeles County that the language of the Statute was sufficiently broad to permit Judges wide discretion in determining the costs of Public Defender services, and the amount, method and manner of payment by the defendants involved.

"That the Statute required the Court to make such an Order, and further stated that the attorney's fees shall be paid to the County: '. . . in the manner in which the Court believes reasonable and compatible with the defendant's financial ability. . . .' (Italics added.)

"That Financial statement forms were prepared for defendants to complete prior to requesting the services of the Public Defender.

"That as a result of the Board of Supervisor's request, and of the action by the Presiding Judges' Association, a County-Wide practice or method of operation developed which resulted in:

"(1) Attorney's fees being ordered paid in many cases prior to fines, since the fees were smaller than the fines, being $100 or less; and

"(2) Cash bail, if posted by the defendant, or assigned by another person, being ordered to be used to pay attorney's fees, fines and penalty assessments pursuant to P. C. 1297, and in many cases, fees paid before fines because the fees were smaller; and

"(3) A procedure whereby the Judge would make the Order for payment of attorney's fees based upon the costs and ability to pay, relying upon questions asked of each defendant, financial statements on file, if any, and any other factors which bore upon the defendant's financial capability to pay; and

"(4) A procedure for collecting most small fees and fines through the Clerk of the Court, since the Bureau of Resources and Collections would only accept Orders for collection of $100 or more; and

"(5) A general consensus of opinion by Municipal Court Judges in Los Angeles County, that since the Order concerning attorney's fees is civil in nature, that the Public Defender would not be part of said proceeding."

(In one declaration, signed by two judges, paragraph (2), concerning application of cash bail to the attorney's fees and fines, was deleted.)

for mere erroneous determination of legal issues, including questions of limitations on the judicial power, that are subject to reasonable differences of opinion. (See, e.g., Wenger v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 29 Cal.3d 615, 646-647, fn. 13.) (2d) But, as explained, petitioner engaged in collection practices that were clearly improper or were carried out in order to implement improper collection methods. We accordingly conclude that petitioner committed conduct prejudicial by ordering appearances for fee-collection purposes, causing fee orders to appear to be conditions of probation, ordering fees payable out of posted bail even though part or all of a fine thereby remained unsatisfied, and making fees payable ahead of fines for the purposes of prolonging the availability of sanctions for nonpayment of the fine and creating the impression that such sanctions could also be used for nonpayment of fees.

(10) For the guidance of trial courts, we add that ordering payment of section 987.8 fees before payment of the remaining balance on a fine is not necessarily improper if the defendant is not given the impression, through any of the other practices engaged in by petitioner, that payment of the fees may be enforced by criminal sanctions. As previously explained, deduction of section 987.8 fees from cash bail deposits without the depositor's consent is improper under section 1297.

(11) There remains for consideration the Mervin Anderson incident. The commission included that incident in the course of conduct it concluded was wilful misconduct, while the masters concluded, with respect to the incident, that "threatening to increase another judge's fee order was conduct prejudicial." We conclude that not only the threat, but also the order that Anderson return to court, made for the purpose of implementing collection of the fee, amounted to conduct prejudicial. (See Roberts v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1983) 33 Cal.3d 739, 748 [190 Cal.Rptr. 910, 661 P.2d 1064] (threats to counsel held conduct prejudicial).)

SETTING ATTORNEY FEES IN UNREASONABLE AMOUNTS

Increasing Fee Because of Irritation at Counsel (Rueda)

(12a) The commission found: On June 3, 1980, petitioner fixed an attorney fee of $50 for Alejandra Rueda and entered it on the probation order opposite "Other," so that it appeared to be a condition of probation. Though petitioner and Deputy Public Defender Racusin, who represented Rueda, knew that payment of the fee could not be made a condition of probation, Racusin objected to notation of the fee on the probation order because his client might thereby be misled into believing the contrary. Petitioner said he had no other place to write the order except on a separate form for payment of fees through the county bureau of resources and collections, which did not then accept fee orders of less than $100 for collection. When Racusin maintained his objection, petitioner deleted the fee provision on the probation order and wrote an order for payment of a fee of $100 through the county bureau. The new order was $50 in excess of a reasonable fee. In changing the fee from $50 to $100, petitioner was motivated by irritation at what he believed was Racusin's improper participation in the fee-collecting process.

Petitioner testified: When he entered the $50 attorney fee on the probation order, Racusin (1) contended there should be no fee order at all and (2) requested that any fee order be on a separate form and made payable through the county bureau rather than through the court clerk. Petitioner told him that the bureau would not accept an order for less than $100, but Racusin insisted on a separate form, so petitioner made the new order for $100.

Racusin testified that when he objected to the fee order's being made an apparent condition of probation, petitioner appeared to cross something out and said "it will be $100 in attorney's fees payable through the county." When Racusin asked why the fee was being doubled, petitioner said that "the court never sends a collection to the county of less than $100."

Petitioner's briefs justify his doubling of the fee order as a response to Racusin's insistence that it be entered on a separate form, coupled with the minimum $100 collectible through the county bureau. Yet examination of the Rueda fee order reveals that the printed form was designed for making the fee payable either through the county bureau or through the clerk of the court. Indeed, the record includes an order made just two weeks earlier, on May 20, 1980, in another case (Rodriguez) in which petitioner used the same printed form to order that an attorney fee of $100 be paid through the court clerk on or before June 20, 1980.

With respect to the excessiveness of the $100 fee order, Rueda's financial statement, in evidence, indicates that she was employed as a maid at Safari Inn; her gross pay was $100 per week and her take-home pay $400 per month; she was single and had a three-year old daughter; her food, clothing and shelter came to $325 a month; her assets were $20 cash. Racusin testified that petitioner asked Rueda no questions about her financial condition before imposing the fee order, and that the financial statement was not filled out until after the order had already been made. In any event, it is clear that petitioner's doubling the fee was not based on any change in his information concerning the defendant's ability to pay or the legal services she had received, but was motivated by a desire to get even with the public defender for objecting to the form of the initial order.

The commission concluded that "[t]he act of increasing fees in the Rueda case beyond a reasonable level was wilful misconduct in office." The masters concluded that "[t]he act of increasing fees in the Rueda case beyond a reasonable level from irritation at the actions of the Public Defender was conduct prejudicial." The masters declined to find wilful misconduct "[b]ecause the act appears to be an isolated incident."

(13) The fact that an act is an isolated incident does not preclude a determination of wilful misconduct. In fact the Rueda incident bears similarities to the Mervin Anderson incident and to other instances of overreaching, in petitioner's endeavors to enforce section 987.8 orders, that we have concluded were conduct prejudicial. The situation here is parallel to that in Gonzalez v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1983) 33 Cal.3d 359, 371 [188 Cal.Rptr. 880, 657 P.2d 372], where we said: "The evidence suggests petitioner refused to hear the motion [for release on his own recognizance] because it was the public defender who had 'opened his mouth' during the judge's questioning of the defendant. Such hostile, arbitrary, and unreasonable conduct jeopardizes the liberty of an indigent defendant for reasons not related to the merits of the case and therefore constitutes wilful misconduct. [Citation.]" Though petitioner's conduct here jeopardized defendant Rueda's property rather than her liberty, his bad faith is exacerbated by his clinging to the excuse that the printed separate form of order could not be used for ordering payment of fees through the court clerk. The exhibits demonstrate the patent falsity of that excuse. (12b) We conclude that petitioner's act of doubling the fees in Rueda because of irritation at the deputy public defender's objections was wilful misconduct.

Fee Orders in Unreasonable Amounts

The commission found that in the Hock, Nachtmann, and Liscano cases, petitioner "assessed attorney's fees which were neither reasonable nor compatible with the available evidence as to the defendants' ability to pay." The masters found that in those cases petitioner did not question the defendants to obtain financial information beyond that submitted in the financial statements, or to ascertain the defendant's financial expectancies within the ensuing six months (see § 987.8, subd. (c)(2) [defining "ability to pay"], set out in fn. 1, ante.)

In Hock, the defendant submitted a financial statement on which "Not" was inserted after "present employment" but it was also indicated that the defendant worked on "commission" as a "memory expert" for the "Memory Masters Institute." It showed minimal assets. Hock testified he had borrowed the $440 for the cash bail. Petitioner ordered him to pay a total fine of $440, $340 forthwith out of cash bail, and the balance 49 days later. One hundred dollars in attorney fees was ordered paid forthwith out of the bail. Hock testified that at his hearing petitioner did not inquire about the meaning of "commission" or about any other information on his financial statement, did not inquire about the source of his bail deposit or whether he agreed to its being applied to attorney fees, and said nothing about any right to a hearing on the question of attorney fees. There is no merit in petitioner's argument that the ambiguous financial statement plus the fact Hock seemed able to afford bail was sufficient to support the fee order.

In Nachtmann, on August 8, 1979, the defendant was ordered to pay a fine of $130 by October 10, and an attorney fee of $50 by September 12. The court file contains no financial statement, though Nachtmann testified he gave the public defender a form dealing with finances. He testified that petitioner asked him no questions about his employment, income, expenses, or debts, or about his financial statement. He testified he was unemployed at the time. Petitioner testified he did not recall the Nachtmann hearing, but that he "would have had to have" asked Nachtmann about his employment.

The Liscano docket sheet shows that on January 21, 1980, Liscano was (1) fined $350, payable $175 by February 29 and $175 by April 14, and (2) ordered to pay an attorney fee of $100 by February 22. His financial statement indicates he was unemployed and had last worked in 1975. He was represented in the case by Deputy Public Defender Jason, who testified as follows: Jason told petitioner that the defendant was not only indigent but "borderline mentally retarded," and so "pretty much" unable to obtain employment. Petitioner inquired into the defendant's property and employment prospects; the defendant said he had no immediate prospects. The defendant also told petitioner he was doing volunteer work at the Center for Developmentally Disabled, as part of his rehabilitation therapy. Petitioner testified that at the hearing the defendant said he was unemployed and not seeking employment because he was doing "volunteer service"; that he was not disabled and was "expecting" to find employment; and that he was living with his parents. It seems clear from all this evidence that the defendant had no reasonable prospects of obtaining employment within the ensuing six months. (See § 987.8, subd. (c)(2)(ii), set out at fn. 1, ante.)

(14) We find that in Hock, Nachtmann, and Liscano, petitioner assessed attorney fees that were unreasonable in light of the evidence available to petitioner as to the defendants' ability to pay. We concur in the conclusions of the commission and the masters that those acts were conduct prejudicial.

GIVING UNSOLICITED ADVICE ON CASE FROM WHICH PETITIONER HAD BEEN DISQUALIFIED

(15a) The commission found: In De Carolis, on August 27, 1980, and while the defendant was incarcerated, the public defender filed a declaration of prejudice against petitioner under section 170.6 of the Code of Civil Procedure (hereafter section 170.6). On August 29, the superior court granted a writ of habeas corpus that effectively terminated criminal proceedings, leaving for determination only the amount of attorney fees, if any, to be awarded the county under section 987.8 for the public defender's services. Knowing those facts, petitioner on September 2 wrote the following note addressed to Commissioner Murphy, an employee of petitioner's court: "987.8 hearing should be held. Suggested order $500.00 for all PD's work including Petition and Order re Habeas Corpus payable thru Co. Bureau of Collections. PD to have no part in such hearings. MEG." The fee matter was heard not by Commissioner Murphy but by Judge Kaufman, of the same court, on September 5. The docket sheet indicates that he ordered fees of $400. The masters, who made the same findings as the commission in the matter, found that Judge Kaufman was not influenced by petitioner's note. The court file in evidence includes the order remanding the defendant to custody, dated August 26, and signed by petitioner.

Petitioner testified he did not remember having been disqualified before writing the note (which he acknowledged was his handwriting). But the note was on the case file, and the clerk who accepted the section 170.6 declaration for filing said it was his practice to put the original declaration with the case file and to inform the affected judge as soon as possible. The facts found are otherwise undisputed.

The commission and masters concluded that petitioner's writing the note was wrongful in three respects: (1) It created an impression that petitioner was trying to influence the decision of a commissioner who serves at the pleasure of the court. (2) The section 170.6 declaration should have deterred petitioner from advising other judicial officers on how to decide the matter. (3) Apart from the section 170.6 disqualification, a judge should not give unsolicited advice to another judicial officer on how to decide a matter within the latter's discretion; such advice is to be distinguished from communicating factual matters.

We do not agree that petitioner's writing of the note would have been so clearly wrongful as to warrant judicial discipline if there had been no section 170.6 disqualification and the addressee had been a fellow judge rather than a subordinate judicial officer. Canon 3(A)(4) of the Code of Judicial Conduct states: "A judge should . . ., except as authorized by law, neither initiate nor consider ex parte or other communications concerning a pending or impending proceeding." The commentary to the canon states: "The proscription against communications concerning a proceeding . . . does not preclude a judge from consulting with other judges, or with court personnel whose function is to aid the judge in carrying out his adjudicative responsibilities." Though the word "consulting" was probably intended to refer only to discussion initiated by a judge in connection with his or her own adjudicative responsibilities, we are not aware of any limitation on communication among judges of the same court that is sufficiently clear to warrant labeling unsolicited advice to one judge from another judge who is not disqualified as misconduct.

The disqualification of petitioner under section 170.6, however, rendered the writing of the note an act that he knew or should have known was beyond his authority. (16) Preliminarily, it is clear that the disqualification barred petitioner from himself ordering attorney fees in the matter under section 987.8.

In argument to this court, petitioner disputes that premise, citing Wenger v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 29 Cal.3d 615, 646. There, the petitioner had asserted in the trial court that despite a section 170.6 disqualification, "an arraignment hearing remained within his power because section 170.6 disqualifies a judge only from trying a case or hearing 'any matter therein which involves a contested issue of law or fact.' That view had at least enough merit to prevent the holding of it from constituting misconduct. (See Mezzetti v. Superior Court (1979) 94 Cal.App.3d 987 [156 Cal.Rptr. 802] (disqualified judge held authorized to hold settlement conference); Fraijo v. Superior Court (1973) 34 Cal.App.3d 222 [109 Cal.Rptr. 909] (plea bargain). But see In re Byron B. (1979) 98 Cal.App.3d 300 [330] [159 Cal.Rptr. 430] (acceptance of juvenile's admission of guilt); Lyons v. Superior Court (1977) 73 Cal.App.3d 625, 627 [140 Cal.Rptr. 826] (plea bargain).)" (Id., at p. 647, fn. 13.)

Here, however, it is irrefutable that the setting of an attorney fee under section 987.8 "involves a contested issue of law or fact" within the meaning of section 170.6. Petitioner argues that the section 987.8 hearing was not the same action or proceeding from which he was disqualified because it was a separate civil matter that could be heard only "upon conclusion of the criminal proceedings in the trial court" (§ 987.8, subd. (a)). The contention is meritless: section 987.8 clearly calls for the holding of the fee-setting hearing at the end of, but as part of, the criminal action in which the legal services were rendered, and that was the procedure followed in petitioner's court.

(15b) Since petitioner was disqualified under section 170.6 from hearing the fee-setting issue, it was highly improper for him to give unsolicited advice to another judicial officer on how to decide it. The right to disqualify a judge, guaranteed by section 170.6 (McCartney v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications, supra, 12 Cal.3d 512, 531; see Solberg v. Superior Court (1977) 19 Cal.3d 182, 193 [137 Cal.Rptr. 460, 561 P.2d 1148]), would be undermined and perhaps vitiated if the disqualified judge were permitted to circumvent the disqualification by initiating advice to another judicial officer on how to decide the matter.

There was additional impropriety, apart from petitioner's disqualification under section 170.6, arising from the fact that Commissioner Murphy was not a full-fledged judge but an officer appointed by petitioner's court to perform "subordinate judicial duties" (Const., art. VI, § 22) "under the direction of the judges" (Gov. Code, § 72190). As the judge senior in service of the court's two judges, petitioner alone had the ultimate say on whether to hire or fire the commissioner. (Gov. Code, § 72192.) On the other hand, the commissioner had all the judicial obligations imposed by the California Code of Judicial Conduct and thus was required to discharge his duties impartially and independently. (Cal. Code of Jud. Conduct, canons 1, 2(A), 3(A), "Compliance with the Code of Judicial Conduct" foll. canon 7.) For petitioner, as the judge to whom the commissioner owed his continued tenure in office, to thrust upon the latter unsolicited advice concerning a matter entrusted to the commissioner's impartial judicial determination was bound to create seemingly, if not actually, intolerable interference with the commissioner's impartiality.

The commission concluded that petitioner's writing of the note was wilful misconduct. We agree. The superior court's habeas corpus order, obtained by the deputy public defender who had filed the section 170.6 declaration of prejudice against petitioner, resulted in final termination of the criminal proceeding only three days after petitioner had ordered the defendant incarcerated. Petitioner's pattern of retaliatory conduct in other matters (Anderson, Rueda), plus the facts that the note (1) dealt with the merits of a matter in which petitioner was barred from acting in deference to a litigant's right to impartiality and (2) was addressed specifically to a subordinate judicial officer who held his office at petitioner's pleasure, leads us to conclude that petitioner's act of writing the note was "for a corrupt purpose, i.e., for [a] purpose other than the faithful discharge of judicial duties" and thus constituted wilful misconduct. (Spruance v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications, supra, 13 Cal.3d 778, 796.)

AUTHORIZING RELEASE OF CONFISCATED GUNS FOR SALE BY DEFENDANTS

(17) The commission found: On four occasions between April 1979 and August 1980, petitioner ordered the Burbank Police Department to release to the purchaser a revolver, pistol, or rifle (gun) that had been purchased from an owner after having been confiscated in connection with the owner's criminal conviction (or, in one case, conviction of the owner's son). Petitioner did not know the details of the negotiations for the sales and participated in the transactions only by signing the orders releasing the guns to the purchaser. Two of the guns were purchased by Gordon Mangel, petitioner's courtroom bailiff and close personal friend. The other two sales were negotiated by Mangel, one to a deputy sheriff and the other to a Burbank police officer, both of whose duties brought them to petitioner's courtroom from time to time. None of the purchasers was a licensed firearms dealer. The court file in each case contains not only the order of release but also the bill of sale.

Section 12028 provides that a firearm used in a crime is, upon conviction, a nuisance and shall be surrendered to the sheriff or chief of police. Subdivision (c) of that section provides that "[t]he officers to whom the weapons are surrendered, except upon the certificate of a judge . . ., or of the district attorney . . ., that the retention thereof is necessary or proper to the ends of justice, may annually, between the 1st and 10th days of July, . . . offer the weapons . . . [considered] to have value with respect to sporting, recreational, or collection purposes, for sale at public auction to [federally licensed gun dealers]." Subdivision (d) provides that if the "weapon is not of the type that can be sold to the public, generally, or is not sold pursuant to subdivision (c)," it shall "be destroyed." Subdivisions (c) and (f) contain provisions for the return of stolen weapons to innocent owners. Section 12030 provides that a law enforcement agency having custody of a firearm subject to destruction may retain it for official use, but the weapon must be destroyed when no longer needed.[10]

[10]Following are provisions of sections 12028 and 12030 as in effect during the gun sales in question, i.e., prior to January 1, 1981.

Section 12028 provided: [¶] (a) "The unlawful concealed carrying upon the person or within the vehicle of the carrier of any of the weapons mentioned in Section 653k, 12020, or 12025 is a nuisance.

"(b) A firearm of any nature used in the commission of any misdemeanor as provided in this code or any felony, or an attempt to commit any misdemeanor as provided in this code or any felony, is, upon a conviction of the defendant, a nuisance.

"(c) Any weapon described in subdivision (a), or, upon conviction of defendant, any Section 1417 provides: "All exhibits which have been introduced or filed in any criminal action or proceeding may be disposed of as provided in this chapter [§§ 1417-1419]." Section 1419 provides that certain kinds of property, including weapons used in the crime, "filed as an exhibit shall be, by order of the trial court, destroyed or sold or otherwise disposed of under the conditions provided in such order."[11] Apparently in response to petitioner's claim that sections 1417 and 1419 authorized the orders in question, the commission found that "[e]ach firearm sold was then in the custody of weapon described in subdivision (b), shall be surrendered to the sheriff of a county or the chief of police or other head of a municipal police department of any city or city and county. The officers to whom the weapons are surrendered, except upon the certificate of a judge of a court of record, or of the district attorney of the county, that the retention thereof is necessary or proper to the ends of justice, may annually, between the 1st and 10th days of July, in each year, offer the weapons, which the officers in charge of them consider to have value with respect to sporting, recreational, or collection purposes, for sale at public auction to persons licensed under federal law to engage in businesses involving any weapon purchased. If any weapon has been stolen and is thereafter recovered from the thief or his transferee, or is used in such a manner as to constitute a nuisance pursuant to subdivision (a) or (b) without the prior knowledge of its lawful owner that it would be so used, it shall not be so offered for sale but shall be restored to the lawful owner, as soon as its use as evidence has been served, upon his identification of the weapon and proof of ownership.

---

"(d) If, under this section, a weapon is not of the type that can be sold to the public, generally, or is not sold pursuant to subdivision (c) the weapon shall, between the 1st and 10th days of July, next succeeding, be destroyed so that it can no longer be used as such weapon.

"(e) This section shall not apply to any firearm in the possession of the Department of Fish and Game or which was used in the violation of any provision of law, or regulation thereunder, in the Fish and Game Code.

"(f) No stolen weapon shall be sold or destroyed pursuant to subdivisions (c) or (d) unless reasonable notice is given to its lawful owner, if his identity and address can be reasonably ascertained."

The second and succeeding paragraphs of section 12030 provided: "Any law enforcement agency which has custody of any firearms or any parts of any firearms which are subject to destruction as required by this chapter may, in lieu of destroying such weapons, retain and use any of them as may be useful in carrying out the official duties of such agency, or may turn over to the criminalistics laboratory of the Department of Justice or the criminalistics laboratory of a police department, sheriff's office or district attorney's office any such weapons as may be useful in carrying out the official duties of their respective agencies.

"Any firearm or part of any firearm which, rather than being destroyed, is used for official purposes pursuant to this section shall be destroyed by the agency using such weapon when it is no longer needed by the agency for use in carrying out its official duties.

"Any law enforcement agency that retains custody of any firearm pursuant to this section or that destroys a firearm pursuant to Section 12028 shall notify the Department of Justice of such retention or destruction. This notification shall consist of a complete description of each firearm, including the name of the manufacturer or brand name, model, caliber, and serial number."

[11]Section 1419 provides: "The provisions of Section 1418 shall not apply to any dangerous or deadly weapons, narcotic or poison drugs, explosives, or any property of any kind or character whatsoever the possession of which is prohibited by law, used by a defendant in the commission of the crime of which he was convicted, or with which he was armed or which he had upon his person at the time of his arrest.

"Any such property filed as an exhibit shall be, by order of the trial court, destroyed or sold or otherwise disposed of under the conditions provided in such order."

the Burbank Police Department and none were exhibits filed with the court." In each case exhibits were not necessary since the defendant pleaded guilty. There is no merit to petitioner's argument that the guns plausibly could be regarded as "exhibits which have been introduced or filed in any criminal action or proceeding" (§ 1417) simply because the court record included the police report, in which the gun was described, and, in some cases, an order that the gun be confiscated. (Harty v. Superior Court (1981) 124 Cal.App.3d 745, 748 [177 Cal.Rptr. 477] [decided after the orders here in question; see fn. 13, post].) There is no indication that any of the guns left the possession of the police department during the criminal proceeding.

Petitioner testified that he signed firearm release orders of the sort in question six to eight times. The first time he was approached by private counsel who wanted a gun released so that the defendant could pay his fee.[12] Petitioner consulted a deputy city attorney (also a witness before the masters), who advised petitioner that it was proper to authorize the release. He told petitioner he based his advice on (1) having seen private attorneys obtain the release of guns from police departments to satisfy their fees, (2) the "inherent power" of the court, and (3) the provision in section 12028 for a certificate of a judge that "retention" of the gun "is necessary or proper to the ends of justice," from which he inferred that the power to authorize retention included power to authorize transfer to a private party.

Commissioner Murphy, who had served for a year and a half in petitioner's court, testified that although he had never ordered guns released, he believed that release was proper under section 12028. He reasoned that at least one purpose of section 12028 is to get the weapon out of the hands of someone who may be irresponsible, and that a purchase by a peace officer would accomplish that purpose. Municipal Court Judge Plotkin, who was active with petitioner in the Presiding Judges Association, testified that in his opinion the court had discretion to release a gun to the assignee of a defendant, or to return it to the defendant, or to order it destroyed, but he did not recall, during his testimony, the sections providing such discretion.

We perceive no arguable basis for thinking the petitioner's gun sale orders were authorized by section 12028. It declares the gun a nuisance and requires that the sheriff or police chief holding it either (1) sell it at public auction to a federally licensed gun dealer, unless a judge or the district attorney authorizes its retention or (2) destroy it. Section 12030 authorizes the law enforcement agency having custody of the gun to use it for official duties and requires that it be destroyed when not needed for such use. Thus, the gun is confiscated, and its only permissible dispositions are auction sale to a licensed dealer, retention for official use, or destruction. Petitioner's orders flagrantly violated these provisions in two respects: First, they authorized transfer of the gun to a private party for private use. (Though the purchasers were peace officers, no strings were attached to their use or resale of the weapon.) Second, the proceeds of the sales went to the defendants even though the statutes make clear that the gun is confiscated as a nuisance, becomes public property, and is no longer the defendant's to sell.

[12]There is no evidence that the gun transfer orders found by the commission were motivated by any particular interest on the part of petitioner in implementing payment of attorney fees. In two of the cases, the defendants were represented by the public defender, but no order for fees was made under section 987.8. In the other two cases the defendant was represented by private counsel. In one of those cases counsel signed the bill of sale as his client's agent, and in the remaining case the bill of sale was signed by the defendant's father, who owned the gun and identified himself as an "M.D."

Petitioner contends that Harty v. Superior Court, supra, 124 Cal.App.3d 745, demonstrates that the validity of the gun transfer orders was debatable, and that his making them thus constituted legal error, correctable by a higher court, rather than judicial misconduct. Harty invalidated a municipal court's order for transfer of a convicted defendant's confiscated gun from the police department that had arrested him to the marshal of the court for use in his official duties; it was held that the marshal was not among the law enforcement officers entitled to possession of a confiscated weapon under sections 12028 and 12030.[13] But even a holding that the marshal's claim in Harty was valid would far from justify the present orders authorizing defendants from whom the guns had been supposedly confiscated to receive the proceeds of a private sale for unrestricted use or resale.

Sections 12028 and 12030 would have made petitioner's approval of private sales of confiscated guns highly improper regardless of the identity or relationship of the parties to the transactions. The involvement of courtroom personnel, particularly petitioner's courtroom bailiff and close personal friend, Gordon Mangel, additionally violated petitioner's obligations under canon 2(B) of the California Code of Judicial Conduct, which specifies particular ways in which "a judge should avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety in all his activities" (title of canon 2). Canon 2(B) states: "A judge should not allow his family, social, or other relationships to influence his judicial conduct or judgment. He should not lend the prestige of his office to advance the private interests of others; nor should he convey or permit others to convey the impression that they are in a special position to influence him. . . ." By approving a series of confiscated-gun sales to, or negotiated by, his bailiff and friend, petitioner was bound to convey the impression that the bailiff had an "inside track" for obtaining the guns' release. Moreover, the bailiff's status as an arm of the court necessarily gave him an enormous bargaining advantage over the gun sellers, who were recently sentenced defendants or the father of such a defendant. (Two of those defendants had been put on probation; a third sentenced to jail; and the fourth sentenced to time already served.)

[13]Harty also held that section 1419 (fn. 11, ante), referring to "dangerous or deadly weapons," is superseded by section 12028 because the latter makes the more specific references to firearms or concealed weapons. It added: "In any event, section 1419 has no application here because the firearm in question was not 'filed as an exhibit' in the municipal court [where the defendant had pleaded guilty]." (124 Cal.App.3d at p. 748.)

The commission concluded that petitioner's approval of the gun sales was wilful misconduct. Certainly he knew or reasonably should have known that the sales themselves were illegal under sections 12028 and 12030 and that the circumstances of the sales, particularly the participation of the bailiff, created at least the appearance of impropriety under canon 2(B). As already pointed out, the touchstone of wilful misconduct is bad faith, which requires a malicious or corrupt purpose beyond mere actual or constructive knowledge of lack of power. (Spruance v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications, supra, 13 Cal.3d 778, 795-796; Geiler v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications, supra, 10 Cal.3d 270, 283-284.) While petitioner's acts of approving the gun sales constituted a grossly negligent misuse of his judicial power, we are not persuaded by clear and convincing evidence that his motives in committing those acts were malicious or corrupt. Accordingly, we conclude that the acts amounted only to conduct prejudicial.

PROPRIETY OF COMMISSION'S PUBLIC RELEASE OF ITS REPORT WHEN FILING RECORD WITH SUPREME COURT

Petitioner asserts, and the commission's brief tacitly concedes, that on filing the record of commission proceedings in this court, the commission disseminated a press release and copies of its findings, conclusions, and recommendation in this matter. (18) Petitioner contends that such dissemination (1) constituted a public admonishment even though the commission is authorized on its own to issue only private admonishments (Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (c); fn. 8, ante) and (2) violated article VI, section 18, subdivision (f) of the Constitution ("The Judicial Council shall make rules . . . providing for confidentiality of proceedings"), which was construed in Mosk v. Superior Court (1979) 25 Cal.3d 474 [159 Cal.Rptr. 494, 601 P.2d 1030], to require that commission proceedings be confidential, at least while they are under way.

A similar contention was rejected in Roberts v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 33 Cal.3d 739, 750, primarily in reliance on rule 902(a) of the California Rules of Court, which provides that subject to certain exceptions, commission proceedings "shall be confidential until a record is filed by the Commission in the Supreme Court."[14] That rule is consistent with the constitutional requirement that the Judicial Council make rules "providing for confidentiality" (art. VI, § 18, subd. (f).) Termination of the constitutional ban on public disclosure after the filing of the record in this court is demonstrated by the analysis in Mosk, where the court noted "the absence of any indication that the people of California intended to change the constitutional requirement of confidentiality by revision of article VI in 1966" (25 Cal.3d at p. 499) and examined the predecessor provisions of former article VI, section 10b (set out in fn. 14, p. 490 of 25 Cal.3d), which provided that commission proceedings shall be confidential "except that . . . the record filed by the commission in the Supreme Court . . . upon such filing loses its confidential character."

The question presented, therefore, is whether public disclosure should be restricted beyond the point—filing of the commission's record in this court—at which article VI, section 18, subdivision (f) of the Constitution and the applicable Judicial Council rules neither prohibit nor require such disclosure.

The United States Supreme Court has identified three public interests served by rules that require confidentiality in judicial disciplinary matters: (1) protecting complainants and witnesses against recrimination or retaliation, (2) protecting judges from publication of frivolous or unwarranted charges, and (3) maintaining confidence in the courts by avoiding premature disclosure of groundless claims of judicial misconduct. (Landmark Communications, Inc. v. Virginia (1979) 435 U.S. 829, 835 [56 L.Ed.2d 1, 8, 98 S.Ct. 1535].) Justice Mosk, dissenting in Roberts v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 33 Cal.3d 739, 751, urged that still another interest—protection of this court's right to decide for itself whether to administer public censure—would be protected by preventing the commission from publicizing its recommendation of censure, together with supporting findings, upon filing them with this court. Offsetting these interests in confidentiality is the policy of promoting knowledgeable discussion of governmental affairs by providing access to all relevant information in the absence of some overriding interest in confidentiality. (See, e.g., Globe Newspaper Co. v. Superior Court (1982) 457 U.S. 596, 606 [73 L.Ed.2d 248, 256-257, 102 S.Ct. 2613] ["Public scrutiny of a criminal trial enhances the quality and safeguards the integrity of the factfinding process . . . [and] permits the public to participate in and serve as a check upon the judicial process"].)

[14]The court in Roberts also relied on a statement in Mosk v. Superior Court, supra, 25 Cal.3d 474, 502, that article VI, section 18, subdivision (f) of the Constitution does not preclude the commission "from publicly announcing the results of an investigation already known to the public." There are indications in the present record and in the judges' association amicus brief filed on petitioner's behalf that the pendency of the commission proceedings was generally known, at least among Los Angeles County municipal judges.

Of these four factors favoring confidentiality, only one—maintenance of confidence in the courts—warrants even a postponement of public access to the record of commission proceedings once it is filed in this court. By that time all the evidence has been gathered, so that the identity of the witnesses and, probably, of the complainant, has been disclosed to the accused judge. Moreover, the commission has by then satisfied itself that the evidence before it warrants some form of discipline, rendering it highly unlikely that this court will deem the charges wholly unwarranted or frivolous. Protection of the judge's reputation in the event of ultimate exoneration no more necessitates confidentiality after the proceedings reach this court than does protection of the reputation of a lawyer or other professional, whose license to practice has been administratively placed in jeopardy, require confidentiality in judicial review proceedings. Finally, we do not agree that publicizing the commission's findings and recommendation upon the filing of its record here is equivalent to public censure by this court and thus "restrict[s] the options available" to us (Roberts v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 33 Cal.3d 739, 752 (dis. opn. of Mosk, J.)). If we decide that public censure is unwarranted, we have ample opportunity to provide appropriate exoneration in our explaining that conclusion.

There remains, however, the question whether the commission's publicizing of its findings and recommendation immediately upon filing the record here unnecessarily jeopardizes public confidence in the integrity of a sitting judge and thus in the judicial process. The question does not arise if the commission recommends the judge's removal or retirement. In that event, the judge is immediately "disqualified from acting as a judge" (Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (a)), and there is a public need to know the reason for that disqualification. But if the recommendation is censure, the judge continues to sit.

The fact that the commission's report to the court is couched not in terms of charges or accusations but in the form of findings of fact and conclusions of law seems apt to create an impression on the public that the findings and conclusions are established fact—an acceptance that will not be dispelled until the proceedings in this court culminate in the filing of an opinion. The intermediate steps, such as the filing of a petition challenging the findings and the presentation of oral argument, are likely to receive considerably less public attention than the act—filing of the commission's report and record—that first brings the matter to full-blown public attention.

When the commission's report and record are filed, the judge has 30 days within which to file a petition seeking rejection or modification by this court of the commission's recommendation. (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 919(b).) If the commission's report and record were to remain confidential until the filing of a petition, and the contents of the recommendation and findings released to the public simultaneously with release of the petition, there would appear far less probability of the public's accepting as final those findings that were contested in the petition. To that extent there would be more public willingness to suspend judgment concerning the contested findings during the pendency of proceedings in this court and until the filing of our opinion. Erosion of confidence in the judge that was unnecessary and improper because based on findings ultimately rejected by us would be far less likely.

(19) We think that the public interest in minimizing doubts about the judicial process arising from charges that may not be upheld warrants a postponement of the release to the public of the commission's report and of the record of its proceedings until either a petition for review by this court has been filed or the time for filing such petition has expired. The short additional period of secrecy beyond that mandated by article VI, section 18, subdivision (f) of the Constitution is well worth the offsetting public benefit.

Accordingly, we direct the clerk of this court henceforth, in any case in which the commission has recommended censure but not removal or retirement of a judge, to keep all filed and received documents and exhibits under seal, and to conceal the identity of the judge, until either the judge files a petition for review or the time for such filing has expired. We further recommend to the Judicial Council that it provide by rule (1) that the commission refrain from making its proceedings or recommendation in such a case public during a similar period and (2) that any press release or other publicity calling initial attention to the filing of the report and record make appropriate reference to the petition for review, if any, to the end that the public will perceive that the commission's recommendation and findings are wholly or partly contested by the judge. Finally, pending action by the Judicial Council on that recommendation, we urge the commission to comply with the substance of the recommendation voluntarily. We are aware of nothing in the present Rules of Court, statutes or the Constitution that prevents it from doing so.

CONCLUSION

Finally, we must decide whether to accept the commission's recommendation of public censure. It is suggested that censure in this case will deter enforcement of section 987.8. In our view, enforcement of section 987.8 according to its terms is not only proper but laudable. Petitioner's misconduct arose primarily out of his failure to observe clear guidelines laid down by the Legislature for the assessment and collection of fees for the public defender's legal services and for the disposition of guns confiscated in connection with crimes. His culpability transcends mere legal error. All of the misconduct established in the foregoing opinion constituted at least conduct prejudicial; some was committed with gross negligence; and some amounted to wilful misconduct. The commission's recommendation of public censure is clearly correct.

Accordingly, and by this order, Judge Gubler is publicly censured.

KAUS, J.—I agree wholeheartedly with the court's disposition of this case. I respectfully dissent, however from that portion of the court's opinion which seeks to regulate the period, after filing of the record in this court, during which commission proceedings recommending public censure shall remain confidential.

Justice Mosk's criticism of current procedures as expressed in Roberts was primarily based on the fact that they undermine the availability of private admonishment as a realistic option. Once the proceedings are made public, private admonishment—though deemed by us to be adequate—becomes a farce. I thought Justice Mosk was dead right on that point when I read his dissent in Roberts and I still think so. The reason why I did not join him then was threefold: (a) Article VI, section 18, subdivision (f) of the Constitution directs the Judicial Council, not us or the commission, to make rules implementing confidentiality. (b) The basic Judicial Council rule was rule 902(a), of the California Rules of Court which, in effect, provided that confidentiality ceased when the record was filed with us. (For that reason I thought Justice Mosk's criticism of the commission's press release was somewhat unfair: the exceptions to confidentiality set forth in rule 902(b) clearly relate only to releases before the filing of the record: once the record is filed, the proceedings are simply a public document as any other filed with this court.) (c) Even if we were to write the rules, I saw no practical way of "keeping the lid" on commission proceedings, short of maintaining confidentiality at least until we filed our opinion. Today's holding proves my point: assuming, as we must, the possibility of eventual vindication—or private admonishment—it seems naive to believe that the filing of a petition for review by the judge will remove the sting of what may prove to be an unjust accusation or an unjustifiably harsh recommendation for public censure. In the event of complete vindication or private admonishment, nothing but permanent confidentiality will suffice.

I continue to believe that since the Constitution has entrusted the rule-making power to the Judicial Council, we should let it rest there, at least unless we can say that its rules simply do not provide for confidentiality.

(E.g., Mosk v. Superior Court (1979) 25 Cal.3d 474, 488-499 [159 Cal.Rptr. 494, 601 P.2d 1030].) This does not mean that I do not believe that present rules cannot be improved upon. I do not, however, believe that this decision is an improvement, since it does not go far enough to accomplish its purpose.

[S.F. No. 24815. Dec. 5, 1985.]

ROBERT Z. MARDIKIAN, a Judge of the Superior Court, Petitioner, v. COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE, Respondent.

SUMMARY

A superior court judge petitioned for review of a recommendation by the Commission on Judicial Performance that he be publicly censured for conduct which the commission found to constitute "conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute." (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (c).) The basis for the commission recommendation was the prolonged, even extraordinary, delay by the judge in the decision of 14 cases which he had under submission, and his execution of salary affidavits and receipt of salary during periods in which those cases had been under submission in excess of 90 days.

The Supreme Court, subject to reservations, adopted the commission's recommendation of public censure. The court held that the resubmission orders which the judge made in 14 cases were made "without good cause," and that the judge was guilty of "conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice which brings the judicial office into disrepute," with the reservations that, while a judge can be expected to be diligent, hardworking, and even self-sacrificing when necessary, he cannot be expected on pain of official discipline to accomplish tasks which are beyond his capacity and resources. It held that when delay is the product of an overburdened and underfunded court the trial judges must not be forced to assume responsibility for a situation which is not of their making or within their control. However, the court held the record did not contain evidence that the judge gave any consideration to the interests of those litigants whose cases had been under submission for the longest periods, or that he made any effort to establish a schedule of priorities that would give precedence to the submitted cases over cases tried subsequent to the original submission of those long delayed cases. It also held that, although physical and emotional difficulties the judge experienced during a portion of the period in question merited sympathy and could serve in mitigation of the sanction, they could not be accepted as justification per se. (Opinion by The Court. Separate dissenting opinion by Kaus, J.,* with Reynoso, J., concurring.)

HEADNOTES

Classified to California Digest of Official Reports, 3d Series

(1) Judges § 6.4—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Proceedings—Review.—On review of a disciplinary recommendation of the Commission on Judicial Performance, the Supreme Court makes an independent evaluation of the evidence taken in proceedings before the commission to determine whether the commission findings are supported by clear and convincing evidence, after which the court must determine whether the conduct that is the subject of the proceeding constitutes a basis for a censure or removal, and, if so, the appropriate action.

(2) Judges § 6.2—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Grounds—Delay and Submission—What Constitutes Submission.—Under rules requiring trial judges to decide cases within 90 days after submission, in a nonjury matter a case is submitted for a decision by the judge when all the evidence has been received and all briefs or memoranda authorized to be filed after trial have been received.

(3a-3c) Judges § 6.2—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Grounds—Delay in Decision After Submission.—A trial judge was guilty of "conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice which brings the judicial office into disrepute," (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (c)), and public censure was the appropriate sanction, based on findings of prolonged, even extraordinary, delay by the judge in the decision of 14 cases which he had under submission in excess of 90 days (Gov. Code, § 68210), and the making of resubmission orders without good cause. Even though the delays were partly the product of an overburdened and underfunded court, a trial judge confronted with a workload which prevents him from deciding all cases promptly can at least minimize the impact of delay by assigning priorities, but the judge failed to do so. Although physical and emotional difficulties the judge experienced during a portion of the period in question merited sympathy and might serve in mitigation, they could not be accepted as justification per se.

*Retired Associate Justice of the Supreme Court sitting under assignment by the Chairperson of the Judicial Council.

[See Cal.Jur.3d, Judges, § 62; Am.Jur.2d, Judges, § 19.]

(4a, 4b) Judges § 6.2—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Grounds—Delay in Deciding Cases.—When, with proper application, a judge would be able to decide matters pending before him within 90 days of their submission for a decision (Gov. Code, § 68210), but does not do so, the failure to perform is a basis for a censure or removal under Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (c), as a persistent failure to perform judicial duties even if the failure is not an intentional disregard of duties. Censure under the "conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice" standard is not appropriate, however, for delays that are neither "persistent" nor avoidable. While delay in deciding cases may well cause criticism and bring the judicial office into disrepute, when that delay is the product of an overburdened and underfunded court the trial judges must not be forced to assume responsibility for a situation which is not of their making or within their control. To the extent that an intolerably burdensome workload makes prompt decision impossible even for the most conscientious judge, the answer to the problem must lie elsewhere than in judicial discipline.

(5) Judges § 6.2—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Grounds—Prejudicial Conduct.—Conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice is an appropriate basis for a censure under Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (c), as a lesser charge when the conduct is not wilful misconduct, but is undertaken in good faith, if the conduct would appear to an objective observer to be unjudicial and prejudicial to the public esteem. Regardless of the appearance to the public, however, this constitutional authority may not be appropriately be invoked as an alternative to a charge of persistent failure or inability to perform, and asserted as a basis for a censure, when the failure to perform is due to causes beyond the control of the judge, such as temporary disability or an unmanageable caseload.

(6) Judges § 6.4—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Proceedings—Burden of Proof.—On review of a proceeding to discipline a judge, the examiners bear the burden of proving by clear and convincing evidence sufficient to sustain the charge to a reasonable certainty the commission of conduct warranting censure or removal of the judge from office; the accused, however, has the burden of coming forth with evidence to explain or justify the conduct if he claims that it does not warrant discipline.

COUNSEL

Miles, Sears & Eanni, Carmen A. Eanni and William J. Seiler for Petitioner.

John K. Van de Kamp, Attorney General, Eddie T. Keller and Gary A. Binkerd, Deputy Attorneys General, for Respondent.

OPINION

THE COURT.—Judge Robert Z. Mardikian of the Fresno County Superior Court has petitioned for review of a recommendation by the Commission on Judicial Performance (Commission) that he be publicly censured for conduct which the Commission has found to constitute "conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute." (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (c) [hereafter section 18(c)];[1] Cal. Rules of Court, rule 919(b).) The bases for the Commission recommendation are the prolonged, even extraordinary, delay by petitioner in the decision of 14 cases which he had under submission, and his execution of salary affidavits and receipt of salary during periods in which these cases had been under submission in excess of 90 days.

(1) In this review the court makes an independent evaluation of the evidence taken in proceedings before the Commission to determine whether the Commission findings are supported by clear and convincing evidence, after which we must determine whether the conduct that is the subject of the proceeding constitutes a basis for censure or removal, and, if so, the

*Before Grodin, Acting C. J., Mosk, J., Reynoso, J., Lucas, J., Kaus, J.,† Woods, J.,‡ and Lillie, J.‡

[1]Section 18(c) provides: "On recommendation of the Commission on Judicial Performance the Supreme Court may (1) retire a judge for disability that seriously interferes with the performance of the judge's duties and is or is likely to become permanent, and (2) censure or remove a judge for action occurring not more than 6 years prior to the commencement of the judge's current term that constitutes wilful misconduct in office, persistent failure or inability to perform the judge's duties, habitual intemperance in the use of intoxicants or drugs, or conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute. The commission may privately admonish a judge found to have engaged in an improper action or a dereliction of duty, subject to review in the Supreme Court in the manner provided for review of causes decided by a court of appeal."

†Retired Associate Justice of the Supreme Court sitting under assignment by the Chairperson of the Judicial Council.

‡Assigned by the Acting Chairperson of the Judicial Council.

appropriate action. (Gubler v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1984) 37 Cal.3d 27, 35 [207 Cal.Rptr. 171, 688 P.2d 551]; Spruance v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1975) 13 Cal.3d 778, 784, fn. 5 [119 Cal.Rptr. 841, 532 P.2d 1209]; Geiler v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1973) 10 Cal.3d 270, 275-276 [110 Cal.Rptr. 201, 515 P.2d 1].)

I.

As to the facts underlying the Commission's recommendation there is little dispute. The Commission adopted, with minor modifications, the report of the Special Masters appointed by this court pursuant to California Rules of Court, rule 907. (2) (See fn. 2.) After a hearing which commenced on August 6, 1984, and concluded on August 13, 1984, the masters found that between December 1980 and November 1983 Judge Mardikian had failed to decide 14 cases within 90 days of their submission,[2] and that 7 of these cases had remained undecided for periods in excess of the statutory[3] and constitutional[4] time notwithstanding prior investigation by

[2]Although rule 22.5 defines submission of a cause pending in a Court of Appeal, no comparable rule has been adopted for trial courts. Rule 22.5 provides: "(a) A cause pending in a Court of Appeal is submitted when the court has heard oral argument, or has approved a waiver of oral argument, and the time has passed for filing all briefs and papers, including any supplementary brief permitted by the court. [¶] (b) Submission may be vacated only by an order stating the reasons therefor. The order shall provide for resubmission of the cause."

It is generally understood, however, that in a nonjury matter a case is submitted for decision by the judge when all of the evidence has been received and all briefs or memoranda authorized to be filed after trial have been received. (See Code Civ. Proc., §§ 632, 669; Leavitt v. Gibson (1935) 3 Cal.2d 90 [43 P.2d 1091]; Estate of Pillsbury (1917) 175 Cal. 454 [166 P. 11, 3 A.L.R. 1396].) Petitioner and the Commission appear to share this understanding of the meaning of the term.

[3]Government Code section 68210: "No judge of a court of record shall receive his salary unless he shall make and subscribe before an officer entitled to administer oaths, an affidavit stating that no cause before him remains pending and undetermined for 90 days after it has been submitted for decision."

[4]California Constitution, article VI, section 19: "The Legislature shall prescribe compensation for judges of courts of record. [¶] A judge of a court of record may not receive the salary for the judicial office held by the judge while any cause before the judge remains pending and undetermined for 90 days after it has been submitted for decision."

Petitioner observes that neither this constitutional provision nor Government Code section 68210 mandates that cases be decided within 90 days of their submission. Nonetheless, the 90-day provision which has been a part of the Constitution since its adoption in 1879, and section 68210 which replaced the affidavit requirement formerly in the Constitution (art. VI, former § 24) and became operative on November 9, 1966, with the passage of Assembly Constitutional Amendment No. 13, 1966 First Extraordinary Session, at the November 8, 1966, General Election, reflect the judgment of the Legislature and the electorate that this period affords a reasonable time within which to expect a trial judge to carry out the basic responsibility of a judge to decide cases. (See now Code Civ. Proc., § 170.)

and communication from the Commission regarding the delays in deciding the first 7 of the 14 cases under investigation.[5]

During the period in which the cases submitted to him for decision remained undecided in excess of 90 days Judge Mardikian made orders "resubmitting" some or all of the 14 cases[6] executed salary affidavits in conformity with the requirement of Government Code section 68210 attesting to the fact that no causes pending before him had remained undecided for 90 days, and received his judicial salary.

There is a background to these cold statistics which is also reflected in the Commission's report. As noted above, the period of decisional delay which is the subject of the Commission's inquiry began in December 1980. The record establishes that during the period in question petitioner suffered from health and family problems. His marriage of 23 years ended in a sometimes acrimonious dissolution proceeding commenced in 1981. He suffered severe depression and emotional upset during those events. At the time of the hearings he was grossly overweight, and had experienced difficulty in breathing, fatigue, and inability to work efficiently. It was discovered during this time that he suffered from diabetes and cardiomyopathy. Medical treatment, weight reduction, and the implantation of a pacemaker have since assisted petitioner in regaining some of his former vigor and productivity. His personal life has stabilized and he has remarried.

Moreover, apart from the delays which are the focus of the present proceeding, the record shows petitioner to be a hard-working and diligent judge

[5]The 14 cases, identified here by number and initials only, and the relevant dates on which action was taken, are:

| CASE | DATE OF SUBMISSION | DATE OF DECISION | TOTAL DAYS |
|---|---|---|---|
| No. 1 L v. L | 12/15/80 | 2/18/82 | 430 |
| No. 2 G v. G | 1/30/81 | 2/9/82 | 375 |
| No. 3 H v. F | 3/24/81 | 3/2/82 | 343 |
| No. 4 J v. R | 7/10/81 | 2/10/82 | 215 |
| No. 5 P v. J | 7/30/81 | 6/23/82 | 328 |
| No. 6 B v. B | 8/17/81 | 2/12/82 | 179 |
| No. 7 S v. C | 9/15/81 | 4/13/82 | 210 |
| No. 8 G v. G | 9/17/82 | 11/5/83 | 414 |
| No. 9 F v. F | 9/22/82 | 10/5/83 | 378 |
| No. 10 G v. B | 2/9/83 | 11/10/83 | 274 |
| No. 11 P v. A | 2/18/83 | 10/14/83 | 238 |
| No. 12 O v. O | 3/16/83 | 10/7/83 | 205 |
| No. 13 K v. K | 4/22/83 | 10/12/83 | 173 |
| No. 14 I v. I | 6/24/83 | 11/2/83 | 131 |

[6]Although some of the resubmission orders could not be located in relevant files, on the court's computer, or on its microfilmed records, the masters assumed that the orders had been made as testified to by petitioner and his clerk.

in an over-burdened court. Appointed to the municipal court in June 1974, and elevated to the superior court in July 1977, he has sat as presiding judge of the criminal department, and since July 1, 1983, has served as presiding judge of the 14-judge Fresno County Superior Court. It is uncontradicted that he frequently worked nights and weekends, and between January 1981 and the end of 1983 took only 34 days of vacation, devoting the balance of his vacation time to work on submitted cases. Some of the flavor of the situation which he confronted was presented in the following testimony before the Commission.

Judge Frank J. Creede, Jr., who had been presiding judge of the Fresno County Superior Court from July 1, 1982, to June 30, 1983, was called as a witness by the examiners. He testified on cross-examination that during his tenure as presiding judge both the civil and criminal calendars of the court were heavily impacted. A 13th department of the court had been authorized, but was not filled until December 1982. During that year trials in three or four capital cases were held. Judges assigned to civil matters had to be reassigned to criminal cases in which defendants had asserted their statutory and constitutional rights to speedy trial. Pro tem. judges were obtained and judges were assigned from other counties. Fresno County then had the highest volume of criminal cases per judge in the state, and ranked number one in the state in number of jury trials. The 250 jury trials during the 1982-1983 fiscal year averaged 16.7 per judicial position, an average which included judges who were not actually presiding over jury trials, including juvenile court judges and referees, family law judges, and the presiding judge and criminal master calendar judge.

During the 1982-1983 fiscal year petitioner served as assistant presiding judge, and, in the words of Judge Creede, tried one case after another. New criminal trials were assigned and commenced as soon as the prior matter went to the jury. In addition to this workload petitioner assumed the duties of the presiding judge if Judge Creede was not available. Petitioner was among the judges disqualified the least often by litigants pursuant to section 170.6 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

During this same period the support staff for the judges of the Fresno County Superior Court was woefully inadequate. The thirteen judges were assisted by four staff attorneys and four secretaries. Judge Creede also testified that during his year as presiding judge he was very reluctant to give any judge chambers time because of the heavy trial calendar. Although he had no specific recollection he "wouldn't doubt that" he had on one occasion when he found petitioner in chambers working on cases during vacation assigned cases to him during vacation.

Judge Hollis G. Best of the Fresno County Superior Court had been presiding judge from July 1, 1979, through June 30, 1980. During that time petitioner had acted as presiding judge of the criminal courts. In the opinion of Judge Best petitioner had served extremely well in that position.

The executive officer and jury commissioner of the Fresno County Superior Court, Julian Johnson, retired from that position at the end of July 1982. One of his reasons for retiring was his belief that the workload of the superior court judges was unconscionable. In the year and one-half prior to his retirement one judge had died and another retired after suffering a heart attack.[7] The court had more criminal cases than it could handle and tried to get some civil cases out. On one occasion Johnson suggested to petitioner that he take vacation and then come in to work on his backlog of cases. This was suggested because as long as a judge was present he was considered to be available for purposes of trial assignments, and there were always cases that had to be tried. Petitioner was having a problem resolving his cases "just because he didn't have the time." He did request chambers time through Johnson, who relayed the request to the presiding judge, but the presiding judge was having "serious problems of his own," so Johnson suggested that petitioner take vacation in order to have time to work on his cases.

Petitioner's clerk testified that she knew, from her own knowledge, that petitioner worked on cases under submission whenever he had time at court, took files home to work on them, and was at the court working on his submitted cases on weekends, during the week when she left at 5 p.m., and while he was on vacation.

Justice Charles Hamlin, who at the time of the hearing had become an associate justice of the Fifth District Court of Appeal, had been a judge of the Fresno County Superior Court until late December 1982. As such he had been presiding judge of the latter court from July 1, 1981, through June 30, 1982. He recalled that counsel for the parties in two of the submitted cases had contacted him regarding the lengthy submissions. At that time

[7]Judge Wilbur Kessler, who had served on the Fresno County Superior Court until retiring after suffering a heart attack in September 1981, corroborated this view of the workload of the superior court judges in that county. He, himself, had no time to work on submitted cases during his normal working hours which were from 7:30 a.m. to 6 p.m. He often observed petitioner already at work when he arrived at 7 a.m. and still at work when he left at 6 p.m. He also confirmed the practice of assigning jury trials back to back with a new one assigned as soon as the jury went out on one just completed. At the time he suffered a heart attack he, too, had been working holidays and weekends to prepare decisions in submitted cases in which there had been court trials. He was forced by his illness to order some of these cases resubmitted.

petitioner was assistant presiding judge and was taking a regular calendar assignment. Petitioner rarely attended the monthly judges meeting because he was on the criminal court which, according to Justice Hamlin, was a "nightmare." Petitioner could not get away to attend. When Justice Hamlin received a copy of the initial inquiry from the Commission he discussed the matter with petitioner to find out "how bad a position he was in so I could know how much time I was going to have to take him off the regular trial assignment. There was nothing else to do . . . . Unless it meant letting a criminal case go beyond the time limit, I was going to give him some time. I knew he hadn't had any and so I was going to give him some one way or another." It was agreed at that time that petitioner would be given two weeks off the regular trial assignment, if no criminal case had to be assigned out for trial. However, Justice Hamlin testified "[e]ven though I declared my intention to give him two weeks, I had to interrupt him" because of the criminal calendar. Justice Hamlin appeared before the county board of supervisors three times during this period to ask for more help and "really couldn't emphasize enough that I felt we were in real trouble, that our judges were working harder than just anybody could be asked to work."

Justice Robert Martin of the Fifth District Court of Appeal had been a judge of the Fresno County Superior Court until December 27, 1982. He had served as presiding judge of the superior court from July 1, 1980, through June 30, 1981. During that time there was little, if any, time that could be given to judges of that court to work on their caseload in chambers. Petitioner used his lunch hour for medical appointments. Justice Martin suggested that since this was the only time petitioner could have any rest or relief from his trial schedule, he should instead recess early. On one or two occasions while he was presiding judge Justice Martin had found some chambers time for petitioner, but not as much time as Justice Martin knew petitioner needed. He made "the best possible effort every time I had such a request. But it usually was very difficult because of the trial calendar. In Fresno the practice was to keep every judge in trial five days a week as much as possible."

II.

On the basis of this record the Commission made certain factual findings that are not in dispute: that delays occurred in the decision of 14 cases as detailed above, and that the resubmission orders were made "without request by or consent of the parties or their counsel involved." The Commission rejected proposed findings that the delays were the product of "an intentional disregard of and refusal of and refusal to perform judicial duties"; that many of the salary affidavits which petitioner executed were

"false and knowingly believed to be false"; and that petitioner "deliberately and intentionally attempted to evade constitutional and statutory requirements by resubmitting undecided cases." The Commission concluded, in part, that petitioner was not guilty of "persistent failure or inability to perform his judicial duties," nor was he guilty of "willful misconduct in office." Naturally, petitioner does not challenge these favorable findings and conclusions.

(3a) The focus of our present inquiry is upon the Commission's further finding that the resubmission orders which petitioner made in the 14 cases were made "without good cause," and its conclusion overall that petitioner was guilty of "conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice which brings the judicial office into disrepute." Viewing the totality of petitioner's conduct in the context in which it occurred we are constrained, with reservations, to agree.

Our reservations stem from the obvious proposition that while a judge can be expected to be diligent, hardworking, and even self-sacrificing when necessary, he cannot be expected upon pain of official discipline to accomplish tasks which are beyond his capacity and resources. (4a) When, with "proper application," a judge would be able to decide matters pending before him within 90 days of their submission for decision, but does not do so, the failure to perform is a basis for censure or removal under section 18(c), as a persistent failure to perform judicial duties even if the failure is not an intentional disregard of duties. (In re Jensen (1978) 24 Cal.3d 72, 73 [154 Cal.Rptr. 503, 593 P.2d 200].) Censure under the "conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice" clause of subdivision (c) is not appropriate, however, for delays that are neither "persistent" nor avoidable. It would be manifestly unreasonable, and outside the contemplation of article VI, section 18, to censure or remove a competent judge whose workload and/or temporary disability made prompt decision of all matters submitted to him impossible. (5) (See fn. 8.), (4b) While delay in deciding cases may well cause criticism and bring the judicial office into disrepute, when that delay is the product of an overburdened and underfunded court the trial judges who are the backbone of the judicial system must not be forced to assume responsibility for a situation which is not of their making or within their control.[8] To the extent that an intolerably burdensome work-

[8]Conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice office is an appropriate basis for censure under section 18(c), as a lesser charge when the conduct is not wilful misconduct because undertaken in good faith, if the conduct would appear to an objective observer to be unjudicial and prejudicial to public esteem. (Geiler v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications, supra, 10 Cal.3d 270, 283-284.) Regardless of the appearance to the public, however, this constitutional authority may not appropriately be invoked as an alternative to a load makes prompt decision impossible even for the most conscientious judge, the answer to the problem must lie elsewhere than in judicial discipline.

(3b) In this case, however, there are factors present which support the Commission's conclusion. A trial judge confronted with a workload which prevents him from deciding all cases promptly can at least minimize the impact of delay so far as possible, by assigning priorities which take into account the time necessary to decide, and the effect of delay upon the parties in, particular matters. This petitioner apparently did not do. As the Special Masters observed in their report to the Commission, eight of the fourteen cases in which decision was delayed involved the dissolution of a marriage with attendant questions, such as child custody, particularly demanding of prompt resolution.[9]

The evidence also supports a conclusion that many of the cases were not complex and might have been decided with relative ease and little expenditure of time shortly after submission.[10] (6) The examiners bear the burcharge of persistent failure or inability to perform, and asserted as a basis for censure, when the failure to perform is due to causes beyond the control of the judge such as temporary disability or an unmanageable caseload.

[9]The record contains evidence that some of the litigants suffered prejudice from the delay. The evidence does not establish that petitioner was aware of any specific prejudice, although had his decision in case No. 11 been to order specific performance of the agreement in issue, the habeas corpus petitioner might have been released from custody. Delay in resolution of the dissolution proceedings necessarily prejudices the parties who are unable to remarry, utilize assets, or establish stable homes for the children of the marriage.

[10]I.e., case No. 12, O v. O, is described as a dissolution matter in which a single issue remained after stipulation by the parties. It was tried as a short cause matter in 3 hours, but was not decided for 205 days after submission. The issue to be decided involved joint custody of a child. Other cases among the 14 were described by counsel for the parties as involving many complex issues.

Counsel for one of the parties in case No. 8, G v. G, a dissolution matter, had been in practice for 18 years. At the time that matter was submitted about 25 percent of his practice involved family law matters. Of the approximately 500 dissolution matters he had handled, he considered G v. G to be among the most difficult 25 to 50 cases. In addition to the legal issues it presented problems of tracing assets. Although there was a two-day trial, written argument was submitted over a subsequent five-month period after which it was taken under submission. In this case, therefore, not only were there complex issues, but additional matters had been assigned which would have to be deferred at the time petitioner again took up G v. G for study and disposition. Counsel brought the delay in decision to the attention of the presiding judge, "[b]ut I felt that Judge Mardikian was under an unholy case load. I was under the impression because I'd had occasion to know what the calendar was like around the court that since he's one of the persons who's able to try difficult cases and willing to and so forth, that it had all come down that he kept getting one trial after another after another. So that it was very hard for him to turn his attention to any reflective activity for long enough to get out decisions on them."

Counsel for one of the parties in case No. 9, another dissolution proceeding, described the case as the most complex he had handled, involving apparent fraud in the depletion of den of proving by "clear and convincing evidence sufficient to sustain [the] charge to a reasonable certainty" the commission of conduct warranting censure or removal of a judge from office. (Geiler v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications, supra, 10 Cal.3d 270, 275.) The accused, however, has the burden of coming forth with evidence to explain or justify the conduct if he claims that it does not warrant discipline. (Cal. Rules for Censure, etc. of Judges, rule 908(b).) (3c) Yet, the record does not contain evidence that petitioner gave any consideration to the interests of those litigants whose cases had been under submission for the longest periods, or that he made any effort to establish a schedule of priorities that would give precedence to resubmitted cases over cases tried subsequent to the original submission of those long delayed cases. There is simply no explanation why these cases were not decided before other cases that were tried in the 18-month period during which the resubmissions occurred.

Under these circumstances, petitioner's practice of routinely resubmitting matters which have been long delayed cannot be condoned. We assume, as does the Commission in its findings, that there may be extraordinary circumstances which will justify resubmission of particular cases that have been pending for longer than 90 days.[11] To permit routine utilization of assets of a business after the parties had separated, valuation of the business, disputes over the characterization of assets as separate or community, and disagreement exacerbated by deeply held religious beliefs as to the custody of the children. Among the exhibits submitted for review by petitioner were the books of the business. The statement of decision when issued addressed all issues other than a right to the reimbursement question, and in the view of counsel was a well thought-out decision in light of all the evidence.

Case No. 11, P v. A, was a criminal habeas corpus matter in which the prisoner petitioner sought specific enforcement of an agreement under which he was to be permitted to plead guilty as an accessory, rather than being prosecuted for murder with special circumstances. Exhibits in that case included two or three volumes of reporter's transcripts, each of which was several hundred pages in length. The legal issue was novel and complicated in the view of the deputy district attorney who represented the People in that matter.

[11]In the case of the Court of Appeal, rule 22.5(b) provides that a submission may be vacated and resubmitted by an order "stating the reasons therefor." No comparable rule exists for trial courts. There is a difference, obviously, between the collegial context of an appellate tribunal, in which the concurrence of more than one justice is required for the decision of a cause, and a trial court in which the decisional process is normally within the control of an individual judge. Nonetheless, the Commission concedes, and we agree, that a superior court has inherent power to order vacation of submission given a proper demonstration of cause.

The Commission suggests that proper cause would exist if the parties stipulate to vacation of the order, on the basis of a change of circumstances, or if there exist "extraordinary circumstances" such as sudden illness which prevents the judge from attending to his duties for a protracted period of time, and where reassignment of the matter would cause a delay of equal or greater length. It would be unwise, we think, for this court to attempt an exhaustive definition of good cause absent preliminary guidance from the Judicial Council. Conformity with rule 22.5 by trial court judges in the interim, by stating the reasons for any order vacating and resubmitting a cause, with notice of the order to the parties, should avoid the abuse which the Commission seeks to prevent.

resubmission orders, however, would make a mockery of the constitutional mandate.

Finally, the physical and emotional difficulties that petitioner experienced during a portion of the period in question, while they certainly merit sympathy and may serve in mitigation of the sanction, cannot be accepted as justification per se. A judge who is disabled from performing his duties in timely fashion has an obligation to seek relief, even to the extent of withdrawing temporarily or permanently from the functions of his office if the circumstances require it. His conduct as a judge must be evaluated on the basis of objective criteria applicable to all judges similarly situated within the system.

We conclude, therefore, that the extraordinary delay in the decision of these submitted cases, and petitioner's practice of routinely ordering these cases resubmitted beyond the 90-day period, warrants censure as being "prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute."

III.

Finally, we consider the propriety of the sanction which the Commission imposed. Public censure was adopted as the Commission recommendation by a five-member majority of the eight-person panel, with the minority favoring private admonishment. The protracted delay in the decision of the cases under review here persuades us that public censure is proper in this case. Subject to the reservations we have expressed, we adopt the Commission's recommendation. This opinion will serve as the appropriate sanction.

KAUS, J.—I respectfully dissent. Petitioner is being made the scapegoat for the twin plagues of judicial overload and backlog—evils that were apparently well entrenched when Shakespeare had Hamlet deplore "the law's delay."

The situation which prevailed in Fresno at the relevant times is dramatically described by the majority. Its opinion also recognizes that it would be unreasonable to discipline a competent judge whose workload or temporary disability made prompt decision of all matters submitted to him impossible. It further notes, correctly, that while delay may well bring the judicial office into disrepute, individual judges must not be held responsible "when that delay is the product of an overburdened and underfunded court." Finally—with one possible caveat—the majority goes out of its way to note that petitioner worked as hard as he could, which, it seems, was a good deal harder than the public had a right to expect of even the most conscientious public servant.

*Retired Associate Justice of the Supreme Court sitting under assignment by the Chairperson of the Judicial Council.

Why then is petitioner being disciplined?[1]

The majority chides petitioner for not assigning priorities to the submitted cases—a practice which, it surmises, would have minimized the impact of delay. Having apparently reviewed all 14 cases, the majority is able to cite only one—No. 12, O. v. O.—as a simple case which a system of priorities would have promoted to the head of the line. The fact is that O. v. O. was third from last to be submitted and was decided ahead of three cases which had been submitted earlier. (See majority opn., fn. 4.) Apparently it was considered on a priority basis.[2] Nowhere is there any suggestion that all 14 cases would have been disposed of sooner had petitioner used a different set of priorities.

The only other criticism voiced by the majority is that petitioner, in spite of physical and emotional difficulties, did not seek relief, "even to the extent of withdrawing temporarily or permanently from the functions of his office." (Ante, p. 485.) Applied to this case, it is difficult to take this reprimand seriously. The record fairly reeks with petitioner's efforts to seek relief. As far as "withdrawing" from the functions of his office is concerned, there is nothing in the record to suggest that such drastic action would have done anything for the 14 cases under consideration except to cause further delay. In any event, is a judge who does the best he can under trying personal conditions to be disciplined for not choosing the perfect moment to grant himself a leave of absence or to retire?

As the majority recognizes, unlike justices of the Court of Appeal who can look to rule 22.5 of the California Rules of Court for guidance in [1]I am particularly shocked that the majority has opted for public censure rather than private admonishment. I realize that in spite of the procedures adopted by us in Gubler v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1985) 37 Cal.3d 27, 62 [207 Cal.Rptr. 171, 688 P.2d 551], private admonishment is private in name only. Nevertheless, its imposition obviously implies a lesser degree of culpability than public censure.

[2]In criticizing petitioner for not giving "precedence to resubmitted cases over cases tried subsequent to the original submission" of the older cases (ante, p. 484), the majority loses sight of the fact that petitioner did request "chambers time" to work on the earlier submitted cases, but that because of the court's criminal caseload deadlines the presiding judge was not able to afford petitioner the time that was needed but instead assigned him to hear more current cases.

applying the "90 day rule," trial court judges currently have no rule to consult in determining how to deal with the problems resulting from an understaffed bench and an overcrowded docket. Although the adoption of an explicit schedule of priorities—which the majority suggests—may well be a sensible approach, before today's decision no authority made it clear that the failure to establish such a schedule would itself be grounds for discipline. Trial judges—no less than other mortals—need to know what rules apply and should not be disciplined for failing to follow rules before they are promulgated.

I dissent.

Reynoso, J., concurred.

C42 Cal.3d 1098
729 P.2d 79, 233 Cal.Rptr. 1
(Cite as: 42 Cal.3d 1098)

In re FRANK J. CREEDE, JR., a Judge of the Superior Court, on Censure

S.F. No. 24985.

Supreme Court of California.

Oct 3, 1986.

SUMMARY

The Commission on Judicial Performance recommended public censure of a judge for "conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute." (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (c)(2).) The judge did not request review of the recommendation.

While noting that the judge was diligent, hard working and highly respected, the Supreme Court held clear and convincing evidence supported the conclusion that he violated Cal. Code Jud. Conduct, canon 3A(5), requiring a judge to dispose promptly of the business of the court, by repeatedly and unjustifiably delaying filing decisions in cases submitted to his court during a five-year period. Even though there was no credible evidence of actual prejudice from the delays, which were partially attributable to an excessive work load and inadequate support staff, the court noted the judge could have taken steps to monitor his cases and to dispose more promptly of submitted matters, and held the protracted delays served to damage the esteem of the public for the judiciary, which conduct was "... prejudicial to the administration of justice...." The court also held the judge foreclosed, as a practical matter, the sanction of a private admonishment by waiving the confidentiality provisions. (Opinion by The Court.)

HEADNOTES

Classified to California Digest of Official Reports

(1) Judges § 6--Censure--Grounds--Delay in Filing Decisions.
A diligent, hard working and highly respected judge was nevertheless subject to censure for "conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute" (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (c)(2)) for his repeated and unjustifiable delays in filing decisions in cases submitted to his court during a five-year period, in 1099 violation of Cal. Code Jud. Conduct, canon 3A(5), since the protracted delays served to damage the esteem of the public for the judiciary, even though there was no credible evidence of actual prejudice from the delays, which were partially attributable to an excessive work load and inadequate support staff. The judge could have taken steps to monitor his cases and to dispose more promptly of submitted matters.

[See Cal.Jur.3d, Judges, § 62; Am.Jur.2d, Judges, § 18.]

COUNSEL

No counsel listed for this case.

THE COURT. [FN*]

FN* Bird, C. J., did not participate.

The Commission on Judicial Performance has recommended that we publicly censure Frank J. Creede, Jr., a Judge of the Superior Court of Fresno County, for "conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute." (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (c)(2).) He has not requested review of the recommendation. Under California Rules of Court, rule 919(c), that failure "may be deemed a consent to a determination on the merits based upon the record filed by the Commission."

(1) The record reveals that Judge Creede is a diligent, hardworking and highly respected judge. Nonetheless, clear and convincing evidence supports the conclusion that he violated canon 3A(5) of the California Code of Judicial Conduct, which states that "A judge should dispose promptly of the business of the court." During a five-year period, between March 1979 and April 1985, Judge Creede repeatedly and unjustifiably delayed filing decisions in cases submitted to his court. During this time, he continued to execute erroneous salary affidavits and to collect his salary even though submitted cases remained pending and undecided in his court for periods in excess of 90 days. (See Cal. Const., art. VI, § 19; Gov. Code, § 68210; Mardikian v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1985) 40 Cal.3d 473 [220 Cal.Rptr. 833, 709 P.2d 852].) He did not, however, knowingly falsify the salary affidavits, and did not intentionally or maliciously disregard his adjudicative responsibilities. There was no credible evidence of actual prejudice from the delays, which were partially attributable to an excessive workload and inadequate support staff. Yet he could have taken steps to monitor his cases and to dispose more promptly of submitted matters. Since the protracted delays served to damage the esteem of the public for the judiciary, his conduct was "... prejudicial to the administration of justice ...." 1100

While some members of this court would prefer a private admonishment, Judge Creede has foreclosed this sanction as a practical matter by waiving the confidentiality provisions. After reviewing the record, we are satisfied that the conclusion of the commission is justified, and that its recommendation should be adopted. This order will serve as the appropriate sanction. 1101

Cal.,1986.

In re Creede

END OF DOCUMENT

[No. S007641. July 31, 1989.]

BERNARD P. McCULLOUGH, Petitioner, v.
COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE, Respondent.

SUMMARY

The Supreme Court ordered that a justice court judge be removed from office based on findings that he had committed four acts of willful misconduct and one act of persistent failure to perform his judicial duties. There was substantial evidence that the judge had directed a guilty verdict against one criminal defendant, and had conducted a trial of two other defendants in one defendant's absence and in the absence of their attorneys. He had also used his office to benefit a personal friend by improperly dismissing a criminal charge against the friend. He had also failed to sign a judgment form for over six years after the motion for the judgment had been granted, and even after he had been publicly censured by the Supreme Court for such failure. (Opinion by The Court.)

HEADNOTES

Classified to California Digest of Official Reports, 3d Series

(1) Judges § 6.4—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Proceedings—Review.—When disciplining a member of the judiciary, the Supreme Court undertakes an independent evaluation of the record in order to determine whether clear and convincing evidence supports the recommendation of the Commission on Judicial Performance. In so doing the court gives special weight both to the factual findings of the special masters, because of their ability to evaluate the credibility of the witnesses at the hearing, and to the conclusion of the commission, because of its expertise in matters of judicial conduct.

(2) Judges § 6.2—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Grounds.—A judge may be censured or removed for engaging in willful misconduct in office, persistent failure or inability to perform his duties, habitual intemperance in the use of intoxicants or drugs, or conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (c)). Willful misconduct, the most serious charge, occurs when a judge commits acts which he knows, or should know, are beyond his authority for reasons other than the faithful discharge of his duties. Though a judge must act in bad faith in order to commit willful misconduct, he need not necessarily seek to harm a particular litigant or attorney; disregard for the legal system in general will suffice. Unlike willful misconduct, the charge of prejudicial conduct does not require the presence of bad faith. It occurs when a judge, though acting in good faith, engages in conduct which adversely affects public opinion of the judiciary. Though "less grave" than willful misconduct, prejudicial misconduct may nevertheless, by itself, justify removal. Persistent failure, also an independent ground for removal, focuses on a judge's legal and administrative competence and omissions.

[See Cal.Jur.3d, Judges, § 62; Am.Jur.2d, Judges, § 19.]

(3) Judges § 6.2—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Grounds—Willful Misconduct—Directing Guilty Verdict.—A justice court judge who directed a jury to find guilty a defendant charged with a Vehicle Code violation was guilty of willful misconduct and abridgement of defendant's right to trial by an impartial jury. The judge clearly should have known that attempting to direct a jury to return a guilty verdict in a criminal action was beyond his judicial authority. The fact that the conviction was reversed on appeal did not justify or excuse the judge's action, which deprived defendant of his fundamental right to be tried by a jury and manifested disrespect for the constitutional protections of the legal system.

(4) Judges § 6.2—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Grounds—Willful Misconduct—Using Power to Benefit Friend.—It was willful misconduct for a justice court judge to use his judicial office to advance the private interests of a personal friend by continuing the friend's criminal case for over two years and then dismissing it without explanation, in violation of Pen. Code, § 1385, subd. (a). In addition, the judge failed to disqualify and recuse himself from the case. It was not a defense that the judge was waiting for some action by the district attorney's office and the action was dismissed because the office never took any action, since the responsibility for the arraignment rested with the judge, as the presiding judge, not with the district attorney's office. Using the power of the bench to benefit a friend is a casebook example of willful misconduct and the judge should have known that failing to arraign the friend, continuing the case several times, and then dismissing it was improper. The evidence supported the conclusion that the judge's reason for taking those actions was not the faithful discharge of his judicial duties.

(5) Judges § 6.2—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Grounds—Willful Misconduct—Ordering Trial in Absence of Defendant and Attorney.—A justice court judge who violated two criminal defendants' right to representation by ordering their trials to proceed despite the absence of their attorneys was guilty of willful misconduct as to each case. Although the granting of continuances and the imposition of sanctions are discretionary, a judge must hold a hearing to determine whether a request for a continuance that did not comply with the court's rules was made in good faith, and the judge had failed to hold such a hearing. To enforce continuance rules, the judge should have given greater consideration to the statutory option of sanctioning defense counsel, rather than penalizing defendants by ordering their trials to proceed in the absence of their attorneys. Also, one defendant had been absent, too. Conducting judicial proceedings in the absence of the defendant and counsel seriously interferes with the defendant's right to representation under U.S. Const., 6th Amend.

(6) Judges § 6.2—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Grounds—Persistent Failure to Perform Duties.—A justice court judge who failed to sign a judgment form for over six years after the motion for judgment had been granted, and after he had been censured for his failure, was guilty of persistent failure to perform his judicial duties.

(7) Judges § 6.4—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Proceedings—Prejudicial Publicity.—The presence of a prosecutor in the courtroom when the Commission on Judicial Performance served a justice court judge with its notice of formal proceedings, and the appearance of a newspaper article about the proceedings on the following day, did not, by themselves, show that the commission violated the rules of confidentiality relating to discipline of members of the judiciary.

(8) Judges § 6—Removal.—It was appropriate that the Supreme Court adopt the recommendation of the Commission on Judicial Performance that a justice court judge be removed from office where he had committed four acts of willful misconduct and one act of persistent failure to perform his judicial duties. The judge deprived criminal defendants of their constitutional rights by directing a guilty verdict against one defendant and conducting a trial of two others in one defendant's absence and in the absence of their attorneys, used his office to benefit a personal friend, and failed to perform the most basic of judicial duties. The judge's 10 years' experience as a district attorney certainly acquainted him with the rules of court and criminal procedure. Moreover, the judge had failed to respond to a previous public censure, evidencing a lack of regard for the commission, the Supreme Court, and his obligations as a judge. Removal would best serve the purpose of the proceedings, which is not to punish errant judges but to protect the judicial system and those subject to the awesome power that judges wield.

---

COUNSEL

David E. Pipal and Rusconi, Foster, Thomas & Pipal for Petitioner.

John R. Coughlin, Frank P. Borelli, Steven R. Sanders, Harry J. Tobias, James M. Paxton and John H. O'Brien as Amici Curiae on behalf of Petitioner.

John K. Van de Kamp, Attorney General, Aileen Bunney, Michael D. O'Reilley and Mark S. Howell, Deputy Attorneys General, for Respondent.

---

OPINION

THE COURT.—The Commission on Judicial Performance (hereafter the Commission) unanimously recommends that we remove Bernard P. McCullough from his office as judge of the Justice Court of the San Benito Judicial District, San Benito County. Judge McCullough asks us to reject the Commission's recommendation, alleging that it is not supported by the evidence. The San Benito County Bar Association filed an amicus curiae brief in support of Judge McCullough's position. After reviewing the record and the judge's objections, we adopt the Commission's recommendation.

BACKGROUND

Judge McCullough was born and raised in Hollister, California. After practicing law in San Francisco for almost 10 years, he returned to Hollister in 1967 to serve as District Attorney of San Benito County. In 1977, he was appointed to the Justice Court, and has since been elected and reelected.

In April 1987, we publicly censured Judge McCullough for failing to decide a case for almost four years and for continuing to execute salary affidavits even though cases remained pending in his court for more than 90 days. (See discussion of count 6, infra, p. 197.) At that time, we noted that he had ignored three private admonishments from the Commission to act promptly on the cases before him. (In re McCullough (1987) 43 Cal.3d 534, 535 [236 Cal.Rptr. 151, 734 P.2d 987].)

In the instant matter, the Commission served Judge McCullough with a notice of formal proceedings on September 24, 1987, alleging six counts of misconduct. (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 905; all subsequent rule references are to the California Rules of Court.) Count 1 alleges that Judge McCullough abridged a defendant's right to trial by an impartial jury when he directed the jurors to find the defendant guilty. Count 2 alleges that he used his judicial office to advance the private interests of a personal friend by continuing the friend's case for over two years, and then dismissing it without explanation in violation of Penal Code section 1385, subdivision (a). The third and fourth counts allege that the judge violated defendants' rights to representation when he ordered their trials to proceed in the absence of their attorneys. Count 5 involved the judge's failure to advise convicted misdemeanants of their rights on appeal under rule 535. The sixth count alleges that he failed to perform his judicial duties by not disposing of a matter pending before him for over six years.

We appointed the Honorable Robert K. Barber, retired judge of the Alameda County Superior Court, the Honorable George H. Barnett, retired judge of the Santa Clara County Superior Court, and the Honorable Jane A. York, judge of the Fresno County Justice Court, to serve as special masters, to take evidence on the alleged counts of misconduct, and then to report their findings to the Commission. (Rule 907.) The hearing spanned four days in May 1988. (Rules 908, 909.) The special masters concluded that counts 1, 2, 3 and 4 constituted wilful misconduct in office, that count 5 did not constitute misconduct at all, and that count 6 constituted persistent failure by the judge to perform his judicial duty. (Rule 912.)

In October 1988, the Commission accepted the special masters' characterization of counts 1, 2, 4, and 6, dismissed count 5, but concluded that count 3 constituted conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute rather than wilful misconduct. By a vote of eight to zero, it recommended removal of Judge McCullough. (Rule 917.) The judge then petitioned this court for review of the recommendation. (Rule 919(b).)

STANDARD OF REVIEW

(1) When disciplining a member of the judiciary, we undertake an independent evaluation of the record in order to determine whether clear and convincing evidence supports the Commission's recommendation. (Ryan v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1988) 45 Cal.3d 518, 530 [247 Cal.Rptr. 378, 754 P.2d 724].) In so doing, we give special weight both to the factual findings of the special masters, because of the masters' ability to evaluate the credibility of the witnesses at the hearing, and to the conclusions of the Commission, because of its expertise in matters of judicial conduct. (Ibid.)

(2) We may censure or remove a judge for engaging in "wilful misconduct in office, persistent failure or inability to perform the judge's duties, habitual intemperance in the use of intoxicants or drugs, or conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute." (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (c).)[1] Wilful misconduct, the most serious charge, occurs when a judge commits acts (1) which he knows, or should know, are beyond his authority (2) for reasons other than the faithful discharge of his duties. (Furey v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1987) 43 Cal.3d 1297, 1305 [240 Cal.Rptr. 859, 743 P.2d 919].) Though a judge must act in bad faith (id., at p. 1304) in order to commit wilful misconduct, he need not necessarily seek to harm a particular litigant or attorney; disregard for the legal system in general will suffice. (Geiler v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1973) 10 Cal.3d 270, 286 [110 Cal.Rptr. 201, 515 P.2d 1].) Unlike wilful misconduct, the charge of prejudicial conduct does not require the presence of bad faith. (Furey, supra, 43 Cal.3d at p. 1304.) It occurs when a judge, though acting in good faith, engages in conduct which adversely affects public opinion of the judiciary. (Geiler, supra, 10 Cal.3d at p. 284.) Though "less grave" than wilful misconduct (id., at p. 283), prejudicial conduct may nevertheless, by itself, justify removal. (id., at p. 284, fn. 11.) Persistent failure, also an independent ground for removal, focuses on a judge's legal and administrative competence and omissions.

COUNT 1—THE SUMAYA MATTER

(3) Count 1 alleges that Judge McCullough abridged Richard Sumaya's right to trial by an impartial jury by directing the jurors sitting on his case to find him guilty. Sumaya plead not guilty to a charge of riding a bicycle while under the influence of alcohol. (Veh. Code, § 21200.5.) The matter proceeded to trial. During the prosecution's closing argument to the jury, Judge McCullough interrupted the prosecutor, told him to "sit down," and then said to the jurors: "Ladies and gentlemen, I want you to go in that room and find the defendant guilty." Five minutes later, when the jurors returned with a guilty verdict, the judge commented that, "For a while there, ladies and gentlemen, I thought you were not going to follow my instructions." After conviction, the district attorney's office contacted Sumaya's counsel, advising him to appeal; following Sumaya's appeal, the appellate department of the superior court eventually reversed the conviction.

[1] We will refer to "wilful misconduct in office" as "wilful misconduct," "persistent failure or inability to perform the judge's duties" as "persistent failure," and "conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute" as "prejudicial conduct." "Habitual intemperance in the use of intoxicants or drugs" is not at issue in this case.

In response to this charge, Judge McCullough claims that he directed the jury to bring in a guilty verdict because Sumaya had admitted all elements of the offense on the witness stand. The record supports a finding, however, that Sumaya never actually testified at trial. He also asserts that, at the time of Sumaya's trial, he believed that federal law allowed a judge to direct a guilty verdict when the defendant's guilt is, in the view of the judge, undisputed. He now acknowledges that neither federal nor state law authorizes such an instruction, regardless of the judge's opinion of the defendant's guilt. Moreover, he clearly should have known that attempting to direct a jury to return a guilty verdict in a criminal action was beyond his judicial authority. (Gonzalez v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1983) 33 Cal.3d 359, 369 [188 Cal.Rptr. 880, 657 P.2d 372] ["Petitioner's patent misunderstanding of the nature of his judicial responsibility serves not to mitigate but to aggravate the severity of his misconduct."].)

The judge further argues that witnesses at the hearing before the special masters gave contradictory testimony regarding the number of witnesses who actually testified at Sumaya's trial and whether the police had subjected Sumaya to a blood-alcohol test. Resolution of these testimonial contradictions is irrelevant to the issue before us, however, because the Commission's charge of wilful misconduct did not rest on proof of those facts. Judge McCullough admits that he committed the act which formed the basis of the Commission's charge, i.e., that he directed the jury to find Sumaya guilty. Finally, the fact that Sumaya's conviction was reversed does not justify or excuse the judge's action. Depriving a criminal defendant of his fundamental right to be tried by a jury manifests disrespect for the constitutional protections of our legal system. We conclude that Judge McCullough's instruction to the jury directing a guilty verdict constituted wilful misconduct.

COUNT 2—THE CERRATO MATTER

(4) Count 2 alleges that Judge McCullough used his judicial office to advance the private interests of Frank Cerrato, a personal friend of his, by continuing Cerrato's criminal case for over two years and then dismissing it without explanation, in violation of Penal Code section 1385, subdivision

(a). The criminal action against Cerrato arose out of a domestic dispute between Cerrato and his wife. The police went to the Cerrato home in response to a call; when Mrs. Cerrato refused to file a criminal complaint against her husband, the district attorney's office charged him with obstructing a police officer in the performance of his duties. (Pen. Code, § 148.)

Frank Cerrato and his twin brother Harold are lifelong friends of Judge McCullough; Harold was a member of the board of supervisors when the board first appointed the judge to the bench. The day before Frank's arraignment, the Cerratos went to the judge's home, where Frank told the judge the story of his arrest and asked the judge to excuse him from appearing on the next day. (The Cerratos owned an apricot orchard and Frank's arrest occurred in the midst of the harvest season.) Frank testified at the hearing before the special masters that Judge McCullough told him that the arresting officer had apparently "overreacted" and that he "should go home and pick his apricots." Frank did not appear in court on either the next day or any later date, and testified that he "presumed" the district attorney had dismissed the case when the court returned the bail money to his brother two years later.

The judge admits that he committed the acts that form the basis of the Commission's charge—that he had an improper ex parte conversation with Frank,[2] never arraigned him on the obstructing charge, continued the case approximately 20 times over a 2-year period, later took the case off calendar, and eventually dismissed the case, without ever explaining his actions or advising the district attorney's office.[3] In addition, he failed to disqualify and recuse himself from the case even though he stated that he planned to do so.

In his defense, the judge alleges that he continued the case 20 times because he was waiting for some action by the district attorney's office, and that he dismissed the case because the office never took any action.[4] How-

[2]During the Commission's investigation, the judge admitted in correspondence with the Commission that he had spoken about the case with Harold but failed to disclose his conversation with Frank.

[3]Under the calendaring system in use at the time, the district attorney's office did not attend arraignment calendars and did not track a case until the court completed arraignment and set the matter for pretrial hearing or trial. The court provided the district attorney's office with an advance copy of the arraignment calendar and, following completion of the calendar, would send another copy reflecting what action was taken on the matters on calendar for that day. A clerk in the district attorney's office notified the deputy assigned to the case only when a completed calendar showed that the court had arraigned the defendant and scheduled either a pretrial hearing or trial. By failing to arraign Cerrato, Judge McCullough effectively kept the case from being monitored by the district attorney's office.

[4]After he spoke to Frank at his home, Judge McCullough informally asked a prosecutor to "take a look at" the Cerrato case. The prosecutor told the judge he would review the com-ever, the responsibility for the arraignment rested with Judge McCullough, as the presiding judge, not with the district attorney's office.[5]

Using the power of the bench to benefit a friend is a casebook example of wilful misconduct. (Spruance v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1975) 13 Cal.3d 778, 798 [119 Cal.Rptr. 841, 532 P.2d 1209]; see also Cal. Code Jud. Conduct, canon 2B ["Judges should not allow their families, social, or other relationships to influence their judicial conduct or judgment. Judges should not lend the prestige of their office to advance the private interests of others . . . ."].) Judge McCullough certainly should have known that failing to arraign Cerrato, continuing the case several times, and then dismissing it was improper. The evidence supports the conclusion that his reason for taking these actions was not the faithful discharge of his judicial duties. (Gonzalez, supra, 33 Cal.3d 359, 369.) Moreover, in view of his extrajudicial discussion with the Cerrato brothers about Frank's arrest and his long-term friendship with them, he should have promptly disqualified himself from the case. (Cal. Code Jud. Conduct, canon 3C(1) ["Judges should disqualify themselves in a proceeding in which . . . their impartiality might reasonably be questioned, including but not limited to instances where: (a) the judge has a personal bias or prejudice concerning a party . . . ."].) We conclude that the judge's handling of the Cerrato case constituted wilful misconduct.

COUNT 3—THE O'BRIEN MATTER

(5) Count 3 alleges that the judge violated Amelia O'Brien's right to representation when he ordered her trial to proceed despite the absence of herself and her attorney. O'Brien was charged with driving while under the influence of alcohol. (Veh. Code, § 23152, subd. (a).) On the day before her scheduled trial in San Benito County, a court in another county had ordered O'Brien's attorney to appear before it on the following day. Due to the trial conflict, O'Brien's attorney had his secretary telephone Judge McCullough's chambers to request a continuance of the O'Brien trial. A court clerk advised the secretary to contact the district attorney's office. The district attorney had no objection to the continuance but informed the attorney that the court normally required 48 hours' written notice of requests for continuances. Since he did not have sufficient time to prepare a plaint, and decided to do so when the case appeared on the pretrial calendar. Since Judge McCullough kept the case off the pretrial calendar, the prosecutor never took any action on the case and testified that he had forgotten about it until it came up in the proceedings before the Commission.

[5]The actual dismissal of the case stemmed from the chief clerk's comment that she was "getting sick and tired of having to account for that $150 [bail money] each month." When she asked the judge how to handle the case, he told her to "Get rid of it" and she entered the dismissal on the docket.

written motion for a continuance, O'Brien's attorney arranged for a local attorney to make a special appearance at the trial to make the request. The local attorney, however, did not appear personally at the court on the following day, but instead telephoned the court with the request for a continuance.

Judge McCullough denied the request and ordered the trial to proceed—despite the absence of the defendant, her counsel of record, or the local attorney.[6] Moreover, the prosecutor on the case informed the judge that he did not object to a continuance, and suggested that the judge impose sanctions on O'Brien's attorney for failing to comply with the court's 48-hour rule instead of ordering the trial to proceed.[7] Later that day, O'Brien's counsel learned that the trial had proceeded without him or his client and made a motion for a new trial, which the judge granted.

Judge McCullough correctly asserts that the power to grant a continuance, along with the power to impose sanctions on parties who do not comply with the requirements for requesting a continuance, are discretionary under section 1050 of the Penal Code. Although section 1050 does make the granting of continuances and the imposition of sanctions discretionary, a judge must hold a hearing to determine whether the noncomplying request was made in good faith. Judge McCullough failed to hold such a hearing. The hearing would have been the proper forum for determining whether the court had already granted an excessive number of continuances in the case and whether the court could have reasonably expected defense counsel to appear on the scheduled date. Moreover, Judge McCullough should have given greater consideration to the statutory option of sanctioning defense counsel, rather than penalizing the defendant by ordering the trial to proceed in the absence of both her and her attorney. His stated goal of expediting the adjudication of cases in his court, though laudable, should not blind him to the fundamental elements of a fair criminal proceeding.

The special masters found that the allegations of count 3 constituted wilful misconduct; the Commission disagreed and concluded that count 3 constituted only prejudicial conduct. We agree with the special masters. Conducting judicial proceedings in the absence of the defendant and her counsel seriously interferes with the defendant's Sixth Amendment right to [6]The judge does not argue, nor does the record reveal, that O'Brien waived her right to be present pursuant to Penal Code sections 977 and 1043.

[7]Subdivision (b) of section 1050 of the Penal Code requires a party to make a request for a continuance in writing two days before trial; subdivision (c) allows a party to request a continuance without complying with the requirements of subdivision (b), but also allows the court to impose sanctions for noncompliance. Subdivision (d) requires the court to hold a hearing to determine whether there was good cause for the party's noncompliance with subdivision (b).

representation. Though Judge McCullough may have intended to punish only O'Brien's attorney and not O'Brien, he acted intentionally and in bad faith. (Gonzalez, supra, 33 Cal.3d at p. 372 [attorneys on three occasions entered judge's courtroom and found proceedings had begun without them; court found judge's action constituted wilful misconduct].) We thus conclude that the judge's action in the O'Brien case constituted wilful misconduct.

COUNT 4—THE ROBERTS MATTER

Count 4 alleges that the judge violated Rose Roberts's right to representation by ordering her trial to proceed even though her attorney of record was not present. Roberts was charged with driving while under the influence of alcohol. (Veh. Code, § 23152, subd. (a).) On the day before her scheduled trial in San Benito County, her attorney was involved in a trial in another county; when he realized that the trial would not end that day, he telephoned Judge McCullough's chambers to request a continuance of Roberts's case. A clerk informed him of the court's 48-hour written notice requirement. The attorney then contacted the district attorney, who told him that he did not object to the trial being continued. He thus arranged for a local attorney to make a special appearance at Roberts's trial and request a continuance.

The local attorney personally appeared in court along with Roberts and made the request. Judge McCullough denied the request and ordered the trial to proceed—even after the local attorney indicated that he would not represent Roberts at trial. Roberts broke into tears in response to the judge's insistence on proceeding to trial without her attorney of record, as she was unprepared to represent herself. She understandably did not call witnesses, cross-examine the prosecution's witnesses, or herself take the stand. She was convicted of the charge. When her attorney learned that the trial had proceeded without him, he moved for a new trial, which Judge McCullough denied.

Again, Judge McCullough claims that he simply followed the 48-hour requirement of section 1050, subdivision (b) of the Penal Code. He again ignores the hearing requirement of subdivision (d) and the availability of sanctions for noncompliance under subdivision (c). As occurred in the O'Brien matter, Judge McCullough allowed his impatience with a defendant's attorney to outweigh a defendant's right to a fair trial and representation of her choice. Moreover, we are concerned that the judge's rulings in the O'Brien and Roberts matters may have been the product of the friction he alleged existed between him and the district attorney's office rather than from his desire to maintain the court's calendar. (See infra, p. 198.) We conclude that his actions in the Roberts case also constituted wilful misconduct.

COUNT 5

We do not consider charges of misconduct that the Commission has dismissed. (Spruance, supra, 13 Cal.3d at pp. 784-785, fn. 5.)

COUNT 6—THE BRASHEAR MATTER

(6) Count 6 alleges that the judge failed to perform his judicial duties by not disposing of a matter pending before him for over six years. Kathy Brashear was the codefendant and cross-complainant in the case of Oakley v. Cheadle. On February 2, 1982, Judge McCullough granted her motions for judgment against plaintiffs and cross-defendants.[8] A week later, Brashear's attorney sent the court a proposed judgment and request for costs and attorney's fees. Despite numerous telephone calls, written requests and trips to the court by Brashear's attorney over the next three years, Judge McCullough neither signed the judgment nor ruled on the request for costs and fees. The Commission eventually brought charges against the judge for his delay in this and other cases, and we publicly censured him in April 1987, finding that he had committed persistent failure and prejudicial conduct. (In re McCullough, supra, 43 Cal.3d at p. 535.)

We are especially concerned with the judge's failure to act on the Brashear matter even after public censure. Instead of signing the judgment after his censure, the judge cavalierly told his clerk that he wanted nothing more to do with the case. Not until March 1988, after the Commission had instituted the present proceedings and more than six years after he actually granted the motions, did he sign the judgment.

Judge McCullough offers the same argument in his defense that he made before us two years ago: Section 71610 of the Government Code, which compels a judge to act on a matter within 90 days of it submission, did not require him to sign the proposed judgment or rule on costs and fees because the motion was made and decided "in court." A judge must issue a written judgment, however, to give his oral decision legal force. (Code Civ. Proc., § 632; rule 520.) We conclude that Judge McCullough's failure to sign the judgment form constituted persistent failure.

[8]The case proceeded as to the remaining parties; they submitted posttrial briefs on February 16, 1982. Judge McCullough finally entered a decision in the underlying dispute in October 1985.

SPECIAL DEFENSES

Judge McCullough asserts that the Commission violated his right to confidentiality by improperly disclosing information regarding the charges against him. (Rule 902.) (7) He claims that the presence of a prosecutor in the courtroom when the Commission served him with its notice of formal proceedings, and the appearance of a newspaper article about the proceedings on the following day, support his contention that the Commission improperly disclosed confidential information to the district attorney's office and the local media. The mere presence of a prosecutor and appearance of a news article, however, do not, by themselves, support an argument that the Commission violated the rules of confidentiality. Moreover, the Commission is authorized to issue announcements "confirming the hearing, clarifying the procedural aspects, and defending the right of a judge to a fair hearing" whenever it has instituted formal proceedings in a matter "in which the subject matter is generally known to the public and in which there is broad public interest, and in which confidence in the administration of justice is threatened due to lack of information concerning the status of the proceeding and requirements of due process . . . ." (Rule 902(b)(3); Gubler v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1984) 37 Cal.3d 27, 61 [207 Cal.Rptr. 171, 688 P.2d 551].)[9]

Also, the judge alludes throughout his petition to animosity toward him on the part of the district attorney's office.[10] Judge McCullough suggests that the district attorney's office was out to "get him." The Commission noted that the relationship between the district attorney and Judge McCullough was "far from harmonious." We agree with the Commission's conclusion, however, that the only relevance to the current proceedings of any acrimony in their relationship is its effect on the credibility of the witnesses at the hearing. In this regard, the special masters stood in the best position to judge the credibility of the witnesses at the hearing; we thus assume that they considered the trustworthiness of the testimony in formulating their factual findings.

MITIGATING CIRCUMSTANCES

The Commission found that Judge McCullough is a hardworking judge who has critics but also friends in the community. Several parties testified to the judge's good character, and the San Benito County Bar Association filed [9] We emphasize, however, that we have no evidence before us that the Commission actually submitted any material to the local media.

[10] We consider this contention here even though the judge does not specifically label it a "Special Defense."

an amicus curiae brief on his behalf. In addition, we take notice that the voters of San Benito County have twice elected him to judicial office.

DISPOSITION

(8) We conclude that Judge McCullough has committed four acts of wilful misconduct and one act of persistent failure. He deprived criminal defendants of their constitutional rights, used his office to benefit a personal friend, and failed to perform the most basic of judicial duties. Ten years' experience as the District Attorney of San Benito County certainly acquainted him with the rules of court and criminal procedure. (Wenger v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1981) 29 Cal.3d 615, 653-654 [175 Cal.Rptr. 420, 630 P.2d 954].) Moreover, his failure to respond to our public censure evidences a lack of regard for the Commission, this court and his obligations as a judge.

"The purpose of these proceedings is not to punish errant judges but to protect the judicial system and those subject to the awesome power that judges wield." (Furey, supra, 43 Cal.3d at p. 1320.) We conclude that that purpose is best served by adopting the recommendation of the Commission that Judge McCullough be removed from office.

We order that Judge Bernard P. McCullough, justice court judge of the San Benito Judicial District, San Benito County, be removed from office. He shall, however, if otherwise qualified, be permitted to resume the practice of law (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (d)) on the condition that he pass the Professional Responsibility Examination. He had a long career in private and public practice before coming onto the bench, and several parties have testified to his good character. Moreover, as an attorney, he will not have access to the power that he abused as a judge. (Spruance, supra, 13 Cal.3d at p. 803.) This order is effective upon the finality of this decision in this court.

43 Cal.3d 536
734 P.2d 988, 236 Cal.Rptr. 152
(Cite as: 43 Cal.3d 536)

In re L. EUGENE RASMUSSEN, a Judge of the Justice Court, on Censure

S.F. No. 25115.

Supreme Court of California.

Apr 23, 1987.

SUMMARY

The Commission on Judicial Performance recommended that the Supreme Court publicly censure a justice court judge, for willful misconduct in office and for conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (c)(2)). The judge did not challenge the findings or recommendation; under Cal. Rules of Court, rule 919(c), his decision not to make such a challenge properly could be deemed a consent to a determination on the merits based upon the record filed by the commission. The charges were numerous, and involved misconduct occurring in the judge's courtroom, in chambers, and in public.

The Supreme Court ordered the judge publicly censured. The court held that the record revealed that the judge violated Cal. Code Jud. Conduct, canon 2 (stating that a judge should respect and comply with the law and should conduct himself at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence and the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary), canon 3A(3) (stating that a judge should be patient, dignified, and courteous to litigants, jurors, witnesses, lawyers, and others with whom he deals in his official capacity), and canon 3C(1) (stating that a judge should disqualify himself in a proceeding in which his disqualification is required by law or his impartiality might reasonably be questioned). The court held that such misconduct represented a disturbing, intolerable affront to the legal profession, and to the public; the court's order of severe public censure was deemed to be adequate admonishment. (Opinion by The Court.)

HEADNOTES

Classified to California Digest of Official Reports

(1) Judges § 6.2--Public Censure--Grounds--Willful Misconduct in Office-- Conduct Prejudicial to Administration of Justice That Brings Office 537 into Disrepute.
Numerous instances of misconduct by a justice court judge represented a disturbing, intolerable affront to the legal profession and to the public, and supported an order of public censure. The record before the Commission on Judicial Performance revealed that the judge violated Cal. Code Jud. Conduct, canon 2 (stating that a judge should respect and comply with the law and should conduct himself at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary), canon 3A(3) (stating that a judge should be patient, dignified, and courteous to litigants, jurors, witnesses, lawyers, and others with whom he deals in his official capacity), and canon 3C(1) (stating that a judge should disqualify himself in a proceeding in which his disqualification is required by law, or his impartiality might reasonably be questioned). The sanction of severe public censure constituted adequate admonishment in view of the judge's recent success in conforming his behavior to the Code of Judicial Conduct.

[See Cal.Jur.3d, Judges, § 62 et seq.; Am.Jur.2d, Judges, § 18 et seq.]

COUNSEL

No counsel listed for this case.

THE COURT.

The Commission on Judicial Performance has recommended that we publicly censure L. Eugene Rasmussen, a Judge of the Justice Court, Lake Valley Judicial District, El Dorado County, for "wilful misconduct in office," and for "conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute." (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (c)(2).) Judge Rasmussen has not challenged the findings or recommendation. Under rule 919(c) of the California Rules of Court, his decision not to make such a challenge "may be deemed a consent to a determination on the merits based upon the record filed by the Commission."

The record reveals that during the period 1981-1984, Judge Rasmussen violated canon 2 of the California Code of Judicial Conduct, which states that "A judge should respect and comply with the law and should conduct himself at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary." The record further reveals that Judge Rasmussen violated canon 3A(3), which states that "A judge should be patient, dignified, and courteous to litigants, jurors, witnesses, lawyers, and others with whom he deals in his official capacity ...," and canon 3C(1), which states that "A judge should disqualify himself in a proceeding in which his disqualification is required by law, or his impartiality might reasonably be questioned. ..."

Judge Rasmussen's violations of canon 2 include the following incidents: publicly branding a coach at a youth sports event as a

"pervert" based on 538 Judge Rasmussen's knowledge that the coach had once been convicted of violating section 647a of the Penal Code (child molestation); initiating probation revocation proceedings on a probationer based on personal reasons other than the faithful discharge of his duties; communicating to a criminal defendant his likely sentence in the absence of counsel; engaging in intemperate, open-court criticism of a fellow judge; improperly suggesting that the State Bar investigate an attorney who had asserted the attorney-client privilege in response to overly inquisitive questioning in chambers; displaying a lack of impartiality to, and petty harassment of attorneys who filed affidavits of prejudice against him.

Judge Rasmussen's violations of canon 3 include the following incidents: discouraging the exercise of peremptory disqualification rights by inappropriate means, including the making of intemperate remarks to counsel, and attempting to inconvenience counsel by withholding judgments in unrelated cases; refusing to disqualify himself from sentencing proceedings after having substantively communicated to the defendant his likely sentence in the absence of counsel; initiating probation revocation proceedings based on patently insufficient evidence; displaying an intolerant, and persistently abusive and sarcastic demeanor toward litigants, attorneys, and others in his courtroom.

(1) We hold that the foregoing misconduct represents a disturbing, intolerable affront to the legal profession, and to the public. Were it not for the persuasive testimony from numerous other members of the bar that Judge Rasmussen has engaged in continuing, commendable efforts since 1984 to temper his courtroom behavior, a more severe sanction might be warranted. We are confident, however, that in light of the totality of the evidence presented, and giving particular attention to Judge Rasmussen's recent success in conforming his behavior to the Code of Judicial Conduct, this severe public censure shall suffice as adequate admonishment. This order will serve as the appropriate sanction. 539

Cal.,1987.

In re Rasmussen

END OF DOCUMENT

[No. S041217. Feb. 9, 1995.]

JOHN FITCH, a Judge of the Superior Court, Petitioner, v. COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE, Respondent.

SUMMARY

In an original proceeding, a judge of the superior court petitioned for review of a unanimous recommendation by the Commission on Judicial Performance that he be publicly censured for conduct which the commission found to constitute "conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute" (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (c)). The Supreme Court held that the findings of the commission and special masters that the judge had engaged in a pattern of misconduct involving inappropriate and offensive remarks to court staff and court attaches or attorneys, and nonconsensual touchings of women working under his supervision, were supported by clear and convincing evidence. Thus, the commission properly concluded that the judge's misconduct was such as to bring the judicial office into disrepute within the meaning of Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (c), since it was conduct damaging to the esteem for the judiciary held by members of the public who observed such conduct. Even though some court employees testified that no inappropriate remarks or touchings were made in their presence, such testimony would not necessarily have rebutted the extensive evidence from numerous complaining witnesses that misconduct deserving of censure indeed occurred. Moreover, any question as to whether the complaining witnesses should have been disbelieved was more properly addressed to the special masters in the course of their assessment of the credibility of those witnesses. Although the commission heard no testimony, its own expertise and unanimity suggested that deference be accorded to its inferences and conclusions. (Opinion by The Court.)

HEADNOTES

Classified to California Digest of Official Reports

(1a, 1b) Judges § 6.4—Censure—Proceedings—Review by Supreme Court—Independent Evaluation.—On review of disciplinary recommendations of the Commission on Judicial Performance, the Supreme Court makes an independent evaluation of the evidence before the commission to determine whether the charges against the petitioner are supported by clear and convincing evidence. Thereafter, the court must determine whether the conduct that is the subject of the proceeding constitutes a basis for censure or removal, and, if so, the appropriate action. Nevertheless, although the court must make an independent evaluation of the record, it gives special weight to the masters' findings that reflect their evaluation of the credibility of the witnesses who testified before them.

[See 2 Witkin, Cal. Procedure (3d ed. 1985) Courts, § 43.]

(2) Judges § 6.2—Censure—Grounds—Prejudicial Conduct Bringing Office Into Disrepute.—The provision that conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice under Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (c) (censure of judge), must be that which brings the judicial office into disrepute does not require notoriety, but only that the conduct be damaging to the esteem for the judiciary held by members of the public who observed such conduct.

(3) Judges § 6.2—Censure—Grounds—Prejudicial Conduct Bringing Office Into Disrepute—Inappropriate and Offensive Remarks and Nonconsensual Touchings—Sufficiency of Evidence.—In a proceeding for discipline of a superior court judge, the findings of the Commission on Judicial Performance and special masters that the judge had engaged in a pattern of misconduct involving inappropriate and offensive remarks to court staff and court attaches or attorneys, and nonconsensual touchings of women working under his supervision, were supported by clear and convincing evidence. Thus, the commission properly concluded that the judge's misconduct was such as to bring the judicial office into disrepute within the meaning of Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (c), since it was conduct damaging to the esteem for the judiciary held by members of the public who observed such conduct. Even though some court employees testified that no inappropriate remarks or touchings were made in their presence, such testimony would not necessarily have rebutted the extensive evidence from numerous complaining witnesses that misconduct deserving of censure indeed occurred. Moreover, any question as to whether the complaining witnesses should have been disbelieved was more properly addressed to the special masters in the course of their assessment of the credibility of those witnesses. Although the commission heard no testimony, its own expertise and unanimity suggested that deference be accorded to its inferences and conclusions.

[See 2 Witkin, Cal. Procedure (3d ed. 1985) Courts, § 32 et seq.]

COUNSEL

John Fitch, in pro. per., and William A. Smith for Petitioner.

Daniel E. Lungren, Attorney General, Karen Ziskind and Raymond L. Brosterhous, Deputy Attorneys General, for Respondent.

OPINION

THE COURT.—Judge John Fitch of the Fresno County Superior Court, acting in propria persona, has petitioned for review of a unanimous recommendation by the Commission on Judicial Performance (Commission) that he be publicly censured for conduct which the Commission has found to constitute "conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute." (See Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (c) [hereafter section 18(c)]; Cal. Rules of Court, rule 919(b).)

The bases for the Commission's censure recommendation are that, between 1988 and 1992, petitioner engaged in a pattern of misconduct involving (1) inappropriate and offensive comments concerning the physical attributes and clothing of female members of the court staff; (2) inappropriate and offensive remarks concerning the intimate relationships of court attachés or attorneys with their spouses; and (3) other inappropriate and offensive remarks in the presence of court staff. In addition, the Commission found that (4) petitioner singled out women working under his supervision for inappropriate and nonconsensual touching, or attempted touching, although such conduct was "unusual and episodic," occurred over a lengthy period, was relatively infrequent, and did not constitute a pattern of misconduct.

The Commission's report itemizes 18 separate acts of misconduct, involving 9 complaining witnesses. It further found, however, that since 1992 petitioner appears to have ceased this misconduct, that he is a skilled, able, and hardworking judge whose courtroom conduct is beyond reproach, that he has contributed extensively to the legal community, and that he has donated substantial time and effort to the local community as well. Nonetheless, as indicated, the Commission concluded that petitioner's prior conduct constituted "conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute," for which he should be publicly censured. As will appear, we agree with the Commission's findings and conclusions.

*Before Lucas, C. J., Mosk, J., Kennard, J., Arabian, J., George, J., Werdegar, J., and Lillie, J.†

†Presiding Justice, Court of Appeal, Second Appellate District, Division Seven, assigned by the Acting Chairperson of the Judicial Council.

Section 18(c) provides in pertinent part that, "On recommendation of the Commission on Judicial Performance the Supreme Court may . . . censure or remove a judge for action occurring not more than 6 years prior to the commencement of the judge's current term that constitutes willful misconduct in office, persistent failure or inability to perform the judge's duties, habitual intemperance in the use of intoxicants or drugs, or conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute. . . ."

(1a) In this review proceeding, we make an independent evaluation of the evidence before the Commission to determine whether the charges against petitioner are supported by clear and convincing evidence. Thereafter, we must determine whether the conduct that is the subject of the proceeding constitutes a basis for censure or removal, and, if so, the appropriate action. (See Mardikian v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1985) 40 Cal.3d 473, 476-477 [220 Cal.Rptr. 833, 709 P.2d 852]; Gubler v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1984) 37 Cal.3d 27, 35 [207 Cal.Rptr. 171, 688 P.2d 551]; Wenger v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1981) 29 Cal.3d 615, 622 [175 Cal.Rptr. 420, 630 P.2d 954]; Spruance v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1975) 13 Cal.3d 778, 784, fn. 5 [119 Cal.Rptr. 841, 532 P.2d 1209]; Geiler v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1973) 10 Cal.3d 270, 275-276 [110 Cal.Rptr. 201, 515 P.2d 1].)

(2) As we recently observed, "The provision that prejudicial conduct [under § 18(c)] must be that which 'brings the judicial office into disrepute' . . . does 'not require notoriety, but only that the conduct be "damaging to the esteem for the judiciary held by members of the public who observed such conduct." [Citation.]' " (Kennick v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1990) 50 Cal.3d 297, 314 [267 Cal.Rptr. 293, 787 P.2d 591, 87 A.L.R.4th 679].)

Petitioner acknowledges that his conduct has damaged public esteem for the judiciary, for his petition for review recites that he "deeply regrets the dishonor brought to the bench by this matter." Petitioner nonetheless contests the Commission's findings. Although he readily admits that his conduct "warrants appropriate discipline," he contends that "censure should not be imposed for acts he did not do . . . ."

Rather than file a brief specifically addressing the Commission's findings and conclusions, petitioner has simply incorporated his earlier objections to the similar (but not identical) findings of the special masters appointed by this court pursuant to California Rules of Court, rule 907. As a result, many of petitioner's objections are not pertinent to the Commission's actual findings, and will not be discussed here. For example, although the petition complains of material in a footnote to the special masters' report, the Commission's own "Findings and Conclusions" expressly recite that the Commission did not consider the foregoing material in reaching its conclusions and recommended censure.

As will appear, rather than assert errors of law or other irregularities in the proceedings below, petitioner's objections are directed almost exclusively to the credibility of the various witnesses against him, and accordingly raise matters difficult to reevaluate on the basis of a cold record. (1b) As we have often stated, although we must make an independent evaluation of the record, we nonetheless give special weight to the masters' findings that reflect their evaluation of the credibility of the witnesses who testified before them. (Kennick v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 50 Cal.3d at pp. 314-315; Gubler v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 37 Cal.3d at p. 34, and cases cited.)

The Commission adopted, with only minor modifications, the report of the special masters appointed by this court. Because this case involves public censure rather than outright removal of a judge, we need not explore in detail the extensive factual matrix underlying each of the Commission's findings. Instead, we only summarize the gist of petitioner's misconduct in the four areas specified by the Commission.

1. Remarks Concerning Physical Attributes

The Commission found that, on several occasions, petitioner made offensive remarks to female court reporters or clerks concerning their buttocks, breasts, or legs. (E.g., petitioner told a court reporter, "Your butt looks good in that dress.")

2. Remarks Concerning Intimate Relationships

The Commission found that, on several occasions, petitioner made offensive remarks to female court attachés or attorneys regarding their intimate relationships with their spouses. (E.g., petitioner told another court reporter, after she turned away from his attempt to console her, "I certainly hope you're not that frigid at home with your husband.")

3. Other Remarks in Presence of Court Staff

The Commission found that, on several occasions, petitioner made other offensive and crude remarks in the presence of court staff. (E.g., petitioner, in discussing a janitor, jokingly told a female court reporter that, "The only thing he's ever done to me is go down on me a couple of times.")

4. Inappropriate, Nonconsensual Touchings

The Commission found that, on a few isolated occasions, petitioner singled out women working under his supervision for inappropriate and nonconsensual touching, or attempted touching. (E.g., he slapped or patted a court reporter and a court trainee on their buttocks.)

(3) Petitioner's objections to the Commission's findings in the foregoing four separate areas of misconduct relate to the asserted lack of credibility of the complaining witnesses. Petitioner cites at length the testimony of other court employees stating that no inappropriate remarks or touchings were made in their presence. But such testimony obviously would not necessarily rebut the extensive evidence from numerous complaining witnesses that misconduct deserving of censure indeed occurred.

Petitioner cites further testimony suggesting that the complaining witnesses should be disbelieved because they either (1) had motives to fabricate their testimony, (2) misinterpreted petitioner's innocent words or deeds, or (3) unduly delayed reporting their complaints about petitioner's conduct. Again, all such matters were more properly addressed to the special masters in the course of their assessment of the credibility of the complaining witnesses.

"Generally we give weight to the findings and conclusions of both commission and master. [Citation.]" (Wenger v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 29 Cal.3d at p. 622.) Because of the difficulties inherent in attempting to pass on the credibility of testimony when only the written record is before us, we give special weight to the special masters' resolution of fact issues that turn on the credibility of testimony taken in their presence. (See id. at p. 623; Kennick v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 50 Cal.3d at pp. 314-315; Geiler v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications, supra, 10 Cal.3d at pp. 275-276.) Additionally, although the Commission heard no testimony, "its own expertise and unanimity . . . suggest that deference be accorded to its inferences and conclusions." (Wenger v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 29 Cal.3d at p. 623.)

Our own independent review of the record, coupled with the due deference and special weight we give, respectively, to the findings of the Commission and special masters, affords ample bases for concluding that the Commission's findings are supported by clear and convincing evidence, and that petitioner's conduct is the proper basis for public censure. Petitioner's misconduct was such as to "bring[] the judicial office into disrepute" (§ 18(c)), being conduct " ' "damaging to the esteem for the judiciary held by members of the public who observed such conduct." ' " (Kennick v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra 50 Cal.3d at p. 314.)

This opinion will serve as an appropriate censure.

On March 2, 1995, the opinion was modified to read as printed above.

13 Cal.4th 472
917 P.2d 627, 53 Cal.Rptr.2d 788, 96 Cal. Daily Op. Serv. 4463,
96 Daily Journal D.A.R. 7243
(Cite as: 13 Cal.4th 472)

In re NORMAN W. GORDON, a Judge of the Superior Court, on Censure.

No. S052965.

Supreme Court of California

Jun 20, 1996.

SUMMARY

The Commission on Judicial Performance recommended that the California Supreme Court publicly censure a superior court judge for engaging in "conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute" (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (c)(2)). The commission found that the judge had on several occasions made sexually suggestive remarks to and asked sexually explicit questions of female staff members, referred to a staff member using crude and demeaning names and descriptions and an ethnic slur, referred to a fellow jurist's physical attributes in a demeaning manner, and mailed a sexually suggestive postcard to a staff member addressed to her at the courthouse. None of the conduct occurred while court was in session or while the judge was on the bench conducting the business of the court.

The Supreme Court adopted the commission's recommendation. The court held that the judge's actions constituted conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brought the judicial office into disrepute. While the actions were taken in an ostensibly joking manner, and there was no evidence of intent to cause embarrassment or injury, to coerce, to vent anger, or to inflict shame, the result was an overall courtroom environment where discussion of sex and improper ethnic and racial comments were customary. (Opinion by The Court.)

HEADNOTES

Classified to California Digest of Official Reports

(1) Judges § 6.2--Discipline--Public Censure--Grounds--Creating Courtroom Environment Where Discussion of Sex and Race Was Customary.
Public censure was warranted for a superior court judge who had on several occasions made sexually suggestive remarks to and asked sexually explicit questions of female staff members, referred to a 473 staff member using crude and demeaning names and descriptions and an ethnic slur, referred to a fellow jurist's physical attributes in a demeaning manner, and mailed a sexually suggestive postcard to a staff member addressed to her at the courthouse. The judge's actions constituted conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brought the judicial office into disrepute (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (c)(2)). While the actions were taken in an ostensibly joking manner, and there was no evidence of intent to cause embarrassment or injury, to coerce, to vent anger, or to inflict shame, the result was an overall courtroom environment where discussion of sex and improper ethnic and racial comments were customary.

[See 2 Witkin, Cal. Procedure (3d ed. 1985) Courts, §§ 32, 56A.]

COUNSEL

Susan D. Martynec and Kenneth C. Byrne, Deputy Attorneys General, and Roland W. Selman for Commission on Judicial Performance.

Baker, Silberberg & Keener, Robert C. Baker and Melissa S. Fink for Respondent.

THE COURT.

(1) The Commission on Judicial Performance has recommended that we publicly censure Norman W. Gordon, a judge of the Los Angeles County Superior Court, for engaging in "conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute." (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (c)(2).) Judge Gordon has not challenged the commission's findings or recommendation.

Following the appointment of special masters, hearings were held, evidence taken, and upon completion of the hearings, the special masters prepared a formal report setting forth their findings of fact and conclusions of law. After consideration of written statements of objections to the masters' report, the matter was argued before the commission which, with minor changes, adopted the findings of fact and conclusions of law of the special masters.

The commission found that between April of 1990 and October 27, 1992, Judge Gordon on several occasions made sexually suggestive remarks to and 474 asked sexually explicit questions of female staff members; referred to a staff member using crude and demeaning names and descriptions and an ethnic slur; referred to a fellow jurist's physical attributes in a demeaning manner; and mailed a sexually suggestive postcard to a staff member addressed to her at the courthouse. None of the conduct occurred while court was in session or while the judge was on the bench conducting the business of the court.

The commission concluded that these actions constituted conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute. (See Fitch v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1995) 9 Cal.4th 552 [37 Cal.Rptr.2d 581, 887 P.2d 937].) While the actions were taken in an ostensibly joking manner and there was no evidence of intent to cause embarrassment or injury, or to coerce, to vent anger, or to inflict shame, the result was an overall courtroom environment where discussion of sex and improper ethnic and racial comments were customary.

After reviewing the record, we are satisfied that the conclusions of the commission are justified, and that its recommendation should be adopted. This order will serve as the appropriate sanction. 475

Cal. 1996.

In re Gordon

END OF DOCUMENT

14 Cal.4th 1
922 P.2d 868, 56 Cal.Rptr.2d 705, 96 Cal. Daily Op. Serv. 7411,
96 Daily Journal D.A.R. 12,139
(Cite as: 14 Cal.4th 1)

In re CLAUDE WHITNEY, a Judge of the Municipal Court, on Censure.

No. S050615.

Supreme Court of California

Oct 3, 1996.

SUMMARY

The Commission on Judicial Performance recommended that the Supreme Court publicly censure a municipal court judge for engaging in "willful misconduct in office" and "conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute" (Cal. Const, art. VI, § 18, former subd. (c)(2)). The commission found that the judge, while conducting the municipal court's in-custody misdemeanor arraignment calendar, abdicated his responsibility to protect the statutory and constitutional rights of defendants in certain respects. The commission also concluded that the judge's refusal to appoint counsel to assist indigent defendants at the arraignment stage constituted willful misconduct in office, but concluded that the remaining acts constituted, at most, conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice.

The Supreme Court adopted the commission's recommendation of public censure. The court held that the evidence supported the commission's findings. The record showed that the judge, as a matter of routine practice in the conduct of the in-custody misdemeanor arraignment calendar, failed to exercise his judicial discretion to consider releasing defendants on their own recognizance, or to consider grants of probation or concurrent sentencing for defendants pleading guilty or no contest at arraignment. He further refused to appoint counsel to assist defendants at the arraignment itself, and failed to inform defendants pleading guilty or no contest of the negative consequences a conviction could have on a noncitizen with regard to immigration, as required by law. (Opinion by The Court.)

HEADNOTES

Classified to California Digest of Official Reports

(1) Judges § 6.2--Discipline--Public Censure--Grounds--Engaging in Willful Misconduct in Office--Engaging in Conduct Prejudicial to Administration of Justice That Brings Judicial Office Into Disrepute.

Public censure was warranted for a municipal court judge who, 2 while conducting the municipal court's in-custody misdemeanor arraignment calendar, abdicated his responsibility to protect the statutory and constitutional rights of defendants in certain respects, thereby engaging in "willful misconduct in office" and "conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute" (Cal. Const, art. VI, § 18, former subd. (c)(2)). The record showed that the judge, as a matter of routine practice in the conduct of the in-custody misdemeanor arraignment calendar, failed to exercise his judicial discretion to consider releasing defendants on their own recognizance, or to consider grants of probation or concurrent sentencing for defendants pleading guilty or no contest at arraignment. He further refused to appoint counsel to assist defendants at the arraignment itself, and failed to inform defendants pleading guilty or no contest of the negative consequences a conviction could have on a noncitizen with regard to immigration, as required by law.

[See 2 Witkin, Cal. Procedure (3d ed. 1985) Courts, § 32 et seq.]

THE COURT.

(1) The Commission on Judicial Performance has recommended that we publicly censure Claude Whitney, a judge of the Municipal Court for the Central Orange County Judicial District, for engaging in "willful misconduct in office" and "conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute." (Cal. Const, art. VI, § 18, former subd. (c)(2).) [FN1] Judge Whitney has not challenged the commission's findings or recommendation. Under rule 919(c) of the California Rules of Court, his decision not to make such a challenge "may be deemed a consent to a determination on the merits based upon the record filed by the Commission."

> FN1 These proceedings were commenced prior to March 1, 1995, the operative date of amendments to article VI, section 18, of the California Constitution.

Following the appointment of special masters, hearings were held, evidence taken, and upon completion of the hearing the special masters prepared a formal report setting forth their findings of fact and conclusions of law. After consideration of written statements of objections to the master's report, the matter was argued before the commission, which adopted certain of the masters' findings of fact and conclusions of law.

The commission found that Judge Whitney, while conducting the Central Orange Municipal Court's in-custody misdemeanor arraignment calendar 3 during 1992, abdicated his responsibility to protect the statutory and constitutional rights of defendants in certain respects. After reviewing the record, we are satisfied these findings are supported by the evidence. The record shows Judge Whitney, as a matter of routine practice in the conduct of the in-custody misdemeanor arraignment calendar, failed to exercise his judicial discretion to consider release of defendants on their own recognizance, or to consider grants of probation or concurrent sentencing for defendants pleading guilty or no contest at arraignment. He further refused to appoint counsel to assist defendants at the arraignment itself, and failed, as required by law, to inform defendants pleading guilty or no contest of the negative consequences a conviction could have on a noncitizen with regard to immigration.

We also accept the commission's conclusion that Judge Whitney's refusal to appoint counsel to assist indigent defendants at the arraignment constituted willful misconduct in office, but conclude the remaining acts constituted, at most, conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice (See Adams v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1995) 10 Cal.4th 866, 877-878 [42 Cal.Rptr.2d 606, 897 P.2d 544]; Gubler v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1984) 37 Cal.3d 27, 46-47, 59 [207 Cal.Rptr. 171, 688 P.2d 551].)

The record also shows Judge Whitney is considered diligent and hard working, has a reputation of thoughtfulness on legal issues, is generally well regarded among the bench and bar, and has good relationships with court staff. Judge Whitney has since improved his conduct and has acknowledged he erred in several respects. The misconduct charged ended in 1992, well before these proceedings were commenced, and Judge Whitney responded honestly and appropriately to the commission's inquiry and disciplinary proceedings.

We adopt the commission's recommendation of public censure. This order will serve as the appropriate sanction. 4

Cal. 1996.

In re Whitney

END OF DOCUMENT

[No. S055684. Aug. 10, 1998.]

HOWARD R. BROADMAN, a Judge of the Superior Court, Petitioner, v. COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE, Respondent.

SUMMARY

The Commission on Judicial Performance found that a superior court judge had engaged in prejudicial conduct by inducing a criminal defendant and his counsel into waiving time for sentencing without disclosing the purpose, publicly commenting on two pending cases, and attempting to influence the outcome of a civil action against an attorney while it was pending before another superior court judge. The commission recommended public censure.

The Supreme Court ordered that the judge be publicly censured. The court held that there was clear and convincing evidence that the judge engaged in willful misconduct in inducing a criminal defendant and his counsel into waiving time for sentencing without disclosing the purpose. The court also held that the judge's violation of Cal. Code Jud. Conduct, former canon 3A(6), by publicly commenting on two criminal cases that were pending either in his court or in the Court of Appeal, constituted prejudicial conduct, that is, conduct that a judge undertakes in good faith but that nevertheless appears to an objective observer to be not only unjudicial conduct but conduct prejudicial to the public esteem for the judicial office. The court further held that Cal. Code Jud. Conduct, former canon 3A(6), was not invalid as an unconstitutional restriction on public speech, nor was it void for vagueness. The court held that the judge committed prejudicial misconduct when he tried to affect the outcome of a legal malpractice case in another court, which involved an attorney against whom the judge bore personal animosity. The court also held that the proceedings before the Commission on Judicial Performance did not violate the judge's right to due process under U.S. Const., 14th Amend. Finally, the court held that in light of the judge's lack of candor and integrity, public censure was appropriate. (Opinion by The Court.)

HEADNOTES

Classified to California Digest of Official Reports

(1) Judges § 6.4—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Proceedings—Review by Supreme Court.—Because the Supreme Court's power to discipline a judge is contingent on a recommendation of the Commission on Judicial Performance, the court may not impose judicial discipline on its own initiative, and it may consider only those charges of willful misconduct or prejudicial conduct that the commission has sustained. The Supreme Court's review of the record is independent, however. The court makes findings of fact, it decides as a question of law whether the conduct warrants sanctioning the judge, and it makes the ultimate decision whether to dismiss the proceeding or to admonish, censure, or remove the judge. Accordingly, the court can conclude that a judge engaged in willful misconduct, even if the commission has found that the judge's actions were not willful misconduct, but only prejudicial conduct. The ultimate disposition rests with the court. Therefore, the court can, after an independent review, increase or decrease the discipline that the commission has recommended.

(2) Judges § 6.4—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Proceedings—Review by Supreme Court—Standard of Proof.—In judicial discipline proceedings, the Supreme Court reviews the record and determines whether there is clear and convincing evidence to sustain the charges to a reasonable certainty. Evidence of a charge is clear and convincing so long as there is a high probability that the charge is true. The evidence need not establish the fact beyond a reasonable doubt. The court gives special weight to the factual determinations of special masters because they had the advantage of observing the demeanor of the witnesses. Similarly, because of the expertise of the Commission on Judicial Performance in evaluating judicial misconduct, the court gives great weight to its conclusions of law. The court is particularly deferential to the commission when it speaks with one voice, that is, unanimously. Lack of unanimity, however, does not render the commission's conclusions inherently suspect. Although the court will carefully consider any diverse views expressed by the commission, the ultimate decision the court has to make is whether there is clear and convincing evidence to sustain the charges.

(3) Judges § 6.2—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Grounds—Willful Misconduct—Elements—Bad Faith.—To commit willful misconduct in office, a judge must (1) engage in conduct that is unjudicial and (2) committed in bad faith, (3) while acting in a judicial capacity. A judge's reckless or utter indifference to whether judicial acts being performed exceed the bounds of the judge's prescribed power is a state of mind properly characterized as bad faith. Accordingly, the court's references in past decisions to bad faith as including judicial acts that a judge "should have known" to be beyond the judge's lawful judicial power are properly understood as referring to the state of mind in which a judge lacks actual knowledge of the limits on his or her judicial authority, is fully aware of this lack of knowledge, and fails or refuses to take reasonably available steps or to make a good faith effort to determine the extent of his or her judicial authority before undertaking to exercise it. Mere negligence cannot satisfy the bad faith element of willful misconduct in office by a judge, and the phrase "should have known," because of its association in other contexts with a negligence standard, is potentially misleading and should be avoided. A judge acts in bad faith only by (1) performing a judicial act for a corrupt purpose (which is any purpose other than the faithful discharge of judicial duties), or (2) performing a judicial act with knowledge that the act is beyond the judge's lawful judicial power, or (3) performing a judicial act that exceeds the judge's lawful power with a conscious disregard for the limits of the judge's authority.

(4) Judges § 6.2—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Grounds—Prejudicial Misconduct—Definition.—Prejudicial conduct of a judge is distinguishable from willful misconduct in that the judge's acts may constitute prejudicial conduct even if not committed in a judicial capacity, or, if committed in a judicial capacity, not committed in bad faith. Prejudicial conduct is either conduct that a judge undertakes in good faith but that nevertheless would appear to an objective observer to be not only unjudicial conduct but conduct prejudicial to public esteem for the judicial office, or willful misconduct out of office, i.e., unjudicial conduct committed in bad faith by a judge not then acting in a judicial capacity. In this context, bad faith means a culpable mental state beyond mere negligence and consisting of either knowing or not caring that the conduct being undertaken is unjudicial and prejudicial to public esteem. In sum, to constitute prejudicial conduct, a judge's actions must bring the judicial office into disrepute, that is, the conduct would appear to an objective observer to be prejudicial to public esteem for the judicial office.

(5) Judges § 6.4—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Proceedings—Acts in Excess of Judicial Power—Inducing Criminal Defendant to Waive Time for Sentencing Without Disclosing Purpose.—In proceedings concerning alleged misconduct by a superior court judge, there was clear and convincing evidence that the judge engaged in willful misconduct in inducing a criminal defendant and his counsel to waive time for sentencing without disclosing the purpose. It was only after obtaining a two-month time waiver from both defense counsel and the defendant, after asking defense counsel to "trust" him, that the judge disclosed that he wanted the attorneys to research whether he could order prison authorities to withhold from an HIV-positive inmate, such as the defendant, any medical treatment for that condition. It was clear from defense counsel's vigorous disagreement with the time waiver immediately after the judge revealed the real reason for the continuance that the judge had tricked counsel into agreeing to the waiver. Judges have a special responsibility to deal honestly and forthrightly with all who appear before them, and when a judge displays a lack of integrity, confidence in the entire judiciary is weakened. A judge's attempt to take an attorney unawares by concealing material information is an abuse of the judicial process constituting willful misconduct.

[See 2 Witkin, Cal. Procedure (4th ed. 1996) Courts, § 70 et seq.]

(6) Judges § 6.4—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Proceedings—Constitutionality of Canon Proscribing Public Comment on Pending Cases—First Amendment: Constitutional Law § 55—Public Speech.—Cal. Code Jud. Conduct, former canon 3A(6), which prohibited judges from publicly commenting on pending cases, was not invalid under U.S. Const., 1st Amend., as an impermissible restriction on public speech. The burden imposed on judges was outweighed by the benefits the canon achieved in furthering the state's compelling interest in maintaining a judicial system that is fair, impartial, and efficient, both in fact and as perceived by the public. Judges must be, and must be perceived to be, neutral arbiters of both fact and law who apply the law uniformly and consistently. A judge's public comment on a pending case threatens the state's interest in maintaining public confidence in the judiciary whether or not the case is pending before the commenting judge. Former canon 3A(6)'s restrictions were narrowly drawn to apply only to proceedings that were pending or impending, not those that had become final, and it did not prohibit judges from making public statements in the course of their official duties or from explaining for public information the procedures of the court.

(7) Judges § 6.4—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Proceedings—Constitutionality of Canon Proscribing Public Comment on Pending Cases—Vagueness: Constitutional Law § 115—Substantive Due Process.—In proceedings concerning alleged misconduct by a superior court judge, arising after the judge violated Cal. Code Jud. Conduct, former canon 3A(6), by publicly commenting on two criminal cases that were pending either in his court or in the Court of Appeal, the former canon's prohibition against public comment on pending cases by judges was not void for vagueness. A rule is not void for vagueness if it provides fair notice to those to whom it is directed. Although the judge had recused himself from any further participation in one of the cases while the decision was pending on appeal, the former canon clearly included matters pending on appeal, expressly referring to a proceeding pending "in any court." Nor was the judge left to guess as to how "public" a public comment had to be to violate the former canon. A matter is public if it is open or available to all, that is, accessible to everybody. The words "public comment" in the former canon gave the judge fair notice that it referred to comments disseminated to the community.

(8) Judges § 6.2—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Grounds—Judicial Misconduct—Prejudicial Conduct—Public Comment on Pending Cases.—A superior court judge committed judicial misconduct when he violated Cal. Code Jud. Conduct, former canon 3A(6), by publicly commenting on two criminal cases that were pending either in his court or in the Court of Appeal. A finding of willful misconduct in office requires that the misconduct occur while the judge is acting in a judicial capacity. A judge acts in a judicial capacity while performing a function associated with the position of a judge or when the judge uses or attempts to use the authority of the judicial office for an improper purpose. Since the judge's public comments were made during interviews with the press, they did not constitute willful misconduct in office. However, his actions constituted prejudicial conduct, that is, conduct that a judge undertakes in good faith but that nevertheless appears to an objective observer to be not only unjudicial conduct but conduct prejudicial to the public esteem for the judicial office. The judge engaged in unjudicial conduct by violating Cal. Code Jud. Conduct, former canon 3A(6), with knowledge of its restrictions, when he made public comments in an attempt to justify and defend his decisions while those decisions were pending on appeal. In doing so, he adopted the role of an advocate, and such actions would appear to an objective observer to be prejudicial to public esteem for the judicial office.

(9) Judges § 6.2—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Grounds—Judicial Misconduct—Prejudicial Conduct—Attempts to Affect Outcome of Case in Other Court.—A superior court judge committed judicial misconduct when he tried to affect the outcome of a legal malpractice case in another court, which involved an attorney against whom the judge bore personal animosity. The judge's acts did not constitute willful misconduct, since they were not acts committed while he was acting in his judicial capacity. However, the acts constituted prejudicial conduct, that is, conduct that would appear to an objective observer to be prejudicial to public esteem for the judicial office. The judge expressed his intense dislike of the attorney to the plaintiff's counsel and offered assistance in strengthening the malpractice action against the attorney. Later, during the attorney's testimony, the judge briefly attended the trial, and the jurors noted and discussed his visit. Taken together, the judge's actions, which were motivated by personal animosity, would have appeared to an objective observer to be prejudicial to the public esteem for the judicial office. Although the judge asserted that he came to the courtroom because he thought the attorney might perjure himself, this was speculation on the judge's part, and he had no duty to take action to prevent speculative misconduct. Nor were the judge's actions protected by U.S. Const., 1st & 14th Amends. While a judge's position does not divest him or her of constitutional rights, such rights are not the same as those of a private citizen. The state's interest in regulating conduct increases with the authority and accountability of the public position at issue.

(10) Judges § 6.4—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Proceedings—Due Process—Appointment of Special Masters—Delay in Interviewing Witnesses.—In proceedings concerning alleged misconduct by a superior court judge, the role of the Commission on Judicial Performance in selecting the special masters to hear the case did not violate the judge's right to due process. Cal. Rules of Court, former rule 907, provided: "In place of or in addition to a hearing before the commission, the commission may request the Supreme Court to appoint three special masters to hear and take evidence in the matter, and to report to the Commission." Although the Supreme Court's order stated that the three special masters in this case were "selected by the commission," the list from which the commission selected the special masters was provided by the Supreme Court and the special masters were actually appointed by the court. Nothing in former rule 907 prohibited the Supreme Court from accepting or rejecting a recommendation of the commission for the appointment of special masters whose names the commission drew from a list provided by the court. Nor did the judge show that his due process rights were violated. Although the commission's staff and examiners waited almost two years after the first notice of formal proceedings to start interviewing witnesses, the judge failed to demonstrate he was prejudiced by the delay. The judge did not identify the testimony of any material witnesses whose memory was impaired by the passage of time, and several of the charges concerned matters the commission could adequately investigate without questioning witnesses.

(11) Judges § 6.4—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Proceedings—Due Process—Inaccurate and Omitted Allegations—Delayed Hearing.—In proceedings concerning alleged misconduct by a superior court judge, the Commission on Judicial Performance did not deny the judge his right to due process by including unfounded and inflammatory allegations in the notice of formal proceedings. Although one count alleged that in an interview the judge gave to a magazine, he quoted an African-American criminal defendant while "mimicking a black accent," the commission's counsel moved to strike this allegation on the first day of the hearing after learning that the defendant was White. The special masters granted the motion. Since this error was corrected before any evidence was presented, the judge suffered no prejudice. Moreover, while it was true that the judge had to defend against allegations not included in the pleadings, he failed to show that he was surprised, disadvantaged, or otherwise legally prejudiced by the allegations. Nor was the judge able to show that he suffered prejudice from a "delay" by the commission in bringing the proceedings to a hearing. A claim of undue delay requires a showing of actual prejudice, and the judge failed to make such a showing. Although the judge asserted that he was disadvantaged by lapses in his memory in two instances, both pertained to counts that were dismissed; thus, he suffered no prejudice.

(12) Judges § 6.4—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Proceedings—Due Process—Discovery—Notes of Conversation With Potentially Adverse Witness.—In proceedings concerning alleged misconduct by a superior court judge, the Commission on Judicial Performance did not deny the judge his right to due process at the hearing before the special masters by not timely providing his counsel with notes of a discussion between one of the commission's attorneys and a witness. Although the attorney did not make his notes pertaining to his conversation with the witness immediately available, the attorney did provide them to the judge's counsel before the witness testified as a mitigation witness for the judge. After reviewing the notes, the judge's counsel did not seek a continuance; in calling the witness as a mitigation witness, the judge's counsel was under the mistaken belief that the witness's unfavorable character evidence would not be admissible on cross-examination. There was nothing improper in the conduct of the examiners, nor anything in this incident to suggest bias on their part. Moreover, the commission's recommendation of public censure and its stated decision to "limit" the value of mitigation evidence was not an impermissible reaction to the judge's assertedly vigorous legal defense in the proceedings. Rather, the commission's comment indicated that the commission based its recommendation of public censure in part on the judge's lack of remorse, as shown by his unwillingness to accept responsibility for clearly established misconduct. Lack of remorse is a relevant consideration in judicial discipline and in criminal sentencing.

(13) Judges § 6.4—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Proceedings—Purpose.—In making its independent determination of the appropriate disciplinary sanction, the Supreme Court considers the purpose of a Commission on Judicial Performance disciplinary proceeding —which is not punishment, but rather the protection of the public, the enforcement of rigorous standards of judicial conduct, and the maintenance of public confidence in the integrity and independence of the judicial system.

(14) Judges § 6—Removal, Censure, and Other Discipline—Public Censure—Propriety.—In proceedings concerning misconduct by a superior court judge, in which the evidence showed that the judge engaged in willful misconduct in office by inducing a criminal defendant and his counsel into waiving time for sentencing without disclosing the purpose, and that the judge engaged in prejudicial misconduct by attempting to influence the outcome of a civil action involving an attorney against whom the judge bore personal animosity, and by publicly commenting on two pending cases, the appropriate discipline was public censure. While the judge presented mitigating evidence, and such evidence may be taken into account in considering the totality of the circumstances, it does not mitigate or excuse willful or prejudicial conduct. The commission considered the evidence in mitigation, but it concluded that the seriousness of the misconduct warranted public censure, especially in light of the judge's refusal to accept any responsibility for his conduct. Proportionality review based on discipline imposed in other cases was neither required nor determinative; choosing the proper sanction turns on the facts of the case at bar. Also, a level of discipline may be warranted either by the existence of a pattern of misconduct or by the seriousness of a single incident. In light of the judge's lack of candor and integrity, public censure was appropriate.

COUNSEL

Lewis, D'Amato, Brisbois & Bisgaard, James E. Friedhofer, McCormick, Barstow, Sheppard, Wayte & Carruth, Stephen R. Cornwell and Gregroy S. Mason for Petitioner.

Stephen R. Barnett and J. Clark Kelso for California Judges Association as Amicus Curiae on behalf of Petitioner.

John Shepard Wiley, Jr., and Dennis F. Coupe for Respondent.

OPINION

THE COURT.—A judge may be disciplined for (1) willful misconduct in office, (2) persistent failure or inability to perform judicial duties, (3) habitual intemperance in the use of intoxicants or drugs, or (4) conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute. (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (d) [former subd. (c)].) The discipline can be private or public admonishment, censure, or removal from office. (Ibid.)

Based on evidence presented at a public hearing before three special masters appointed by this court, the Commission on Judicial Performance (hereafter the Commission) determined that Judge Howard R. Broadman of the Tulare County Superior Court had engaged in conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute (hereafter prejudicial conduct). The Commission's recommended discipline is public censure. Judge Broadman has petitioned this court to modify or reject the Commission's recommendation.

We conclude that Judge Broadman (hereafter petitioner) engaged in willful misconduct in office and in prejudicial conduct. We adopt the Commission's recommendation of public censure.

I. PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

The Commission's third amended notice of formal proceedings, the operative pleading in this matter, charged petitioner with both willful misconduct in office and prejudicial conduct. It contained three counts. Count 1 alleged that petitioner abdicated his "duty to respect and comply with the law by taking judicial actions in knowing or reckless disregard of constitutional and other mandates." Count 2 charged that petitioner publicly commented on pending cases in violation of the Code of Judicial Conduct and used the news media as a forum to defend his judicial actions. Count 3 alleged that in matters involving Attorney Arthur Kralowec petitioner failed to conduct himself "in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary."

On June 14, 1995, at the request of the Commission, this court appointed three special masters whom the Commission had selected from a list provided by this court. (Cal. Rules of Court, former rule 907.)[1] The special masters were Superior Court Judges Spurgeon Avakian (retired) and Jay Pfotenhauer (retired), and Municipal Court Judge Jane York. After 27 days of evidentiary hearings, Special Masters Avakian and Pfotenhauer filed a majority report with the Commission, while Special Master York filed a concurring and dissenting report. As to the charges relevant here, Special Masters Avakian and Pfotenhauer concluded that petitioner had engaged in willful misconduct and prejudicial conduct by the manner in which he induced a criminal defendant and his counsel to waive time for sentencing, in prejudicial conduct by publicly commenting on pending cases, and in willful misconduct and prejudicial conduct in matters involving Attorney Arthur Kralowec. Special Master York, on the other hand, concluded that petitioner's actions were prejudicial conduct as to all of the charges relevant here. The special masters made no recommendation as to the appropriate discipline.

The Commission, after hearing oral argument, determined that the record established by clear and convincing evidence that petitioner had engaged in prejudicial conduct by: (1) inducing a criminal defendant and his counsel to waive time for sentencing without disclosing the purpose, (2) publicly commenting on two pending cases, and (3) attempting to influence the outcome of a civil action against Attorney Arthur Kralowec while it was pending before another superior court judge. The Commission recommends public censure.

II. THRESHOLD ISSUES

Petitioner raises several issues concerning the scope of this court's authority to review the Commission's recommendations, the standard of proof the Commission must satisfy to sustain its charges, and, together with his amicus curiae, the California Judges Association (hereafter the CJA), the perceived ambiguity in this court's definition of willful misconduct in office. We address these threshold questions before discussing the facts underlying the charges and the issues related to them.

[1]Effective December 1, 1996, a number of the California Rules of Court relating to judicial discipline were repealed. Unless otherwise indicated, citations to the rules are to the version of the rules applicable at the time of the relevant events or proceedings.

A. This Court's Authority

Petitioner argues that the state Constitution limits the scope of this court's role in reviewing Commission recommendations in two related respects. First, he asserts that when the Commission finds that a judge committed an improper act, and that the act was prejudicial conduct but not willful misconduct, our task is simply to determine whether the judge committed the act in question and whether the act amounted to prejudicial conduct. We may not, he claims, find that the act constituted willful misconduct. Second, he contends that when the Commission has recommended that this court impose a particular type of discipline, in this case public censure, we may either adopt the recommendation or we may absolve the judge, but we may not impose a discipline more severe than that recommended. We reject both contentions.

Former subdivision (c) of article VI, section 18, of the California Constitution provided that on "recommendation of the Commission," this court has jurisdiction to "censure or remove a judge for action . . . that constitutes willful misconduct in office . . . or conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute." (As amended Nov. 9, 1988.)[2] (1) Because our power to discipline a judge is contingent on a recommendation of the Commission, we may not impose judicial discipline on our own initiative (Spruance v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1975) 13 Cal.3d 778, 784, fn. 5 [119 Cal.Rptr. 841, 532 P.2d 1209]), and we may consider only those charges of willful misconduct or prejudicial conduct that the Commission sustained (ibid.; Dodds v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 12 Cal.4th at p. 168). Our review of the record is independent, however. We make findings of fact; we decide as a question of law whether the conduct warrants sanctioning the judge; and we make the ultimate decision whether to dismiss the proceeding or to admonish, censure, or remove the judge. (Geiler v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1973) 10 Cal.3d 270, 276 [110 Cal.Rptr. 201, 515 P.2d 1].) Accordingly, this court can conclude that a judge engaged in willful misconduct, even if the Commission found that the judge's actions were not willful misconduct, but prejudicial conduct. (See, e.g., McCullough v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1989) 49 Cal.3d 186, 195-196 [260 Cal.Rptr. 557, 776 P.2d 259]; Ryan v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1988) 45 Cal.3d 518, 535 [247 Cal.Rptr. 378, 754 P.2d 724, 76 A.L.R.4th 951].) As we have observed

[2]Article VI, section 18, of the California Constitution governs the disciplining of judges. On November 8, 1994, the voters approved Proposition 190, which significantly changed the procedure for this court's review of Commission decisions but not the grounds for judicial discipline. Because the facts here occurred before the March 1, 1995, effective date of the amendments, we apply the former version of article VI, section 18. (Dodds v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1995) 12 Cal.4th 163, 168, fn. 1 [48 Cal.Rptr.2d 106, 906 P.2d 1260].)

in the past, "the ultimate disposition rests with this court." (Furey v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1987) 43 Cal.3d 1297, 1317 [240 Cal.Rptr. 859, 743 P.2d 919], citing Spruance v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications, supra, 13 Cal.3d at pp. 799-800 & fn. 18.) Therefore, this court can, after an independent review, increase or decrease the discipline that the Commission has recommended. (See Geiler v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications, supra, 10 Cal.3d at p. 276.)

B. Standard of Proof

(2) In judicial discipline proceedings, this court reviews the record and determines whether there is "clear and convincing evidence" to sustain the charges to a reasonable certainty. (See, e.g., Dodds v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 12 Cal.4th at p. 168; Ryan v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 45 Cal.3d at p. 530.) In In re Angelia P. (1981) 28 Cal.3d 908, 919 [171 Cal.Rptr. 637, 623 P.2d 198], we described "clear and convincing" evidence as " ' "so clear as to leave no substantial doubt"; "sufficiently strong to command the unhesitating assent of every reasonable mind." ' " Petitioner quotes that statement to support his assertion that if the "evidence is consistent with a hypothesis urged by the judge, this court is bound to accept that hypothesis."

Petitioner in essence equates the "clear and convincing" evidentiary standard with proof beyond a reasonable doubt. Thus, he argues, any reasonable doubt must be resolved in his favor, and any fact favorable to his interests is established if it is reasonably supported by the evidence. Petitioner is wrong. Evidence of a charge is clear and convincing so long as there is a "high probability" that the charge is true. (See, e.g., In re Angelia P., supra, 28 Cal.3d at p. 919; BAJI No. 2.62 (8th ed. 1994); 1 Witkin, Cal. Evidence (3d ed. 1986) Burden of Proof and Presumptions, § 160, p. 137.) The evidence need not establish the fact beyond a reasonable doubt.

Equally meritless is petitioner's contention that less-than-unanimous decisions by the 11-member Commission are "inherently suspect." We give "special weight" to the factual determinations of the special masters because they had the advantage of observing the demeanor of the witnesses. (Dodds v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 12 Cal.4th at p. 168.) Similarly, because of the Commission's expertise in evaluating judicial misconduct, we give "great weight" to its conclusions of law. (See ibid.; Kennick v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1990) 50 Cal.3d 297, 314 [267 Cal.Rptr. 293, 787 P.2d 591, 87 A.L.R.4th 679].) We are "particularly deferential" to the Commission when it speaks with one voice, that is, unanimously. (Dodds v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, at p.

168.) Lack of unanimity, however, does not render the Commission's conclusions "inherently suspect," as petitioner claims. Although we will carefully consider any diverse views expressed by the Commission, the ultimate decision we will have to make is whether there is clear and convincing evidence to sustain the charges.

C. Willful Misconduct and Prejudicial Conduct

1. Willful Misconduct

(3) To commit willful misconduct in office, a judge must (1) engage in conduct that is unjudicial and (2) committed in bad faith, (3) while acting in a judicial capacity. (See, e.g., Dodds v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 12 Cal.4th at p. 172; Doan v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1995) 11 Cal.4th 294, 311 [45 Cal.Rptr.2d 254, 902 P.2d 272].) Both petitioner and the CJA urge us to clarify the second of these elements. In past decisions, they note, this court has stated that judges act in bad faith when they engage in conduct they "should have known" to be beyond their lawful judicial powers. Petitioner and the CJA argue that this definition of bad faith threatens judicial independence because it allows judges to be disciplined for honest mistakes, and because the power to discipline for such mistakes may be used against judges whose decisions have generated public controversy.

This court has said that bad faith, as an element of willful misconduct in office, means "that the judge 'intentionally committed acts which he knew or should have known were beyond his lawful power' [citation] or 'acts within the lawful power of a judge which nevertheless [were] committed . . . for any purpose other than the faithful discharge of judicial duties' [citations]." (Dodds v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 12 Cal.4th at p. 172, original bracket and ellipsis, italics added.) Although in other contexts this court has equated the phrase "should have known" with a negligence standard (see, e.g., Carlin v. Superior Court (1996) 13 Cal.4th 1104, 1112, fn. 2 [56 Cal.Rptr.2d 162, 920 P.2d 1347]), it does not have this meaning when used to define the bad faith element of willful misconduct in office. Indeed, we have rejected the argument that a judge's intentional commission of an act that the judge "should have known" was beyond the judge's lawful authority "is sufficient in and of itself" to demonstrate the bad faith required for willful misconduct in office. (Gubler v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1984) 37 Cal.3d 27, 46, fn. 7 [207 Cal.Rptr. 171, 688 P.2d 551].) And we have said that "negligence alone, if not so gross as to call its genuineness into question, falls short of 'bad faith.' " (Spruance v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications, supra, 13 Cal.3d at p. 796.)

In the context of defining willful misconduct in office, we have equated bad faith with "actual malice," and we have contrasted it with a conscientious purpose to faithfully discharge judicial duties. (See, e.g., Doan v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 11 Cal.4th at p. 311; Gonzalez v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1983) 33 Cal.3d 359, 365 [188 Cal.Rptr. 880, 657 P.2d 372]; Spruance v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications, supra, 13 Cal.3d at p. 796.) Because transgressing the limits of a judge's lawful authority is not the faithful discharge of judicial duties, a judge who performs such acts with no regard at all for whether they are legally permitted cannot be said to be acting with a purpose to faithfully discharge judicial duties. Thus, a judge's reckless or utter indifference to whether judicial acts being performed exceed the bounds of the judge's prescribed power is a state of mind properly characterized as bad faith. Accordingly, our references in past decisions to bad faith as including judicial acts that a judge "should have known" to be beyond the judge's lawful judicial power are properly understood as referring to the state of mind in which a judge lacks actual knowledge of the limits on his or her judicial authority, is fully aware of this lack of knowledge, and fails or refuses to take reasonably available steps or to make a good faith effort to determine the extent of his or her judicial authority before undertaking to exercise it.

To summarize, we agree with petitioner and the CJA that mere negligence cannot satisfy the bad faith element of willful misconduct in office by a judge and that the phrase "should have known," because of its association in other contexts with a negligence standard, is potentially misleading and should be avoided. A judge acts in bad faith only by (1) performing a judicial act for a corrupt purpose (which is any purpose other than the faithful discharge of judicial duties), or (2) performing a judicial act with knowledge that the act is beyond the judge's lawful judicial power, or (3) performing a judicial act that exceeds the judge's lawful power with a conscious disregard for the limits of the judge's authority.

2. Prejudicial Conduct

(4) Prejudicial conduct is distinguishable from willful misconduct in that a judge's acts may constitute prejudicial conduct even if not committed in a judicial capacity, or, if committed in a judicial capacity, not committed in bad faith. Prejudicial conduct is "either 'conduct which a judge undertakes in good faith but which nevertheless would appear to an objective observer to be not only unjudicial conduct but conduct prejudicial to public esteem for the judicial office' [citation] or 'willful misconduct out of office, i.e., unjudicial conduct committed in bad faith by a judge not then acting in a judicial capacity' [citation]." (Doan v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 11 Cal.4th at p. 312, original italics.) In this context, bad faith means a culpable mental state beyond mere negligence and consisting of either knowing or not caring that the conduct being undertaken is unjudicial and prejudicial to public esteem. In sum, to constitute prejudicial conduct, a judge's actions must bring "the judicial office into disrepute," that is, the conduct would appear to an objective observer to be prejudicial to " 'public esteem for the judicial office.' " (Kennick v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 50 Cal.3d at p. 314.)

III. REVIEW OF COMMISSION FINDINGS AND CONCLUSIONS

We now address the issues relating to the facts in this case.

A. Acts in Excess of Judicial Power

The Commission agreed with the finding by a majority of the special masters that petitioner used deception in procuring a waiver of time for sentencing from criminal defendant Levert Hooks. Petitioner contends there is no clear and convincing evidence to support this finding. We disagree.

1. Facts

Defendant Hooks, who had tested positively for human immunodeficiency virus (HIV), was convicted of five counts of raping a fifteen-year-old girl. On Thursday, January 5, 1995, when Hooks and his attorney, Charles Rothbaum, appeared before petitioner for sentencing, petitioner announced at the outset: "This is the case of People versus Levert Hooks. I would like a time waiver on this case because I would like to present some questions to you folks before we impose sentence in this case for you to think about and to do some research on."[3] When petitioner responded "yes" to Attorney Rothbaum's inquiry whether the court wanted to set the sentencing hearing for a later date, Rothbaum said, "That's fine." The prosecution likewise agreed. Petitioner continued the sentencing hearing to March 7, 1995. The following colloquy between defense counsel and petitioner then took place:

"MR. ROTHBAUM: Can I inquire as to what you plan on doing between now and then in this case? It's a long delay. We don't mind. I'm just wondering what you're up to.

"THE COURT: I'm going to be asking you some questions to do some research on.

[3]Because a criminal defendant has a statutory right to be sentenced within 20 judicial days of the verdict of guilty (Pen. Code, § 1191), the imposition of sentence beyond that period requires the defendant's waiver of the time for sentencing.

"MR. ROTHBAUM: Three months worth of research?

"THE COURT: Well, isn't that two months?

"MR. ROTHBAUM: Two months. Well, all right, two months worth of research.

"THE COURT: Trust me.

"MR. ROTHBAUM: All right. That's fine.

"THE COURT: Is that okay with you, Mr. Hooks?

"THE DEFENDANT: Yeah." (Italics added.)

Petitioner then mentioned that he had heard over the radio that it cost the state $100,000 a year to provide medical treatment for an incarcerated HIV-positive inmate. After noting the probation report's recommended sentence of 40 years in prison, petitioner explained what he had in mind: "What I have thought of is a potential order that once the conviction is final that the government doctors shall not be required to provide prophylactic medicine or medicine to treat the incurable disease, but rather shall be required to provide him with food, hydration, and pain medication."[4]

Defense counsel Rothbaum immediately moved to withdraw his client's waiver of the time for sentencing. When petitioner denied the motion, defense counsel stated: "[W]hat you've basically done today is to extract from Mr. Hooks, without him knowing it, a waiver of time in order for you to be able to divest him, if you can, of what he at the present time is entitled to, which is medical care while he is in custody of the California Correctional System. [¶] There is no way that he is going to assist the court in divesting him of medical treatment if, in fact, he needs it and he's entitled to it. That's what you are asking us to do. [¶] You're asking him to let you have two months to see if you can screw him basically. That's not right. That's not right. And I didn't understand it. [¶] I certainly had no understanding of what was going on here when you made the request for the time waiver because you didn't tell me what it was about. And I certainly can't join in the entry of a waiver once I know the reason for it. [¶] It wasn't a knowing—it wasn't a knowing waiver."

[4]While this proceeding was pending before this court, the United States Supreme Court held, in Bragdon v. Abbott (1998) __ U.S. __ [118 S.Ct. 2196, 141 L.Ed.2d 540], that HIV is a disability within the meaning of the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990 (ADA) (42 U.S.C. § 12101 et seq.) even when the infection has not progressed to the symptomatic stage. The high court also held the ADA applies to inmates in state prisons (Pennsylvania Department of Corrections v. Yeskey (1998) __ U.S. __ [118 S.Ct. 1952, 141 L.Ed.2d 215]).

Petitioner responded: "He may not have known why, but he knew he was waiving time."

Later that day, after the hearing had been concluded, petitioner asked his clerk to notify both the prosecution and the defense attorney that the Hooks case had been placed on the court's calendar for the following Monday, January 9, at 8:30 a.m.

On Friday, January 6, the day after the sentencing hearing involving the waiver, a local newspaper, the Visalia Times-Delta, reported the statements petitioner had made at the hearing regarding his concern about the high cost of providing medical care to HIV-positive inmates. The article also mentioned the prosecution's view that the matter should be left to the correctional system. And it quoted defense attorney Rothbaum, who described petitioner's proposal to order the prison to withhold medical treatment from defendant Hooks as cruel and unusual punishment, and a "barbaric" attempt to impose a death sentence.

At the Monday, January 9, 1995, hearing, petitioner told the parties that he had placed the Hooks matter back on the court's calendar to clarify that his concern was with the allocation of resources within the prison system, not with HIV. He added: "A review of the transcript indicates that I misspoke. I told Mr. Rothbaum to trust me. And what I meant to say was, 'Mr. Rothbaum, trust me, you'll need all this time for the research.' And I didn't indicate that, and I think that that may have been misleading to Mr. Rothbaum." Rothbaum responded that he was misled by petitioner's failure to disclose his real purpose for requesting a time waiver, not by the "trust me" remark. Petitioner sentenced Hooks to a total of 50 years in prison on the 5 counts of rape. The sentence made no mention of medical treatment.

2. Commission's Findings and Conclusions

The Commission, by a vote of nine to two, found that petitioner's conduct in obtaining the time waiver in the Hooks case was improper. Although the Commission observed that petitioner's conduct "could plainly be willful misconduct," it nevertheless found petitioner's actions to be prejudicial conduct rather than willful misconduct because petitioner had, by putting the matter back on the court's calendar, acted promptly to correct his actions. The two dissenting commissioners voted to dismiss the charge.

3. Our Review of the Commission's Decision

(5) After an independent review of the record (Dodds v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 12 Cal.4th at p. 168), we conclude there is clear and convincing evidence that petitioner engaged in willful misconduct in office in obtaining the waiver of the time for sentencing in People v. Hooks.

As we noted before, a judge engages in willful misconduct when, while acting in a judicial capacity, the judge acts in a manner that is unjudicial and in bad faith (that is, for a purpose other than the faithful discharge of judicial duties, or with knowledge that the act is beyond the judicial power, or with a conscious disregard for the limits of the judge's authority). As described in detail earlier, petitioner began the sentencing hearing by asking defense counsel and defendant Hooks to waive time for sentencing because he had "some questions" that he wanted the attorneys for both parties to research. When neither attorney indicated a problem in continuing the sentencing hearing to some future date, petitioner set the hearing for March 7, 1995. At that point, defense counsel expressed concern about the two-month delay: "Can I inquire as to what you plan on doing between now and then in this case? It is a long delay. We don't mind. I'm just wondering what you're up to." Petitioner reiterated his desire to have the attorneys do research on "some questions." When defense counsel inquired as to the need for "two months of research," petitioner replied: "Trust me."

Only after obtaining a time waiver from both defense counsel and defendant Hooks did petitioner disclose that he wanted the attorneys to research whether he could order prison authorities to withhold from an HIV-positive inmate, such as defendant Hooks, any medical treatment for that condition. Defense counsel then strenuously objected, stating that his client was entitled to medical treatment, adding: "That's not right. That's not right. And I didn't understand it. [¶] I certainly had no understanding of what was going on here when you made the request for the time waiver because you didn't tell me what it was about. And I certainly can't join in the entry of a waiver once I know the reason for it. [¶] It wasn't a knowing—it wasn't a knowing waiver."

As this exchange demonstrates, petitioner did not reveal the real reason for his request for a time waiver until he, after asking defense counsel to "trust" him, received a time waiver from defendant and his counsel.

According to petitioner and his amicus curiae, the CJA, petitioner's "trust me" response referred to the substantial time (two months) that the attorneys would need to research the issue of withholding medical treatment from defendant Hooks during his incarceration in prison, and it had no bearing on the waiver issue. Even if we were to agree with this interpretation of the record, it is clear from defense counsel's vigorous disagreement with the continuance immediately after petitioner revealed the real reason for the continuance that petitioner had indeed "tricked" counsel into agreeing to the continuance. As the Commission in this case pointed out: "Judges have a special responsibility to deal honestly and forthrightly with all who appear before them, and when a judge displays a lack of integrity, as did [petitioner] in Hooks, confidence in the entire judiciary is weakened." A judge's attempt to "take [an attorney] unawares" by concealing material information, as petitioner did here, is "an abuse of the judicial process" constituting willful misconduct. (Wenger v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1981) 29 Cal.3d 615, 631 [175 Cal.Rptr. 420, 630 P.2d 954].)

B. Public Comment on Pending Cases

At the time relevant here, canon 3A(6) of the former California Code of Judicial Conduct prohibited judges from making "public comment about a pending or impending proceeding in any court . . . ."[5]

Count 2 charged petitioner with violating former canon 3A(6) by publicly commenting on two criminal cases that were pending either in his court or in the Court of Appeal, People v. Zaring and People v. Johnson, and by continuing to do so after the Commission had advised him of the impropriety of his conduct. A discussion of the pertinent facts in these two cases follows.

1. People v. Zaring

Defendant Linda Zaring pleaded guilty to possessing and being under the influence of a controlled substance. Petitioner placed her on probation for five years on the condition, among others, that she "not get pregnant" during this period. Petitioner told Zaring: "You're thirty years old. None of your children are in your custody or control. Two of them on AFDC. And I'm afraid that if you get pregnant we're going to get a cocaine or heroin addicted baby." At a later proceeding, when Zaring was 22 minutes late for a court appearance, petitioner immediately revoked her probation and remanded her to the custody of the sheriff. On appeal, the court affirmed the conviction but held that the "no pregnancy" probation condition was overbroad, and thus invalid, because it impinged upon the exercise of the fundamental right to privacy. As to petitioner's order revoking probation, the Court of Appeal found that to be an abuse of discretion. (People v. Zaring (1992) 8 Cal.App.4th 362, 370-373, 379 [10 Cal.Rptr.2d 263].)

[5]The California Code of Judicial Conduct was replaced by the California Code of Judicial Ethics, effective January 15, 1996. The substance of former canon 3A(6) now appears in canon 3B(9) of the 1996 California Code of Judicial Ethics. Canon 3B(9), like former canon 3A(6), prohibits judges from making "public comment about a pending or impending proceeding in any court . . . ."

2. People v. Johnson

Defendant Darlene Johnson pleaded guilty to three felony counts of corporal injury to two of her children. Petitioner granted probation to Johnson, who was then seven months' pregnant, and, after Johnson told him that she did not want to get pregnant again, imposed a probation condition that she be implanted with "Norplant," a birth control device then newly approved by the federal Food and Drug Administration. At a later hearing, petitioner denied Johnson's request to delete the Norplant birth control condition. But he granted Johnson's motion to stay imposition of that condition pending appeal, and he disqualified himself from further proceedings in the case. Following revocation of Johnson's probation by another judge, the Court of Appeal dismissed Johnson's appeal as moot.

On March 18, 1991, the Commission notified petitioner in writing that it had ordered a preliminary investigation to determine whether he had violated former canon 3A(6) of the California Code of Judicial Conduct by publicly commenting on the Johnson case, first while it was pending in his court and later while it was on appeal. The letter went on to state that when the Norplant probation condition attracted national media attention, petitioner publicly explained his reasons for imposing the condition. The Commission noted that petitioner's public comments before the date of the hearing at which he considered defendant Johnson's motion to reconsider the Norplant probation condition created the appearance that he had prejudged the motion, and that his comments after that date gave the appearance that he was trying to influence the decision on appeal, thereby undermining public confidence in the judiciary's objectivity and impartiality.

Also in March 1991, apparently before the Commission's letter to petitioner just described, petitioner gave an interview to West Magazine explaining his reasons for the probation conditions in both the Zaring and Johnson cases. An article reporting this interview was published on July 9, 1991.

On April 4, 1991, petitioner responded in writing to the Commission's letter of March 18 pertaining to the Norplant condition in the Johnson case. He said that since becoming a judge he had been fully aware of former canon 3A(6)'s prohibition against publicly commenting on pending cases. He admitted giving interviews to several newspapers and television shows regarding the Johnson case, but stated that he had not sought media attention and had declined to appear on a number of television shows. Through his comments, he said, he had sought to explain both the Norplant probation condition and court procedures; and, when first interviewed, he did not know that defendant Johnson would file a motion to have him reconsider the Norplant condition.

On May 16, 1991, the Commission notified petitioner by letter that it had rejected his claim that his comments were confined to procedural matters, concluding that he had violated former canon 3A(6). The Commission found petitioner's comments to detract from the appearance of judicial impartiality, and it directed his attention to former canon 2, which prohibited judicial conduct creating the appearance of impropriety. Nevertheless, while expressing "strong reservations," the letter informed petitioner that "the facts do not constitute grounds for proceeding further and [the Commission] determined to close its preliminary investigation of your statements to the media and issue this advisory letter."

In November 1991, petitioner gave an interview to Time magazine at his home. He again publicly commented on the Johnson case and defended himself against criticism of the Norplant probation condition. The article reporting this interview was published on March 9, 1992.

3. Commission's Findings and Conclusions

The Commission found as follows: When, in interviews he gave to West Magazine and Time, petitioner publicly commented on the "no pregnancy" probation conditions in the Johnson and Zaring cases, those cases were pending on appeal. Petitioner knew of former canon 3A(6)'s prohibition against publicly commenting on pending cases. He gave an interview to Time magazine and commented on the then-pending Johnson case after the Commission's letter to him stating that public comment on pending cases was improper. Petitioner conceded to the special masters that his public comments to Time and West Magazine violated the canon in question.

The Commission unanimously concluded that petitioner's actions constituted prejudicial conduct. It dismissed the charges concerning petitioner's public comments in interviews given to other publications "in view of the Commission's findings of conduct prejudicial as to [the West Magazine and Time interviews], and in view of the potential for overlapping sanctions . . . ."

4. Our Review of the Commission's Decision

(6) Petitioner concedes that he violated former canon 3A(6) when he publicly commented on the "no pregnancy" probation conditions he had imposed in the Johnson and Zaring cases. He insists, however, that no discipline can be imposed because as a judge he has a right under the First Amendment to the federal Constitution to make public comments on pending cases unless those comments pose a "substantial likelihood of material prejudice" to a fair trial. In support he cites the United States Supreme Court's decision in Gentile v. State Bar of Nevada (1991) 501 U.S. 1030 [111 S.Ct. 2720, 115 L.Ed.2d 888], upholding a Nevada Supreme Court rule prohibiting lawyers from making public comments on pending cases that would pose a "substantial likelihood of materially prejudicing" a legal proceeding. We are not persuaded that the same standard applies to judges.

When a regulation implicates First Amendment rights, the constitutional validity of the restriction is determined by balancing the First Amendment interest against the state's legitimate interest in regulating the activity in issue. (See, e.g., Gentile v. State Bar of Nevada, supra, 501 U.S. at p. 1075 [111 S.Ct. at p. 2745]; Seattle Times Co. v. Rhinehart (1984) 467 U.S. 20, 32 [104 S.Ct. 2199, 2207, 81 L.Ed.2d 17].) Lawyers' "extrajudicial statements pose a threat to the fairness of a pending proceeding since lawyers' statements are likely to be received as especially authoritative." (Gentile v. State Bar of Nevada, supra, at p. 1074 [111 S.Ct. at p. 2745].) For this reason, regulation of public commentary by lawyers in pending cases serves the state's interest in ensuring fair trials. (Id. at p. 1075 [111 S.Ct. at p. 2745].) The state has a greater interest, however, in regulating the public commentary by a judge during the pendency of a proceeding, as explained below.

Because judges and attorneys play different roles in the judicial process, their public comments on pending judicial proceedings threaten the fairness of those proceedings in different ways and to different degrees. The public understands that in judicial proceedings lawyers, although also officers of the court, are advocates for the interests of their clients (see, e.g., Gentile v. State Bar of Nevada, supra, 501 U.S. at p. 1051 [111 S.Ct. at pp. 2732-2733] [professional mission of criminal defense bar is to challenge actions of the state]); therefore, the public does not expect a high degree of neutrality or objectivity when lawyers comment on pending cases, nor does the public expect all attorneys to assess the merits of pending cases in the same way. Judges, by contrast, cannot be advocates for the interests of any parties; they must be, and be perceived to be, neutral arbiters of both fact and law (see Preamble, Cal. Code Jud. Ethics) who apply the law uniformly and consistently. Because judges are both "highly visible member[s] of government" (ibid.) and neutral decision makers in all court proceedings, their public comments will be received by the public as more authoritative than those of lawyers. And because judges have this greater influence over public opinion, inappropriate public comment by judges poses a much greater threat to the fairness of judicial proceedings than improper public comment by lawyers.

A judge's public comment on a pending case threatens the state's interest in maintaining public confidence in the judiciary whether or not the case to which the comment is directed is pending before the commenting judge. When the case is pending before the commenting judge, the public may perceive the comment as indicating that the judge has prejudged the merits of the controversy or is biased against or in favor of one of the parties. (Rothman, Cal. Judicial Conduct Handbook (1990) § 160.550, p. I-39.) When the case is pending before a judge other than the commenting judge, the public may perceive the comment as an attempt to influence the judge who is charged with deciding the case. (Ibid.) Such comments may also create the public impression that the judge has abandoned the judicial role to become an advocate for the judge's own ruling or for the position advanced by one of the parties.

The United States Supreme Court has not yet considered what limits the First Amendment to the federal Constitution imposes on a state's authority to restrict judges from publicly commenting on pending cases. The court has, however, addressed First Amendment limitations on a state's authority generally to regulate public speech by public employees. In Pickering v. Board of Education (1968) 391 U.S. 563 [88 S.Ct. 1731, 20 L.Ed.2d 811] (Pickering), the high court held that the validity of a regulation limiting public employee speech is to be determined by balancing the interests of the employee "as a citizen, in commenting upon matters of public concern and the interest of the State, as an employer, in promoting the efficiency of the public services it performs through its employees." (Id. at p. 568 [88 S.Ct. at pp. 1734-1735].) Because the state's interests in protecting the integrity of the judiciary and in maintaining public confidence in the judiciary are at least as strong as its interest in promoting the efficiency of public services generally, we conclude that the First Amendment protection for public comment on pending cases by judges is no more protective of judges, who are also public employees, than the standard articulated by the United States Supreme Court for evaluating the regulation of public employee speech generally. (Accord, In re Schenck (1994) 318 Or. 402, 433 [870 P.2d 185, 204], cert. den. 513 U.S. 871 [115 S.Ct. 195, 130 L.Ed.2d 127] [adopting the Pickering standard for judicial comment on pending cases]; see Gross, Judicial Speech: Discipline and the First Amendment (1986) 36 Syracuse L.Rev. 1181, 1184-1190; see generally, Annot., First Amendment Protection for Judges or Government Attorneys Subjected to Discharge, Transfer, or Discipline Because of Speech (1992) 108 A.L.R.Fed. 117, 126-127.) And we reject petitioner's proposed standard permitting judges to comment publicly on any pending case unless the particular comment poses a "substantial likelihood of material prejudice," for it affords insufficient protection to the state's interest in both the fact and the appearance of judicial impartiality and integrity.

To better understand how the Pickering test works, we consider those decisions in which the United States Supreme Court has applied it. In

Pickering, supra, 391 U.S. 563, a board of education had dismissed a high school teacher for publicly criticizing the board's allocation of school funds between athletics and education and the board's method of informing the public regarding the need for additional revenue. To determine whether this restriction on a public employee's speech was permissible under the First Amendment, the United States Supreme Court balanced the teacher's interest in commenting upon these matters of public concern against the school district's interest in promoting the efficiency of public schools. (391 U.S. at p. 568 [88 S.Ct. at pp. 1734-1735].) The court concluded that the school board had violated the First Amendment because the teacher's interest outweighed the district's interest. (391 U.S. at pp. 571-573 [88 S.Ct. at pp. 1736-1737].) The court has since used this same analysis in other cases involving restrictions on public employee speech. (See, e.g., Perry v. Sindermann (1972) 408 U.S. 593 [92 S.Ct. 2694, 33 L.Ed.2d 570] [refusal to rehire teacher who had testified before state legislature]; Mt. Healthy City Board of Ed. v. Doyle (1977) 429 U.S. 274 [97 S.Ct. 568, 50 L.Ed.2d 471] [refusal to rehire teacher for relaying substance of teacher dress and appearance memorandum to radio station]; Givnan v. Western Line Consolidated School Dist. (1979) 439 U.S. 410 [99 S.Ct. 693, 58 L.Ed.2d 619] [termination of teacher based on private communications alleging racially discriminatory policies of school district].) In Connick v. Myers (1983) 461 U.S. 138, 146 [103 S.Ct. 1684, 1689-1690, 75 L.Ed.2d 708], the high court held that the First Amendment protection for public employee speech on a subject of no public concern is less than for speech addressed to matters of significant public interest.

The United States Supreme Court has applied this balancing test not only to determine the validity of the discipline imposed on particular public employees for particular public speech, but also to determine the facial validity of broadly worded speech regulations similar to former canon 3A(6). For example, the court used the Pickering balancing test to strike down a statute that prohibited federal employees from accepting compensation for giving speeches or writing articles regardless of whether the subject of the speech or the article, or the sponsoring group, had any connection to the employee's official duties. (United States v. Treasury Employees (1995) 513 U.S. 454, 466-467 [115 S.Ct. 1003, 1012-1013, 130 L.Ed.2d 964].) In another case, the high court applied the Pickering test to uphold, as constitutional on its face, a federal statute prohibiting federal employees from taking an active part in political management or in political campaigns. (CSC v. Letter Carriers (1973) 413 U.S. 548, 564 [93 S.Ct. 2880, 2889-2890, 37 L.Ed.2d 796]; see United States v. Treasury Employees, supra, at p. 467 [115 S.Ct. at p. 1013], reaffirming United Public Workers v. Mitchell (1947) 330 U.S. 75 [67 S.Ct. 556, 91 L.Ed. 754].) Accordingly, the Pickering balancing test may properly be used to determine the facial validity, against a First Amendment challenge, of regulations such as former canon 3A(6).

Generally speaking, court proceedings are matters of public concern and, again generally speaking, judges have as great an interest as other individuals in commenting publicly on these proceedings. Under the Pickering test described above, we determine the validity of former canon 3A(6) under the First Amendment by balancing this general interest of judges in making public comments on court proceedings against the state's interest in the soundness of the judicial system. In doing so, we note that former canon 3A(6)'s restrictions on public comment by judges are narrowly drawn to apply only to proceedings that are pending or impending, not those that have become final, and that the former canon "does not prohibit judges from making public statements in the course of their official duties or from explaining for public information the procedures of the court" (Cal. Code Jud. Conduct, former canon 3A(6)).

As we have explained, there is a compelling public interest in maintaining a judicial system that both is in fact and is publicly perceived as being fair, impartial, and efficient. As we have also explained, former canon 3A(6) effectively promotes this interest because public comments by judges on matters pending before them may give the appearance that the judge has prejudged the merits of the controversy, has become an advocate for the interests of one of the parties, or has resorted to extrajudicial means to defend the judge's own rulings. As applied to comments on matters pending before another judge, the former canon prevents a judge from exerting, or appearing to exert, pressure on another judge to decide a matter a particular way. Accordingly, we conclude that the burden that former canon 3A(6) imposes on the general interest of judges in making public comments on court proceedings is outweighed by the benefits it achieves in furthering the state's interest in the soundness of the judicial system; therefore, former canon 3A(6) is not invalid under the First Amendment as an impermissible restriction on public speech.[6]

(7) We also reject as meritless petitioner's assertion that former canon 3A(6) is void for vagueness. A rule is not void for vagueness if it provides " ' "fair notice to those to whom [it] is directed." ' " (Gentile v. State Bar of

[6]Although we reach this conclusion by applying the test that the high court articulated in Pickering, supra, 391 U.S. 563, the same conclusion would likely follow from application of the Gentile standard that petitioner urges us to adopt. (See, e.g., In re Inquiry of Broadbelt (1996) 146 N.J. 501, 519 [683 A.2d 543, 552] [applying Gentile standard upholding canon restricting judges' public comments on pending cases].)

Nevada, supra, 501 U.S. at p. 1048 [111 S.Ct. at p. 2731], original brackets.) We find unconvincing petitioner's assertion that he had "difficulties in determining if public comment was prohibited" in a case, such as People v. Johnson, in which he had recused himself from any further participation while the decision was pending on appeal. The former canon clearly included matters pending on appeal. It expressly referred to a proceeding pending "in any court." We also find unpersuasive petitioner's claim that he was left to guess how "public" a public comment had to be to violate the former canon. A matter is public if it is open or available to all, that is, accessible to everybody. (Webster's New Internat. Dict. (2d ed. 1941) p. 2005, col 1.) The words "public comment" in the former canon gave petitioner fair notice that it referred to comments disseminated to the community.

(8) Having decided that former canon 3A(6)'s prohibition against public comment on pending cases by judges is permissible under the First Amendment to the federal Constitution, we now determine whether petitioner's acts constituted judicial misconduct.

A finding of willful misconduct in office requires that the misconduct occur while the judge is acting in a judicial capacity. A judge is acting in a judicial capacity while performing one of the functions, whether adjudicative or administrative in nature, that are associated with the position of a judge or when the judge uses or attempts to use the authority of the judicial office for an improper purpose. (Dodds v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 12 Cal.4th at p. 172; see Kennick v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 50 Cal.3d at p. 319.) Petitioner's public comments were made in the course of interviews with the press, not while he was acting in a judicial capacity. They therefore cannot constitute willful misconduct in office. As the Commission correctly concluded, however, petitioner's actions constituted prejudicial conduct, that is, " 'conduct which a judge undertakes in good faith but which nevertheless would appear to an objective observer to be not only unjudicial conduct but conduct prejudicial to the public esteem for the judicial office . . . .' " (Doan v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 11 Cal.4th at p. 312.) Petitioner engaged in unjudicial conduct by violating a canon of judicial conduct, former canon 3(A)(6), with knowledge of its restrictions. By making public comments in an attempt to justify and defend his decisions while those decisions were pending on appeal, petitioner adopted the role of an advocate. Such actions would appear to an objective observer to be " 'prejudicial to public esteem for the judicial office.' " (Kennick v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 50 Cal.3d at p. 314.)

C. Abuse of the Judicial Office

The Commission's final charge was that petitioner failed, in matters involving Attorney Arthur Kralowec, to conduct himself "in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary."

1. Facts

In 1983, before petitioner became a judge, he represented a party in a case in which Attorney Kralowec was the opposing counsel. The relationship between petitioner and Kralowec developed into one of intense antagonism.

In 1994, after petitioner became a judge, Attorney Kralowec represented one of petitioner's former clients, Darlene Woods, in Woods v. Broadman, a legal malpractice action against petitioner. While the case was pending, Kralowec himself was the defendant in another legal malpractice action, Metzger v. Kralowec. Attorney Thomas Anton represented plaintiff Metzger, who faulted Kralowec for not disqualifying petitioner from ruling in the underlying action on a motion for summary judgment and ordering arbitration of the matter. At the trial in Metzger v. Kralowec, which was tried before another judge of the Tulare Superior Court in 1995, petitioner's name was mentioned by participants in the trial 150 to 200 times.

At one point in the malpractice action against Kralowec, the court reporter told plaintiff Metzger's attorney, Thomas Anton, that petitioner would like to see him. When Anton made no effort to see petitioner, the court reporter again told Anton that petitioner wanted to see him, a communication that Anton at that point considered an order. Later, during the lunch break in that day's proceedings in the Metzger case, Anton met with petitioner in petitioner's chambers.

At this meeting, petitioner offered to testify on behalf of Attorney Anton's client. When Anton expressed interest in learning when Attorney Kralowec started representing plaintiff Woods in the malpractice action against petitioner, the latter telephoned the court clerk's office, identified himself as "Judge Broadman," and requested that the file in Woods v. Broadman be made available to Anton. When the conversation turned to the subject of a State Bar investigation of Attorney Kralowec, petitioner telephoned the State Bar, identified himself as "Judge Broadman," and asked about the status of the investigation. Turning to Attorney Anton's representation of the plaintiff in the malpractice action against Kralowec, petitioner mentioned that in the past Kralowec had hidden his assets and it would be difficult to collect on a judgment against Kralowec. At a later point, when petitioner and Anton met in the court hallway, petitioner told Anton not to mention the meeting to anyone.

Thereafter, during the punitive damages portion of the trial in Metzger v. Kralowec, petitioner entered the courtroom and briefly sat in the audience while Attorney Kralowec was testifying. The jurors, some of whom knew petitioner was a judge, noted and discussed his visit. When a court employee asked petitioner why he had come to Kralowec's trial, petitioner replied that he was "just being an asshole."

2. Commission's Findings and Conclusions

The Commission, by a vote of six to five (five voting to dismiss), found petitioner's actions in the Kralowec matter to be prejudicial conduct. It agreed with the special masters that petitioner's acts had been motivated by a desire "to harm his old adversary," Attorney Kralowec, and it determined that petitioner had acted more as a "vigilante" than as a judge. The Commission concluded that those actions were not willful misconduct because they occurred while petitioner was acting in a nonjudicial capacity.

3. Our Review of the Commission's Decision

(9) We agree with the Commission's determination that petitioner's acts in Metzger v. Kralowec were not willful misconduct. As we discussed earlier, one of the elements of willful misconduct is that the judge must have acted in a judicial capacity. Here, neither petitioner's meeting in his chambers with Attorney Anton nor his brief appearance in the courtroom where the case of Metzger v. Kralowec was being tried was an act within his judicial capacity: Neither instance involved any adjudicative or administrative functions of petitioner's judicial office.

But, as the Commission determined, petitioner's acts did constitute prejudicial conduct, that is, conduct that would appear to an objective observer to be prejudicial to " 'public esteem for the judicial office.' " (Kennick v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 50 Cal.3d at p. 314.)

Through his actions, as described in detail at the beginning of this section, petitioner tried to affect the outcome in the legal malpractice case involving Attorney Kralowec, against whom he bore personal animosity. While the case was being tried before another judge, petitioner summoned Attorney Anton, who represented plaintiff Metzger, to his chambers. There, petitioner expressed his intense dislike of Kralowec and offered assistance in strengthening the plaintiff's malpractice action against Kralowec. In petitioner's words, he hoped that Anton would "kick the son of a bitch's ass." He offered to testify against Kralowec, he telephoned for delivery of a court file in a different malpractice action, and he checked with the State Bar to find out the status of a complaint against Kralowec, all in an effort to assist Attorney Anton in the malpractice case against Kralowec. Later, during Kralowec's testimony, petitioner briefly attended the trial; the jurors, some of whom knew petitioner to be a judge, noted and discussed his visit. When a court employee asked why petitioner had come to Kralowec's trial, petitioner replied he was "just being an asshole." We agree with the Commission that taken together petitioner's actions, which were motivated by "a desire to bring about a result harmful to Kralowec because of personal animosity between them," would appear to an objective observer to be prejudicial to the public esteem for the judicial office.

We reject petitioner's contention that he had a duty, under this court's decision in Dodds v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 12 Cal.4th 163, to visit the courtroom in which Attorney Kralowec was testifying in Metzger v. Kralowec to take "active steps to prevent or discourage perjury." Dodds is distinguishable. Judge Dodds saw another judge letting the air out of the tires of a van belonging to a disabled person who had parked in the judge's parking space. We held that Judge Dodds engaged in prejudicial conduct by, among other things, failing to report the incident as required by former canon 3D and for initially refusing to give a statement to a detective investigating the matter. (12 Cal.4th at pp. 170-171.) Here, petitioner came to the courtroom because, as he explained, he thought Kralowec might perjure himself. That was pure speculation on petitioner's part. Dodds does not impose a duty on a judge to take action to prevent any speculative misconduct.

We also reject petitioner's argument that his actions in Metzger v. Kralowec are protected by the First and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution because he was acting as a private person in a private dispute. As petitioner notes, his position as a judge does not divest him of constitutional rights. (See Pickering, supra, 391 U.S. at p. 568 [88 S.Ct. at pp. 1734-1735].) But that does not mean that his rights are therefore the same as those of a private citizen. The state's interest in regulating conduct increases correspondingly with the authority and accountability of the public position at issue. (Rankin v. McPherson (1987) 483 U.S. 378, 390-391 [107

S.Ct. 2891, 2900-2901, 97 L.Ed.2d 315].) As a judge, petitioner's rights do not extend to protecting conduct that would appear to an objective observer to be prejudicial to the public esteem for the judiciary.

IV. DUE PROCESS

(10) Petitioner contends he cannot be disciplined because the Commission's proceedings violated his right to due process under the Fourteenth Amendment to the federal Constitution.

Petitioner first complains about the Commission's role in this court's appointment of the special masters. Our order appointing the special masters in this matter states that "the following judges, selected by the commission from a list submitted by the Supreme Court, are hereby appointed Special Masters . . . ." Petitioner argues that this method of selecting the special masters violates due process because, under former rule 907 of the California Rules of Court, the Commission cannot have any role in the selection of special masters beyond requesting this court to make the appointments. We disagree. Former rule 907 provided in relevant part: "In place of or in addition to a hearing before the Commission, the Commission may request the Supreme Court to appoint three special masters to hear and take evidence in the matter, and to report to the Commission." Although our order stated that the three special masters in this case were "selected by the commission," the list from which the Commission selected the special masters was provided by this court and the special masters were actually appointed by this court. Nothing in former rule 907 prohibits this court from considering, that is, accepting or rejecting, a recommendation of the Commission for the appointment of special masters whose names the Commission drew from a list provided by this court.

Petitioner next complains that the Commission's staff and examiners violated his due process rights because they did not start interviewing witnesses until almost two years after the first notice of formal proceedings in May 1993. This delay, petitioner argues, violated his right to due process because it impaired the ability of witnesses to remember events. Petitioner, however, has failed to demonstrate prejudice by the delay. He does not identify the testimony of any material witness whose memory was impaired by the passage of time. In addition, several of the charges against petitioner concerned matters the Commission could adequately investigate without questioning witnesses. For example, pertinent information on the charges pertaining to petitioner's actions in court could be obtained from court transcripts. Likewise, information on the charges relating to petitioner's public comment on pending cases could be found in publications containing petitioner's interviews. (See Kloepfer v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1989) 49 Cal.3d 826, 837 [264 Cal.Rptr. 100, 782 P.2d 239, 89 A.L.R.4th 235].)

(11) Petitioner also accuses the Commission of including unfounded and inflammatory allegations in the third amended notice of formal proceedings, as a result of which, petitioner asserts, he "suffered an injustice." Count 2 alleged that in an interview petitioner gave to West Magazine he "quoted defendant Linda Zaring (who is African-American) while 'mimicking a black accent.' " On the first day of the hearing before the special masters, the Commission's counsel moved to strike this allegation after learning that Zaring was White. The special masters granted the motion. Because this error was corrected before any evidence was presented, petitioner suffered no prejudice.

Petitioner next argues that he had to defend against allegations not included in the pleadings, specifically allegations that he had through deception obtained defendant Johnson's consent to the Norplant condition of probation, and that he improperly resorted to the use of court personnel in Metzger v. Kralowec, a case not assigned to him. It is true that neither allegation appeared in the pleadings. Petitioner, however, has not shown that he was surprised, disadvantaged, or otherwise legally prejudiced by these allegations.

Petitioner further contends he suffered prejudice from a "delay" by the Commission in bringing the proceedings to a hearing. A claim of undue delay requires a showing of actual prejudice. (See Kloepfer v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 49 Cal.3d at p. 837.) Petitioner has failed to make such a showing. As to petitioner's claim that he was disadvantaged by lapses in his memory in two instances, both pertain to counts that were dismissed; thus, petitioner suffered no prejudice.

(12) Additionally, petitioner contends that at the hearing before the special masters, the Commission's attorneys "ambushed" him by not timely providing his counsel with notes of a discussion between one of the Commission's attorneys and witness Thomas Richey. Attorney Richey had witnessed an incident that led to a charge (later dismissed) that petitioner "showed a lack of judicial temperament and impartiality" by ordering Attorney Kralowec out of his courtroom. While discussing this matter with Commission examiner Dennis Coupe, Richey mentioned that a client of his wanted to file a complaint with the Commission about petitioner. Coupe sent notes of this conversation to his cocounsel in Los Angeles. Cocounsel, for unknown reasons, never received the notes. At the time Coupe made his notes and sent them to his coexaminer, he did not consider the information about the incident described by Richey discoverable. As Coupe stated in his declaration: "The new incident was not relevant to any pending charge, and I did not see how any Richey testimony on it could come in as rebuttal to any existing charge." The notes were not provided to petitioner's counsel before the hearing.

The Commission's examiners decided to call Richey as a witness to the incident in which petitioner ordered Attorney Kralowec out of his courtroom. One day before he testified, Richey told Rene Sample, an associate of petitioner's counsel, that petitioner had "brutalized" one of his clients and suggested that petitioner's counsel not question him regarding any character issues. Sample told Richey not to worry because any unfavorable character evidence pertaining to petitioner would not be admissible. Sample's notes of the conversation included Richey's comment that 90 percent of petitioner's conduct was "a cut above that of other judges," but they did not mention the "brutalizing" incident involving Richey's client.

Before putting Richey on the witness stand, the examiners called Mary Rogers, a law partner of Richey's, as a witness to the incident in which petitioner had ordered Attorney Kralowec out of the courtroom. After Rogers's testimony, petitioner made her his own witness to present mitigation testimony. When Commission examiner Coupe realized that petitioner might also call Richey, who had not yet testified, as his own witness to present mitigation testimony, Coupe gave Stephen Cornwell, petitioner's counsel, a copy of the notes of his conversation with Richey. After the examiners had concluded their questioning of Richey, petitioner's attorneys did indeed call Richey as a witness for petitioner for the purpose of presenting mitigation evidence. Richey testified that 90 percent of petitioner's conduct was "a cut above" that of other judges. On cross-examination, when one of the examiners asked Richey about the remaining 10 percent, Richey mentioned that petitioner had "brutalized" a client of his. Petitioner's counsel did not object to the cross-examination, but he later moved to strike the testimony. The special masters denied the motion on a two-to-one vote.

Although Commission examiner Coupe did not make his notes pertaining to his conversation with Richey immediately available to petitioner's counsel, Coupe did provide them to petitioner's counsel before Richey testified as a mitigation witness for petitioner. After reviewing those notes, petitioner's counsel did not seek a continuance; in calling Richey as a mitigation witness petitioner's counsel was under the mistaken belief that the unfavorable character evidence would not be admissible on cross-examination. We agree with the special masters' finding that there was "nothing improper in the conduct of the Examiners, nor anything in this incident to suggest bias on their part." As the special masters explained: "If there is any risk that the incident described by Richey might affect [petitioner] adversely, that risk was created by [petitioner's counsel's] decision to put Richey on as a character witness despite the concern he had expressed to [petitioner's] counsel that his direct examination might lead to the disclosure of the bad experience on cross-examination." Accordingly, we reject petitioner's contention that the Commission's attorneys "ambushed" him by not providing Coupe's notes of his conversation with Richey before the start of the hearing before the special masters.

Finally, petitioner argues that "the Commission's recommendation of public censure and its stated decision to 'limit' the value of mitigation evidence was an impermissible reaction to [his] vigorous legal defense in these proceedings." In support of his contention, petitioner cites the Commission's comment that he refused "to accept any responsibility for his conduct."[7] We reject petitioner's claim. Petitioner has not shown that the Commission penalized him for presenting a vigorous defense. Rather, the Commission's comment indicates that the Commission based its recommendation of public censure in part on petitioner's lack of remorse, as shown by his unwillingness to accept responsibility for clearly established misconduct such as "tricking" the defendant in People v. Hooks into waiving time for sentencing. (See In re Lewallen (1979) 23 Cal.3d 274, 281 [152 Cal.Rptr. 528, 590 P.2d 383, 100 A.L.R.3d 823] [trial court may not increase sentence in criminal case because the defendant refused a plea bargain but may consider information that came to court's attention during or after trial].) Lack of remorse is a relevant consideration in judicial discipline (see, e.g., Gonzalez v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 33 Cal.3d 359, 377), in attorney discipline (see, e.g., Kapelus v. State Bar (1987) 44 Cal.3d 179, 197 [242 Cal.Rptr. 196, 745 P.2d 917]), and in criminal sentencing (see, e.g., Cal. Rules of Court, rules 414(b)(7), 423(b)(3)).

V. DISCIPLINE

(13) "In making our independent determination of the appropriate disciplinary sanction, we consider the purpose of a Commission disciplinary

[7]Petitioner further asserts that the Commission's statement that he refuses to accept any responsibility for his conduct is factually inaccurate because he did admit violating former canon 3A(6), prohibiting public comment on pending cases. Although he admits violating the canon, he does so in the context of his contention that the canon has no force because it is unconstitutional, a claim we rejected in part III.B.4., ante.

proceeding—which is not punishment, but rather the protection of the public, the enforcement of rigorous standards of judicial conduct, and the maintenance of public confidence in the integrity and independence of the judicial system." (Adams v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1995) 10 Cal.4th 866, 912 [42 Cal.Rptr.2d 606, 897 P.2d 544].)

(14) For the reasons given above, we conclude that in "tricking" defendant Hooks and his counsel into waiving time for sentencing, petitioner engaged in willful misconduct in office,[8] and that he engaged in prejudicial conduct when he attempted to influence the outcome of the civil action against Attorney Arthur Kralowec and when he publicly commented on the Johnson and Zaring cases while they were pending. We agree with the Commission that the appropriate discipline is public censure.

Petitioner insists that public censure is inappropriate because there were "abundant mitigating factors" presented through the testimony of 20 witnesses who described petitioner as industrious and innovative. Although such evidence may be taken "into account in considering the totality of the circumstances" (Adams v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 10 Cal.4th at p. 912), it does not mitigate or excuse willful or prejudicial conduct (ibid.). The Commission did consider the evidence in mitigation, but it concluded that the seriousness of petitioner's misconduct warranted public censure, especially in light of his "refusal to accept any responsibility for his conduct."

According to petitioner, public censure in his case is improper because his misconduct is less egregious than that of judges publicly censured in previous cases. Proportionality review based on discipline imposed in other cases, however, is neither required nor determinative. The factual variations from case to case are simply too great to permit a meaningful comparison in many instances. "Choosing the proper sanction is an art, not a science, and turns on the facts of the case at bar." (Furey v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 43 Cal.3d at p. 1318.)

In support of petitioner, the CJA argues against public censure because petitioner did not engage in repeated acts of misconduct. We disagree with the CJA that public censure is inappropriate in the absence of a pattern of repeated acts of misconduct. A level of discipline may be warranted either by the existence of a pattern of misconduct or by the seriousness of a single incident. (Gubler v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 37 Cal.3d at p. 50 ["The fact that an act is an isolated incident does not preclude a determination of willful misconduct."]; see Gonzalez v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 33 Cal.3d at p. 371.)

[8]As discussed earlier, the Commission found petitioner's actions in the Hooks case to be prejudicial conduct rather than willful misconduct.

After careful consideration of the arguments by the Commission and by petitioner, we agree with the Commission's recommendation of public censure. In light of petitioner's lack of candor and integrity in obtaining the waiver in the Hooks case, his public comments on pending cases—in one instance after a written warning by the Commission that public comment on pending cases would violate former canon 3A(6)—and his attempt to influence the outcome of the civil proceeding against Attorney Arthur Kralowec, public censure is appropriate.

Accordingly, and by this order, Judge Broadman is publicly censured.

On September 2, 1998, the opinion was modified to read as printed above.

PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE B. J. BJORK

The Commission on Judicial Performance has ordered Judge B.J. Bjork publicly admonished for improper conduct within the meaning of Article VI, section 18(d), of the California Constitution, as set forth in the following statement of facts and reasons found by the Commission:

On March 25, 1994, Judge Bjork was contacted by the clerk of another judge. On behalf of the other judge, the clerk asked that a family member of the other judge, who had received a traffic citation, be permitted to attend traffic school. Judge Bjork rejected the clerk's request, believing she was asking him to dismiss the citation. The other judge then approached Judge Bjork personally and explained that the family member had previously failed to complete traffic school on the citation. He asked Judge Bjork to allow his relative to attend traffic school again and Judge Bjork did so. This appeared to be lenient and favorable toward the other judge's relative.

Judge Bjork's act of granting the other judge's family member traffic school a second time was done in the absence of any appearance or personal request by the family member, and was based on a request by a judicial colleague.

On March 30, 1994, Judge Bjork was approached by the same judge regarding another citation received by the same relative charging him with an inadequate muffler, driving while not in possession of a valid driver 's license and a failure to appear. The other judge indicated that he owned the car driven by his relative at the time the citation was received, and that he was responsible for the inadequate muffler and the relative's failure to appear. Based upon the other judge's statements and his representation that he would take care of the other counts charged in the citation, and without any proof of correction, Judge Bjork then dismissed the failure to appear charge, a misdemeanor. This action appeared to be lenient and favorable toward the other judge's relative.

Judge Bjork's conduct in these two cases was contrary to Canon 2A of the California Code of Judicial Conduct, which provides that a judge should respect and comply with the law and should act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary, and Canon 2B, which provides that a judge should not allow family, social, political or other relationships to influence the judge's judicial conduct or judgment, and that a judge should not convey or permit others to convey the impression that they are in a special position to influence them

Judge Bjork consented to public admonishment.

PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE RICHARD S. FLIER

The Commission on Judicial Performance has ordered Judge Richard S. Flier publicly admonished for improper conduct within the meaning of Article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution, as set forth in the following statement of facts and reasons found by the Commission:

On October 21, 1993, Lindell Abercrombie, an African-American adult, appeared before Judge Flier at a hearing in People v. Abercrombie. The following occurred:

> PROSECUTOR [addressing Abercrombie]: Sir, you have a right to trial by court or jury on the charges and enhancements and probation ineligibility clauses charged against you. You understand that right?
> ABERCROMBIE: Yes.
> PROSECUTOR: Do you waive that right?
> ABERCROMBIE: Yes, I waive all of that. I waive all –
> COURT: Mr. Abercrombie, we will have to do this in an organized fashion. When he asks you a question, I want you to answer only that question. Got it? Okay. Good boy. Go ahead, please.

Following this incident, another African-American defendant sought to disqualify Judge Flier based on his remark to Mr. Abercrombie (People v. Perkins). The motion was granted. The First District Court of Appeal reversed on the ground that Mr. Abercrombie himself did not challenge Judge Flier. The court did not rule on the propriety of the judge's remark to Mr. Abercrombie:

> "Whether Judge Flier's use of the words 'good boy' in addressing an adult male of African-American descent was unseemly, rude, racially insensitive, or simply thoughtless, no objection or other comment was raised by Mr. Abercrombie or his counsel [at the time of the incident or later during the proceeding] . . . . In the context of the entire proceeding, the words 'good boy' would not lead a person to reasonably entertain a doubt about Judge Flier's ability to be impartial toward Mr. Abercrombie because of race or for any other reason."

23 Cal.App.4th 165, 171-72. The court noted that if anyone "believes that Judge Flier's comment warrants discipline, they may file a complaint with the Commission on Judicial Performance." 23 Cal.App.4th 165, 170 n. 4.

The Commission found that, based on the content of the remark and the reported tone used by Judge Flier, his reference to the in-custody adult defendant as a "good boy" manifested racial insensitivity.

The Commission also found that Judge Flier's remark damaged the respect for the judiciary held by members of the public who were present and, as such, was "conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute." Cal. Const., Art. VI, § 18(d). While notoriety is not required for "conduct prejudicial," Judge Flier's remark led to substantial adverse publicity that further diminished public confidence in the judiciary and brought the judiciary into disrepute. (See Wenger v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1981) 29 Cal.3d 615, 622 n. 4, quoting McCartney v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1974) 12 Cal.3d 512, 534.)

Judge Flier's conduct was contrary to these provisions of the California Code of Judicial Conduct: Canon 3 (avoiding the appearance of bias or prejudice), Canon 2 (preserving public confidence in the judiciary), and Canon 1 (maintaining high standards of conduct).

Judge Flier consented to public admonishment.

PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE JUDITH C. CHIRLIN

The Commission on Judicial Performance has ordered Judge Judith C. Chirlin publicly admonished for improper conduct within the meaning of Article VI, Section 18 (d) of the California Constitution, as set forth in the following statement of facts and reasons found by the Commission:

In 1993, a jury trial in the case of Main Line Pictures, Inc. v. Kim Basinger,, et al. was conducted before Judge Chirlin.. The case involved an action for breach of contract based on defendant Basinger's alleged withdrawal from the making of Main Line's movie "Boxing Helena," which was completed and released with a different female lead. The case attracted significant media attention due to the subject matter and the celebrity of the defendant.

There was a verdict for plaintiff Main Line Pictures, Inc. on March 23, 1993. A notice of appeal was filed by defendants Kim Basinger,, et al. on July 16, 1993.

In August 1993, Judge Chirlin attended the premiere of the movie Boxing Helena at the invitation of the movie's producer, the plaintiff in Main Line Pictures, Inc. v. Kim Basinger,, et al. The premiere consisted of the showing of the movie followed by a reception at a Los Angeles restaurant. Judge Chirlin's attendance at the event was noted in the media.

The commission found that Judge Chirlin's attendance at the premiere was improper in that it contributed to an appearance of bias: due to Judge Chirlin's role in the trial of the lawsuit, the judge was seen as joining in the plaintiff's celebration of the movie's release and the plaintiff's celebration of its legal victory.

An appearance of bias or partiality erodes public confidence in and respect for the judiciary. Canon 2 of the Code of Judicial Conduct requires judges to avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety in all of the judge's activities; Canon 3 of the Code of Judicial Conduct requires that judges perform judicial duties without bias; Canon 4 requires that judges conduct even extrajudicial activities so the activities do not cast reasonable doubt on the judge's capacity to act impartially as a judge.

On January 2, 1994, while the appeal of judgment in Main Line Pictures! Inc. v. Kim Basinger,, et al. was still pending, an article appeared in the Los Angeles Times Sunday magazine about the case. Judge Chirlin was interviewed for the article and asked about allegations that her rulings during the trial exhibited bias against defendant Basinger. Judge Chirlin was quoted as saying, "The fact of the matter is that throughout the trial, a significant portion of my rulings were in favor of Kim."

The commission found that Judge Chirlin's comments to the reporter about the Main Line Pictures. Inc. v. Kim Basinger,, et al. case were in conflict with the provisions of Canon 3 of the Code of Judicial Conduct, which states in part:

"A judge should not make any public comment about a pending or impending proceeding in any court . . . "
At the time of the remarks, an appeal of the judgment was pending. The requirement that judges refrain from commenting about cases continues during any appellate process until final disposition.

In arriving at this disposition, the commission noted that the judge recognized and acknowledged the impropriety of her attendance at the premiere and of her public comments regarding the case.

COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE
101 Howard Street, Suite 300
San Francisco, CA 94105

---

Contact: Victoria B. Henley
Director-Chief Counsel
(415) 904-3650

FOR RELEASE
June 3, 1996

---

JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE COMMISSION ISSUES PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE CHARLES W. STOLL

The Commission on Judicial Performance has publicly admonished Judge Charles W. Stoll of the Los Angeles County Superior Court, North Central District. The admonishment is attached.

The Commission is composed of six public members, three judges, and two lawyers. The Chairperson is the Honorable William A. Masterson of the Court of Appeal, Second Appellate District in Los Angeles.

PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE CHARLES W. STOLL

The Commission on Judicial Performance has ordered Judge Charles W. Stoll publicly admonished for improper conduct within the meaning of Article VI, Section 18 (d) of the California Constitution, as set forth in the following statement of facts and reasons found by the Commission:

1. Judge Stoll has failed to disqualify himself in cases in which the Walt Disney Company was a litigant although his disqualification was required, based upon his ownership of 1000 shares of Disney stock valued at approximately $45,000. Code of Civil Procedure section 170.1(a)(3) provides that a judge shall be disqualified if the judge has a financial interest in the subject matter in a proceeding or in a party to the proceeding, and section 170.5(b) provides in pertinent part that "'financial interest' means ownership of more than a 1 percent legal or equitable interest in a party, or a legal or equitable interest in a party of a fair market value in excess of one thousand five hundred dollars ($1,500)." At the time of the judge's conduct, Canon 3E of the California Code of Judicial Conduct provided that a judge "should disqualify himself or herself in a proceeding in which the judge's impartiality might reasonably be questioned or in a proceeding in which disqualification is required by law."

In Boettcher v. Disney, et al., No. EC 01461, Judge Stoll in 1995 heard and granted a summary judgment motion in favor of defendant Disney. Judge Stoll heard and orally granted the motion on January 27, 1995. On February 1, 1995, after being advised that the plaintiff had filed for bankruptcy protection on January 31, 1995, Judge Stoll signed a written order granting the summary judgment motion and awarding costs to defendant Disney. Judge Stoll dated the order January 27, 1995; the January 27, 1995 date was also file-stamped upon the order.

In Wethington-Everist v. Cuaron, et al., No. EC 009570, on March 5, 1993, Judge Stoll granted defendant Disney's motion to compel discovery and defendant Disney's request for sanctions of $750 against the plaintiff. On May 7, 1993, Judge Stoll granted defendant Disney's motion to dismiss the plaintiff's case based upon the plaintiff's failure to comply with prior orders.

In Gonzales v. Disney, No. EC 001852, on July 20, 1992, Judge Stoll ordered plaintiff's counsel to pay $250 in sanctions for failure to appear at a status conference and scheduled a hearing on an order to show cause re dismissal for September 1, 1992. On December 1, 1992, after the plaintiff and plaintiff's counsel had failed to appear for the hearing on the order to show cause, Judge Stoll entered judgment dismissing the plaintiff's complaint with prejudice.

In Tripp v. Disney, No. EC 00496, on December 14, 1992, Judge Stoll dismissed the plaintiff's complaint when the plaintiff and plaintiff's counsel failed to appear for a status conference. On January 22, 1993, Judge Stoll heard and granted a motion to vacate the dismissal. On April 27, 1993, Judge Stoll ordered the case transferred to the Burbank Municipal Court on the basis of his determination that the amount in controversy was below the jurisdictional limit for superior court.

The commission found that Judge Stoll's explanation that he had failed to familiarize himself with the provisions of Code of Civil Procedure Section 170.5(b) served to aggravate, rather than mitigate, his misconduct in failing to disqualify.

2. On January 17, 1995, and February 3, 1995, Judge Stoll wrote two letters on court letterhead to a collection service regarding a claim against a member of the judge's family which became the subject of litigation, in an effort to influence the recipient. Judge Stoll's conduct was contrary to Canon 2B of the Code of Judicial Conduct, which at the time of the judge's conduct provided that a judge "should not lend the prestige of judicial office to advance the private or personal interests of the judge or others...."

COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE
101 Howard Street, Suite 300
San Francisco, CA 94105

Contact: Victoria B. Henley
Director/Chief Counsel
(415) 904-3650

FOR RELEASE
July 29, 1996

JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE COMMISSION ISSUES PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE STEPHEN DREW

The Commission on Judicial Performance has publicly admonished Judge Stephen Drew of the Tulare County Municipal Court, Dinuba Division. The admonishment is attached.

The Commission is composed of six public members, three judges and two lawyers. The Chairperson is the Honorable William A. Masterson of the Court of Appeal, Second Appellate District in Los Angeles.

PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE STEPHEN DREW

The Commission on Judicial Performance has ordered Judge Stephen Drew publicly admonished for improper action pursuant to Article VI, Section 18(d) of the California Constitution. In determining that public admonishment and not a more severe sanction is the appropriate disposition in this matter, the commission has taken into account reports from individuals whose recent experiences with Judge Drew have led them to the view that there has been substantial improvement in his judicial performance, as well as Judge Drew's assurance that he will refrain from improper conduct in the future.

The facts and reasons giving rise to this public admonishment are as follows:

1. In 1992 Judge Drew denied a defendant his right to appointed counsel after using improper criteria for determining whether he was indigent. In November of 1992, in People v. Lewis, Judge Drew refused to appoint counsel for an unemployed construction worker who indicated that he was not working and was living with another person who was supporting him, on the ground that the defendant was potentially employable. Rather than appoint counsel, Judge Drew ordered Mr. Lewis to apply for work so that he might be able to retain private counsel. When Mr. Lewis later failed to appear in court for a scheduled pretrial conference, Judge Drew issued a bench warrant, and Mr. Lewis was remanded to custody. After Mr. Lewis was taken into custody, Judge Drew again improperly refused to appoint counsel for him.

Although judges have considerable discretion in the determination of a defendant's ability to hire private counsel, Judge Drew should have known that denying defendants appointed counsel based upon the ability of others to pay for their counsel, or upon the possibility of future employment, was improper. The constitutional right to counsel at all stages of criminal proceedings is fundamental and not subject to reasonable differences of opinion. Moreover, once a defendant is in custody, the ability to find employment ceases. (See In re Smiley (1967) 66 Cal.App.2d 606.)

Judge Drew's conduct was inconsistent with Canon 2A of the Code of Judicial Conduct, which at the time of the judge's conduct provided that a judge "should respect and comply with the law and should act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary."

2. In 1992, Judge Drew acted unjudicially in handling peremptory challenges under Code of Civil Procedure Section 170.6.

For example, in December of 1992, in the Lewis case referred to above, the public defender appeared for Mr. Lewis after he was taken into custody; the public defender filed a peremptory challenge of Judge Drew under Code of Civil Procedure Section 170.6. Judge Drew refused to honor this disqualification and ordered it "unfiled" because he had not allowed appointment of the public defender, despite the public defender's authority to represent the in-custody defendant.

In People v. Williams, Judge Drew cited a private defense attorney for contempt based on failure to appear for confirmation of a misdemeanor jury trial, even though the attorney had another attorney appear on his behalf. The cited attorney filed a peremptory challenge under Code of Civil Procedure section 170.6 against Judge Drew to disqualify him from hearing the underlying criminal case. Judge Drew subsequently denied the challenge as untimely and dismissed the contempt charge, but ordered a hearing on sanctions against the attorney. The following day, the attorney obtained a stay order against Judge Drew proceeding with the underlying jury trial. While the stay was under review, Judge Drew had court staff attempt to contact the Superior Court judge who issued the stay regarding legal support for his actions. The same attorney subsequently filed a challenge for cause against Judge Drew pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure section 170.1. After a denial by Judge Drew, another judge granted the challenge and disqualified Judge Drew from hearing the case. Judge Drew, although he had no standing to do so, then improperly sought to disqualify the judge who had been assigned to hear the sanctions matter, thereby heightening the impression that he had become personally embroiled in the proceeding.

In People v. Contreras, after a peremptory challenge under Code of Civil Procedure Section 170.6 was filed against Judge Drew, the judge continued to handle the arraignment of the four defendants in the case over their objection. Judge Drew entered not guilty pleas before assigning the matter to another judge. Judge Drew's actions in the Contreras case interfered with the defendants' rights to seek a continuance and to file a demurrer to the complaint, and was subsequently vacated by a reviewing judge.

Judge Drew's actions as described above were contrary to Canon 3E of the California Code of Judicial Conduct, which at the time of the judge's conduct provided: "A judge should disqualify himself or herself in a proceeding in which the judge's impartiality might reasonably be questioned, or in a proceeding in which disqualification is required by law." (See also Spruance v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1975) 13 Cal.3d 778, 797: "... it goes without saying that as a judge, petitioner should have known the proper method for handling a motion for disqualification."). In addition, Judge Drew's actions were contrary to Canon 2A of the California Code of Judicial Conduct, which at the time of the judge's conduct provided that a judge "should act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary."

3. In certain matters involving the filing of peremptory challenges, Judge Drew has departed from his usual practice of calling cases handled by private counsel at the beginning of the calendar, thus deliberately causing delays for attorneys who have filed challenges. For example, in People v. Haupt, Judge Drew accepted the filing of a peremptory challenge and thereafter presided in proceedings to set later hearings in the case. In handling these subsequent proceedings, Judge Drew delayed calling the case, contrary to the usual practice in his court, thus giving the impression that he was willfully retaliating for the filing of the challenge.

Judge Drew's actions, as described above, were contrary to Canon 2A, above, and Canon 3, which at the time of the judge's conduct provided that a judge "should perform the duties of judicial office impartially...." See also, California Judicial Conduct Handbook, 120.900 (citing 1989 Report of Commission on Judicial Performance, p.21, #H).

4. Judge Drew has displayed bias against attorneys who have filed peremptory challenges against him, and has appeared to retaliate against those attorneys, by barring them from areas of the courthouse near his chambers open to other attorneys. For example, in a case in which attorney Tom McGuire requested a continuance, Judge Drew indicated in an informal discussion with the attorney that he did not feel that the request was adequately supported and would not grant it. After the attorney filed a peremptory challenge against Judge Drew, which resulted in a new date being set for proceedings in the case, Judge Drew denied the attorney equal access to the area near chambers for several weeks when he appeared on other matters. Judge Drew's actions displayed bias and appeared to be retaliatory.

Judge Drew's conduct in this regard was contrary to Canon 2A, quoted above.

In mitigation, Judge Drew appears to have ceased any retaliatory practices and has assured the commission of his commitment to refrain from impropriety in handling and reacting to challenges.

5. Judge Drew has appeared to exhibit animosity toward the public defender's office and certain attorneys in that office.

Judge Drew, while not acting in a judicial capacity, has made improper, derogatory comments about the public defender's office and attorneys in that office. For example, in December of 1992, Judge Drew made disparaging remarks about a deputy public defender to another attorney, while watching the deputy public defender present argument to another judge in the Lewis case referred to above. In the same case, Judge Drew appeared to display personal embroilment and animosity toward the public defender's office by writing to the public defender and accusing his office of taking the case for improper reasons.

Judge Drew's conduct as described above constituted an improper display of personal animosity toward the public defender's office and embroilment in matters handled by that office. This conduct was contrary to Canon 2A of the California Code of Judicial Conduct.

6. In one matter involving the imposition of sanctions, Judge Drew acted in excess of his judicial authority, contrary to Canon 2A of the Code of Judicial Conduct.

This public admonishment is being issued with Judge Drew's consent.

COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE
101 Howard Street, Suite 300
San Francisco, CA 94105

Contact: Victoria B. Henley
Director/Chief Counsel
(415) 904-3650

FOR RELEASE
November 25, 1996

JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE COMMISSION ISSUES PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE THOMAS A. SMITH

The Commission on Judicial Performance has publicly admonished Judge Thomas A. Smith of the El Dorado County Municipal Court, Cameron Park Division. The admonishment is attached.

The commission is composed of six public members, three judges and two lawyers. The Chairperson is the Honorable William A. Masterson of the Court of Appeal, Second Appellate District in Los Angeles.

PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE THOMAS A. SMITH

The Commission on Judicial Performance has ordered Judge Thomas A. Smith publicly admonished for improper actions within the meaning of Article VI, section 18 of the California Constitution, as set forth in the following statement of facts and reasons found by the commission:

Judge Smith abused his judicial office in 1995 when he utilized the court's computer to obtain and disclose confidential information from computerized records of the Department of Motor Vehicles for a friend.

The California Vehicle Code provides penalties (a fine not exceeding $5,000 or imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding one year, or both and civil penalties up to $100,000) for improper disclosure of this information.

The judge's actions on behalf of his friend were improper and unlawful, and constituted disregard of the Code of Judicial Conduct in effect in 1995: Canon 2 required that "A judge should avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety in all of the judge's activities." Canon 2A provided: "A judge should respect and comply with the law and should act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary." Canon 2B provided: "A judge should not allow family, social, political or other relationships to influence the judge's judicial conduct or judgment. ..."

The Supreme Court in McCullough v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1989) 49 Cal.3d 186 stated, "Using the power of the bench to benefit a friend is a casebook example of wilful misconduct" (at p. 193).

In arriving at this disposition, the commission took into consideration that the judge's conduct was limited to a single instance, the judge candidly admitted wrongdoing and expressed recognition that his action demonstrated "a lapse of good judgment" and he said he has "vowed" to never again access Department of Motor Vehicles information for an unofficial purpose.

The vote of the commission on issuance of the public admonishment was 9 ayes and 1 no (one member was absent).

COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE
101 Howard Street, Suite 300
San Francisco, CA 94105

Contact: Victoria B. Henley
Director/Chief Counsel
(415) 904-3650

FOR RELEASE
January 22, 1997

JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE COMMISSION ISSUES PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE ALEXANDER H. WILLIAMS, III

The Commission on Judicial Performance has publicly admonished Judge Alexander H. Williams, III of the Los Angeles County Superior Court. The admonishment is attached.

The Commission is composed of six public members, three judges and two lawyers. The Chairperson is the Honorable William A. Masterson of the Court of Appeal, Second Appellate District in Los Angeles.

PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE ALEXANDER H. WILLIAMS, III

The Commission on Judicial Performance has ordered Judge Alexander H. Williams, III publicly admonished for improper action within the meaning of Article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution and Commission Rule 115, as set forth in the following statement of facts and reasons found by the commission.

On November 17, 1995, Judge Alexander H. Williams used profanity, made a vulgar gesture and threatened retaliation toward counsel in a case pending before the judge. In the case of Rico v. Nunez, during a break in a pretrial settlement conference, Judge Williams left the courtroom and approached attorney Gilberto Moreno, representing cross-complainant and cross-defendant Los Angeles County Chicano Employees Association, in the hallway outside the entrance to the courtroom, where others were present and observed Judge Williams' conduct. Using a loud and angry voice, Judge Williams stated words to the effect of: "Your demand for money is bullshit…If you keep making this demand, you can stick it right here," while gesturing toward his buttocks with rolled up paper. Some of the plaintiffs were seated behind attorney Moreno when the judge made his remarks and gesture. The attorney for plaintiffs, Rees Lloyd, then arrived and Judge Williams repeated to him that the demand for money was "bullshit." Judge Williams returned to the courtroom, followed by attorneys Moreno and Lloyd. Entering the bar area, Judge Williams turned, pointed to Mr. Lloyd, who was in the gallery with others present in the courtroom, and said in an angry voice: "If you think you are going to get money out of this case, you've got shit for brains. If you want war, you'll get war. And if you still think you're going to get money, I've got a Brooklyn Bridge I can sell you." Judge Williams went into chambers, then emerged, apologized to the attorneys for his language, and stated words to the effect of: "No jury I know of is going to give you money for this case. I'll set it for 1999 and make sure it goes nowhere. You did not want to settle, so now you are my enemy." Judge Williams then indicated an intent to sanction plaintiffs' counsel if the plaintiffs lost at trial and told Mr. Lloyd that he had no respect for him. Others were present in the courtroom during these remarks.

On the next business day, November 20, attorneys Lloyd and Moreno appeared in Judge Williams' court and filed motions to disqualify him. Judge Williams suggested that the motions be withdrawn. After the attorneys declined to do so, Judge Williams recused himself and stated words to the effect of: "Well, now I don't have anything to do with your case and you can leave. I just told the truth. This case is worth nothing and now you'll get a judge who's been disqualified three times from other cases and I hope you enjoy that environment. You will not find another judge who will show the patience and give you the time that I did." When Mr. Lloyd attempted to speak, Judge Williams responded to the effect: "This is my courtroom and you have nothing to say here. Get out." Mr. Lloyd then stated: "You said, 'This case is not about money and you've got shit for brains.' We weren't asking for money." Judge Williams responded, "Well, I was half right."

Judge Williams' conduct, as described above, involved vulgar, abusive and demeaning language toward attorneys and constituted an improper display of personal hostility and embroilment. (See, e.g., Spruance v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1975) 13 Cal.3d 778, 789, 797 [giving the "finger" to a defendant as constituting conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute; making a "raspberry" sound, during witness testimony, as willful misconduct].)

Judge Williams' abusive and hostile actions toward counsel reflected adversely on his judicial office. In accordance with the California Code of Judicial Conduct in effect at the time of Judge Williams' conduct, judges are expected to be impartial, patient, dignified and courteous when dealing with litigants and lawyers on matters pending before them (canon 3B). Even quasi-judicial activities must be conducted in a manner that does not demean the judicial office or interfere with the proper performance of judicial duty (canon 4A).

In determining that public admonishment is the appropriate disposition in this matter, the commission has taken into account representations from individuals whose recent experiences with Judge Williams have led them to the view that there has been substantial improvement in his judicial demeanor and temperament, as well as Judge Williams' own assurances that he has taken corrective measures to ensure that he will refrain from improper conduct in the future.

The vote of the commission on issuance of the public admonishment was 7 ayes and 0 noes (three members were absent and one did not participate).

COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE
101 Howard Street, Suite 300
San Francisco, CA 94105

Contact: Victoria B. Henley
Director/Chief Counsel
(415) 904-3650

FOR RELEASE
January 22, 1997

JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE COMMISSION ISSUES PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE SIDNEY P. CHAPIN

The Commission on Judicial Performance has publicly admonished Judge Sidney P. Chapin of the Kern County Superior Court. The admonishment is attached.

The Commission is composed of six public members, three judges and two lawyers. The Chairperson is the Honorable William A. Masterson of the Court of Appeal, Second Appellate District in Los Angeles.

PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE SIDNEY P. CHAPIN

The Commission on Judicial Performance has ordered Judge Sidney P. Chapin publicly admonished for improper action within the meaning of Article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution and Commission Rule 115, as set forth in the following statement of facts and reasons found by the commission.

On September 17, 1993, Judge Sidney P. Chapin presided over a one-day bench trial in Aggen v. City of San Buenaventura, which consolidated three petitions for mandamus by over 100 Ventura residents. The case, involving the residents' challenge to the validity of a tax assessment district, was a matter of considerable local interest. To accommodate the large audience for the bench trial, that proceeding was moved to the Board of Supervisors' meeting room. At the conclusion of the trial, the matter was taken under submission. Judge Chapin issued a tentative decision on December 13, 1993. By January 13, 1994, he had received from the parties a proposed statement of decision and judgment, and objections thereto.

For more than one year, from January 13, 1994 until April 24, 1995, Judge Chapin took no action in the case. On April 24, 1995, Judge Chapin issued an order setting a hearing for June 9, 1995 on the objections to the proposed decision. The hearing took place on June 9 as scheduled. Like the bench trial, it was heavily attended. On June 9, Judge Chapin told counsel for the parties that his decision would issue in 30 days. Shortly before the thirtieth day, under the headline "Judge Chapin Decision Expected Next Week," a local newspaper reported that "Keys waterfront property owners are eagerly anticipating a legal decision" by Judge Chapin, who had "announced that he would make his decision within 30 days" of the June 9 hearing.

No further proceedings were held after the hearing on June 9, 1995. Beginning in the fall of 1995, a paralegal who was assisting petitioners' counsel periodically inquired of court staff about the status of the case. A letter of April 18, 1996, from the Commission on Judicial Performance to Judge Chapin, advised him of a report that no decision had issued in Aggen and requested his comment. On April 30, 1996, over ten months after Judge Chapin announced that his decision would issue in 30 days, he issued his final decision and judgment.

In addition to Aggen v. City of San Buenaventura, Judge Chapin also was assigned to Adams v. City of San Buenaventura, an action for damages by some Ventura residents which involved some of the issues raised in Aggen. Since the outcome in Aggen would affect the Adams case, that case was stayed, pursuant to counsel's stipulation, pending a final decision in Aggen. Judge Chapin's delay in issuing his decision in Aggen thereby also delayed the Adams litigation.

Canon 3B(8) of the Code of Judicial Conduct requires judges to "dispose of all judicial matters fairly, promptly and efficiently." The Commentary to that canon states, in part:

> A judge should monitor and supervise cases so as to reduce or eliminate dilatory practices, avoidable delays, and unnecessary costs. . . . Prompt disposition of the court's business requires a > judge to devote adequate time to judicial duties, to be punctual in attending court and expeditious in determining matters under submission, and to require that court officials, litigants, and their lawyers cooperate with the judge to that end.

(Emphasis added.)

The delays by Judge Chapin, from January 13, 1994 to April 24, 1995 and from June 9, 1995 to April 30, 1996, exceeded two years. As of January 13, 1994, Judge Chapin was in possession of his tentative decision, a proposed statement of decision and judgment, and written objections. His delays in scheduling the hearing on the objections and in issuing his decision after that hearing were inordinate. In determining that public admonishment is the appropriate disposition in this matter, the commission took into account the length of the delays and the fact that the decision in question would affect the rights of numerous individuals in two cases.

The vote of the commission on issuance of the public admonishment was 6 ayes and 2 noes (three members were absent).

FILED

OCT 0 1 1997

Commission on
Judicial Performance

BEFORE THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA

COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

| | |
|---|---|
| Inquiry Concerning Judge Elvira S. Austin,No. 140 | DECISION AND ORDER OF PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT |

This is a disciplinary matter concerning Elvira S. Austin, Judge of the Los Angeles County Municipal Court. The Commission has concluded that a public admonishment is appropriate.

Formal proceedings in this matter were commenced with the filing of the Notice of Formal Proceedings dated December 11, 1996, and Judge Austin filed a verified answer. Special masters were appointed pursuant to Rule 121(b) of the Commission's Rules of Procedure.[1] Pre-trial proceedings were completed and the matter was set for hearing to commence on September 23, 1997.

Prior to the commencement of the hearing, counsel advised the Commission that Judge Austin had agreed to disposition on the following terms:[2]

"Pursuant to Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance, rule 127, Respondent and Trial Counsel submit the following stipulation in Inquiry Concerning Judge Elvira S. Austin, No. 140:

[1] The special masters are Justice Rodney Davis of the Court of Appeal, Third Appellate District, Judge Doris L. Shockley of the Yolo County Superior Court, and Judge Sandra Butler Smith of the San Joaquin County Municipal Court in Stockton.

[2] Judge Austin is represented by Arthur Close, Esq., and Trial Counsel for the Commission is Jack Coyle, Esq.

Served: 10/1/97 FAX

"During the evening hours of May 16, 1995, and the early morning hours of May 17, 1995, Judge Austin attempted to obtain the release from custody of a personal friend in a series of telephone calls to law enforcement agencies.

"In the calls, Judge Austin initially denied she was attempting to use her office, but then repeatedly invoked her judicial position and appeared to order her friend's release on her friend's own recognizance so that her friend would not have to post funds for bail. The judge's statements during the conversations which created this appearance included the following:

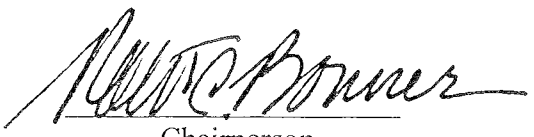
> ...I want to know what order I need to give to release her...I want to order her released...
>
> Why is that? ...Why is it that we cannot order a release over the telephone?
>
> Well, who, who is on staff right now that is higher than you that will take a judicial order?
>
> If I give you a judicial order right now, you are disobeying it.
>
> ...what does it take [for you] to obey a judicial order...?
>
> ...a judge is giving you an order....
>
> I am the proper authority.
>
> So, what you're saying is you are disobeying a court order. That's what you're saying...
>
> Well, who is your supervisor? Where else can I call?
>
> ...well, who is the authority that will take my order?...Knowing that you're talking to a judge, now what do we do next?...

"Judge Austin's conduct was contrary to canon 2A of the California Code of Judicial Conduct, which provides that a judge should act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary, and canon 2B, which provides that a judge should not allow family, social, political or other relationships to influence the judge's judicial conduct or judgment, and should not lend the prestige of judicial office to advance the private or personal interests of the judge or others.

"'Using the power of the bench to benefit a friend is a casebook example of willful misconduct.' McCullough v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1989) 49 Cal.3d 186.

"In mitigation, this was an isolated incident and the judge recognizes the impropriety of her actions.

"The parties agree that based upon the foregoing, Judge Austin shall be publicly admonished."



The foregoing stipulation was signed by Judge Austin and her counsel, and by Trial Counsel.

DISCIPLINE

The Commission accepts the forgoing stipulation and concurs that, in the circumstances of this case, disposition by an order of public admonishment is appropriate. The Commission's vote was 11 to 0.

This decision and order shall constitute the order of public admonishment.

Dated: September 23, 1997

Chairperson

Commission members Robert C. Bonner, Esq., Mr. Alan W. Barcelona, Ms. Ophelia Basgal, Hon. Lois Haight, Hon. Daniel M. Hanlon, Ms. Eleanor Johns, Patrick M. Kelly, Esq., Hon. Vincent J. McGraw, Ms. Harriet Salarno, Donald E. Vinson, Ph.D., and Ms. Pearl West voted for the public admonishment.

COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE
101 Howard Street, Suite 300
San Francisco, CA 94105

Contact: Victoria B. Henley
Director-Chief Counsel
(415) 904-3650

FOR RELEASE
December 1, 1997

JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE COMMISSION ISSUES PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE RONALD MACIEL

The Commission on Judicial Performance has publicly admonished Judge Ronald Maciel of the Kings County Municipal Court, Lemoore Division. The admonishment is attached.

The commission is composed of six public members, three judges and two lawyers. The Chairperson is Robert C. Bonner, Esq. of Los Angeles, California.

PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE RONALD MACIEL

The Commission on Judicial Performance has ordered Judge Ronald Maciel publicly admonished pursuant to Article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution and Commission Rule 115, as set forth in the following statement of facts and reasons found by the commission:

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

On March 28, 1996, Judge Maciel presided over the arraignment of defendant Kevin Galik in the capital murder case of People v. Galik, case number L965205. On this date, Judge Maciel appointed contract attorney Marianne Brock to represent Galik and continued the arraignment to May 17, 1996. Following the March 28, 1996 hearing, Judge Maciel, who was then the presiding judge, assigned the Galik case to Municipal Court Judge John O'Rourke.

On April 1, 1996, Judge Maciel initiated a telephone conversation with Ms. Brock. Judge Maciel advised Ms. Brock that he had assigned the Galik case to Judge O'Rourke and discussed with her the option of filing a peremptory challenge against Judge O'Rourke. In this conversation, Judge Maciel also suggested to Ms. Brock that she prepare an order for investigator funds and consider a polygraph test. During the discussion of the peremptory challenge, Judge Maciel erroneously told Ms. Brock that the statutory period for filing the challenge was thirty days.

On April 2, 1996, Judge Maciel attempted to reach Ms. Brock by telephone after he realized that he had erroneously advised her concerning the statutory period for filing a peremptory challenge. Judge Maciel was unable to reach Ms. Brock directly and instead left the court's telephone number on her pager. Judge Maciel instructed a clerk to tell Ms. Brock when she called: "It's ten days, not thirty." When Ms. Brock returned the page that day, she was advised of this message by a clerk.

On April 4, 1996, Judge Maciel initiated another telephone conversation with Ms. Brock. Judge Maciel engaged Ms. Brock in a discussion concerning a hearing in the Galik case that Ms. Brock had calendared for April 5, 1996. Judge Maciel also asked Ms. Brock if she had applied for investigator expenses and made suggestions to her relating to defense strategies.

Judge Maciel did not disclose any of the above communications with Ms. Brock to the district attorney's office.

On April 5, 1996, the Galik case was reassigned to Judge Maciel after Judge O'Rourke was disqualified pursuant to a peremptory challenge filed by Ms. Brock.

On May 6, 1996, the district attorney's office filed a Code of Civil Procedure section 170.1 motion to disqualify Judge Maciel for cause after learning of the undisclosed ex parte communications with Ms. Brock. On May 9, 1996, Judge Maciel filed a response to the motion in which he consented to the case being assigned to another judge. The Galik case was subsequently assigned to another judge.

Judge Maciel's conduct and the challenge for cause filed against him received substantial publicity.

The commission found that Judge Maciel's communications to Ms. Brock on April 1, 2, and 4 were improper. Canon 3B(7) prohibits a judge from initiating, permitting, or considering ex parte communications concerning a pending or impending proceeding. The California Supreme Court has found ex parte communications between a judge and an attorney to constitute conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice. See Kennick v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1990) 50 C.3d 297, 331-332; Roberts v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1983) 33 C.3d 739, 743-748. The Supreme Court has also found prejudicial conduct where a judge communicated with and provided legal assistance to attorneys concerning matters pending before other judges. See Adams v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1995) 10 C.4th 866, 906-908. The commission also found that Judge Maciel's conduct created, at a minimum, the appearance of a lack of impartiality and damaged public confidence in the judiciary. Canon 2A requires a judge to respect and comply with the law and to act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary.

The vote of the commission on issuance of the Public Admonishment was 7 ayes and 2 noes. The two commission members who voted against issuance of the public admonishment believed a more severe sanction was warranted.

FILED

FEB 1 9 1998

Commission on
Judicial Performance

STATE OF CALIFORNIA

BEFORE THE COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

| | |
|---|---|
| INQUIRY CONCERNING JUDGE JAMES L. STEVENS, JR., NO. 143 | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT |

This is a disciplinary matter concerning Judge James L. Stevens, Jr., of the Yolo County Superior Court. Formal Proceedings having been instituted, this matter is now before the Commission on Judicial Performance pursuant to Rule 127 of the Commission's Rules of Practice (discipline by consent).

APPEARANCES

Trial counsel for the Commission on Judicial Performance are Jack Coyle and Valerie Marchant (San Francisco). Counsel for Judge Stevens are Mark S. Tratten and Ericksen, Arbuthnot, Kilduff, Day & Lindstrom (Sacramento).

PROCEDURAL HISTORY

Formal proceedings were instituted in this matter by a Notice of Formal Proceedings dated October 30, 1997. The Notice sets forth three counts of misconduct pursuant to article VI, section 18 of the California Constitution.

After the Notice of Formal Proceedings had been executed, but before Judge Stevens formally appeared in this matter, counsel for the parties proposed a resolution of this matter whereby discipline no more severe than a public admonishment would be imposed as to certain charges, and private discipline would be imposed as to the remaining charge.

FINDINGS OF FACT

In a verified statement, submitted in conjunction with the stipulation proposing resolution of this matter, Judge Stevens admits the truth of the charges set forth in the Notice, waives review by the Supreme Court, states that he is not acting under duress, and consents to the sanction proposed. The parties' stipulation provides:

:rved: 2/20/98 PM

> Pursuant to Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance, rule 127, Respondent and Trial Counsel submit the following stipulation in Inquiry Concerning Judge James L. Stevens, Jr., No. 143:
>
> 1. On June 14, 1996, regarding a pending case involving two female juveniles charged with battery on two teachers, Judge Stevens held an in-chambers conference with counsel prior to a disposition hearing for one of the juvenile defendants. During that in-chambers conference, Judge Stevens referred to the two female juveniles as "bitches." The juveniles were not present.
>
> The comment was in violation of the Code of Judicial Ethics, canon 3B(4), which requires a judge to be patient, dignified, and courteous to litigants and others with whom a judge deals in an official capacity, and canon 2A, which requires a judge to act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary.
>
> The remaining allegations in Count One of the Notice of Formal Proceedings will be dismissed.
>
> 2. On May 16, 1996, during a hearing in court, a male juvenile defendant became physically disruptive, overturned a table, and appeared to charge toward Judge Stevens. The juvenile was forcibly restrained by a bailiff. During a recess after the hearing, Judge Stevens commented that the juvenile did not have a "Chinaman's chance" of reaching him.
>
> The comment was in violation of the Code of Judicial Ethics, canon 2A, which requires a judge to act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary.
>
> The allegation in Count Two of the Notice of Formal Proceedings that Judge Stevens violated canon 3B(5) is dismissed.
>
> In 1994, Judge Stevens was publicly reproved by the Commission for improper and offensive remarks in court. In mitigation, Judge Stevens has acknowledged that the use of the term "bitches" was improper, and that he is now aware that "Chinaman's chance" may be considered offensive and has agreed to refrain from use of such terms. Judge Stevens intends to retire from the bench in May 1998.
>
> The parties agree that based upon the foregoing, Judge Stevens shall be publicly admonished.

The Commission acknowledges Judge Stevens' admission that the forgoing facts are true, and it therefore adopts the forgoing as setting forth its findings of fact.

In determining the level of discipline, the Commission notes that Judge Stevens was the subject of a prior public reproval by the Commission for inappropriate, abusive, and demeaning comment and actions towards litigants and court personnel.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

The Commission therefore concludes that in the matter presently before the Commission Judge Stevens committed conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice in Counts One and Two, and that such inappropriate and demeaning remarks by a judge constitute violations of Canons 2A and 3B(4), as set forth above.

DISCIPLINE

In submitting this matter pursuant to Rule 127, the parties have agreed that, if approved, the Commission will impose discipline no more serious than public admonishment.[1] If the Commission were to reject the proposed disposition, the formal proceedings already instituted would continue for further hearings and findings of fact. Once the special masters have made initial findings and submitted their report, the matter would return to the Commission for further deliberations. At that time, the Commission would be free to impose any sanction that it concluded was appropriate, including removal from office.

The Commission has determined that further proceedings are not warranted on the facts of this case. Judge Stevens is retiring and will leave the bench before formal proceedings could be concluded. It appears to the Commission that the timely imposition of a public admonishment, and private discipline as to the remaining count, would best serve the public interest.

The Commission's vote was 7 to 1, with one Commissioner recused.

This decision and order shall constitute the order of public admonishment.

Dated: January 30th, 1998

Chairperson

[1] Other than removal, the alternatives available to the Commission in a disciplinary proceeding include dismissal (with or without an advisory letter), issuance of a private admonishment, issuance of a public admonishment, issuance of a public censure, and removal from office.

Commission members Robert C. Bonner, Esq., Ms. Ophelia Basgal, Hon. Lois Haight, Hon. Daniel M. Hanlon, Patrick M. Kelly, Esq., Hon. Vincent J. McGraw, and Donald E. Vinson, Ph.D., voted for the public admonishment. Commission member Ms. Pearl West voted against public admonishment. Commission member Ms. Harriet Salarno was recused and Commission members Mr. Alan W. Barcelona and Ms. Eleanor Johns did not participate.

COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE
101 Howard Street, Suite 300
San Francisco, CA 94105

---

Contact: Victoria B. Henley
Director-Chief Counsel
(415) 904-3650

FOR RELEASE
June 16, 1998

---

JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE COMMISSION ISSUES PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE ROBERT H. OLIVER

The Commission on Judicial Performance has issued a public admonishment to Judge Robert H. Oliver of the Fresno County Municipal Court. The admonishment is attached.

The commission is composed of six public members, three judges and two lawyers. The Chairperson is Robert C. Bonner, Esq. of Los Angeles, California.

PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE ROBERT H. OLIVER

The Commission on Judicial Performance has ordered Judge Robert H. Oliver publicly admonished pursuant to Article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution and Commission Rule 115, as set forth in the following statement of facts and reasons found by the commission:

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

1. On October 4, 1996, Judge Robert Oliver took under submission certain motions pertaining to discovery in the misdemeanor criminal case of People v. Wigand. These motions were not decided until May 14, 1997, seven months later. During this time, Judge Oliver received letters dated October 25, 1996, December 18, 1996, January 6, 1997, and March 3, 1997 reminding him that the motions remained undecided. Judge Oliver also received verbal reminders that the motions remained undecided. Judge Oliver's delay was later determined to have resulted in a violation of the defendant's right to a speedy trial, which necessitated dismissal of the criminal charges against her.

2. On April 19, 1996, Judge Oliver took under submission demurrers in two misdemeanor criminal cases entitled People v. Judy Wooldridge. Judge Oliver did not rule on the demurrers until May 12, 1997, a delay of thirteen months.

3. While the Wigand and Wooldridge cases remained pending and undecided for longer than 90 days, Judge Oliver executed salary declarations under penalty of perjury stating that there were no cases before him which had remained pending and undecided for longer than 90 days, and continued to receive his judicial salary. (See California Constitution, Article VI, section 19 and Government Code section 68210.) Judge Oliver had received reminders that the Wigand case had been under submission in excess of 90 days when he executed some of these salary declarations.

Judge Oliver's failure to decide the Wigand and Wooldridge cases was contrary to Canon 3B(8) of the Code of Judicial Ethics, which requires that judges dispose of all judicial matters fairly, promptly and efficiently. While inordinate delay in decision-making is unacceptable in all cases, Judge Oliver's failure to promptly decide criminal cases pending before him was particularly egregious in light of the potential for harm to the parties and the public inherent in such delay. Judge Oliver's delay in the Wigand case was determined to have violated the defendant's right to a speedy trial, which necessitated dismissal of the case; that dismissal deprived the People, the defendant, and the public of an adjudication of criminal charges.

In mitigation, it was noted that Judge Oliver reported his delay in the Wigand matter to the commission.

The vote of the commission on issuance of the Public Admonishment was 6 ayes and 2 noes, and one recusal. (The two "no" votes favored private discipline.)

COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE
101 Howard Street, Suite 300
San Francisco, CA 94105

---

Contact: Victoria B. Henley
Director-Chief Counsel
(415) 904-3650

FOR RELEASE
July 6, 1998

---

JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE COMMISSION ISSUES PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE GREGORY M. CASKEY

The Commission on Judicial Performance has issued a public admonishment to Judge Gregory M. Caskey of the Shasta County Superior Court. The admonishment is attached.

The commission is composed of six public members, three judges and two lawyers. The Chairperson is Robert C. Bonner, Esq. of Los Angeles, California. Presently, one public member position on the commission is vacant.

PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE GREGORY M. CASKEY

The Commission on Judicial Performance has ordered Judge Gregory M. Caskey publicly admonished pursuant to Article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution and Commission Rule 115, as set forth in the following statement of facts and reasons found by the commission:

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

In November 1997, Judge Gregory M. Caskey was regularly assigned to handle juvenile dependency matters. On the morning of November 6, 1997, Judge Caskey sent a message by electronic mail to an attorney who regularly appeared before him on those matters. The e-mail message concerned a case then pending before the judge, in which the attorney was appearing. The message read in part:

> I am considering summarily rejecting [the father's attorney's] requests. Do you want me to let [the father's attorney] have a hearing on this, or do we cut [the attorney] off summarily and run the risk the third DCA reverses? . . . . I say screw [the father] and let's cut [the attorney] off without a hearing. O.K.? By the way, this message will self-destruct in five seconds…

Later that morning, the attorney sent the following e-mail reply:

> Your honor, I don't feel comfortable responding ex-parte on how you should rule on a pending case.

Two hours later, the judge sent an e-mail response which read: "chicken."

On November 12, 1997, Judge Caskey sent the attorney another e-mail message. In this message, he solicited the attorney's views on the advisability of having children in court. He offered the attorney the opportunity to give an "unofficial" view. The judge continued:

> On the other ex parte matter, I have decided to allow a hearing to be set on the 388 motion and not summarily deny it at this point. I think there is enough being raised in the psychiatrists [sic] declaration to support a hearing and that I would risk more problems if I summarily denied it. I'll set the hearing as soon as possible of course so we can move forward.

Later that day, the attorney provided a lengthy response, giving the attorney's views on the positive and negative aspects of having children in court, such as the obvious benefit of having children in court so that their attorney could talk to them there, if the attorney had not done so before the hearing. The attorney continued:

> As you know, [the attorney regularly appearing for children] doesn't even try to talk to the kids until after dispo, which in my mind is too late. The attorney should talk to them prior to juris to be sure the allegations are true and that the dispo orders are appropriate. Also, the kids themselves often have ideas about possible relative placements. Since [the attorney] doesn't speak to his clients, perhaps bringing the kids in to court would ensure he talks to them. Of course it would be a lot easier to just insist he talk to the kids before every hearing rather than dragging the kids in. If we were going to bring kids to court, I think the detention hearing would be a logical hearing, since there's no time to interview the kids before hand [sic] and [the attorney] could get input from the kids then. My druthers would be that [the attorney] do his job better, and avoid bringing in the kids unless they're testifying.

Judge Caskey's ex parte communications with an attorney about a case then pending before him, in which the attorney was appearing, was contrary to Canon 3B(7) of the Code of Judicial Ethics, which generally prohibits ex parte communications, and was contrary to Canon 2A, which provides that a judge "shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary." The content of the judge's first message, in particular, suggested prejudgment of a matter before him; Judge Caskey's use of the words "we" and "let's" and his solicitation of the attorney's advice on how to handle the matter procedurally also suggested that he had aligned himself with one side in the proceeding. The language used in reference to the father gave the appearance of bias and animus, and was entirely inconsistent with a judge's obligations to be impartial and to maintain the dignity of the court. In his one-word response ("chicken") to the attorney's refusal to communicate about a pending case, the judge displayed a joking attitude toward the attorney's ethical concerns.

Judge Caskey's ex parte communications with the attorney about the perceived shortcomings of other attorneys appearing before the judge on dependency cases and about procedural aspects of other cases were also problematic. Such communications contributed to an impression that the judge was aligned with one side in matters before him.

In mitigation, the commission noted that Judge Caskey has a long record of distinguished judicial service and service in judicial education, that the judge has expressed remorse, and that the judge has no record of prior discipline.

The vote of the commission on issuance of the Public Admonishment was 8 ayes and 0 noes.

[No. 142. Oct. 23, 1998.]

INQUIRY CONCERNING JUDGE CHRISTOPHER J. SHELDON

SUMMARY

A disciplinary matter was brought concerning a superior court judge.

The Commission on Judicial Performance publicly admonished the judge. The commission concluded that the judge committed prejudicial misconduct by abandoning his judicial duties. The judge decided that it would not be necessary for him to be on the bench to handle each case during the misdemeanor pretrial calendar. The judge asked the attorneys to handle routine things and to let him know if they needed him. The large majority of cases on the pretrial calendar were adjudicated in the judge's absence and without his participation. The judge also allowed his clerk to routinely stamp his signature on plea forms indicating that defendant had been advised of and waived his or her constitutional rights when the judge had not reviewed the form, questioned the defendant, or made the purported findings. The judge's conduct in managing his pretrial calendar was unjudicial and violated Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canons 1, 2A, and 3B(1). In addition, the judge's occasional jogging on the stairs next to his chambers during the pretrial calendar was misconduct in and of itself and violated Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canons 2A, 3A, and 4A(3). The judge's conduct gave the appearance that he was not interested in the courtroom proceedings and that he was using court time for personal matters. The integrity and independence of the judicial system did not permit the judge to delegate fundamental judicial responsibilities such as taking guilty pleas and imposing sentence. (Opinion by Robert C. Bonner, Chairperson.)

HEADNOTES

(1) Judges § 6—Discipline—Prejudicial Misconduct—Abandonment of Judicial Duties—Plea Forms.—The judge engaged in prejudicial misconduct by allowing his clerk to routinely stamp his signature on plea forms indicating that defendant had been advised of and waived his or her constitutional rights when the judge had not reviewed the form, questioned the defendant, or made the purported findings.

(2) Judges § 6—Discipline—Prejudicial Misconduct—Jogging on Stairs During Court Calendar.—The judge engaged in prejudicial misconduct by occasionally jogging on the courthouse stairs during his court calendar, and by his departure from the courthouse on one occasion with his pretrial calendar ongoing. The conduct gave the appearance that the judge was not interested in courtroom proceedings and that he was using court time for personal matters.

(3) Judges § 6—Discipline—Willful Misconduct.—To commit willful misconduct in office, a judge must (1) engage in conduct that is unjudicial and (2) committed in bad faith, (3) while acting in a judicial capacity.

(4) Judges § 6—Discipline—Prejudicial Misconduct—Abandonment of Judicial Duties.—Conduct that a judge undertakes in good faith but that nevertheless would appear to an objective observer to be not only unjudicial conduct but conduct prejudicial to public esteem for the judicial office constitutes prejudicial conduct. Thus, a judge committed prejudicial misconduct when he abandoned his judicial duties. The large majority of cases on the judge's pretrial misdemeanor calendar were adjudicated in the judge's absence and without his participation. The judge's conduct in managing his pretrial calendar was unjudicial and violated Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canons 1, 2A, and 3B(1).

[Cal. Forms of Pleading and Practice (2009) ch. 317, Judges, § 317.85; 2 Witkin, Cal. Procedure (5th ed. 2008) Courts, §§ 55, 56, 57, 58, 72.]

(5) Judges § 6—Discipline—Purpose of Proceedings.—The purpose of a judicial performance commission disciplinary proceeding is not punishment, but rather the protection of the public, the enforcement of rigorous standards of judicial conduct, and the maintenance of public confidence in the integrity and independence of the judicial system.

---

OPINION

BONNER, Chairperson.—This disciplinary matter concerns Judge Christopher J. Sheldon, a judge of the Riverside County Superior Court. The commission issues this public admonishment based on its conclusion that Judge Sheldon committed conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute.

APPEARANCES

Trial counsel for the Commission on Judicial Performance is Jack Coyle. Counsel for Judge Sheldon are James E. Friedhofer, Douglas R. Reynolds, and Eric D. Weitz of Lewis, D'Amato, Brisbois & Bisgaard (San Diego).

PROCEDURAL HISTORY

Judge Sheldon became a municipal court judge in 1989 and was appointed to the superior court in 1992. In 1995, the Superior and Municipal Courts of Riverside County were consolidated and Judge Sheldon volunteered to handle the afternoon misdemeanor pretrial calendar in addition to his superior court duties. These proceedings concern Judge Sheldon's method of handling the misdemeanor pretrial calendar from July 1995 until March 8, 1996.

The commission's investigation of these proceedings led to the filing, on October 7, 1997, of a notice of formal proceedings. Judge Sheldon filed a verified answer denying that he had conducted court business in violation of proper judicial procedures.

As provided for by rule 121(b) of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance, the Supreme Court appointed three special masters to conduct an evidentiary hearing and to prepare a written report. The evidentiary hearing was held on May 18 and 19, 1998, before Judge Mark R. Forcum, presiding, of the San Mateo County Superior Court and Judge Robert A. O'Farrell of the Monterey County Superior Court.[1] On August 5, 1998, the special masters filed their final report.

On August 19, 1998, Judge Sheldon filed objections to the special masters' report, and after further briefing, the matter was set for oral argument before the commission on October 8, 1998. Eight members of the commission participated, two were absent, and there is one vacancy.

THE CHARGES

The notice of formal proceedings charged Judge Sheldon with "willful misconduct in office, conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute and improper action" all within the meaning of article VI, section 18 of the California Constitution which also provides for removal, censure, public admonishment or private admonishment of a judge. The notice advanced the following specific allegations against Judge Sheldon: "You conducted business in violation of proper judicial procedures. From approximately July 1995 through February 1996, you frequently failed to take the bench, or you left the bench during portions of your misdemeanor calendar. In your absence from the courtroom, you allowed clerks to enter pleas and execute court documents imposing sentences, enter continuances agreed to by the attorneys and set hearing dates.

[1] Judge Janet I. Kintner of the San Diego County Municipal Court was also appointed as a special master by the Supreme Court but withdrew from the proceedings prior to the evidentiary hearing. Judge Sheldon agreed to a hearing before only two special masters.

For some pleas entered in your absence, you allowed clerks to stamp your signature on constitutional rights waiver forms. For some pleas entered in your absence, you signed rights waiver forms after the pretrial calendar was concluded. In other cases, rights waiver forms were neither signed by you nor stamped with your signature. On some occasions while your pretrial calendar was ongoing, you left the courthouse. You abandoned your role in the adjudicative process and demonstrated a disregard for your obligation to diligently perform the duties of judicial office."

FINDINGS[2]

Judge Sheldon's misdemeanor pretrial calendar was conducted Monday through Thursday. It was scheduled to begin at 1:30 p.m. and usually lasted until 4:00 p.m., although it occasionally ran as late as 6:00 p.m. The number of cases on each calendar was frequently more than 100.

Judge Sheldon decided that it would not be necessary for him to be on the bench to handle each case during the misdemeanor pretrial calendar. He met with deputy public defenders and the deputy district attorney assigned to his pretrial calendar and with one courtroom clerk to explain to them his new procedure. He asked the attorneys to handle routine things and to let him know if they needed him. He did not personally explain to the courtroom clerks how to handle the cases in his absence.

Judge Sheldon, starting in July 1995, took the bench only to handle the in-custody defendants at the beginning of the calendar, some private attorney cases, cases in which the attorneys could not agree upon a disposition, and driving under the influence cases reduced to alcohol-related reckless driving charges. He also took the bench to issue bench warrants at the end of calendars. The large majority of cases on the pretrial calendar were adjudicated in Judge Sheldon's absence and without his participation.

On the vast majority of cases on the pretrial calendar, the defendants' attorneys and the prosecutor agreed on a disposition. For those cases, respondent did not take the bench. Most of the cases on Judge Sheldon's calendar had out of custody defendants. Judge Sheldon had no involvement in approximately 90 percent to 95 percent of the out of custody cases.

The sentences were determined by the deputy district attorney who sat at counsel table in court and talked to defense counsel who lined up to talk to him. The deputy district attorney would extend offers of sentences and further negotiate with defendants' counsel. When the deputy district attorney and defense counsel agreed upon a plea and sentence, the defendant and his attorney would fill out a "Tahl" change of plea form (indicating that the defendant understood and waived his constitutional rights regarding trial)[3] and a terms and conditions of probation form. Although all defendants at issue were sentenced to probation, some defendants were sentenced to jail as a condition of probation. The deputy district attorney would review the forms and defense counsel would submit the forms to the clerks who would put the forms in the file, enter the plea and sentence into the computer, and generate a minute order.

[2] Neither party disputed the special masters' findings of fact and they are adopted by reference.

Initially, the clerks would bring the files to Judge Sheldon for his signature on the Tahl forms, but Judge Sheldon then gave them the option of stamping his name on the forms. The courtroom clerks thereafter routinely stamped Judge Sheldon's name on the Tahl forms and Judge Sheldon did not review the court files.

A judge's signature on a Tahl form indicates that the judge has reviewed the completed form and that the defendant has been apprised of his constitutional rights, has waived these constitutional rights, has entered into the plea freely and knowingly, and that the court accepts the plea.[4] When Judge Sheldon signed these Tahl forms, he had not questioned the defendant to determine if the plea in question was knowing, voluntary and intelligent. When the clerks stamped the Tahl forms with his signature, Judge Sheldon had not reviewed the forms, questioned the defendant, nor made any of the purported findings.

Judge Sheldon did not impose sentence in open court in these out of custody cases. He acknowledged before the special masters that he did not know when exactly a sentence was imposed under his procedure.

Defense counsel and the prosecutor liked Judge Sheldon's method of handling the pretrial calendar and believed that the pleas entered under the [3] The forms take their name from the Supreme Court's opinion in In re Tahl (1969) 1 Cal.3d 122 [81 Cal.Rptr. 577, 460 P.2d 449], which undertook an extensive analysis of Boykin v. Alabama (1969) 395 U.S. 238 [23 L.Ed.2d 274, 89 S.Ct. 1709]. The Tahl opinion sets forth certain standards for the trial record of a plea of guilty.

[4] The following language appears above the line for the judge's signature on the Tahl form: "The Court, having reviewed this form and having questioned the defendant concerning the defendant's Constitutional rights and the defendant's admission of prior conviction(s) and probation violation(s), if any, finds that the defendant has expressly, knowingly, understandingly and intelligently waived his or her constitutional rights. The Court finds that the defendant's plea(s) and admission(s) are freely and voluntarily made with an understanding of the nature and consequences thereof, and that there is a factual basis for the plea(s). The Court accepts the defendant's plea(s), the defendant's admission of the other conviction(s) and probation violation(s), if any, and the defendant is convicted on his or her plea(s)."

system were valid. Apparently, no legal challenge has been made to a plea entered under Judge Sheldon's procedures.

Ultimately other judges complained about Judge Sheldon's pretrial calendar procedure to Riverside County Presiding Judge Edward Webster. Judge Webster thought it was "bad practice" for Judge Sheldon to not be on the bench when pleas were entered. He testified that the great majority of judges in Riverside County did not like the practice. Judge Webster discussed the matter with Judge Sheldon's immediate supervising judge, Judge Robert Taylor, who met with Judge Sheldon on March 7, 1996. The next day, Judge Sheldon announced in court that he was discontinuing his procedure of being absent from the bench. Since then, Judge Sheldon has been on the bench taking guilty pleas and imposing sentences during the misdemeanor pretrial calendar, and he now personally signs all Tahl forms.

On occasion, Judge Sheldon left the courthouse while the misdemeanor pretrial calendar was still pending. He testified that he would schedule personal matters outside of the courthouse for as early as 3:00 p.m., but that when he left early he would arrange for another judicial officer to cover for him. Sometimes Judge Sheldon personally asked another judicial officer to cover for him and sometimes he asked his bailiff to arrange "cover." Judge Sheldon did not know whether the other judicial officer would actually take the bench or would just be available, and he did not always inform the attorneys or clerks that he was no longer available to help them, or that a commissioner rather than a judge was covering. Judge Sheldon admitted that on one occasion (Feb. 29, 1996) he left the courthouse before the calendar was concluded when he had been told that there was no coverage by another judicial officer.

In response to the allegation that during his afternoon pretrial calendar he was absent from the bench "exercising in or about the courthouse," Judge Sheldon, through counsel, admitted by letter: "Judge Sheldon did upon occasion exercise by running the stairs next to his chambers during the pretrial calendar. He has since stopped this practice. He understands that exercising during the day, other than at the lunch break, could give the appearance of disinterest [sic] in the proceedings in his court and misuse of time. He was merely trying to use his time efficiently, and regrets any appearance of disinterest [sic] or misuse of time. He has no backlog of cases, so his occasional exercising outside of the lunch hour did not slow his case flow. He understands that judges must endeavor to do nothing that would undermine confidence in the judicial system."

CONCLUSIONS

The commission, having considered Judge Sheldon's objections to the special masters' conclusions of law, adopts the special masters' conclusions of law and they are incorporated herein by reference.

In particular, the commission agrees with the special masters' conclusions that Judge Sheldon committed prejudicial misconduct by abandoning his duties "to be on the bench to preside over cases when they are adjudicated in his court," "to determine that a defendant entering a plea has done so freely and voluntarily and that the defendant has made a knowing, intelligent, and voluntary waiver of his constitutional rights," "to approve a sentence agreed upon by the attorneys," and "to impose sentence."

The special masters noted that there "is an appropriate expectation that it is the judge who makes an independent evaluation of all issues presented to the court." The commission concurs that the fact that Judge Sheldon in many cases allowed the district attorney to determine the sentence, combined with the fact that he never appeared in court to impose sentence, undermined the public's confidence in an independent judiciary.

(1) The commission also agrees with the special masters' conclusion that by allowing clerks to stamp his name to forms attesting that he had reviewed the forms and had made various findings regarding the entry of a plea, when in fact he had not done so, Judge Sheldon "knowingly allowed inaccurate and misleading court records to be created."

Judge Sheldon's conduct in managing his pretrial calendar was unjudicial and violated California Code of Judicial Ethics canon 1 (judge shall uphold integrity of judiciary), canon 2A (judge shall act at all times in a manner which promotes public confidence in the judiciary), and canon 3B(1) (judge shall hear and decide all matters assigned to the judge except when disqualified).

(2) The commission also accepts the special masters' conclusions that (1) Judge Sheldon's admitted occasional jogging on the stairs during his afternoon pretrial calendar is misconduct in and of itself (violating Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canon 4A(3) (a judge shall conduct his extrajudicial activities so that they do not interfere with the proper performance of his judicial duties), canon 3A (judicial duties take precedence over all other activities) and canon 2A (a judge must avoid the appearance of impropriety and must act to promote public confidence in the judiciary)); and (2) Judge Sheldon engaged in prejudicial conduct when on one occasion he left the courthouse with his pretrial calendar ongoing (violating canons 4A(3), 3A & 2A), but that on other occasions when Judge Sheldon left the courthouse prior to the conclusion of his calendar, he arranged to have another judicial officer "cover" the end of his calendar.

(3) The special masters concluded, and the commission agrees, that Judge Sheldon's actions do not amount to willful misconduct. As most recently reiterated by the Supreme Court in Broadman v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1998) 18 Cal.4th 1079, 1091 [77 Cal.Rptr.2d 408, 959 P.2d 715] (Broadman), "[t]o commit willful misconduct in office, a judge must (1) engage in conduct that is unjudicial and (2) committed in bad faith, (3) while acting in a judicial capacity." Judge Sheldon maintained that he did not think that the procedures violated the law and that he was motivated by a desire to make the pretrial calendar run more efficiently. The commission concurs in the special masters' conclusion that the element of bad faith is lacking.

(4) Judge Sheldon's behavior, however, does constitute conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute. In Broadman, the Supreme Court explained that "conduct which a judge undertakes in good faith but which nevertheless would appear to an objective observer to be not only unjudicial conduct but conduct prejudicial to public esteem for the judicial office" constitutes prejudicial conduct.[5] The special masters concluded, and the commission concurs, that Judge Sheldon's behavior constituted prejudicial conduct as he "should have known that his method of conducting his calendar was improper, and that his conduct in this regard would be viewed by the public (correctly) as an abdication of judicial duties," and that the charge of prejudicial conduct was proved by clear and convincing evidence.

These conclusions are reinforced by the special masters' conclusions that Judge Sheldon's occasional jogging on the stairs during the afternoon calendar and his departure from the courthouse on February 29, 1998, with his pretrial calendar ongoing and not covered by another judicial officer, are each in and of themselves sanctionable misconduct. We agree with the special masters that this conduct gave the appearance that Judge Sheldon was not interested in the courtroom proceedings and that he was using court time for personal matters.

[5] Citing Kennick v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1990) 50 Cal.3d 297, 314 [267 Cal.Rptr. 293, 787 P.2d 591], the Supreme Court reiterated "In sum, to constitute prejudicial conduct, a judge's actions must bring 'the judicial office into disrepute,' that is, the conduct would appear to an objective observer to be prejudicial to ' "public esteem for the judicial office." ' " (Broadman, supra, 18 Cal.4th at p. 1093.)

DISCIPLINE

(5) The Supreme Court recently reiterated that the purpose of a commission disciplinary proceeding is not punishment, " 'but rather the protection of the public, the enforcement of rigorous standards of judicial conduct, and the maintenance of public confidence in the integrity and independence of the judicial system.' " (Broadman, supra, at pp. 1111–1112, quoting Adams v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1995) 10 Cal.4th 866, 912 [42 Cal.Rptr.2d 606, 897 P.2d 544].)

The commission appreciates Judge Sheldon's willingness to take on the misdemeanor pretrial calendar in addition to his other duties. The commission also recognizes that Judge Sheldon's motivation in adopting the procedure in issue was a desire to make the pretrial calendar run more efficiently, and that he promptly changed his procedure after being counseled by the supervising judge.

Several aspects of this case, however, lead the commission to conclude that the public will be best served through the issuance of a public admonishment. First, a public admonishment is required because Judge Sheldon abandoned his fundamental responsibilities to be on the bench to preside over cases when they are adjudicated in his court, to determine that a defendant entering a plea does so freely and voluntarily and has made a knowing and intelligent waiver of his constitutional rights, and to approve and impose the sentence. For six months, the public observed sentences being imposed without the participation of a judge. Furthermore, Judge Sheldon has maintained, both before the special masters and before the commission, that there was nothing wrong with his procedure. Judge Sheldon's confidence in the district attorneys, public defenders and private attorneys who appear in his court may be well taken, but the integrity and independence of the judicial system does not permit the delegation of such fundamental judicial responsibilities as taking guilty pleas and imposing sentence.[6]

Second, Judge Sheldon's practice of allowing his courtroom clerks to stamp his signature on Tahl forms when he never saw the files created

[6] Judge Sheldon's citation to provisions allowing defendants to sign Tahl forms and excusing defendants from appearing in court, suggest a failure to differentiate between an attorney's responsibility to his or her client and a judge's responsibilities to independently assure the protection of the defendant's rights. The importance of this difference may be gleaned from the Supreme Court's opinion in Mills v. Municipal Court (1973) 10 Cal.3d 288, 305 [110 Cal.Rptr. 329, 515 P.2d 273], where the court, in discussing a misdemeanor, states that "defendant's written change of plea form, supplemented by the in-court colloquy with defendant's counsel, constitutes, when incorporated in the record, a fully adequate 'on the record' showing that defendant was both aware of all his relevant constitutional rights and knowingly, voluntarily and personally waived them."

inaccurate and misleading court records. The commission notes that appellate courts (and appellate divisions) are particularly dependent on the accuracy of the printed record created in the trial court. Judge Sheldon's suggestion that other judges on occasion allow their courtroom clerks to stamp their signatures on Tahl forms militates in favor of the issuance of a public admonishment in order to discourage such practices.

Finally, a public admonishment is an appropriate response to Judge Sheldon having left the courthouse on February 29, 1996, prior to the completion of the pretrial calendar when no other judicial officer was available to cover the calendar and his occasional running of the stairs next to his chambers during his pretrial calendar.

This decision shall constitute the order of public admonishment of Judge Sheldon.

The commission's vote was 8 to 0, two were absent, and there is one vacancy.

Commission members Robert C. Bonner, Esq., Ms. Ophelia Basgal, Mr. Mike Farrell, Hon. Daniel M. Hanlon, Patrick M. Kelly, Esq., Mr. Luke Leung, Ms. Ramona Ripston, and Donald E. Vinson, Ph.D., voted for the public admonishment. Commission members Hon. Lois Haight and Ms. Harriet Salarno did not participate. There was one vacant position on the commission.

PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE HARVEY H. HIBER

The Commission on Judicial Performance has ordered Judge Harvey H. Hiber publicly admonished pursuant to Article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution and rules 115 and 116 of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance.

PROCEDURAL HISTORY

On August 28, 1998, the Commission on Judicial Performance issued a Notice of Intended Public Admonishment pursuant to rule 115 of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance. Judge Hiber, through counsel, sought an appearance before the commission pursuant to rule 116(b) of the Rules of Commission on Judicial Performance, and waived his right to formal proceedings under rule 118.

On October 7, 1998, Judge Hiber, through counsel James R. Rogers, appeared before the commission.

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

1. In mid-1994, Judge Hiber asked a female court employee to become his permanent courtroom clerk. She became Judge Hiber's clerk in September 1994. From approximately September 1994 through May 1995, as described below, Judge Hiber engaged in a pattern of inappropriate conduct towards his courtroom clerk.

In August 1994, while he was on vacation and before the clerk started working for him, Judge Hiber wrote to her four times during a one-week period. In that correspondence, he made personal comments about her and referred to his preparation of a "sexual harassment waiver" that would be ready for her signature before she started working for him. The clerk and the judge had had a platonic social relationship in 1994, and the clerk was concerned by the insistent tone of the judge's letters. When the judge returned from vacation, she told him that she wanted to keep their relationship on a professional level. Judge Hiber assured her that it would be.

In September 1994, Judge Hiber presented the clerk with a large two page scroll written in calligraphy, which he had authored, entitled, "Absolute, Unconditional and Total Waiver of Harassment." The scroll measured approximately 30 inches by 40 inches. The scroll, which contained sexual innuendoes, included sections that (1) sought to have the clerk waive any and all objections to whatever verbal or physical advances the judge might make, and (2) cast the judge as the clerk's protector against anyone else making any advances toward the clerk. The scroll had signature lines at the bottom for the clerk and the judge. The clerk refused to sign the scroll.

During the following months, Judge Hiber continued the pattern of insistent and unwelcome behavior. He repeatedly asked the clerk to spend time with him outside of court hours. On one occasion, he called her at home on a weekend. On another occasion, he kissed her on the mouth after taking her to her car near the courthouse, for which he apologized. On two occasions, he passed her notes from the bench which contained jokes of a sexual nature. On at least one occasion, he brought flowers to her home when she was ill. The judge mailed or gave the clerk numerous letters, notes and greeting cards. The judge frequently interrupted her while she was working to discuss non-work-related matters.

During the time period in question, the clerk did not write to the judge, telephone him at home or invite him to spend time with her outside of courtroom hours. She sometimes accepted the judge's lunch invitations. When she refused or attempted to refuse the judge's offers to go to lunch, he argued with her at some length, and persisted in inviting her to lunch and asking her to spend time with him outside of court hours. In a letter from the judge to the clerk dated November 1994, the judge acknowledged that she "had rejected everything I've suggested for doing something or spending time together for Thursday, Friday and or Saturday - with no feedback or alternatives suggested by you."

Judge Hiber also gave the clerk gifts, including clothing, an expensive pen, a lamp, a computer keyboard, and in May of 1995, an exercise machine. In a letter from the judge to the clerk dated September 1994, the judge referred to a gift of clothing and admitted that he knew that his gift was "contrary to our understanding regarding our professional relationship and our friendship," and stated that in "retrospect neither the gift nor the timing was proper. . . . It won't happen again!" The judge gave the clerk a number of gifts after he wrote and delivered the September 1994 letter. The only gift the clerk gave to the judge was a Christmas gift from her and other court staff.

The judge's pattern of conduct towards the clerk was unjudicial and contrary to the following canons of the former Code of Judicial Conduct, which was in effect during the relevant time period: canon 1, which provides that a judge shall uphold the integrity of the judiciary; canon 2, which provides that a judge shall avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety in all of the judge's activities; and canon 3B(5), which provides that a judge shall not manifest bias in the performance of his judicial duties by words or conduct, the commentary to which provides that a judge must refrain from speech, gestures, or other conduct that could reasonably be perceived as sexual harassment.

2. In late September 1994, Judge Hiber gave his clerk $250 in cash and asked her to donate the money in her name to the campaign of a candidate for nonjudicial of fice. The clerk did as the judge requested. The judge's conduct created the appearance that the judge was attempting to conceal that he was the source of a political contribution, in violation of canon 2 of the former Code of Judicial Conduct.

The judge's conduct constituted, at a minimum, improper action, within the meaning of Article VI, section 1 8(d) of the California Constitution.

In mitigation, the commission notes that Judge Hiber cooperated with the commission and has acknowledged that his actions towards his clerk were inappropriate.

The vote of the commission on issuance of the Public Admonishment was 10 ayes and 0 noes. There is currently one vacancy.

This decision and order shall constitute the order of public admonishment.

Dated: October 23, 1998

Robert C. Bonner
Chairperson

FILED

OCT 2 9 1998

Commission on
Judicial Performance

STATE OF CALIFORNIA

BEFORE THE COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

| | |
|---|---|
| Inquiry Concerning Judge John P. ShookNo. 148 | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT |

This is a disciplinary matter concerning Judge John P. Shook of the Los Angeles County Superior Court. Formal proceedings having been instituted, this matter is now before the Commission on Judicial Performance pursuant to Rule 127 of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance (discipline by consent).

APPEARANCES

Trial counsel for the Commission on Judicial Performance is William Smith. Counsel for Judge Shook is Jeffrey Gray.

PROCEDURAL HISTORY

Formal proceedings were instituted in this matter by a Notice of Formal Proceedings dated June 25, 1998. The Notice set forth four counts of misconduct pursuant to article VI, section 18 of the California Constitution.

After the Notice of Formal Proceedings had been executed, but before Judge Shook formally appeared in this matter, counsel for the parties proposed a resolution of this matter whereby discipline no more severe than a public admonishment would be imposed.

CONSENT AGREEMENT

In an affidavit submitted in conjunction with the stipulation proposing resolution of this matter, Judge Shook admits to the truth of the charges set forth in the Notice, freely and voluntarily consents to the sanction of public admonishment and waives review by the Supreme Court. The parties' stipulation provides:

COUNT ONE

From approximately January 1989 through February 1996, when Judge Shook was assigned to the Torrance courthouse in the Southwest District of the Los Angeles Superior Court, Judge Shook appointed attorney Ben Sadler to represent criminal defendants in approximately 50 cases. During that time, Judge Shook had a financial relationship with Mr. Sadler. Mr. Sadler was renting office space in a building owned by Judge Shook and Judge Shook's wife.

From 1989 through May 1993, Judge Shook appointed Mr. Sadler to approximately 28 cases that were paid through a countywide system called PACE (Professional Appointee Court Expenditure). When Mr. Sadler appeared before Judge Shook on cases, Judge Shook did not disclose the landlord-tenant relationship or disqualify himself because of that relationship. Judge Shook approved Mr. Sadler's attorney fees on PACE cases.

In mid-1993, Judge Shook recommended Mr. Sadler's membership in an attorney appointment panel called SWIDP (Southwest Indigent Defense Panel) to SWIDP administrators. From approximately November 1993 through September 1995, Judge Shook appointed Mr. Sadler to approximately 22 cases in which attorney fees were paid through SWIDP. Approximately 15 of the SWIDP appointments Judge Shook made to Mr. Sadler were appointments that were not made according to the SWIDP attorney rotation list (called "collars"). Mr. Sadler received more "collar" appointments from all judges combined than did any other SWIDP attorney; and all but one of Mr. Sadler's "collar" appointments were made by Judge Shook. Judge Shook made more "collar" appointments to Mr. Sadler than Judge Shook did to any other attorney.

Judge Shook's conduct violated the former Code of Judicial Conduct (effective until October 5, 1992), canons 1, 2A, 2B, 3B(4), and 5C(1), and the former Code of Judicial Conduct (effective beginning October 5, 1992), canons 1, 2A, 2B, 3C(4), and 4D(1).

Canon 1 provides that a judge should uphold the independence and integrity of the judiciary.

Canon 2 provides that a judge should avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety in all of the judge's activities. Canon 2A provides that a judge should act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary. Canon 2B provides that a judge should not allow family, social, political or other relationships to influence the judge's judicial conduct or judgment, and should not lend the prestige of judicial office to advance the private or personal interests of the judge or others, and should not convey or permit others to convey the impression that they are in a special position to influence the judge.

Canon 3B(4) (before October 5, 1992), and canon 3C(4) (after October 5, 1992) require a judge to use the power of appointment impartially and on the basis of merit, avoiding favoritism.

Canons 5C(1) (before October 5, 1992), and canon 4 D(1) (after October 5, 1992) provide that a judge should not engage in financial and business dealings that might be reasonably perceived to exploit the judge's judicial position, or involve the judge in frequent transactions or continuing business relationships with lawyers likely to appear before the court on which the judge serves.

COUNT TWO

From approximately 1989 through February 1996, Judge Shook appointed attorney Robert Welbourn to represent criminal defendants in over 30 cases. During that time, Judge Shook had a social relationship with Mr. Welbourn. They had gone on group cruises together, and the judge attended several small group dinners with Mr. Welbourn. Judge Shook also allowed Mr. Welbourn to pay for two lunches for Judge Shook and Judge Shook's court staff. When Mr. Welbourn appeared before Judge Shook, the judge did not disclose his social relationship with Mr. Welbourn or disqualify himself because of that relationship.

In some PACE cases, Judge Shook allowed Mr. Welbourn to bring his bills for attorney fees directly to Judge Shook in chambers for Judge Shook's approval, in disregard of the PACE policy that before approval by a judge, attorney fees were to be submitted to PACE for review and evaluation.

Judge Shook's conduct violated the former Code of Judicial Conduct (effective until October 5, 1992), canons 1, 2A, 2B, and 3B(4), and the former Code of Judicial Conduct (effective beginning October 5, 1992), canons 1, 2A, 2B, and 3C(4).

The judge's conduct also violated canon 3C (before October 5, 1992), and canon 3E (after October 5, 1992), which provide that a judge disqualify himself in a proceeding in which disqualification is required by law, or the judge's impartiality might reasonably be questioned.

COUNT THREE

In approximately mid-April, 1994, attorney Joel Oiknine was a prospective tenant in the office building owned by Judge Shook and Judge Shook's wife. Mr. Oiknine at that time had a telephone conversation with Judge Shook in which Mr. Oiknine expressed doubt that he could afford the rent. Judge Shook ascertained that Mr. Oiknine's application to become a member of SWIDP had been denied. Judge Shook told Mr. Oiknine that if he rented office space in the Shook building, Judge Shook would recommend Mr. Oiknine to SWIPD. Mr. Oiknine would then receive criminal appointments from Judge Shook, which would cover the rent.

Judge Shook's conduct violated the former Code of Judicial Conduct, canons 1, 2A, 2B, 3C(4), and 4D(1).

COUNT FOUR

From approximately mid-1985 through 1988, when Judge Shook was assigned to the Compton courthouse in the South Central District of the Los Angeles Superior Court, attorney Stanley Granville was appointed by Judge Shook to represent criminal defendants in cases before Judge Shook. On two occasions relevant to this time period, Judge Shook allowed Mr. Granville to pay for lunch for Judge Shook and Judge Shook's court staff. On one of those occasions, Mr. Granville used a limousine in which champagne was available to transport Judge Shook and Judge Shook's staff to lunch.

Judge Shook's conduct in count four violated the former Code of Judicial Conduct, canons 1, 2A, 2B, and 3B(4).

MITIGATION

The stipulation notes in mitigation that Judge Shook recognizes the impropriety of his actions. Judge Shook also requests that the commission note his cooperation in the investigation.

DISCIPLINE

The commission adopts the findings of facts and conclusions of law set forth in the consent agreement. The commission agrees that despite the reprehensible nature of Judge Shook's conduct, in the circumstances of this case, the public interest is served by the issuance of a public admonishment. The commission's vote was 10 to 0. There is one vacancy.

This decision and order shall constitute the order of public admonishment.

Dated: October 26, 1998

Robert C. Bonner
Chairperson

Commission members Robert C. Bonner, Esq., Ms. Ophelia Basgal, Mr. Mike Farrell, Hon. Lois Haight, Hon. Daniel M. Hanlon, Patrick M. Kelly, Esq., Mr. Luke Leung, Ms. Ramona Ripston, Ms. Harriet Salarno, and Donald E. Vinson, Ph.D., voted for the public admonishment. There was one vacant position on the Commission.

FILED

OCT 2 9 1998

Commission on
Judicial Performance

STATE OF CALIFORNIA

BEFORE THE COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

| | |
|---|---|
| Inquiry Concerning Judge Pamela R. RogersNo. 144 | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT |

This is a disciplinary matter concerning Judge Pamela R. Rogers of the Los Angeles County Municipal Court. Formal proceedings having been instituted, this matter is now before the Commission on Judicial Performance pursuant to Rule 127 of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance (discipline by consent).

APPEARANCES

Trial counsel for the Commission on Judicial Performance is Jack Coyle. Counsel for Judge Rogers is Ephraim Margolin.

PROCEDURAL HISTORY

Formal proceedings were instituted in this matter by a Notice of Formal Proceedings dated January 7, 1998. The Notice sets forth three counts of misconduct pursuant to article VI, section 18 of the California Constitution. Respondent filed a verified answer. As provided for by Rule 121(b) of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance, the Supreme Court appointed three special masters to conduct an evidentiary hearing and to prepare a written report.[1]

CONSENT AGREEMENT

After a prehearing status meeting, but prior to the commencement of the hearing, the parties advised the commission that Judge Rogers had agreed to disposition on the following terms:

> Regarding Count One and Count Two of the Notice of Formal Proceedings, respondent and examiner stipulate to the following:
>
> 1. The charges in Count One and Count Two will be dismissed upon the following conditions: Every other month through July 1, 2000, beginning on the month following approval of this stipulation by the commission, respondent shall provide to the commission: (1) medical reports regarding her medical condition and treatment, indicating all medications prescribed, which reports shall be sent directly to the commission by respondent's doctors; (2) an affidavit executed by respondent stating that the medical reports submitted reflect all of the doctors she has consulted and all of the medications prescribed for her in the period covered by the reports; and (3) respondent's judicial attendance records.

[1] The special masters are Justice Marcel Poché of the Court of Appeal, First Appellate District (presiding), Justice Arthur G. Scotland of the Court of Appeal, Third Appellate District, and Justice Rebecca Wiseman of the Court of Appeal, Fifth Appellate District.

2. Failure to comply with the conditions set forth in this stipulation will result in reinstatement of the conditionally dismissed charges.

3. Commission staff may monitor respondent by court observation. If, during the monitoring period, respondent appears impaired in the performance of her judicial duties by her use of medications, the conditionally dismissed charges may be reinstated, and new charges may be filed.

4. Upon compliance with these conditions, the charges in Counts One and Two will be dismissed with prejudice on July 1, 2000.

The parties submit that the proposed conditional dismissal and monitoring of respondent's medical condition and judicial performance is an appropriate disposition of the charges concerning respondent's use of medications.

The allegations before the commission do not concern the use of illicit drugs. All drugs taken by respondent were medications prescribed for her by doctors for serious medical conditions, principally migraine headaches. Respondent acknowledges that she has used medications prescribed by her doctors which, prior to April 1997, included narcotics. There is a risk of dependency in using some of these medications, even upon prescription. Such dependency could be inconsistent with the responsibility of a judge.

Respondent, however, has sought and received expert medical assistance in order to manage her condition without narcotics. As a result, at least since April 1997, all medications prescribed for and used by respondent have been non-narcotic, and her medical condition now appears to be under control with the help of exclusively non-narcotic medication. See declaration of Dr. Arulanantham, para. 22, Exhibit A to Answer to Notice of Formal Proceedings.

The examiner consulted with medical expert Dr. Richard Sandor. After review of the medical records, it was Dr. Sandor's opinion that the medications respondent is currently taking are not incompatible with performing as a judge.

There has been no reported occasion of respondent appearing to be under the influence of medication at work since April 1997. It appears that respondent has remedied the underlying medical problem that gave rise to the present allegations involving her use of medication.

Respondent acknowledges that if the commission accepts this stipulated disposition, the conditions to the dismissal will be made public as will the commission's reasons for accepting this disposition. The contents of the reports submitted to the commission by respondent, however, will not be made public, provided respondent complies with the stipulated conditions.

Regarding Count Three of the Notice of Formal Proceedings, respondent and examiner stipulate to the following:

> Respondent shall be publicly admonished for failing to rule on several matters within 90 days, as required by law.
>
> In seven cases, matters were submitted to respondent for decision and remained undecided in excess of 90 days.
>
> In Fox v. Palmdale, case no. MS1342, a superior court law and motion matter was submitted to respondent for decision on or about January 17, 1997, and remained undecided until late May 1997;
>
> In Antelope Valley Newspapers, Inc. dba Antelope Valley Press v. Desert Mailer News, case no. NOC10714, a superior court law and motion matter was submitted to respondent for decision on or about January 17, 1997, and remained undecided by respondent until she recused herself in late May 1997;
>
> In Bakken v. Berry, case no. MC7928, a superior court law and motion matter was submitted to respondent for decision on or about January 31, 1997, and remained undecided until late May 1997;
>
> In Miller v. Sitarek, case no. 95C00982, a municipal court trial was submitted to respondent on or about October 29, 1996, and remained undecided until approximately February 24, 1997;
>
> Gangwish v. Ryan, case no. 93C02158, a municipal court trial, was submitted to respondent on or about December 4, 1996, and remained undecided until approximately April 29, 1997;

Chemical Bank v. Winkelstein, case no. 96C00126, a municipal court trial, was submitted to respondent on or about November 1, 1996, and remained undecided until approximately February 20, 1997;

In Johnson v. McMahan, case no. MS 001725, a superior court law and motion matter was submitted to respondent in or about early February 1997, and remained undecided until approximately late May 1997.

California Constitution, article VI, section 19, provides that a judge may not receive a judicial salary if any cause remains pending and undetermined for 90 days after submission. Government Code section 68210 provides that a judge may not receive a judicial salary without executing an affidavit stating that no cause remains pending and undetermined for 90 days after submission. In Mardikian v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1985) 40 Cal.3d 473, 477, fn. 4, the Supreme Court held that it was "the judgment of the Legislature and the electorate that this [90 day] period affords a reasonable time within which to expect a trial judge to carry out the basic responsibility of a judge to decide cases."

The Code of Judicial Ethics, canon 3B(8), requires a judge to dispose of matters promptly and efficiently. While the seven matters listed above remained pending and undetermined for 90 days after submission for decision, respondent received a judicial salary. She did not, however, execute false affidavits stating that she had no cases pending for 90 days. Neither did respondent execute any salary affidavit, as required by Government Code section 68210, before receiving her judicial salary. However, during the time in question, court administration was not having any of the municipal court judges execute salary affidavits. Additionally, during the period these cases were pending, respondent was voluntarily handling a superior court law and motion calendar, in addition to a full time municipal court calendar.

Regarding Count Three, respondent and examiner agree that based upon the foregoing, respondent shall be publicly admonished for inordinate delay in deciding seven submitted matters within 90 days constituting improper action.

The foregoing stipulation is signed by Judge Rogers and her counsel, and by Trial Counsel. It is accompanied by an affidavit by Judge Rogers stating that she freely and voluntarily consents to the sanction of public admonishment, admitting to the charges as alleged in Count Three of the Notice of Formal Proceedings, and waiving review by the Supreme Court.

DISCIPLINE

The commission adopts the forgoing stipulation and concurs that, in the circumstances of this case, disposition by suspending Counts One and Two, pending their dismissal with prejudice upon Judge Rogers successful completion of the monitoring period and issuing a public admonishment on Count Three is appropriate. The Supreme Court has noted that the purposes of a commission disciplinary proceeding are "the protection of the public, the enforcement of rigorous standards of judicial conduct, and the maintenance of public confidence in the integrity and independence of the judicial system." Broadman v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1998) 18 Cal.4th 1079, 1111-1112, quoting Adams v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1995) 10 Cal.4th 866, 912. The commission finds that these purposes are well served by the stipulation, particularly its provisions for monitoring. The commission's vote was 10 to 0. There is one vacancy.

This decision and order shall constitute the order of public admonishment.

Dated: October 29, 1998

Robert C. Bonner
Chairperson

Commission members Robert C. Bonner, Esq., Ms. Ophelia Basgal, Mr. Mike Farrell, Hon. Lois Haight, Hon. Daniel M. Hanlon, Patrick M. Kelly, Esq., Mr. Luke Leung, Ms. Ramona Ripston, Ms. Harriet Salarno, and Donald E. Vinson, Ph.D., voted for the public admonishment. There was one vacant position on the Commission.

FILED
FEB 2 3 1999
Commission on
Judicial Performance

STATE OF CALIFORNIA

BEFORE THE COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

| | |
|---|---|
| Inquiry Concerning Judge Walter L. Blackwell IIINo. 150 | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT |

This is a disciplinary matter concerning Judge Walter L. Blackwell III of the San Bernardino County Superior Court. Formal proceedings having been instituted, this matter is before the Commission on Judicial Performance pursuant to rule 127 of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance (discipline by consent).

APPEARANCES

Trial Counsel for the Commission on Judicial Performance is Jack Coyle. Counsel for Judge Blackwell is Thomas C. Brayton of Jones, Mahoney, Brayton & Soll.

PROCEDURAL HISTORY

Formal proceedings were instituted in this matter by a Notice of Formal Proceedings dated July 14, 1998. The Notice set forth one count of misconduct pursuant to article VI, section 18 of the California Constitution. On August 31, 1998, Judge Blackwell filed a response to the Notice of Formal Proceedings. As provided for by rule 121(b) of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance, the Supreme Court appointed three special masters to conduct an evidentiary hearing and to prepare a written report.[1]

CONSENT AGREEMENT

Following the submission of status reports, but prior to the holding of a prehearing conference, Judge Blackwell and Trial Counsel submitted the following Joint Statement of Basis for Public Admonishment.

> Pursuant to Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance, rule 127, respondent and examiner submit the following stipulation in Inquiry Concerning Judge Walter L. Blackwell III, No 150:

[1] The special masters are Justice Paul Turner of the Court of Appeal, Second Appellate District, Division Five (presiding), Judge Aviva K. Bobb of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County and Judge Barbara Zuniga of the Superior Court of Contra Costa County.

Respondent was an active member of the State Bar of California from January 1970 until he took judicial office on January 1, 1995. The conduct described herein occurred while respondent was a practicing attorney. However, because respondent now holds judicial office, the State Bar is at present without jurisdiction to impose discipline. (See State Bar v. Superior Court (1929) 207 Cal.323.)

Respondent was employed by Fidelity Federal Bank ("Fidelity") from approximately 1974 until July 1988 holding the positions of general counsel and executive vice president. Upon the termination of respondent's employment, he entered into a separation, consulting, and settlement agreement with Fidelity. Pursuant to the agreement, respondent was to receive severance and consulting payments from Fidelity from July 1988 through October 22, 1989. Respondent received these payments as agreed.

Fidelity inadvertently sent respondent eight checks after October 22, 1989. Respondent cashed the eight checks, as follows: on November 2, 1989, a check dated October 31, 1989, in the amount of $3,030.36; on November 17, 1989, a check dated November 15, 1989, in the amount of $3,030.36; on December 4, 1989, a check dated November 30, 1989, in the amount of $3,030.36; on December 18, 1989, a check dated December 15, 1989, in the amount of $3,030.36; on January 4, 1990, a check dated December 29, 1989, in the amount of $3,030.36; on January 16, 1990, a check dated January 15, 1990, in the amount of $2,714.81; on February 2, 1990, a check dated January 31, 1990, in the amount of $2,714.81; on February 16, 1990, a check dated February 15, 1990, in the amount of $2,714.81. Respondent did not notify Fidelity that he had received and cashed these checks.

In approximately October 1989, former Fidelity President, CEO and Chairman of the Board, James Taylor, became involved in litigation involving Fidelity. Fidelity agreed, in writing, to pay Taylor's attorney fees, and Taylor retained respondent to represent him in a lengthy deposition. However, a dispute arose which resulted in Fidelity refusing to pay the attorney fees for respondent's representation of Taylor. On November 19, 1989, respondent filed suit against Fidelity for approximately $15,000.00 in attorney fees and one million dollars in punitive damages, under Walter L. Blackwell III v. Citadel Holding Corporation, et al. Los Angeles Superior Court, East District, case no. EAC 077585. (The "Blackwell action.")

Negotiations ensued between respondent and attorneys for Fidelity. Fidelity eventually agreed to settle the Blackwell action by paying respondent approximately $15,000.00. Respondent dismissed his claim for punitive damages. Respondent told Fidelity that he would agree to accept a settlement for that amount only upon the condition that Fidelity agree to a general release of all claims against him, known and unknown. During settlement negotiations, respondent was asked if he knew of any claims Fidelity might have against him. Despite knowing that Fidelity had a potential claim against him for cashing the inadvertently issued checks, respondent did not disclose such information. Attorneys negotiating on behalf of Fidelity were unaware of the inadvertently issued checks.

Fidelity agreed to the general release. During the course of the negotiations, Fidelity had sent respondent a check in the amount of $10,162.00 and another check in the amount of $4,910.00 ("settlement checks"), which respondent had been holding. The total of the two settlement checks was agreed upon as the monetary settlement. Respondent executed the settlement agreement in the Blackwell action on January 23, 1990. On January 26, 1990, Respondent negotiated the settlement checks.

In approximately February 1992, Fidelity discovered that they had inadvertently issued the eight checks to Respondent and requested that respondent return the money. Respondent refused to return all of the money. In approximately October 1992, Fidelity sued respondent under Fidelity Federal Bank v. Walter L. Blackwell, III, San Bernardino Superior Court, case no. SCV 00718. Respondent raised the settlement agreement in the Blackwell action as a defense to the repayment of the overpayments. On March 1, 1994, the case proceeded to a nonjury trial. On June 3, 1994, the court filed a Statement of Decision. A judgment was entered against respondent (the "defendant" in that action) in the amount of $32,000.00, plus interest and costs.

The trial court found that respondent's failure to disclose, during settlement negotiations in the Blackwell action, that he had cashed inadvertently issued checks was "an intentional concealment of a material fact, unknown to the plaintiff, which the defendant was under a duty to disclose, when specifically asked. To make matters worse the defendant even refused to return the money from two checks which were issued and cashed after the execution of the settlement agreement. ¶ The only missing element to constitute outright fraud is detrimental reliance by plaintiff." The court further found that respondent's "acts of receiving, cashing and steadfastly refusing to return the amount of the checks when demanded constitutes malice and fraud."

In an unpublished opinion filed May 14, 1997, in case no. E01499, the Court of Appeal Fourth District, Division Two, upheld the judgment of the trial court, except that it reversed the trial court's award of punitive damages against respondent. Promptly upon the judgment becoming final, respondent paid the judgment in full.

Respondent and examiner agree that the foregoing constitutes conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute within the meaning of article VI, section 18 of the California Constitution. Respondent and examiner further agree that based upon the foregoing respondent shall be publicly admonished.

The Joint Statement of Basis for Public Admonishment is signed by Judge Blackwell, his attorney, and by Trial Counsel. It is accompanied by an affidavit by Judge Blackwell admitting the truth of the charges as alleged in the Notice of Formal Proceedings, stating that he freely and voluntarily consents to the sanction of public admonishment, and waiving review by the Supreme Court.

DISCIPLINE

The Commission adopts the Joint Statement of Basis for Public Admonishment. The Commission finds that Judge Blackwell's actions constitute conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute within the meaning of article VI, section 18 of the California Constitution and that a public admonishment is the appropriate sanction for that conduct.

This decision and order shall constitute the order of public admonishment.

Dated: February 23, 1999

Robert C. Bonner
Chairperson

Commission members Robert C. Bonner, Esq., Mr. Mike Farrell, Hon. Lois Haight, Hon. Daniel M. Hanlon, Patrick M. Kelly, Esq., Mr. Luke Leung, Ms. Ramona Ripston, Ms. Harriet Salarno, and Donald E. Vinson, Ph.D., voted for the public admonishment. Commission member Ms. Ophelia Basgal did not participate. There was one vacant position on the Commission.

[No. 145. Feb. 26, 1999.]

INQUIRY CONCERNING JUDGE HOWARD R. BROADMAN

SUMMARY

A disciplinary matter was brought concerning a superior court judge.

The Commission on Judicial Performance publicly admonished the judge. The commission concluded that the judge committed one incident of willful misconduct and two incidents of prejudicial misconduct. The judge decided a quiet title action assigned to him for trial by informally questioning the litigants who were not under oath and examining certain documents, without giving the parties an opportunity to present evidence or confront and cross-examine witnesses. The commission concluded that the judge's conduct violated Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canons 2A and 3B(7), and amounted to willful misconduct, not mere legal error. The judge's conduct focused on his vision of efficiency with little regard for due process. The judge's questioning of a minor witness violated Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canons 1, 2 and 3B(4), and constituted prejudicial misconduct. The judge's questions were argumentative and objectionable on their face. He appeared to be bent on posing unanswerable questions to intimidate the witness. The judge's questioning of the witness constituted prejudicial misconduct. The judge's summary statement in open court that an attorney was unethical and dishonest was unjudicial conduct in violation of Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canons 2 and 3B(4), and constituted prejudicial misconduct. (Opinion by Robert C. Bonner, Chairperson.)

HEADNOTES

(1) Judges § 6—Discipline—Willful Misconduct—Legal Error—Denial of Due Process.—The judge's management of a trial denied the parties due process and constituted willful misconduct, not mere legal error. The judge decided a quiet title action assigned to him for trial by informally questioning the litigants who were not under oath and examining certain documents, without giving the parties an opportunity to present evidence or confront and cross-examine witnesses. The judge's conduct violated Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canons 2A and 3B(7).

[Cal. Forms of Pleading and Practice (2009) ch. 317, Judges, § 317.85; 2 Witkin, Cal. Procedure (5th ed. 2008) Courts, §§ 55, 56, 57, 72.]

(2) Judges § 6—Prejudicial Misconduct—Demeanor—Disrespectful and Intimidating Questioning of Minor.—The judge violated Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canons 1, 2, and 3B(4), and engaged in prejudicial misconduct when he questioned a minor in a disrespectful and argumentative manner. The judge's questions appeared to be bent on posing unanswerable questions to intimidate the minor.

(3) Judges § 6—Discipline—Willful Misconduct—Bad Faith.—Willful misconduct by a judge requires a finding of bad faith. The Supreme Court has defined bad faith as (1) performing a judicial act for a corrupt purpose (which is any purpose other than the faithful discharge of judicial duties), or (2) performing a judicial act with knowledge that the act is beyond the judge's lawful judicial power, or (3) performing a judicial act that exceeds the judge's lawful power with a conscious disregard for the limits of the judge's authority.

(4) Judges § 6—Discipline—Prejudicial Misconduct—Definition.—Prejudicial misconduct by a judge is distinguishable from willful misconduct in that a judge's acts may constitute prejudicial conduct if committed in a judicial capacity, but not committed in bad faith. Prejudicial conduct can be conduct that a judge undertakes in good faith but that nevertheless would appear to an objective observer to be not only unjudicial conduct but conduct prejudicial to public esteem for the judicial office.

(5) Judges § 1—Conduct—Opinion of Attorney's Character.—Every attorney who appears in court is entitled to the judicial conduct prescribed by Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canon 3B(4), regardless of the judge's opinion of his or her character.

(6) Judges § 6—Prejudicial Misconduct—Demeanor—Accusing Attorney of Unethical Conduct.—The judge's summary statement in open court that an attorney was unethical and dishonest violated Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canons 2 and 3B(4), and constituted prejudicial misconduct.

(7) Judges § 6—Disciplinary Proceeding—Purpose.—The purpose of a disciplinary proceeding before the Commission on Judicial Performance is not punishment, but rather the protection of the public, the enforcement of rigorous standards of judicial conduct, and the maintenance of public confidence in the integrity of the judicial system.

OPINION

BONNER, Chairperson.—This disciplinary matter concerns Judge Howard R. Broadman, a judge of the Tulare County Superior Court.

APPEARANCES

Trial Counsel for the Commission on Judicial Performance are Jack Coyle, William E. Smith and Valerie Marchant. Counsel for Judge Broadman are James E. Friedhofer, Douglas R. Reynolds and Eric D. Weitz of Lewis, D'Amato, Brisbois & Bisgaard.

PROCEDURAL HISTORY

Judge Broadman became a municipal court judge in 1986 and was appointed to the superior court in 1988. The events which are the subject of this matter took place between August 1996 and July 1997.

Formal proceedings in this matter were commenced with the filing on January 22, 1998, of a notice of formal proceedings which set forth four counts. On February 4, 1998, Judge Broadman filed a verified answer denying the allegations in the notice of formal proceedings.

As provided for by rule 121(b) of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance (Commission), the Supreme Court appointed three special masters to conduct an evidentiary hearing and to prepare a written report. The evidentiary hearing was held on September 28, 29, and 30, 1998, before Justice Rodney Davis, presiding, of the Court of Appeal, Third Appellate District, Judge Paul H. Alvarado of the San Francisco County Superior Court, and Judge Irma J. Brown of the Compton Municipal Court, Los Angeles County. On December 14, 1998, the special masters filed their report.

On December 29, 1998, the office of trial counsel filed an opening brief to the Commission and on December 30, 1998, Judge Broadman filed a brief of objections to the report of the special masters. Following further briefing the matter was orally argued before the Commission on February 10, 1999. Ten members of the Commission participated.[1]

FINDINGS AND CONCLUSIONS

The notice of formal proceedings set forth four counts of alleged misconduct. The first count alleged that on June 24, 1997, Judge Broadman, during a meeting with the presiding and assistant presiding judges, threatened to report the presiding judge to the Commission. The special masters found that this allegation was not supported by clear and convincing evidence. Trial counsel have not filed any objections. The Commission, having reviewed the record, concurs with the special masters' conclusion and dismisses the first count.

[1] The Commission normally consists of 11 members. There is one vacancy.

Judge Broadman has filed objections to the special masters' findings and conclusions on count two and trial counsel has filed objections to the special masters' findings and conclusions on counts three and four.

1. Count Two—The Court Trial in King v. Wood

As noted by the special masters, with the exception of the question of whether Judge Broadman interfered with King's right to appeal, the facts are undisputed.

On January 29, 1996, Genice King filed a complaint to quiet title in a house. She alleged that the owner had agreed to convey the property to her. On April 16, 1996, Ms. King was sworn, presented copies of a proof of service and secured a default judgment quieting title. On May 7, 1996, Judge Broadman signed a default judgment prepared by Ms. King.

On May 31, 1996, Judge Broadman granted a motion to set aside the default order based, in part, upon a showing that the proof of service on the owner of the house purported to show service two days after his death.

On November 21, 1996, the case was assigned to Judge Broadman for trial. The masters summarized the evidence of what happened as follows:

"When Broadman took the bench to preside over the trial, attorney Jim Johnson was at the counsel table with his client, defendant Sandra Wood. The plaintiff, Genice King, was also seated at counsel table with her daughter. This was Johnson's first trial.

"Broadman had before him a trial brief prepared by attorney Johnson. That brief alleged the evidence would show that Genice King has no legal interest in the property; that she has no equitable interest grounded in an investment of either her time and/or $10,000 in improvements; and that the alleged contract for sale violates the statute of frauds.

"Broadman called the case for trial and asked the parties to tell him what the case was about. After King spoke, Johnson gave a version of what he had prepared as an opening statement and then his client made a statement. Broadman then alternated asking the parties questions about the case. No one was placed under oath. Genice King and Wood both recall Broadman telling them he was proceeding 'off the record.' King testified Broadman was referring to the receipt of documents. Wood did not clarify what she believed Broadman was referring to when he told them that.

"During Broadman's questioning of King, she handed him some documents which he examined. After questioning King and Johnson's client, Broadman asked if either of them had anything else to add. He then told them that he was taking the case under submission and asked Johnson to prepare a statement of decision and judgment.

"At the time of trial, Johnson expected to participate in a traditional trial. He was prepared to cross-examine King, call his client to the stand, and call rebuttal witnesses. Broadman did not state that he was going to follow an alternative procedure; nor did he state that the parties could have a traditional trial if they wanted one. Johnson was not sure what Broadman did. He assumed it was some form of judgment without the standard trial procedures. [¶] . . . [¶]

"On December 3, 1996, Broadman signed a statement of decision and judgment prepared by attorney Johnson. This document asserts, in pertinent part, that the matter came on for trial on November 21; that Broadman reviewed and considered the documents submitted and arguments of both parties; and that Genice King had no legal or equitable interest in the property."

The masters found clear and convincing evidence that Judge Broadman engaged in misconduct in denying the parties their right to procedural due process.[2] They noted that the fundamental due process right to a hearing generally embraces the right to present evidence and to confront and cross-examine adverse witnesses. They determined that "on his own initiative, Judge Broadman elected to adjudicate the lawsuit through a procedure that did not afford the parties the opportunity to present evidence or confront and cross-examine witnesses," and that in doing so Judge Broadman "chose to consciously deny the parties procedural due process for what we infer to be a misplaced effort to conserve judicial resources."

In support of their conclusion that Judge Broadman engaged in misconduct, the masters explain: "Broadman did not inform the parties that trial would proceed in an alternative order. He informally questioned each party, examined documents Genice King brought with her, and then summarily concluded the hearing without giving the parties an opportunity to present evidence or confront and cross-examine witnesses. Inquiring at the conclusion of the proceeding as to whether the parties had anything to add is not the equivalent of an opportunity to present evidence."[3] The masters note that although it appears that Genice King should not have prevailed in her lawsuit, "Broadman's decision to deny the parties the opportunity to present witnesses and other evidence prevents us from so concluding with the certainty that arises when lawful procedures are adhered to."

[2] The special masters found that there was not clear and convincing evidence to support the allegations that Judge Broadman interfered with the parties' right to have the trial reported or recorded or the parties' right to appeal his decision. The Commission, having reviewed the record, concurs in the special masters' determination and dismisses these charges.

The Commission agrees with the special masters' conclusion that Judge Broadman's actions amounted to willful misconduct because "he performed a judicial act that exceeded his lawful power with a conscious disregard for the limits of his authority." (See Broadman v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1998) 18 Cal.4th 1079, 1092 [77 Cal.Rptr.2d 408, 959 P.2d 715].) They note that "no judge, much less a judge with Broadman's experience and intelligence, would reasonably believe that in proceeding in this truncated way that he was affording the parties the trial they were entitled to."

Judge Broadman concedes that he now recognizes that it was wrong to conduct the trial the way he did in King v. Wood, but, through counsel, argues that this was merely legal error, not ethical misconduct, and thus not a ground for discipline.

(1) We, as did the special masters, find that Judge Broadman's actions constituted willful misconduct, not mere legal error. No legal question was presented to the parties or briefed. Rather, Judge Broadman proceeded as he was wont, apparently focused on his vision of efficiency with little regard for the values that underlie the usual procedures for presenting evidence and cross-examining witnesses. This conduct is conceptually similar to the activities found to be unethical by the Supreme Court in cases such as Furey v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1987) 43 Cal.3d 1297, 1310–1311 [240 Cal.Rptr. 859, 743 P.2d 919] and Gubler v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1984) 37 Cal.3d 27, 43–48 [207 Cal.Rptr. 171, 688 P.2d 551].

We conclude that Judge Broadman's management of the trial in King v. Wood denied the parties due process and constituted willful misconduct. His conduct violated California Code of Judicial Ethics canons 3B(7) (a judge shall accord to every person who has a legal interest in a proceeding the right to be heard according to law), 2A (a judge shall respect and comply with the law and shall act in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity of the judiciary) and 1 (a judge shall uphold the integrity of the judiciary). The Commission's vote on willful misconduct was nine to one.[4]

[3] Counsel for Judge Broadman suggested that Judge Broadman, in essence, granted the equivalent of a judgment on the pleadings or nonsuit. The Commission agrees with the special masters response to this argument. They wrote: "Simply put, this is not what Broadman did. The testimony of Johnson, King, and the declaration of Wood, coupled with the written judgment Broadman signed, clearly and convincingly establish that Broadman did not grant a judgment on the pleadings or nonsuit. Such a suggestion has no evidentiary support; it merely places Broadman in the untenable position of granting such a dispositive motion on his own initiative without affording plaintiff notice of what he was doing and an opportunity to be heard."

2. Count Three—Questioning a Teenage Witness in Smith v. Smith

Count three alleges that Judge Broadman's questioning of a minor witness on August 28, 1996, violated canons 1, 2A and 3B(4) of the California Code of Judicial Ethics. The questioning took place on the third day of a contempt proceeding. The father had charged the mother with contempt for not requiring the three minor children to reside with him as ordered by Judge Broadman. The contempt charges also alleged that the daughter, Gretchen, had told the father that the mother had made certain statements to Gretchen which the father alleged violated Judge Broadman's order.

After considerable discussion and over the mother's attorney's objection, Judge Broadman had admitted the father's testimony of what the daughter had allegedly said the mother had said. This "double hearsay" was admitted by Judge Broadman not as proof of its truth, but for the limited purpose of establishing the children's state of mind.

The mother's attorney decided, in light of the admission of the father's testimony, to call the 15-year-old daughter, Gretchen, as a witness. Gretchen had denied a couple of the allegations against her mother and indicated that she would not live with her father when Judge Broadman intervened. The transcript, as indicated in the notice of formal proceedings, reads:

"The Court: I need to do something. I need to ask a couple of questions. Do you understand what I mean when I say do you believe in the rule of law?

"The Witness: Yes.

"The Court: What do you understand that to mean?

"The Witness: That you're the judge and you decide for people what should happen.

"The Court: Can you tell me why I should believe a single word you say since you clearly do not act like you believe in the rule of law?

[4] One Commission member would have voted for a lesser level of misconduct.

"Attorney for mother: Your Honor, I apologize, Your Honor, and I mean this with the—

"The Court: You can object.

"Attorney for mother: I mean, with the greatest of respect to the Court, I would not allow that to be done to my child, and I think it's an inappropriate question. I think it's abusive to this child. I have said that. My objection is on the record.

"The Court: Do you understand my question?

"The Witness: Yes, I do.

"The Court: Are you going to help me? I'm not yelling or I have a calm voice, you'll readily agree to that, I presume. I'm asking in a calm manner. I don't want there to be any kind of implication that I'm screaming at this lady or doing anything like that.

"Attorney for mother: It is not the volume of the question, Your Honor, it is the nature of the question and the age of the child that I am concerned about.

"The Court: You're fifteen, right?

"The Witness: Yes.

"The Court: Can you help me in that because I'm sitting here, and I know this is abusive to you, but I have a problem because you're telling me important things, seemingly, but you're someone who's acted in direct contradiction to all of the evidence I've heard so far in the rule of law. See, I'm having a little bit of difficulty in my own mind giving a little bit of credibility in your own behalf?

"The Witness: No. I understand.

"The Court: Can you help me?

"The Witness: With what?

"The Court: How can I reconcile those two things?

"The Witness: I don't understand what you mean, 'help you.'

"The Court: Well, I have to decide what the right thing to do here is. One of the things is I have to decide when the people are telling the truth or are not telling the truth. Do you understand that?

"The Witness: Yes.

"The Court: Some of the people have testified truthfully. Some people I don't think have testified as truthfully as others, but when I have somebody who flaunts [sic] the rule of law, do you understand what that means, flaunts [sic] the rule of law?

"The Witness: Breaks it.

"The Court: Does it with more than just breaking the law but throws it in your face, kind of thing to a police—if you walked by and threw a beer bottle at a policeman that would be more flaunting [sic] the law, than if you threw a beer bottle a mile away from the policeman. Do you understand?

"The Witness: Yes.

"The Court: I know this is abusive for you, and I know I've brought you in here—I didn't bring you in here. Your mother and father brought you in here, but I still have to do my job. My job is to try and find the truth here, and I have problems believing a witness who does not believe in the rule of law because if you don't believe in the rule of law then why should I believe your testimony? Do you understand?

"The Witness: I didn't say I did not believe in the law.

"The Court: Well, the evidence has been thus far that you haven't acted as if you believe in the law.

"Attorney for mother: Your Honor, just for the record, again, there is obviously no way to answer that question, and I would object to the question as being argumentative. Again, I am not trying to interfere and I'm not trying to be disrespective.

"The Court: I understand I have this problem, and I've never had this problem. I've never had this situation. I've been a judge for ten years. I've never had this situation before, and I'm asking for—you're part of the problem, and I'm asking you to help me and figure out the answer. I wouldn't ask it if somebody wasn't smart enough to answer, but you appear to be a bright young woman. If you can't answer it, just say, I can't answer it.

"The Witness: What's your question?

"The Court: Can you help me to resolve that dilemma?

"The Witness: How could I help you? What do you want me to do? Do you want me to go with my dad because I said I wasn't going to and I'm not going to.

"The Court: Continue—young lady that is probably a direct contempt of this Court. Do you know what the ramifications for that are?

"The Witness: No.

"The Court: We'll be in recess. Call the public defender's office."

(2) We find that the transcript itself is evidence of a lack of patience, dignity and courtesy (canon 3B(4)) and a lack of impartiality (canon 2). Judge Broadman's questions are argumentative and objectionable on their face. He appeared to be bent on posing unanswerable questions to intimidate the 15-year-old witness. We reject any suggestion that Judge Broadman could have been reasonably surprised at the witness's testimony. If he had not been aware of the witness's aversion to living with her father when he altered the custody order in June, he was alerted to this by the father's declaration in support of an order to show cause and the two days of hearing that preceded the minor's testimony, which concerned, in large part, the daughter's refusal to reside with her father.

Rather than allow the attorney to complete his questioning, Judge Broadman interrupted asking the girl why he should believe her testimony in light of her failure to abide by the court order that she reside with her father. Judge Broadman ignored the mother's counsel's objection, stated that he knew "this is abusive for you," and when the girl finally stated that she would not live with her father, he recessed court and directed that the public defender advise her.

This questioning was inappropriate and the contemporaneous evidence strongly indicates that Judge Broadman knew that it was. Immediately after counsel objected that the questioning was "abusive to this child," Judge Broadman asked the witness if she will "readily agree" that he is not yelling. A little later he said: "I know this is abusive for you, and I know I've brought you in here—I didn't bring you in here. Your mother and father brought you in here, but I still have to do my job." Judge Broadman then admitted that he had a problem, that he had never had this type of problem before, that the girl was part of the problem and he wanted her to help him figure out the answer.

When the 15-year-old then reiterated that she did not want to "go with my dad," Judge Broadman warned her "that is probably a direct contempt of [this] Court," directed that a public defender be appointed for the witness, and recessed court.

All the witnesses, including Judge Broadman, indicated that his questioning upset the witness. Judge Broadman testified before the special masters that initially the girl's testimony was fine, but that later "the situation was rapidly deteriorating and I was afraid it was going to deteriorate to such an extent I was going to be stuck with an out of control teenager." The intervening event was Judge Broadman's interrogation. The father's attorney testified that initially the girl "didn't have much of a demeanor at all" and that she "seemed relatively nonemotional," but when Judge Broadman questioned her, the girl became "more and more defiant, more and more belligerent." The girl's grandmother testified that the girl was very frustrated and in shock. The mother's attorney testified that she was "terrorized and traumatized." The public defender who was called to advise the girl testified that when she spoke to the girl she was "angry and upset at the judge," "she was misty-eyed," and "she was angry, she was out of control, and probably at that point in the game would not have demonstrated any respect for the court if she were to resume taking the stand."

All the witnesses, including Judge Broadman, also indicated that when he questioned the girl he changed his demeanor. Judge Broadman testified that he is a "sloucher," but that he "may have sat up and put my hands on my thing like this and looked past the computer to talk on to her, and the grandmother may have thought since I sat up I got in her face." The father's attorney testified that when the girl started to testify, Judge Broadman "sat up more straight in his chair and leaned over to ask her questions more directly." The grandmother stated that he "would lean forward and challenge her in a cruel way." The mother's attorney's paralegal testified Judge Broadman's tone at first was a monotone, but that it subsequently got stronger and intimidating.

The father's attorney testified that when Judge Broadman said that "this is abusive for you" he was referring to the mother's attorney's decision to call the girl as a witness. Such an interpretation is not supported by the record. Furthermore, the impropriety of the questioning lies in Judge Broadman's statements and questions, not in the meaning of any particular word. An objective observer on August 28, 1996, could not have felt that the proceedings had been handled with patience, dignity and courtesy.[5]

[5] The Advisory Committee Commentary to canon 2 notes that: "The test for the appearance of impropriety is whether a person aware of the facts might reasonably entertain a doubt that the judge would be able to act with integrity, impartiality and competence." (Italics omitted.)

Much of the testimony before the masters concerned various interpretations as to Judge Broadman's intent.[6] This is germane to an evaluation of the nature of the misconduct, but does not affect our conclusion that clear and convincing evidence shows that the questioning when it took place lacked patience, dignity and courtesy.[7]

(3) Judge Broadman's explanation of his intent and the masters' evaluation of the witnesses' motivations, however, do weigh in our determination that Judge Broadman's questioning of the witness was conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute, but not willful misconduct. Willful misconduct requires a finding of "bad faith." The Supreme Court has defined bad faith as "(1) performing a judicial act for a corrupt purpose (which is any purpose other than the faithful discharge of judicial duties), or (2) performing a judicial act with knowledge that the act is beyond the judge's lawful judicial power, or (3) performing a judicial act that exceeds the judge's lawful power with a conscious disregard for the limits of the judge's authority." (Broadman v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 18 Cal.4th at p. 1092.)

(4) Prejudicial conduct, however, is distinguishable from willful misconduct in that a judge's acts may constitute prejudicial conduct if committed in a judicial capacity, but not committed in bad faith. (Broadman v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 18 Cal.4th at p. 1092.) The Supreme Court noted that prejudicial conduct can be " ' "conduct which a judge undertakes in good faith but which nevertheless would appear to an objective observer to be not only unjudicial conduct but conduct prejudicial to public esteem for the judicial office." ' " (Broadman v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, at p. 1092.)

We find that the transcript and the testimony of the witnesses clearly show that Judge Broadman's questioning of the 15-year-old witness was unjudicial conduct in violation of canons 3B(4), 2 and 1 and that it brought the judicial [6] At the hearing before the Commission, Judge Broadman's counsel suggested that he had been trying to impress upon Gretchen the need to tell the truth. The record, however, shows that Gretchen's problem was not a tendency to mislead the court, but that she was too open about her refusal to live with her father.

[7] The only arguably objective evidence that the questioning was not improper was the testimony of the two attorneys, who were called to represent the children after Judge Broadman had recessed the hearing, that they had read the transcript and did not think the questioning unusual. Neither of these attorneys witnessed the questioning. One attorney indicated that her evaluation was based on watching judges take over the questioning of minors in juvenile matters and that this was the first time she had seen it in connection with contempt proceedings in a divorce case. The second attorney testified that his evaluation was based on a reading of the transcript and his "knowledge of having appeared in front of Judge Broadman on many occasions." He further testified that when judges asked questions of his minor clients, he usually objects and that one should be gentle and kind when questioning a young witness.

office into disrepute. We also find, that while Judge Broadman should have known better, he did not act in "bad faith" as that term has been defined as an element of willful misconduct. As Judge Broadman himself stated, he had "never had this situation before." Accordingly, we find that Judge Broadman's questioning constitutes prejudicial misconduct and not willful misconduct. The Commission's vote on this determination was six to four.[8]

3. Count Four—Statement of Disqualification

The facts on which count four is based are not in dispute. The day after his questioning of the minor witness (see count three), Judge Broadman found the mother guilty of 13 counts of contempt of court, sentenced her to 65 days in jail and ordered her to pay substantial fines. Her attorney, with the assistance of a second counsel, filed a petition for writ of habeas corpus with the Court of Appeal. The petition raised four contentions of error, including an allegation that the contempt proceedings were permeated by judicial misconduct.

On September 13, 1996, after receiving a copy of the petition, Judge Broadman caused a minute order to be filed in that case disqualifying himself pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure section 170.6, subdivision (1). The order stated:

"Pursuant to CCP Sec. 170.6(1) this Court hereby disqualifies itself from hearing any matter which involves . . . ."[9]

"After reading the Petition for Writ of Habeas Corpus in the above captioned matter, I have determined that I am now bias [sic] against Mr. . . . I cannot and do not trust Mr. . . . . He has overstepped the bounds of advocacy and has wrongly charged me with judicial misconduct and personally attacked me."

On February 4, 1997, the Court of Appeal filed an opinion finding that the mother had been denied due process of law in that she was given insufficient notice of the purported acts of contempt she was ultimately found to have committed, and vacating the contempt order. The court did not address the other contentions of error, but it did indicate that the trial court's fines were in excess of those provided for by statute, and questioned the court's alleged reduction of plaintiff's support.

[8] The four in the minority would have dismissed the count.

[9] The attorney's name has been deleted throughout this decision and order.

In March 1997, a dissolution action concerning prominent citizens of Tulare County was ready for trial. Many of the judges on the superior court had recused themselves from hearing the case. Mr. ___ was the attorney for one of the parties.

On March 28, 1997, counsel appeared at the courthouse expecting to proceed to trial before a certain judge. The case was unexpectedly reassigned to Judge Broadman. Upon learning that Mr. ___ was representing one of the parties, Judge Broadman took the bench and made the following statement in open court for the record:

"This case was sent down to me because there have been disqualifications by other judges. Pursuant to Rule 226, I'm directing that the clerk get a copy of the transcript of these proceedings and forward them to the presiding judge.

"I cannot be—I'm afraid I cannot be fair in this case with Mr. . . . representing the party. And I do not want to be accused of taking anyone unawares or of shirking my obligations to hear matters. Therefore, I'm stating my reasons why.

"It is my opinion that Mr. . . . is unethical and dishonest. And my feelings are so strong that I'm afraid that I cannot be fair in this matter, so long as he's representing one of the parties.

"Therefore, pursuant to the previously cited Rule of Court and section 170.3, I'm transferring this matter to the presiding judge." The transcript shows that Judge Broadman did not inquire from counsel how they happened to be assigned to his courtroom and that he did not offer them any opportunity to comment.

These are the facts. Absent some mitigating factors, they give the appearance that the judge was not patient, dignified and courteous, as required by California Code of Judicial Ethics, canon 3B(4). It appears that when an attorney, whose presence in another case had already resulted in Judge Broadman disqualifying himself, was inadvertently or mistakenly directed to his court, Judge Broadman went beyond any explanation necessary to disqualify himself in this case and evidently could not resist the temptation to publicly label the attorney as unethical and dishonest.

The record does not contain any persuasive mitigating factors. In his testimony before the masters, Judge Broadman stated that he did not know how Mr. ___ came to be in his courtroom, that he did not ask him to respond, and that he thought that he was "looking for a fight." Judge Broadman did not explain the basis for his opinion. He did not ask counsel how they came to be in his courtroom and there is no indication that he made any inquiry to the presiding judge. He stated that he thought that he had to have a written statement of his reasons and that it was less work to have the court reporter do it than to write it out.[10]

It has been suggested that Judge Broadman's actions may be justified because (1) he could not rely on his initial disqualification order, (2) he was required to give reasons for his disqualification, (3) it was traditionally permissible for a judge to state his or her reasons in open court, (4) the parties were entitled to know Judge Broadman's reasons for disqualification, and (5) the accuracy of Judge Broadman's opinion of Mr. ___ had not been placed in issue.

We find that none of these points justifies Judge Broadman's unjudicial conduct. The California Code of Judicial Ethics is not limited to prescribing what a judge may legally do. It is also concerned with the manner in which a judge performs his or her duties. The conclusions that Judge Broadman could not rely on his initial disqualification order and was required to give reasons for his disqualification simply do not address the question of whether the way he chose to perform his legal duty was appropriate. Similarly, a finding that Judge Broadman chose a traditionally permissible way of proceeding does not necessarily mean that the way was judicious in this instance.

We do not suggest that a judge cannot give his or her reasons for disqualifying himself or herself from a matter, although it is not always done.[11] It is by no means clear that the parties are entitled to know a judge's reasons, but it may be the better practice for a judge to tell them. The local Tulare County rule requiring a statement of reasons appears to be designed to give the presiding judge some assurance that a judge is not shirking his duty to hear all cases assigned to him or her unless he or she is disqualified under Code of Civil Procedure section 170.1. Judge Broadman could have easily satisfied that requirement without branding the attorney as unethical and dishonest.

---

[10] Although Judge Broadman testified before the special masters that his action was not in retaliation for Mr. ___ taking a writ, the appearance of retaliation remains. Despite Judge Broadman's initial statement to the masters that he did not know what attorney took the writ, he subsequently admitted that he entered the initial disqualification after reading the writ and offered no explanation for the disqualification other than Mr. ___'s actions in the Smith case.

[11] Code of Civil Procedure sections 170.1 and 170.3 did not require that Judge Broadman state his reasons for disqualifying himself. Former section 170, which required such a statement, was repealed in 1984. Section 170.3, subdivision (a) only requires that a judge who determines himself or herself to be disqualified notify the presiding judge of the court of his or her recusal.

(5) The suggestion that trial counsel's failure to tender Mr. ___'s character somehow justifies Judge Broadman's blanket statement raises concerns. First, Judge Broadman's statement of reasons, although terse, is as damning as possible—an unqualified statement that the attorney is "unethical and dishonest." This is much broader than Judge Broadman's initial disqualification and is far more defamatory than necessary. Second, every attorney who appears in court is entitled to the conduct prescribed by California Code of Judicial Ethics canon 3B(4) regardless of the judge's opinion of his or her character. Of course, an attorney must also treat the court with respect, but in this instance, all that Mr. ___ did was walk into Judge Broadman's courtroom as directed by the presiding judge or court administrator.

(6) We conclude that Judge Broadman's summary statement in open court that Mr. ___ was "unethical and dishonest" was unjudicial conduct in violation of California Code of Judicial Ethics canons 3B(4) and 2. Although the actual disqualification, as well as some of the surrounding circumstances, give rise to an inference that Judge Broadman proceeded in bad faith (with the intent to punish Mr. ___), we conclude that the evidence of such intent is not clear and convincing. Therefore we conclude that Judge Broadman did not act in bad faith. The Commission's vote that Judge Broadman's actions constitute conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute was nine to one.[12]

DISCIPLINE

(7) The Supreme Court recently reiterated that the purpose of a Commission disciplinary proceeding is not punishment, " 'but rather the protection of the public, the enforcement of rigorous standards of judicial conduct, and the maintenance of public confidence in the integrity . . . of the judicial system.' " (Broadman v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 18 Cal.4th at p. 1112, quoting Adams v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1995) 10 Cal.4th 866, 912 [42 Cal.Rptr.2d 606, 897 P.2d 544].)

The Commission's findings of one incident of willful misconduct and two incidents of prejudicial misconduct come on the heels of Judge Broadman's public censure by the Supreme Court. (Broadman v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 18 Cal.4th 1079.) In fairness, it is noted that the incidents here in issue occurred before the Supreme Court's public censure. Two of the incidents, however, the "trial" in King v. Wood and more notably the characterization of Mr. ___ as unethical and dishonest, occurred after the issuance of the Commission's opinion recommending public censure. The Commission found the similarities between Judge Broadman's treatment of [12] One Commission member would have dismissed the count.

Mr. Kralowec, noted in the Supreme Court's opinion, and Judge Broadman's open court vilification of Mr. ___ particularly troubling.

We determine that public admonishment is the appropriate discipline. Each of Judge Broadman's three acts of misconduct—denying due process in a civil trial, argumentative questioning of a minor in a contempt proceeding, and labeling a lawyer as "unethical and dishonest" took place in open court. Accordingly, a public reprimand is appropriate to assure the public that such actions are not condoned. The Commission's vote on public admonishment was six to four with two of the dissenters voting for a greater sanction (public censure or removal) and two voting for a lesser sanction.

This decision shall constitute the order of public admonishment of Judge Broadman.

Commission members Ms. Ophelia Basgal, Mr. Mike Farrell, Hon. Daniel M. Hanlon, Patrick M. Kelly, Esq., Mr. Luke Leung, and Ms. Ramona Ripston voted for the public admonishment. Commission members Robert C. Bonner, Esq., and Donald E. Vinson, Ph.D., voted against a public admonishment, favoring a greater sanction. Commission members Hon. Lois Haight and Ms. Harriet Salarno voted against a public admonishment, favoring a lesser sanction. There was one vacant position on the Commission.

[No. 149. Sept. 1, 1999.]

INQUIRY CONCERNING JUDGE NANCY BROWN

SUMMARY

A disciplinary matter was brought concerning a superior court judge.

The Commission on Judicial Performance publicly admonished the judge. The commission concluded that the judge violated Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canon 3C(1), when she banned the criminal courts coordinator from her courtroom and prohibited him from communicating with her staff. The judge's treatment of the coordinator constituted willful misconduct. The judge admitted that she had no authority to ban the coordinator from the public hallway or the courtroom, that she did this as her "quiet protest" to punish him, and that she did not tell any judge or the coordinator the reason for the ban for three and a half years. The judge was clearly acting in bad faith, both because she had a corrupt purpose—punishing the coordinator—which was not part of the faithful discharge of her judicial duties, and because she either knew or did not care that her actions exceeded her lawful powers. Public admonishment was appropriate because the judge's conduct interfered with the administration of the court. Furthermore, by failing to tell either the coordinator or the supervising judges the reason for her action, the judge in essence denied them any opportunity to appreciate her position, seek accommodations, or even to apologize. (Opinion by Hon. Daniel M. Hanlon, Chairperson.)

HEADNOTES

(1) Judges § 6—Willful Misconduct—Court Official—Banishment from Courtroom.—A superior judge violated Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canon 3C(1), when she banned a court official from her courtroom and prohibited him from communicating with her staff. The judge's treatment of the court official constituted willful misconduct.

[Cal. Forms of Pleading and Practice (2009) ch. 317, Judges, § 317.85; 2 Witkin, Cal. Procedure (5th ed. 2008) Courts, §§ 57, 72.]

(2) Judges § 6—Willful Misconduct—Elements.—To commit willful misconduct in office, a judge must (1) engage in conduct that is unjudicial and (2) committed in bad faith, (3) while acting in a judicial capacity. A judge acts in bad faith only by (1) performing a judicial act for a corrupt purpose (which is any purpose other than the faithful discharge of judicial duties), or (2) performing a judicial act with knowledge that the act is beyond the judge's lawful judicial power, or (3) performing a judicial act that exceeds the judge's lawful power with a conscious disregard for the limits of the judge's authority.

(3) Judges § 6—Discipline—Misconduct—Clear and Convincing Evidence.—For the Commission on Judicial Performance to impose discipline there must be clear and convincing evidence of misconduct on the part of a judge.

(4) Judges § 6—Misconduct—Decorum.—The judge's display of an artificial marijuana plant in her courtroom and chambers did not constitute misconduct when the judge used the plant as a teaching tool and removed the plant at the request of the prosecutor before a narcotics trial began.

(5) Judges § 6—Disciplinary Proceedings—Purpose.—The purpose of judicial disciplinary proceedings is not to punish errant judges but to protect the judicial system and those subject to the awesome power that judges wield.

(6) Judges § 6—Cooperation—Administration of Court Business.—Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canon 3C(1), provides that a judge shall cooperate with other judges and court officials in the administration of court business.

---

OPINION

HANLON, Chairperson.—This disciplinary matter concerns Judge Nancy Brown, a judge of the Los Angeles County Superior Court.

PROCEDURAL HISTORY

Judge Brown was appointed a judge of the Los Angeles County Municipal Court in November 1976, and was elevated to the Los Angeles County Superior Court in December 1984. The events which are the subject of this matter took place between November 1991 and April 1998.

Formal proceedings in this matter commenced with the filing on May 28, 1998, of a notice of formal proceedings. The notice of formal proceedings sets forth four counts. On June 15, 1998, Judge Brown filed a verified answer denying that her conduct violated the California Code of Judicial Ethics, or its predecessor, the California Code of Judicial Conduct.

As provided for by rule 121(b) of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance, the Supreme Court appointed three special masters to conduct an evidentiary hearing and to prepare a written report. The evidentiary hearing was held in Los Angeles on February 22 and 23, 1999, before Justice Gilbert Nares, presiding, of the Court of Appeal, Fourth Appellate District, Judge James H. Chang of the Santa Clara County Superior Court, and Judge William L. Gordon of the Santa Barbara County Superior Court. The special masters filed their report to the commission on May 11, 1999.

Following the receipt of objections and briefs from Judge Brown and the office of trial counsel, the matter was orally argued before the commission on August 18, 1999. Mr. William Smith presented argument on behalf of trial counsel and Mr. Ephraim Margolin represented Judge Brown.

FINDINGS AND CONCLUSIONS

1. Count One (banning the criminal courts coordinator)

The masters found that beginning in late 1994, the length and number of criminal trials dramatically increased. As a result, each day there were between five and 30 "last day" felony cases that faced dismissal if trial did not begin. Increasingly, these cases had to be sent to civil departments, to the chagrin of the civil bar and with substantial security risks.

The presiding judge instructed the supervising judges of the criminal courts to remedy the problem. They decided to move Judge Brown from department 107 to department 126, which had a regular calendar and was on the 15th floor. They also decided to move Judge Ringer, another judge with substantial seniority, to a courthouse closer to his home due to failing health. The reasons for moving Judge Brown are somewhat ambiguous. The supervising judges recognized that the transfers of Judge Brown and Judge Ringer were "very sensitive matters," as it was anticipated they would be unhappy with the reassignments.

In November 1994, the presiding judge told Judge Brown of the forthcoming move. On December 2, 1994, Judge Brown wrote to the presiding judge objecting to the move. She characterized the forced move as "cruel, sadistic, humiliating and inexcusable" and lacking in any appreciation for her loyal service.

Mr. John Iverson, the criminal courts coordinator, worked under the direction of the supervising judge to ensure defendants received timely trials and to avoid dismissals due to delay. The supervising judge, who also maintained a calendar, had insufficient time to track the availability of courtrooms. Iverson was thus his "eyes and ears." It was critical that Iverson had very accurate and up-to-the-minute information about the status of each courtroom. Iverson visited each courtroom every afternoon. If it appeared a case was nearing completion, he would speak to the judge and counsel in an effort to determine the day and the time the courtroom would be available.

On December 24, 1994, Iverson was visiting department 108, next to Judge Brown's department. Judge Brown entered and appeared to be upset with Iverson's presence. She loudly told him, "You shouldn't be here. Stay away from here." Iverson had previously had a good relationship with Judge Brown and was puzzled by her conduct. Judge Brown gave no explanation.

On January 6, 1995, respondent wrote to the supervising judge again objecting to the move. After expressing the negative impact the move would have on her and her concerns with the security on the 15th floor, Judge Brown wrote, without further explanation: "In the meantime, please advise John Iverson that I will not permit nor tolerate him in my courtroom; I will not permit or tolerate his presence in my chambers; I will not permit or tolerate his presence in my back hall; my clerk, bailiff, court reporter, and I will not speak to him on the telephone. If he comes within 25 yards of me or my courtroom or my chambers or the back hallway, he is likely to be a very unhappy boy. If my department is open, I will personally notify you and Margaret in the Coordinator's office as I have always done." Judge Brown moved to department 126 around the end of January 1995.

When Iverson was shown the letter, he could not understand it. Shortly after Judge Brown moved, Iverson tried to reach her by telephone to discuss the ban. Her clerk told him that Judge Brown would not speak to him and he was not to call. A few days later, Iverson went into the back hallway of department 126 to see Judge Brown. From her chambers she said, "You don't belong here. Get away from here." On February 3, 1995, Iverson encountered respondent at an elevator. She loudly shouted, "You're not allowed here. Stay away from me." On some occasion, Iverson asked respondent why she imposed the ban, and she responded "Think about it." Iverson, however, had no idea why respondent imposed the ban.

On February 6, 1995, Judge Brown sent the presiding judge a memorandum stating:

"When I returned from lunch last Friday, [February 3], I found John Iverson skulking around my chambers, my back hall, my elevator and my courtroom.

"Would you please communicate to John Iverson that I will not have him skulking around my chambers, my back hall, my courtroom talking with my staff or having anything to do with Department 126.

"I thought I had made that abundantly clear, but, apparently, John Iverson did not get the message.

"So I am asking you once again to communicate with him personally or Jim Bascue or whoever you want to communicate with, but John Iverson is not not not not not not to be in my back hallway, my chambers, my courtroom, nor is he to communicate with my staff by telephone.

"If I am open for trial, I will notify Margaret in the Coordinator's Office as I have always done."

Iverson told the supervising judges about his difficulties with Judge Brown. They were concerned and the assistant supervising judge attempted to speak to Judge Brown, but she responded that her clerk would call when they were available to take another case. She did not divulge the source of her displeasure with Iverson.

Iverson avoided department 126 and generally could not provide the supervising judge information on its availability. But for the ban, he would have visited the courtroom each day. The other departments cooperated fully with Iverson. On rare occasion, a deputy district attorney or a public defender would tell Iverson that Judge Brown's courtroom was open, or the supervising judge would order him to contact department 126 for the status of a specific case. The masters found that sometime in 1998, Iverson's office began receiving telephonic communications from department 126 that it was open.

Judge Brown testified before the masters that despite the ban, she did everything she could to continue the smooth running of department 126. She indicated that although she initially instructed her clerk not to speak to Iverson, within a year she softened her position and instructed the clerk to alert the master calendar courtroom and the coordinator's office each morning of their status.

There was conflicting evidence as to communications before 1998. Judge Brown's clerks testified that she did not order them not to talk to Iverson or any members of his office and that they would respond to inquiries and inform department 100 when the court was open. Iverson testified that he had no idea what Judge Brown told her clerks, but that he would not have telephoned department 126 for information because of the ban and his office did not begin to get information from department 126 until 1998.

The masters resolved the conflicting evidence against Judge Brown. They noted that the supervising judge testified "that after he became supervising judge on January 1, 1997, he was required by respondent's ban to telephone respondent's courtroom 15 or 20 times to obtain information regarding the status of trials heard there and availability," and that on other occasions, he asked deputy district attorneys assigned to his courtroom to check with the calendar deputy for department 126 to find out the status of the court. The masters observed that these measures would have been unnecessary if Iverson's office was regularly receiving information from department 126.

The masters further noted that the information received from department 126 in 1998 was not particularly helpful because it was usually received after the day's assignments had been made. They found that Judge Brown's ban of Iverson made it difficult to "place last day cases in her court in a timely fashion rather than having to probably send them around the county or possibly the civil courthouse where they shouldn't be."

Before the masters, Judge Brown testified that her motivation for imposing the ban was anger at Iverson. She stated that on December 15, 1994, he had come to her chambers and said, "You're moving to 126 tomorrow." Later that day Judge Ringer had called her in tears and told her that Iverson had told him he had to move from his courtroom the next day. Judge Brown told Judge Ringer that she was not anxious to move and that he should take his time. Iverson denied telling Judge Ringer that he had to move immediately.

Judge Brown testified that she banned Iverson because she does not "permit rudeness or insensitivity" or the mistreatment of others. She thought Iverson had treated Judge Ringer "abysmally, inexcusably, without any sensitivity, just cruelly." She said to herself, "Nobody else is going to do anything else about it, so this is my protest, my quiet protest." She wanted Iverson "to experience the same kind of pain he caused Judge Ringer."

Judge Brown admitted she did not tell Iverson the reason for the ban until it had been in effect for three and a half years. She also admitted she never gave the supervising judges any explanation. Judge Brown conceded that she had no authority to ban Iverson from the public hallway or the courtroom, but maintained that the ban was an appropriate response to his treatment of Judge Ringer.

The masters concluded that in banning Iverson from her courtroom and prohibiting him from communicating with her staff, Judge Brown acted in her judicial capacity and violated California Code of Judicial Ethics, canon 3C(1), which requires a judge to cooperate with other judges and court personnel.

They noted that a centralized method of getting criminal cases to trial in a timely manner was crucial and that all the judges but Judge Brown cooperated. Judge Brown imposed an unnecessary administrative burden on the supervising judges.

The masters also found that Judge Brown acted in bad faith. She admitted that the ban was imposed solely to punish Iverson for his ostensible treatment of Judge Ringer, and that it was beyond her lawful power. The Supreme Court in Broadman v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1998) 18 Cal.4th 1079, 1092 [77 Cal.Rptr.2d 408, 959 P.2d 715] (Broadman), held that bad faith includes conduct performed for any purpose other than the faithful discharge of judicial duties, or performed with knowledge the act is beyond lawful judicial power. The masters note that Judge Brown failed to tell the supervising judges why she imposed the ban, and only told Iverson after it had been in place for three and a half years. Judge Brown "never rectified the untenable situation she created," and at the hearing, "remained convinced her conduct was appropriate even though unlawful."

The masters concluded that as all the criteria are met, Judge Brown's ban of Iverson constituted willful misconduct.[1] They note in mitigation the lack of evidence that Judge Brown ever refused an assignment or that department 126 was ever without a trial or other business due to the ban.

[1] Judge Gordon filed a minority report finding that although Judge Brown violated California Code of Judicial Ethics, canon 3C(1), she was not directed to reconsider the ban and did not have knowledge of the actual impact of the ban and accordingly was only guilty of improper conduct.

(1) The commission agrees with the masters that Judge Brown's ban of Iverson constituted willful misconduct. (2) In Broadman, the Supreme Court explained that "[t]o commit willful misconduct in office, a judge must (1) engage in conduct that is unjudicial and (2) committed in bad faith, (3) while acting in a judicial capacity." (Broadman, supra, 18 Cal.4th at p. 1091.) The court went on to state that a "judge acts in bad faith only by (1) performing a judicial act for a corrupt purpose (which is any purpose other than the faithful discharge of judicial duties), or (2) performing a judicial act with knowledge that the act is beyond the judge's lawful judicial power, or (3) performing a judicial act that exceeds the judge's lawful power with a conscious disregard for the limits of the judge's authority." (18 Cal.4th at p. 1092.)

As the majority of the masters found, Judge Brown's treatment of Iverson meets the Supreme Court's definition of willful misconduct. Judge Brown's memoranda to the supervising judges unequivocally ban Iverson from her courtroom, her chambers and the back hallway and prohibit him from communicating with her or her staff. Judge Brown admits that she had no authority to ban Iverson from the public hallway or the courtroom, that she did this as her "quiet protest" to punish Iverson, and that she did not tell any judge or Iverson the reason for the ban for three and a half years. Thus her conduct was unjudicial and committed while acting in a judicial capacity. She was clearly acting in bad faith, both because she had a corrupt purpose—punishing Iverson—which is not part of the faithful discharge of her judicial duties, and because she either knew or did not care that her actions exceeded her lawful powers. The latter conclusion is suggested by her insistence before the masters that despite exceeding her powers, the ban was an appropriate response to Iverson's treatment of Judge Ringer.

The argument that Judge Brown was not advised of the administrative problems caused by the ban is problematic for several reasons. First, the record clearly shows that Judge Brown was aware that the ban was disruptive. She testified as to her understanding of Iverson's responsibilities, the need to keep the master calendar courtroom informed, and her efforts to keep the supervising judge informed without talking to Iverson. The masters, however, found that despite her testimony to the contrary, she did not keep the coordinator's office informed. Judge Brown also testified that although she refused to rescind the ban, she allowed her staff to talk to Iverson.

Second, the record shows that the supervising judges made efforts to discuss the ban with Judge Brown but felt that her anger rendered such efforts futile. As Judge Brown never told them her real reason for banning Iverson, the supervising judges may have reasonably believed that Judge Brown remained angry with them over being moved, as implied in her written memoranda. Even four years after the ban, when Judge Brown spoke with the new presiding judge, she declined to lift the ban. There is little to suggest that Judge Brown would have changed her position if she had been more fully informed of the administrative problems occasioned by her ban.

Finally, the extent of Judge Brown's knowledge of the actual administrative problems is more relevant to an evaluation of the harm caused by her misconduct, than the determination that the ban constitutes misconduct. The ban was in excess of her legal authority; it was issued in her judicial capacity and was in bad faith. Even if respondent had subsequently lifted the ban, the initial ban would still constitute willful misconduct. In addition to making it difficult to assign last-minute criminal cases to Judge Brown's court, the ban "punished" Iverson, to the knowledge of the court personnel, without informing him, the judges, or other court staff of the reason for his punishment.

2. Count Two (ordering transportation of the Menendez brothers to courtroom for marriage and commenting on the vacation of transportation order)

The second count alleged that on June 11, 1996, Judge Brown issued an order for Lyle and Erik Menendez, who were awaiting sentencing on a conviction of murder, to be transported to her courtroom or chambers on July 1, 1996, in order that Judge Brown could perform a marriage ceremony for Lyle during lunch recess. The count states that shortly before July 1, 1996, Judge Brown learned that her transport order had been rescinded by the acting criminal courts supervising judge, but, nonetheless, she addressed matters involving the Menendez brothers on the record. The count alleged that Judge Brown improperly used her judicial power, improperly authorized the use of public resources, publicly commented on a pending case, and publicly disparaged a fellow judge, and that this conduct violated canons 1, 2A and 3B(9) of the California Code of Judicial Ethics.

The masters found that no evidence was introduced of the cost of transporting the Menendez brothers and that it was permissible and appropriate for judges to perform wedding ceremonies. They also found that on July 1, 1996, Judge Brown did not talk about the substance of the charges against the brothers, and that her comments were not intended and could not reasonably be perceived as commenting on the case. As to Judge Brown's comments concerning the acting supervising judge, the masters found that although Judge Brown was angry and her comments were inadvisable and gratuitous, nonetheless, "her brief remarks were not sufficiently caustic to undermine public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary."

(3) For the commission to impose discipline there must be clear and convincing evidence of misconduct or improper action on the part of a judge. (Broadman, supra, 18 Cal.4th at p. 1090; Dodds v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1995) 12 Cal.4th 163, 168 [48 Cal.Rptr.2d 106, 906 P.2d 1260].) The commission, having considered the record, the masters' report, and the presentations by Judge Brown's attorney and trial counsel, concludes that there is insufficient evidence to sustain the charge and hereby dismisses count two.

3. Count Three (the marijuana plant in the courtroom)

The third count alleged that from 1991 to the present, Judge Brown displayed an artificial marijuana plant in her courtroom and chambers while she conducted judicial business, including presiding over drug-related criminal cases. The count alleged that the display of the plant was inconsistent with her judicial obligation to maintain appropriate decorum and gave the appearance that she might not be fair and impartial in, or might not take seriously, matters that involved the subject of drugs. This conduct allegedly violated California Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 1 and 2A.

(4) The masters noted that (a) the plastic marijuana plant was a gift from another judge, (b) the plant was only in the courtroom for a short while, (c) Judge Brown testified that she used the plant as a teaching tool, and (d) when a deputy district attorney requested that Judge Brown remove the plant before a narcotics trial began, it was removed from the courtroom. They conclude that while displaying the plant in the courtroom, or chambers, may have been ill-advised, there was no evidence that it impeded the administration of justice, and its display did not constitute willful misconduct or prejudicial misconduct.

Trial counsel raised no objections to the masters' treatment of count three.

The commission, having considered the record and the masters' report concludes that there is insufficient evidence to sustain the charge and hereby dismisses count three.

4. Count Four (smoking in chambers)

Count four alleged that from at least 1994, Judge Brown smoked tobacco products in chambers and allowed others to smoke in her chambers in violation of the California Rules of Court and the Labor Code. It further alleged that when she received a letter from the commission, rather than give assurance that she would comply with the smoking laws, she implied that she would continue to smoke in her chambers, albeit with the door closed. This conduct was alleged to violate California Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 1 and 2A.

Judge Brown admitted before the masters that prior to April 1998, she, and others, smoked cigarettes in her chambers, and the masters found that smoking in chambers was unlawful and constituted improper conduct.

The commission notes that Judge Brown testified before the masters that she has stopped smoking and that she acknowledged that smoking in chambers is prohibited. These facts and Judge Brown's lengthy service as a judge, prompt the commission, without in any way accepting any of the arguments offered to justify Judge Brown's past practice, to decline to consider whether her actions constitute anything other than improper conduct.

DISCIPLINE

(5) The Supreme Court noted in Dodds v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 12 Cal.4th at page 179, that the purpose of judicial disciplinary proceedings " 'is not to punish errant judges but to protect the judicial system and those subject to the awesome power that judges wield.' "

The commission appreciates Judge Brown's lengthy service as a judge and the fact that there is no evidence that Judge Brown ever refused an assignment or that her department was ever without a trial or other business due to the ban.

(6) Nonetheless, the commission concludes that a public admonishment is appropriate for Judge Brown's ban of the criminal courts coordinator from her courtroom. Judge Brown's actions violated canon 3C(1) of the California Code of Judicial Ethics, which provides that a judge "shall cooperate with other judges and court officials in the administration of court business." Judge Brown's "quiet protest" interfered, as was foreseeable, with the administration of the court. Furthermore, by failing to tell either the coordinator or the supervising judges the reason for her action, Judge Brown in essence denied them any opportunity to appreciate her position, seek accommodations, or even to apologize. When a judge so wields her "awesome power," the commission's responsibilities to the public, the court staff and the judges constrain the commission to publicly identify such as willful misconduct.

This decision shall constitute the order of public admonishment of Judge Brown.

Commission members Justice Hanlon, Ms. Bergthold, Mr. Farrell, Mr. Kahn, Mr. Kelly, Ms. Lui, Judge Pichon, Ms. Ripston and Ms. Sommars voted in favor of the disposition of each count and the imposition of discipline. Judge Flier recused herself from participating in this proceeding. Dr. Vinson did not participate in this proceeding.

COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE
455 Golden Gate Avenue, Suite 14400
San Francisco, CA 94102

---

Contact: Victoria B. Henley
Director-Chief Counsel
(415) 557-1200

FOR RELEASE
October 14, 1999

---

JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE COMMISSION ISSUES PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE LISA GUY-SCHALL

The Commission on Judicial Performance has publicly admonished Judge Lisa Guy-Schall of the San Diego County Unified Superior Court. The admonishment is attached.

The commission is composed of six public members, three judges and two lawyers. One of the public member positions is currently vacant. The Chairperson is the Honorable Daniel M. Hanlon of the Court of Appeal, First Appellate District in San Francisco.

PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE LISA GUY-SCHALL

The Commission on Judicial Performance has ordered Judge Lisa Guy-Schall publicly admonished pursuant to Article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution and Commission Rule 115, as set forth in the following statement of facts and reasons found by the commission:

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

On December 18, 1995, Joanna Slivka appeared before Judge Guy-Schall for a hearing on a petition for a restraining order against Ms. Slivka. During the hearing, Ms. Slivka began yelling and acting aggressively, and Judge Guy-Schall ordered her out of the courtroom. While Ms. Slivka was outside the courtroom, Judge Guy-Schall had her bailiff ask Ms. Slivka if she would be willing to reappear in court and keep herself under control; the bailiff reported to the judge that Ms. Slivka had responded that if the judge would not allow her to tell her story, she would probably "go off" again. In Ms. Slivka's absence, without citing her for contempt or having her returned to the courtroom, Judge Guy-Schall found her in contempt and sentenced her to five days in jail. The order issued by Judge Guy-Schall stated that Ms. Slivka was in direct contempt and was to serve five actual days in jail. With respect to the facts underlying the finding of contempt, the order stated, "full order and findings are set forth in the reporter's transcript that is order [sic] this date." Ms. Slivka was taken into custody outside the courtroom and remained in custody for five days.

Judge Guy-Schall's actions constituted an abuse of the contempt power. By failing to return Ms. Slivka to court to inform her that she was in contempt, failing to give her a chance to respond to the contempt order, and finding her in contempt in her absence, Judge Guy-Schall failed to follow the required procedures for holding an individual in contempt of court. (See, Ryan v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1988) 45 Cal.3d 518, 533, in which the commission and the California Supreme Court found that a judge committed willful misconduct by holding a litigant in contempt in her absence and incarcerating her, for a remark uttered as she left the courtroom.) The contempt order entered by Judge Guy-Schall failed to state on its face facts sufficient to constitute a contempt, as also required by law. (See, In re Baroldi (1987) 189 Cal.App.3d 101, 110; Cannon v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1975) 14 Cal.3d 678, 694.) Judge Guy-Schall, who had been a judge for ten years at the time of the incident, was obligated to know or research proper contempt procedures. (See, Cannon, supra, 14 Cal.3d at p. 694; Ryan, supra, 45 Cal.3d at p. 533.)

The contempt power, which permits a single official to deprive a citizen of his fundamental liberty interest without all of the procedural safeguards normally accompanying such a deprivation, must be used with great prudence and caution. It is essential that judges know and follow proper procedures in exercising this power. (See, Furey v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1987) 43 Cal.3d 1297, 1314; Ryan v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 45 Cal.3d at p. 533; Cannon v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications, supra, 14 Cal.3d at p. 694.)

Judge Guy-Schall has informed the commission that this is the only instance in which she has found an individual in contempt. However, she has acknowledged no problems in her handling of this matter.

Commission members Justice Daniel M. Hanlon, Ms. Lara Bergthold, Mr. Mike Farrell, Mr. Michael A. Kahn, Mr. Patrick M. Kelly, Mrs. Crystal Lui, Judge Rise Jones Pichon, Ms. Ramona Ripston, and Ms. Julie Sommars voted to impose a public admonishment. Judge Madeleine I. Flier voted against public admonishment and would have imposed a less severe sanction. Dr. Donald E. Vinson did not participate.

[No. 152. Jan. 27, 2000.]

INQUIRY CONCERNING JUDGE JOHN B. GIBSON

SUMMARY

A disciplinary matter was brought concerning a superior court judge.

The Commission on Judicial Performance publicly admonished the judge. The commission concluded that the judge engaged in a pattern of inappropriate conduct in the workplace toward female court employees, in violation of former Cal. Code Jud. Conduct, canons 1, 2A, and 3B(5). Eight separate acts of inappropriate conduct were identified. Six of the acts related to a municipal court supervisor who worked closely with the judge on administrative matters and two related to other court employees. Public admonishment was the appropriate sanction despite the number of incidents because the judge's actions occurred during his first years on the bench, and, for the most part, concerned a single court employee, the municipal court supervisor, with whom he had a unique joking relationship. The judge recognized his responsibility for his mistakes and apologized for his actions. The events in question all occurred over six years before the disciplinary proceedings and no subsequent similar conduct had been reported in the interim. In addition, the commission had before it considerable character evidence attesting to the judge's exemplary behavior over the last six years. (Opinion by Michael A. Kahn, Vice-chairperson.)

HEADNOTES

(1) Judges § 6—Discipline—Willful Misconduct—Conduct Prejudicial—Ex Parte Communication.—The judge's ex parte communication with the supervising deputy district attorney, initiated by the attorney, was improper but, under all of the relevant circumstances, did not rise to the level of "willful misconduct" or "conduct prejudicial." The supervising district attorney had expressed concern that the judge had dismissed a case vindictively. The judge denied acting vindictively and discussed the procedural facts of the case.

(2) Judges § 6—Disciplinary Proceedings—Purpose.—The purpose of a disciplinary proceeding before the Commission on Judicial Performance is not punishment, but rather the protection of the public, the enforcement of rigorous standards of judicial conduct, and the maintenance of public confidence in the integrity of the judicial system.

(3) Judges § 6—Discipline—Censure—Public Admonishment—Mitigating Factors.—The Commission on Judicial Performance may censure a judge for action that constitutes willful misconduct in office or conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute, and may publicly admonish a judge found to have engaged in an improper action or dereliction of duty (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (d)). However, censure should not be imposed for every instance of prejudicial conduct. Public admonishment was introduced as a form of discipline by Proposition 190, which took effect in 1995. Although the California Supreme Court has not yet directly addressed the question of conduct that warrants public admonishment, it has stated that mitigating factors can properly lead to the imposition of a lesser sanction than censure, even when the requirements for censure are otherwise met.

(4) Judges § 6—Discipline—Censure—Public Admonishment—Mitigating Factors.—In determining whether to impose censure or public admonishment, the Commission on Judicial Performance has generally considered the nature and impact of the misconduct at issue. A review of the commission's public admonishments since 1995 makes clear that the existence of mitigating factors weighs heavily in the commission's decisions to impose public admonishment rather than censure.

(5) Judges § 6—Discipline—Public Admonishment—Inappropriate Workplace Conduct—Recognition of Responsibility.—Where a superior court judge engaged in a pattern of inappropriate conduct toward female court employees, public admonishment, rather than public censure, was the appropriate sanction, despite the number of incidents, because the judge's actions occurred during his first years on the bench, and for the most part, concerned a single court employee, a municipal court supervisor with whom the judge had a unique joking relationship, and the judge recognized his responsibility for his mistakes and apologized for his actions.

[Cal. Forms of Pleading and Practice (2009) ch. 317, Judges, § 317.85; 2 Witkin, Cal. Procedure (5th ed. 2008) Courts, §§ 55, 56, 57, 72.]

---

OPINION

KAHN, Vice-chairperson.—This disciplinary matter concerns Judge John B. Gibson, a judge of the San Bernardino County Superior Court.

Judge Gibson was appointed a judge of the Municipal Court of San Bernardino County, Victorville Division, in September 1990. As a result of consolidation of the San Bernardino trial courts in August 1998, he is now a judge of the superior court.

Formal proceedings in this matter commenced with the filing on December 10, 1998, of a notice of formal proceedings setting forth two counts. On January 29, 1999, Judge Gibson filed his verified answer.

As provided for by rule 121(b) of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance, the Supreme Court appointed three special masters to conduct an evidentiary hearing and to prepare a written report. The evidentiary hearing was held in Santa Ana commencing June 1 and concluding June 7, 1999, before Justice J. Gary Hastings, presiding, of the Court of Appeal, Second Appellate District, Judge Michael Duffy of the Superior Court of San Luis Obispo County, and Judge Lillian Kwok Sing of the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco. The special masters filed their report to the commission on August 2, 1999.

Following the receipt of objections and briefs from Judge Gibson and the office of trial counsel, the matter was orally argued before the commission on December 7, 1999. Mr. Jack Coyle presented argument on behalf of trial counsel and Mr. Jerome Sapiro presented argument on behalf of Judge Gibson.

FINDINGS AND CONCLUSIONS

A. Count One

Count one charged Judge Gibson with three separate acts in connection with People v. Valenzuela and Payan, case No. FVI04899 (hereinafter Valenzuela).

The first charge was that on September 26, 1996, Judge Gibson dismissed Valenzuela out of animosity toward the district attorney's office and that this violated the California Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 1 and 2A. Canon 1 states, "A judge should participate in establishing, maintaining, and enforcing high standards of conduct, and shall personally observe those standards so that the integrity and independence of the judiciary will be preserved." Canon 2A states, "A judge shall respect and comply with the law and shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary."

The masters found that it was not proved by clear and convincing evidence that Valenzuela was dismissed by Judge Gibson out of animosity towards the district attorney's office. The masters found that Judge Gibson dismissed Valenzuela on September 26, 1996, when no one from the district attorney's office appeared to prosecute the matter; however, the masters concluded that the dismissal was not in accordance with Judge Gibson's normal custom and practice of having counsel present and placing the dismissal on the record.

(1) The second charge was that on October 4, 1996, Judge Gibson had an ex parte communication with the supervising district attorney in which the attorney expressed his concern that Valenzuela had been dismissed vindictively. During this conversation, Judge Gibson allegedly denied acting vindictively and discussed the procedural facts of the case. This incident was charged as a violation of California Code of Judicial Ethics, canon 3B(7). Canon 3B(7) states that, except under specific circumstances, "A judge shall not initiate, permit, or consider ex parte communications, or consider other communications made to the judge outside the presence of the parties concerning a pending or impending proceeding."

The masters found that Judge Gibson did have an ex parte communication with the supervising district attorney, and they also found that the attorney initiated the communication. The masters concluded that the communication was improper, but under all of the relevant circumstances, the communication did not rise to the level of "willful misconduct" or "prejudicial conduct."

The third charge was that at a hearing before Judge Robert Law on February 21, 1997, Judge Gibson testified untruthfully under oath regarding the dismissal of the Valenzuela case, in that he testified that he had not dismissed the Valenzuela case on September 26, 1996. This conduct was alleged to have violated California Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 1 and 2. As noted above, canon 1 states, "A judge should participate in establishing, maintaining, and enforcing high standards of conduct, and shall personally observe those standards so that the integrity and independence of the judiciary will be preserved." The several provisions of canon 2 are directed toward the need for a judge to avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety in all of the judge's activities. In particular, canon 2A (as also noted above) states, "A judge shall respect and comply with the law and shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary."

The masters found that the commission failed to prove by clear and convincing evidence that Judge Gibson had testified that he had not dismissed the Valenzuela case on September 26, 1996, as alleged, and therefore concluded that the commission had not sustained its burden of proof that Judge Gibson testified untruthfully or committed perjury at the February 21, 1997 hearing.

After carefully reviewing the record, the briefs and the arguments of counsel, the commission adopts the masters' findings on count one. The commission concludes that these findings do not warrant the imposition of discipline.

B. Count Two

Count two alleged that between December 1990 and September 1993, Judge Gibson engaged in a pattern of inappropriate conduct in the workplace toward female court employees, in violation of the former Code of Judicial Conduct, canons 1, 2A and 3B(5). Former canon 1 stated, "A judge should participate in establishing, maintaining and enforcing high standards of conduct, and shall personally observe those standards so that the integrity and independence of the judiciary will be preserved." Former canon 2A stated, "A judge should respect and comply with the law and should act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary." Former canon 3B(5) stated, "A judge should perform judicial duties without bias or prejudice. A judge should not, in the performance of judicial duties, by words or conduct, manifest bias or prejudice, including but not limited to bias or prejudice based upon race, sex, religion, national origin, disability, age, sexual orientation, or socioeconomic status." The commentary to canon 3B(5) stated, "A judge must refrain from speech, gestures, or other conduct that could reasonably be perceived as sexual harassment."

Eight separate acts of inappropriate conduct were identified. Six of the acts relate to Joan Huntsman, a supervisor in the Victorville Municipal Court who worked closely on a daily basis with Judge Gibson on administrative matters, and two relate to other court employees.

The masters found that Judge Gibson and Ms. Huntsman met each other when Judge Gibson worked as a deputy in the San Bernardino District Attorney's Office and Ms. Huntsman was a clerk in the Victorville branch of the municipal court. Ms. Huntsman had a good sense of humor and a casual, "joking" relationship developed between Ms. Huntsman and then Deputy District Attorney Gibson. Unfortunately, this relationship continued after Judge Gibson took the bench, and led to several of the following incidents.

(1) In response to a memo from Ms. Huntsman suggesting that they meet to discuss administrative matters, Judge Gibson wrote a memo that reads as follows:

"I have received your memo of September 4, 1991. I can't imagine anything that would please me more than implementing new procedures with you. Naturally I would consider it a great personal honor to implement you, old or new. However, as you point out, my schedule is tight and I would attempt to squeeze you in, but we can forget about Mondays. Mondays are my meetings with the Royal Pelican Society and, as everyone knows, Monday Night Football must take priority over everything else. Tuesdays and Thursdays aren't any good as anybody can tell you. That leaves us with Wednesdays and Fridays. Fridays would be good. Oh, I'm sorry, I forgot we were implementing new procedures. Fridays wouldn't be a good day for that. Maybe we could work something out on Wednesday. No, can't do Wednesday. That's lunch with Judge Ashworth and Hodge. Its important I attend these lunches with them for often they discuss all of the new procedures they have been implementing with Francine, due to their close contact with her. Oh, well.

"In all seriousness, I would cancel all of the appointments to reverse my vasectomy to have a meeting with you to implement new procedures. Tell me when and where. Should you actually desire to eat lunch I will have solid substance as opposed to mere coke.

"Love and Kisses,

"Buggs

"cc: Judge Anthony J. Piazza, Supervising Judge"

Ms. Huntsman testified that the memo was an unnecessary response to her memo for a meeting and that the suggestive sexual references were offensive to her. Judge Gibson testified that he did not intend any sexual innuendo in the memo. The masters found that Judge Gibson's testimony on this issue was not credible. They found that the memo was an attempt at a joke within the context of the relationship Judge Gibson had developed with Ms. Huntsman and that a reasonable and objective person would consider the memo sexually suggestive. Judge Gibson, in hindsight, recognizes that he made a mistake in writing the memo.

(2) The masters found that Judge Gibson made the following comments in the presence of Ms. Huntsman and a friend of his: "Isn't that the best looking pair of legs and ass you've ever seen?" The comment caused Ms. Huntsman to become embarrassed. The friend then said to Judge Gibson: "John, you're a judge now. You shouldn't be saying things like that." Judge Gibson responded by saying, "I can say whatever I want to her." In his testimony before the masters, Judge Gibson did not deny the initial statement or his response. Judge Gibson admitted that his statement went beyond his prior relationship with Ms. Huntsman and was improper.

(3) Ms. Huntsman testified that Judge Gibson on occasion made comments to Ms. Huntsman such as "Those are nice shoes you have on, and they—your legs look very nice in them . . . ," "That's a beautiful blouse you have on. Do you have a slip on or a camisole?," and "That's nice material. I wish I could be that close to your skin." Ms. Huntsman did not attribute any sexual innuendo or intent to these remarks; however, she testified that she was offended by these comments because she did not think that Judge Gibson was being sincere.

Judge Gibson admitted that on occasion he would compliment Ms. Huntsman on her clothing but denied any of the sexual innuendoes attributed to him.

The masters credited the testimony of Ms. Huntsman and not that of Judge Gibson. They found that the comments were consistent with the relationship that had developed before Judge Gibson became a judge and continued afterwards. The masters found that Judge Gibson had no intent to harass Ms. Huntsman and that she did not understand the remarks as sexual advances or as sexual harassment. Nevertheless, the masters found that the remarks were insensitive and inappropriate.

(4) In early 1992, Judge Gibson remarked to Ms. Huntsman that another female court employee's nipples were showing through her sweater. The masters found that the clerk in question "was a fairly large woman who wore tight fitting clothing, oftentimes sweaters which would show her nipples." Ms. Huntsman, the employee's supervisor, testified that on one occasion Judge Gibson remarked to her that "he really enjoyed seeing [the employee] walk in the door with her light-colored sweater on and her 46DD bra and her nipples showing . . . I really get excited when I see that."

Judge Gibson denied that he made these statements. He testified that after seeing the employee earlier that morning, he spoke to Ms. Huntsman about the employee's attire being not appropriate for the court.

The masters found that the comments attributed to Judge Gibson did occur, and that they were consistent with the nature of the relationship between Judge Gibson and Ms. Huntsman.

(5) Ms. Huntsman testified that on several occasions in 1991 and 1992 Judge Gibson tugged on Ms. Huntsman's bra strap and on one occasion said words to the effect of "I'm an expert at undoing these." Judge Gibson denied doing so and denied making any such statement.

The masters found that the incidents occurred, that they fell within the "joking" relationship between Judge Gibson and Ms. Huntsman, and that they were inappropriate.

(6) Ms. Huntsman testified to the effect that on several occasions in 1991 and 1992, as Judge Gibson was in chambers, putting on his robe, he wiggled his fingers through his robe in the area of his groin and said to Ms. Huntsman, "Say hello to Mr. Bobo."[1]

Judge Gibson's testimony is quoted in the masters' report as follows:

"Q. Who is Mr. Bobo?

"A. Thanks to the fact that you have too many people working for you, I can now answer that question.

"Q. Who is Mr. Bobo?

"A. I'm told by my attorney who had his paralegals go on the Internet, Mr. Bobo is one of those plastic blow-up clowns that has sand at the bottom of it. And if you strike it, it will rock back and then come to an upright position again. Until you told me that, I did not know.

"Q. Did you ever know that Bobo has a Spanish origin?

"A. You have too many people working for you. No I did not.

"Q. It means a boob, doesn't it?

"A. So I'm told.

"Q. Do you use the word or the phrase 'Mr. Bobo' in reference to yourself?

"A. Yes.

"Q. What do you mean when you use 'Mr. Bobo' in reference to yourself?

"A. It's a name that implies a comedic small, diminutive figure.

"Q. Round?

"A. I hadn't thought of that. I suppose.

[1] At oral argument on December 7, 1999, a joint request to consider additional evidence was granted. One of the items of additional evidence was a declaration from a former court employee who stated that one afternoon in 1991 she saw Judge Gibson in his robe in the hallway stick his finger out of the opening in front of his robe, below waist level, and say, "Say hello to Mr. Bobo."

"Q. Something that somebody beats on once in a while?

"A. No. I never gave it that punching bag analogy.

"Q. Did you ever say to Mrs. Huntsman in words or substance, 'Say hello to Mr. Bobo'?

"A. Not in the context she's put it. If I did something that stupid, I would refer to myself by that name. Like, 'Mr. Bobo really blew that one.'

"Q. So you'd use it as a way of putting yourself down?

"A. Yes.

"Q. Did you ever stick your finger out of your robe when you were putting on your robe and say, 'Say hello to Mr. Bobo'?

"A. No.

"Q. Did you ever do that in substance?

"A. I don't follow you.

"Q. Did you ever say words to that effect and make such a gesture?

"A. No."

The masters found that the incidents occurred and were totally within the character of the relationship between Ms. Huntsman and Judge Gibson. They found that Judge Gibson's testimony on this issue was not credible and that the act was inappropriate.

(7) On January 30, 1992, Judge Gibson wrote a memo addressed to "Municipal Court Staff Victorville Division" entitled "Death of Joan Huntsman." The memo included a reference to a court employee, indicated here as "Ms. ___."[2] The body of the memo reads:

"I want to thank you for the unanimous vote to have Joan Huntsman put to death. I realize a question of this magnitude takes a great deal of time and thought. I am therefore very appreciate [sic] that the matter was decided within 15 seconds of its submission to you.

[2] "Ms. ___" is identified in the masters' report. Her identity is irrelevant to our decision, as are the identities of certain other individuals who are mentioned herein. We have omitted their names in order to spare them further embarrassment.

"I want to especially thank those, who after the vote, came up with ways that Ms. Huntsman should be put to death. It appears there are two schools of thought. One requesting immediate and swift execution. Their thought seems to be the sooner she is gone the better. However, the second school of thought seems to favor a slow lingering death. Although I realize there may be an initial emotional gain from the latter course of conduct, it does mean she would be with us longer.

"Lastly, a special tip of the hat to the unique manner of execution that [Ms. ___] devised for Ms. Huntsman. And to think we all thought they worked together."

The masters found that Ms. ___ discovered a copy of the memo on her desk on January 30, 1992, and had no idea where it had come from. She was offended and embarrassed that the memo mentioned her, especially because Ms. Huntsman was her supervisor. She confronted Judge Gibson and asked what he knew about the memo. In response, Judge Gibson appended a handwritten note to the memo which states: "I deny all responsibility for this memo—its all [Ms. ___'s] fault." This further embarrassed Ms. ___ and she thereafter tried to avoid Judge Gibson.

At that time Ms. Huntsman had no knowledge of the memo or of the exchange between Ms. ___ and Judge Gibson. There was no evidence that anyone else saw the memo or learned of the exchange between Judge Gibson and Ms. ___ until years later. Judge Gibson testified that he had no recollection of writing the memo but that it was the type of memo he would have written as a joke.

The masters found that Judge Gibson did write the memo and that although it most likely was meant as a joke, it was inappropriate.

(8) In September 1993, a county probation officer who had worked in Judge Gibson's courtroom decided to resign shortly after the birth of her son. She went around the courthouse saying farewell to her friends. She was visiting in Judge Gibson's courtroom and sitting in the chair next to the bailiff when Judge Gibson came out of his chambers. He inquired whether it was true that she was resigning. When she said yes, he noted that she was no longer going to be a county employee. Judge Gibson then said, "So it doesn't matter if I do this," and he leaned over, grabbed the employee on both sides of her face and gave her a full kiss on the lips. He then returned to his chambers. Judge Gibson admitted this incident.

* * *

The masters concluded that all six incidents alleged in connection with Ms. Huntsman did occur and that they constitute "conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute." The masters note in mitigation that there was no evidence that Judge Gibson acted this way with anyone other than Ms. Huntsman and that she encouraged "a less than professional relationship." They also note that Judge Gibson recognizes that he should not have continued the relationship as before after he became a judge.

The masters also concluded that the "Death to Joan Huntsman" memo although most likely intended as a joke, was a poor joke made at the expense of court employees that caused offense and embarrassment. Judge Gibson's actions constituted "prejudicial conduct" for which the masters found no mitigating factors.

Finally, the masters found that Judge Gibson's unconsented-to kissing of the probation officer constituted prejudicial conduct. They note in mitigation that he admitted that the incident occurred, apologized to the probation officer (after she returned and demanded an apology), and admitted to the masters that his action was inappropriate.

The commission adopts the masters' findings and conclusions on count two.

DISCIPLINE

(2) The Supreme Court has indicated that the purpose of a commission disciplinary proceeding is not punishment, " 'but rather the protection of the public, the enforcement of rigorous standards of judicial conduct, and the maintenance of public confidence in the integrity and independence of the judicial system.' " (Broadman v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1998) 18 Cal.4th 1079, 1112 [77 Cal.Rptr.2d 408, 959 P.2d 715], citing Adams v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1995) 10 Cal.4th 866, 912 [42 Cal.Rptr.2d 606, 897 P.2d 544].)

(3) There is no doubt that discipline is warranted for Judge Gibson's completely unacceptable conduct. The California Constitution states that the commission may "censure a judge . . . for action . . . that constitutes willful misconduct in office . . . or conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute," and may "publicly . . . admonish a judge . . . found to have engaged in an improper action or dereliction of duty." (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (d).) The California Supreme Court has made it clear, however, that censure should not be imposed for every instance of prejudicial conduct. (Dodds v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1995) 12 Cal.4th 163, 178–179 [48 Cal.Rptr.2d 106, 906 P.2d 1260].) Public admonishment was introduced as a form of discipline by

Proposition 190, which took effect in 1995. Although the court has not yet directly addressed the question of conduct that warrants public admonishment, the court has stated that mitigating factors can properly lead to the imposition of a lesser sanction than censure, even when the requirements for censure are otherwise met. (Broadman, supra, 18 Cal.4th at p. 1112.)

(4) In determining whether to impose censure or public admonishment, the commission has generally considered the nature and impact of the misconduct at issue. A review of the commission's public admonishments since 1995 makes clear that the existence of mitigating factors weighs heavily in the commission's decisions to impose public admonishment rather than censure.

(5) The commission concludes that under all the circumstances in this matter, a public admonishment is appropriate for Judge Gibson's prejudicial conduct with regards to Ms. Huntsman, another court employee, and a county probation officer. Public admonishment, rather than public censure, is appropriate despite the number of incidents because Judge Gibson's actions occurred in the early '90's during his first years on the bench, and for the most part, concerned a single court employee, Ms. Huntsman, with whom he had a unique "joking" relationship. Judge Gibson recognizes that it was his responsibility to establish a professional relationship with Ms. Huntsman once he became a judge and that he failed to do so.

The commission believes that several circumstances mitigate the risk of further violations by Judge Gibson of the sort proved in this matter. First, the vast majority of the incidents involved Ms. Huntsman, with whom Judge Gibson had an unusual relationship. Second, Judge Gibson has recognized his responsibility for his mistakes and has apologized for his actions. Third, the events in question all occurred over six years ago, when Judge Gibson was new to the bench; no subsequent similar conduct has been reported in the interim. Fourth, the commission has before it considerable character evidence attesting to Judge Gibson's exemplary behavior over the last six years. Furthermore, Judge Gibson has already suffered (to use his counsel's words) the "public humiliation" of the widespread publicity of these embarrassing incidents.

In addressing charges such as those brought against Judge Gibson by Ms. Huntsman, the commission would ordinarily be concerned that an aggrieved party might face continuing unacceptable conduct or would lack access to remedies other than those provided by the commission. Because Ms. Huntsman had no professional contact with Judge Gibson after 1993, and because Ms. Huntsman was availing herself of civil remedies, these concerns did not arise in connection with this matter.[3]

This decision shall constitute the order of public admonishment of Judge Gibson.

Commission members Michael A. Kahn, Esq., Judge Madeleine I. Flier, Ms. Crystal Lui, Judge Risë Jones Pichon, Ms. Ramona Ripston, and Ms. Julie Sommars voted in favor of public admonishment. Commission members Justice Daniel M. Hanlon, Ms. Lara Bergthold, Mr. Mike Farrell and Patrick M. Kelly, Esq. favored a public censure for Judge Gibson's lack of candor.

[3] The commission believes that it should explain the staleness of the count two allegations, which deal with events that occurred between December 1990 and September 1993, long before charges were brought before the commission. The masters found that by 1992 Ms. Huntsman was aware of her option to report her complaints about Judge Gibson to the commission. In fact, however, charges were not brought until 1995; when they were brought, it was under the following circumstances: The masters found that in 1993, Ms. Huntsman was transferred from the Victorville branch by her supervisors, and that no evidence suggested any further professional contact between Judge Gibson and Ms. Huntsman after her transfer. By 1995, Ms. Huntsman had been terminated from her position and was approached by an employee of the clerk's office who asked Ms. Huntsman to speak with her attorney. The employee was contemplating litigation at that time. After speaking with Ms. Huntsman, the attorney sent a complaint to the commission on behalf of Ms. Huntsman with regard to Judge Gibson's conduct during 1991 and 1992. Furthermore, in 1996 Ms. Huntsman filed a civil suit against Judge Gibson and others.

COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE
455 Golden Gate Avenue, Suite 14400
San Francisco, CA 94102

---

Contact: Victoria B. Henley
Director-Chief Counsel
(415) 557-1200

FOR RELEASE
April 12, 2000

---

JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE COMMISSION ISSUES PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE ROBERT C. COATES

The Commission on Judicial Performance has publicly admonished Judge Robert C. Coates of the San Diego County Superior Court. The admonishment is attached.

The commission is composed of six public members, three judges and two lawyers. One of the public member positions is currently vacant. The Chairperson is the Honorable Daniel M. Hanlon of the Court of Appeal, First Appellate District in San Francisco.

PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE ROBERT C. COATES

The Commission on Judicial Performance has ordered Judge Robert C. Coates publicly admonished pursuant to Article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution and Commission Rule 115, as set forth in the following statement of facts and reasons found by the commission:

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

I. During the years 1993-1998, Judge Coates engaged in a pattern of abuse of the prestige of judicial office and misuse of court resources in connection with personal matters, as follows:

A. Lending the prestige of judicial office to advance the judge's private interests

Judge Coates sent numerous documents that were, or appeared to have been, designed to lend the prestige of judicial office to advance the judge's personal interests. Examples of these documents include, but are not limited to, the following:

- A letter dated December 16, 1993, to a Wells Fargo Bank vice-president regarding a "special request" to "secure [the judge's] line of credit." The letter references an account number and requests that the bank convert the status of an existing line of credit from "unsecured" to "secured" in connection with the refinancing of the judge's home. The letter was prepared on official court letterhead and the designation "Judge of the Municipal Court" was printed beneath the signature line.
- A letter dated April 1, 1994, to the San Diego City Treasurer complaining about a parking ticket Judge Coates had received. The letter was prepared on official court letterhead and the designation "Judge" was printed beneath the signature line.
- A letter dated July 17, 1995, to the service manager of a local automobile dealership complaining about an undelivered brush guard Judge Coates had ordered for his 1995 Ford Explorer. The letter was not prepared on official court letterhead; however, the court's address and telephone number were printed at the top of the letter and the designation "Judge" was printed beneath the signature line.
- A letter dated October 23, 1995, to the "Arm Loan Coordinator" of a mortgage company protesting an increase in the judge's loan interest rate. The letter references a loan number. The letter was not prepared on official court letterhead; however, the court's address and telephone number were printed at the top of the letter and the designation "Judge" was printed beneath the signature line.
- A letter dated December 6, 1995, to Judy Lind at the San Diego Book Awards Association, attaching an entry form entering the judge's book, A Street is Not a Home, in the awards competition. The letter was prepared on official court letterhead and the designation "Judge of the Municipal Court" was printed beneath the signature line.

All of the foregoing correspondence involved the personal interests of Judge Coates. The judge's use of official court letterhead, the court's address and telephone number, and/or his judicial title fostered an appearance that the judge was using the prestige of his office to advance his private interests. Accordingly, the foregoing conduct was inconsistent with canon 2B(2), which states that a judge "shall not lend the prestige of judicial office to advance the pecuniary or personal interests of the judge or others," and canon 2B(4), which states that a judge "shall not use the judicial title in any written communication intended to advance the personal or pecuniary interest of the judge." Judge Coates' conduct also was inconsistent with canon 2A, which states that a judge "shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary."

B. Misuse of court resources to prepare personal documents

The documents described above not only were or appeared to have been designed to use the prestige of judicial office, but also were prepared at the judge's direction by court secretaries during court hours and using court resources. In addition to those documents, Judge Coates also used court secretaries and other court resources to prepare and in many instances send numerous other documents which, although apparently not designed to lend the prestige of judicial office, involved the judge's personal business or interests entirely unrelated to the judge's judicial duties. These included, for example, letters to a radio network criticizing or commending its reporters; personal lists; poems; a letter to a local high school concerning its varsity/alumni baseball game; and letters to President Clinton concerning matters such as the federal job economy and the state of the United States Park Service.

The commission found that Judge Coates' extensive use of court secretaries and other court resources to generate personal correspondence and documents, which exceeded 100 in number, was inconsistent with canon 2A, which requires that a judge "act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary." (See In re Judge D. Ronald Hyde, Inquiry #138 (1996), commission decision and order of public censure (judge censured, in part, for using court staff and resources in connection with personal business).)

II. Between 1997-1999, Judge Coates engaged in a pattern of conduct toward court staff and persons appearing before him that was inconsistent with canon 3B(4), which requires a judge to be patient, dignified, and courteous with persons with whom the judge deals in an official capacity. This conduct is exemplified by the following:

A. On March 9, 1998, Judge Coates telephoned a court administrative analyst to ascertain why information which the judge had asked to have forwarded to a state assemblyman had not been sent. The analyst explained that the information had not been forwarded because he understood that this was not to be done until after there had been a meeting concerning the matter with the presiding judge and the chair of the court's legislation committee. Judge Coates yelled at the analyst for not forwarding the information and made statements to the effect of:

> "Goddamnit. You were supposed to get that legislation introduced. I gave you a direct order. I'm a judge."
>
> "Judge [name omitted] and I are going to campaign against you, to bring you down to size. You disregarded the order of a judge. How dare you."

"You haven't done a goddamned thing for this court and cannot analyze legislation. I'm going to get this in your personnel file."

"[I am] a committee member and a judge and you've just destroyed my credibility and the court's credibility. Let me tell you what another judge said to me about you. You are a piece of shit."

B. In August 1997, Judge Coates presided over jury selection proceedings in People v. Lamar Alexander, case number M727742. During voir dire on August 20, 1997, a prospective juror, who was a school teacher, advised the judge that she might be unable to serve as a juror due to the anticipated length of the trial. The following colloquy then occurred:

THE COURT: You should have said that in the other department. They were supposed to have asked you that.
PROSPECTIVE JUROR: They did not.
THE COURT: All right. So what's the problem?
PROSPECTIVE JUROR: A commitment that I can't break and school's starting.
THE COURT: So are you - - What does school - - You're a teacher?
PROSPECTIVE JUROR: Yes.
THE COURT: All right. Well, ma'am, that is something that they certainly should have asked you over there. And that, with great respect, is something you should have raised with them over there. I mean, we've extended, we've lavished expense on you now here. And now after we've gone through all this then, you tell us that there might be a problem.
[Pause]
THE COURT: Do we really want you teaching our children?
[Audible laughter]
THE COURT: If you're not planning ahead like that when?

In addition to violating canon 3B(4), Judge Coates' conduct was also inconsistent with canon 2A, which requires a judge to act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary.

C. In November 1998, Judge Coates presided over the jury trial of People v. Daniel Paul Nelson, case number T184286, which involved a charge of driving under the influence of alcohol. On November 10, 1998, an expert witness testified for the defense. During direct examination by defense counsel Michael Fremont concerning his qualifications as a forensic expert, witness John Woodward stated that he was a "Department of Health licensed clinical laboratory scientist with a specialty in the field of clinical and forensic toxicology" or words to that effect. Shortly thereafter, Judge Coates interrupted defense counsel's direct examination and questioned the witness about his statement - which the judge was mistaken about - of having a "specialty in the field of alcohol toxicology." As the following colloquy from the November 10, 1998 proceeding shows, Judge Coates continued to question the witness about this issue over the objections of defense counsel and stated that the witness had lied to the jury:

THE COURT: Mr. Woodward, you said a moment ago that you have a -- the quote was: specialty in the field of alcohol toxicology. From what agency is that specialty issued?
THE WITNESS: There is no specialty license; it's encompassed in my general license.
THE COURT: So you made that up?
THE WITNESS: I didn't make it up.
MR. FREMONT: Your Honor, I have to object to the court's inquiry.
THE COURT: Well, in the law, Mr. Woodward. An attorney can, by dint of ten years experience and following certain patterns of knowledge and that sort of thing, obtain the legal right to use the word specialty entitled family law, workers compensation, other areas; and that's issued by the State of California. And it would be unlawful for any attorney to use that word, specialty, without that certification from the State of California. Do you have such a certification from any government agency?
MR. FREMONT: Your Honor, it is irrelevant. I have to object; he is not an attorney and he is an expert witness and he's qualified as an expert witness.
THE COURT: I'm just asking the question about an answer that you got from him. So I'll overrule your objection. Please answer the question.
THE WITNESS: There is no specialty license from any agency and they're not attorneys and --
THE COURT: So why do you use the word specialty?
THE WITNESS: Because that is what I have specialized in and by virtue of being a specialist, that's how I gained membership to the California Association of Toxicologists. I had to submit the fact that I have limited my practice to clinical and forensic toxicology and then the Board votes on whether or not the experience and education that I have had over the last 54 years qualifies me as a, for membership into the California Association of Toxicologists. And my license specifically says the field of toxicology.
THE COURT: That's right. And then within that field you claim that you have a specialty in alcohol. Right?
THE WITNESS: No.
THE COURT: That's what you said. Specialty in the field of alcohol toxicology.
THE WITNESS: No, I didn't say alcohol. I said --
THE COURT: I'm quoting you: specialty in the field of alcohol toxicology. That was the phrase that came out of your mouth a moment ago.
THE WITNESS: I beg to differ; I did not -- I always say --
THE COURT: You say you didn't say that?
MR. FREMONT: Your Honor, I have to object. It's --
THE WITNESS: Yes. I do not --
THE COURT: Overruled.
MR. FREMONT: The bench is badgering this witness and I'm objecting; I'm asking for --
THE COURT: The witness is lying to this jury.
MR. FREMONT: I object. That's a comment on the evidence. I'm asking for a mistrial immediately.

THE WITNESS: I am not lying.
THE COURT: Let's recess for a moment, ladies and gentlemen. We'll call this a 15-minute recess.

After the defendant was convicted, he moved for a new trial based on Judge Coates' remarks as noted. On or about December 22, 1998, at the hearing on the motion, Judge Coates conceded that his conduct had been improper, granted the motion, and recused himself from the case.

It is not improper for a judge to question a witness. In this instance, however, based upon a misunderstanding, and without seeking clarification of the witness' prior testimony by having testimony read back or a tape-recording replayed, the judge engaged in accusatory questioning of the witness and, in fact, accused him of lying in front of the jury. In addition to violating canon 3B(4), Judge Coates' conduct was also inconsistent with canon 2A, which requires a judge to act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary.

D. In November 1997, court staff removed a water fountain from the fourth floor of the courthouse in connection with the move of the human resources department. The water fountain was located in a hallway behind Judge Coates' courtroom. Judge Coates telephoned a deputy court administrator concerning the removal of the water fountain. During the ensuing conversation, the judge cursed at the deputy court administrator and berated him for removing the water fountain. Among other remarks, the judge made a statement to the effect of, "I don't give a goddamn who you are. You don't move the goddamn water fountain."

E. On Tuesday, January 19, 1999, Judge Coates telephoned the presiding judge's clerk and advised that he had a medical appointment scheduled for Thursday morning, January 21, 1999. However, on that Thursday morning, the presiding judge assigned a trial to Judge Coates after a clerk mistakenly advised that Judge Coates' courtroom was "open." The attorneys, parties, and witnesses involved in the trial proceeded to Judge Coates' courtroom where they awaited the return of Judge Coates, who was absent because of his medical appointment.

On Thursday afternoon, January 21, Judge Coates telephoned the presiding judge's judicial secretary about that morning's apparent scheduling "mix-up." During the discussion, Judge Coates became angry and demanded to know how the incident occurred. The judge accused the secretary of not doing her job properly. The secretary responded that she was sorry, but denied that the incident had been her fault. Judge Coates did not further inquire into the matter to determine whether or not the secretary was at fault. Instead, he made a statement to the effect that he was a superior court judge and was "ordering" the secretary to take procedural steps to make sure her "mistake" was not repeated.

III. In May 1997, Judge Coates presided over the jury trial of People v. Esquivel, case number T171767, which involved misdemeanor hit and run charges. On May 21, 1997, during deliberation, the jury sent a note to the court requesting to be furnished with copies of transcripts of all witness testimony. Without notifying the parties' attorneys of the jury's request, Judge Coates entered the jury room and denied the request. Judge Coates did not notify the attorneys because he had a "pressing appointment" and believed the parties would agree with his decision. The judge's remarks to the jury were not transcribed or tape-recorded.

Judge Coates' ex parte communication with the jury concerning the request for transcripts of witness testimony was contrary to canon 3B(7), which generally prohibits ex parte communications. Judge Coates' conduct as described above was also inconsistent with canon 2A, which provides that a judge "shall respect and comply with the law and act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary." In Gonzalez v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1983) 33 Cal.3d 359, the Supreme Court found that Judge Gonzalez's visits to the jury room during deliberations constituted willful misconduct. (See also, People v. Hogan (1982) 31 Cal.3d 815, 848 (the trial court should not answer questions from the jury without first communicating with counsel); People v. Thompson (1990) 50 Cal.3d 134, 173 (it is improper for a judge to enter the jury room without counsel and communicate with jurors).)

Commission members Justice Daniel M. Hanlon, Ms. Lara Bergthold, Mr. Mike Farrell, Mr. Michael A. Kahn, Mr. Patrick M. Kelly, Mrs. Crystal Lui, Judge Rise Jones Pichon, Ms. Ramona Ripston, and Ms. Julie Sommars voted to impose a public admonishment. Judge Madeleine I. Flier voted against public admonishment. Judge Flier agreed in principle that a public admonishment was warranted, but favored a lesser sanction regarding certain incidents involving court staff.

COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE
455 Golden Gate Avenue, Suite 14400
San Francisco, CA 94102

---

Contact: Victoria B. Henley
Director-Chief Counsel
(415) 557-1200

FOR RELEASE
June 20, 2000

---

JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE COMMISSION ISSUES PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE GARY P. RYAN

The Commission on Judicial Performance has publicly admonished Judge Gary P. Ryan of the Orange County Superior Court. The admonishment is attached.

The commission is composed of six public members, three judges and two lawyers. One of the public member positions is currently vacant. The Chairperson is the Honorable Daniel M. Hanlon of the Court of Appeal, First Appellate District in San Francisco.

PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE GARY P. RYAN

The Commission on Judicial Performance has ordered Judge Gary P. Ryan publicly admonished pursuant to Article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution and Commission Rule 115, as set forth in the following statement of facts and reasons found by the commission:

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

Judge Ryan is a judge of the Orange County Superior Court; his term commenced in January 1995. He was previously a judge of the Orange County Municipal Court from January 1979 to December 1994.

On September 3, 1999, at approximately 10:30 p.m., a Jeep Grand Cherokee being driven by Judge Ryan rear-ended a Ford Expedition that was stopped at a red light at an intersection in Newport Beach. The impact resulted in some minor damage to the vehicles. No injuries were sustained by Judge Ryan or his passenger, or by the driver of the Ford or her 10-month-old daughter.

Judge Ryan was arrested on September 3, 1999, and was later charged with driving under the influence of alcohol (California Vehicle Code section 23152(a)) and driving with a blood alcohol level of 0.08 percent or more (California Vehicle Code section 23152(b)). Judge Ryan's blood alcohol level was measured at 0.17 percent.

On February 4, 2000, Judge Ryan pled guilty to both driving under the influence of alcohol charges. He was placed on three years informal probation and ordered to attend a first offender's alcohol program, perform 20 hours of community service, pay a mandatory fine, and comply with other conditions of probation. His driver's license was restricted for the first 90 days of the probation period to use for work and attending the alcohol program.

Judge Ryan's arrest and subsequent plea were the subject of numerous news articles, including in the Los Angeles Times, the Orange County Register, and the Los Angeles Daily Journal.

Judge Ryan's unlawful action described above evidenced a gross disregard of the principles of personal and official conduct embodied in the California Code of Judicial Ethics, including failure to observe high standards of conduct so that the integrity and independence of the judiciary will be preserved (canon 1), and failure to respect and comply with the law and to act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary (canon 2).

Judge Ryan's unlawful action described above also constituted conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute. (California Constitution, Article VI, section 18(d).)

Judge Ryan also violated the Code of Judicial Ethics by failing to report the filing of the charges and his convictions to the Commission on Judicial Performance. A judge who is charged or convicted of a misdemeanor involving the personal use of alcohol is required to report that fact to the commission promptly and in writing (canon 3D(3)).

Commission members Justice Daniel M. Hanlon, Ms. Lara Bergthold, Mr. Mike Farrell, Ms. Gayle Gutierrez, Mr. Michael A. Kahn, Mr. Patrick M. Kelly, and Ms. Ramona Ripston voted to impose a public admonishment. Commission members Judge Madeleine I. Flier, Ms. Crystal Lui, and Judge Rise Jones Pichon voted against public admonishment and would have imposed a less severe sanction.

[No. 156. June 26, 2000.]

INQUIRY CONCERNING JUDGE SUSANNE S. SHAW

SUMMARY

A disciplinary matter was brought concerning a superior court judge.

The Commission on Judicial Performance publicly admonished the judge. The Commission found that the judge's ex parte comment to two deputy district attorneys about a case violated the proscription in Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canon 3B(7), against ex parte communications and gave the appearance of embroilment in the case in violation of canon 2A, and was conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice. The judge's statement that implied a defendant might be vulnerable to sexual assault in jail was contrary to the requirement of canon 3B(4) that a judge shall be patient, dignified, and courteous to litigants and attorneys, and was conduct prejudicial. The judge's comments suggesting that a deputy district attorney had engaged in excessive drinking also violated canon 3B(4), but constituted only improper action. An admonishment was appropriate to advise the judge and the community that such actions were not acceptable. (Opinion by Daniel M. Hanlon, Chairperson.)

HEADNOTES

(1) Judges § 6.2—Discipline—Legal Error—Exceptions.—A judge who commits legal error which, in addition, clearly and convincingly reflects bad faith, bias, abuse of authority, disregard for fundamental rights, intentional disregard of the law, or any purpose other than the faithful discharge of judicial duty, is subject to investigation. Mere legal error, without more, however, is insufficient to support a finding that a judge has violated the California Code of Judicial Ethics and thus should be disciplined. The judge's interrupting a witness's testimony and reading the Penal Code section for perjury to the witness in front of the jury was only legal error.

(2) Judges § 6.4—Discipline—Proceedings—Determining Appropriate Sanction.—The purpose of a Commission on Judicial Performance disciplinary proceeding is not punishment, but rather the protection of the public, the enforcement of rigorous standards of judicial conduct, and the maintenance of public confidence in the integrity and independence of the judicial system. Choosing the proper sanction is an art, not a science, and turns on the facts of the case at bar.

(3) Judges § 6.4—Discipline—Proceedings—Determining Appropriate Sanction—Character Evidence.—A judge's good reputation does not necessarily weigh against disciplining the judge. Honesty and a good reputation do not mitigate conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice. It is questionable how much weight should be given to the opinions of persons who were not present, and thus cannot assess the serious nature of the incidents of misconduct, but nonetheless believe the judge to be a fair and patient person. Indeed, the public has as great a need for protection from unethical conduct by popular judges as from unpopular judges. An outpouring of support for a judge from prosecutors, defense counsel, judges, peace officers and administrative personnel may inhibit some witnesses from coming forward and testifying.

(4) Judges § 6.2—Discipline—Grounds—Public Admonishment—Inappropriate Comments.—A public admonishment was the appropriate discipline for the judge's two acts of conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice and one incident of improper action, assuring all those who were concerned with the judge's inappropriate comments that these comments were not acceptable judicial behavior. The public admonishment would help educate the bench and the public as to when a judge's comments may violate the California Code of Judicial Ethics.

[Cal. Forms of Pleading and Practice (2009) ch. 317, Judges, § 317.85; 2 Witkin, Cal. Procedure (5th ed. 2008) Courts, §§ 55, 57, 52.]

(5) Judges § 6.2—Discipline—Grounds—Disrespectful Conduct.—Judicial personality is important to the fabric of the judicial system, and it would be dangerous to that system were the judiciary to become a group of faceless bureaucrats who attempt to fit into a mold in order to stay out of trouble. However, the cultivation of a particular judicial personality may not be used as an excuse for unethical conduct. Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canon 3B(4), provides that a judge shall be patient, dignified, and courteous. A judge has considerable latitude to develop her own or his own judicial style, but regardless of the judge's style, she or he must respect the litigants and attorneys who appear in her or his court. When a judge fails to do so, it is the responsibility of the Commission on Judicial Performance to bring such failures to the judge's attention.

OPINION

HANLON, Chairperson.—This disciplinary matter concerns Judge Susanne S. Shaw, a judge of the Orange County Unified Superior Court. Judge Shaw was elected to the Orange County Municipal Court in 1984 and took her oath of office on January 7, 1985. As a result of the unification of the courts, Judge Shaw became a judge of the Orange County Unified Superior Court on August 10, 1998.

SUMMARY

The Commission on Judicial Performance concludes that Judge Shaw committed two acts of conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice in making an ex parte comment to two deputy district attorneys (count 2) and making a statement to a thin white defendant she had ordered into custody that was reasonably understood to infer that he might be vulnerable to sexual assault in jail (count 8). In addition, the commission concludes that Judge Shaw's comments to a deputy district attorney concerning her alleged drinking habits and those of her future father-in-law constituted improper action (count 1). This conduct violated the California Code of Judicial Ethics, canon 1 (a judge shall uphold the integrity and independence of the judiciary) and canon 2A ("[a] judge shall respect and comply with the law and shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary"). Judge Shaw's ex parte comment also violated the proscription in canon 3B(7) against ex parte communications, and her comments to the thin white defendant and the deputy district attorney violated canon 3B(4) which provides that a judge should be patient, dignified and courteous to litigants and attorneys. The commission determines that a public admonishment is the appropriate sanction for the two acts of prejudicial conduct and one count of improper action.

The commission continues to have concerns with some of the types of behavior alleged in the other counts, particularly the allegation of singing in the courtroom (count 11). The commission, however, accepts the masters' findings that none of the allegations were sustained by clear and convincing evidence and accordingly counts 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11 and 12 are dismissed.

PROCEDURAL HISTORY

Formal proceedings in this matter commenced with the filing on May 3, 1999, of a notice of formal proceedings setting forth 12 counts. On May 27, 1999, Judge Shaw filed her verified answer. A first amended notice of formal proceedings was filed on October 26, 1999.

As provided for by rule 121(b) of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance, the Supreme Court appointed three special masters to conduct an evidentiary hearing and to prepare a written report: Justice Reuben A. Ortega, presiding, of the Court of Appeal, Second Appellate District, Division One; Justice Douglas E. Swager of the Court of Appeal, First Appellate District, Division One; and Judge Steven Z. Perren (now justice[1]) of the Superior Court of Ventura County. A status conference was held in Los Angeles on September 16, 1999. The evidentiary hearing was held in Santa Ana before the special masters commencing November 15, 1999, and concluding November 18, 1999. The special masters filed their report to the commission on February 15, 2000.

Following the receipt of objections and briefs from Judge Shaw and the office of trial counsel, the matter was orally argued before the commission on May 2, 2000. Mr. William E. Smith presented argument on behalf of trial counsel and Mr. Thomas M. Goethals presented argument on behalf of Judge Shaw. Judge Shaw also spoke on her own behalf.

FINDINGS AND CONCLUSIONS ON SUSTAINED COUNTS

A. Count One

The notice of formal proceedings charges that in December 1993, in a particular case, Judge Shaw became angry at a deputy district attorney who would not offer a DUI[2] defendant a reduced charge and stated that the prosecutor lacked discretion and human kindness and would regret her decision when she was twenty years older. It further alleges that Judge Shaw called the prosecutor a hypocrite for prosecuting the same type of conduct that the prosecutor engaged in on the weekends, and also referred to the drinking habits of the prosecutor's future father-in-law, a former judge. Judge Shaw's comments are alleged to have been intimidating, demeaning, undignified and discourteous, and appeared to reflect bias and embroilment, in violation of the former California Code of Judicial Conduct canons 1, 2A and 3B(4).

The masters found that in December 1993, a DUI case involving a military pilot was sent to Judge Shaw for trial. Ms. S___ was the prosecutor. Prior to the commencement of trial, Judge Shaw conducted settlement discussions.

[1] During the course of these proceedings, Judge Perren was elevated to the Court of Appeal, Second Appellate District, Division Six.

[2] "DUI" is a commonly used abbreviation for driving under the influence of alcohol and usually refers to arrests and convictions under Vehicle Code section 23152.

During the discussions, Judge Shaw became persuaded that a proper disposition would be a plea to the reduced charge of "wet reckless,"[3] thus saving the defendant's military career. The district attorney's office refused to accept such a proposal and Judge Shaw summoned Ms. S___'s supervisor.

The masters found that Judge Shaw in her official capacity and in a judicial setting commented that several members of the district attorney's office had in the past been "major alcoholics" and had "suffered more than one DUI" without losing their jobs. She remarked to Ms. S___ that if she did not believe this, she could ask her future father-in-law, Judge L___, about it. The masters believed that Judge Shaw did not mean to imply that Judge L___ was an intemperate drinker, but found that the remark did just that. Judge Shaw also made a remark that implied that Ms. S___ and her fiancé drank on the weekends. Again, the masters found that although Judge Shaw did not intend to imply that Ms. S___ and her fiancé drank intemperately, the comment was so perceived by Ms. S___. The masters also found that Judge Shaw told Ms. S___ that she lacked discretion and would, twenty years later, regret her refusal to accept a plea to the lesser offense.

The masters opined that the proper exercise of the judicial function contemplates that a judge can and should make diligent efforts to settle a case, and, if unsuccessful, conduct a fair and impartial trial. They concluded that, accordingly, Judge Shaw's conduct did not necessarily appear to reflect bias or embroilment and did not interfere in the district attorney's authority.

The masters, however, found that Judge Shaw's comments to Ms. S___ were demeaning and discourteous, and thus necessarily undignified, in violation of California Code of Judicial Conduct canon 3B(4). They explained: "The comments personalized the situation at the expense of one of the advocates and thus went beyond what was acceptable in trying to settle the case. We recognize that the atmosphere of a misdemeanor arraignment/trial court is quite different from the more staid environs of other institutions and that this difference is often manifested in a 'rough and tumble' way of handling cases. This, however, does not justify personalizing negotiations by references to a lawyer, her home and her family."

The masters concluded that Judge Shaw's conduct constituted improper action, rather than prejudicial conduct as urged by the examiners. The masters recognized that in the cases cited by the examiners,[4] the Supreme Court had [3] "Wet reckless" or "reckless driving with alcohol" refers to Vehicle Code section 23103.5—acceptance of guilty or nolo contendere plea to violation of section 23103 in place of charge for violation of section 23152.

[4] In Fletcher v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1998) 19 Cal.4th 865, 914–916 [81 Cal.Rptr.2d 58, 968 P.2d 958], the Supreme Court found prejudicial misconduct when a judge held that a judge's upbraiding of counsel could amount to conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute. The masters, however, concluded that an "objective observer would not magnify one strenuous effort to settle a case into conduct that is prejudicial to public esteem for the judicial office." They noted that Judge Shaw did not impugn the attorney's overall competence, but only questioned the attorney's assessment of a particular case in an effort to achieve what Judge Shaw believed to be a fair resolution of the case.

The commission unanimously agreed with the masters that Judge Shaw's personalized comments went beyond what was acceptable in trying to settle a case and were demeaning, discourteous and undignified in violation of California Code of Judicial Conduct canon 3B(4). The commission also unanimously agrees that Judge Shaw's comments constituted improper action and did not amount to prejudicial conduct.

B. Count Two

The notice charges that in May 1996, following the arraignment of codefendants on a misdemeanor case concerning protesters in support of animal rights, Judge Shaw spoke about the case to two deputy district attorneys who happened to be in court on unrelated matters. She told them that she had just arraigned the defendants and had offered them a thirty-day sentence if they pled guilty, and that she did not want the district attorney's office to undercut her offer. No one was present on behalf of the defendants when Judge Shaw made those comments. This conduct is alleged to have constituted improper ex parte communication and to have given the appearance of bias and embroilment, in violation of California Code of Judicial Ethics canons 1, 2A and 3B(7).

---

in open court expressed shock and embarrassment over the prosecutors' conduct, and accused them of playing games with the rights of the defendants. In Kloepfer v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1989) 49 Cal.3d 826, 841–842 [264 Cal.Rptr. 100, 782 P.2d 239], the court found prejudicial misconduct when the judge told the prosecutor in open court, "you are an embarrassment to the People of the State of California and it is frightening to think that you represent their interests." In Roberts v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1983) 33 Cal.3d 739, 745, 749 [190 Cal.Rptr. 910, 661 P.2d 1064], the court found prejudicial misconduct when a judge, in unreported proceedings in chambers, accused a new attorney of being incompetent to represent the defendant and rudely quizzed her regarding her legal experience. The court noted that the judge's treatment of the attorney, standing alone, might not warrant censure, but "in the light of the entire record such conduct once again reflects a censurable impatience or hostility in his professional relationship with others." In Cannon v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1975) 14 Cal.3d 678, 703 and footnote 4 at pages 683–684 [122 Cal.Rptr. 778, 537 P.2d 898], the court found prejudicial misconduct when a judge deliberately ridiculed attorneys without cause, including requiring a public defender to swear under oath that he had read the arrest report, inquiring into his legal training and experience, and commenting: " 'Six weeks and you are telling me you know everything there is to know about the law?' "

The masters found that in May 1996, Judge Shaw presided over the arraignment of several defendants in an animal rights case. The district attorney usually did not have a deputy present during Judge Shaw's arraignment calendars and no assigned deputy was present for that morning calendar.[5] The audience, supportive of the defendants, became disruptive. During the proceedings, Judge Shaw gave an indicated sentence, which the defendants laughingly declined. Because the defendants refused to stay away from the university campus where they had been arrested, Judge Shaw declined to release them on their own recognizance and instead set bail. The defendants were taken into custody.

As the arraignment ended and Judge Shaw left the bench, she noticed two deputy district attorneys in the courtroom. She gestured for the two to come over to her and they complied. The masters found that Judge Shaw told the deputies, who were not involved in the matter, that she did not want the district attorney's office to "undercut" her on the case. Counsel for the defendants were not present at the time.

The masters found that Judge Shaw's ex parte comment violated California Code of Judicial Ethics canon 3B(7), which provides, in part, that a "judge shall not initiate . . . ex parte communications." The masters felt that, although the comment did not reflect any general bias, it gave the appearance of embroilment in the case. They noted that Judge Shaw knew she would probably never see the case again and the comment gave the appearance that she was nevertheless trying to have some degree of influence over the future course of the matter.

The masters concluded that the comment constituted prejudicial misconduct, as an objective observer, seeing a judge communicate with representatives of one side of a case, especially when it involved unruly defendants, would feel that the judge was trying to influence the case without interference from the other side. The masters were of the opinion that Judge Shaw did not intend to take unfair advantage, but that her remark gave that appearance. They noted that the judiciary must rigorously protect its image of neutrality, and that this type of comment can only inflict damage to that image and lessen the regard in which the judiciary is held.

The masters further stated that the comment could not be excused on the basis of the "culture" of Harbor Justice Center or on the ground that it was necessary for administrative or other proper purpose. Although they appreciated the necessity of innovative techniques when high caseloads and insufficient staffing threaten to overwhelm the court and that "a certain degree of [5] If a deputy district attorney or a deputy public defender was needed, the judge or a member of the court staff would call for one.

informality may evolve in order to keep the ship afloat," they concluded, "ex parte communications of this sort cannot be part of that informality."

The commission unanimously agrees that Judge Shaw's ex parte communication violated California Code of Judicial Ethics canon 3B(7) and gave the appearance of embroilment in the case in violation of canon 2A. The commission also unanimously agrees that the comment constituted conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute.

C. Count Eight

The notice alleges that on January 15, 1997, during the arraignment calendar, after Judge Shaw remanded a particular defendant as a result of an increase in bail, she made a comment that referred to the defendant's physical appearance in connection with the prospect of incarceration that was understood to suggest that the defendant might be subject to unwanted sexual activity in jail. Judge Shaw's comment is alleged to have been intimidating, undignified and discourteous, in violation of the California Code of Judicial Ethics canons 1, 2A and 3B(4).

The masters found this to be "the most troubling of the allegations." Although Judge Shaw denied that she made the comment, the masters found that Judge Shaw, while incarcerating a slightly built white male, made a comment that was reasonably understood by several different observers as inferring that thin or skinny white males in prison were particularly vulnerable to sexual assault.

Judge Shaw contends that there is not clear and convincing evidence to support the masters' findings and that she cannot be held accountable for what a particular listener may infer from her actual words.

Although there was no transcript of the proceeding, the witnesses before the masters were consistent in their testimony as to what they had heard at the arraignment hearing two and a half years earlier. The defendant testified: "She looked right at me and asked me if I knew what they do to skinny little white boys in jail." The defendant's father, who was also in court, testified: "She made reference to little white boys, what they do to little white boys in jail." On cross-examination he reiterated that Judge Shaw said, "little white boys" and stated on redirect examination that he wrote, "little white boys" in the notes he had made in connection with the case. Another person who was in the courtroom was sufficiently upset by the comment that he wrote to the commission. He testified before the masters that Judge Shaw said, "You know what they do to skinny white boys in prison." Another defendant who was present on January 15, 1997, corroborated the testimony of the other witnesses.

In addition, the defendant's attorney reluctantly corroborated the allegations. The masters noted that it "was plain throughout his testimony that he would rather have been anywhere but in a courtroom testifying in this matter. Even though he made no effort to mislead, it was plain he would rather have walked through fire than say anything to harm Judge Shaw. At times, his testimony had to be pulled from him. Ironically, it is this reluctance that makes him very convincing and turns his concession that Judge Shaw 'may' have made such a comment into a most powerful bit of evidence."

The masters concluded that the comment constituted prejudicial misconduct in violation of California Code of Judicial Ethics canon 3B(4). They noted that it "personalized the situation to [the defendant's] race, gender, and physique." Even if Judge Shaw meant no sexual reference, "such a comment could only be taken as intimidating by any reasonable observer. It was discourteous and undignified. The criminal justice system is designed to impose appropriate penalties for criminal behavior, not raise the specter of possible consequences disproportionate to the defendant's malfeasance. We fail to see how the comment would not have intimidated [the defendant]."

The masters were impressed with Judge Shaw as a judge and reluctant to make any findings against her. They were critical of many of the witnesses against Judge Shaw and often found her testimony more persuasive. They were persuaded, however, that Judge Shaw made the statement, although they found that she intended no insult, and they did not believe that malice or ill will motivated the comment. The masters opined that the comment "surely came from a tendency to be flip on occasion." The masters noted that "this tendency can be dangerous and inappropriate. Such a comment can be easily misconstrued by people whose sensitivities are understandably heightened by their involuntary appearance in what is already an intimidating setting. Gratuitously piling intimidation on top of an already unpleasant situation brings the judicial system into disrepute."

The commission unanimously adopts the masters' findings of fact that the allegations in count eight are supported by clear and convincing evidence and their conclusion that the comment constituted conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judiciary into disrepute. The record contains clear and convincing evidence that Judge Shaw made a statement that was reasonably understood to infer that skinny white males in prison were particularly vulnerable to sexual assault. Each of the five witnesses agreed that the comment was made and to the essence of the comment.

FINDINGS AND CONCLUSIONS ON DISMISSED COUNTS

A. Count Three

The notice alleges that in 1996 and 1997, Judge Shaw frequently began her arraignment calendars with a speech regarding the use of alcohol, using a shot glass and a placemat with a picture of an eagle on it as props. Judge Shaw's speech included invitations to the defendants to "fly with the eagles rather than trot with the turkeys," and references to the defendants' "inner child." These comments are alleged to have been undignified and to have created the appearance of prejudgment and a lack of impartiality, in violation of California Code of Judicial Ethics canons 1, 2A and 3B(4).

The masters found that Judge Shaw made the speeches but concluded "that the evidence, when tested by the clear and convincing evidence standard, fails to show impropriety in Judge Shaw's arraignment procedure."

In concluding that Judge Shaw's conduct was not undignified, the masters cite the testimony from a number of the examiners' witnesses that they were not offended by Judge Shaw's speeches or that they thought portions of the presentation were well taken. The masters found that there was no authority prohibiting a judge from using props in conducting certain types of hearings.

The commission has some concerns with the masters' approach on this count. The fact that a litigant may agree with part of a judge's presentation does not save the speech from being undignified. Nonetheless, due respect for the masters' findings compels the commission to conclude that the charges in count three were not proved by clear and convincing evidence.[6] Accordingly, the charges alleged in count three are dismissed.

B. Count Four

The notice alleges that on July 3, 1996, at the beginning of the morning arraignment calendar, Judge Shaw called a DUI case and, before asking the defendant how he wished to plead, asked if the defendant's wife was in the audience. When the defendant's wife raised her hand, Judge Shaw allegedly pointed a shot glass at her and asked if she would like to stand at her husband's graveside. Judge Shaw's comments were alleged to be undignified and discourteous, and to have created the appearance of prejudgment and a lack of impartiality, in violation of California Code of Judicial Ethics canons 1, 2A and 3B(4).

[6] Two factors underlie this conclusion. First, in Dodds v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1995) 12 Cal.4th 163, 168 [48 Cal.Rptr.2d 106, 906 P.2d 1260], the Supreme Court noted that it gives "special weight" to factual determinations in the report of the masters, as the masters have the advantage of observing the demeanor of the various witnesses. Second, to the extent that the masters' findings are determined to be reasonable, the countervailing evidence cannot be said to be clear and convincing.

The masters noted that two witnesses testified that Judge Shaw called the first case of the morning, asked the defendant if his wife was present, and then asked the wife how she would like to be standing by his graveside. There was no evidence that Judge Shaw pointed a shot glass at the wife. The masters, however, stated that they lacked sufficient confidence in these witnesses to conclude, by clear and convincing evidence, that the incident occurred. The masters went on to observe that while "a judge should ordinarily not single out a defendant's family member and direct comments to that person," the propriety of particular comments might depend on the particular circumstances and context.

The commission, having considered the masters' findings and all the evidence, concludes that the charges in count four were not proved by clear and convincing evidence. Accordingly, the charges alleged in count four are dismissed.

C. Count Five

The notice alleges that on July 3, 1996, during the afternoon arraignment calendar, Judge Shaw urged all of the defendants to take responsibility for their actions and said that anything else was "whining." These comments are alleged to have improperly suggested that the defendants should plead guilty, and to have created the appearance of prejudgment and a lack of impartiality, in violation of California Code of Judicial Ethics canons 1 and 2A.

The masters found that Judge Shaw urged the defendants to take responsibility for their actions and told people she would appreciate it if they did not whine. The masters, however, found no impropriety, noting that at arraignments Judge Shaw apprises the defendants of what will happen if they plead guilty (including having to take responsibility) and makes offers on the cases. If a defendant chooses to plead not guilty, Judge Shaw sets the case for a pretrial hearing in another court.

The commission is concerned that Judge Shaw's approach may suggest prejudgment or a lack of impartiality to a defendant appearing in court for the first time, or even to an "objective observer." Nonetheless, due deference to the masters' findings compels the commission to conclude that the allegations are not supported by clear and convincing evidence and the allegations in count five are dismissed.

D. Count Six

The notice alleges that on July 3, 1996, during the afternoon arraignment calendar in a particular DUI case, Judge Shaw overheard an exchange where the defendant's mother told the deputy public defender that her daughter wanted to enter a not guilty plea and the attorney responded that the daughter was guilty. Judge Shaw allegedly told the daughter that it was not in her best interest to enter a not guilty plea, and told the defendant's mother that she could be paying for a coffin in addition to bail. Judge Shaw's comments are alleged to have been undignified and discourteous, and to have created the appearance of embroilment, prejudgment and a lack of impartiality, in violation of California Code of Judicial Ethics canons 1, 2A and 3B(4).

The masters found that Judge Shaw increased bail because she discovered that the defendant had been driving on a suspended license and that she spoke to the defendant's mother—saying she should be happy she did not have to buy her daughter a coffin—only because the mother interjected herself into the proceeding. The masters noted that in setting bail Judge Shaw was justified in attempting to apprise the defendant and the mother of the seriousness of the conduct. The masters noted that all the allegations in this count rest solely on the testimony of the mother and daughter and that they lack sufficient confidence in these witnesses to establish any allegations. In sum, the masters found that the allegations were not supported by clear and convincing evidence.

The commission, having considered the masters' findings and all the evidence, concludes that the charges in count six were not proved by clear and convincing evidence. Accordingly, the charges alleged in count six are dismissed.

E. Count Seven

The notice alleges that on November 13, 1996, during a jury trial in a particular DUI case, Judge Shaw interrupted a defense witness who testified that she had been driving the vehicle. Judge Shaw asked a few questions, then before the witness could answer, read the Penal Code section for perjury to the witness in front of the jury. It is alleged that, by this conduct, Judge Shaw assumed the role of an advocate and abandoned her duty to be impartial, and displayed bias and embroilment, in violation of California Code of Judicial Ethics canons 1, 2A, and 3B(4).

The masters found that the factual allegations were proven. During the DUI case, the defense called a young woman to testify. She had been in the vehicle when the defendant was arrested and had, up to this point, been considered a passenger. The woman testified, in a manner that raised serious questions concerning her credibility, that she had in fact been the driver. The masters found that Judge Shaw became concerned for the consequences the witness might suffer by committing perjury. She interrupted proceedings and, with the jury present, Judge Shaw read the perjury statute to the witness. The masters noted that Judge Shaw thereafter realized she had committed error and notified defense counsel that she would grant a new trial if the jury convicted the defendant. Judge Shaw declared a mistrial after the jury was unable to agree on a verdict.

The masters concluded that a judge may comment on evidence (citing People v. Proctor (1992) 4 Cal.4th 499 [15 Cal.Rptr.2d 340, 842 P.2d 1100]), but that Judge Shaw committed legal error in reading the perjury statute to the witness in front of the jury. They concluded, however, that Judge Shaw's legal error was not properly subject to judicial discipline, citing Oberholzer v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1999) 20 Cal.4th 371, 396, footnote 20 [84 Cal.Rptr.2d 466, 975 P.2d 663]. The masters found that Judge Shaw did not embroil herself in the matter. The masters opined that she "concluded a witness was lying and let it be known. Her mistake was in failing to comply with the strict procedures in place for imparting such an opinion to a jury." The masters also found that Judge Shaw did not become an advocate for either party. They noted that her concern was directed solely at the witness and they opined that she would have had the same motivation if it had been a prosecution witness instead of a defense witness. Finally, the masters found that Judge Shaw did not abandon her duty to be impartial as her action "was not aimed at influencing the outcome of the case, but instead at keeping a young witness from putting herself in jeopardy."

The masters then distinguished the cases cited by the examiners, finding that each case involved flagrant misconduct that far exceeded anything that Judge Shaw had done.[7] They concluded that Judge Shaw did interrupt the proceedings and read the perjury statute to the witness, but then she made it plain she would not let a conviction stand in light of her acknowledged error.

(1) The commission agrees that Judge Shaw committed legal error and that her mistake does not warrant discipline. In Oberholzer v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 20 Cal.4th at page 398, the Supreme Court wrote: "In summary, a judge who commits legal error which, in addition, clearly and convincingly reflects bad faith . . . , bias . . . , abuse of authority . . . , disregard for fundamental rights . . . , intentional disregard of the law . . . , or any purpose other than the faithful discharge of judicial duty . . . , is subject to investigation. . . . Mere legal error, without more, however, is insufficient to support a finding that a judge has violated the Code of Judicial Ethics and thus should be disciplined." (Citations omitted.)

[7] The masters noted that in McCartney v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1974) 12 Cal.3d 512 [116 Cal.Rptr. 260, 526 P.2d 268], the judge engaged in an ongoing pattern of harassing the witnesses and parties and persistently examined witnesses in a manner that demonstrated advocacy; in Kloepfer v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 49 Cal.3d 826, the judge criticized and chastised a defense witness and was openly hostile to the defense; and in Roberts v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 33 Cal.3d 739, the judge in a child neglect case interrupted the mother's testimony, ordered her off the stand and refused to listen to any further testimony.

Although the examiners are correct in noting that Judge Shaw did not claim that she intended to comment on the evidence to the jury, the record does not support a finding of the additional element required to elevate legal error to a violation of the California Code of Judicial Ethics. Judge Shaw acted out of concern that the witness was perjuring herself. She quickly recognized her error and assured defense counsel that she would not allow it to prejudice his client. The record does not contain clear and convincing evidence of bad faith, bias, abuse of authority, disregard of fundamental rights, intentional disregard of the law or any purpose other than the faithful discharge of her judicial duty.

F. Count Nine

The notice alleges that on April 9, 1997, during an arraignment calendar, Judge Shaw stated to a DUI defendant before he entered a plea, "You better think about what you've done. You could have killed somebody." Judge Shaw's comments were alleged to have been discourteous and to have reflected prejudgment and a lack of impartiality, in violation of California Code of Judicial Ethics canons 1, 2A and 3B(4).

The masters noted that impropriety depends on context. They commented that it would be inappropriate to utter such remarks to a defendant at the beginning of trial, but a judge could comment on the severity of the conduct in determining an appropriate sentence.

The examiners offered Mr. D___'s testimony that the remarks were directed to the defendants who had not pled guilty nor asked for an indicated sentence. The masters found Mr. D___ to be "a self-styled legal expert" who had "thoroughly impeached his own credibility with his grossly exaggerated testimony about his legal experience." They declined to sustain a charge dependent solely on Mr. D___'s testimony, concluding that the evidence "failed to demonstrate clearly and convincingly that Judge Shaw's comments were delivered in an improper context."

The commission, having considered the masters' findings and all the evidence, concludes that the charges in count nine were not proved by clear and convincing evidence. Accordingly, the charges alleged in count nine are dismissed.

G. Count 10

The notice alleges that on May 19, 1997, during the morning arraignment calendar in a particular DUI case, Judge Shaw stated to the defendant as she remanded him into custody, "How could you do that? You might have killed somebody." The defendant was being remanded as a result of an increase in bail; he had not entered a guilty plea or otherwise been convicted. Judge Shaw's comments are alleged to have been discourteous and to have reflected prejudgment and a lack of impartiality, in violation of California Code of Judicial Ethics canons 1, 2A and 3B(4).

The masters found that the comments were delivered during the setting of bail, and that a judge is entitled to assume the truth of the charges at that time. They noted that the defendant testified that his blood-alcohol level was nearly three times the statutory limit and that Judge Shaw's comments were accurate. The masters found that the comments had the effect of informing the defendant that bail was required because it was unacceptable that the defendant had chosen to drive in such a condition as to constitute a danger to public safety. The masters concluded that the comments were not discourteous, and did not reflect prejudgment or lack of impartiality.

The commission, having considered the masters' findings and all the evidence, concludes that the charges in count 10 were not proved by clear and convincing evidence. Accordingly, the charges alleged in count 10 are dismissed.

H. Count 11

The notice alleges that on June 16, 1997, a defendant charged with petty theft appeared before Judge Shaw and during a pause in the proceedings, Judge Shaw began singing, "when you're stealing, when you're stealing," to the tune of "When You're Smiling (The Whole World Smiles With You)." It also alleges that on December 26, 1996, a defendant appeared before Judge Shaw on a bench warrant for a speeding ticket and when he questioned Judge Shaw's indicated sentence of 30 days, Judge Shaw sang in response, "fa la la la la." When the same defendant appeared in early February 1997, for arraignment on a disturbing the peace charge, which arose out of an arrest on Christmas 1996, Judge Shaw again sang, "fa la la la la" to him. Count 11 further alleges that on other occasions Judge Shaw sang in court at the expense of the defendants, for example singing, "bye-bye, you're going to jail." Judge Shaw's conduct is alleged to have been undignified and demeaning, in violation of California Code of Judicial Ethics canons 1, 2A and 3B(4).

The masters noted that Judge Shaw admitted that she sang in court on occasion since she has "a happy heart" and sings "for levity." They noted that levity can relieve the tension inherent in court proceedings. It does not always work, "but there is no general prohibition against levity nor, so far as we are aware, against using singing as a form of levity."

The masters recognize that it would be inappropriate to sing in court in a manner that mocked or denigrated a defendant. They found, however, that the specific charges in count 11 were not supported by clear and convincing evidence. The masters implicitly agree that singing, "when you're stealing, when you're stealing" to a defendant charged with petty theft would be inappropriate, but found that the evidence put forward by the examiners did not carry their burden of proof. The masters found that Judge Shaw sings in court and they acknowledged that there was a possibility that Judge Shaw may have on occasion sung inappropriately in court. The masters concluded, however, that there was insufficient evidence that Judge Shaw had sung inappropriately on any particular occasion.

The commission remains concerned that singing in court is problematic, as are many attempts to inject levity into court proceedings. Although on occasion humor may defuse tensions in court proceedings, it does not always work and may have a negative effect on the parties and members of the public present in the courtroom. The singing of snippets of songs seems particularly likely to raise questions in the minds of some of the listeners, regardless of the judge's intentions. Nonetheless, having considered the masters' findings and all the evidence, the commission accepts that the specific charges in count 11 were not proved by clear and convincing evidence. Accordingly, the charges alleged in count 11 are dismissed.

I. Count 12

The notice alleges that on June 30, 1997, during the morning arraignment calendar, in a specific case in which a young defendant was charged with being drunk in public outside a club for young people, Judge Shaw commented, "this looks real bad." Judge Shaw then commented about the hazards of drunk driving, using a shot glass as a prop, although she acknowledged that the defendant was not driving. While reviewing the police report, Judge Shaw stated, "I see you had a childhood accident, so you should know the dangers of drunk driving." In fact, the childhood traffic accident, which was noted on the first page of the police report, did not involve drunk driving. Judge Shaw concluded by stating, "What would your parents have done if the officers had come to your house to tell them that you were dead? This club isn't a place for you to go." Judge Shaw's comments are alleged to have been gratuitous, undignified, discourteous and intimidating, and to have reflected prejudgment and a lack of impartiality, in violation of California Code of Judicial Ethics canons 1, 2A and 3B(4).

The masters found that during the arraignment Judge Shaw commented that the situation looked bad, terrible, and awful. She noted that the defendant had incurred injuries in a childhood accident and said that he, of all people, should be aware of the dangers of drunk driving. Judge Shaw asked him how he would like it if the police went to his home in the middle of the night to tell his parents he was dead because he had gone to this club. She told him he should not go to the nightclub.

The masters, however, found that, although the comments upset the defendant and his family, they did not constitute misconduct. The comments were uttered during an arraignment hearing while Judge Shaw was considering whether to let the defendant remain free on his own recognizance or whether to impose conditions on the release. The masters recognized that personalized comments, such as the reference to the childhood accident, often cross the line of proper judicial behavior. The masters noted, "[w]e find it insignificant that Judge Shaw mistakenly commented on the dangers of drunk driving as opposed to drunk walking in a parking lot. In setting conditions for an OR release, she was trying to point out to this young man that the justice system does not necessarily look kindly on such conduct." They found that the comment about police going to the home to inform the family of his death was also an attempt to impress upon the young defendant that his conduct can have a severe impact on his family as well as himself and must not be repeated if he is to comply with the conditions of an own recognizance release. The masters conclude that there was nothing gratuitous, undignified or discourteous about the remarks.

The commission, having considered the masters' findings and all the evidence, concludes that the charges in count 12 were not proved by clear and convincing evidence. Accordingly, the charges alleged in count 12 are dismissed.

DISCIPLINE

(2) The Supreme Court has indicated that the purpose of a commission disciplinary proceeding is not punishment, "but rather the protection of the public, the enforcement of rigorous standards of judicial conduct, and the maintenance of public confidence in the integrity and independence of the judicial system." (Broadman v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1998) 18 Cal.4th 1079, 1112 [77 Cal.Rptr.2d 408, 959 P.2d 715], citing Adams v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1995) 10 Cal.4th 866, 912 [42 Cal.Rptr.2d 606, 897 P.2d 544].) The court has further noted that "choosing the proper sanction is an art, not a science, and turns on the facts of the case at bar." (Broadman, supra, 18 Cal.4th at p. 1112, citing Furey v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1987) 43 Cal.3d 1297, 1318 [240 Cal.Rptr. 859, 743 P.2d 919].)

The masters found that Judge Shaw is genuinely concerned about her community and "is a widely respected judge within the legal community who carries out her duties honestly, faithfully, diligently, and with a great deal of regard for her responsibilities."

(3) Her good reputation, however, does not necessarily weigh against disciplining Judge Shaw. The Supreme Court has held that honesty and a good reputation do not mitigate conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice.[8] The Supreme Court has also questioned the weight to be given to "persons who were not present, and thus cannot assess the serious nature of the incidents of misconduct, but nonetheless believe petitioner to be a fair and patient person . . . ." (Kloepfer v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 49 Cal.3d at p. 866.) Indeed, the public has as great a need for protection from unethical conduct by popular judges as from unpopular judges. An outpouring of support for a judge from prosecutors, defense counsel, judges, peace officers and administrative personnel may inhibit some witnesses from coming forward and testifying.

(4) The commission has determined that a public admonishment is the appropriate discipline for Judge Shaw's two acts of conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice and one incident of improper action. A public admonishment assures all those who were concerned with Judge Shaw's statement to Ms. S___, her ex parte comments to the deputy district attorneys and her comment to the thin white defendant, that these comments are not acceptable judicial behavior. This public admonishment will help educate the bench and the public as to when a judge's comments may violate the Code of Judicial Ethics.

(5) An admonishment is also appropriate to advise Judge Shaw that her actions are not acceptable. "Judicial personality is important to the fabric of the judicial system, and it would be dangerous to that system were the judiciary to become a group of faceless bureaucrats who attempt to fit into a mold in order to stay out of trouble." (Rothman, Cal. Jud. Conduct Handbook (2d ed. 1999) § 1.52.) However, the cultivation of a particular judicial personality may not be used as an excuse for unethical conduct. California

[8] In Kloepfer v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 49 Cal.3d at page 865, the Supreme Court noted: "Several witnesses, including colleagues on the bench and attorneys who appear before him, testified that petitioner is a person of unquestioned honesty and integrity. None of the charges against petitioner suggest otherwise. This evidence, and that which confirms that petitioner had a good reputation for legal knowledge and administrative skills are not mitigating, however. [Fn. omitted.] Honesty and good legal knowledge are minimum qualifications which are expected of every judge. (Cal. Code Jud. Conduct, canons 1 & 3.) Neither these qualities nor a judge's administrative skills can mitigate either 'wilful misconduct' or 'conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute.' " (See Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (c).)

Code of Judicial Ethics canon 3B(4) provides that a "judge shall be patient, dignified, and courteous." (Italics added.) A judge has considerable latitude to develop her own or his own judicial "style," but regardless of the judge's style, she or he must respect the litigants and attorneys who appear in her or his court. When a judge fails to do so, it is the commission's responsibility to bring such failures to the judge's attention.

Our concern is that Judge Shaw may feel that her genuine concern for the litigants and the community somehow excuses her misconduct.[9] An irony of Judge Shaw's defense in this action is the masters' reliance on the testimony of judges, lawyers and others who frequent the courts and their discounting of the testimony of the defendants and their families—those individuals whom Judge Shaw seeks to reach. The record before the commission reveals that Judge Shaw has a reputation as a good judge, who "is genuinely concerned about the parties who appear before her and about the consequences of criminal conduct on victims and the community." However, in having chosen—for the best of reasons, or because it is who she is—to run her court informally, Judge Shaw must appreciate that unless she takes steps to control her admitted weakness for blurting out something that would have been better left unsaid, her comments will on occasion embarrass or demean a litigant or attorney.

There is no better example of the harm from being flip than Judge Shaw's comment concerning thin white males in jail (see count 8). Joking or making a casual comment about the possibility of an inmate having to endure same-gender rape while incarcerated may be perceived as not only an indifference to and acceptance of a tragic reality in our criminal justice system, but as a perhaps unintended admission of its inevitability under present conditions.

Judge Shaw is described by her supporters as frank, a straight talker, forthright, honest to a fault, and tough but fair. One of the judges who testified in support of Judge Shaw stated that "she tells you exactly what she thinks and why she thinks it, and most people can't take the truth." The commission, in turn, has been forthright in this public admonishment. It is confident that Judge Shaw will use this admonishment to refine her unique style that has earned her the respect of judges, prosecutors and defense counsel alike.

[9] When she appeared before the commission, Judge Shaw apologized if anyone had misunderstood her, but not for her actions. Of course, Judge Shaw should not apologize for any intent that she did not have. She should, however, recognize her role in creating a misunderstanding. For example, Judge Shaw may not have intended to imply that the prosecuting attorney drank intemperately on the weekend (see count 1), but her comment did just that.

This decision shall constitute the order of public admonishment of Judge Shaw.

Commission members Justice Daniel M. Hanlon, Mr. Michael A. Kahn, Ms. Lara Bergthold, Mr. Mike Farrell, Judge Madeleine I. Flier, Ms. Gayle Gutierrez, Mr. Patrick M. Kelly, Mrs. Crystal Lui, Judge Risë Jones Pichon, and Ms. Ramona Ripston voted in favor of this public admonishment. There is currently one public member vacancy.

[No. 155. Oct. 3, 2000.]

INQUIRY CONCERNING FORMER JUDGE LUIS A. CARDENAS

SUMMARY

A disciplinary matter was brought concerning a former superior court judge.

The Commission on Judicial Performance publicly admonished the former judge. The commission found that the former judge's actions in several cases gave the impression that two attorneys were in positions to influence him. The former judge, by being available to his two attorney friends after hours, by relying on their ex parte communications, and by failing to follow statutes and practices designed to limit a judge's discretion, violated Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canon 2. A public admonishment was necessary to guide the former judge and to reassure all those in the county who were aware of the incidents in question, as well as the bench and the public, that the former judge's accommodation of his friends was contrary to the Code of Judicial Ethics. (Opinion by Daniel M. Hanlon, Chairperson.)

HEADNOTES

(1) Judges § 6—Discipline—Conduct Prejudicial—Ex Parte Release of Prisoner.—The judge's order to release a prisoner in a case to which the judge was not assigned, based on an ex parte after hours request of the judge's attorney friend who was not counsel of record, without making a diligent attempt to verify the alleged medical problem, created an appearance of impropriety and constituted conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute.

(2) Judges § 6—Discipline—Conduct Prejudicial—Ex Parte Release on Own Recognizance.—The judge's willingness to act on the late night ex parte request of his attorney friend to release on his own recognizance an individual arrested on the charge of driving under the influence and on three outstanding warrants, including one "no bail" warrant, created an appearance of impropriety and constituted conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute.

(3) Judges § 6—Discipline—Conduct Prejudicial—Ex Parte Release of Individual Arrested for Spousal Battery.—The judge's own-recognizance release of an individual arrested for spousal battery, based on an ex parte request by the judge's attorney friend, after the judge had been told of the requirement of holding a hearing in open court and after the judge had questioned the statute but had failed to research its validity, created an appearance of impropriety and was conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute.

(4) Judges § 6—Discipline—Conduct Prejudicial—Ex Parte Order Changing Sentencing Order of Other Judge.—The judge's willingness to change a sentencing order imposed by another judge to allow an individual to serve his jail time in a drug rehabilitation facility, based on the ex parte request of the judge's attorney friend, without reviewing the file and investigating the matter, created an appearance of impropriety and constituted conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute.

(5) Judges § 6—Discipline—Conduct Prejudicial—Ex Parte Bail Reduction Ordered While on Vacation.—The judge's reduction of an individual's bail while the judge was on vacation, based on the ex parte request of the judge's attorney friend, instead of directing the attorney to the duty magistrate constituted conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute.

(6) Judges § 6—Discipline—Conduct Prejudicial—Ex Parte Bail Reduction in Violation of Statute.—The judge's willingness to rely upon the representations of his attorney friend regarding additional information from the victim of spousal abuse and to violate Pen. Code, § 1270.1, by reducing the bail of the individual charged with the offense based on the ex parte request of the judge's attorney friend, created an appearance of impropriety and constituted conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute.

(7) Judges § 6—Discipline—Purpose—Facts of Case.—The purpose of a judicial performance commission disciplinary proceeding is not punishment, but rather the protection of the public, the enforcement of rigorous standards of judicial conduct, and the maintenance of public confidence in the integrity and independence of the judicial system. Choosing the proper sanction is an art, not a science, and turns on the facts of the case at bar.

(8) Judges § 6—Discipline—Appearance of Impropriety.—Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canon 2, requires that a judge avoid the appearance of impropriety as well as actual impropriety.

(9) Judges § 6—Discipline—Friendship—Position to Influence.—The judge, by being available to his two attorney friends after hours, by relying on their ex parte communications, and in failing to follow statutes and practices designed to limit a judge's discretion, violated Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canon 2, by perpetuating the appearance that his friends were in special positions to influence him.

[Cal. Forms of Pleading and Practice (2009) ch. 317, Judges, § 317.85; 2 Witkin, Cal. Procedure (5th ed. 2008) Courts, §§ 56, 72.]

---

OPINION

HANLON, Chairperson.—This disciplinary matter concerns former Judge Luis A. Cardenas. Judge Cardenas served as a judge of the Orange County Municipal Court from March 30, 1976, to January 12, 1980, and as a judge of the Orange County Superior Court from January 12, 1980, to March 31, 1996. As a retired judge he sat on assignment in the Orange County Superior Court through December 31, 1996.

For the reasons set forth in this decision, the Commission on Judicial Performance finds that Judge Cardenas violated canon 2 of the California Code of Judicial Ethics as his actions in several cases gave the impression that two attorneys were in positions to influence him. The commission concludes that Judge Cardenas's actions constitute "conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute." (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (d).) Judge Cardenas is hereby publicly admonished.

PROCEDURAL HISTORY

Formal proceedings in this matter commenced with the filing on April 19, 1999, of a notice of formal proceedings. A first amended notice of formal proceedings was filed on November 4, 1999.

As provided by rule 121(b) of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance, the Supreme Court appointed three special masters to conduct an evidentiary hearing and to prepare a written report. The special masters who conducted the hearing and issued the report were Judge Rudolph R. Loncke, presiding, of the Sacramento County Superior Court, Judge Judith D. Ford of the Alameda County Superior Court, and Judge William J. Howatt, Jr., of the San Diego County Superior Court. The evidentiary hearing was held in Santa Ana commencing January 31, 2000, and concluding February 7, 2000. The special masters filed their report to the commission on May 4, 2000.

Following the receipt of objections and briefs from Judge Cardenas and the Office of Trial Counsel, the matter was orally argued before the commission on August 29, 2000. Arguments were presented by Mr. William Smith, trial counsel, and by Judge Cardenas on his own behalf.

FINDINGS AND CONCLUSIONS

The first amended notice of formal proceedings, with two exceptions,[1] alleged that Judge Cardenas violated the California Code of Judicial Conduct[2] by taking a number of actions between 1994 and the end of 1996 on behalf of two attorney friends, Leonard Basinger and Basinger's daughter, Ginger Larson Kelley.

A. The Friendship.

There is clear and convincing evidence that Judge Cardenas had a special friendship with Leonard Basinger and Ginger Larson Kelley. Judge Cardenas has known Leonard Basinger since they worked together in the Orange County District Attorney's Office in the early 1970's. At the request of Basinger's counsel and pursuant to subpoenas, Judge Cardenas testified as a witness to Basinger's good character in California State Bar proceedings in 1987 and 1991.

[1] Count two of the first amended notice of formal proceedings concerned Judge Cardenas's order in November 1993 finding that a certain person had completed a specific program concerning drinking and driving, and his order in April 1994 to the director of the school that offered the program. The masters found that Judge Cardenas was mistaken in issuing the subject orders, but that the mistakes did not constitute misconduct. They further noted that Judge Cardenas, when informed of there being a disputed factual issue, recused himself in a timely manner.

The first amended notice of formal proceedings also alleged that Judge Cardenas, while sitting on assignment, at the request of his wife's sister—who was a deputy public defender—ordered a cousin of his wife released on his own recognizance. The masters found that Judge Cardenas had a clear duty not to act on behalf of a relative and violated canon 2B by allowing a family relationship to influence his judicial conduct. They concluded that Judge Cardenas's actions constituted prejudicial conduct.

[2] The California Code of Judicial Conduct was replaced by the California Code of Judicial Ethics, effective January 15, 1996. (See Broadman v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1998) 18 Cal.4th 1079, 1097, fn. 5 [77 Cal.Rptr.2d 408, 959 P.2d 715].) The Code of Judicial Ethics did not change the ethical standards at issue in this case, and the citations to canons in this decision are to the Code of Judicial Ethics.

Judge Cardenas testified that in 1993, when Kelley was admitted to the practice of law, she approached him and he offered some assistance in the incipient stages of her career. He recommended her to the district attorney's office and to a private attorney. He further testified that Kelley would call him at home seeking legal advice. Although the calls became annoying, Judge Cardenas refrained from telling her that because he did not want to hurt her feelings.

In March 1994, Judge Cardenas performed the marriage ceremony for Ginger Larson and Bill Kelley. After the ceremony in California, Judge Cardenas flew with the Kelleys to England and performed a ceremonial wedding service in Bath, England. Basinger and his wife also attended the wedding service. In 1995, Judge Cardenas led a group of five or six couples, including the Basingers, on an antiquities tour of the Greek Islands and portions of Italy. Judge Cardenas paid for the Basingers' airfare to and from Europe in order to offset the financial benefit, if any, of meals or drinks that the Basingers might pay for during the tour.

The commission finds that Judge Cardenas's friendships with Basinger and Kelley were of a different nature than his acquaintances with other attorneys. There is, of course, nothing wrong with Judge Cardenas having a friendship with Basinger or Kelley. Judge Cardenas, however, was obligated to consider the friendship whenever either Basinger or Kelley appeared before him.[3]

B. Specific Incidents.

The commission determines that the evidence as a whole shows that Judge Cardenas engaged in conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute by making himself available to Basinger and Kelley and granting their requests in such a way as to suggest that they were in a special position to influence him.

[3] Canon 3E, "Disqualification," states: "A judge shall disqualify himself or herself in any proceeding in which disqualification is required by law. In all trial court proceedings, a judge shall disclose on the record information that the judge believes the parties or their lawyers might consider relevant to the question of disqualification, even if the judge believes there is no actual basis for disqualification." The advisory committee commentary notes: "under this rule, a judge is disqualified whenever the judge's impartiality might reasonably be questioned, or whenever required by the disqualification provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure."

Section 170.1 of the Code of Civil Procedure sets forth the legal standard for when a judge shall be disqualified. Subdivision (a)(6) provides that a judge shall be disqualified if: "For any reason (A) the judge believes his or her recusal would further the interests of justice, (B) the judge believes there is a substantial doubt as to his or her capacity to be impartial, or (C) a person aware of the facts might reasonably entertain a doubt that the judge would be able to be impartial. Bias or prejudice towards a lawyer in the proceeding may be grounds for disqualification."

This conclusion is demonstrated by the following six incidents that were charged in the first amended notice of formal proceedings.

1. Vargas. Mr. Vargas had been held to answer on seven counts of insurance fraud and grand theft. On June 10, 1994, Vargas appeared before Judge Kathleen O'Leary, to whom the case was assigned. Bail was discussed with Vargas's attorney, and Judge O'Leary declined to reduce bail. Judge O'Leary set a trial date of August 8, 1994.

In the evening of Thursday, June 23, 1994, Basinger—who was not Vargas's attorney of record—telephoned Judge Cardenas at his home and requested that Vargas be released on his own recognizance because he had a life-threatening health problem that required his immediate release for appropriate medical treatment. Judge Cardenas contacted the detention release unit and ordered that Vargas be released on his own recognizance. Vargas was ordered to appear in Judge O'Leary's court on August 8, 1994, but he never appeared.

Judge Cardenas did not contact Judge O'Leary or the district attorney. He also did not make an attempt to verify the medical emergency with jail personnel. The masters noted that, although Judge Cardenas acted in good faith, it was improper "to have relied on the word of Basinger as to Vargas' medical emergency without making a substantial effort to contact jail medical personnel to confirm the 'emergency.' "

(1) The masters found that by not making a diligent attempt to verify the alleged medical problem, Judge Cardenas created the appearance of impropriety in violation of canon 2.[4] This appearance was heightened by the fact that Judge Cardenas acted after hours on the representation of his friend without contacting the judge to whom the case was assigned, as well as by the subsequent publicity that resulted from Vargas's failure to appear. The commission concludes that Judge Cardenas's actions constituted conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute.

2. Bailey. On Friday, December 22, 1994, Bailey was arrested on a charge of driving under the influence of alcohol. He was also arrested on three

[4] Canon 2 is entitled "A Judge Shall Avoid Impropriety and the Appearance of Impropriety in All of the Judge's Activities." (Some capitalization omitted.) Subsection A is entitled, "Promoting Public Confidence" and states: "A judge shall respect and comply with the law . . . and shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary."

Canon 2B(1) is entitled "Use of the Prestige of Judicial Office" and states: "A judge shall not allow family, social, political, or other relationships to influence the judge's judicial conduct or judgment, nor shall a judge convey or permit others to convey the impression that any individual is in a special position to influence the judge."

outstanding warrants, one of which was a "no bail" warrant. Late that night, Basinger contacted Judge Cardenas and asked him to release Bailey on his own recognizance. Shortly after midnight Judge Cardenas contacted the detention release unit. Although he was informed of the no bail, out-of-county warrant, Judge Cardenas ordered Bailey released on his own recognizance.

(2) Judge Cardenas's willingness to act late at night on the ex parte representation of Basinger, following the Vargas incident and despite a "no bail" warrant, created the appearance of impropriety in violation of canon 2. Judge Cardenas's actions constituted conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute.

(3) 3. Calderon. On May 31, 1995, Calderon was arrested for spousal battery and bail was set at $50,000. At 6:00 in the evening, Judge Cardenas, who was not the duty magistrate, contacted the detention release unit at the request of Kelley. The detention release officer advised Judge Cardenas that Penal Code section 1270.1 required a hearing in open court prior to any own recognizance release of a person charged with domestic violence and that the prosecutor was entitled to two court days' written notice. Nonetheless, Judge Cardenas ordered Calderon released on his own recognizance.

Judge Cardenas had been advised a week earlier of the statute and had questioned its constitutionality. The masters found that Judge Cardenas had done no research between his first learning of Penal Code section 1270.1 and his order releasing Calderon. The masters concluded that Judge Cardenas's failure to research the constitutionality of the code section "after having had a sufficient opportunity to do so, neither upheld the higher standards expected of a judge (Canon 1) nor demonstrated the respect for and compliance with the law (Canon 2A)."

The commission concurs that Judge Cardenas's actions created an appearance of impropriety in violation of canons 1 and 2.[5] The commission concludes that Judge Cardenas's actions constituted conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute.

4. Warner. On February 20, 1996, Warner pled guilty to possession for sale of a controlled substance and an enhancement count. Kelley represented

[5] Canon 1 is entitled "A Judge Shall Uphold the Integrity and Independence of the Judiciary" (some capitalization omitted) and reads, in relevant part: "An independent and honorable judiciary is indispensable to justice in our society. A judge should participate in establishing, maintaining, and enforcing high standards of conduct, and shall personally observe those standards so that the integrity and independence of the judiciary will be preserved."

Warner. Judge Didier sentenced Warner to a four-year suspended prison sentence, with Warner to be confined for one year in the Orange County jail and to be on felony probation for three years.

(4) Between February 20 and 27, 1996, Basinger asked Judge Cardenas to release Warner on his own recognizance. He then requested that Judge Cardenas modify Warner's probation to allow him to serve his previously imposed jail term in a drug rehabilitation program rather than the county jail. Judge Cardenas told Basinger that he needed a full medical report and a personal appearance from Warner. Basinger provided a medical report and Warner appeared in Judge Cardenas's courtroom. On February 27, 1996, Judge Cardenas issued an order modifying Warner's probation to allow him to serve his jail time in a drug rehabilitation facility.

The masters noted that after Judge Cardenas entered his order, "he discovered that the previous judge on the Warner case had already reviewed the medical information on the defendant (which was in a sealed envelope in the court file)." Judge Didier had declined the relief requested by Basinger. The masters found that Judge Cardenas "did not take sufficient time to read the file and investigate the Warner matter before acting on counsel's request." In addition, the evidence shows that Judge Cardenas failed to contact Judge Didier concerning Basinger's request, to notice a probation modification hearing, and to state his reasons for the modification on the record.

Judge Cardenas's willingness to act in this matter and to grant the relief requested by Basinger violated canon 2. It created the appearance that Basinger was in a special position to influence the judge. The commission concludes that Judge Cardenas's actions constituted conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute.

(5) 5. Bass. On March 1, 1996, Bass was arrested for possession of a controlled substance for sale and bail was set for $25,000. On Saturday, March 2, 1996, Basinger contacted Judge Cardenas, who was on vacation in Hawaii, and requested that the judge order Bass released on his own recognizance or reduce the bail. Judge Cardenas contacted the detention release unit and ordered that Bass's bail be reduced to $5,000.

The masters noted that the circumstances of Basinger's request while the judge was on vacation in Hawaii "should have put [Judge Cardenas] on notice that responding favorably would constitute prejudicial misconduct. [Judge Cardenas] failed to inform Basinger that it would be improper for him to consider such a request while on vacation and failed to direct Basinger to the duty magistrate."

Judge Cardenas's accommodation of Basinger while the judge was on vacation in Hawaii violated canon 2 as it gave the impression that Basinger was in a special position to influence the judge. Judge Cardenas's actions constituted conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute.

(6) 6. Alvarez. Alvarez was in custody charged with spousal battery and a violation of probation with a total bail of $35,000. On Thursday, January 4, 1996, Basinger contacted Judge Cardenas requesting that he reduce the bail. The masters found that Judge Cardenas contacted the detention release unit and ordered bail reduced to $5,000, stating that he had received additional information from the victim. Judge Cardenas failed to comply with Penal Code section 1270.1.

The masters found that Judge Cardenas's failure to comply with Penal Code section 1270.1 was improper. Judge Cardenas's representation that he had received additional information from the victim was misleading as he had only spoken with Basinger. Judge Cardenas's willingness to rely on Basinger's representations and to violate Penal Code section 1270.1 created an appearance of impropriety in violation of canon 2. Judge Cardenas's actions constituted conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute.

The commission has reviewed the remaining allegations in the first amended notice of formal proceedings. Although trial counsel has reasonably objected to the masters' conclusions, the commission has determined to accept the masters' conclusions on the remaining allegations, many of which are cumulative. Further elaboration on these allegations and trial counsel's objections is unnecessary as it would not affect the commission's perspective on Judge Cardenas's behavior or its determination of the appropriate level of discipline, when all the circumstances of the case are considered including Judge Cardenas's status as a retired judge.

DISCIPLINE

(7) The Supreme Court has indicated that the purpose of a commission disciplinary proceeding is not punishment, " 'but rather the protection of the public, the enforcement of rigorous standards of judicial conduct, and the maintenance of public confidence in the integrity and independence of the judicial system.' " (Broadman v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 18 Cal.4th at p. 1112, quoting Adams v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1995) 10 Cal.4th 866, 912 [42 Cal.Rptr.2d 606, 897 P.2d 544].) The court has further noted that " '[c]hoosing the proper sanction is an art, not a science, and turns on the facts of the case at bar.' " (Broadman, supra, 18 Cal.4th at p. 1112, quoting Furey v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1987) 43 Cal.3d 1297, 1318 [240 Cal.Rptr. 859, 743 P.2d 919].)

In determining the appropriate discipline, the commission cannot ignore that Judge Cardenas retired four years ago in March 1996, after serving 20 years as a judge. The commission has not previously disciplined Judge Cardenas. The record supports the masters' perspective that Judge Cardenas "was a hard working judge who made himself available beyond the call of duty to just about anyone who asked, day and night." They noted that he took his job as judge "seriously and was extremely well respected by prosecutors, public defenders, private attorneys and law enforcement." Indeed, there is no evidence that Judge Cardenas acted with any corrupt purpose or intent, nor evidence that he ever received, or expected to receive, anything from Basinger or Kelley.

Judge Cardenas's actions, however, violated canon 2. Canon 2 requires that a judge pay attention not only to his or her actions but also to the reasonable appearances flowing from those actions. Although the masters noted that Judge Cardenas did not act in bad faith or with any corrupt purpose, they recognized that despite Judge Cardenas's subjective good faith, his action in the Bass matter constituted conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute. A judge must avoid the appearance of impropriety as well as actual impropriety.

(8) The commission concludes that a public admonishment is the appropriate discipline. Judge Cardenas continued to entertain requests from Basinger and Kelley even after the Vargas incident, which the masters found should have made him more cautious. The masters opined: "The record demonstrates that Basinger and Kelley took advantage of [Judge Cardenas's] availability to an extent that should have raised a red flag in the eyes of [Judge Cardenas]. [Judge Cardenas's] continuing personal association with these two attorneys is simply inexplicable and gives rise to a spectre of impropriety in regard to his actions which affected these attorneys or their clients. Respondent never asked himself, 'How would it look to the objective observer that I continue to act on requests of Basinger and Kelley' even when prudence would have dictated to him greater care in dealing with these attorneys." Canon 2 requires that a judge avoid the appearance of impropriety as well as actual impropriety.

A public admonishment is necessary to guide Judge Cardenas[6] and to reassure all those in Orange County who were aware of the above described incidents, as well as the bench and the public, that Judge Cardenas's accommodation of Basinger and Kelley was contrary to the Code of Judicial Ethics. Many of Judge Cardenas's actions followed ex parte communications. Shaman et al. in Judicial Conduct and Ethics (3d ed. 2000) pages 159–160, note: "Ex parte communications deprive the absent party of the right to respond and be heard. They suggest bias or partiality on the part of the judge. Ex parte conversations or correspondence can be misleading; the information given to the judge 'may be incomplete or inaccurate, the problem can be incorrectly stated.' At the very least, participation in ex parte communications will expose the judge to one-sided argumentation, which carries the attendant risk of an erroneous ruling on the law or facts. At worst, ex parte communication is an invitation to improper influence if not outright corruption." (Fns. omitted.) These ills exist, or appear to exist, regardless of a judge's intent when entering into an ex parte communication. Furthermore, the likelihood of harm from an ex parte communication or any other appearance of impropriety is such that the incident tarnishes the judiciary even if there was no direct harm or prejudice.

[6] In his argument before the commission Judge Cardenas continued to defend his conduct by arguing that after the Vargas incident no other defendant whom he ordered released on his or her own recognizance or on bail failed to appear. Judge Cardenas violated canon 2, however, because he acted in such a way that it reasonably appeared that Basinger and Kelley were in special positions to influence him. This appearance arose at the time of Judge Cardenas's actions and persisted regardless of whether the defendants showed up at the subsequent court hearings.

(9) The commission is mindful of Judge Rothman's warning that "Judicial personality is important to the fabric of the judicial system, and it would be dangerous to that system were the judiciary to become a group of faceless bureaucrats who attempt to fit into a mold in order to stay out of trouble." (Rothman, Cal. Judicial Conduct Handbook (2d ed. 1999) §1.52, p. 29.) Neither the first amended notice of formal proceedings nor this decision challenges either Judge Cardenas's continuing friendship with Basinger and Kelley or the informality of Judge Cardenas's methods. Rather, the commission holds that, although Judge Cardenas had considerable latitude to choose his friendships and to adopt his own judicial "style," he remained responsible for the appearances created by his choices and actions. Judge Cardenas, by being available to his friends after hours, by relying on their ex parte communications, and in failing to follow statutes and practices designed to limit a judge's discretion, violated canon 2 by perpetuating the appearance that Basinger and Kelley were in special positions to influence him.

A public admonishment in this case is consistent with discipline imposed by the commission in other cases. (See, e.g., Inquiry Concerning Shaw (2000) No. 156, Decision and Order Imposing Public Admonishment [48 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 125], and Inquiry Concerning Smith (Nov. 25, 1996).)

This decision shall constitute the order of public admonishment of Judge Cardenas.

Commission members Justice Daniel M. Hanlon, Mr. Michael A. Kahn, Ms. Lara Bergthold, Mr. Mike Farrell, Judge Madeline I. Flier, Ms. Gayle Gutierrez, Mr. Patrick M. Kelly, Mrs. Crystal Lui, Judge Risë Jones Pichon, and Ms. Ramona Ripston voted in favor of this public admonishment. There is currently one public member vacancy.

PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE BERNARD E. REVAK

The Commission on Judicial Performance orders Judge Bernard E. Revak publicly admonished pursuant to Article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution and rules 115 and 116 of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance.

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

Judge Revak has been a judge of the San Diego County Superior Court since October 2, 1987; his current term began in January 1995.

On February 6, 2000, Judge Revak had dinner at his home with Fourth District Court of Appeal Justice Terry O'Rourke. During the evening, Judge Revak inquired about an appeal pending before the Fourth District in Argo v. General Dynamics, in which a jury had awarded approximately $100 million in compensatory and punitive damages to 98 plaintiffs. Two friends of Judge Revak had financial interests in the case; Mr. Jack Sinnott is a plaintiff in the case; Mr. Jim Doherty is married to a plaintiff in the case. According to Justice O'Rourke and Judge Revak, Justice O'Rourke stated to Judge Revak that he had recently recused from what he believed to be a related case. According to both Judge Revak and Justice O'Rourke, they did not engage in any substantive discussion of the Argo appeal or its merits.

The following day, Judge Revak played a round of golf with three friends, including Mr. Sinnott and Mr. Doherty. During the game, Judge Revak stated to his friends that he had been told that the Argo verdict and/or the punitive damages award had been reversed. Judge Revak did not identify the source of this information by name, but stated that he had had a friend from the Court of Appeal over for dinner. Judge Revak also made a statement indicating that the Court of Appeal, or the opinion writer, "didn't like [the trial judge] anyway." At no time on this date did Judge Revak state to his friends that his remarks about the Argo case were not true or were intended as a joke.

As of February 2000, the parties' briefing had been completed in the Argo appeal. Oral argument had not yet been scheduled, and thus the case had not been taken under submission by the court. Judge Revak's friends had not been apprised of any decision having been issued.

On February 8, 2000, attorney Brian Monaghan, one of the attorneys representing the plaintiffs in the Argo case, contacted Judge Revak by telephone and asked to meet with him about an important issue; Mr. Monaghan did not indicate that his call concerned the Argo case. A meeting was scheduled for the morning of February 10, 2000.

On February 9, 2000, Judge Revak played another round of golf with the friends he had played with on February 7. During the game, Judge Revak chastised Mr. Sinnott for having told Mr. Monaghan about the judge's remarks on the golf course on February 7. According to Judge Revak, during the February 9 game he informed his friends that his comments about the appeal were a joke. Mr. Sinnott and Mr. Doherty deny they were told the comments were a joke, and assert that Judge Revak made further statements, including that when he met with Mr. Monaghan he would not tell him where the information came from, and that he thought the Court of Appeal's decision was a matter of public knowledge. Judge Revak denies making these comments.

During the afternoon of February 9, Judge Revak was informed that Mr. Monaghan had cancelled the meeting scheduled for February 10, and would instead send a letter. Judge Revak received Mr. Monaghan's letter sometime during the morning of February 10. The letter advised that Mr. Monaghan had wanted to meet with Judge Revak concerning a statement the judge had reportedly made on a golf course concerning the Argo case, but that he had determined to present his concerns in writing to Fourth District Presiding Justice Daniel Kremer. After receiving the letter, Judge Revak initiated a telephone conversation with Mr. Monaghan during which the judge advised that he had been joking.

During the morning and early afternoon of February 10, 2000, Judge Revak also contacted Mr. Sinnott and Mr. Doherty by telephone. The judge told them that his remarks about the appeal had been meant as a joke and asked them to convey this to Mr. Monaghan when they met with him.

On the afternoon of February 10, Mr. Sinnott and Mr. Doherty met with their attorneys and provided declarations concerning the golf course conversations. The declarations of Mr. Sinnott, Mr. Doherty and attorney Monaghan were submitted to the Fourth District Court of Appeal in support of a motion filed by the Argo plaintiffs on February 14. The motion requested an evidentiary hearing, the recusal of justices and the transfer of the Argo appeal to another court on grounds of the alleged disclosure of confidential information by Judge Revak and a member or employee of the Court of Appeal, and the alleged pre-judgment of the appeal by the court.

Justice Daniel Kremer, Presiding Justice of Division One of the Fourth District Court of Appeal, conducted an investigation of the matters alleged in the Argo plaintiffs' motion. Justice Kremer reviewed the appellate court's files and questioned the justices of the court. On February 17, 2000, Justice Kremer issued an order denying the Argo plaintiffs' motion and referring to this commission the allegation that certain statements by, and possibly to, Judge Revak constituted judicial misconduct.

The Argo plaintiffs filed a motion for reconsideration by the Court of Appeal, which was also denied, and a petition for review in the California Supreme Court. On April 12, 2000, the California Supreme Court entered an order transferring the Argo appeal to the Fifth District Court of Appeal "[i]n order to avoid even the appearance of impropriety." The Supreme Court did not hold a hearing, and denied further review of the matter. The Argo plaintiffs' motion, Justice Kremer's February 17, 2000 order, and the Supreme Court's order transferring the appeal were the subject of considerable publicity.

The issues before the commission are whether Judge Revak was apprised of confidential information about how the appellate court was going to rule on the Argo case and revealed it to his friends, and whether Judge Revak's comments, even if not revealing confidential information about the outcome of the Argo appeal, violated his ethical obligations as a judge.

On the issue of whether confidential information was imparted, both Justice O'Rourke and Judge Revak have testified under oath pursuant to Government Code section 68753 that their February 6 conversation did not involve any substantive information regarding the Argo appeal. Although these statements might be regarded as self-serving, the evidence adduced by the commission investigation is that there had not yet been a determination by the Court of Appeal as to how it would rule on the case. While the case had at one time been tentatively assigned to a three-justice panel, this assignment had been vacated when re-briefing was required. Upon completion of re-briefing, Justice O'Rourke was tentatively assigned as the authoring justice, but within days he recused himself from the case – well before his dinner with Judge Revak. Thereafter the case remained unassigned. As of February 17, 2000, when Justice Kremer denied the Argo plaintiffs' motion, the Argo appeal had not been re-assigned to an appellate panel for decision and no draft or tentative decision, bench memorandum, or analysis of the merits of the appeal had been prepared or undertaken by any Fourth District justice or law clerk, or circulated to the justices of the appellate court. The evidence that no determination of the outcome of the appeal had been made at the Court of Appeal supports the conclusion that the judges could not have discussed how the appellate court had decided to rule, and Judge Revak therefore could not have conveyed such information to his friends on the golf course.

Even though Judge Revak could not have imparted the substance of a decision that the Court of Appeal had not made, Judge Revak made remarks to his friends that purported to convey the outcome of the Argo appeal. Judge Revak contends that his remarks were a joke: he asserts that he spoke in what he believed was a joking manner at the time he made his remarks on February 7, and that he believed his friends understood the remarks as a joke from the beginning. Judge Revak claims he expressly stated he had been joking to Mr. Sinnott and Mr. Doherty, as well as the fourth golfer, Dr. Finlay, during the February 9 golf outing, which Dr. Finlay corroborates. Judge Revak also claims that Mr. Doherty acknowledged on February 9 that he had known on February 7 that Judge Revak was joking. However, Mr. Doherty filed a declaration in the appellate court stating that he did not believe Judge Revak's comments were a joke, as did Mr. Sinnott. Mr. Sinnott and Mr. Doherty both claim that the judge first revealed that the comments were meant to be a joke on February 10.

Judge Revak's remarks, even if a joke, constitute misconduct. In Kennick v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1990) 50 Cal.3d 297, the California Supreme Court found that Judge Kennick committed conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice when he engaged in a conversation with a cocktail waitress concerning her recent arrest for drunk driving, and implied that she should not worry about the arrest. The judge testified before the commission that the comments were in the nature of general reassurance that "it is going to be all right; these things have a way of working themselves out" and were not intended to imply that he would use any improper influence in the matter. While not finding that the judge had implied that he could in some manner exert influence to affect the disposition of the case, the Supreme Court found the judge's comments to be prejudicial conduct, explaining that: "for a judge to give a layperson assurances about the outcome of a prosecution against the latter may imply inside information and thus be inappropriate." (Kennick v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 50 Cal.3d at 332-333.)

In this matter, Judge Revak's comments to Mr. Sinnott and Mr. Doherty were misconduct for the same reason set forth in Kennick. Judge Revak's comments purported to convey to his friends the outcome of a court case in which they were involved and in which no decision had been announced by the appellate court. Even if intended as a joke, the comments implied to laypersons involved in a pending case that the judge was conveying inside information. Indeed, the implication was apparently so strong in the minds of Judge Revak's friends that they did not believe the judge when he later told them the comments were only a joke. The comments were improper.

The potential harm to public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary was fully realized in the impact of Judge Revak's conduct on the parties to the Argo case and on the courts. As a result of the judge's conduct, the Argo plaintiffs filed two motions with the Fourth District Court of Appeal seeking an evidentiary hearing, the recusal of justices, and the transfer of the case to another court on grounds that Judge Revak's comments made it appear that the Fourth District had prejudged the appeal. After these motions were denied, the California Supreme Court ordered the appeal transferred to another district of the Court of Appeal "to avoid even the appearance of impropriety." As noted, Judge Revak's comments, and the Argo plaintiffs' motions and their aftermath resulted in substantial publicity adverse to public confidence in the judiciary.

Judge Revak's conduct implicates various provisions of the California Code of Judicial Ethics. Canon 3B(9) provides that "[a] judge shall not . . . make any nonpublic comment that might substantially interfere with a fair trial or hearing. . . ." Canon 2A provides that "[a] judge shall . . . act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary. . . ." Canon 1 provides that "a judge shall uphold the integrity and independence of the judiciary." Judge Revak's conduct constituted conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute. (California Constitution, Article VI, section 18(d); see Kennick v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 50 Cal.3d at 332-333.)

In reaching its decision, the commission noted that Judge Revak has forthrightly admitted that his conduct was the result of an unfortunate lapse of judgment, and acknowledged that it impaired the perception of the Argo plaintiffs and their counsel of the fairness of the appellate process and caused the courts and judiciary to suffer embarrassing and damaging publicity. After the Supreme Court transferred the case from the Fourth District Court of Appeal, Judge Revak publicly acknowledged his responsibility for the comments and apologized for the damage they caused, particularly to the Court of Appeal and to Justice O'Rourke.

Commission members Justice Daniel M. Hanlon, Mr. Michael A. Kahn, Ms. Lara Bergthold, Judge Madeleine I. Flier, Ms. Gayle Gutierrez, Mr. Patrick M. Kelly, Mrs. Crystal Lui, Judge Rise Jones Pichon, and Ms. Ramona Ripston voted to impose a public admonishment. Commission member Mr. Mike Farrell did not participate in this matter. There is currently one public member vacancy.

This decision and order shall constitute the order of public admonishment.

Dated: December 12, 2000

Honorable Daniel M. Hanlon
Chairperson

PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE PETER J. McBRIEN

The Commission on Judicial Performance has ordered Judge Peter J. McBrien publicly admonished pursuant to Article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution and Commission Rule 115, as set forth in the following statement of facts and reasons found by the commission:

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

Judge McBrien has been a judge of the Sacramento County Superior Court since July 1989; his current term began in January 1997. He was previously a judge of the Sacramento County Municipal Court from April 1987 to July 1989.

On October 27, 2000, Judge McBrien pled nolo contendere to a violation of Penal Code section 384a, a misdemeanor, was found guilty, and was placed on probation.

Penal Code section 384a prohibits the willful or negligent cutting or mutilation of any tree growing upon public land or the land of another without permission. Judge McBrien's criminal conviction arose out of the 1999 cutting of trees, and removal of limbs from trees, on public land adjacent to his residence. The trees were growing in a nature center located in a public park owned by the County of Sacramento. The trees included mature oaks, and were cut for the purpose of improving the view of a nearby river from the McBrien residence. The trees were cut without the permission of the County of Sacramento.

The terms of Judge McBrien's probation included payment of $20,000 in restitution to the County, as well as a $500 fine. Judge McBrien complied with the terms of his probation, and his probation therefore terminated. His subsequent petition pursuant to Penal Code section 1203.4 was granted.

Judge McBrien's conduct evidenced disregard of the principles of personal and official conduct embodied in the California Code of Judicial Ethics, including failure to observe high standards of conduct so that the integrity and independence of the judiciary will be preserved (canon 1), and failure to respect and comply with the law and to act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary (canon 2), and constituted conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute. (California Constitution, Article VI, section 18(d).)

In a letter to the commission, Judge McBrien stated, "I sincerely regret my misdemeanor violation of the law, primarily because it brings dishonor and disrespect to the bench."

Judge McBrien's conduct was the subject of numerous news articles, including in the Sacramento Bee and Sacramento News & Review.

Commission members Judge Rise Jones Pichon, Ms. Lara Bergthold, Judge Madeleine I. Flier, Mr. Marshall Grossman, Mr. Michael Kahn, Mrs. Crystal Lui, Ms. Ramona Ripston, Ms. Barbara Schraeger, and Dr. Betty Wyman voted to impose a public admonishment. Commission member Justice Vance W. Raye recused himself from participating in this matter. Commission member Ms. Gayle Gutierrez did not participate in this matter.

April 25, 2002

PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE JAMES L. ROEDER

The Commission on Judicial Performance orders Judge James L. Roeder publicly admonished pursuant to Article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution and rules 115 and 116 of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance.

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

1. From at least February 2001 to February 2002, Judge Roeder presided over the felony arraignment calendar in Placer County Superior Court. While conducting that calendar and for at least that period of time, Judge Roeder maintained a practice of stating, for the record, that defendants had waived their rights to have a speedy preliminary examination without obtaining the defendants' personal waivers of these rights, as required by law.

Penal Code section 859b provides, in relevant part, that in a felony case, "[b]oth the defendant and the people have a right to have a speedy preliminary examination at the earliest possible time, and unless both waive that right or good cause for a continuance is found ... the preliminary examination shall be held within 10 court days of the date the defendant is arraigned or pleads, whichever occurs later . . . ." Section 859b further provides that "[w]henever the defendant is in custody, the magistrate shall dismiss the complaint if the preliminary examination is set or continued beyond 10 court days" from the time of the defendant's arraignment or plea, whichever occurs later, "unless either of the following occur: (a) The defendant personally waives his or her right to a preliminary examination within 10 court days" [or] (b) [t]he prosecution establishes good cause for a continuance beyond the 10-court day period." In addition and regardless of the defendant's custody status, section 859b provides that "[t]he magistrate shall dismiss the complaint if the preliminary examination is set or continued more than 60 days from the date of the arraignment [or] plea . . . unless the defendant personally waives his or her right to a preliminary examination within 60 days." (Emphases added.)

The following excerpt from arraignment proceedings on January 11, 2002, in the matter of People v. Brian Allen Costanzo (case No. 62-26239) illustrates Judge Roeder's practice. The transcript reflects that Mr. Costanzo was in custody on that date and was appearing before Judge Roeder for arraignment on a felony complaint. Prior to calling Mr. Costanzo's matter, Judge Roeder made the following statement to him and the other defendants who were present for arraignment:

> Good afternoon. We'll do the arraignments first. When I call your matter, tell the Court if you have hired your own attorney or if you're requesting a Court-appointed attorney. If you're here on a felony, you have the right to a preliminary examination within ten days.

(January 11, 2002 R.T. 2:19-23.)

When Mr. Costanzo's case was called, Judge Roeder asked him whether he was going to retain his own attorney or was requesting that the court appoint an attorney for him. Mr. Costanzo replied he was requesting a court-appointed attorney "for now." (R.T. 2:19-23.) Judge Roeder then stated:

> Sure. Give you written notice of your responsibility to reimburse Placer County. Appoint the public defender. Give you a copy of the felony complaint. Waiving formal arraignment, stipulating to advisement of constitutional rights, not guilty pleas will be entered. Set this for a conference Tuesday, January 15, at 8:30 in this courtroom. Waiving time for the preliminary examination both 10 days and 60 days, that will not be scheduled. There is a parole hold. I'll set bail at $25,000 on this case. Direct [that] he be retained at this facility pending his next appearance.

(R.T. 3:3-12, emphasis added.)

As the foregoing example shows, Judge Roeder stated that Mr. Costanzo was waiving "both [the] 10 days and 60 days" time limits within which to have a preliminary examination, without obtaining his personal waiver of those time limits, as required by Penal Code section 859b.

On February 26, 2002, a preliminary hearing was held in People v. Costanzo, at which Mr. Costanzo was held to answer on both felony and misdemeanor charges. On March 12, 2002, Mr. Costanzo was arraigned on an information charging him with felony and misdemeanor offenses. On April 11, 2002, Mr. Costanzo, through his attorney, the Office of the Public Defender, filed a motion to dismiss the information, pursuant to Penal Code section 995, on grounds that he "never personally waived" his right to have a preliminary examination within 10 court days of the January 11, 2002 arraignment proceedings, and therefore he was not lawfully held to answer at the preliminary examination. The motion averred that "at all times relevant herein [Mr. Costanzo had] insisted that the minute order of [the January 11, 2002 arraignment proceeding] inaccurately stated that [he] did waive time." Further, the motion alleged that on January 11, 2002,

> ... [Mr. Costanzo] was arraigned, but had no opportunity to speak with his counsel during or prior to the arraignment," and that [i]mmediately following the appointment of counsel, [Judge Roeder] ordered that [Mr. Costanzo] waived his Pen[al] C[ode] [section] 859b right to [a] preliminary examination within 10 [court] days. In fact, [Mr. Costanzo] did not waive that right, and was subsequently thwarted in his efforts to vindicate that right based on another court's reliance upon the minute order from [January 11, 2002].

On April 16, 2003, the motion was granted, and the information was dismissed.

2. From at least February 2001 to February 2002, Judge Roeder also regularly conducted an in-custody misdemeanor arraignment calendar. During at least that period of time, he maintained a practice of stating, for the record, that defendants who were appearing before him for arraignment without counsel, and who were requesting appointment of counsel, had waived their right to have a trial within the time limit prescribed by law, without obtaining the defendants' consent. Judge Roeder's practice is illustrated by his conduct on May 24, 2001, during arraignment proceedings in the matter of People v. Kenneth Santos (case No. 62-021664). A transcript of the proceedings shows that Mr. Santos appeared in custody and without representation, and that the following colloquy occurred:

> THE COURT: Kenneth Santos?
> DEFENDANT SANTOS: Here.
> THE COURT: Are you going to get your own attorney or requesting one?
> DEFENDANT SANTOS: Court appointed.
> THE COURT: Giving you written notice of your responsibility to reimburse Placer County, appoint the public defender. Give you a copy of the misdemeanor complaint. Waiving formal arraignment, stipulating to advisement of constitutional rights, not guilty pleas will be entered . . . . Waiving time for the misdemeanor jury trial, that will not be scheduled.... [Y]our bail is reduced to $2,500....

(R.T. 7:14-26, emphasis added.)

Penal Code section 1382(a)(3) provides that "[r]egardless of when the complaint is filed," a defendant charged with a misdemeanor who is "in custody at the time of arraignment or plea, which ever occurs later," must be brought to trial within 30 days after arraignment or entry of plea, whichever occurs later.[1] "Article I, section 15, of the California Constitution guarantees criminal defendants the right to a speedy trial. The Legislature by the enactment of section 1382 quantified and implemented this right by establishing specific limits on the time during which a trial must take place." (Arreola v. Municipal Court (1983) 139 Cal. App. 3d 108, 113.)

Penal Code section 1382(a)(3)(A) provides that a defendant who is in custody may waive the 30-day time limit. A defendant may request or consent to the setting of a trial date beyond the 30-day limit. (Pen. Code § 1382(a)(3)(B).) However, "[i]f the defendant is not represented by counsel," the defendant shall not be deemed under this section to have consented to the date for the defendant's trial unless the court has explained to the defendant his or her rights under this section and the effect of his or her consent." (Pen. Code § 1382(c), emphasis added.)[2]

[1] A defendant who is charged with a misdemeanor "in all other cases" must be brought to trial within 45 calendar days of arraignment or plea, whichever occurs later.

The commission concluded that Judge Roeder abdicated his judicial responsibility to ensure the rights of criminal defendants by his practice at felony and misdemeanor arraignment proceedings of stating, for the record, that defendants had waived their rights to have a preliminary examination or misdemeanor trial within applicable time limits, without properly obtaining the defendants' consent to a waiver of those rights, in the manner prescribed by law.

In Oberholzer v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1999) 20 Cal.4th 371, the California Supreme Court held: "[A] judge who commits legal error which, in addition, clearly and convincingly reflects bad faith, bias, abuse of authority, disregard for fundamental rights, intentional disregard of the law, or any purpose other than the faithful discharge of judicial duty is subject to investigation." (Oberholzer v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 20 Cal.4th at p. 398, original italics.) Judge Roeder's practices at arraignment were clearly legal error and represent a disregard for the statutory and constitutional rights of the defendants.

Judge Roeder, in his response to the commission's preliminary investigation letter, did not deny having maintained the practices regarding time waivers, as described above, at arraignment proceedings, nor did he state that he was unaware of the requirements of the relevant statutes. He explained that the public defender or private counsel "routinely need time" to open files and investigate cases and that it "was/is" counsel's practice either not to schedule a preliminary examination or misdemeanor jury trial until the case was "conferenced." Judge Roeder's motivation thus appears to have been a desire to accommodate defense counsel, and that this was accomplished at the expense of the statutory rights of defendants to a speedy preliminary examination or trial.

In 1996, the California Supreme Court adopted the commission's recommendation for public censure of Judge Claude Whitney, holding that the evidence supported the commission's findings, including that the judge had "abdicated his responsibility to protect the statutory and constitutional rights of defendants in certain respects" during arraignment proceedings. (In Re

---

[2] In People v. Byrd (1991) 233 Cal.App.3d 806, at pp. 810-811, the court observed: "Penal Code section 1382 subdivision (d) [now subdivision "(c)"] mandates that courts inform defendants appearing without representation of their speedy trial rights. This would include informing defendants of their rights pursuant to that entire section." The court went on to say:

> Cases discussing the [trial] court's failure to explain speedy trial rights are usually in the context of writ proceedings dealing with misdemeanor charges. These cases conclude that the purpose of mandating that the court inform defendants of their speedy trial rights is to "ensure that a defendant without counsel would not waive [the defendant's] right to a speedy trial through ignorance or oversight . . . ." An in propria persona defendant does not waive such rights by failing to object below or by failing to object after counsel is appointed. Further, the record must indicate the court complied with its obligations; "a mere entry in the court's docket' is not enough to show consent." (Citations omitted.)

Whitney (1996) 14 Cal.4th 1, 2-3.) The court accepted the commission's finding that Judge Whitney, "as a matter of routine practice in the conduct of the in-custody misdemeanor arraignment calendar," failed to (a) "exercise his judicial discretion to consider release of defendant's on their own recognizance," (b) "consider grants of probation or concurrent sentencing for defendant's pleading guilty or no contest at arraignment," (c) "appoint counsel to assist defendants at the arraignment itself," and, (d) "as required by law, to inform defendants pleading guilty of the negative consequences a conviction could have on a noncitizen with regard to immigration." (*In re Whitney, supra,*15 Cal.4th at p. 3.) The court also accepted the commission's determination that Judge Whitney's practice of refusing to appoint counsel to assist indigent defendants at the arraignment itself constituted willful misconduct. The court concluded, however, that the remaining practices "constituted, at most, conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice. (Ibid.) In mitigation, the court noted that the record showed that Judge Whitney was considered a "diligent and hard-working" judge, and that he had other laudatory traits. (E.g., that he was "generally well regarded among the bench and bar," and that he had "good relationships" with court staff.) In addition, the court found that the judge "ha[d] since improved his conduct and acknowledged he erred in several respect," that the charged misconduct ceased in 1992, and that he "responded honestly and appropriately to the commission's inquiry and disciplinary proceedings." (Ibid.)

In 1998, Judge Christopher J. Sheldon received a public admonishment for, among other conduct, leaving the bench during the misdemeanor calendar and for allowing court clerks, in his absence, to enter pleas and execute court documents imposing sentences, to enter continuances agreed to by the attorneys, and to set hearing dates. (Inquiry Concerning Judge Christopher J. Sheldon, No. 142, Decision and Order of Public Admonishment.) For some of the pleas entered in his absence, Judge Sheldon allowed the clerks to stamp his signature on the defendants' constitutional rights waiver forms and plea forms, even though the judge had not reviewed the forms, questioned the defendant, or made any of the purported findings. Among the factual findings recited in the commission's Decision and Order were that "[d]efense counsel and the prosecutor liked Judge Sheldon's method of handling the pretrial calendar and believed the pleas entered under the system were valid," and that "[a]pparently, no legal challenge ha[d] been made to a plea entered under Judge Sheldon's procedures." The commission concurred in the Special Masters conclusion that Judge Sheldon's actions did not constitute willful misconduct, instead finding that his conduct constituted conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute. The commission noted Judge Sheldon's contentions that he "did not think that the procedures violate the law" and that he was "motivated by a desire to make the pretrial calendar run more efficiently, and that he promptly changed his procedure after being counseled by the supervising judge." Nonetheless, the commission concluded that a public admonishment was appropriate discipline because, among other reasons, Judge Sheldon "abandoned his fundamental responsibilities to be on the bench to preside over cases when they are adjudicated in his court" and because his "practice of allowing his courtroom clerks to stamp his signature on [constitutional rights waiver forms] when he never saw the files, created inaccurate and misleading court records."

Judge Roeder's conduct, at a minimum, constituted improper action under article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution. The judge's actions, as set forth above, violated canons 1 ("A judge shall uphold the integrity and independence of the judiciary"), 2A ("A judge shall respect and comply with the law and shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality"), and 3B(2) ("A judge shall be faithful to the law regardless of partisan interests, public clamor, or fear of criticism, and shall maintain professional competence in the law").

The commission concludes that issuance of a public admonishment is required for at least three reasons. First, Judge Roeder abdicated his judicial responsibility to ensure the rights of criminal defendants by his practice at felony and misdemeanor arraignment proceedings of stating, for the record, that defendants had waived their rights to have a preliminary examination or misdemeanor trial within applicable time limits, without properly obtaining the defendants' consent to a waiver of those rights, in the manner prescribed by law. Second, for at least one year, the public observed Judge Roeder state for the record at arraignment that defendants had waived their statutory rights to a speedy preliminary examination or misdemeanor trial without soliciting or obtaining any input from the defendants. Third, this practice created inaccurate and misleading court records, reflecting that defendants had waived their right to have a preliminary examination or misdemeanor trial within applicable time limits when, in fact, the defendants had not consented to the purported waiver.

In mitigation, the commission notes Judge Roeder's statements "acknowledg[ing] the error" and that as of April 2002, he has altered his arraignment practice by asking each defendant if he or she "personally agree[s]" with the time waiver.

Commission members Judge Risë Jones Pichon, Justice Vance W. Raye, Mr. Marshall B. Grossman, Judge Frederick P. Horn, Mr. Michael A. Kahn, Mrs. Crystal Lui, Mrs. Penny Perez, and Ms. Barbara Schraeger voted to impose a public admonishment Mr. Jose C. Miramontes did not participate in this matter. There are currently two public member vacancies on the commission.

This decision and order shall constitute the order of public admonishment.

Dated: December 16, 2003

Risë Jones Pichon

Honorable Risë Jones Pichon
Chairperson

STATE OF CALIFORNIA

BEFORE THE COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

| | |
|---|---|
| IN THE MATTER CONCERNINGJUDGE FRANCISCA P. TISHER | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSINGPUBLIC ADMONISHMENT |

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge Francisca P. Tisher, a judge of the Napa County Superior Court since June 1998. She was previously a judge of the Napa County Municipal Court from May 1995 to June 1998. Her current term began in January 2003. Following the appearance of Judge Tisher and her attorney, Mr. James A. Murphy, on March 30, 2004, pursuant to rule 116 of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance, and good cause appearing, the Commission on Judicial Performance issues this public admonishment pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution, based upon the following Statement of Facts and Reasons:

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

On the afternoon of October 3, 2002, Judge Tisher was sent an e-mail message by a commissioner of her court concerning a family law case, Maroney v. Ruiz, then being handled by the commissioner.

Maroney v. Ruiz involved a couple who had divorced in Texas; the father had moved to New Jersey and the mother had moved to California. In February 2002, the parties stipulated in the Napa County Superior Court that the parties would take certain actions and that California would retain jurisdiction over custody issues. However, in July 2002, the father asked the New Jersey court to assume jurisdiction over the custody dispute. The New Jersey court did assume jurisdiction, on August 30, 2002, but the order assuming jurisdiction was stayed by a New Jersey appellate court on September 5, 2002. After the stay went into effect, the New Jersey trial court judge communicated with the California commissioner handling the case, and the commissioner agreed to prepare an order declining California's jurisdiction. On October 3, 2002, while the New Jersey appellate court's stay was still in effect, the father removed one of the children from school in California and took him back to New Jersey, without notifying the mother or school officials. The police, Napa Child Abduction Unit, and FBI were contacted. Later that day, the commissioner sent Judge Tisher the e-mail message mentioned above.

The e-mail message the commissioner sent to Judge Tisher on the afternoon of October 3 read, "The judge in New Jersey asked me to prep an order declining jurisdiction. Here is what I have written. I forgot to do it and now someone came and picked up the kid and it sounds like it is going to heat up but I would like to have it heat up in NJ." Judge

Tisher replied on October 4 at 9:45 a.m. She wrote, "It looks fine. I don't exactly know what you mean by the sentence 'The law of venue jurisdiction differs from venue for custody and visitation and that issue is not yet upon us.'" The commissioner replied one minute later, at 9:46, "The rules for child SUPPORT are different from the rules for CUSTODY. It is entirely possible Napa will be the appropriate jurisdiction for child support." A minute later, at 9:47, Judge Tisher e-mailed the commissioner, "OK. We'll keep it in. [A clerk] is in my office and I'll tell her to fax it off." The commissioner replied one minute later, at 9:48, with the fax number, and added, "They are waiting by the fax for it in NJ. Also [the mother's attorney] has an ex parte for today in this case and she is not stipping to a Commish."

The order was then signed by the commissioner, dated September 30, 2002, and file-stamped September 30, 2002. A copy was transmitted by fax to New Jersey.

Later the same morning (October 4), Judge Tisher presided over the ex parte hearing set by counsel for the mother. The transcript of that hearing shows that Judge Tisher called the case before the father's attorney arrived, and stated to the mother's attorney:

> THE COURT: …I have had a chance to review the order to show cause for modification of child custody, visitation, attorneys fees and costs and immediate return of the child and other orders and the injunctive order.

(10/4/02 R.T. 3:21-24.)

Shortly thereafter, Father's attorney arrived, and Judge Tisher said:

> THE COURT: What I was indicating is that I understand that we have some serious issues here and I have had a chance to look at the paperwork and I'm not sure that you have.
>
> MR. ROTHSCHILD [Father's attorney]: I have not.
>
> THE COURT: I also have the file in front of me, which indicates that there was an order filed by Commissioner Boyd on September 30th, 2002. I don't know if you both have copies of that, but it is an order where she declined jurisdiction.
>
> MS. RICHARDS: I have never received that, your Honor.
>
> MR. ROTHSCHILD: Nor have I.
>
> THE COURT: Okay.
>
> MR. ROTHSCHILD: And--
>
> THE COURT: I don't see the proof of service attached to this.

(10/4/02 R.T. 5:1-17; emphasis added.)

A short time later, Judge Tisher stated that she was not going to make any orders that day, and asked mother's counsel what she would like to do. After the attorney began to reply, Judge Tisher interrupted the attorney and stated:

> THE COURT: I'm not going to make an order when one was made September 30th, the order having the child returned. It looks like the child was just taken to New Jersey. I'm not saying it's right or wrong and I understand that your client would like to have the matter resolved one way or the other, but certainly I cannot do that on an ex parte.

(10/4/02 R.T. 7:9-15; emphasis added.)

Mother's counsel then asked that the matter be put on calendar for the following Monday. Judge Tisher responded:

> THE COURT: One of my problems is that I have an order here in the court file from September 30th indicating that jurisdiction has been declined by the Superior Court of California, County of Napa. So I think this really goes back as to how you wish to proceed.

(10/4/02 R.T. 8:9-13; emphasis added.)

At the time that she presided at the October 4 hearing, Judge Tisher knew that the order declining jurisdiction had been signed and filed earlier that same morning, not on September 30, 2002. During the hearing, she made misleading statements repeatedly indicating to the parties that the order had been filed on September 30, 2002. The making of these misleading statements was contrary to canon 2A of the Code of Judicial Conduct, which provides that judges should conduct themselves at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary.

Commission members Justice Vance W. Raye, Mr. Marshall B. Grossman, Judge Frederick P. Horn, Mr. Michael A. Kahn, Mr. Jose C. Miramontes, Mrs. Penny Perez, Judge Risë Jones Pichon, and Ms. Barbara Schraeger voted to impose a public admonishment. Mrs. Crystal Lui did not participate in this matter. There is currently one public member vacancy on the commission.

Dated: April 8, 2004

_____

Honorable Vance W. Raye
Chairperson

STATE OF CALIFORNIA

BEFORE THE COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

| | |
|---|---|
| IN THE MATTER CONCERNINGFORMER JUDGE ROBERT M. LETTEAU | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSINGPUBLIC ADMONISHMENT |

This disciplinary matter concerns former Judge Robert M. Letteau, previously a judge of the Los Angeles County Superior Court from his appointment on January 27, 1982 until his retirement effective September 10, 2002. Following the appearance of Judge Letteau and his attorney, Mr. Edward P. George, Jr., on May 11, 2004, pursuant to rule 116 of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance, and good cause appearing, the Commission on Judicial Performance issues this public admonishment pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution, based upon the following Statement of Facts and Reasons:

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

For the reasons set forth below, the commission found that Judge Letteau engaged in misconduct while presiding over two matters between 1998 and 2000: an attorney's motion for fees in the Conservatorship of Feist, and the court trial in Condon v. Mazza. The Court of Appeal reversed both matters.

The commission further found that Judge Letteau's misconduct in the Feist and Condon v. Mazza matters was similar to conduct between 1996 and 2001 in three other matters for which the judge was privately admonished in 2002. Accordingly, the commission concluded that Judge Letteau's misconduct warrants this notice of intended public admonishment.

1. Attorney Fees Award in Conservatorship of Feist

Background

Beginning in 1998, Judge Letteau presided over Conservatorship of Feist (SP003455). Conservatee Feist was 79 years old and suffering from memory dysfunction and dementia. His family was concerned that he was being verbally and emotionally abused, inadequately cared for and financially exploited by Lee Lane, a woman who had been living in his home for two years. Family members retained attorney Marc Hankin, who specializes in probate work, to file a petition for conservatorship. Professional conservator Frumeh Labow was appointed as conservator of the person and estate of Mr. Feist. A Probate Volunteer Panel (PVP) attorney, Irving Goldring, was also appointed to independently represent Mr. Feist.

Over the next twenty-four months, contentious litigation between Conservator Labow and Ms. Lane ensued. Labow sought orders to compel Lane to account for her use and management of Feist's assets, to obtain discovery from Lane, to set aside durable powers of attorney obtained by Lane, and to annul a September 1997 marriage between Lane and Feist. Ms. Labow also opposed attempts by Lane to retain private counsel to represent Feist and to remove Labow. In March 1999, the parties reached a settlement of their various claims, which was later set aside. After additional negotiations a new settlement was reached and approved by the court in April 2001.

In December 1999, Conservator Labow filed an accounting and a request for conservator's fees in the amount of approximately $25,000, and attorney fees and costs to Mr. Hankin in the amount of approximately $63,820. Labow later supplemented her accounting to request additional conservator's fees of approximately $24,397 for the period September 1, 1998 through December 31, 1999. Mr. Hankin supported the attorney fees request with a declaration that included approximately 50 pages of time records detailing approximately 275 hours of attorney and paralegal services and compensation paid to consult with legal experts in other specialties.

Mr. Hankin's declaration included a section entitled "Public Policy Issues" that contained five paragraphs of comments critical of what Hankin characterized as the Los Angeles Probate Court's "practice" of "cutting" the fees requested by conservators and their attorneys, particularly in protracted litigation. Hankin asserted that because of this practice attorneys "expect" to be denied their normal hourly rate, "do not trust" judges to award adequate fees in protracted litigation, and are discouraged from vigorously representing their clients. This, he asserted, was a potent "weapon in the arsenal of those people who abuse the elderly for profit as a regular business practice."

Attorney Goldring recommended approval of the conservator's accounting and approval of the full amount of fees requested by Labow and Hankin. Judge Letteau approved Ms. Labow's fee request at a hearing on June 2, 2000. As to Mr. Hankin's fee request, however, the judge first deferred decision to the end of the hearing, stating that "it is going to take some considerable time . . . ." (6/2/00 R.T. p. 3:2.) The judge then indicated as to the attorney fees "there are a lot of things that I need to know about. And it may well be that I am never going to approve it. In fact, I have to tell you, I doubt I am going to ever approve the request made for $62,000 in fees." (6/2/00 R.T. p. 3:18-28.)

Judge Letteau also referred to the public policy statements in Mr. Hankin's declaration, which the judge characterized as "really ascrib[ing] elder abuse to the court" (6/2/00 R.T. p. 4:4-5), and which the judge said were "not fair" (6/2/00 R.T. p. 4:5-6). After continuing the hearing to accommodate the schedules of Mr. Goldring and Ms. Labow, the judge sought to engage Mr. Hankin in a discussion of the public policy issues, and stated his intention to "circulate" Mr. Hankin's declaration "so it can be considered by my colleagues on the bench." (6/2/00 R.T. p. 8:8-10.)

When Mr. Hankin appeared before Judge Letteau on another case a week later (June 9, 2000), the judge brought up Feist, saying he "hadn't decided" what to do about the fee request. The judge asked Mr. Hankin if he could speak with retired Judge Irving Shimer (who initially handled the case), and invited Mr. Hankin to submit the name of a proposed referee to speak with Judge Shimer. Mr. Hankin noted that conservator Labow and attorney Goldring were absent and had no notice of Judge Letteau's proposals, stating "this is sort of ex parte without [Mr. Goldring] being present." (6/9/00 R.T. pp. 2:28-3:7.) Judge Letteau agreed to defer the matter to the next Feist hearing on June 23: "Okay. Tell you what we'll do. You come in on whatever the date is, and we'll have the same discussion then. That's fine. I don't mind. I was trying to save you some time. [¶] . . . Don't expect that there are going to be substantive decisions made on your 60-some thousand dollar fee request on the scheduled date. [¶] . . . Go back to square one, Mr. Hankin." (6/9/00 R.T. p. 3:8-18.)

At the June 23 hearing in Feist, Judge Letteau referred to the conversation on June 9, stating that Mr. Hankin was "less than enthusiastic" about his request to speak with Judge Shimer. (6/23/00 R.T. p. 16:10-11.) Mr. Hankin said, "[Y]ou were asking me to do that on an ex parte communication that was not proper. I felt I should communicate with [Mr. Goldring and Ms. Labow] beforehand." (6/23/00 R.T. pp. 16:28-17:2.) Judge Letteau responded, "I don't see how [Goldring's] client, who is the conservatee, would be adversely affected." (6/23/00 R.T. p. 17:5-6.) Ms. Labow and Mr. Goldring then reiterated their support for Mr. Hankin's fee request. Judge Letteau stated that he would not speak with Judge Shimer in light of "this personal animus by Mr. Hankin towards the court, which I'm willing to ignore":

> COURT: . . . It would have been my preference, and with almost anybody else that hadn't personalized this, I would have simply called Judge Shimer and listened to what he had to say. After hearing further remarks by Mr. Hankin today, I absolutely would not talk to Judge Shimer about this case because I think whatever I then did would be subject to very possible mischaracterization, unless I simply awarded Mr. Hankin all of his fees. So I've made the decision since we've had this long discussion, that I will not ever talk to Judge Shimer about this case, even though I think it might have been helpful, productive and constructive. And we'll probably do it in virtually every other situation where there didn't seem to be this personal animus by Mr. Hankin towards the court, which I'm willing to ignore. (6/23/00 R.T. p. 22:1-17.)

Mr. Hankin responded that he had no objection to Judge Letteau questioning Judge Shimer, for whom he had "the highest respect," so long as they did not meet ex parte. (6/23/00 R.T. p. 23:5-9.)

Also at this hearing, Judge Letteau requested a list of proposed referees to review Mr. Hankin's fee request. Mr. Hankin stated that he would object should the judge appoint retired Judge Edward M. Ross, whom he had previously sought to disqualify. Judge Letteau responded, "I hadn't thought about Judge Ross, but since you mention it, that would be one possibility. Feel free to submit his name . . . ." (6/23/00 R.T. pp. 18:28-19:6.)

Judge Letteau also directed Mr. Hankin to further support his fee request by filing, by August 1, a "brief synopsis of what was accomplished" at each of his appearances in Feist. (6/23/00 R.T. p. 12:6-7.) When Mr. Hankin objected that he would need to obtain costly transcripts, the judge responded "That's your decision." (6/23/00 R.T. p. 15:13.) The matter was continued to August 18.

Following the hearing, Mr. Hankin and Mr. Goldring jointly submitted a list of proposed referees that did not include Judge Ross. On July 10, Judge Letteau appointed one person on the list of proposed referees, and also appointed Judge Ross as "second referee/special master." Mr. Hankin filed a peremptory challenge against Judge Ross, which Judge Letteau rejected on July 20. Mr. Goldring then objected to Judge Ross. On July 25, Judge Letteau vacated his order appointing the referees, stating that he would rule on the fee request "in due course."

On July 26, 2000, Mr. Hankin filed an objection to Judge Letteau deciding the fee matter without a hearing, as well as a motion to disqualify Judge Letteau on grounds of bias. (The disqualification motion was later re-filed after the judge advised it had not been properly served.) On August 1, Mr. Hankin filed the synopsis of appearances that Judge Letteau had requested on June 23. On August 18, Judge Letteau struck as untimely and insufficient Mr. Hankin's re-filed motion to disqualify him from hearing the fee motion. The matter was continued for four months to December 15.

As of December 14, 2000, Judge Letteau had not ruled on the fee request for almost a year. The judge also had not ruled on Mr. Hankin's request for a hearing for more than four months. Mr. Hankin amended his fee request to include interest occasioned by the delay, with a new total of about $67,420.

Prior to the December 15 hearing date, Mr. Hankin learned the hearing was to be continued because the file was missing. He contacted the court's probate attorney, who agreed to Mr. Hankin's request that the new hearing date be January 19, 2001, because Mr. Hankin was going to be out of town on vacation. On December 15, attorney Goldring was present but Mr. Hankin was not, because he believed the matter had been continued. Judge Letteau noted that circumstance but said he would continue the matter only to December 22, whether Mr. Hankin could attend or not: "[I]t's a fee order. Everything else has already been resolved. There needn't be any discussion. I can even make the order now, but I'm willing to put it over a week. If [Mr. Hankin] can be here, fine. If he can't, it won't make any difference." (See Opinion in Appeal B149324 at pp. 13-14.)

On December 20, Mr. Hankin submitted an ex parte motion seeking to continue the hearing until a date in January. Judge Letteau denied it, advising Mr. Hankin to the effect that, "No, we're really not going to have a lot of discussion [at the December 22 hearing]. This is going to be a time for decision and not debate, so there's no reason to continue it." (See 12/22/00 R.T. p. 1:19-22.)

On December 22, Mr. Goldring was present but Mr. Hankin was not. Judge Letteau stated that Mr. Hankin, in his amended fee request, asserted that he had "saved Mr. Feist's life." Judge Letteau then commented on the fee request as follows:

> COURT: I appreciate that Mr. Hankin has possibly spent a lot of time on this. A lot of money has already been paid to the conservator . . . . [¶] . . . In terms of the life saving, I do have a hard time understanding the lawyer's role in that. I've read and I did at one time ask Mr. Hankin if I could talk to the Judge who was first involved, Judge Shimer. [Mr. Hankin] had some problems with that. [¶] I suggested because I know he feels that there's a personal problem between this court and Mr. Hankin that we . . . put into place a mechanism so this could be determined by a lawyer and a retired judge, and he recommended – I recommended [Judge] Ed Ross, and I would have been very happy to adopt whatever recommendation that he made. [¶] You [Mr. Goldring] objected to that, as you had every right to. So here we are . . . . (12/22/00 R.T. pp. 1:28-2:21.)

Judge Letteau then made his order allowing Mr. Hankin "all of his costs, $1,280.30, [and] fees of $11,134.71 . . . ." (12/22/00 R.T. p. 2:22-23.) Judge Letteau did not state any reason for reducing Mr. Hankin's fee request from $67,400 to $11,135 – a reduction of more than 80% – and did not issue a written explanation of his ruling.

In February 2001, Mr. Goldring filed a petition for fees of $28,025 (95 hours at $295 per hour) for the period from January 1999 through December 2000. Judge Letteau approved that request in full at the first hearing on the matter. Mr. Goldring had previously been awarded fees of $15,151. Thus, Mr. Goldring's compensation in Feist totaled $44,176, as compared to $11,135 to Mr. Hankin, and was awarded at an hourly rate of $295, in contrast to the hourly rate of $275 requested by Mr. Hankin.

Mr. Hankin appealed from the reduction of his fees, and attorney Goldring filed a letter stating he did not oppose the appeal and supported the request for fees. In December 2001, the Court of Appeal reversed and remanded the matter for further consideration in a different department of the superior court. The Court of Appeal concluded that Judge Letteau's "unexplained drastic reduction" of Mr. Hankin's fee request was "tainted by an evident bias against counsel and constitutes a clear abuse of discretion." (Opinion in Appeal B149324, at pp. 16-17.)

Findings

After a full review of the record, the commission found that Judge Letteau committed misconduct with respect to Mr. Hankin's fee request in Feist as follows.

A. Bias and Embroilment

A judge must "perform the duties of judicial office impartially and diligently" (Canon 3, Code of Judicial Ethics) and "perform judicial duties without bias or prejudice" (Canon 3B(5)). Further, a judge must "avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety in all the judge's activities" (Canon 2) and "act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary" (Canon 2A).

A judge who displays evident bias against one side of a case, or one who is so personally embroiled as to lose the ability to consider the matter in a neutral and objective manner, violates these canons. (See generally Rothman, California Judicial Conduct Handbook (2d ed. 1999) §§ 2.01, 2.03, 2.04, pp. 31-34; § 2.19, pp. 49-50; see also Kloepfer v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1989) 49 Cal.3d 826, 858-861 [misconduct included failure to remain objective, improper personal involvement, and distaste for a party that overrode judge's objectivity]; see also Furey v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1987) 43 Cal.3d 1297, 1311 [judge's in-court statement to defendants that judge would always believe testimony of a police officer found to be prejudicial misconduct]; Roberts v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1983) 33 Cal.3d 739, 748 [misconduct for judge to express legitimate concern in unacceptable, non-objective and non-neutral manner and to demonstrate unwarranted impatience, disbelief and hostility toward counsel, litigants and witnesses]; McCartney v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1974) 12 Cal.3d 512, 538 [vehement expressions of personal hostility improper even in face of clearly contemptuous conduct]; Inquiry concerning Judge James Randal Ross, No. 141 (1998) Decision and Order Imposing Public Censure, at pp. 9-10 [judge censured for improper threats of contempt and orders to appear based on judge's anger with one party].)

In its December 2001 decision reversing the reduced fee award, the Court of Appeal noted that:

> The one clear impression that emerges from this record is that there was palpable animosity between the trial court and Hankin. In his declaration in support of his request for fees, Hankin had raised the court's ire by stating that the court's practice of cutting fees is used as a weapon by those who abuse elders because they are encouraged to drag out the litigation while the conservators and their attorneys are discouraged from doing all that is necessary to protect the elderly victims. The trial court took this outspoken commentary as a personal affront and stated that Hankin was ascribing elder abuse to the court, even saying that the court would circulate Hankin's remarks to other judges.
>
> Although Hankin's commentary was accusatory and immoderate, he was nonetheless entitled to have his fee request decided by an unbiased court. The court's thinly veiled hostility toward Hankin was manifest: the court said from the outset that it doubted it would ever approve the fee request for $62,000; the > court appointed as one of two referees the very person to whom Hankin specifically objected; . . . the court inordinately delayed decision of the fee request for a full year; and ultimately the court refused to continue the hearing on the matter for even a few weeks to give Hankin an opportunity to appear and be heard. (Opinion in Appeal B149324, at pp. 16-17.)

The commission concluded that from June 2, 2000 forward, Judge Letteau repeatedly made oral and written statements displaying hostility and animosity toward Mr. Hankin that apparently arose, at least in part, from the judge's reaction to the material in Mr. Hankin's fee request that criticized the probate court's overall handling of attorney fees requests in cases involving possible elder abuse.

The reduction in Mr. Hankin's fees cannot be justified on the theory that Mr. Hankin's $275 hourly rate exceeded the court's maximum allowable rate for PVP attorneys, as Judge Letteau has urged. The local rules of the court do not specify a maximum compensation rate for private counsel or for PVP attorneys appointed at the expense of the conservatee's estate. Further, in the same litigation, Judge Letteau approved Mr. Goldring's fees in full based on an hourly billing rate that was $20 per hour higher than Mr. Hankin's rate. Judge Letteau also approved without question or reduction Ms. Labow's request for fees for her own services. Only Mr. Hankin's fee request – at an hourly rate lower than Mr. Goldring's – was criticized and reduced by over 80% with no statement by Judge Letteau of factual grounds for that different treatment.

Judge Letteau defended his reduction of Mr. Hankin's fees before the commission on the ground that the fee request was "overreaching." However, both Ms. Labow, the conservator, and Mr. Goldring, the PVP attorney appointed by the court to independently monitor the actions of the conservator and protect Mr. Feist's interests, agreed that Mr. Hankin's request for fees was reasonable. (See Probate Code § 2642(b).) Moreover, Judge Letteau did not tell Mr. Hankin that overreaching was suspected, did not conduct a hearing on the issue, and made no determination that overreaching had occurred or that any specific amount was attributable to overreaching or services for which compensation was not justified. To the contrary, Judge Letteau never stated any reason or basis for the reduction of more than 80% in the amount of fees awarded to Mr. Hankin.

Further, Judge Letteau's suggestion that his conclusion was justified because he had reduced Mr. Hankin's fees in previous probate matters only strengthens the commission's conclusion that the judge acted with bias and was personally embroiled with Mr. Hankin. Judge Letteau has never articulated any reason for concluding that the fees requested in Feist – which were approved by conservator Labow and attorney Goldring – were excessive or unwarranted.

B. Decisional Delay

The commission also concluded that Judge Letteau inordinately delayed decision of Mr. Hankin's fee request. A judge has an obligation to dispose of all matters "fairly, promptly, and efficiently." (Canon 3B(8).) Judge Letteau violated this obligation when he failed to complete the hearing and issue a ruling on Mr. Hankin's fee request for a full year after the request was filed.

The record of the Feist matter contains numerous indications that Judge Letteau's failure to act promptly on Mr. Hankin's request for fees was due to the judge's annoyance with Mr. Hankin rather than the need to ensure the fairness of the judicial process. At the initial hearing on the fee request on June 2, 2000, Judge Letteau made it clear that discussion of the fee request would "take some considerable time" and that even though Mr. Goldring had found the fees "satisfactory," the judge would "need to spend a lot of time talking about this." After referring to Mr. Hankin's "public policy statements" as "not fair," the judge then indicated some of his concerns about "what was done" and the value of the services compared to the million dollar value of the estate.

When Judge Letteau later raised Feist with Mr. Hankin in the absence of the other parties, the judge stated he hadn't decided what he would do, and indicated he would probably put it over "for a couple of months." After Mr. Hankin objected to the ex parte nature of the conversation, Judge Letteau responded with pique, telling Mr. Hankin: "Don't expect that there are going to be substantive decisions made on your 60-some thousand dollar fee request on the scheduled date. [¶] . . . Go back to square one, Mr. Hankin." (6/9/00 R.T. p. 3:13-18; emphasis added.)

Thereafter Judge Letteau appointed referees, including one to whom Mr. Hankin had specifically objected, then vacated the appointment only after Mr. Goldring objected. In the July 25, 2000 minute order, Judge Letteau stated he would rule on the fee request "in due course." When the matter was before Judge Letteau again on August 18, he continued it until December 15, 2000 – a date nearly four months later, and nearly a full year after the request for fees was filed – despite the pendency of Mr. Hankin's demand for a hearing pursuant to Probate Code sections 2640-2642.

Judge Letteau has given no persuasive reason why it required more than six months after the initial hearing on June 2 to obtain the information the judge deemed necessary to a fair and fully-informed decision on Mr. Hankin's fee request, why the materials filed by Mr. Hankin on August 1, 2000 were not sufficient, or why the judge's expressed concerns with the quality and necessity of the services rendered, as well as his desire to obtain Judge Shimer's recollection of earlier proceedings, were not addressed promptly. With respect to the appointment of referees, the commission notes that Judge Letteau's decision to appoint a referee to whom Mr. Hankin had specifically objected undermined any chance that the appointment of referees would expedite the handling of the fee request.

The judge's obligation under Canon 3B(8) to promptly dispose of all judicial matters does not depend on whether parties or attorneys complain to the judge about a delay. The obligation to ensure timely resolution of matters before the court rests not with parties or counsel, but with the judge. Judge Letteau violated this obligation when he failed to promptly dispose of Mr. Hankin's fee request.

C. Denial of Hearing on Fee Request

Pursuant to Probate Code sections 2640, et seq., Attorney Hankin was entitled to a hearing on his application for fees, in order to address any objections raised by the parties or the court. (See, e.g., Prob. Code §§ 2640(c), 2641(b), & 2642(b).) A hearing on the substance of the fee request was never held. Judge Letteau refused to address the substance of Mr. Hankin's fee request at either the June 2 or June 23, 2000 hearing. Upon denying Mr. Hankin's attempt to disqualify Judge Ross from serving as a referee, Judge Letteau stated his intention "to rule upon the Hankin fee request without further argument and following receipt of those supporting materials already requested along with any further documents necessary for the Court's information in rendering a fair and fully-informed decision." (7/20/00 Minute Order.)

Subsequently, when the fee request came before Judge Letteau on December 15, 2000, the judge refused to continue it to a date agreed to between Mr. Hankin and the court's research attorney after the loss of the court file necessitated a continuance. Instead, Judge Letteau set a hearing for December 22, 2000 – a date when he knew Mr. Hankin could not be present. A few days later, Judge Letteau denied Mr. Hankin's ex parte application for a brief continuance so that he would have an opportunity to be present and be heard. In refusing the date requested by Mr. Hankin on December 15, Judge Letteau revealed that he had already made up his mind and saw the hearing as a mere formality and not as an opportunity for Mr. Hankin to address the merits of the fee request: "There needn't be any discussion. I can even make the order now . . . . If [Mr. Hankin] can be here [on December 22], fine. If he can't, it won't make any difference." Judge Letteau made similar remarks when he again denied a continuance on December 20, stating that the purpose of the hearing on the fee request was "decision and not debate."

Thereafter, on December 22, 2000, at a hearing attended only by Mr. Goldring, Judge Letteau reduced Mr. Hankin's fees by more than 80% on the basis of factors that the judge did not articulate, and to which Mr. Hankin had no opportunity to respond. The commission agrees with the Court of Appeal, which found that Judge Letteau's decision to make an "unexplained drastic reduction of Hankin's fee request" after refusing to continue the hearing for even a few weeks to give Hankin an opportunity to appear and be heard was "tainted by an evident bias." (See Opinion in Appeal B149324, at pp. 16-17.)

D. Ex Parte Communication

Canon 3B(7) of the Code of Judicial Ethics requires a judge to "accord to every person who has a legal interest in a proceeding, or that person's lawyer, full right to be heard according to law" and prohibits a judge from initiating, permitting or considering ex parte communications "concerning a pending or impending proceeding . . . ." When Judge Letteau attempted to engage Mr. Hankin in a discussion of the handling of the pending fee request in the Feist matter on June 9, 2000, in the absence of Ms. Labow and Mr. Goldring, he violated Canon 3B(7). Both the conservator (Ms. Labow through her counsel Mr. Hankin) and conservatee (Mr. Feist through his counsel Mr. Goldring) were entitled to be heard in proceedings relating to Mr. Hankin's fee request. (See Probate Code §§ 2640(b), 2642(a), 1460.)

It was improper for Judge Letteau to initiate a communication concerning the fee request without notice to Mr. Goldring, and outside of Mr. Goldring's presence, regardless of the fact the discussion occurred on the record in open court. (Canon 3B(7).) Nor does Judge Letteau's attempt to characterize the purpose of the communication as "procedural" ("I'm here to save you time and tell you what the procedure is going to be," R.T. p. 2:19-20), make the communication proper under Canon 3B(7)(3). The proposed appointment of a panel of referees was not a scheduling or administrative matter, but a new procedure that would have substantive impact on the conservatee and his estate because – as Judge Letteau later recognized – the cost of the referee or referees would be paid from the assets of the conservatee's estate. Moreover, there were no exigent circumstances that required the matter be addressed on an ex parte basis on June 9.

2. Trial of Condon v. Mazza

Background

In August 2000, Judge Letteau presided over a two-day court trial in a malicious prosecution action titled Condon v. Mazza (No. SC053182). The defendant, attorney Steven Mazza, had previously sued Michael Condon on behalf of an individual (Klein) who was injured in a nightclub ("The Pink"). Mazza's complaint alleged that Condon owned the club. Attorney Mazza initially secured a default judgment, but Condon, who in fact did not own the club, had that judgment set aside. Condon later prevailed on a summary judgment motion, and immediately sued attorney Mazza for malicious prosecution. Condon claimed damages to compensate him for his attorney fees in the first lawsuit, and for emotional distress. Condon also claimed punitive damages.

At the conclusion of the two-day trial, Judge Letteau found for Condon, awarding him $12,460 in attorney fees, $4,500 for emotional distress, and $17,500 in punitive damages. Mazza appealed. In November 2002, the Court of Appeal reversed on the ground that Mazza was not liable for malicious prosecution because he had probable cause to name Condon as the defendant when he filed the Klein lawsuit. (Opinion in Appeal B145458 at pp. 2, 9.) The appellate court remanded with directions that judgment be entered in favor of defendant Mazza.

In its decision, the appellate court noted Judge Letteau's treatment of defendant Mazza, which the court characterized as "unorthodox:"

> From the outset of trial the court was openly critical of Mazza's handling of the underlying action. The judge conducted extensive cross-examination of Mazza himself, challenged his testimony and argued with him throughout the brief proceedings. (Opinion, Appeal B145458 at pp. 3-4.)

The appellate court also noted that Judge Letteau awarded plaintiff attorney fees as compensatory damages despite plaintiff's testimony that a third party had paid his legal bills in the underlying lawsuit, awarded the plaintiff damages for emotional distress despite his testimony he had suffered no financial or other loss, and "perhaps most unorthodox," ordered defendant to testify about his net worth on the basis of an informal financial statement (prepared by hand in the courtroom), and awarded punitive damages on a finding that the defendant had "no net worth" and "lots of debt" but "the ability to borrow." (Opinion in Appeal B145458, at pp. 3-5.)

Findings

Canon 3 of the Code of Judicial Ethics imposes upon judges the obligation to perform the duties of judicial office impartially and diligently. Among the specific prescriptions of Canon 3 are the requirement that a judge "perform judicial duties without bias or prejudice" (Canon 3B(5)) and that a judge "be patient, dignified, and courteous to litigants . . . , witnesses, lawyers and others with whom the judge deals in an official capacity." (Canon 3B(4).)

Failure to comply with these obligations is misconduct. (E.g., Kloepfer v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 49 Cal.3d at 844-845; Roberts v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 33 Cal.3d at 748; McCartney v. Commission, supra, 12 Cal.3d at 533; Inquiry Concerning Judge Bruce Van Voorhis, No. 165 (2003).) After considering the full record of the matter, the commission concluded that Judge Letteau violated Canon 3 and committed misconduct in the trial of Condon v. Mazza as follows.

A. Prejudgment and Advocacy

Judges may examine witnesses appearing before them, but that power "must be exercised impartially . . . . [T]he judge should not appear to be an advocate." (California Judges Benchbook: Civil Proceedings -- Trial [Cal CJER 1997] § 5.55, pp. 234-235 [citations omitted]; see also, Rothman, California Judicial Conduct Handbook, supra, § 2.20 ["Although a judge has the inherent power to examine witnesses . . . , the judge cannot use these powers in a manner that compromises his or her impartiality"].) In McCartney v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications, supra, 12 Cal.3d 512, the Supreme Court emphasized that, while judges may examine witnesses when it appears that counsel will fail to elicit "relevant and material testimony," they "may not . . . in the course of examining witnesses become an advocate for either party or cast aspersions or ridicule upon a witness." (McCartney v. Commission, supra, 12 Cal.3d at p. 533 [emphasis in original].) The court found that Judge McCartney's "extended examinations of witnesses [were] particularly destructive of the image of the court as an impartial forum for the determination of truth." (Ibid.) In Kloepfer v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 49 Cal.3d 826, the Supreme Court found misconduct where a judge "did not limit himself to questions directed to eliciting clarifying testimony [but] told the witness his testimony did not make sense, and engaged in argumentative dialogue . . . ." (Id. at p. 845.)

The record of Condon v. Mazza shows that Judge Letteau failed to maintain impartiality in several instances.

(1) During re-direct examination of defendant Mazza

During trial, Judge Letteau focused on two aspects of Mazza's conduct in the Klein case that the judge concluded showed malice and lack of probable cause to maintain the Klein action against Condon: (1) a collection letter Mazza sent to Condon after obtaining the default judgment, in which Mazza essentially threatened to ruin Condon by executing on all of his property to satisfy the default judgment; and (2) Mazza's failure to dismiss the action against Condon promptly when he learned through discovery after the default judgment was set aside that Condon had no ownership interest in The Pink. (See Opinion in Appeal B145458 at p. 8.) Judge Letteau also expressed considerable concern as to whether Mazza was justified in relying on conversations with an insurance adjuster for The Pink's insurer and a letter from the carrier addressed to Mr. Condon d.b.a. The Pink. (The appellate court held this was "information from which a reasonable attorney could conclude that Condon would be subject to liability under a premises liability theory as well as general negligence principles." Opinion in Appeal B145458 at p. 7.)

On the second day of trial, during re-direct examination of Mazza by plaintiff's attorney, Judge Letteau asked whether Mazza could "show me a single piece of paper that says that a Mr. Condon is the owner of this business?" (8/3/00 R.T. p. 8:7-8.) When Mazza responded there was no such document, Judge Letteau stated: "See, that's the problem you have, Mr. Mazza. Nobody told you he owned the business . . . . You didn't take reasonable efforts to make that determination. When you found out that he didn't own the business, you wouldn't let him go. That's the problem . . . ." (8/3/00 R.T. p. 8:12-18.) Later, when Mazza testified he had multiple conversations with people, Judge Letteau asked "Where are these people? Why haven't you brought them into the courtroom? . . . They're presumably the people that you need. Have you taken their deposition in this case? . . . Presumably you would have thought that these people might assist you in your defense of the claim. But as you didn't think to depose Mr. Condon . . . you haven't thought to bring into this courtroom the ammunition you might need to successfully defend yourself. So what you are telling me is hearsay. It's just words, and it's empty at that." (8/3/00 R.T. pp. 8:27-9:11.)

With these comments Judge Letteau essentially told Mazza the judge had determined it was not reasonable for Mazza to have relied on the insurer's letter, and that, in the judge's view, the defense Mazza had presented was inadequate because Mazza had not produced additional witnesses at trial. In doing so, Judge Letteau abandoned the impartial role of eliciting relevant and material testimony, and used the examination of Mazza to criticize the defense. The judge also indicated he had made up his mind on the disputed issue of whether Condon's reliance on the insurer's letter in the underlying Klein case was reasonable.

(2) Comments on damages prior to closing argument

Prior to closing arguments, Mazza's attorney, Silberman, objected to the lack of authentication of checks and billing records offered to prove Condon's claim for damages for attorney fees paid in the underlying Klein matter. Judge Letteau asked attorney Silberman what amount of fees he thought would have been reasonable, and then expressed the opinion that the attorney fees paid on behalf of Mr. Condon were "very reasonable" in amount "for what Mr. Lindblom had to deal with to extricate Mr. Condon from a situation that he never should have been in the first place." (8/3/00 R.T. p. 48:14-17.) Later that day, at the conclusion of the trial, Judge Letteau awarded Mr. Condon damages that included the full amount of attorney fees paid in the Klein matter, $12,460.

Judge Letteau's comment concerning the reasonableness of the fees paid on behalf of Condon indicated that the judge had made up his mind as to two disputed issues: liability and the attorney fees portion of plaintiff's damages. The comment was consistent with the damages awarded by the judge later that day. However, at the time Judge Letteau made the comment, he had not yet heard all of the evidence; after overruling Mazza's evidentiary objection, the judge permitted Mazza to reopen and examine Mr. Condon on his attorney fees in the Klein matter. Nor had the judge heard the arguments of either party's counsel on the issues of liability and damages. The matter was not yet submitted for decision. By making these comments before the completion of evidence and argument, Judge Letteau gave the appearance of advocacy on behalf of Condon and indicated he had prejudged the matter.

(3) Comments at beginning of defendant's closing argument

Mazza's attorney, Silberman, began his closing argument by asserting there was no proof of the malice element of malicious prosecution and no evidence supporting plaintiff's claim for damages. The court immediately interrupted with a question about the definition of malice, and then commented that Mazza's conduct has been "just carelessness, sloppiness." The judge then stated, "I disagree with Mr. Lindblom. I think the damages for his [client's] emotional distress are greater than $3,000. And I certainly intend to award damages greater than $3,000." (8/3/00 R.T. p. 66:7-13.) At the conclusion of the trial, the judge awarded Condon $4,500 for emotional distress.

Judge Letteau's statement of intent to award a specific amount in emotional distress damages – made at the beginning of defense counsel's closing argument – gave the appearance of prejudgment. As with the comments about the attorney fees portion of damages, these comments indicated that Judge Letteau reached a decision on the issues of liability and damages for emotional distress prior to completion of the trial.

B. Lack of patience, dignity and courtesy

Canon 3B(4) requires that a judge "be patient, dignified, and courteous to litigants . . . , witnesses, lawyers and others with whom the judge deals in an official capacity" (Canon 3B(4)). Sarcastic, demeaning or belittling comments toward a litigant or counsel are not consistent with the conduct required by Canon 3B(4). (See, e.g., Kennick v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1990) 50 Cal.3d 297, 323-327 [demeaning, rude, impatient and abusive behavior toward counsel, litigants and witnesses]; Roberts v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 33 Cal.3d at 748 [judge's expression of legitimate concern in unacceptable, non-objective and non-neutral manner, demonstrating unwarranted impatience, disbelief and hostility toward attorneys, litigants and witnesses]; Cannon v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1975) 14 Cal.3d 678, 703 [deliberate ridiculing of attorneys]; Inquiry Concerning Judge Bruce Van Voorhis, supra, No. 165 Decision and Order at pp. 10-13, 18, 20, 23 [ridicule, disparagement, belittling of counsel, giving an appearance of lack of impartiality].)

The commission found that on numerous occasions during the trial of Condon v. Mazza, Judge Letteau made remarks that were sarcastic, disparaging, belittling and discourteous to defendant Mazza and his counsel:

> (1) Judge Letteau interrupted the direct examination of defendant Mazza to question him concerning a collection letter he sent to Mr. Condon after the default judgment was entered: "No, no no. If you listen to the question, the question was, after you took your default judgment, did you send him a letter that preceded this totally classless, stupid letter that you sent them saying, 'We have a default judgment.' Two paragraphs. 'We're going to go after all your property'?" After Mazza answered "no," the judge continued: "This is one of the more offensive things I've seen a lawyer, presumably a college graduate, a law school graduate do. It's an embarrassment to the entire profession . . . ." (8/3/00 R.T. pp. 17:25-18:7.)
>
> (2) During Mazza's testimony on redirect examination, Judge Letteau took over the questioning and examined Mazza extensively about discovery he had failed to undertake in the Klein matter: "These are the depositions you never bothered to take, right?" After Mazza admitted he never took depositions, the judge commented "So does that mean that you didn't do anything towards trying to identify the assailant, ever?" and "You testified you were going to determine who did it when you took depositions, but you never took depositions?" Attorney Silberman attempted to interject a comment (". . . he didn't take depositions because he had a judgment") but the judge cut him off: "I'm doing the examination, but thank you anyway, Mr. Silberman." (8/3/00 R.T. pp. 32:16-33:4.)
>
> (3) When discussing the legal issue of malice with plaintiff's counsel, Judge Letteau commented on Mazza's defense in the Condon v. Mazza matter: "I might say, by the way, this defense of Mr. Mazza has been just about as careless and sloppy as his prosecution of the underlying case of Mr. Condon . . . . One of the problems is he was sloppy, he was careless, he was professionally negligent . . . ." (8/3/00 R.T. pp. 60:17-20, 61:25-26.)
>
> (4) When defense counsel Silberman commenced his closing argument on the issue of malice and general damages, Judge Letteau interrupted with a lengthy comment about defendant Mazza. The comments included lecturing attorney Silberman on the definition of the term, then stating: ". . . And I think I've been kind when I've said that he's [Mazza] – he was just careless in his practice, careless in the filing of this case . . . . And the real problem with this is, it's Mr. Mazza. It's his testimony . . . . But he was really, in a true sense, holding Mr. Condon hostage to this claim. That's offensive. It's improper. It rises to the level of malice . . . . That's wrongful. It's wrong for anybody. It's especially wrong for a lawyer, an officer of the court, a professional. This is awesome what he did . . . . This is just carelessness, sloppiness . . . ." (8/3/99 R.T. pp. 64:25-66:8.)
>
> (5) During direct examination of Mazza by plaintiff's counsel, Mazza's attorney objected to the use of the term "owner of a corporation" as vague and ambiguous, and stated, "There is really no such legal term as 'owner of a corporation.' There are –" Judge Letteau overruled the objection, stating that the question was "How do you determine who owns, meaning who owns shares in the corporation." Silberman noted that the question had not been phrased that way, and Judge Letteau retorted: "It's understood by the court, and, I'm sure, everybody in this courtroom . . . ." (8/3/00 R.T. p. 7:23-24.) The comment belittled attorney Silberman by suggesting that he did not understand a matter of common knowledge, and further suggested the judge viewed attorney Silberman as either incompetent or disingenuous.

(6) During the direct examination of defendant Mazza by plaintiff's counsel, Judge Letteau interrupted and questioned Mazza about his decision not to serve the complaint on the Briggs Trust, the owner of the building where The Pink was located. Mazza testified that his decision was reached after conversations with insurance company representatives, and Judge Letteau commented: ". . . you are taking your orders from the other side, so to speak?" When Mazza disagreed, Judge Letteau continued: "The insurance company gave you some information? . . . You don't represent the insurance company? . . . You don't take your orders from the insurance company? . . . And without having anything in writing, based on these alleged verbal conversations, you decided not to proceed with a named party. Is that right?" (8/3/00 R.T. pp. 15:23-16:20.)

In addition to reflecting a lack of impartiality, these comments violated the duty imposed by Canon 3B(4), which requires a judge to be patient, dignified and courteous to litigants and parties appearing before the judge.

3. Prior similar misconduct

The misconduct on which this public admonishment is based bears a striking similarity to conduct for which the commission has previously privately disciplined Judge Letteau. On February 14, 2002, Judge Letteau was privately admonished for conduct in three separate cases that included:

- In one matter, the appearance of prejudgment in favor of one party in remarks during trial at the conclusion of one witness's testimony: "I think you've acted with complete honor at your personal financial cost in bringing this ever so long ago to the court's attention" and "I think you're an entirely credible person for having taken the steps that you did at enormous personal financial cost . . . and I thank you for doing so."

- In that same case, abuse of authority by ordering a person who was not a party to the case to provide information to the court.

- In the second mater, denial of due process to a conservatee by failing to afford statutory protections – including the right to trial – at the hearing to impose a permanent conservatorship, improper ex parte communications with the conservatee's retained attorney and bias against that attorney. The conservatorship order was reversed on appeal.

- In the third matter, prejudgment and abuse of the sanctions power in the imposition of substantial sanctions (totaling in excess of $50,000) after a hearing at which the judge peremptorily announced his ruling at the outset of the hearing, then refused to permit the attorney to present contrary evidence or argument. The sanctions order was reversed on appeal.

Judge Letteau's handling of the matters included in the prior private discipline, and the two matters included here occurred over a span of six years and resulted in four appellate decisions reversing his orders. Three of the appellate decisions reversed Judge Letteau on grounds that he had displayed bias, prejudgment, abuse of the sanctions power, and/or disregard of the rights of parties or their attorneys.[1]

Taken together, the incidents described in the body of this admonishment, and those that were the subject of the prior private discipline, present a troubling pattern of repeated violation of ethical duties that are fundamental to the fairness, and the perceived fairness, of the judicial process. In the commission's view, the existence of a pervasive pattern of bias, prejudgment, ex parte communication, and abuse of judicial authority toward parties and attorneys warrants a public admonishment.

The conduct set forth above was at a minimum improper action.

Commission members Justice Vance W. Raye, Judge Frederick P. Horn, Mr. Michael A. Kahn, Mrs. Crystal Lui, Ms. Patricia Miller, Mr. Jose C. Miramontes, Mrs. Penny Perez, Judge Risë Jones Pichon, and Ms. Barbara Schraeger voted to impose a public admonishment. Mr. Marshall Grossman did not participate in this matter. There is currently one public member vacancy on the commission.

Dated: May 20, 2004

_____

Honorable Vance W. Raye
Chairperson

[1] The decision in Condon v. Mazza found that the judge had applied the wrong legal standard to determine the defendant's liability and did not reach additional issues raised on appeal.

[No. 171. Sept. 29, 2004.]

INQUIRY CONCERNING JUDGE JOSEPH W. O'FLAHERTY

SUMMARY

A disciplinary matter was brought concerning a superior court judge.

The Commission on Judicial Performance publicly admonished the judge. The commission concluded that the judge violated Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canons 1 and 2A, when he instructed potential jurors in one criminal case to lie during voir dire if they harbored racial bias and, in another case, invited potential jurors to violate their oath by telling them that, if they harbored racial animus, they could invent an excuse to get off the jury if necessary. The judge did not make any discrete ruling or decision that was legally incorrect. Rather, he gave a series of improper directives to the various jury panel members in the two cases. The judge's course of conduct was unjudicial, not mere legal error. The judge's conduct was shocking and astounding. Reversals of the two criminal convictions were required because of the violations of fundamental constitutional rights. The commission rejected the judge's argument that his instructions should not subject him to discipline because he was condoning lying only in limited or narrowly defined circumstances. It was inconceivable to the commission that any judicial complicity in any lying in any courtroom ever could be proper, no matter how laudable any other goal that the lying may be thought to advance. (Opinion by Marshall B. Grossman, Vice-chairperson.)

HEADNOTES

(1) Judges § 6—Disciplinary Proceedings—Clear and Convincing Evidence Standard.—In a judicial disciplinary proceeding, the clear and convincing evidence standard of proof applies to the inquiry. Evidence of a charge is clear and convincing so long as there is a high probability that the charge is true. The evidence need not establish the fact beyond a reasonable doubt.

(2) Judges § 6—Discipline—Prejudicial Conduct—Objective Observer.—Prejudicial misconduct by a judge includes acts that a judge undertakes in good faith, but which nevertheless would appear to an objective observer to be not only unjudicial conduct but conduct prejudicial to public esteem for the judicial office. It is not necessary that actual observers view the judge's conduct as prejudicial to the administration of justice; rather the appropriate standard is how an objective observer would view the judge's conduct.

(3) Judges § 6—Discipline—Potential Jurors—Instructions to Lie.—The judge violated Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canons 1 and 2A, and engaged in prejudicial misconduct, when he instructed potential jurors in one criminal case to lie during voir dire if they harbored racial bias, and instructed potential jurors in another criminal case to violate their oath by telling them that, if they harbored racial animus, they could invent an excuse to get off the jury if necessary. Code Civ. Proc., § 232, subd. (a), requires that before voir dire begins, prospective jurors must agree to accurately and truthfully answer under penalty of perjury all questions concerning their qualifications and competency to serve as trial jurors.

[Cal. Forms of Pleading and Practice (2009) ch. 317, Judges, § 317.85.]

(4) Judges § 6—Discipline—Misconduct Grounds.—Under Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (d), the Commission on Judicial Performance may discipline a judge for willful misconduct in office, conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute, and improper action.

(5) Judges § 6—Discipline—Willful Misconduct.—Willful misconduct by a judge is (1) unjudicial conduct that is (2) committed in bad faith (3) by a judge acting in his or her judicial capacity.

(6) Judges § 6—Discipline—Unjudicial Conduct—Code of Judicial Ethics—Public Confidence.—In order for the Commission on Judicial Performance to determine whether a judge's conduct is unjudicial, the conduct is measured with reference to the California Code of Judicial Ethics. The failure of a judge to comply with the canons suggests performance below the minimum level necessary to maintain public confidence in the administration of justice.

(7) Judges § 6—Discipline—Willful Misconduct—Prejudicial Conduct—Bad Faith.—A primary distinction between willful misconduct and prejudicial conduct is the presence or absence of bad faith. Unlike willful misconduct, prejudicial conduct does not require the presence of bad faith, but may occur when a judge, though acting in good faith, engages in conduct that adversely would affect the esteem in which the judiciary is held by members of the public who become aware of the circumstances of the conduct.

(8) Judges § 6—Discipline—Bad Faith.—A judge's reckless or utter indifference to whether judicial acts being performed exceed the bounds of the judge's prescribed power is a state of mind properly characterized as bad faith.

(9) Judges § 6—Discipline—Legal Error—Exceptions.—Mere legal error, without more, is insufficient to support a finding that a judge engaged in misconduct. The California Supreme Court has specified certain instances of conduct or circumstances that in addition to the legal error would support investigation and discipline by the Commission on Judicial Performance, namely, bad faith, bias, abuse of authority, disregard for fundamental rights, intentional disregard of the law, or any purpose other than the faithful discharge of judicial duty.

(10) Judges § 6—Discipline—Legal Error.—A judge may, through repeated legal error, commit acts that would lead to violations of the judicial canons.

(11) Judges § 6—Discipline—Unjudicial Conduct—Instructions to Lie.—Instructions to lie, however well intended, are incompatible with fundamental principles of the administration of justice. They constitute unjudicial conduct that is prejudicial to public esteem for the judicial office, and improper conduct by a judge that reflects an intentional disregard of the law, a disregard for fundamental rights, and an abuse of judicial authority.

(12) Judges § 6—Discipline—Public Confidence—Faithful Adherence to the Law.—The public expects and embraces the concept that a judge shall be faithful to the law. This is so fundamental to a system of justice that it serves as a basic cornerstone of public confidence. Where serious acts of misconduct that undermine public confidence take place in open court, public discipline is appropriate to assure the public that such actions are not condoned.

(13) Judges § 6—Lying in Court—Judicial Complicity.—Irrespective of the intended objective or any attenuating circumstances, judicial complicity in lying in a courtroom cannot be tolerated.

---

OPINION

GROSSMAN, Vice-chairperson.—This disciplinary matter concerns Judge Joseph W. O'Flaherty of the Placer County Superior Court. Judge O'Flaherty is represented by James A. Murphy, Esq., and Harlan B. Watkins, Esq., of Murphy, Pearson, Bradley & Feeney of San Francisco, California. The examiners for the commission are Jack Coyle, Esq., and Bradford Battson, Esq.

In section I, we set forth the masters' final report in its entirety and adopt it (except as noted in fn. 1, at p. 6, post) as the foundation for the commission's decision in this matter. In part II, we discuss Judge O'Flaherty's legal arguments concerning our authority to discipline him, followed in part III by the reasons for our determination to issue this public admonishment.

I

ADOPTION OF MASTERS' FINDINGS AND CONCLUSIONS

The special masters appointed by the Supreme Court are Hon. Sandra L. Margulies, Associate Justice, Court of Appeal, First Appellate District, Division One, Hon. Michael T. Garcia, Judge of the Superior Court of Sacramento County, and Hon. Donald Cole Byrd, Judge of the Superior Court of Glenn County. With the one exception noted hereafter, the commission hereby adopts the masters' final report, filed with the commission on May 20, 2004, as its own findings and conclusions. The following text of the masters' report constitutes the commission's own findings and conclusions.

"INTRODUCTION

"By its Notice of Formal Proceedings, the Commission on Judicial Performance (the Commission) has charged Placer County Superior Court Judge Joseph W. O'Flaherty with two counts each of willful misconduct in office, conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute, and improper action within the meaning of article VI, section 18 of the California Constitution.

"Having been appointed by the Chief Justice of the California Supreme Court to hear and take evidence in this matter, and having presided over a trial of the charges, the special masters submit this final report, containing findings of fact and conclusions of law, in accordance with rule 129(c) of the rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance.

"FINDINGS OF FACT

"Burden of Proof

(1) "The clear and convincing evidence standard of proof applies to this inquiry. (Geiler v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1973) 10 Cal.3d 270, 275 [110 Cal.Rptr. 201, 515 P.2d 1].) 'Evidence of a charge is clear and convincing so long as there is a "high probability" that the charge is true. [Citations.] The evidence need not establish the fact beyond a reasonable doubt.' (Broadman v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1998) 18 Cal.4th 1079, 1090 [77 Cal.Rptr.2d 408, 959 P.2d 715].)

"Count One: People v. Mello

"In December 1999, Judge O'Flaherty presided over a jury trial in the case of People v. Mello (Placer County Super. Ct. case No. 62-7093). (Judge Joseph W. O'Flaherty's Answer to Notice of Formal Proceedings (hereafter Answer), p. 1.) Ms. Mello, an African-American, was charged with second degree robbery and false imprisonment. Pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure section 232, subdivision (a), the prospective jurors were sworn to tell the truth during voir dire concerning their qualifications and competency.

"As a resident of Placer County for 23 years, Judge O'Flaherty has become familiar with the demographics of the county. According to the judge, the jury venire panels in 1999 were almost entirely Caucasian. His recollection is that during voir dire in the Mello case, the jury panel was overwhelmingly Caucasian, and Ms. Mello was the only African-American in the courtroom. Concerned that racial bias could impact the verdict, Judge O'Flaherty instructed the panel:

" 'Now, a touchy subject. Some of these voir dire issues are kind of touchy here. If you feel that an issue is so sensitive that you'd rather not answer it in front of all these people, we can arrange so that it would be the Court, myself, the two attorneys, the defendant and the court reporter, but some of these questions do need to be asked.

" 'All right. Here's a sensitive one. The defendant is African American. Okay. Almost everybody in this courtroom is white, Caucasian.

" 'Now, race simply does not—I don't want any racism in my court, which most of you know by now, but I go a little further than that.

" 'I recognize that most people in today's age don't want to raise their hand and say I am a bigot or I'm a racist. So what I'm going to do, if any of you have the slightest doubt that you might not, for racial reasons, be able to give this defendant a fair trial, I'm going to give you permission to lie.

" 'I want you to tell me—there's plenty of other reasons, which you as intelligent people know that you can dream up, how you will not—you can get out of sitting here.

" 'Okay. I want you to come up with something so that you can get out of sitting here. I don't want that issue to raise its head in this courtroom. All right. Can everybody assure me of that?'

"Judge O'Flaherty decided to give this instruction either on the morning of the trial or on the previous day. This was the first time he had given such an instruction. Although Judge O'Flaherty has previously presided over at least 10 jury trials involving minority defendants, he had no direct evidence that jurors had lied during voir dire to cover up their racial prejudice. He was, however, still concerned that some jurors might not acknowledge racial animus, and he wanted to give them a way to get off the jury. According to Judge O'Flaherty, rather than forcing jurors to 'choose between openly admitting racism or keeping quiet and erroneously being selected,' he told them to lie as a way of ensuring that race would not become an issue in the trial. Judge O'Flaherty testified that when he gave this instruction, he was looking for any kind of false excuse that would get the person with racial animus off the jury. Typical excuses jurors might give would be that they had a business to attend to or that the type of crime would engender prejudice on their part.

"Judge O'Flaherty gave a number of reasons for instructing the jurors to lie. One rationale for the instruction related to a prior case involving a minority defendant, in which a prospective juror admitted during voir dire that he did not think he could be fair ' "because the defendant is Mexican." ' According to Judge O'Flaherty, as the juror was leaving the courtroom, Judge O'Flaherty perceived that the remaining panel exhibited hostility toward the excused juror because of his racial bias. Judge O'Flaherty testified that another reason for the instruction was to emphasize to those jurors who did sit on the jury the importance of not considering race in their verdict. Finally, the judge explained that he had had conversations with criminal defense attorneys who complained that jurors in Placer County were not giving minority defendants a 'fair shake . . . .'[1]

[1] The masters concluded this sentence with the following clause: ". . . to the extent that concerns about jury bias were causing minority defendants to plead guilty." We do not find the evidence supports the inclusion of this clause. According to the evidence adduced, there was one actual instance where a defendant reportedly pled guilty because of an alleged fear of being unable to obtain a fair jury trial. Under questioning by the examiner, Judge O'Flaherty

"Judge O'Flaherty thought that the Mello trial was a ' "perfect storm" ' for the problem of a jury finding the defendant guilty due to [her] race. According to the judge, there were three elements which made the case a ' "perfect storm" ': (1) the defendant was of a different race than the jury; (2) the facts of the case were inflammatory; and (3) there was a perception in Placer County that criminals were invading the county to commit crimes.

"During a recess following the judge's instruction, defense counsel moved for a mistrial on the ground that the judge had tainted the jury panel by referring to Ms. Mello's race as African-American and then within a couple of minutes thereafter making reference to the O.J. Simpson trial. Defense counsel believed that connecting the two events prejudiced Ms. Mello's right to a fair trial. Although defense counsel did not object to the instruction standing alone, he cited to it during the course of argument in support of the mistrial. Judge O'Flaherty denied the motion for mistrial and also denied a motion to discharge the entire panel and replace it with a new one.

"Additional jurors were subsequently called during the afternoon session. Judge O'Flaherty informed them that if a sensitive question was asked, then any juror could request to answer the question privately in chambers with the judge, counsel, defendant, and court reporter present. Judge O'Flaherty then instructed the new jurors:

" 'Now, the defendant is African American. Okay. Obviously, racism has no place in the courtroom. I would like to see it have no place at all, but it's around, and so I don't want it in here.

" 'So when we go through this, I mean, I know that some people, unfortunately, still harbor some bigotry, and my job is definitely not to judge you jurors. I want to make that clear, and I'm not doing that; but on the other hand, like I said, bigotry cannot have any place in this courtroom.

" 'If you feel, if you have the slightest doubt that you can give the defendant a fair trial because of this reason, you can just come right out and say it.

" 'That would be one way to do it, but I recognize that this is—it's kind of insulting and embarrassing to raise your hand and say I'm a racist.

---

stated that this occurred after the Mello trial, and thus did not influence the instruction in Mello. The judge later placed the plea case as also having been after the Abbaszadeh trial (discussed post, at pp. 9–11)—thus precluding its having influenced his instructions in either case. Accordingly, for purposes of stating our own findings, we exclude this one clause on the ground it is not supported by the evidence.

" 'What I'd like you to do, and I will give you permission in this very narrow area, you can lie. You can say that—what I want you to do is to find some other reason to get excused.

" 'It doesn't take a rocket scientist to figure out how to get excused, if you put your mind to it, and I'd rather have you do that than sit on the jury if there's a problem in this area. Okay. Does everybody understand that?

" 'Is there anybody who feels, who is willing to say that they cannot or might not give the defendant a fair trial because of race? Anybody?'

"Judge O'Flaherty contended that he did not tell the jurors to lie directly about race or their racial feelings or animus. He denied that he gave jurors permission to lie about racial prejudice. The judge explained that he told the jurors that if they had a problem admitting racial animus, 'they could come in and have a chambers conference with me, and/or they could admit it directly.' Judge O'Flaherty testified that he told the jurors that 'if, and only if, . . . they could not admit this [racial animus] and would otherwise stay on the jury, . . . they should find some other excuse to get off the jury.'

"Despite Judge O'Flaherty's rationale for the instructions, he did, in fact, give the jurors permission to lie about racial prejudice, and his instructions conflicted with the jurors' oath to tell the truth pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure section 232, subdivision (a). The judge told the first group of jurors that 'if any of you have the slightest doubt that you might not, for racial reasons, be able to give this defendant a fair trial, I'm going to give you permission to lie.' The judge again repeated this instruction when he told the second group of jurors, 'I will give you permission in this very narrow area, you can lie.'

"Although the judge prefaced his remarks by announcing that if a juror would rather not answer a sensitive question in the courtroom, the juror could answer the question in chambers, this statement was not necessarily directed to the issue of racial bias and was superseded by the more specific instruction to lie about racial prejudice. Moreover, when Judge O'Flaherty told the jurors that sensitive matters could be discussed in chambers, he also stated, 'It will cause some pomp and circumstance, but I'll accommodate you if you feel that way.' This 'pomp and circumstance' remark had the effect of discouraging potential jurors from seeking an in-chambers meeting with the judge and no potential juror requested such a meeting.

"While Judge O'Flaherty claimed that he did not preclude voir dire by the lawyers on the subject[] of racial animus, and that he wanted the lawyers to ask questions about race, he nonetheless discouraged potential jurors from being introspective and taking an appropriate amount of time to assess their ability to be fair when he told the panel:

" 'Okay. I'll tell you folks the same thing I told the jurors up there. If you hesitate in your answer, these attorneys are going to go after you on it. Believe me. One hundred percent, they will go after you.

" 'Okay. So just a clue as to how to answer these questions.'

"This remark prohibited a full and honest response by the jurors by limiting the disclosure of vital information relevant to challenges for cause.

"Prior to instructing jurors that they could lie regarding racial animus, Judge O'Flaherty was unaware of any cases, statutes, or other authority that allowed a potential juror to make up an excuse in order to be dismissed from the jury. He had not consulted other judges regarding the propriety of giving such an instruction and had not heard of any other judge giving a similar instruction. It had never been suggested at a judicial education class attended by Judge O'Flaherty that judges should have jurors lie during voir dire. The established practice in Placer County, as throughout California, was to have jurors answer all questions truthfully during voir dire.

"At the conclusion of voir dire, no juror was excused because of racial bias. Judge O'Flaherty did not know whether any juror followed his instruction and made up an excuse to get off the jury.

"A jury was ultimately impaneled and Ms. Mello was convicted. Ms. Mello moved for a new trial on among other grounds that the instruction authorizing jurors to cover up any feelings of racial bias by lying was given in conjunction with a discussion of the O.J. Simpson case. Judge O'Flaherty denied the motion and Ms. Mello appealed.

"In April 2002, the Court of Appeal, by unanimous vote, reversed the conviction on the grounds that Judge O'Flaherty's instructions to prospective jurors to lie under oath during voir dire violated the defendant's rights under the United States and California Constitutions to a fair and impartial jury and to due process of law. (People v. Mello (2002) 97 Cal.App.4th 511 [118 Cal.Rptr.2d 523].)

"Count Two: People v. Abbaszadeh

"In February 2000, Judge O'Flaherty presided over a jury trial in the case of People v. Abbaszadeh (Placer County Super. Ct. case No. 63-1593). Mr. Abbaszadeh, an Iranian immigrant, was charged with grand theft by false pretenses and sale of securities by means of false statements or omissions. After the prospective jurors were sworn to tell the truth during voir dire pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure section 232, subdivision (a), Judge O'Flaherty told the jury panel:

" 'Now, you probably all know that race and nationality have no place in this courtroom. The very integrity of the system that has developed in the last several generations depends on that we keep this social problem at least out of the courtroom.

" 'Now, obviously being labeled a bigot or a racist, this sort of thing, is insulting to most people. And so it's entirely possible that if you harbor these types of feelings that you may not want to raise your hand and basically put a sign on yourself saying: I am a racist, etcetera.

" 'I don't want somebody who harbors those types of feelings sitting on this jury, for obvious reasons.

" 'So I would ask that you do whatever you have to do to get off the jury. And it's much more important, in my opinion, that you get off the jury, even if, you know, you have to answer my questions in such a way that you get off in some other way, then do it.

" 'Does everybody understand that?'

" 'Is there anybody in the 18 who has a slightest doubt that they can give the defendant in this case a fair trial or in any way consider his nationality or race or this sort of thing?

" 'Is there anybody who feels that way?'

"Judge O'Flaherty decided to give the instruction right before jury selection or during voir dire. After the instruction was given, one potential juror admitted that he had feelings of prejudice toward Mr. Abbaszadeh. This juror was excused. Unlike Mello, defense counsel did not object to the instruction.

"Judge O'Flaherty admitted that he was telling potential jurors that they could invent an excuse to get off the jury if necessary. The judge testified that the instruction 'was calling for them to lie as far as invent a false excuse if they were racist and there was no other way to handle it, yes. It was not telling them to lie about race.'

"As in Mello, Judge O'Flaherty decided to give the instruction to provide a biased juror with a way of getting off the jury without publicly admitting to racism or bias. At the time the judge gave the instruction, he did not believe the instruction was erroneous and he did not intend to violate the rights of criminal defendants.

"While the instruction in Abbaszadeh did not give potential jurors direct permission to lie as in Mello, nevertheless it invited potential jurors to hide their racial bias. Judge O'Flaherty told the jurors, '[Y]ou may not want to raise your hand and basically put a sign on yourself saying: I am a racist, etcetera.' He then told them to 'do whatever you have to do to get off the jury . . . even if . . . you have to answer my questions in such a way that you get off in some other way' than admitting racial bias. By instructing the venire in such a manner, the judge was impliedly giving potential jurors permission to lie in response to his question that immediately followed the instruction: 'Is there anybody in the 18 who has a slightest doubt that they can give the defendant in this case a fair trial or in any way consider his nationality or race or this sort of thing?' As in Mello, Judge O'Flaherty could not tell whether any juror followed his instruction and made up an excuse to get off the jury.

"Although Judge O'Flaherty claimed that he did not preclude voir dire by lawyers on race or ethnicity, like Mello, he again discouraged jurors from showing any hesitancy regarding whether they could be fair when he stated to a potential juror:

" '[L]et me give you a clue how to answer the questions around here.

" 'If you hesitate, you know, the attorneys, trust me, will jump on that like a duck on a June bug. Keep that in mind.'

"A jury was ultimately impaneled and Mr. Abbaszadeh was convicted. He subsequently appealed the conviction. In February 2003, the Court of Appeal, by a vote of 2–1, reversed the conviction and remanded the matter to the Placer County Superior Court with directions to reassign the case to a different judge. (People v. Abbaszadeh (2003) 106 Cal.App.4th 642, 651 [130 Cal.Rptr.2d 873].)

"Evidence of Mitigation

"Judge O'Flaherty acknowledged at the hearing that it was a 'mistake to do it' (give the instructions) and 'I feel real badly about it.'

"Judge O'Flaherty submitted the declarations of five Abbaszadeh jurors and two Mello jurors. In general, the jurors found Judge O'Flaherty to be a fair judge who conducted the trial in an appropriate manner. Several jurors commented that Judge O'Flaherty was sensitive to racial issues and emphasized that individuals with racial animus should not serve on the jury.

"Dean Starks, a Placer County criminal defense attorney, testified on behalf of Judge O'Flaherty. He testified that he has tried approximately 100 cases to verdict in Placer County. He has appeared before Judge O'Flaherty over 100 times and has tried four cases before him. Mr. Starks opined that the racial composition of a typical panel in Placer County is at least 95 percent Caucasian. As a trial attorney, Mr. Starks has serious concerns about racial bias in cases involving African-American defendants. Mr. Starks testified that Judge O'Flaherty is a fair and hard-working judge who is impartial and makes efforts to keep the courtroom free of bias.

"CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

"Having considered all the evidence, the Special Masters find there is clear and convincing proof that Judge O'Flaherty's actions in instructing potential jurors to 1) lie during voir dire in Mello, and 2) violate their oath in Abbaszadeh, constitute conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute, as alleged in counts one and two.

"We further find that the Commission has failed to prove by clear and convincing evidence that Judge O'Flaherty committed willful misconduct. The Commission has asserted that Judge O'Flaherty acted with knowledge that his actions were beyond lawful judicial power and/or that he acted with a conscious disregard for the limits of his judicial authority. We do not agree. We accept Judge O'Flaherty's explanation that he believed in good faith that he was acting within his lawful judicial authority, without a conscious disregard for the limits of his judicial power.

"Prejudicial Misconduct

(2) "Prejudicial misconduct includes acts that a judge 'undertakes in good faith but which nevertheless would appear to an objective observer to be not only unjudicial conduct but conduct prejudicial to public esteem for the judicial office.' (Geiler v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications, supra, 10 Cal.3d 270, 284.) It is not necessary that actual observers view the judge's conduct as prejudicial to the administration of justice; rather the appropriate standard is how an ' "objective observer" ' would view the judge's conduct. (Doan v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1995) 11 Cal.4th 294, 324–325 [45 Cal.Rptr.2d 254, 902 P.2d 272].)

(3) "Code of Civil Procedure section 232, subdivision (a) requires that before voir dire begins, prospective jurors must agree to ' ". . . accurately and truthfully answer, under penalty of perjury . . . ." ' all questions concerning qualifications and competency to serve as trial jurors.

"Canon 2A of the Code of Judicial Ethics provides, 'A judge shall respect and comply with the law and shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary.' (Italics added.)

"In People v. Mello, Judge O'Flaherty instructed the prospective jurors during voir dire:

" 'I recognize that most people in today's age don't want to raise their hand and say I am a bigot or I'm a racist. So what I'm going to do, if any of you have the slightest doubt that you might not, for racial reasons, be able to give this defendant a fair trial, I'm going to give you permission to lie.'

"In People v. Abbaszadeh, Judge O'Flaherty stated to the prospective jurors during voir dire:

" 'Now, obviously being labeled a bigot or a racist, this sort of thing, is insulting to most people. And so it's entirely possible that if you harbor these types of feelings that you may not want to raise your hand and basically put a sign on yourself saying: I am a racist, etcetera.

" 'I don't want somebody who harbors those types of feelings sitting on this jury, for obvious reasons.

" 'So I would ask that you do whatever you have to do to get off the jury. And it's much more important, in my opinion, that you get off the jury, even if, you know, you have to answer my questions in such a way that you get off in some other way, then do it.'

"By instructing the jurors to lie under oath in Mello and to 'do whatever you have to do to get off the jury' in Abbaszadeh, Judge O'Flaherty directed the jurors to violate their oath in contravention of Code of Civil Procedure section 232, subdivision (a). As a result, Judge O'Flaherty not only condoned violating the law, but he directed it.

"Judge[] O'Flaherty's conduct would appear to an objective observer to be prejudicial to public esteem for the judicial office. It is uncontroverted that the jurors were sworn to tell the truth in the presence of Judge O'Flaherty. He thereafter directed and encouraged them to ignore and violate that oath. Such action on its face cannot be reconciled by any objective observer to be anything but prejudicial to public esteem for the judicial office. The public expects and embraces the concept that a judge shall be faithful to the law. This is so fundamental to a system of justice that it serves as a basic cornerstone of public confidence.

"In addition, such conduct casts doubt upon whether the jury selected in each case was truly fair and impartial. Rather than providing a probing examination by the court and counsel to determine if racial bias existed, Judge O'Flaherty's actions allowed jurors to create excuses to avoid jury service thereby depriving the defendants of a jury drawn from a fair and representative cross-section of the community.

"Judge O'Flaherty's failure to follow the law in this context is a violation of the fundamental constitutional right to a trial by jury. Ignorance of the law or other action that effectively deprives an individual of their constitutional rights amounts to judicial misconduct even when there is no evidence of bad faith. (Ryan v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1988) 45 Cal.3d 518, 530–531, 540–541 [247 Cal.Rptr. 378, 754 P.2d 724].)

"As noted in the Advisory Committee Commentary to Canon 2A: 'Public confidence in the judiciary is eroded by irresponsible or improper conduct by judges.'

"Based upon the findings of fact and the reasoning expressed in the conclusions of law, we find that Judge O'Flaherty's actions constituted conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice." (Original italics, fn. added.)

II

JUDGE O'FLAHERTY'S LEGAL CONTENTIONS

In briefs filed with the commission pursuant to Commission rule 130, as well as at oral argument before the commission pursuant to rule 132, Judge O'Flaherty asserted that he committed only good faith legal error, and therefore the commission neither could nor should discipline him. We disagree on both accounts. In this part, we discuss the bases for our authority to discipline Judge O'Flaherty. In part III, we set forth our reasons for exercising that authority by issuing this public admonishment.

A. "Prejudicial Misconduct," by Definition, Includes Good Faith Conduct That Is Unjudicial.

(4) Under article VI, section 18, subdivision (d) of the California Constitution, the commission may discipline a judge, among other grounds, for "willful misconduct in office" as well as for "conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute." The California Supreme Court has provided definitional content for both constitutional standards.

(5) Willful misconduct is (1) unjudicial conduct that is (2) committed in bad faith (3) by a judge acting in his or her judicial capacity. (Broadman v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 18 Cal.4th at p. 1091; Dodds v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1995) 12 Cal.4th 163, 172 [48 Cal.Rptr.2d 106, 906 P.2d 1260].) Willful misconduct includes conduct prejudicial, or "prejudicial misconduct," as a lesser included offense. (See Gonzalez v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1983) 33 Cal.3d 359, 369, fn. 5 [188 Cal.Rptr. 880, 657 P.2d 372].)

(6) In order to determine whether a judge's conduct is "unjudicial," the conduct is measured with reference to the California Code of Judicial Ethics. (See Dodds v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 12 Cal.4th at p. 172.) " 'The failure of a judge to comply with the canons "suggests performance below the minimum level necessary to maintain public confidence in the administration of justice." ' " (Adams v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1995) 10 Cal.4th 866, 878 [42 Cal.Rptr.2d 606, 897 P.2d 544] (Adams II), quoting Adams v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1994) 8 Cal.4th 630, 662 [34 Cal.Rptr.2d 641, 882 P.2d 358] (Adams I).) As discussed in this opinion, Judge O'Flaherty's conduct in giving the instructions violated both canon 2A and canon 1 and was unjudicial.

(7) A primary distinction between the two types of judicial misconduct is the presence or absence of bad faith. "Unlike wilful misconduct, prejudicial conduct does not require the presence of bad faith, but may occur when a judge, though acting in good faith, engages in conduct that adversely would affect the esteem in which the judiciary is held by members of the public who become aware of the circumstances of the conduct." (Adams II, supra, 10 Cal.4th at p. 878, citing Kloepfer v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1989) 49 Cal.3d 826, 832 [264 Cal.Rptr. 100, 782 P.2d 239], and McCullough v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1989) 49 Cal.3d 186, 191 [260 Cal.Rptr. 557, 776 P.2d 259]; accord, Broadman v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 18 Cal.4th at p. 1092.)

(8) Here, the masters concluded, based on Judge O'Flaherty's testimony, that he acted in good faith. Although we adopt that conclusion, the matter is not beyond discussion. The Court of Appeal described Judge O'Flaherty's instructions in Mello as "grave error" (People v. Mello, supra, 97 Cal.App.4th at p. 513) and "astonishing" (id. at p. 516), and in Abbaszadeh as "shocking" (People v. Abbaszadeh, supra, 106 Cal.App.4th at p. 645) and "notori[ous]"

(id. at p. 650). Arguably, such unquestionably alarming behavior satisfies the Supreme Court's bad faith standard as constituting bad faith: A "judge's reckless or utter indifference to whether judicial acts being performed exceed the bounds of the judge's prescribed power is a state of mind properly characterized as bad faith." (Broadman v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 18 Cal.4th at p. 1092.) Here, Judge O'Flaherty's laudable objective of rooting out bias seems to have blinded him both to his extralegal method of accomplishing the goal, and to the possible or even likely consequences of authorizing lying in his courtroom. However noble the goal, the ends cannot justify any and all means. At some point, a judge's obliviousness to the consequences of the means to a given end may override, as a matter of law, a judge's statement of subjective good intent. The masters accepted Judge O'Flaherty's testimony that he was acting in good faith, and we are willing to allow that to be ultimately dispositive of the issue here, particularly since it is not determinative of whether sanctions are appropriate or of the level of actual discipline to be imposed. Further, the fact that Judge O'Flaherty believed in good faith that he was acting within his lawful judicial authority does not insulate him from a charge of prejudicial misconduct, which as noted, by definition may include unjudicial conduct undertaken by a judge in good faith.

It is not necessary that actual observers view the judge's conduct as prejudicial to the administration of justice; rather the appropriate standard is how an " 'objective observer' " would view the judge's conduct. (Doan v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 11 Cal.4th at pp. 324–325.) "The subjective intent or motivation of the judge is not a significant factor in assessing whether prejudicial conduct has occurred under this [objective observer] standard." (Adams II, supra, 10 Cal.4th at p. 878, citing Gonzalez v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 33 Cal.3d at p. 376.)

Judge O'Flaherty admitted that he should not have used the term "lie" in the Mello instruction because of "the effect it might have on the people who, outside the courtroom, heard it." Beyond that admission is the fact that after administering the oath to tell the truth to the jury panelists in both cases, he promptly directed and encouraged them to violate that very oath, thereby eviscerating it. As stated in the earlier quote from the masters' report, and as adopted by us (ante, at pp. 13–14): "Such action on its face cannot be reconciled by any objective observer to be anything but prejudicial to public esteem for the judicial office. The public expects and embraces the concept that a judge shall be faithful to the law. This is so fundamental to a system of justice that it serves as a basic cornerstone of public confidence."

It is incomprehensible to us that any objective person could observe, or later hear about, Judge O'Flaherty's serious undermining of the jurors' oath without it negatively influencing such person's opinion of the entire ensuing process in the courtroom, including his or her esteem for the judge presiding.

B. The Oberholzer Decision Supports the Commission's Imposition of Discipline on Judge O'Flaherty.

Judge O'Flaherty conflates his argument that he cannot be disciplined for "good faith legal error" with the contention that under a "special rule" enunciated by the Supreme Court decision in Oberholzer v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1999) 20 Cal.4th 371 [84 Cal.Rptr.2d 466, 975 P.2d 663], the commission is precluded from disciplining him. While unquestionably there is a "special rule" under Oberholzer applicable to cases involving "legal error," this is not such a case.

(9) The "special rule" of Oberholzer to which the judge alludes is stated by the court as follows: "Mere legal error, without more, . . . is insufficient to support a finding that a judge has violated the Code of Judicial Ethics and thus should be disciplined." (Oberholzer v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 20 Cal.4th at p. 398.) The court specified certain instances of conduct or circumstances that "in addition" to the "legal error," would support investigation and discipline by the commission, namely, "bad faith," "bias," "abuse of authority," "disregard for fundamental rights," "intentional disregard of the law," "or any purpose other than the faithful discharge of judicial duty." (Ibid., italics omitted.) Here, since there is considerably more than "mere legal error," this case is distinguishable from Oberholzer.

The Oberholzer case arose out of Judge Oberholzer's issuance of an order dismissing a single criminal case because the prosecution was not ready to proceed and had failed to file a written motion to continue the trial. That single judicial ruling, or decision, was the only judicial conduct in question. The Supreme Court was considering that one ruling in the context of the provision of canon 1 that states "[a] judicial decision or administrative act later determined to be incorrect legally is not itself a violation of [the California Code of Judicial Ethics]." (Oberholzer v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 20 Cal.4th at p. 395, some italics omitted.) Judge Oberholzer contended that a single ruling—"a judicial decision" in the language of canon 1—could never constitute misconduct if it had any intellectual merit. (20 Cal.4th at p. 396.) The commission contended—again focused on a single ruling—"that an act that is legally erroneous" (ibid., italics added) can involve misconduct if there are extraneous circumstances that implicate the canons, and that the proper analytic focus was on the "additional circumstances that surround the ruling in question" (id. at p. 397, original italics).

(10) The Supreme Court agreed with the commission on this point, noting that conduct beyond a single ruling may implicate other canons and constitute misconduct. The court stated, "A judge may, through repeated legal error, commit acts that would lead to violations of the judicial canons" (Oberholzer v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 20 Cal.4th at p. 397), giving as an example, "A judge who repeatedly dismisses certain kinds of claims might be subject to discipline . . ." (id. at p. 398). Even in that example, however, it seems clear the court was looking at a series of individual rulings or decisions (repeated dismissal orders), each of which was legally erroneous, but that cumulatively might suggest some broader-based misconduct. In our view, the initial trigger for the applicability of Oberholzer is that there be "a judicial decision or administrative act"—something that implicates the language of canon 1, as was the situation in that case.

In contrast to Judge Oberholzer's single order of dismissal, Judge O'Flaherty did not make any discrete ruling or decision that was legally incorrect. Rather, he gave a series of improper directives to the various jury panel members in two separate cases; he engaged in a repeated course of improper conduct. That broad-based wrongful conduct directly violates particularly canon 2A, for the reasons explained by the masters (ante, at pp. 12–13), and subjects Judge O'Flaherty to our jurisdiction. The course of conduct was unjudicial, and not "mere legal error."

In addition, the appellate court held that Judge O'Flaherty's instructions in Mello violated the defendant's federal and state constitutional rights to a fair and impartial jury and to due process of law (People v. Mello, supra, 97 Cal.App.4th at p. 515), and in Abbaszadeh, described the Mello error as "structural error" that "rendered the trial fundamentally unfair, requiring reversal without a showing of prejudice." (People v. Abbaszadeh, supra, 106 Cal.App.4th at p. 644.) In Abbaszadeh, the court again found "Mello error" (ibid.), and again reversed the conviction because the error was "structural" (id. at p. 647), that " 'irremediably tainted the trial by making it impossible for the parties to know whether a fair and impartial jury had been seated' " (ibid., quoting People v. Mello, supra, 97 Cal.App.4th at p. 517). As stated by the Court of Appeal: "[T]he instructions to lie about racial bias resulted in voir dire so inadequate as to render the trial fundamentally unfair. [Citation.] This error—which inevitably skewed the integrity of the entire voir dire process and adversely affected the manner in which the jurors would evaluate the evidence—is a 'defect affecting the framework within which the trial proceeds' . . . . [Citations.]" (People v. Mello, supra, 97 Cal.App.3d at p. 519.)

Judge O'Flaherty's actions constitute misconduct because, as soundly denounced by the Court of Appeal, they manifest, at least, an intentional disregard of the law, a disregard of fundamental rights and an abuse of judicial authority, any and all of which warrant discipline, including under the "legal error plus" standard of Oberholzer.

Intentional Disregard of the Law: Although we believe that Oberholzer is factually inapposite to this case, it nonetheless provides useful guidance for determining whether there is misconduct that may or should subject Judge O'Flaherty to discipline by the commission. In that regard, the case the Supreme Court cited in Oberholzer v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 20 Cal.4th at page 398 as illustrative of "intentional disregard of the law" is Cannon v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1975) 14 Cal.3d 678, 695–698 [122 Cal.Rptr. 778, 537 P.2d 898]. Two types of conduct underlay the disregard of the law by Judge Cannon—violations of the law concerning contempt (id. at pp. 695–696) and violations of a Supreme Court decision concerning the power of a judge to involuntarily remove defense counsel in a criminal case (id. at pp. 696–698).

In light of the unique rules concerning misconduct in connection with abuse of the contempt power (see, e.g., Rothman, Cal. Jud. Conduct Handbook (2d ed. 1999) Contempt, § 4.03, pp. 101–102), there is some question of the broader applicability of the court's reasoning concerning Judge Cannon's contempt violations to Judge O'Flaherty's conduct. However, the court's analysis in Cannon of the second issue (Judge Cannon's failure to follow the court's earlier decision on removing counsel) seems very instructive here.

In a number of instances, Judge Cannon had relieved appointed counsel in ongoing criminal prosecutions and substituted newly appointed counsel, a practice the commission had concluded amounted to an unlawful interference with the attorney-client relationship and constituted misconduct. (Cannon v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 14 Cal.3d at pp. 695–696.) Judge Cannon argued before the Supreme Court that under the circumstances of the various underlying criminal cases, she had the inherent power to remove the attorney. But the court cited its earlier opinion in Smith v. Superior Court (1968) 68 Cal.2d 547 [68 Cal.Rptr. 1, 440 P.2d 65], where it had detailed a judge's duty to balance the competing interests of adequate representation of the defendant against the sanctity of the attorney-client relationship in connection with a proper judicial removal of counsel. The court held that by reason of Judge Cannon's failure to follow the clearly enunciated law of Smith, her conduct was improper and warranted discipline. (Cannon v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 14 Cal.3d at pp. 696–698.)

The Supreme Court pointed out that Judge Cannon's misconduct arose "not only in the fact of the substitutions but also the manner in which they were accomplished." (Cannon v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 14 Cal.3d at p. 697, original italics.) As concerns the judge's "manner," the court summarized the serious infringement of rights that ensued as a result of the judge's improper substitutions. (Id. at pp. 697–698.) In other words, the misconduct was not attributable solely to the fact that she removed counsel, but that the way she did it resulted in infringements of fundamental rights.

The important part of Cannon for present purposes is that there is no indication that Judge Cannon was aware of the Smith decision or that what she was doing ran afoul of the case or impacted on protected attorney-client relations or right to counsel. Nonetheless, her failure to heed Smith, viewed from the vantage point of the ensuing infringements of important protected rights, was denounced by the court in Oberholzer as an intentional disregard of the law.

Here, as noted by the Court of Appeal in Mello, there was clear law from the Supreme Court concerning the proper way for Judge O'Flaherty to accomplish his goal of getting bias out of his courtroom: "There is a simple way during voir dire for trial judges to inquire properly into racial bias. They need only follow the Judicial Council's guidelines for such inquiry, which our high court has expressly endorsed. [Citing People v. Holt (1997) 15 Cal.4th 619, 660, fn. 13 & 661 [63 Cal.Rptr.2d 782, 937 P.2d 213].] [Citation.] . . . [¶] Our Supreme Court has pointedly observed: 'Trial court judges should closely follow the language and formulae for voir dire recommended by the Judicial Council in the Standards to ensure that all appropriate areas of inquiry are covered in an appropriate manner.' (People v. Holt, supra, 15 Cal.4th at p. 661.)" (People v. Mello, supra, 97 Cal.App.4th at p. 516, italics added.)

Judge O'Flaherty was not aware he was violating Holt when he implemented his own procedures to attempt to rid the juries of bias. Likewise, he appeared oblivious to the serious constitutional ramifications of his variance from the high court's directive. But it seems that he, like Judge Cannon, by reason of "the manner" in which he conducted himself, nonetheless "intentionally disregarded" the clear law enunciated in an earlier Supreme Court case.

Judge O'Flaherty repeatedly told the jury panelists to violate their oath, alarmingly unaware of the broader impact those instructions almost necessarily would have on the defendants' constitutional rights. This situation is a striking parallel to Judge Cannon's repeated substitution of counsel in the middle of criminal trials, seemingly oblivious to the resulting impact on attorney-client relations or the quality of the legal defense. Although neither judge apparently was aware of a specific Supreme Court case that proscribed their conduct, the determinative factor is that the overall manner in which they conducted themselves demonstrated a generalized and serious lack of awareness or concern that the consequences of their conduct ran afoul of the law. Such serious inattention constitutes an intentional disregard of the law.

Disregard of Fundamental Rights: The Court of Appeal reversed the defendant's conviction in the underlying Mello case, and then, based on "Mello error," ordered a reversal in Abbaszadeh as well. The appellate court held that Judge O'Flaherty's instructions resulted in a deprivation of "federal and state constitutional rights to a fair and impartial jury and to due process of law." (People v. Mello, supra, 97 Cal.App.4th at p. 515.) The instructions undermined each defendant's "ability to secure a fair and impartial jury and adversely affected the fundamental truth-finding function of the jury" (id. at p. 513) and "irremediably tainted the trial by making it impossible for the parties to know whether a fair and impartial jury had been seated" (id. at p. 517). The instructions "frustrated the main object of voir dire, to 'ferret[] out bias and prejudice on the part of prospective jurors.' " (Id. at p. 518, quoting People v. Taylor (1992) 5 Cal.App.4th 1299, 1314 [7 Cal.Rptr.2d 676].) The instruction might have induced false statements that affected the composition of the juries and the outcome of the trials. (People v. Mello, supra, 97 Cal.App.4th at pp. 518–519.)

These themes are echoed by the masters as well, as follows: "[Judge O'Flaherty's instructions cast] doubt upon whether the jury selected in each case was truly fair and impartial. Rather than providing a probing examination by the court and counsel to determine if racial bias existed, Judge O'Flaherty's actions allowed jurors to create excuses to avoid jury service thereby depriving the defendants of a jury drawn from a fair and representative cross-section of the community."

Judge O'Flaherty urges that his improper instructions "involving a constitutional right" should not subject him to discipline. There is more than an involvement of rights here though. There was an alarming disregard for consequences of the exercise of judicial power, including the impact on the most fundamental rights to an impartial jury and basic due process. Grave constitutional ramifications were inherent in the instructions such that even a modicum of forethought would have revealed the serious mistake that Judge O'Flaherty now concedes he made. We do not suggest in any way that the judge intended to cause a violation of the defendants' constitutional rights, but rather, that he acted with irresponsible disregard concerning them.

As noted, intentional "disregard of the law" can result from serious inattentiveness to legal consequences of judicial acts or omissions. It seems clear that such heedless conduct by Judge O'Flaherty also satisfies the standard for nonintentional "disregard of fundamental rights."

Abuse of Authority: Code of Civil Procedure section 232, subdivision (a) requires prospective jurors to take an oath to respond truthfully during voir dire, and a violation of the oath may subject the person to prosecution for perjury. (E.g., People v. Blackwell (1987) 191 Cal.App.3d 925, 930–931 [236 Cal.Rptr. 803]; People v. Meza (1987) 188 Cal.App.3d 1631, 1633 [234 Cal.Rptr. 235].) There is no indication that the code section requiring the oath is unconstitutional, and as stated by the Court of Appeal in Mello, Judge O'Flaherty, therefore, did "not have authority to disregard" it; furthermore, the judge was not permitted to authorize, in advance, the violation of a valid criminal statute. (People v. Mello, supra, 97 Cal.App.4th at p. 517.) As found by the masters (ante, at pp. 8−9), the judge admitted that he was unaware of any arguable legal basis supporting his instructions. In fact, the Holt case proscribed it. The judge was absolutely without authority to instruct the panel members in Mello to lie, and to invite them to do so in Abbaszadeh.

As the masters pointed out (ante, at pp. 8−9), Judge O'Flaherty further frustrated his own stated goal of ridding his courtroom of bias because he "discouraged potential jurors from being introspective and taking an appropriate amount of time to assess their ability to be fair" by telling the second group of panelists in Mello that if they hesitated in answering a question, the lawyers would go after them. He stated, "Believe me. One hundred percent, they will go after you." He made a similar comment to the first group in Mello and to the panel members in Abbaszadeh. And although the judge invited jurors to come into chambers to talk privately about bias, he quite effectively discouraged anyone from actually doing so by stating that such a meeting " 'will cause some pomp and circumstance.' "

Judge O'Flaherty argues that for there to be "abuse of authority," there must be an intentional, bad faith violation of known authority, citing Spruance v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1975) 13 Cal.3d 778 [119 Cal.Rptr. 841, 532 P.2d 1209], on the claimed basis that Judge Spruance knew his actions were in violation of the law. The Supreme Court opinion in Spruance, however, makes clear that in a number of instances where Judge Spruance was held to have abused his authority, he merely "knew or should have known" the correct law. (See Spruance, supra, 13 Cal.3d at pp. 786 & fn. 6, 787 & fn. 7, 789 & fn. 10, 790 & fn. 11, 791–792 & fn. 12, 794 & fn. 15.)

Spruance does not support Judge O'Flaherty's argument. Moreover, as we have noted, even conduct labeled by the Supreme Court as "intentional disregard of the law" may be satisfied by irresponsible lack of regard for legal consequences of judicial conduct. Nonintentional "abuse of authority" may also be satisfied by the same heedlessness to consequences. The Supreme Court has never indicated a view in accord with that asserted by Judge O'Flaherty and we do not believe it is the applicable standard. Judge O'Flaherty overfocused his attention on the singular end result, thereby blinding himself to the shockingly improper means to that end, as well as to the serious negative consequences of those utilizing those means. He thereby abused his judicial authority.

III

DISCIPLINE

Judge O'Flaherty asserts that the two reversals by the Court of Appeal, and the extensive news coverage of those decisions in the local press in Placer County, already have provided adequate notice to the public that he committed error. We agree that the appellate court decisions made clear the justices' views that Judge O'Flaherty's conduct was shocking and astounding, and that reversals of the two criminal convictions were required because of the violations of fundamental constitutional rights.

The Court of Appeal, however, also referred this matter to this commission as "the body best suited to determine whether Judge O'Flaherty's actions constitute actionable judicial misconduct." (People v. Abbaszadeh, supra, 106 Cal.App.4th at p. 650, italics added.) The appellate court vindicated the defendants' rights by reversing the convictions. Our mandate, in contrast, is the " 'enforcement of rigorous standards of judicial conduct' " and " 'the maintenance of public confidence in the integrity . . . of the judicial system.' " (Fletcher v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1998) 19 Cal.4th 865, 918 [81 Cal.Rptr.2d 58, 968 P.2d 958], quoting Adams II, supra, 10 Cal.4th at p. 912.) For the reasons stated, we conclude there was conduct that was inconsistent with canon 2A, requiring judges to "respect and comply with the law" and to "act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity" of the judiciary, as well as canon 1, imposing a similar obligation on a judge to uphold the integrity of the judiciary.

(11) In our view, therefore, it is necessary for this commission publicly to express its views that the instructions to lie, however well intended, are incompatible with fundamental principles of the administration of justice. They constitute unjudicial conduct that is prejudicial to public esteem for the judicial office, and improper conduct by a judge that reflects an intentional disregard of the law, a disregard for fundamental rights and an abuse of judicial authority. This is different from the appellate court's rulings concerning the defendants' constitutional rights in the underlying prosecutions.

Judge O'Flaherty asserts that his instructions should not subject him to discipline because he was condoning lying only in limited or narrowly defined circumstances. We could not disagree more. Lying of any kind is never appropriate in a court of law, the very existence of which is for the ascertainment of the truth. White lies, limited lying, carefully defined permissible lying are at the edge of a slippery slope that we decline to even approach. We cannot conceive that any judicial complicity in any lying in any courtroom ever could be proper, no matter how laudable any other goal the lying may be thought to advance.

The commission has not previously been faced with misconduct that directly matches Judge O'Flaherty's behavior on the bench. However, prior decisions of the commission establish that failure by a judge to ensure the constitutional rights of defendants in criminal proceedings is a basis for discipline. In 1996, the Supreme Court adopted the commission's recommendation of public censure of Judge Claude Whitney for conduct that included refusing to appoint counsel for defendants at arraignment. (In re Whitney (1996) 14 Cal.4th 1 [56 Cal.Rptr.2d 705, 922 P.2d 868].) Judge Whitney also had failed to advise defendants during the mass advisement of rights at arraignment proceedings that the right to counsel extended to representation at the arraignment itself, and had failed to advise defendants individually of the right to counsel at arraignment. (Id. at pp. 2–3.)

The commission has publicly admonished other judges who disregarded the law, albeit arguably in good faith. In 2003, we publicly admonished Judge James L. Roeder for failing to "ensure the rights of criminal defendants by his practice at felony and misdemeanor arraignment proceedings of stating, for the record, that defendants had waived their rights to have a preliminary examination or misdemeanor trial within applicable time limits, without properly obtaining the defendants' consent to a waiver of those rights, in the manner prescribed by law." (Public Admonishment of Judge James L. Roeder (2003) p. 4.) Judge Roeder's motivation appeared to have been a "desire to accommodate defense counsel" who " 'routinely need[ed] time' to open files and investigate cases" and whose practice was "not to schedule a preliminary examination or misdemeanor jury trial until the case was 'conferenced.' " (Ibid.)

In 1998, the commission publicly admonished Judge Christopher J. Sheldon for permitting guilty pleas to be entered and sentences to be imposed in his absence pursuant to stipulation of the parties. (Inquiry Concerning Sheldon (1998) No. 142, Decision and Order of Public Admonishment [48 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 46].) Judge Sheldon "maintained that he did not think that the procedures violated the law and that he was motivated by a desire to make the pretrial calendar run more efficiently." (Id. at pp. 5–6 [48 Cal.4th CJP Supp. at p. 53].) A public admonishment was imposed, notwithstanding the commission's determination there was no bad faith and even though the judge "promptly changed his procedure after being counseled" by his supervising judge. (Id. at p. 6 [48 Cal.4th CJP Supp. at p. 54].)

(12) We repeat the masters' apt summation here: "The public expects and embraces the concept that a judge shall be faithful to the law. This is so fundamental to a system of justice that it serves as a basic cornerstone of public confidence." (Ante, at pp. 13–14.) Where serious acts of misconduct that undermine public confidence take place in open court, public discipline is "appropriate to assure the public that such actions are not condoned." (Inquiry Concerning Broadman (1999) No. 145, Decision and Order Imposing Public Admonishment, p. 13 [48 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 67, 83].) (13) Irrespective of the intended objective or any attenuating circumstances, judicial complicity in lying in a courtroom cannot be tolerated.

Commission members Mr. Marshall B. Grossman, Judge Frederick P. Horn, Mr. Michael A. Kahn, Mrs. Crystal Lui, Mr. Jose C. Miramontes, Mrs. Penny Perez, Judge Risë Jones Pichon, and Ms. Barbara Schraeger voted to impose a public admonishment. Commission member Justice Vance W. Raye was recused and commission member Ms. Patricia Miller did not participate in this matter. There is currently one public member vacancy on the commission.

The judge's petition for review by the Supreme Court was denied on February 2, 2005.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA

BEFORE THE COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

| IN THE MATTER CONCERNING JUDGE BRETT CARROLL KLEIN | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT |
|---|---|

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge Brett Carroll Klein, a judge of the Los Angeles Superior Court since 2000. The judge's current term began in January 2003; he previously was a judge of the Los Angeles Municipal Court from 1990 to 2000. Judge Klein and his attorney, Mr. Edward P. George, Jr., appeared before the commission on October 13, 2004 pursuant to rule 116 of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance; good cause appearing, the Commission on Judicial Performance issues this public admonishment pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution, based upon the following Statement of Facts and Reasons:

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

From 1999 through 2002, Judge Klein presided over the case of Butler et al. v. Terry, case number BC 204642, in which two tenants sued their landlord for injuries caused by a ceiling falling on them. Judge Klein abused his authority and displayed bias and embroilment through actions he took after a judgment he had entered was reversed by the Court of Appeal.

In Butler, after the defendant failed to obey certain discovery orders, Judge Klein struck the defendant's answer and the matter proceeded to a default prove-up hearing to assess damages. At the outset of that hearing, held in October 2000, Judge Klein denied the defendant's request that the court hear a motion for reconsideration of its order striking her answer. Thereafter, testimony was given by one of the plaintiffs and an orthopedic surgeon; the surgeon testified that the cost of diagnosis and treatment of each plaintiff was approximately $3200. Because the defendant was in default, there was no cross-examination or other participation by defendant's counsel. At the end of the hearing, Judge Klein found that fair compensation to the plaintiffs totaled $200 for medical expenses and $1050 for other damages, $300 of which was not compensable. The judge then ordered nominal damages of $1 to each plaintiff, on the ground that awarding damages would deprive the defendant of due process of law because the plaintiffs' statement of damages was first served on her after she engaged in the conduct that resulted in entry of her default as a terminating sanction for the discovery violation. The judge concluded by saying, "I suppose this case illustrates adage [sic] 'Be careful what you ask for. You might get it.'" The judge then asked defendant's counsel whether the motion for reconsideration of the court's order striking the defendant's answer was withdrawn; counsel said that it was.

The plaintiffs appealed. The Court of Appeal reversed the judgment. The appellate court found that Judge Klein's determination that $100 each would adequately compensate the plaintiffs for their medical expenses was arbitrary and capricious. The Court of Appeal also held that the defendant had received adequate notice of her potential liability prior to entry of the default judgment. The instructions to the trial court on remand were "to enter a new default judgment in accordance with the evidence [plaintiffs] presented at the prove-up hearing on October 24, 2000." Judge Klein's court received the remittitur from the Court of Appeal on or about July 1, 2002.

On August 2, 2002, Judge Klein on his own initiative issued an order setting a hearing on the defendant's previously withdrawn motion for reconsideration of the order striking defendant's answer.

Immediately after receiving a copy of this order, plaintiffs' counsel, who previously had been told that the case had not yet been reassigned after the remittitur, sent a letter to the court advising that the plaintiffs would be filing a peremptory challenge to disqualify Judge Klein under Code of Civil Procedure section 170.6. Counsel also expressed the view that Judge Klein's order setting a hearing on defendant's motion for reconsideration was in "complete disregard" of the Court of Appeal's instructions on remand.

On August 5, 2002, plaintiffs filed the challenge under Code of Civil Procedure section 170.6. On the same day, Judge Klein issued an order striking that challenge as untimely as to "any proceedings other than conduct of a new trial." On August 8, 2002, plaintiffs filed a challenge for cause against Judge Klein pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure section 170.1. On August 13, 2002, Judge Klein issued an order striking the Code of Civil Procedure section 170.1 challenge "because on its face, it discloses no legal grounds for disqualification."

On September 9, 2002, plaintiffs filed a petition for writ of mandate in the Court of Appeal contesting Judge Klein's striking of the peremptory challenge filed on August 5, 2002. The Court of Appeal ultimately denied the petition as untimely but nonetheless expressed its view that the petition had merit, and reminded the trial court of its inherent authority to reconsider the two challenges.

On September 18, 2002, the plaintiff filed another peremptory challenge under Code of Civil Procedure section 170.6.

On October 18, 2002, Judge Klein heard and granted the defendant's previously withdrawn motion for reconsideration, which had been refiled on September 11, 2002. He went on to rule that the defendant could not present certain evidence at trial unless specified conditions were met. The judge then accepted the plaintiffs' peremptory challenge under Code of Civil Procedure section 170.6 The plaintiffs thereupon petitioned the Court of Appeal for a writ of mandate.

In its decision issued December 23, 2002, the Court of Appeal issued a writ of mandate ordering Judge Klein to vacate his order granting reconsideration, and compelling compliance with its remand directions. In its decision, the Court of Appeal noted that Judge Klein, after ruling at the October 18 hearing that the defendant could only call certain witnesses if she provided their names and addresses "at least 60 days before the postreversal [sic] trial date," had "refused to comment further or provide any explanation" when asked by counsel to explain whether there would be a new trial rather than simply a new judgment. (Butler v. Superior Court (2002) 104 Cal.App.4th 979, 981.) The appellate court then stated that "logic leads to no other conclusion but that the trial court's order materially departed from our directions on remand" and held that the order was "unauthorized and void."

The appellate court stated:

> Despite our clear and specific directions, the trial court issued an order granting a motion for reconsideration of a ruling that was rendered prior to the issuance of the judgment. The effect of the trial court's order was to allow further trial court proceedings that would be contrary to our clear directions on remand. Because the trial court's order materially differed from our remand directions, it was unauthorized and void.

(Butler v. Superior Court, supra, 104 Cal.App.4th at p. 981.)

The Court of Appeal continued:

> When an appellate court's reversal is accompanied by directions requiring specific proceedings on remand, those directions are binding on the trial court and must be followed. Any material variance from the directions is unauthorized and void.

(Butler v. Superior Court, supra, 104 Cal.App.4th at p. 982, emphasis in original.)

The commission found that Judge Klein's actions after the appellate reversal of the judgment he rendered at the default prove-up hearing displayed abuse of authority, bias and embroilment. After determining that Judge Klein's actions at the default prove-up hearing were arbitrary and capricious, the Court of Appeal reversed and remanded the case with express directions to award damages in accordance with the undisputed evidence introduced by plaintiffs at the prove-up hearing. In light of these instructions from the Court of Appeal, Judge Klein was obligated to redetermine plaintiffs' damages. In direct violation of the appellate court's order, Judge Klein did not award damages as directed but instead, on his own initiative and without authority, resurrected the defendant's previously withdrawn motion to vacate the order striking defendant's answer, and set the motion for hearing. He then struck both the peremptory challenge that was immediately filed by the plaintiffs, and plaintiff's subsequent challenge for cause. Thereafter, even though the Court of Appeal expressed its view that Judge Klein had improperly rejected the peremptory challenge, and suggested that he reconsider his order striking the challenge for cause, Judge Klein took no further action on either challenge, and delayed accepting a second peremptory challenge until after he granted the defendant's motion for reconsideration and vacated his earlier ruling striking her answer.

The judge's actions in Butler, et al. v. Terry following the appellate reversal were contrary to canon 2A, which requires judges to respect and comply with the law and conduct themselves at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary. As the California Supreme Court stated in Broadman v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1998) 18 Cal.4th 1079, 1103, "there is a compelling public interest in maintaining a judicial system that both is in fact and is publicly perceived as being fair, impartial, and efficient." Thus, "[j]udges…cannot be advocates for the interests of any parties; they must be, and be perceived to be, neutral arbiters of both fact and law [citation] who apply the law uniformly and consistently." (Id. at p. 1100.) In Fletcher v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1998) 19 Cal.4th 865, 910 the California Supreme Court reaffirmed these principles in finding that a judge engaged in misconduct when he created the public impression that he had abandoned the judicial role to become an advocate for his own ruling.[1] Similarly, the commission and the California Supreme Court in Kloepfer v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1989) 49 Cal.3d 826, 858-861 found misconduct where a judge failed to remain objective and became personally involved in three matters before him.

Judge Klein's conduct as set forth above was, at a minimum, improper action within the meaning of article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution. His actions were not simply legal error but reflected a flagrant disregard of the order of the Court of Appeal remanding the case for a redetermination of damages, as well as an abandonment of his role as a neutral arbiter.

Commission members Justice Vance W. Raye, Mr. Marshall B. Grossman, Judge Frederick P. Horn, Mr. Michael A. Kahn, Mrs. Crystal Lui, Ms. Patricia Miller, Mrs. Penny Perez, Judge Risë Jones Pichon, and Ms. Barbara Schraeger voted to impose a public admonishment. Mr. Jose C. Miramontes did not participate in this matter. There is currently one public member vacancy on the commission.

Dated: October 20, 2004

_____

Hon. Vance W. Raye
Chairperson

[1] In Fletcher, the commission and the court found that the judge engaged in willful misconduct because his actions were motivated by a personal conflict with a political rival.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA

BEFORE THE COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

| IN THE MATTER CONCERNING JUDGE STEPHEN P. GILDNER | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT |
|---|---|

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge Stephen P. Gildner, a judge of the Kern County Superior Court since 1990, whose current term began in January 2003. Judge Gildner and his attorney, Edith R. Matthai, Esq. of Robie & Matthai, appeared before the commission on December 8, 2004 pursuant to rule 116 of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance to contest the imposition of a public admonishment. Having considered the written and oral objections and argument submitted by Judge Gildner and his counsel, and good cause appearing, the Commission on Judicial Performance issues this public admonishment pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution, based upon the following Statement of Facts and Reasons:

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

A. Issuing Bench Warrants Without Lawful Authority: People v. Ricardo Jimenez and People v. Pablo Ramirez.

Judge Gildner presided over People v. Jimenez (Kern County Superior Court No. BF094351) on March 7, 2001. The defendant had been ordered to be present at 9:00 a.m. for a pre-preliminary hearing conference. The deputy public defender who had been assigned the case advanced the matter to 8:30 a.m. for the purpose of declaring that his office had discovered that it had a conflict of interest with respect to representation of Mr. Jimenez and to facilitate appointment of successor counsel. When Judge Gildner called the matter at approximately 8:45 a.m., the defendant was not present. After Judge Gildner announced that he would issue a bench warrant, defense counsel asked that the judge not issue the warrant because counsel did not know whether the defendant had been notified to be present at 8:30, rather than at 9:00. Judge Gildner responded that there was no information that the defendant had not been notified. Thereupon, he issued the warrant, forfeited bail, and vacated the court dates previously set.

When Mr. Jimenez arrived during the 9:00 a.m. calendar call, he was taken into custody on the warrant issued by Judge Gildner. The bailiff asked Judge Gildner if he wanted to take the matter up that day or put it over. Judge Gildner told the bailiff to put the matter over; when defense counsel asked that the matter be recalled that day, Judge Gildner refused.

Judge Gildner presided over People v. Pablo Ramirez, Case No. BF094487 on March 8, 2001 and March 14, 2001. Mr. Ramirez had been ordered to appear for his pre-preliminary hearing at 9:00 a.m. on March 14, 2001. The public defender's office put the matter on calendar on March 8 to declare a conflict and facilitate appointment of a new attorney. The defendant had not been notified that he needed to be present at the March 8 hearing. When Judge Gildner called the matter on March 8, Mr. Ramirez was not present. The transcript of the matter includes the following colloquy with defense counsel:

> THE COURT: Is Pablo Ramirez present? No response. [¶] He appears to be out of custody. Mr. Moore from the Public Defender's Office is present, Mr. Cooley is also present, Ms. Zimmer is here on behalf of the People. [¶] This is the time and place set for hearing on the Public Defender's application for an order relieving it as attorney of record.
>
> MR. MOORE: If your Honor is inclined to issue a bench warrant, I would simply ask the matter be dropped and remain on calendar for the date Mr. Ramirez was previously ordered back.
>
> THE COURT: Tell me this, Mr. Moore: If your office has a conflict, how can you remain on the case?
>
> MR. MOORE: Well, what I want to avoid is until we are – until we are relieved, we represent him, and it's my duty to make sure that adverse consequences, or do my best to protect him against adverse consequences.
>
> THE COURT: I understand what you are wanting to avoid, but you are also avoiding a response to my question. [¶] How can you continue to represent him if your office has a conflict?
>
> MR. MOORE: I don't know at which point the conflict ripens to a level that we are ethically unable to represent him. I don't –
>
> THE COURT: Well, Mr. Moore, surely it has ripened to that point; otherwise this motion is frivolous. Somebody in your office brought it on calendar.
>
> MR. MOORE: Well, I don't know if they would – if that conclusion would differ or change and, in fact, I don't believe it would if the facts were known that if you then declare the conflict, a bench warrant will go out for the client. [¶] I don't have any reason to believe that there is basis – well, I want to avoid the situation we had yesterday where an individual may not have been notified > about the nature of a court appearance. Certainly, there is no indication that Mr. Ramirez was ordered by the Court to come back on March 8th; that Mr. Ramirez, it's my understanding, was ordered to come back to court on March 14th, that's the date of the next court appearance. [¶] If the Court is going to be inclined to issue a bench warrant, then I simply would say, well, let's do it – let's declare the conflict when Mr. Ramirez is next ordered to return to court.

>
> THE COURT: Well, you should do something about that in your office. I am going to forfeit bail, issue a bench warrant, no bail on that warrant, day or night service.

When Mr. Ramirez appeared as previously ordered on March 14, and the deputy public defender attempted to address the court, Judge Gildner refused to allow him to do so. A private attorney was appointed to represent the defendant. After appointing the attorney, Judge Gildner ordered Mr. Ramirez taken into custody on the previously-issued bench warrant.

Based on these facts, the preliminary investigation letter asserted that Judge Gildner issued the bench warrants in the foregoing matters without legal authority to do so, and his refusal to give the defendants an opportunity to explain their earlier non-appearance when they appeared as originally ordered constituted an abuse of judicial power. Under Penal Code sections 978.5(a) and 1305(a), issuance of a bench warrant and forfeiture of bail is proper only if the defendant's presence at the subject hearing was "lawfully required." "A defendant's presence is 'lawfully required' when there is 'a specific court order commanding his appearance at a date and time certain' ([citation]) or when a defendant has notice because he or she is present when the date and time for a mandatory appearance are set, even though the court did not specifically order his or her personal presence ([citation])." (People v. Ranger Ins. Co. (1992) 6 Cal.App.4th 1301, 1304.)

In response, Judge Gildner stated through counsel as follows:

> Judge Gildner determined that neither Public Defender offered a sufficient excuse for the defendants' failure to appear, because neither attorney would definitively state that the defendant had not been notified to be present at the hearing. As a result, Judge Gildner exercised his discretion to not continue the matter and issued the bench warrants and forfeited bail to ensure that the defendants were brought before the court so that new counsel could be assigned.
>
> In Jimenez, the defendant appeared in court the same day as the bench warrant was issued and was remanded on the warrant…. The Commission has expressed concern that Judge Gildner "refused to consider recalling the bench warrants where it appeared that the defendant's failure to appear was neither unlawful nor willful." Again, there is no legal authority that requires the court make a finding that the defendant's failure to appear was "unlawful or willful" prior to issuing a bench warrant or prior to detaining the defendant pursuant to > that warrant. There is no legal authority that mandates that a court recall a bench warrant nor is there authority requiring the court to hold a hearing upon a defendants [sic] eventual appearance in court.

Judge Gildner may have correctly concluded that he could not hear the motions without the presence of the defendants. Nonetheless, the issuance of bench warrants was unlawful, as there is no evidence that defendants Ramirez and Jimenez had notice of the hearings set in their cases, or that there was a court order commanding their appearance or that they were present when the date and time for the appearances were set. No statute authorizes issuance of a bench warrant when a defendant has not been ordered to appear and was not present at the setting of a hearing at which the defendant's presence is mandatory.

Judge Gildner suggests that counsel failed to present sufficient excuse for the clients' failures to appear. However, they were not required to do so in the absence of evidence of a valid order to appear. As expressed in People v. North Beach Bonding Co. (1974) 36 Cal.App.3d 663, 669,

> It is absurd to contend that an attorney by appearing without his client … before the latter was directed to appear could place his client in default. The remedy, if the appearance of the defendant was necessary, was to refuse to entertain the motions without the presence of the defendant ….

(See also People v. Classified Ins. Corp. (1985) 164 Cal.App.3d 341, 346 [construing statutes to permit forfeiture of bail in situation where the defendant does not even have notice of the court date requiring his appearance may render statute unconstitutional as violative of due process requirement of notice]; Simmons v. Superior Court (1988) 203 Cal.App.3d 71, 77 [court may order defendant to be present at later bail hearing if the facts and circumstances so justify, and then issue bench warrant if defendant fails to appear as ordered].)

Judge Gildner is an experienced jurist and former prosecutor with many years of experience in the field of criminal law. There was nothing that suggested either defendant had notice. Under such circumstances, the warrants could not issue, irrespective of whether defense counsel provided any explanations. No reasonable or reasonably competent judge would assume or conclude otherwise.

In Judge Gildner's objections submitted through counsel pursuant to rule 116, the judge admitted that he lacked authority to issue these two warrants, but contended that the mistaken issuance constituted only legal error for which he should not be disciplined. In Oberholzer v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1989) 20 Cal.4th 371, 398, the California Supreme Court held that the commission may not discipline a judge for "mere legal error, without more." The court specified certain instances of conduct or circumstances that "in addition" to the "legal error," would support investigation and discipline by the commission, namely, "bad faith," "bias," "abuse of authority," "disregard for fundamental rights," "intentional disregard of the law," "or any purpose other than the faithful discharge of judicial duty." (Ibid.) Here, the issuance of the warrants was both legally erroneous and in violation of the fundamental right to notice. As such, the judge's actions constitute misconduct that subjects him to discipline under Oberholzer.

Judge Gildner's further refusal to give the defendants an opportunity to explain the earlier failures to appear promptly after they appeared as previously ordered, under the circumstances, appears callous and punitive. The judge's explanation that he did not conduct a hearing on the issue as soon as the defendants appeared simply because there is no express legal requirement that he do so "suggests an abdication of his responsibility" to determine whether the defendant's presence had been lawfully required and an abuse of his power to issue warrants. (See Kloepfer v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1989) 49 Cal.3d 826, 851.)

As further justification for issuance of the bench warrants in the above matters, Judge Gildner, through counsel, stated:

> Judge Gildner believed that the defendants' presence at the hearing was required because it concerned their Sixth Amendment right to conflict-free counsel at all phases of the criminal process…. The Public Defender's motions to be relieved placed Judge Gildner in a difficult situation. If Judge Gildner were to grant the motions in the absence of the defendants, thereby relieving the Public Defenders, the defendant would then be without counsel in violation of the Sixth Amendment. If Judge Gildner did not grant the motion, after being appraised [sic] of the existing conflict and waited an indeterminate time for the respective defendants to appear, the defendants would be deprived of their Sixth Amendment right to conflict-free counsel, albeit for that period. Judge Gildner believes that it is not "okay" to violate the defendants' Sixth Amendment right to counsel, even for a short time. In fact, had Judge Gildner conducted the hearing and granted the motion in the absence of the defendant he could have been susceptible to discipline for doing so.

Judge Gildner's assertion that forfeiture of bail and issuance of the warrants was necessary at that juncture to protect the defendants' right to conflict-free counsel is unpersuasive. Simply continuing the hearings on counsel's motions to withdraw until such time as the defendants had been notified to be present would have protected that right. (See Kloepfer v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 49 Cal.3d at 851 [judge's assertion that he issued warrant in part because he lacked confidence in counsel's ability to appear on behalf of the defendant did not satisfactorily justify issuance of a bench warrant for the client, rather than a continuance and an order that the defendant appear].) The judge's conduct in refusing to give the defendants an opportunity to explain the failures to appear when they did appear as previously ordered was inconsistent with the judge's assertion that his purpose in issuing the bench warrants was to protect the defendant's right to the effective assistance of counsel. Incarcerating the defendants when they appeared did nothing to further the purpose of ensuring the right to conflict-free counsel.

The judge's actions, as set forth above, violated canons 2A ("A judge shall respect and comply with the law and shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary" and 3B(7) ("A judge shall accord to every person who has a legal interest in a proceeding … full right to be heard according to law").

B. Refusal To Hear Defendant's Explanation For Late Arrival On Trial Date.

The case of People v. Curtis Moore (Kern County Superior Court No. BF103576) was set for trial on December 29, 2003, at 9:00 a.m. Judge Gildner, who was presiding over the master calendar, called the case shortly after 9:00 a.m. Deputy Public Defender T.D. Pham stated that the defendant was not present and asked that the matter be trailed. Judge Gildner refused to do so and instead vacated the trial date, forfeited bail, and issued a bench warrant at approximately 9:13 a.m.

A few minutes later, Mr. Pham met Mr. Moore in the hallway. Mr. Moore explained that he was late because he initially had gone to the wrong courtroom. Mr. Pham and Mr. Moore then entered Judge Gildner's courtroom. Mr. Pham attempted to have the case recalled, but Judge Gildner did not respond to Mr. Pham's request. Mr. Pham left the courtroom to appear in a trial in another courtroom; Mr. Moore remained in the courtroom.

Supervising Deputy Public Defender Art Titus explained to Judge Gildner off the record that the reason Mr. Moore was late was that he initially had gone to the wrong courtroom. Toward the end of the calendar, Mr. Titus asked to have the matter recalled. Judge Gildner refused to do so. When Mr. Titus asked what Mr. Moore should do to clear the matter up, Judge Gildner stated that Mr. Moore would be arrested. Mr. Moore was then surrendered to the bailiff and was remanded into custody. (Mr. Moore remained in custody and next appeared before another judge on December 31, 2003, at which time a new trial date was set.)

Judge Gildner's refusal under the circumstances to allow Mr. Moore to present evidence that his late appearance was unintentional or that mitigating circumstances existed constituted misconduct. (See Kloepfer v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1989) 49 Cal.3d 826, 850 [judge remanded defendant for failing to comply with court order to speak with District Attorney before pre-trial conference, refusing to hear defendant's explanation for non-compliance].) The judge's conduct violated canons 2A ("A judge shall respect and comply with the law and shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary"), and 3B(7) ("A judge shall accord to every person who has a legal interest in a proceeding, or that person's lawyer, full right to be heard according to law"). While the judge was entitled to exercise discretion in determining when to hold the hearing, the discretion afforded trial courts

> … is not a capricious or arbitrary discretion, but an impartial discretion, guided and controlled in its exercise by fixed legal principles. It is not a mental discretion, to be exercised ex gratia, but a legal discretion, to be exercised in conformity with the spirit of the law and in a manner to subserve and not to impede or defeat the ends of substantial justice. (Bailey v. Taaffe (1866) 29 Cal. 422, 424.)

In response to the commission's preliminary investigation letter, Judge Gildner's justification for refusing to recall Mr. Moore's case when he appeared was that he had no legal obligation to "automatically" recall the bench warrant and had no legal obligation to set a hearing that day to consider if the bench warrant should be recalled. Judge Gildner's refusal to recall the matter and consider recalling the bench warrant was unreasonable under the circumstances, particularly as the undisputed reason for the defendant's late appearance was that he had initially gone to the wrong courtroom. The judge's refusal to give Mr. Moore a prompt hearing appears arbitrary and creates the appearance of substantial unfairness.

C. Informing Criminal Defendants At Pre-Preliminary Hearing That They Would Not See Same Offer Again.

In the fall of 2000, the Kern County Superior Court implemented a new pre-preliminary hearing procedure. As Judge Gildner explained in his response to the commission's preliminary investigation letter as well as in his rule 116 objections, under the new system, a pre-preliminary hearing is scheduled before the preliminary hearing in felony cases for the purpose of encouraging the early disposition of criminal matters. Under the new program, according to the judge, the district attorney's office is encouraged to and generally does make the best possible plea offer at the pre-preliminary hearing conference, taking the defendant's early plea into account as a mitigating factor.

Generally, under court policy and in actual application, the pre-preliminary hearing offer is the best available to the defendant and typically is not held open after that hearing. Judge Gildner acknowledged, however, that at all times it was and is the policy of the court to handle each case on its individual merits and circumstances, and that there are many occasions when judges accept a negotiated disposition where the sentence is the same or lower than the pre-preliminary hearing offer. Judge Gildner "many times" has personally accepted pleas to dispositions later in a case that are more lenient than the offer made by the district attorney at an earlier stage of the proceedings.

Notwithstanding the foregoing policy of handling each case on the merits, Judge Gildner, while presiding over pre-preliminary hearings and conferences between October 2000 and February 2001, frequently told defendants they never would receive an offer as or more lenient than the pre-preliminary hearing offer. This admonition admittedly overstated both the court policy and actual practice, and was not correct. Judge Gildner concedes that it carried the potential of coercion, and he has assured the commission that the practice ceased after attorneys pointed out the potentially coercive effect. The admonition may have convinced some defendants to accept offers at the pre-preliminary hearing that they otherwise would have rejected. The warning also created an appearance that criminal defendants might be punished or retaliated against for refusing the early offer of settlement.

Contrary to the judge's assertion that the admonition was meant to ensure the defendants "were fully informed of the circumstances so that they could make a meaningful choice," it was misleading and had the opposite effect. As with any plea offer that is not held open, there was no guarantee that any defendant would receive the same or better offer later in the proceedings. However, the judge's admonition to defendants that they would "never" see the same or a better offer admittedly was incorrect. The judge's conduct violated canon 2A ("A judge shall respect and comply with the law and shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary").

***

The conduct set forth above was at a minimum improper action within the meaning of article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution, and suggests a pattern of failing to ensure the rights of criminal defendants. (See In re Whitney (1996) 14 Cal.4th 1, 2-3.)

Commission members Justice Vance W. Raye, Mr. Marshall B. Grossman, Judge Frederick P. Horn, Mr. Michael A. Kahn, Mrs. Crystal Lui, Ms. Patricia Miller, Mr. Jose C. Miramontes, Mrs. Penny Perez, Judge Risë Jones Pichon, and Ms. Barbara Schraeger voted to impose a public admonishment. There is currently one public member vacancy on the commission.

Dated: January 3, 2005

_____

Hon. Vance W. Raye
Chairperson

[No. 173. Mar. 28, 2005.]

INQUIRY CONCERNING JUDGE JOHN D. HARRIS

[MODIFIED DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT*]

SUMMARY

A disciplinary matter was brought concerning a former superior court judge.

The Commission on Judicial Performance publicly admonished the judge. The commission concluded that the judge engaged in five acts of prejudicial misconduct and five additional instances of improper action. The judge's conduct in meeting with victims in pending criminal actions outside the presence of counsel, even though he may have been acting in good faith, violated Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canon 2A, and constituted prejudicial misconduct. The judge's conduct in putting his hands on a division chief's face and saying "You're so cute" violated Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canon 3B(4). The judge's comments to a public defender about her client, in the context that they were made, could have raised questions in the mind of an objective observer regarding the judge's impartiality and violated canon 2A. The judge's inappropriate remarks about defendants who appeared before him in prostitution cases were undignified, violated canon 3B(4), and constituted improper action. The judge's comments thanking counsel at sidebar for not exercising a challenge against a female juror because she was nice to look at violated Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canons 1 and 2A. The judge's conduct in helping find dates for an attorney regularly appearing in his court violated canon 2A. (Opinion by Frederick P. Horn, Vice-chairperson.)

HEADNOTES

(1) Judges § 6—Discipline—Purpose of Proceedings.—The purpose of disciplinary proceedings before the Commission on Judicial Performance

*The Commission on Judicial Performance (Commission) decision and order entered March 23, 2005, was modified by order entered March 28, 2005. The modifications did not have an effect on the order imposing discipline.

is not to punish, but instead to protect the public, assure the evenhanded and efficient administration of justice, and maintain public confidence in the integrity of the judicial system. The commission reviews the evidence, adopts findings of fact and conclusions of law, and imposes discipline in furtherance of these goals.

(2) Judges § 6—Discipline—Willful or Prejudicial Misconduct—Censure or Removal—Admonishment—Improper Action.—The Commission on Judicial Performance may censure or remove a judge or former judge for willful misconduct or prejudicial misconduct (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (d)). In addition, the commission may publicly or privately admonish a judge or former judge for improper action.

(3) Judges § 6—Discipline—Willful Misconduct—Elements.—Willful misconduct by a judge is unjudicial conduct committed in bad faith by a judge acting in his or her judicial capacity. To support a finding of bad faith, the evidence must establish that the judge performed a judicial act (1) for a corrupt purpose, i.e., any purpose other than the faithful discharge of judicial duties, (2) with knowledge that the act is beyond the judge's lawful judicial power, or (3) exceeding the judge's lawful power with a conscious disregard for the limits of the judge's authority.

(4) Judges § 6—Discipline—Prejudicial Misconduct—Definition.—Prejudicial misconduct by a judge does not require proof of bad faith, but instead consists of acts that a judge undertakes in good faith but which would nevertheless appear to an objective observer to be unjudicial and prejudicial to public esteem for the judicial office. It is not necessary to prove actual notoriety, but only that the conduct, if known to an objective observer, would appear to be prejudicial to public esteem for the judicial office. The subjective intent or motivation of the judge is not a significant factor in assessing whether prejudicial misconduct has occurred. This objective standard is consistent with the California Supreme Court's holdings in judicial discipline cases, and with Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canon 2, which provides that a judge shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary.

(5) Judges § 6—Discipline—Code of Judicial Ethics—Appropriate Behavior.—The failure of a judge to comply with the canons suggests performance below the minimum level necessary to maintain public confidence in the administration of justice.

(6) Judges § 6—Discipline—Special Masters—Factual Determinations and Legal Conclusions.—When special masters are appointed pursuant to Rules of Com. on Jud. Performance, rule 121(b), they are tasked with making findings of fact and conclusions of law, but they do not make recommendations as to discipline. The California Supreme Court recognizes the expertise of the Commission on Judicial Performance in evaluating judicial misconduct, and gives great weight to the commission's conclusions of law. At the same time, however, special weight should be given to the factual determinations of the special masters because the masters have the advantage of observing the demeanor of the witnesses. Nonetheless, the California Constitution vests in the commission the power to impose judicial discipline, subject to discretionary review by the Supreme Court. Thus, the commission may determine that it is appropriate to disregard the findings of fact and conclusions of law made by the special masters and make its own findings and conclusions.

(7) Judges § 6—Discipline—Evidence.—The Evidence Code is applicable to all hearings before the Commission on Judicial Performance or the special masters (Rules of Com. on Jud. Performance, rule 125(a)). There must be clear and convincing evidence to a reasonable certainty to sustain the charges. The evidence need not establish a fact beyond a reasonable doubt, but must be so clear as to leave no substantial doubt and sufficiently strong to command the unhesitating assent of every reasonable mind.

(8) Judges § 6—Prejudicial Misconduct—Inviting Victim to Dinner.—The judge's conduct in inviting a victim to dine with him after presiding over the sentencing hearing violated Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canon 2A and constituted prejudicial misconduct.

(9) Judges § 6—Discipline—Prejudicial Misconduct—Meeting with Victim—Pending Criminal Action.—The judge's conduct in meeting with a victim in a pending criminal action outside the presence of counsel, even though the judge may have been acting in good faith, violated Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canon 2A, and constituted prejudicial misconduct.

[Cal. Forms of Pleading and Practice (2009) ch. 317, Judges, § 317.85.]

(10) Judges § 6—Improper Action—Comments Concerning Court Employee's Appearance.—The judge's conduct in making inappropriate personal comments to a court employee about her appearance violated Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canon 3B(4) and constituted improper action.

(11) Judges § 6—Prejudicial Misconduct—Comments Reflecting Lack of Impartiality.—The judge's comment to a public defender that the defendant only wanted a jury trial so he could sit next to her for three days violated Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canon 2A and constituted prejudicial misconduct.

(12) Judges § 6—Improper Action—Inappropriate Comments About Criminal Defendants.—The judge's comment that a criminal defendant would look okay if she had her teeth straightened and inappropriate comment about another criminal defendant's medical condition violated Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canon 3B(4) and constituted improper action.

(13) Judges § 6—Prejudicial Misconduct—Inappropriate Comment Concerning a Juror.—The judge's comment thanking counsel for not challenging a female juror because she was nice to look at constituted prejudicial misconduct and violated Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canons 1 and 2A.

(14) Judges § 6—Improper Action—Inappropriate Conduct Toward Females.—The judge engaged in improper action and violated Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canon 1 by pressuring a female attorney who regularly appeared before him for a lunch date, and asking female security officers to search him in chambers.

(15) Judges § 6—Improper Action—Tossing Court File at Attorney.—The judge who tossed a court file toward an attorney, asked her if she was going to smoke confiscated cigarettes, and said he was selective in throwing things at attorneys engaged in improper action and violated Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canons 1, 2A, and 3B(4).

(16) Judges § 6—Prejudicial Misconduct—Disclosure.—The judge engaged in prejudicial conduct by failing to disclose his social relationship with an attorney appearing before him.

(17) Judges § 9—Disqualification—Disclosure.—Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canon 3E(2), provides that a judge shall disclose on the record information that the judge believes the parties or their lawyers might consider relevant to the question of disqualification, even if the judge believes there is no actual basis for disqualification.

(18) Judges § 6—Discipline—Factors.—While it is not an exhaustive list, the Commission on Judicial Performance has identified five factors relevant to its determination of the appropriate level of discipline: (1) the number of acts of misconduct or improper action; (2) prior discipline against the judge; (3) evidence that the judge recognizes the inappropriateness of his or her actions; (4) the likelihood that the judge will continue to engage in misconduct or improper action; and (5) the impact of the judge's conduct on the judicial system.

OPINION

HORN, Vice-chairperson.—This disciplinary matter concerns John D. Harris, a former judge of the Superior Court of California for the County of Los Angeles. Judge Harris began his judicial career as a judge of the Los Angeles County Municipal Court in October 1984, and began serving as a judge in the superior court in January 1999. Judge Harris retired from the bench in 2004.

Based on the admissions made by Judge Harris, the record in this case and the findings and conclusions of the special masters, we conclude that Judge Harris's conduct established in connection with count one A, count one B, count two D, count two F and count four constituted prejudicial misconduct, and that his conduct established in connection with count two B, count two E, count two G, count two H and count three constituted improper action.

For reasons more fully set forth hereafter, we conclude that a public admonishment is appropriate.

Procedural History

Formal proceedings in this matter commenced on February 18, 2004, with the filing of a notice of formal proceedings setting forth five counts. On March 4, 2004, Judge Harris filed his verified answer.

Pursuant to rule 121(b) of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance, the California Supreme Court appointed three special masters to conduct an evidentiary hearing and issue a written report: the Honorable Eileen C. Moore from the Court of Appeal for the Fourth Appellate District, Division Three; the Honorable Patrick J. Morris from the Superior Court of California for the County of San Bernardino; and the Honorable Henry J. Walsh from the Superior Court of California for the County of Ventura. An evidentiary hearing was held in Pasadena commencing on May 24, 2004, and concluding on May 28, 2004, and the special masters filed their report to the Commission on August 12, 2004.

The Commission heard the matter on January 26, 2005. The participating commission members included Justice Vance W. Raye, chairperson, Judge Frederick P. Horn, Michael A. Kahn, Mrs. Crystal Lui, Ms. Patricia Miller, Jose C. Miramontes, Ms. Penny Perez, Judge Risë Jones Pichon and Ms. Barbara Schraeger. Marshall B. Grossman recused himself. Andrew Blum appeared for the examiner, and former Judge John D. Harris appeared with his counsel, Edward P. George, Jr.

Governing Law

(1) The purpose of Commission proceedings is not to punish, but instead to protect the public, assure the evenhanded and efficient administration of justice, and maintain public confidence in the integrity of the judicial system. (Kloepfer v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1989) 49 Cal.3d 826, 864–865 [264 Cal.Rptr. 100, 782 P.2d 239].) The Commission reviews the evidence, adopts findings of fact and conclusions of law, and imposes discipline in furtherance of these goals.

(2) The notice of formal proceedings filed with the Commission on February 18, 2004, charged Judge Harris with (1) willful misconduct in office, (2) conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute, and (3) improper action. (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18.) The Commission may censure or remove a judge or former judge for willful misconduct or prejudicial misconduct. (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (d).) In addition, the Commission may publicly or privately admonish a judge or former judge for improper action. (Ibid.)

(3) Willful misconduct is unjudicial conduct committed in bad faith by a judge acting in his judicial capacity. (Fletcher v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1998) 19 Cal.4th 865, 877–878 [81 Cal.Rptr.2d 58, 968 P.2d 958] (Fletcher).) To support a finding of bad faith, the evidence must establish that the judge performed a judicial act (1) for a corrupt purpose, i.e., any purpose other than the faithful discharge of judicial duties, (2) with knowledge that the act is beyond the judge's lawful judicial power, or (3) exceeding the judge's lawful power with a conscious disregard for the limits of the judge's authority. (Fletcher, supra, 19 Cal.4th at p. 878.)

(4) Prejudicial misconduct does not require proof of bad faith, but instead consists of acts that a judge undertakes in good faith but which would nevertheless appear to an objective observer to be unjudicial and prejudicial to public esteem for the judicial office. (Fletcher, supra, 19 Cal.4th at p. 878.) It is not necessary to prove actual notoriety, but only that the conduct, if known to an objective observer, would appear to be prejudicial to public esteem for the judicial office. (Adams v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1995) 10 Cal.4th 866, 878 [42 Cal.Rptr.2d 606, 897 P.2d 544] (Adams II).) The subjective intent or motivation of the judge is not a significant factor in assessing whether prejudicial misconduct has occurred. (Ibid.) This objective standard is consistent with the California Supreme Court's holdings in judicial discipline cases, and with canon 2 of the California Code of Judicial Ethics, which provides that a judge shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary. (Ryan v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1988) 45 Cal.3d 518, 531 [247 Cal.Rptr. 378, 754 P.2d 724]; see also Advisory Com. com., Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canon 2A [a judge must avoid the "appearance" of impropriety].)

(5) The canons of the California Code of Judicial Ethics reflect a judicial consensus regarding appropriate behavior for California judges. (Adams v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1994) 8 Cal.4th 630, 661 [34 Cal.Rptr.2d 641, 882 P.2d 358] (Adams I).) The failure of a judge to comply with the canons " 'suggests performance below the minimum level necessary to maintain public confidence in the administration of justice.' " (Adams I, supra, 8 Cal.4th at pp. 661–662, quoting Kloepfer v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 49 Cal.3d at p. 838, fn. 6.)

A violation of a canon of the California Code of Judicial Ethics may form the basis for a determination of willful or prejudicial misconduct if the violation was committed intentionally or recklessly, or if the violation constituted unjudicial conduct or conduct prejudicial to public esteem for the judicial office. But even if the violation of a canon does not rise to the level of willful or prejudicial misconduct, it would still constitute improper action within the meaning of article VI, section 18, subdivision (d) of the California Constitution. (See, e.g., Adams II, supra, 10 Cal.4th at p. 899.)

(6) When special masters are appointed pursuant to rule 121(b) of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance, they are tasked with making findings of fact and conclusions of law, but they do not make recommendations as to discipline. (Rules of Com. on Jud. Performance, rule 129(d).) The Supreme Court recognizes the expertise of the Commission in evaluating judicial misconduct, and gives great weight to the Commission's conclusions of law. At the same time, however, special weight should be given to the factual determinations of the special masters because the masters have the advantage of observing the demeanor of the witnesses. (Fletcher, supra, 19 Cal.4th at p. 878; Broadman v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1998) 18 Cal.4th 1079, 1090 [77 Cal.Rptr.2d 408, 959 P.2d 715].) Nonetheless, the California Constitution vests in the Commission the power to impose judicial discipline, subject to review by the Supreme Court. Thus, the Commission may determine that it is appropriate to disregard the findings of fact and conclusions of law made by the special masters and make its own findings and conclusions. (Geiler v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1973) 10 Cal.3d 270, 275 [110 Cal.Rptr. 201, 515 P.2d 1].)

(7) The Evidence Code is applicable to all hearings before the Commission or the special masters. (Rules of Com. on Jud. Performance, rule 125(a).) There must be clear and convincing evidence to sustain the charges to a reasonable certainty. (Fletcher, supra, 19 Cal.4th at p. 878; Broadman v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 18 Cal.4th at p. 1090; Geiler v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications, supra, 10 Cal.3d at p. 275.) The evidence need not establish a fact beyond a reasonable doubt, but must be so clear as to leave no substantial doubt and sufficiently strong to command the unhesitating assent of every reasonable mind. (Broadman, supra, 18 Cal.4th at p. 1090.)

Findings And Conclusions

Count One A

In June and July 2000, Judge Harris presided over People v. Tellez, case No. BA1999915. The Tellez case was a felony sexual assault trial in which the defendant was charged with molesting his niece, Kassandra G. During the presentation of evidence, Judge Harris suggested to the attorneys that he meet with Kassandra to commend her courage in testifying. Because the defense counsel objected, the judge did not meet with Kassandra at that time. However, immediately after the verdict and prior to the sentencing hearing,[1] Judge Harris initiated a meeting with Kassandra in chambers. The meeting occurred outside the presence of the prosecutor and the defense counsel. During the meeting with Kassandra, Judge Harris commended her bravery, told her that her testimony was believable, told her that he could be part of her family, and stated, "I could be your grandfather." He told her, "if I can ever do anything to help you, or if you need a letter of recommendation to help get into college, please let me know." Based on Judge Harris's meeting with the victim, the Court of Appeal issued a writ of habeas corpus vacating the sentence that Judge Harris imposed, and remanding the case for sentencing before a different judge.

Judge Harris may have been motivated by humanitarian concerns in meeting with Kassandra, but as Judge Harris acknowledged during his testimony, his meeting with the victim could give the appearance of impropriety. Judge Harris's comments to a witness in a pending criminal proceeding that "I can be part of your family" and "I can be your grandfather," and his comment to her to let him know if "I can ever do anything to help you," could raise questions in the mind of an objective observer regarding the judge's impartiality in the pending case.

[1] The notice of formal proceedings, which originally alleged that the judge's meeting with the victim occurred after the sentencing hearing, was amended to allege that the meeting took place prior to the sentencing hearing.

Contrary to the masters, we find no evidence in the record to support a finding of an emergency that would require a private meeting in chambers between the judge and a witness in a pending criminal proceeding outside the presence of counsel. Nor is there evidence in the record establishing that Judge Harris made provision to promptly notify all other parties of the substance of the communications in the meeting, giving them an opportunity to respond. (See Cal. Code Jud. Ethics, canon 3B(7)(d)(ii).)

(8) We conclude that Judge Harris's conduct in meeting with a witness in a pending criminal action outside the presence of counsel, even though the judge may have been acting in good faith, would nevertheless appear to an objective observer to be unjudicial and prejudicial to public esteem for the judicial office. We conclude that Judge Harris's conduct violated canon 2A of the California Code of Judicial Ethics and constituted prejudicial misconduct.[2] (See Fletcher, supra, 19 Cal.4th at p. 878.)

Count One B

In August and September 2000, Judge Harris presided over a felony sexual assault trial in People v. Lopez, case No. BA196885. In the Lopez case, the defendant was charged with multiple counts of rape. The victim was an attorney identified as Jane Doe. Immediately after the sentencing hearing, without notifying defense counsel, Judge Harris initiated a meeting with the victim in chambers. During the meeting Judge Harris praised Ms. Doe for her bravery in testifying at trial, and told her that if there was anything he could do to help her in the future, she should call him. Judge Harris also invited Ms. Doe to have dinner with his family. When the victim later called Judge Harris to accept his invitation for dinner, Judge Harris suggested that instead of dining at his home, the two of them dine at a mutually convenient place. The victim later called to cancel the dinner.

(9) Judge Harris concedes that he had an improper ex parte communication with the victim and that his conduct gave the appearance of impropriety and led to diminished esteem for the court. Once again, Judge Harris may have been motivated by compassion for the victim. But his ex parte invitation to a victim in a pending criminal proceeding to call him if there was anything he could do to help her could raise questions in the mind of an objective observer regarding the judge's impartiality in the pending case. We conclude that Judge Harris's conduct in meeting with a victim in a pending criminal action outside the presence of all counsel, even though the judge may have been acting in good faith, would nevertheless appear to an objective observer to be unjudicial and prejudicial to public esteem for the judicial office. We conclude that Judge Harris's conduct violated canon 2A of the California Code of Judicial Ethics and constituted prejudicial misconduct.

[2] Canon 2A of the California Code of Judicial Ethics provides: "A judge shall respect and comply with the law and shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary." (Fn. omitted.)

Count Two A

Deputy Public Defender Obe Ozobu was assigned to Judge Harris's courtroom in 2002. In December of that year, while Ms. Ozobu was in the judge's chambers, Judge Harris showed her a Macy's department store advertisement and invited her to go to Macy's with him to look at jackets. He said they could also have lunch together. Ms. Ozobu declined the judge's invitation.

Ms. Ozobu did not testify at the hearing, and clear and convincing evidence supporting the allegations was not presented. The allegations of count two A were not established, and they are dismissed.

Count Two B

On January 28, 2003, Judge Harris was assigned to the Central Arraignment Courthouse to work temporarily in Division 82. Upon arriving at the courthouse, Judge Harris was greeted by Division Chief Bettina Rodriguez, who had just returned from a lunchtime workout and was wearing exercise clothes. When Ms. Rodriguez apologized for her attire, Judge Harris told her she looked okay. Judge Harris then placed his hands on Ms. Rodriguez's face and said, "You're so cute." Judge Harris again encountered Ms. Rodriguez after she had changed into professional clothing and told her, "You looked okay then, you look even better now."[3]

(10) We conclude that Judge Harris's conduct in putting his hands on Ms. Rodriguez's face and saying "You're so cute" violated canon 3B(4) of the California Code of Judicial Ethics,[4] and constituted improper action. We concur with the masters that Judge Harris's other statements could be subject to differing interpretations; there is no clear and convincing evidence that the other statements, considered in context, violated the canons of judicial ethics, as alleged.

Count Two C

On February 4, 2003, Judge Harris presided over jury selection in People v. Sao, case No. 2CR10835, a case in which the defendant was alleged to have [3] Clear and convincing evidence was not submitted to support the allegation that Judge Harris stared at the derriere of Ms. Rodriguez.

[4] Canon 3B(4) of the California Code of Judicial Ethics provides in pertinent part: "A judge shall be patient, dignified, and courteous to litigants, jurors, witnesses, lawyers, and others with whom the judge deals in an official capacity . . . ."

followed, grabbed, and exposed himself to two young women. During jury selection, the deputy city attorney asked prospective jurors whether anyone had made a pass at them that made them uncomfortable. The attorney then directed a question to the prospective male jurors, asking, "Has there been a woman that made a pass at you and react [sic] in anger?" Judge Harris then stated, "Did some woman make a pass at you and get you angry? I've been waiting for that to happen to myself."

Given the context of the proceeding, Judge Harris showed poor judgment in making the statement, and his comment also reflects a troubling pattern of insensitivity to women. Nonetheless, when count two C is viewed in isolation, we cannot conclude that there is clear and convincing evidence establishing violations of canons 1, 2A, 3B(4) or 3B(5) of the California Code of Judicial Ethics, as alleged. We concur with the masters that the allegations of count two C were not established by clear and convincing evidence, and they are dismissed.

Count Two D

In March 2003, Deputy Public Defender Glendy Ruiz appeared before Judge Harris for trial in People v. del Corral, case No. 3CR00003. Before trial began, there was a discussion in Judge Harris's chambers regarding the possible disposition of the case. Judge Harris told Ms. Ruiz to talk to her client about a plea bargain. When Ms. Ruiz said her client wanted a jury trial, Judge Harris told her the guilty plea would only be a technicality and "doesn't really matter." When Ms. Rodriguez told the judge it did matter because her client was not guilty, Judge Harris responded, "The real reason is that [the defendant] wants to sit next to you for three days."

(11) We conclude that Judge Harris's comments, in the context that they were made, could raise questions in the mind of an objective observer regarding the judge's impartiality in the pending case. We further conclude that even though the judge may have been acting in good faith, his comments would nevertheless appear to an objective observer to be unjudicial and prejudicial to public esteem for the judicial office. Judge Harris's conduct violated canon 2A of the California Code of Judicial Ethics, and constituted prejudicial misconduct.

Count Two E

(12) Between October 2002 and April 2003, Judge Harris made inappropriate comments about defendants who appeared before him in criminal prostitution cases. In one case, a defendant who had a pelvic disorder appeared before the judge. After the defendant left the courtroom, Judge

Harris discussed her medical condition in open court and said "caveat emptor." In another case, after the defendant left the courtroom, Judge Harris said to counsel in open court, "She would look okay if she had her teeth straightened." In both instances the comments were made in the courtroom in the presence of numerous court staff and attorneys. We concur with the masters that Judge Harris's remarks were undignified, violated canon 3B(4) of the California Code of Judicial Ethics, and constituted improper action.

Count Two F

In March 2003, Judge Harris presided over the jury trial in People v. Alvarez, case No. 3CR04253. Upon completion of jury selection, Judge Harris thanked counsel at sidebar for not exercising a challenge against a female juror because she was nice to look at.

(13) We conclude that Judge Harris's comment could raise questions in the mind of an objective observer regarding whether the judge might be motivated by personal interests during the case. We further conclude that even though the judge may have made the comment as a joke, and was acting in good faith, his comment would nevertheless appear to an objective observer to be unjudicial and prejudicial to public esteem for the judicial office. The conduct violated canons 1 and 2A of the California Code of Judicial Ethics,[5] and constituted prejudicial misconduct.

Count Two G

Deputy Alternate Public Defender Jean Costanza made a number of appearances in Judge Harris's courtroom. In April 2003, Judge Harris complimented her on her good work and they discussed her background. Judge Harris said he enjoyed talking with her and that he would be happy to have lunch with her. Ms. Costanza replied that she would be in trial forever, but Judge Harris pressed her with further questions. Ms. Costanza declined lunch again, saying she "just ate peanuts," to which Judge Harris replied that he could check with her boss to make sure she was in trial.

Even if Judge Harris's intentions were completely innocent, as the masters found, his conduct in asking followup questions to probe her intentions placed Ms. Costanza in the awkward position of having to respond to the repeated personal questions of a judge in whose court she regularly appeared.

[5] Canon 1 of the California Code of Judicial Ethics provides in pertinent part that a judge "should participate in establishing, maintaining, and enforcing high standards of conduct, and shall personally observe those standards so that the integrity and independence of the judiciary will be preserved."

Assistant Supervising Judge C. H. Rehm counseled Judge Harris in 2002 about meeting alone with young women lawyers, but rather than gleaning the larger lesson from that discussion, Judge Harris apparently took Judge Rehm literally, testifying that he did not consider Ms. Costanza to be a young attorney. Judge Harris's tendency toward literal interpretation of comments made to him is troubling. The judge testified that he also interpreted Ms. Costanza's comments literally and not as a sign of rejection, saying "I took her relatively literally that she was going to be in trial for the rest of her life." While this sounds implausible, the masters were in the best position to evaluate the credibility of witnesses. Nonetheless, Judge Harris's apparent tendency toward literal interpretation suggests that he did not fully grasp the import of what Judge Rehm was trying to tell him in 2002.

(14) We conclude that in pressing an attorney who regularly appeared before him for a lunch appointment, Judge Harris failed to maintain and personally observe high standards of conduct so that the integrity of the judiciary would be preserved, in violation of canon 1 of the California Code of Judicial Ethics, and that his conduct constituted improper action.

Count Two H

On October 21, 2003, at the weapons screening area of the South Gate Courthouse, Judge Harris approached two female security officers. Judge Harris placed his hands against the wall and asked if they were going to search him. At the time, there were approximately 30 to 35 people in line. Judge Harris then asked if he could choose who would search him, and said he wanted to be searched in chambers. This incident occurred after Judge Harris was counseled by Assistant Supervising Judge Rehm about his inappropriate conduct toward women.

Judge Harris's conduct delayed others waiting for security clearance. We concur with the masters that it was inappropriate for Judge Harris to make fun of an event that the public is expected to take seriously, that Judge Harris's conduct was not suitable for a judicial officer in a public setting, and that his conduct violated canon 3B(4) of the California Code of Judicial Ethics. We conclude that his conduct constituted improper action.

Count Three

The allegations of count three pertain to conduct by Judge Harris in his interactions with Deputy City Attorney Chadd Kim while she was in his courtroom for the cases People v. Castillo, case No. 2CR02465, and People v. Bolden, case No. 2CR13235, and for his actions in response to a Code of Civil Procedure section 170.6 challenge filed by Ms. Kim in People v. Bautista, case No. 2CR02345.

On October 28, 2002, Ms. Kim appeared before Judge Harris for the first time in Castillo. When Ms. Kim approached the bench to help the judge find the complaint in the court file, Judge Harris tossed the file toward her. The file came apart on the floor.

On February 5, 2003, Ms. Kim appeared before Judge Harris in Bolden. Ms. Kim indicated there would be a disposition involving the forfeiture of a large amount of seized cigarettes. Judge Harris asked, "Are you going to smoke them yourself?"

On February 20, 2003, Ms. Kim appeared before Judge Harris in Bautista. After she filed a challenge to the judge under Code of Civil Procedure section 170.6, Judge Harris asked her to make a record of her reasons for filing the challenge. After Ms. Kim explained her reasons, Judge Harris agreed to transfer the case to another department. However, while Ms. Kim was still in the courtroom, Judge Harris said to the deputy city attorney in the next case, "Would you like to join your colleague in filing some paper?" Judge Harris added, "I didn't toss any files at you or near you, did I?" When the attorney said "no," Judge Harris responded, "No, I try to be selective when I throw things."

Judge Harris said he now realizes that "[a]ny comment about any party, litigant, witness appearing in court should not be made by a judge, because the judge's humor can be misinterpreted. It may not be funny to the observer and it might tend to embarrass somebody who is there." Judge Harris also admitted that his actions in response to the Code of Civil Procedure section 170.6 challenge were inappropriate and that he "should have immediately acted upon the challenge without questioning her," and that "an affidavit of prejudice should never be questioned and should be immediately transferred."

(15) We agree with Judge Harris. When he tossed the court file toward Ms. Kim, asked her if she was going to smoke confiscated cigarettes, and said he was selective in throwing things at attorneys, he did not reflect a patient, dignified or courteous demeanor. Moreover, when Judge Harris pressed Ms. Kim to prove up her Code of Civil Procedure section 170.6 challenge and questioned the other attorney about making a second challenge, an objective observer might have questioned whether Judge Harris had become personally embroiled in his interactions with Ms. Kim. (See Fletcher, supra, 19 Cal.4th at pp. 902, 905–906, 917.) Judge Harris failed to maintain a high standard of conduct so that the integrity of the judiciary is preserved, and his actions did not promote public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary. We conclude that Judge Harris's conduct violated canons 1, 2A and 3B(4) of the California Code of Judicial Ethics, and constituted improper action.

Count Four

(16) In 2002 and 2003, Deputy City Attorney Matthew Schonbrun regularly appeared before Judge Harris. Mr. Schonbrun frequently went into Judge Harris's chambers and they discussed Mr. Schonbrun's social life. Mr. Schonbrun said he was having trouble meeting "nice Jewish girls." Over the next several months, Judge Harris gave Mr. Schonbrun the telephone numbers of three different women. Mr. Schonbrun later reported to Judge Harris about the dates he had with the three women. Judge Harris also showed Mr. Schonbrun another woman's business card and identification photo to see if Mr. Schonbrun would be interested in dating her. Notwithstanding his relationship with Mr. Schonbrun, Judge Harris did not disqualify himself from hearing Mr. Schonbrun's cases. Further, while Judge Harris disclosed various social relationships with others, he did not disclose his relationship with Schonbrun because he felt it would have been embarrassing.

In his testimony before the masters, Judge Harris shared his newfound conviction that "it was not appropriate to get involved in [Mr. Schonbrun's] social life." He also averred that "[i]f I had a social relationship, if I had gone to school with an attorney, if I had friends appear, if I attended some bar association function or dinner or meeting or program, if there was an attorney who was from that association who I recognized, I would tell the other side my relationship and ask them if they'd like to go somewhere else or stay here."

(17) Canon 3E(2) of the California Code of Judicial Ethics provides that "a judge shall disclose on the record information that the judge believes the parties or their lawyers might consider relevant to the question of disqualification, even if the judge believes there is no actual basis for disqualification." (Italics added.) Here, there is no clear and convincing evidence that Judge Harris believed the parties or the lawyers would consider the information relevant. Nonetheless, there is clear and convincing evidence that Judge Harris disclosed other social relationships he had with attorneys, but did not disclose this one because it would have embarrassed the attorney. As Judge Harris recognized, it was a mistake for him to find dates for an attorney regularly appearing in his court. Although there is no evidence of actual bias, we conclude that Judge Harris's conduct in helping Mr. Schonbrun find dates could raise questions in the mind of an objective observer regarding the judge's impartiality in cases handled by Mr. Schonbrun. We conclude that the judge's conduct did not promote public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary, in violation of canon 2A of the California Code of Judicial Ethics. We also conclude that his conduct would appear to an objective observer to be unjudicial and prejudicial to public esteem for the judicial office, and constituted prejudicial misconduct.

Count Five

In his response dated October 3, 2003, to the Commission's preliminary investigation letter, Judge Harris stated, "No Supervising Judge has ever spoken to me, counseled, criticized or reprimanded me concerning any of my conduct or behavior towards any person." Contrary to this statement, on December 24, 2002, Judge Rehm, assistant supervising judge of the criminal courts, counseled Judge Harris after concerns were raised about his interactions with young, female attorneys. Further, on April 24, 2003, Judge Harris met with Presiding Judge Robert A. Dukes, Assistant Presiding Judge William McLaughlin, Supervising Judge Dan Oki and Judge Rehm and was advised of recent complaints asserting that he had persisted in asking female attorneys to lunch, and that he made comments about a court employee's body.

Judge Harris's response to the Commission therefore was false and misleading. Nonetheless, the masters concluded that Judge Harris inadvertently made a misstatement. While we would expect a judge to exercise greater care in preparing a response to the Commission's preliminary investigation letter, we defer to the finding of the masters that this was an inadvertent error, as the masters were in the best position to evaluate the credibility of the witnesses. We conclude there is no clear and convincing evidence establishing a violation of canons 1 or 2A of the California Code of Judicial Ethics, or misconduct within the meaning of article VI, section 18, subdivision (d) of the California Constitution. The charge in count five is dismissed.

Recommended Level of Discipline

(18) While it is not an exhaustive list, the Commission has identified five factors relevant to its determination of the appropriate level of discipline: (1) the number of acts of misconduct or improper action; (2) prior discipline against the judge; (3) evidence that the judge recognizes the inappropriateness of his or her actions; (4) the likelihood that the judge will continue to engage in misconduct or improper action; and (5) the impact of the judge's conduct on the judicial system. (Inquiry Concerning Judge Van Voorhis (2003) No. 165, Decision and Order of Removal, p. 31 [48 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 257, 295].)

Applying the foregoing factors in order, we have concluded in this proceeding that Judge Harris engaged in five acts of prejudicial misconduct and five additional instances of improper action.[6] As for prior discipline, there is no record of prior discipline against the judge.

[6] Prejudicial misconduct was established in count one A, count one B, count two D, count two F and count four. Improper action was established in count two B, count two E, count two G, count two H and count three.

As to whether the judge recognizes the inappropriateness of his actions, the record is mixed. In some instances the explanations given by the judge for his conduct suggest that he does not fully grasp the implications of his actions. In addition, the record indicates he continued such conduct even after Judge Rehm counseled him about it. In other instances, however, the judge quickly acknowledged that his conduct was inappropriate. The masters found that Judge Harris voluntarily took sensitivity training and that he learned a great deal from this counseling.

Regarding the chances for future misconduct, Judge Harris informed the Commission that he retired at the end of October 2004, and he made the following representation to the Commission: "I do not now, and I do not in the future, intend to apply for a seat assignment as a retired judge. I realize my career has concluded as a bench officer." The Commission accepts this representation.

Nonetheless, the impact of the judge's conduct on the judicial system was not insignificant. The conduct established in count one received media attention and the Court of Appeal issued a writ of habeas corpus vacating the sentence in the Tellez case. Judge Rehm felt compelled to counsel Judge Harris in 2002. In addition, there was a "flurry" of court activity devoted to addressing Judge Harris's conduct in 2003, and Judge Dukes felt it necessary to write to the Commission and transfer Judge Harris to South Gate.

But there is also a great deal of evidence in mitigation. The masters repeatedly referenced the numerous witnesses who testified to the judge's good nature and character, and also to his long, distinguished career as a judge.

Considering the totality of these circumstances, we conclude that a public admonishment is appropriate in this case. The factors discussed above, especially when considered in light of prior decisions, indicate that censure or removal are not called for here. (See, e.g., Inquiry Concerning Gibson (2000) No. 152 [48 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 112] [public admonishment]; Inquiry Concerning Willoughby (2000) No. 154 [48 Cal.4th CJP Supp. 145] [public censure].) Nonetheless, in light of the media attention surrounding Judge Harris's conduct and the impact his conduct had on the judicial system, we conclude that a public, rather than private, admonishment is warranted.

This decision and order shall constitute the order of public admonishment of Judge Harris.

The following Commission members voted in favor of public admonishment: Justice Vance W. Raye, Judge Frederick P. Horn, Mr. Michael A. Kahn, Mrs. Crystal Lui, Ms. Patricia Miller, Mr. Jose C. Miramontes, Mrs. Penny Perez, Judge Risë Jones Pichon and Ms. Barbara Schraeger. There were no votes opposed.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA

BEFORE THE COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

| IN THE MATTER CONCERNING JUDGE DONALD R. ALVAREZ | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT |
|---|---|

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge Donald R. Alvarez, a judge of the San Bernardino County Superior Court since 2001. Judge Alvarez and his attorney, Edward P. George, Jr., appeared before the commission on December 14, 2005 pursuant to rule 116 of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance to contest the imposition of a public admonishment. Having considered the written and oral objections and argument submitted by Judge Alvarez and his counsel, and good cause appearing, the Commission on Judicial Performance issues this public admonishment pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution, based upon the following Statement of Facts and Reasons:

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

Judge Alvarez is a judge of the San Bernardino County Superior Court. His term commenced in June 2001.

On October 5, 2003, around 6:30 p.m., Judge Alvarez was stopped by the California Highway Patrol in San Bernardino County for speeding on Interstate 215. Judge Alvarez was arrested, and a blood sample was drawn at 7:45 p.m. On October 17, 2003, the judge was charged with the misdemeanors of driving under the influence of alcohol and driving with a blood alcohol level of .08 percent or more (California Vehicle Code sections 23152(a) and (b)). The result of the test of the blood sample by the San Bernardino County Sheriff's Department laboratory of criminalistics was a blood alcohol level of .14 percent.

On January 28, 2004, Judge Alvarez entered a no contest plea to driving under the influence of alcohol, in violation of California Vehicle Code section 23152(a), and was found guilty and convicted of that charge. (The charge of violating Vehicle Code section 23152(b) was dismissed.) Judge Alvarez was placed on three years of informal probation, ordered to attend an alcohol program, pay a mandatory fine and comply with other conditions of probation.

Judge Alvarez's unlawful action described above evidences a serious disregard of the principles of personal and official conduct embodied in the California Code of Judicial Ethics, including failure to observe high standards of conduct so that the integrity and independence of the judiciary will be preserved (canon 1), and failure to respect and comply with the law and to act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary (canon 2). Judge Alvarez's unlawful action also constitutes conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute. (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (d).)

Judge Alvarez further violated the Code of Judicial Ethics by failing to report the filing of the charges and his conviction to the Commission on Judicial Performance. Canon 3(D)(3) provides that a "judge who is charged … or convicted of a crime in the United States … including all misdemeanors involving … the personal use … of alcohol, shall promptly and in writing report that fact to the Commission on Judicial Performance." This matter came to the attention of the commission from a source other than Judge Alvarez. The commission wrote to the judge about this matter on May 26, 2004, which was four months after his conviction and over seven months after charges were filed; as of that time Judge Alvarez had not reported to the commission.

In his August 2, 2004 response to the commission's preliminary investigation letter, Judge Alvarez stated, "The issue was never whether I should self-report, but when. It was never clear to me when the report should be made." (Emphasis in original.) Judge Alvarez further stated in his August 2004 response that it was his intention to self report upon completion of all post-disposition conditions of probation, including the alcohol program, which was required to be completed by August 15, 2004, in order to "report the entire complete case to the commission." (Emphasis in original.)

Canon 3D(3) clearly and unambiguously mandates a prompt report to the commission upon being charged or upon being convicted. Judge Alvarez reported neither event. Further, on at least two occasions, before and shortly after he was convicted, Judge Alvarez was told by then Presiding Judge J. Michael Welch and Presiding Judge Peter Norell that he must self report. Under these circumstances, the commission finds untenable the notion that the reporting obligation of canon 3D(3) would be satisfied by deferring reporting until some other occasion of the judge's choice, such as in this case, after the completion of all conditions of probation.

During Judge Alvarez's appearance before the commission, he apologized for driving while intoxicated and appeared truly remorseful and contrite over the incident itself, concerning which he accepted full responsibility. Nonetheless, the judge's failure to self report as described above was at a minimum improper action within the meaning of article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution.

The self-reporting requirement of canon 3D(3) assists the commission in fulfilling its constitutional mandate and in protecting the public. Under the Constitution, a judge charged with certain offenses is disqualified from acting as a judge. (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (a).) When a judge is convicted of certain charges, the commission is required to suspend the judge without pay and, if the conviction becomes final, the commission is required to remove the judge from office. (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (c).) A judge may also be censured or removed from office by the commission for "habitual intemperance in the use of intoxicants or drugs…." (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 18, subd. (d).) To protect the public, when a judge is charged with an alcohol-related charge, it is the commission's policy to investigate not only the charged incident but also whether there is a substance abuse problem that is affecting the judge's performance of judicial duties. A judge's failure to report as required by canon 3D(3) impedes the commission's performance of these constitutionally mandated duties. Therefore, it is critical that judges be prompt in fulfilling their reporting obligations under canon 3D(3).

Commission members Mr. Marshall B. Grossman, Judge Frederick P. Horn, Mr. Michael A. Kahn, Mrs. Crystal Lui, Justice Judith D. McConnell, Ms. Patricia Miller, Mrs. Penny Perez, Judge Risë Jones Pichon, and Ms. Barbara Schraeger voted to impose a public admonishment. Commission member Mr. Lawrence Simi is recused and commission member Mr. Jose C. Miramontes did not participate in this matter.

Dated: December 27, 2005

_____

Marshall B. Grossman
Chairperson

STATE OF CALIFORNIA

BEFORE THE COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

| IN THE MATTER CONCERNING JUDGE RUFFO ESPINOSA, JR. | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT |
|---|---|

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge Ruffo Espinosa, Jr., a judge of the Los Angeles County Superior Court. Judge Espinosa and his attorney, Edward P. George, Jr., appeared before the commission on February 1, 2006 pursuant to rule 116 of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance to contest the imposition of a public admonishment. Having considered the written and oral objections and argument submitted by Judge Espinosa and his counsel, and good cause appearing, the Commission on Judicial Performance issues this public admonishment pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution, based upon the following Statement of Facts and Reasons:

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

Judge Ruffo Espinosa, Jr., is a judge of the Los Angeles County Superior Court. His current term commenced in January 2001.

In the case of People v. Netterville, BA220480, which was before Judge Espinosa on October 30, 2003, October 31, 2003, January 29, 2004, and February 5, 2004, Judge Espinosa denied the defendant full opportunity to be heard through counsel regarding sentencing, treated defense counsel in a rude and impatient manner, and abused the contempt power by holding in contempt and immediately incarcerating an attorney who had sought to be heard on his client's behalf.

Defendant Netterville appeared before Judge Espinosa on a probation violation matter on October 30 and 31, 2003. On October 31, 2003, after finding the defendant in violation of probation, Judge Espinosa ordered a diagnostic study pursuant to Penal Code section 1203.03.

On January 29, 2004, the defendant was returned to court after the Department of Corrections had issued a report following the diagnostic study, recommending state prison. When Judge Espinosa asked defense counsel, Deputy Public Defender (DPD) Michael Pentz, if he wished to address the court, DPD Pentz presented his position that the recommendation from the Department of Corrections was "sort of a split decision[,]" (R.T. 1:27) with the psychologist's report recommending that the defendant be granted probation, to include conditions that he successfully complete alcohol and drug treatment programs, and the associate warden making the "official recommendation" (R.T. 2:17–18) of commitment to state prison. Judge Espinosa stated that he was "going to look at and consider the overall recommendation, which is that [the defendant is] not amenable [to probation]" (R.T. 2:25–26) because he had attempted to minimize his culpability and had expressed no remorse for stabbing his cohabitant. The judge then said:

> I have considered and read [the report], and I don't think I need to put more on the record so the Court does intend to follow the recommendations of the California Department of Corrections. [¶] Waive time for sentencing?

(R.T. 3:3–7.)

DPD Pentz said that he was still responding to the court's question as to whether he wished to be heard. DPD Pentz then pointed out that the warden's overall recommendation of state prison was based on a recommendation from a correctional counselor who had based his recommendation on incorrect information about the defendant's criminal history. DPD Pentz said that the counselor's report referred to a criminal history of over twenty years, although the defendant's first misdemeanor conviction was actually in 1995. Judge Espinosa stated that he did not have any trouble continuing the matter to get more complete information about the defendant's criminal history, and added that in view of the split decision and the defendant's minimal criminal history as set forth in the probation report, he would be "hard pressed" (R.T.6:3) to send him to prison based on his record. The matter was continued to February 5, 2004, and the prosecutor was asked to get more complete information about the defendant's criminal history.

At the beginning of the hearing on February 5, Judge Espinosa noted that the defendant had performed poorly on probation. He mentioned the conclusions of the Penal Code section 1203.03 report, and said that he had looked at various letters that had been submitted on the defendant's behalf. He considered a letter from the defendant. Addressing the defendant, the judge expressed concern about the defendant's "multiple arrests" (R.T. 3:16) for assaults, the previous conviction for which he was placed on probation, and the violence of the incident giving rise to the probation violation. Judge Espinosa told the defendant that stress was not an excuse for violence. He noted again that the defendant had not done well on probation. Judge Espinosa said that since the defendant's history was "not that aggravated" he would "offer" (R.T. 4:28) the mid-term of three years in state prison.

DPD Pentz asked to be heard. Judge Espinosa replied, "Of course, I'm going to allow you, but I'm just telling you how I view this. I want you to know that I'm willing to be swayed. Okay?" (R.T. 5:27–6:2.) The judge added:

> And I've been going on this case back and forth for quite a long time, and I'm tired. And the county, frankly, is under monetary restraints right now. What are we going to do, send him back to probation so he can do the same thing over and over again? [¶] You know, this gets old after a while so go ahead and make your pitch.

(R.T. 6:7–14.)

The prosecutor then reminded Judge Espinosa that he had asked her to check the defendant's record; she mentioned the defendant's three prior arrests in the 1980's as well as his misdemeanor conviction in 1995, another conviction in 1996, and his performance on probation. When asked to respond, DPD Pentz pointed out that an arrest cannot be considered "aggravating in any way." (R.T. 7:23.) Judge Espinosa said he agreed an arrest should not be used against a person, and then asked, "What if a person has ten arrests for the same offense over and over again. Isn't that a little unusual?" (R.T. 8:1-3.) DPD Pentz responded by describing the defendant as someone with a mental illness who tended to self-medicate with alcohol and sometimes with drugs. Judge Espinosa asked if someone who self-medicates with alcohol is "any less of a danger than someone that's just a bad guy?" (R.T. 8:25–26.) DPD Pentz said that someone who is mentally ill and self-medicates with alcohol "needs to be a part of a structured program that addresses those concerns." (R.T. 8:28–9:2.) Judge Espinosa noted that the defendant had previously been evaluated by a psychologist and psychiatrist; he said, "We had a 1368 [competence proceeding]." He added, "You know, frankly, I don't want to keep him on probation anymore." (R.T. 9:7–8.) Upon being informed by the prosecutor that the judge already had found the defendant in violation of probation, the judge said, "All right. So you know frankly, Counsel, let's stop wasting our breath." (R.T. 9:15–16.) He then said that he would impose a sentence of three years in state prison.

This exchange followed:

> MR. PENTZ: Your Honor, I'm sorry to interrupt the Court, but I've yet to speak to what is an appropriate sentence in this case.
>
> THE COURT: All right.
>
> MR. PENTZ: And I know the Court is busy, but I don't think speaking on behalf of my client is a waste of anybody's time.
>
> THE COURT: Counsel, I'm never too busy.

> MR. PENTZ: I would just ask the Court for leave to speak without interruption. The Court seems to have made up its mind, but I haven't had a chance --
>
> THE COURT: Frankly, I have made up my mind.
>
> MR. PENTZ: I got that from the last hearing when I was unable to speak, but now I really want to address the Court and on the record.
>
> THE COURT: I want it clear that you're addressing the Court for the benefit of the record.
>
> MR. PENTZ: Well, actually, I'm exercising my client's right to have him represented in court.
>
> THE COURT: It's not going to sway me to give him any less because I have considered this. I already know what you're going to say[,] frankly. [¶] You're going to talk about his mental illness, what a good guy he is, all the letters of recommendation, and so on and so forth, and I've taken all that into account. [¶] I've also taken into account the psychiatric reports, and I've looked at his history and his behavior while he has been on probation to me [sic], and yes, I do have a calendar. But if you want to make a record, I'll sit back, sway on my chair, and then you can put five minutes worth. All right? [¶] Go ahead.

(R.T. 9:26–11:4.)

DPD Pentz said that his remarks might not even take five minutes. He noted that resources were "stretched everywhere" (R.T. 11:10) and said that it would not help to lock the defendant up and then release him back into the community. Less than one minute after DPD Pentz began speaking, as he began to refer to a letter that had been submitted to the court, Judge Espinosa interrupted to ask when the defendant had been arrested, saying that he wanted to calculate his credits [for jail time already served]. DPD Pentz then mentioned "community reintegration" (R.T. 12:14) and rehabilitation, and began to describe a specific program he had looked into for the defendant:

> MR. PENTZ: What we do have in place is Mr. Netterville has people at Oasis House and a program whose funding and --
>
> THE COURT: Excuse me a second, sir. I have to calculate the credits because I know what I'm going to do. All right?

(R.T. 12:22–27.)

A discussion of credits followed. Judge Espinosa secured counsel's agreement as to the amount of credit, and this exchange followed.

> THE COURT: All right. Then Mr. Netterville, you are sentenced to --
>
> MR. PENTZ: Your Honor, the Court still has not allowed me to complete --
>
> THE COURT: Okay, Counsel --
>
> MR. PENTZ: I'm disheartened here.
>
> THE COURT: Counsel, you be quiet. I've made up my mind. I'm not going to listen -- one more peep out of you, and you're in contempt of court. Do you understand this?
>
> MR. PENTZ: I understand that.
>
> THE COURT: All right. Then be quiet.

(R.T. 14:3–14.)

Judge Espinosa proceeded to sentence the defendant to three years in state prison. When he finished, he said, "Next case." (R.T 15:15.) This exchange followed:

> MR. PENTZ: I'd like to state as [sic] an objection to these proceedings, Your Honor, with what I take to be the cavalier way with which this Court --
>
> THE COURT: All right, Counsel, that will be $50.00.
>
> MR. PENTZ: Your Honor, the Court is going to have to set --
>
> THE COURT: Do you want to go for a hundred?
>
> MR. PENTZ: If the Court can set it for $250, I want [a] hearing on it, and I want to order a transcript.
>
> THE COURT: That will be $250. You are sanctioned. That will be payable -- I'll give you a chance to appeal this.
>
> MR. PENTZ: Judge, I'm requesting a hearing.
>
> THE COURT: This is a direct --

> MR. PENTZ: I'm requesting a hearing. I hope the Court understands my request.
>
> THE COURT: Your request for a hearing is denied. You've already had a hearing. How many hearings do you want?
>
> MR. PENTZ: A hearing on an order to show cause is a fundamental law, Your Honor. I'm asking for that. I'll bring you the Penal Code -- the civil code section if you wish.
>
> THE COURT: This is a direct contempt of court, and you are ordered to pay the sum of -- what did we say? -- $250?
>
> MR. PENTZ: I think that was the last sum, yes.
>
> THE COURT: Payable by -- when can you pay that? -- or five days in the county jail. What do you want?
>
> MR. PENTZ: Judge, it's --
>
> THE COURT: All right. Do you want five days in the county jail?
>
> MR. PENTZ: I'm ready to surrender.
>
> THE COURT: Take him in. That's five days in the county jail, Counsel.

(R.T. 15:16–17:2.)

Attorney Pentz was removed from the courtroom and taken to a holding cell. After unrelated matters were heard, Mr. Pentz appeared before Judge Espinosa, represented by Chief Deputy Public Defender Greg Fisher. Judge Espinosa told DPD Pentz that he had given the judge no alternative but to remove him from the courtroom; Judge Espinosa said that Mr. Pentz had continued to disobey the court after being warned, and had "openly insulted" the court. (R.T. 17:16.) The judge said that he was going to impose five days in jail, and that he would stay the sentence because he knew that DPD Pentz was an attorney and might want to seek review. Judge Espinosa also said it was "entirely false at least from this Court's perspective" (R.T. 19:6–7) that he had not given DPD Pentz an opportunity to speak or to fully state his position as to defendant Netterville's sentence. He said that "this attorney kept on arguing even after the Court made a ruling[,]" and that he was "deeply insulted by this behavior." (R.T. 19:17–20.) Judge Espinosa added that unless there was some reason for a further stay, DPD Pentz should "bring [his] toothbrush" (R.T. 19:22–23) when he next appeared.

Judge Espinosa issued a written order of contempt, dated February 5, 2004 and filed on February 9, 2004. The order stated that DPD Pentz continued to argue after being ordered to be quiet; used the word "cavalier," an insult, in open court; argued that he was entitled to a hearing on contempt and "further insulted the court by insinuating that the court didn't understand that he was entitled to a hearing"; and "sarcastically threw his hands in the air [and] waved them" while saying that he was ready to surrender. The order further stated that the court "felt compelled to order Mr. Pentz removed from the court room [sic] in order to continue the orderly process of other court proceedings[,]" and included a finding that DPD Pentz "had knowledge of the order and was able to comply by simply taking a writ without the necessity of mocking the court and challenging it to find him in contempt."

On May 28, 2004, Orange County Superior Court Judge Daniel Didier, sitting by assignment, granted DPD Pentz's petition for a writ of habeas corpus, annulling the contempt order. Judge Didier concluded, after examining the record to determine whether there was any substantial evidence to support the contempt finding, that "the record in this case does not disclose a clear instance of disorderly, contemptuous, or insolent behavior towards the respondent court tending to interfere with the due course of a trial or other judicial proceeding within the meaning of Code of Civil Procedure § 1209(a)(1)." Judge Didier noted that although DPD Pentz was allowed to comment on his client's situation, he "was not afforded an opportunity to fully advance plausible sentencing options deemed appropriate for the defendant's situation"; instead, Judge Espinosa interrupted DPD Pentz, directed him to be quiet, and warned him that he would be in contempt if he spoke again. According to Judge Didier, "To the extent the contempt adjudication is premised on [DPD Pentz's] failure to observe [Judge Espinosa's] order to remain silent, such order is without evidentiary support as [Mr. Pentz's] conduct was not contemptuous. A lawyer has a duty to protect and advance the interests of his or her client at all times. This duty encompasses the right to make objections or advance other points in the client's behalf in a timely manner." Judge Didier also stated that although DPD Pentz was not entitled to a hearing on a direct contempt, his repeated requests for such a hearing, apparently made in good faith, did not constitute contempt. Finally, Judge Didier rejected the notion that DPD Pentz's use of the word "cavalier" constituted contempt, noting that "cavalier" has varying meanings. Judge Didier stated that to the extent the contempt finding might have been based on language that was not in itself contemptuous, offensive tone, and/or mannerisms such as facial expressions or gestures, a judge must warn an attorney before taking disciplinary action. Judge Didier pointed out that "contempt is a drastic remedy which should be used only when necessary in order to maintain law and order[,]" and concluded that the record "simply does not reveal the quantum of substantial evidence necessary to sustain the order of contempt issued by [Judge Espinosa]."

In addition to DPD Pentz's petition for habeas relief, an appeal of defendant Netterville's conviction was filed, based on Judge Espinosa's alleged failure to allow the defendant to be heard through counsel at sentencing. On January 7, 2005, the Court of Appeal issued its decision vacating the defendant's sentence and remanding the matter for resentencing before a different judge. (People v. Charles Netterville (January 7, 2005, B173174) [nonpub. opn.] [2005 Cal.App.Unpub. LEXIS 197] (People v. Netterville).) The appellate court found that Judge Espinosa handled the Netterville case properly up to the point at which he stated that he intended to sentence the defendant to the midterm in state prison but was willing to be swayed. According to the Court of Appeal, however, shortly thereafter Judge Espinosa said that he had made up his mind, stated that further argument would not sway him, suggested that he would be inattentive by saying that he would "sit and sway" in his chair while DPD Pentz spoke, and quickly interrupted defense counsel's argument with a question about calculating sentence credits, indicating that he was not listening. (Id. [pp. 28, 40].) The appellate court found that Judge Espinosa "not only precluded Pentz from completing his argument, but refused to listen during an earlier portion of that argument." (Id. [p. 43].) The Court of Appeal held that Judge Espinosa "committed a miscarriage of justice and reversibly erred in violation of appellant's rights to counsel and fair trial by precluding Pentz from completing his sentencing argument." (Ibid.)

With respect to the contempt issue, the Court of Appeal determined that Judge Espinosa ordered DPD Pentz immediately into custody in violation of the mandatory stay provisions of Penal Code section 1209(c), which provides that, subject to certain exceptions, when an order of contempt is made affecting an attorney, the execution of any sentence shall be stayed for three court days. The appellate court noted that the judge apparently was aware of the provision, having referred to it when DPD Pentz reappeared with counsel by stating that he knew he would have to stay the sentence because DPD Pentz was an attorney. (People v. Netterville, supra [p. 46].) The appellate court also found that when DPD Pentz appeared with counsel, Judge Espinosa mischaracterized the record of the proceedings leading to the contempt finding, and later made various material omissions and misstatements in the written contempt order. (Ibid. [pp. 48-51].) Based on these findings, the Court of Appeal held that there was a doubt that Judge Espinosa could maintain his objectivity, and that the case must be remanded for resentencing before a different judge.

Judge Espinosa's conduct in this matter constituted, at a minimum, improper action. By denying the defendant a full right to be heard, through counsel, regarding sentencing, the judge violated canon 3B(7) of the Code of Judicial Ethics, which requires that a judge accord to every person who has a legal interest in a proceeding, or that person's lawyer, full right to be heard according to law.

In addition, Judge Espinosa's treatment of DPD Pentz constituted serious misconduct. Judge Espinosa held DPD Pentz in contempt in contravention of the mandatory stay provisions of Code of Civil Procedure section 1209(c). Further, as stated by the Court of Appeal, DPD Pentz was held in contempt and made to suffer "the ignominy of being removed from the courtroom simply for doing his job." (People v. Netterville, supra [p. 42].) The power of a judge to silence an attorney does not arise until after the attorney has had a reasonable opportunity for legitimate advocacy. (See Cooper v. Superior Court (1961) 55 Cal.2d 291, 298.)

Judge Espinosa's conduct also was contrary to canon 2A, which provides that a judge shall respect and comply with the law and shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary, canon 3B(2), which requires that judges be faithful to the law, and canon 3B(5), which requires that judges perform judicial duties without bias or prejudice. In addition, the judge's treatment of DPD

Pentz was contrary to canon 3B(4), which requires judges to be patient, dignified and courteous toward those with whom the judge deals in a judicial capacity.

Commission members Mr. Marshall B. Grossman, Judge Frederick P. Horn, Mr. Michael A. Kahn, Mrs. Crystal Lui, Justice Judith D. McConnell, Ms. Patricia Miller, Mr. Jose C. Miramontes, Mrs. Penny Perez, Judge Risë Jones Pichon, Ms. Barbara Schraeger and Mr. Lawrence Simi voted to impose a public admonishment.

Dated: February 9, 2006

_____

Marshall B. Grossman
Chairperson

PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE JOHN M. WATSON

The Commission on Judicial Performance has ordered Judge John M. Watson publicly admonished pursuant to Article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution and Commission Rule 115, as set forth in the following statement of facts and reasons found by the commission:

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

Judge Watson has been a judge of the Orange County Superior Court since October 1989. His current term began in January 2005.

For many years, Judge Watson owned two rental properties in Southern California, in La Habra and Whittier. (The properties were sold in 2005.) From approximately 2000 through mid-2004, Judge Watson sought and received help from his courtroom clerk with the day-to-day management of these properties. The judge instructed tenants to call him at the courtroom number, and used his clerk as the contact person for tenants. The clerk received and returned telephone calls from tenants and relayed messages between the judge and the tenants about matters such as inspections and repairs. She made calls to various businesses and the Los Angeles Housing Authority in connection with the judge's properties, and occasionally sent and received faxes from the Realtors who leased the La Habra property for the judge. Judge Watson had his clerk prepare approximately 40 letters and legal notices in connection with his real estate business, including tenancy termination notices and notices to quit. (With one exception, noted below, the judge's judicial title was not used in this correspondence.) The clerk performed these tasks whenever the judge requested, in the courtroom during the workday.

On a few occasions toward the end of 2000 and the beginning of 2001, Judge Watson had his clerk and bailiff accept rental payments in the courtroom, and had courtroom staff provide receipts to the tenants. The bailiff also received occasional calls from tenants.

From 2000 through mid-2004, Judge Watson's chambers letterhead was used in connection with the real estate business on four occasions: one letter to a tenant under the clerk's name, one letter to a tenant from "John M. Watson," one handwritten unsigned note from the judge to a tenant, and one letter to the Los Angeles Housing Authority from "John M. Watson, Judge, Orange County Superior Court." Chambers and court envelopes were used in connection with the real estate business on eight occasions.

"A judge may not use his or her office, staff, or public property and/or resources under the judge's control for personal, non-governmental purposes. This is an obvious part of the obligation of a judge to 'act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary.' [Citation.] The public is entitled to expect that judges will conscientiously use resources paid for by the taxpayers only for the purpose for which those resources were intended." (Rothman, California Judicial Conduct Handbook (2d ed. 1999) § 3.33.) (See Inquiry Concerning Judge D. Ronald Hyde, No. 138 (1996) Decision and Order of Public Censure [over five-year period, judicial secretary spent 10 working days performing tasks for paralegal class taught by judge, 40 hours of work that benefited club judge was member of, and 24 days of work for charity judge was interested in; judge used fax machine to send 57 personal faxes out of state, and used secretary to send over 40 personal letters on court stationery]; In the Matter of Judge Robert C. Coates, Pub. Admon. 23 (2000) Decision and Order of Public Admonishment [judge admonished for conduct that included use of court secretaries to prepare and send, during court hours using court resources, over 100 letters and documents involving the judge's personal interests unrelated to judicial duties; five letters were, or appeared to have been, designed to lend the prestige of judicial office to advance the judge's personal interests].)

The prohibition against the use of court resources necessarily applies with greater force with respect to a judge's business activities undertaken for personal financial gain. (See Inquiry Concerning Judge James R. Ross, No. 141 (1998) Decision and Order of Public Censure [retired judge censured for conduct that included use of prestige of judicial office to promote book he authored; judge sold copies of book from chambers and through his bailiff to jurors and attorneys].) "A judge may not misuse the administrative resources available to the judge. To accomplish a judge's varied administrative responsibilities … a judge has individuals, equipment, and facilities at his or her command. Among a judge's administrative responsibilities is the duty to insure that these resources are utilized primarily in connection with the judge's judicial responsibilities and secondarily in connection with peripheral matters related to the judicial function …. [¶] A judge may not use these public resources for personal financial gain." (Shaman, Lubet and Alfini, Judicial Conduct and Ethics (3d ed. 2000) § 6.13.)

Judge Watson's use of court staff, court resources and the court facilities for his personal real estate business was improper. This conduct was inconsistent with the Code of Judicial Ethics, canon 1 (judge shall uphold integrity of judiciary) and canon 2A (judge shall avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety; judge shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary). The use of court and chambers stationery was inconsistent with canon 2B(2) (judge shall not lend the prestige of judicial office to advance the pecuniary or personal interests of the judge). The one instance of correspondence sent on chambers stationery under the judge's title was inconsistent with canon 2B(4) (judge shall not use the judicial title in any written communication intended to advance the personal or pecuniary interest of the judge).

Commission members Mr. Marshall Grossman, Mrs. Crystal Lui, Justice Judith D. McConnell, Ms. Patricia Miller, Mrs. Penny Perez, Judge Rise Jones Pichon, Ms. Barbara Schraeger, and Mr. Lawrence Simi voted to impose a public admonishment. Commission member Judge Frederick P. Horn was recused. Mr. Michael Kahn and Mr. Jose Miramontes did not participate.

February 21, 2006

PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE RONALD J. MACIEL

The Commission on Judicial Performance has ordered Judge Ronald J. Maciel publicly admonished pursuant to Article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution and Commission Rule 115, as set forth in the following statement of facts and reasons found by the commission:

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

Judge Maciel has been a judge of the Kings County Superior Court since 1988; his current term began in January 2001.

Based upon the facts as set forth below, the commission concludes that Judge Maciel abused his authority in sanctioning an attorney without prior notice or an opportunity to be heard.

On Tuesday, January 11, 2005, Judge Maciel presided over the preliminary hearing in the matter of People v. Pablo Garza (No. 04CM4925). Attorney Robert Wynne appeared on behalf of the law firm of Sawl & Metzer, which had substituted in as defense counsel for defendant Garza on January 5, 2005. Mr. Wynne also appeared specially for Eric Schweitzer, the attorney with the Sawl & Metzer law firm who had been expected to handle the Garza preliminary hearing and who had signed the substitution of counsel form on January 4, 2005, but who was in trial on a juvenile case that was expected to be completed within the next two days. Mr. Wynne requested a continuance of the preliminary hearing for three days so that Mr. Schweitzer could complete the juvenile trial and be available to handle the preliminary hearing.

The deputy district attorney (DDA) handling the Garza preliminary hearing objected to a continuance, arguing that Mr. Schweitzer should have known he might not be available for the January 11, 2005 preliminary hearing when he agreed to the substitution of his law firm into the case on January 4, 2005. Judge Maciel said that he had made it quite clear when he accepted the substitution of counsel for defendant Garza on January 5, 2005, that he would not do so if substitute counsel would not be ready to proceed on January 11, 2005, the day of the scheduled preliminary hearing. Judge Maciel asked Mr. Wynne, "Why did somebody accept the representation [of the defendant] when under [Penal Code section] 1050 you have to be available to do the matter in the time allocated by the Court?" Mr. Wynne responded that he had only learned the night before that Mr. Schweitzer had been assigned to a courtroom for a juvenile trial in Fresno and that he, Mr. Wynne, was to handle the preliminary hearing. He also told the judge that the prosecution had not provided discovery and that the firm's investigator had not returned the "working file" that morning as expected, which is when he realized it would be better for defendant Garza to have Mr. Schweitzer handle the preliminary hearing. Judge Maciel then stated:

> You know, I appreciate your position, Mr. Wynne. But, you know, for them to say the night before to get prepared for a preliminary hearing, whether there's any kind of complication at all, I think is the direction of malpractice at a minimum, and may be sanctionable conduct as to that.

(1/11/05 R.T. 6:12-17.)

The DDA then asked for the name of the case being tried by Mr. Schweitzer in juvenile court so she could determine when he had been notified of its trial date. Mr. Wynne provided the information to the DDA, and court recessed. When court reconvened, the DDA stated that she had not been able to determine when the juvenile trial date had been set, but it could have been as early as December 17, 2004. After further discussion about Mr. Schweitzer's availability, the following exchange occurred:

> THE COURT: Scheduling problems, you know, particularly [Penal Code section] 1050 is clearly addressed for that particular issue. His [Mr. Schweitzer's] scheduling problems are not the problems of the court or witnesses.
>
> You know, when something is scheduled, it's supposed to go. Be that as it may, I'm going to grant the continuance because I feel that there may be problems otherwise. However, since the required notice and motion was not given under [1050(c)], court imposes sanctions of $1,000 against Mr. Schweitzer. That's payable within two days. Since it's a two-day continuance motion, the motion will be continued -- the preliminary hearing will be continued until Thursday, the 14th at 1:30.
>
> I suggest your firm be ready on that date.
>
> MR. WYNNE: Your honor, as far as, if I could, the sanctions. Could you perhaps wait until Mr. Schweitzer is here who has an accurate record of where he was at and what was said.
>
> THE COURT: Well, the sanctions are quite specific. It's that the motion was made for continuance less than two days prior to the preliminary hearing. That sets the sanctions in motion. If he wants to discuss that –
>
> MR. WYNNE: Can they be 999?
>
> THE COURT: No. I want it $1,000 because I think the firm needs to address the issue of scheduling and this type of conduct. I don't approve of that. Further I'll order that the defendant have no > contact with the victim whatsoever. And with that in mind, the matter is continued as indicated.

(1/11/05 R.T. 12:6-13:8.)

Two days later, on January 13, 2005,[1] Mr. Schweitzer appeared before Judge Maciel for the preliminary hearing with Douglas Feinberg, an attorney he had retained personally to address the sanctions matter. Mr. Schweitzer apologized to Judge Maciel for his absence on January 11, 2005, and deferred to Mr. Feinberg on the sanctions issue. Mr. Feinberg submitted a declaration prepared by Mr. Schweitzer offering an explanation for his absence, which the judge initially refused to accept. Although Judge Maciel eventually accepted Mr. Schweitzer's declaration for filing, he did not appear to read it before cutting Mr. Feinberg off and telling him, "Take it up on appeal."

Mr. Feinberg filed a Petition for Writ of Mandate in the appellate department of the Kings County Superior Court, alleging that Judge Maciel had improperly sanctioned Mr. Schweitzer without notice or a hearing. On April 18, 2005, the appellate department issued an order vacating the sanctions.

Before sanctions are imposed, adequate notice and an opportunity to be heard are mandated, based upon the due process clauses of both the federal and state constitutions. (Caldwell v. Samuels Jewelers (1990) 222 Cal.App.3d 970, 976 [holding that regardless of the statute under which sanctions are imposed, "the imposition of sanctions always requires procedural due process"].) While a court may raise the issue of sanctions on its own motion, it must give notice of its intent to impose sanctions "before findings are made and at a time preceding the trial judge's decision whether, in fact, to impose sanctions." (Bergman v. Rifkind & Sterling, Inc. (1991) 227 Cal.App.3d 1380, 1387, emphasis in original [sanctions reversed where judge's findings regarding sanctions preceded his review of the attorney's explanation and evidence of good cause].)

By imposing sanctions without prior notice and an opportunity to be heard, Judge Maciel violated canon 2A ("A judge shall respect and comply with the law and shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary"), canon 3B(2) ("A judge shall be faithful to the law … and shall maintain professional competence in the law"), and canon 3B(7) ("A judge shall accord to every person who has a legal interest in a proceeding … full right to be heard according to law").

The commission also disapproves Judge Maciel's statement to Mr. Wynne in open court that his firm's telling Mr. Wynne to prepare for a preliminary hearing the evening before "is the direction of malpractice at a minimum." Gratuitous remarks about malpractice made to an attorney in open court in the presence of the attorney's client are contrary to canon 3B(4), which requires judges to be patient, dignified and courteous toward those with whom they deal in an official capacity.

---

[1] The judge's reference to the 14th appears to have been a mistake, as the following Thursday was January 13th, the date the continued preliminary hearing took place.

The conduct set forth above was at a minimum improper action.

In determining that a public admonishment is appropriate, the commission notes that Judge Maciel has been the subject of the following prior discipline:

In 2001, Judge Maciel received an advisory letter for commenting to the press about a litigant's peremptory challenge of him while the case was still pending;

In 1999, Judge Maciel received an advisory letter for not following procedural requirements when he terminated a father's visitation rights without notice or a hearing;

In 1997, Judge Maciel received a public admonishment for ex parte communications with an attorney he had appointed to represent a defendant in a criminal case and to whom he was giving advice on how to handle the case;

In 1995, Judge Maciel, who was then the presiding judge, received an advisory letter for ordering a colleague to request in writing his permission to recuse in a case.

Commission members Mr. Marshall Grossman, Judge Frederick P. Horn, Mr. Michael Kahn, Mrs. Crystal Lui, Justice Judith D. McConnell, Ms. Patricia Miller, Mrs. Penny Perez, Judge Risë Jones Pichon, Ms. Barbara Schraeger, and Mr. Lawrence Simi voted to impose a public admonishment. Commission member Mr. Jose Miramontes did not participate.

May 9, 2006

STATE OF CALIFORNIA

BEFORE THE COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

| | |
|---|---|
| IN THE MATTER CONCERNING JUDGE BRUCE CLAYTON MILLS | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT |

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge Bruce Clayton Mills, a judge of the Contra Costa County Superior Court since 1995, whose current term began January 2003. Judge Mills and his attorney, James A. Murphy, Esq., appeared before the commission on May 10, 2006, pursuant to rule 116 of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance, to contest the imposition of a public admonishment. Having considered the written and oral objections and argument submitted by Judge Mills and his counsel, and good cause appearing, the Commission on Judicial Performance issues this public admonishment pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution, based upon the following Statement of Facts and Reasons:

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

I. In 1997 and 1998, Judge Mills engaged in and took action upon a series of improper ex parte communications regarding the matter of People v. Mendell (No. 104058-3), in violation of canon 3B(7) of the California Code of Judicial Ethics, as follows:

On November 4, 1997, Judge Mills presided over the Mendell misdemeanor theft case, which was scheduled for jury trial that day. Ms. Mendell appeared with her attorney, David Larkin, and entered a no contest plea. Two deputy district attorneys were present during the plea. After the plea was taken, the deputy district attorneys left the building, and Mr. Larkin left the courtroom, while Judge Mills and Ms. Mendell remained in the courtroom. Judge Mills and Ms. Mendell then engaged in a conversation about her plea and the possibility of diversion, meaning the criminal charges against her would be suspended while she fulfilled certain conditions (such as working a certain number of community service hours and participating in a theft awareness seminar), after which the charges would be dismissed. No prosecutor was present during this conversation between the judge and Ms. Mendell.

Ms. Mendell's attorney, Mr. Larkin, then returned to the courtroom and discussed Ms. Mendell's case briefly with Judge Mills. No prosecutor was present during this conversation between the judge and Ms. Mendell's defense attorney.

Judge Mills and Mr. Larkin then went into Judge Mills's chambers and continued discussing the Mendell case; Ms. Mendell remained in the courtroom. While Judge Mills and Mr. Larkin were in the judge's chambers, Judge Mills summoned probation officer Susan Cruz to his chambers. Ms. Cruz previously had determined that Ms. Mendell was "not suitable" for diversion because she had been convicted of misdemeanor theft from Nordstrom in 1991. This was indicated on a "Diversion Eligibility" form Ms. Cruz had prepared for the Mendell court file, on which Ms. Cruz had noted: "Same victim as '91 Grand Theft which received 1203.4 P.C. in '94." This notation indicated that the pending charges involved the same victim as a case in which Ms. Mendell had been convicted in 1991 (although the 1991 charges were removed from the record in 1994). After Ms. Cruz arrived in Judge Mills's chambers, the case was discussed further. Again, no prosecutor was present for this discussion.

Following Judge Mills's initial ex parte courtroom conversation with Ms. Mendell, he reviewed the Mendell court file and told Mr. Larkin that he would set aside Ms. Mendell's no contest plea and grant her diversion. Thereafter, following Judge Mills's discussion in chambers with Mr. Larkin and Ms. Cruz, the judge summoned defendant Mendell, who had been waiting in the courtroom, to his chambers and informed her that he was granting her diversion. Mr. Larkin and Ms. Cruz were present for this in-chambers discussion, but no prosecutor was present. Judge Mills thereupon set aside the no contest plea Ms. Mendell had entered earlier that day in the presence of the two prosecutors, and he granted her diversion. These post-plea proceedings were not reported, and no prosecutor was present for them.

After Judge Mills granted Ms. Mendell diversion, she immediately began fulfilling the conditions of diversion, including attending the theft awareness seminar and performing the required community service.

After the Contra Costa District Attorney's Office received a copy of Judge Mills's order setting aside Ms. Mendell's plea and granting her diversion, a supervising attorney from the district attorney's office telephoned Judge Mills to object to the diversion order and to the judge's having taken action on the Mendell matter without notifying or involving any prosecutor. Ms. Mendell's defense attorney, Mr. Larkin, did not know of, or participate in, this telephone communication between Judge Mills and the prosecutor about the Mendell case.

Because the district attorney's office objected to Judge Mills's having set aside Ms. Mendell's plea and granting her diversion without its knowledge or consent, Judge Mills put the Mendell case back on calendar and, at a hearing on January 12, 1998, terminated Ms. Mendell's diversion and reinstated criminal proceedings against her. By that time, Ms. Mendell had completed 130 hours of her 200 hours of community service, completed a 12-hour theft awareness program, and paid $315 in fees.

Canon 3B(7) prohibits a judge from initiating, permitting, or considering ex parte communications. In the Mendell case, Judge Mills committed multiple violations of this prohibition. First, Judge Mills engaged in a conversation with Ms. Mendell about her case outside the presence of her counsel or any prosecutor. Second, Judge Mills engaged in a conversation with Ms. Mendell's attorney, Mr. Larkin, about the case without any prosecutor present. Third, Judge Mills conferred with Mr. Larkin and probation officer Cruz about the case in his chambers with no prosecutor present. Fourth, Judge Mills further discussed the case with Mr. Larkin, Ms. Cruz and Ms. Mendell in his chambers, and, following that discussion, took action contrary to the previously-entered plea to which the prosecutor had agreed. Each of the foregoing conversations about the Mendell case that occurred without any prosecutor's knowledge or consent constituted an improper ex parte communication in violation of canon 3B(7). Judge Mills's later communications with a prosecutor about the Mendell case without the knowledge or participation of defense counsel also was in violation of the prohibition against ex parte communications set forth in canon 3B(7).

In addition to these violations of canon 3B(7), Judge Mills's conduct was inconsistent with canon 2A, which states that a judge "shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary."

In connection with Judge Mills's objections under rule 116 to the commission's Notice of Intended Public Admonishment, the judge and his counsel asserted in writing and during their appearance before the commission on May 10, 2006 that discipline cannot rest on the underlying Mendell matter because of the lapse of time since 1997 when the alleged misconduct occurred. The argument proceeds from an assumption the complaint was filed in 2001; the judge contends the commission has violated its own rules and policy declarations by the assumed five-year delay of its ensuing investigation. The judge also postulates the commission may have removed the matter from its active calendar, in which case he contends there was no proper basis for such action under Commission Policy Declaration 1.8. That policy declaration specifies non-exclusive circumstances under which the commission may remove a case from its active calendar.

The current proceedings before the commission represent the consolidation of seven separate complaints to the commission concerning Judge Mills. The first complaint was not filed in 2001, but rather in June 2003. Thereafter, six additional complaints were filed, beginning in January 2004 and spanning the period to late-March 2005. Consistent with commission policy, each subsequent complaint was consolidated with the first-filed complaint. The commission consolidates multiple open and pending complaints against a judge for reasons that include the need to ascertain whether there are patterns of behavior, and in order to assess the aggregate magnitude and severity of possible wrongdoing. The commission did not remove the consolidated investigations from the active calendar at any time. Rather, the seven consolidated complaints, involving a wide variety of subject matters and witnesses, were investigated in a timely manner and consistent with standard commission policies and procedures.

Judge Mills also contends in his rule 116 objections he was prejudiced because former Judge Cunningham, "who would have supported [Judge Mills's] explanation of his conduct," died during the pendency of the commission's investigation. According to Judge Mills, the late-Judge Cunningham would have substantiated that at the time of the Mendell matter in 1997, the District Attorney of Contra Costa County did not staff misdemeanor arraignment calendars and did not object to a judge granting diversion or accepting a plea in the absence of a prosecutor at such proceedings.

In support of Judge Mills's rule 116 objections to the proposed public admonishment, the judge did present declarations to the commission from another Contra Costa County judge and two attorneys that substantiated the practices in question. However, the prosecutor's general policy of not staffing certain hearings is irrelevant to Mendell and the judge's misconduct in handling that matter. Notwithstanding the general practice, two deputy district attorneys were present at the plea hearing in Mendell; further, the prosecutor thereafter objected when Judge Mills set aside the plea and granted the defendant diversion. Thus, Judge Mills has not been prejudiced by the lack of further substantiation by Judge Cunningham of the general policies, because, unlike the general situation, the prosecutor was present and active in Mendell.

As respects the Mendell post-plea ex parte communications between the district attorney's office and Judge Mills, the judge submitted a declaration in support of his rule 116 objections. The declarant was one of the two deputy district attorneys who were present at the plea hearing, who attested he never engaged in any ex parte communication with Judge Mills. However, the post-plea ex parte communications between the judge and the prosecutor's office did not involve the attorney who filed the declaration. Rather, there is clear and convincing evidence that an attorney in the district attorney's office, who was senior to the two deputies who were present for Ms. Mendell's plea, had substantive ex parte communications with Judge Mills that resulted in the case being rescheduled for the purpose of setting aside the diversion order.

Judge Mills also urges in his rule 116 objections that his post-plea communications with the prosecutor falls within exception (d) to canon 3B(7), which permits a judge to have ex parte communications for scheduling purposes. However, at the outset of the hearing on January 12, 1998 that was scheduled because of the prosecutor's protest over the granting of diversion, Judge Mills made a statement that undermines his claim the conversation involved only scheduling. The judge stated as follows: "After the grant of diversion was made, the district attorney's office advised me of other factors I was not aware of. I telegraphed that immediately to Mr. Larkin, your counsel, and indicated that the case would have to be put back on calendar for further discussions." (1/12/98 R.T. 2:17–22, italics added.) The judge's introductory comment confirms the evidence that the communications with the prosecutor involved substance, beyond scheduling. The scheduling exception of canon 3B(7)(d) therefore was inapplicable.

II. On January 5, 2005, while presiding over an arraignment, disposition and plea conference in People v. Rieboldt (No. 122979-9), Judge Mills assumed the role of the prosecutor in the case and engaged in conduct that was inconsistent with the proper role of a judge as a neutral arbiter. In that case, two co-defendants were charged with misdemeanors for having stolen windows from a construction site. Judge Mills was asked to give the defendants an indication of the sentence he would impose if they were to plead guilty to the misdemeanor charges. The transcript indicates that after Judge Mills reviewed the court file in the case, he made the following remarks:

> THE COURT*:* In addition, the district attorney's office has not charged a violation of 182 of the Penal Code which is felony conspiracy, which is a straight felony. It's not even a wobbler. [¶] This conduct of these two co-defendants is felony conduct, for a variety of reasons. [¶] One, because it is a criminal conspiracy to commit grand theft. When grand theft is, say, between $400, which is the bottom, and say, up to somewhere between 2,000 and $4,000, there could be some debate about whether it should be treated as a misdemeanor or as a felony. [¶] When the losses exceed $4,000, then generally in my experience, which runs back in the county some twenty years, it's generally been the policy of the district attorney's office to pursue the cases on the felony level. [¶] … [¶]
>
> THE COURT*: I'm appalled by this case, I've got to tell you. [¶] You know, I sit here day in and day out, and frankly, a lot of the cases are misdemeanor cases, that in the grand scheme of what comes through the courts in California, I can think it's fairly fair to say, are de minimis in nature. [¶] This is not one of them. [¶] And one thing that Mr. Torres hopefully can appreciate, is that the breadth of my experience is not limited to handling misdemeanor cases here. [¶] In this county, I spent two years of my life as a felony filing deputy. I am one of only two people, to my knowledge, in the history of this county to have held that job twice … [¶] which means that, I have as much if not more experience than any person in the history of this county, in reviewing felony cases to decide what charges should be filed, and if so, at what level, be it felony or misdemeanor. [¶] This is felony conduct. [¶] *The fact that this got filed as a misdemeanor, I'm just absolutely appalled. My hair is on fire.

> I can't tell you how stunned I am that somebody could be caravanning away from construction sites, using two trucks to more efficiently steal thousands of dollars worth of windows, to have not only admitted to having done it on numerous other occasions, but having checks issued by the fence company that's getting rid of and disposing these thousands of dollars of stolen property, and to have everybody think that this is one misdemeanor count of grand theft that is going to be dealt with de minimisly [sic]. [¶] Frankly, I can't understand how it got to this posture. I am stunned.
>
> Miss Hamoy [deputy district attorney], I know that apparently you didn't file this case. [¶] I don't know how the deputy DA who received this at the misdemeanor desk didn't run it up the flag pole. Maybe they did. Maybe they took it to the felony filing deputy and got marching orders to pursue it as a misdemeanor case. [¶] I can't understand that. I don't know how. [¶] It's not a question of problems of proof. [¶] Not only do we have full confessions, but we have the checks issued by the company that paid Mr. Torres for these windows, on multiple different dates. [¶] So it's not a question of problems of proof. [¶] I just don't know how we got to this point.
>
> So my thought is as follows. [¶] One of two things is going to happen. [¶] Based on my comments here today, either Mr. Torres is going to plead and the case is going to get resolved today, or somebody is going to go back to the drawing board, have this reviewed by somebody that can intelligently assess what ought to have been charged, and I would think that it would be more likely than not that an amended pleading would come down the pike, charging, among other things, a violation of Section 182 of the California Penal Code, felony criminal conspiracy, between the two charged co-defendants.

(1/5/05 R.T. 4:10–7:23, italics added.)

Judge Mills's conduct was contrary to canon 1, which requires judges to maintain "high standards of conduct ... so that the integrity and independence of the judiciary will be preserved," and canon 2A, which requires that a judge "… shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary." The authority to charge criminal cases is outside the scope of judicial power. (Ryan v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1988) 45 Cal.3d 518, 535.) It is improper for a judge to use his or her judicial authority to attempt to influence officers of the court concerning criminal matters. (Gonzalez v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1983) 33 Cal.3d 359, 366-369.) As the California Supreme Court stated in Kloepfer v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1989) 49 Cal.3d 826, 845 (Kloepfer), "the court must not undertake the role of prosecutor or defense counsel if public confidence in the integrity of the criminal justice system is to be maintained." Repeating its earlier admonition in People v. Carlucci (1979) 23 Cal. 3d 249, 258, the court in Kloepfer stated, "It is fundamental that the trial court … must refrain from advocacy and remain circumspect in its comments on the evidence, treating litigants and witnesses with appropriate respect and without demonstration of partiality or bias." (Kloepfer, supra, 49 Cal.3d at 845.)

III. In 2004 and 2005, Judge Mills engaged in a pattern of conduct that is inconsistent with canon 3B(4), which requires a judge to be patient, dignified, and courteous with persons with whom the judge deals in an official capacity. The judge's conduct included making sarcastic, demeaning and belittling comments to attorneys and litigants appearing before him, and referring to "malpractice" when admonishing attorneys while their clients were present. This conduct is exemplified by the following:

A. *People v. Milla

On November 22, 2004, Judge Mills presided over People v. Milla (No. 122374-2), a misdemeanor theft case involving the use of a stolen credit card. Deputy Public Defender Jivaka Candappa, who was representing defendant Milla, told Judge Mills that the defendant was unwilling to accept the disposition offered by the court. The transcript reflects the following exchange, which occurred in open court in the presence of the defendant:

> THE COURT: Fine. Sometimes I can't protect people from themselves, and sometimes I can't protect people from an attorney that is giving them the wrong advice. [¶] What I can tell you, Mr. Candappa, is that this is just stupidity and arrogance. [¶] Your client absolutely has an opportunity to get out from under this for a $250 fine, and you are helping steer her into a path of jeopardy where she can go to jail for up to a year and a fine --
>
> MR. CANDAPPA: Your Honor --
>
> THE COURT: You know what? Fine. I don't need to talk about it any more. If that's what you want to do and that's the way you want to play it, go ahead. We'll see where this gets you.
>
> MR. CANDAPPA: Your Honor, your Honor, in fact, I advised Miss Milla to consider diversion but, and [sic] the probation officer spoke with her and then Miss Milla didn't want to > do it. So I have not been steering her anywhere in that context, as your Honor would suggest --

>
> THE COURT: Well, you ought to be steering her somewhere, Mr. Candappa. You ought to be steering her to take care of this for a $250 fine and no criminal history, that's what you ought to be doing. [¶] But far be it for me, who's been in the system for some twenty years now, to tell you how to do your job. God knows, I tell the DA's how to do it often enough, maybe it's time I tell the defense how to do their job once in a while, too. [¶] Mr. Candappa, to do anything other than taking this offer to resolve this case along the lines I am suggesting, is akin to malpractice, in my view. But you go how you want to go. [¶] After twenty years, how this case ought to be disposed of is self-evident to me, and I suspect to everybody else in this room. Except perhaps you. [¶] I don't know what else to tell you.
>
> MR. CANDAPPA: Well, your Honor, I am not responsible -- just as when clients want to take pleas against my counsel, when clients don't want to take pleas against my counsel, this is one area where I do not steer, I convey the advice, I give analysis, I give the advice. But it is the client's decision to accept or reject the offer. I have been very clear on both sides, with one way or the other. [¶] And that is how I have chosen to do because that is how, I don't apply undue pressure either to take or not take it.
>
> THE COURT: Yes, we wouldn't want you to apply undue pressure to somebody to avoid a year in the county jail, a potential consequence of court probation, and a criminal history, we wouldn't want you to pressure them into getting out from under that, and pressure them into paying a $250 fine and resolving the case for an infraction that doesn't start a criminal history, yeah, that would be wrong, Mr. Candappa. And if you detect sarcasm in my voice, that's the way it's intended. [¶] And I try not to be sarcastic from the bench, but in this case I just can't help myself, because I am just so irritated at the folly of what you are doing here.

(1/22/04 R.T. 13:1–15:7, italics added.)

At the end of the hearing, Judge Mills said to Mr. Candappa, "Perhaps it's time you start picking up the books and figuring out what you're doing." (1/22/04 R.T. 17:13–14, italics added.)

The foregoing remarks by Judge Mills evidence a lack of patience, dignity and courtesy toward Mr. Candappa, contrary to the requirements of canon 3B(4).

B. *People v. Gilmer

On January 19, 2005, Judge Mills presided over the arraignment in People v. Gilmer (No. 123268-5). Deputy Public Defender Jivaka Candappa attempted to file a peremptory challenge against Judge Mills under Code of Civil Procedure section 170.6. That section grants a litigant the right to disqualify a judge from hearing a case based on an affidavit of prejudice; only one section 170.6 challenge may be exercised in any action. The transcript indicates that when Mr. Candappa presented his 170.6 affidavit, Judge Mills made the following remarks:

> THE COURT: Mr. Candappa, I received a document encaptioned Peremptory Challenge Under 170.6 of the Code of Civil Procedure, on this department. And I am somewhat puzzled. [¶] Maybe you could explain. [¶] ... [¶] The court has already reviewed and made an offer on the case. And therefore, has already determined a contested issue of fact relating to the merits of the case. [¶] I can't be challenged pursuant to 170.6 with regard to the conducting of this ADP [arraignment, disposition and plea conference]. [¶] You can't come before the court on ADP, obtain an offer from a judge, and then after you hear the offer, if you don't like the offer, decide to enter a peremptory challenge. [¶] Peremptory challenges don't work that way, it's prohibited. [¶] … [¶] Exercising the peremptory challenge, in my view, would be malpractice because you are now waiving your ability to exercise a peremptory challenge on a trial department that you may be assigned out to. [¶] But that's your decision to make. [¶] Do you want to file this now? [¶] . . . [¶]
>
> THE COURT: Mr. Candappa, in this case, this case has previously been on for ADP, before this court. [¶] This court has previously made an offer on this case. And you can't now forum shop by circumventing the offer made by this court on this case by papering this department. [¶] It doesn't work that way. As much as you might like to. [¶] You're not under any obligation to take the offer. So I find it puzzling that you would exercise a peremptory challenge prior to going to the master calendar department. [¶] In fact, there is some case law that might indicate that that is bordering on malpractice, but, because there is no practical effect of this peremptory challenge [sic]. [¶] You can't get out from under the offer that's been previously made by this > department on this case. Because you can't exercise a peremptory challenge after hearing the offer of the court.

(1/19/05 R.T. 2:11–5:7, italics added.)

Judge Mills eventually accepted the filing of the 170.6 challenge.

Judge Mills's remarks to Mr. Candappa about "malpractice" were improper, in violation of canon 3B(4), which requires a judge to treat those appearing before the judge with patience, dignity, and courtesy. In addition, Judge Mills improperly attempted to dissuade Mr. Candappa from exercising a Code of Civil Procedure section 170.6 challenge against him. A judge may only inquire into the timeliness of a section 170.6 challenge or its technical sufficiency, not into the reasons for the challenge. (McCartney v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1974) 12 Cal.3d 512, 531-532.)

C. *People v. Ibrahim

On January 26, 2005, Judge Mills presided over the arraignment of the defendant in People v. Ibrahim (Nos. 121353-7 and 123639-7). Mr. Candappa again attempted to file a peremptory challenge under Code of Civil Procedure section 170.6. Judge Mills previously had conducted an arraignment, disposition and plea hearing at which the defendant appeared in pro per. At that hearing, Judge Mills had made a settlement offer directly to the defendant, who did not accept the offer and was referred to the public defender's office for representation. Mr. Candappa was appearing for the defendant for the first time on January 26, 2005. In response to Mr. Candappa's submission of the section 170.6 challenge at that appearance, Judge Mills said:

> THE COURT: Fine. Do you want a trial date? [¶] Again, I reiterate, you cannot have an offer from a court, and after hearing the offer, decide you don't like it after the court has already reviewed the case and made the offer, and then forum shop. The system does not permit that, Mr. Candappa. [¶] For purposes of the pretrial offer, it's too late to do what you're attempting to do. That's why it's not done. In fact, to do it is malpractice.

(1/26/05 R.T. 5:27–6:8, italics added.)

Judge Mills's characterization of Mr. Candappa's decision as "malpractice" in front of the client was discourteous, in violation of canon 3B(4).

D. *People v. Datta

On August 29, 2003, Judge Mills presided over the misdemeanor theft case of People v. Datta (No. 118628-7), which was set for trial that day. The prosecutor handling the case, Deputy District Attorney Crystal Howard, had learned that morning, before trial was to begin, that the police officer whose availability she had confirmed two days before was now unavailable for trial that day. Ms. Howard made an oral motion to continue the trial, following which Judge Mills and Ms. Howard had the following exchange:

> THE COURT: You are going to have to change the manner in which you prepare for your cases. You are going to have to do preparation. You are going to have to contact your witnesses in advance. If you continue to proceed this way and you continue to choose not to do it, you're not going to be welcome any longer in this court.
>
> MS. HOWARD: May I respond, your Honor?
>
> THE COURT: I don't know how else to put it. I have had this discussion with you. And it's not that I don't understand your position. I have been in your position. I have been a deputy district attorney with numerous cases to prepare for trial on a particular day. I have spent hours toiling on the phone contacting witnesses in advance so that I am prepared when I show up on trial day. [¶] In 107 jury trials I never showed up on trial day once without having talked to my witnesses in advance, and without having prepared my witnesses before they took the stand. [¶] This is a chronic problem with you. It is a problem for which you and I have discussed the remedy. And it's a problem for which you choose not to pursue the remedy. [¶] I'm exceedingly disappointed, I don't know how else to put it. I don't understand this, showing up on trial day and not knowing the status of your witnesses, it's a mystery to me.
>
> MS. HOWARD: Could I respond, your Honor, please?
>
> THE COURT: I don't know what you could say. What could you possibly say? You waited until trial day and you got burned again. What could you possibly say?
>
> MS. HOWARD: I could tell the court I did, in fact, call the Sheriff's Department last night, asked to speak with Officer

> Heuerman and Deputy Moore. Was informed they were not working. [¶] Called the Fremont Police Department, asked to speak with Officer Barrett and Officer Wack. Officer Barrett called me back. He told me both he and Officer Wack are working and are available. [¶] I spoke with Deputy Moore who told me he is, in fact, available. [¶] I spoke with our subpoena clerk at our office who told me, when I had explicitly told them, please find out if they're not available because we need declarations ahead of time, I was told everyone had been told it was trailing until today, no declarations had been returned. [¶] So I realize that I may not have spoken to everyone last night, I did what I could. [¶] … [¶]
>
> THE COURT: You can't call witnesses to the stand that you haven't prepped, that you haven't sat down and talked to and gone over the case and their testimony with. It is quote, "malpractice," end quote, to call witnesses to the stand that have not been prepared. It's malpractice.

(8/29/03 R.T. 3:25–6:12, italics added.)

Judge Mills failed to treat Ms. Howard with patience, dignity and courtesy, as required by canon 3B(4), particularly when he told her she would not be welcome in his court and when he accused her of "malpractice" in open court.

E. *People v. Contreras

In mid-December 2004, Judge Mills presided over the jury trial of People v. Contreras (No. 121632-4). At trial, the deputy public defender representing defendant Contreras, Joni Spears, requested a court interpreter on the basis that her client did not understand, or proficiently speak, English. Judge Mills initially allowed a court interpreter for the defendant. Partway through the trial, however, Judge Mills conducted a hearing outside the presence of the jury to determine the defendant's need for an interpreter and concluded that the defendant was sufficiently fluent in English and that an interpreter was not warranted. Judge Mills then dismissed the interpreter. After the defendant was convicted by the jury, Ms. Spears argued that the dismissal of the interpreter had been the basis for the jury's conviction of her client. During this argument, Judge Mills made the following comments to Deputy Public Defender Spears while the defendant was present:

> But I am not going to continue to spend $180 per interpreter, per half day, to conduct a charade with the defendant that, if I believe he can clearly understand English, is having the interpreters here to establish the fictional defense.

(12/10/04 R.T. 72:23–27, italics added.)

> Unfortunately, you know, while this is entertaining that you have this opinion, it is not founded in the law.

(12/10/04 R.T. 227:16–18, italics added.)

> THE COURT: Because Mr. Contreras was feigning he didn't understand the questions, and it was just a game. It was a dog and pony show, Miss Spears.

(12/13/04 R.T. 255:11–13, italics added.)

A judge has discretion to make a credibility determination with regard to whether a defendant is entitled to a court-ordered interpreter. (In re Raymundo B. (1988) 203 Cal.App.3d 1447, 1452-1458.) Nevertheless, the foregoing comments Judge Mills made in connection with exercising his discretion were sarcastic and discourteous to the defendant and to his attorney in violation of canon 3B(4).

Judge Mills has engaged in a pattern of making comments that are discourteous, sarcastic, demeaning and belittling to those appearing before him. Such remarks toward a litigant or counsel are not consistent with the conduct required by canon 3B(4). (See, e.g., Kennick v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1990) 50 Cal.3d 297, 323-327 [disapproving the use of demeaning, rude, impatient and abusive behavior toward counsel]; Cannon v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1975) 14 Cal.3d 678, 703 [disapproving the ridiculing of attorneys].)

In Judge Mills's written rule 116 objections and at his appearance before the commission on May 10, 2006, the judge acknowledged his "malpractice" language was inappropriate and he apologized to the commission for using it. He also submitted the declarations of a judge and two attorneys in support of his contention that the conduct of the attorneys in some of these cases fell below the standard of care expected of a competent attorney. However, the issue before the commission is not whether there was attorney malpractice, but rather, whether there was judicial misconduct. Irrespective of whether the attorneys in question were acting in a competent manner, Judge Mills's demeaning and insulting comments to the attorneys in open court were inappropriate and in violation of canon 3B(4).

In determining to issue this public admonishment, the commission noted that Judge Mills received a private admonishment in 2001 for ignoring a defendant's request for counsel and attempting to coerce him into a guilty plea.

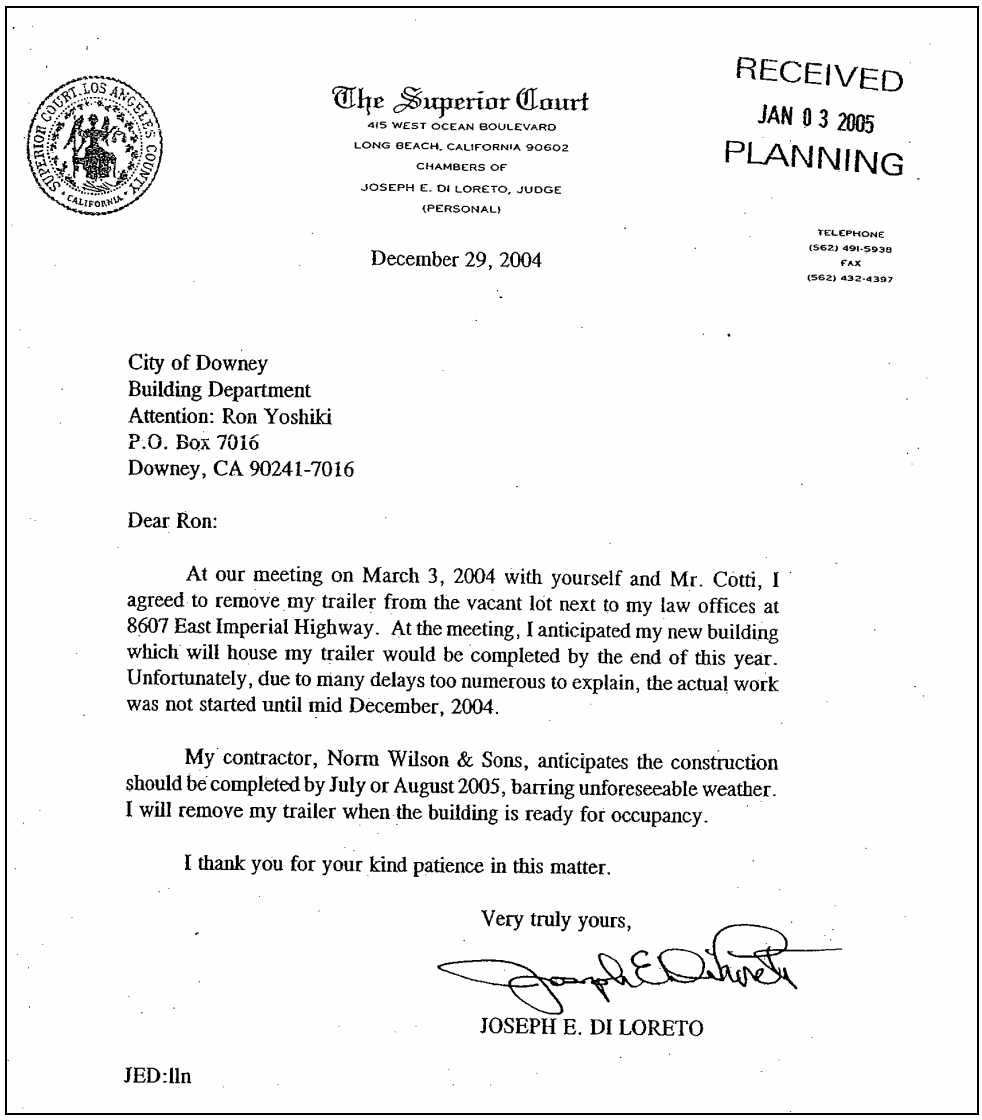
Commission members Mr. Marshall B. Grossman, Judge Frederick P. Horn, Justice Judith D. McConnell, Ms. Patricia Miller, Mr. Jose Miramontes, Mrs. Penny Perez and Ms. Barbara Schraeger voted for a public admonishment. Commission members Judge Risë Jones Pichon and Mr. Lawrence Simi voted for a private admonishment that would not base any discipline on the Mendell matter because of the passage of time since Judge Mills presided over that case. Commission members Mr. Michael Kahn and Mrs. Crystal Lui did not participate.

Dated: June _12_, 2006

_____/s/_____
Marshall B. Grossman
Chairperson

STATE OF CALIFORNIA

BEFORE THE COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE



| | |
|---|---|
| IN THE MATTER CONCERNING JUDGE JOSEPH E. DI LORETO | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT |

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge Joseph E. Di Loreto, a judge of the Los Angeles County Superior Court since 1995, whose current term began in January 2003. Judge Di Loreto and his attorney, Edward P. George, Jr., Esq., appeared before the commission on May 10, 2006, pursuant to rule 116 of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance, to contest the imposition of a public admonishment. Having considered the written and oral objections and argument submitted by Judge Di Loreto and his counsel, and good cause appearing, the Commission on Judicial Performance issues this public admonishment pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution, based upon the following Statement of Facts and Reasons:

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

Judge Di Loreto owns a vacant lot in Downey, California next to a commercial professional building he also owns. In November 2003, the City of Downey initiated a code enforcement action, based on an alleged violation of Downey Municipal Code sections 9144.08 and 9150.14 due to the presence of trailers and motor vehicles stored on the vacant property. In March 2004, Judge Di Loreto attended a meeting at the Downey Police Department regarding the alleged violations and agreed to remove the vehicles to avoid legal action. The city was represented at the meeting by a code enforcement officer, Mark Detterich, as well as the assistant director for community development/city planner, Ron Yoshiki, and the city prosecutor, John Cotti.

On December 29, 2004, Judge Di Loreto sent the following letter to the city planner, Ron Yoshiki:

The Superior Court
415 WEST OCEAN BOULEVARD
LONG BEACH, CALIFORNIA 90802
CHAMBERS OF
JOSEPH E. DI LORETO, JUDGE (PERSONAL)

RECEIVED
JAN 0 3 2005
PLANNING

TELEPHONE
(562) 491-5938
FAX
(562) 432-4397

December 29, 2004

City of Downey
Building Department
Attention: Ron Yoshiki
P.O. Box 7016
Downey, CA 90241-7016

Dear Ron:

At our meeting on March 3, 2004 with yourself and Mr. Cotti, I agreed to remove my trailer from the vacant lot next to my law offices at 8607 East Imperial Highway. At the meeting, I anticipated my new building which will house my trailer would be completed by the end of this year. Unfortunately, due to many delays too numerous to explain, the actual work was not started until mid December, 2004.

My contractor, Norm Wilson & Sons, anticipates the construction should be completed by July or August 2005, barring unforeseeable weather. I will remove my trailer when the building is ready for occupancy.

I thank you for your kind patience in this matter.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH E. DI LORETO

JED:lln

The judge's letter, on "chambers" judicial stationery, with "The Superior Court" printed at the top, and with the court's address and official seal, expressly identified Judge Di Loreto as a judge; the letterhead bore the inscription "Joseph E. Di Loreto, Judge". In the letter, Judge Di Loreto sought an extension of time within which to remove his trailer and, implicitly, the forbearance of legal action. This December 29, 2004 letter was referred to in subsequent correspondence by another city employee and the City Attorney on behalf of the City of Downey regarding the dispute.

Judge Di Loreto's prior use of chambers judicial stationery resulted in discipline. This prior matter, in 2001, involved the use of chambers judicial stationery in a personal dispute over ownership of a racing car with a "long-time personal friend" of the judge, a Mr. Barton. The stationery used was identical to that used in the December 29, 2004 letter to Mr. Yoshiki in the dispute with the City of Downey.

The commission issued an advisory letter to Judge Di Loreto in 2001 that stated, in pertinent part, as follows:

> The commission expressed disapproval of your sending a letter on chambers judicial stationery to Robert Barton concerning a dispute between you and Mr. Barton with regard to ownership of a racing car. It was the commission's view that this letter, asserting lawful ownership of property that was the subject of a dispute and dictating your preferred resolution, constituted a use of judicial stationery to advance a personal or pecuniary interest. Accordingly, the commission concluded, your letter was inconsistent with Canon 2B(2) of the Code of Judicial Ethics, which states that a judge shall not lend the prestige of judicial office to advance the pecuniary or personal interests of the judge or others, and with Canon 2B(4), which states that a judge shall not use the judicial title in any written communication intended to advance the judge's personal or pecuniary interests.

Judge Di Loreto's use of chambers judicial stationery in the current matter concerning a private dispute as a property owner with the City of Downey, again violated canons 2B(2) and 2B(4). The fact that the printed judicial letterhead included a parenthetical "personal" is irrelevant, given that the court stationery was being used in the judge's personal dispute with a governmental agency regarding his own property. Letters such as the one written by Judge Di Loreto regarding official governmental business typically are included in an official record that may be reviewed by other government employees and officials, and may be used as evidence in subsequent legal proceedings.

The propriety of using judicial stationery in personal disputes does not turn on whether or not the recipient already knows the author is a judge. Rather, the use of judicial stationery is prohibited under the canons in question because, in such circumstances, such use involves lending the prestige of office or the judicial title to advance personal or pecuniary interests.

In reaching its determination that public discipline was appropriate in this matter, the commission noted that Judge Di Loreto's use of chambers judicial stationery in his dispute with the City of Downey was the same conduct that resulted in his 2001 advisory letter, and that the judge continues to advance the same justification for the improper behavior – the addressee knew the judge was a judge – that the commission rejected in 2001. In Judge Di Loreto's opposition to the commission's preliminary investigation letter in this matter, he asserted that since Mr. Yoshiki knew the judge was a judge, the use of the letterhead was appropriate. Indeed, in the judge's written objections under rule 116 to the proposed public admonishment, he persisted in making the same assertion, which he repeated during his oral presentation to the commission on May 10, 2006.

Judge Di Loreto's use of judicial stationery for his December 29, 2004 letter to Mr. Yoshiki was, at a minimum, improper action.

Commission members Mr. Marshall B. Grossman, Judge Frederick P. Horn, Mr. Michael A. Kahn, Justice Judith D. McConnell, Ms. Patricia Miller, Mr. Jose Miramontes, Mrs. Penny Perez, Judge Risë Jones Pichon, Ms. Barbara Schraeger and Mr. Lawrence Simi voted for a public admonishment. Commission member Mrs. Crystal Lui did not participate.

Dated: June 13, 2006

/s/
Marshall B. Grossman
Chairperson

STATE OF CALIFORNIA

BEFORE THE COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

| | |
|---|---|
| IN THE MATTER CONCERNING JUDGE PAUL E. ZELLERBACH | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT |

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge Paul E. Zellerbach, a judge of the Riverside County Superior Court since 1995, whose current term began January 2001. Judge Zellerbach and his attorney, Edith R. Matthai, Esq., appeared before the commission on June 28, 2006, pursuant to rule 116 of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance, to contest the imposition of a public admonishment. Having considered the written and oral objections and argument submitted by Judge Zellerbach and his counsel, and good cause appearing, the Commission on Judicial Performance issues this public admonishment pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution, based upon the following Statement of Facts and Reasons:

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

In October 2004, Judge Zellerbach presided over the murder case of People v. Joseph Francis Close, which involved a drunk driving accident in which the defendant's girlfriend and unborn baby were killed. Judge Zellerbach delayed taking a verdict in this case because he was at a baseball game in Anaheim. He refused to allow another judge who was available to take the verdict, and did not return from the game to take the verdict himself, as follows.

The Close case went to the jury on October 4, 2004. During the late morning of October 5, 2004, Judge Zellerbach left court to attend an Angels baseball playoff game in Anaheim that afternoon. Before he left, Judge Zellerbach made arrangements for Judge Robert Spitzer to answer any questions that the deliberating jury might have. However, he did not arrange to have Judge Spitzer or any other judge take the verdict.

The jury reached a verdict around 2:30 p.m. on October 5. Judge Zellerbach's clerk immediately tried to reach the judge on his cell phone. When he did not answer, she left a message regarding the verdict. When Judge Zellerbach did not promptly return her call, the clerk contacted Judge Christian Thierbach, through his clerk, and determined that Judge Thierbach was available to take the verdict. Judge Zellerbach's clerk then contacted the attorneys in the Close case and told them to come to court at 3:30 p.m., in order to allow them sufficient time to have the defendant's and victim's families present for the verdict.

Judge Zellerbach then returned his clerk's telephone call. When the clerk told the judge that Judge Thierbach could take the verdict, Judge Zellerbach said that he wanted to do so himself, and instructed his clerk to tell the attorneys to return to court the next morning, October 6. The clerk reached the attorneys before they were to arrive at court that afternoon and relayed the judge's message. However, the attorneys came to court that afternoon and asked the clerk to contact Judge Zellerbach again, in order to convey their wish to have the verdict taken that day.

When the clerk telephoned Judge Zellerbach at the baseball game again, he reiterated that he did not want another judge to take the verdict, and that he would take the verdict himself the next day. Judge Zellerbach took the verdict on the morning of October 6.

Canon 3A of the Code of Judicial Ethics requires that judicial duties take precedence over all other activities of a judge. Judge Zellerbach failed to give his judicial duties precedence. He went to a baseball game while a jury was deliberating on a homicide case, without having arranged for another judge to take the verdict. When informed that the jury had reached a verdict, he was unwilling to allow another judge to take the verdict. This same conduct also violated canon 3B(8), which requires a judge to dispose of all judicial matters promptly and efficiently. In addition, Judge Zellerbach's conduct was inconsistent with canon 2A, which requires that a judge "shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary."

In his written objections under rule 116 to the commission's Notice of Intended Public Admonishment and during his appearance before the commission on June 28, 2006, Judge Zellerbach and his attorney denied that Judge Zellerbach's actions reflect a failure to give his judicial duties precedence. The judge's written argument on this point was that he went to the game without arranging for another judge to take the verdict because he did not think the jury would return with a verdict that day, given the complicated issues in the trial. Judge Zellerbach has nearly 30 years of experience as a judge and a prosecutor, on the basis of which he must have known that it is not possible to predict how long a jury will deliberate, irrespective of how complicated the issues or how long the trial. Indeed, during his appearance before the commission, the judge conceded the impossibility of making such predictions.

As a further basis for objecting to the proposed discipline, Judge Zellerbach asserted that he instructed his clerk to put the case over until the next day, rather than allowing another judge to take the verdict, because he was concerned about complicated legal issues in the case and as related to the possible verdict. Given the asserted complexity of the legal issues, Judge Zellerbach should not have gone to the baseball game while the jury was deliberating. The judge acknowledged the correctness of this conclusion during his appearance before the commission.

As part of his oral presentation, Judge Zellerbach also referred to other cases where other judges had delayed taking a verdict until the next day. There likely are instances where good cause exists for such delay. A judge attending a baseball game is not such an instance, however.

Judge Zellerbach acknowledged during his appearance that, with the benefit of hindsight, he now realizes he should have let another judge take the verdict in his absence. The commission appreciates that Judge Zellerbach has reevaluated the situation. There was a serious dereliction of judicial duty, nonetheless, by which Judge Zellerbach jeopardized the verdict in a double homicide case and imposed hardship and additional stress on jurors, the families of the victim and the defendant, and on counsel and the defendant. There also was adverse local press coverage concerning the taking of the verdict in the Close case; a columnist criticized Judge Zellerbach's absence from court while attending the game, and his refusal to allow another judge to take the verdict. Judge Zellerbach described the commentary as reflecting adversely upon the judiciary in general and upon him personally.

Commission members Mr. Marshall B. Grossman, Judge Frederick P. Horn, Justice Judith D. McConnell, Ms. Patricia Miller, Mr. Jose Miramontes, and Ms. Barbara Schraeger voted for a public admonishment. Commission members Mrs. Crystal Lui, Mrs. Penny Perez, Judge Risë Jones Pichon, and Mr. Lawrence Simi voted for a private admonishment. Commission member Mr. Michael Kahn did not participate.

Dated: August 15, 2006

/s/
Marshall B. Grossman
Chairperson

STATE OF CALIFORNIA

BEFORE THE COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

| IN THE MATTER CONCERNING JUDGE PAMELA L. ILES | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT |
|---|---|

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge Pamela L. Iles, who was appointed to the Orange County Municipal Court, South Orange County Judicial District, in January 1983, and elevated to the Orange County Superior Court in August 1998, upon unification of the trial courts. Her current term began in January 2001. Judge Iles and her attorney, Edith R. Matthai, Esq., appeared before the commission on June 28, 2006, pursuant to rule 116 of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance, to contest the imposition of a public admonishment. Having considered the written and oral objections and argument submitted by Judge Iles and her counsel, and good cause appearing, the Commission on Judicial Performance issues this public admonishment pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution, based upon the following Statement of Facts and Reasons:

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

On August 5, 2002, while presiding over People v. Wagner (No. 02SF0210FA), a domestic violence case, Judge Iles placed the defendant on probation. The conditions of probation included that the defendant pay certain fines and donate $1,000 to a battered women's shelter called Laura's House, that he participate in a batterer's program, and that he contact the Health Care Agency by a certain date in order to be evaluated for a substance abuse program.

The terms of probation were modified several times, including (1) an extension of time until December 16, 2002, for the defendant to appear in court to present proof of enrollment in a substance abuse program, and (2) an extension of time until January 7, 2003, to provide a progress report on the batterer's program and proof that he paid the donation to Laura's House.

On December 16, 2002, Mr. Wagner failed to appear and provide proof of enrollment in a substance abuse program. Judge Iles ordered his probation revoked and a bench warrant issued for his arrest.

Two days later, on December 18, 2002, Mr. Wagner appeared voluntarily before Judge Iles, without counsel, to request a payment schedule for the money he owed. The bench warrant, issued two days earlier, was recalled when the defendant appeared. Mr. Wagner told Judge Iles that he could not enroll in the substance abuse program because he was taking prescription drugs for a medical condition. The judge ordered Mr. Wagner to appear on January 8, 2003, for further proceedings, including a hearing to consider a physician's report regarding his medical condition. She then sent the defendant to the office of her judicial assistant, Leslie Howard, to discuss payment of the funds he owed.

Mr. Wagner went to Ms. Howard's office and told her that he was unwilling to pay the donation to Laura's House. Ms. Howard left her office followed by Mr. Wagner, went to Judge Iles's courtroom, approached Judge Iles who was dealing with another case, slammed Mr. Wagner's case file down on the sidebar, and told the judge that Mr. Wagner was not cooperating with her and that she could not work with him. Judge Iles told Mr. Wagner that since he was not willing to cooperate with the assistant, he would be taken into custody, and she instructed her bailiff to do so.

Judge Iles's bailiff handcuffed Mr. Wagner and placed him in the in-custody box in the courtroom. Mr. Wagner repeatedly asked Judge Iles why he was being put in custody. Judge Iles told him that he was going into custody because he was not cooperating with Ms. Howard, but later told him he was in custody for a probation violation. Judge Iles then ordered her bailiff to "take him down," meaning that he was to be removed from her courtroom to a cell elsewhere. The bailiff did so. Judge Iles then appointed the Public Defender to represent Mr. Wagner and set the matter for an arraignment hearing – 29 days later – on January 16, 2003. No bail was set and Mr. Wagner remained in custody.

Mr. Wagner filed a petition for writ of habeas corpus. In a published opinion, the Court of Appeal granted the petition, finding that, while Mr. Wagner's disobedience of the order to appear on December 16, 2002, was a valid basis for his probation revocation, Judge Iles's placing Mr. Wagner in jail, denying him bail and scheduling a hearing nearly one month later was a de facto revocation of Wagner's probation without affording him requisite due process. (In re Wagner (2004) 127 Cal.App.4th 138, 145-146 (Wagner).) As the appellate court noted, case law requires that, in connection with probation revocation, probationers be advised of their rights to a formal hearing, to be represented by counsel, to present evidence, to confront and cross-examine witnesses, and to disclosure of the evidence against them. (Ibid., citing Morrissey v. Brewer (1972) 408 U.S. 471, 488-489 and People v. Vickers (1972) 8 Cal. 3d 451, 457-461 (Vickers).)

The factual underpinnings of the Court of Appeal decision are findings made by Judge Roger D. Randall following an evidentiary hearing he held, pursuant to an order of the appellate court, as noted by the court in its decision. (See Wagner, supra, 127 Cal.App.4th at p. 141.) According to the court, contrary to the foregoing due process requirements,

> [A]ll [Judge Iles] did was tell [Mr. Wagner] he would be taken into custody because he was not willing to cooperate with the judicial assistant and, when he inquired why he was taken into custody, she merely replied that he was in violation of his probation. This did not satisfy [Judge Iles's] duty to afford due process to [Mr. Wagner].

(Wagner, supra, 127 Cal.App.4th at p. 146.)

In her written objections to the proposed public admonishment and at her appearance before the commission, Judge Iles asserted that she notified Mr. Wagner of the basis of his arrest through his public defender who was appointed after his probation was summarily revoked and after he was remanded into custody. However, she has never provided any evidence to the commission in support of this factual assertion, and it is not reflected in Judge Randall's findings. Furthermore, Mr. Wagner was already in custody before any such notice may have been given. A probationer is entitled to notice of the basis of a probation violation and an opportunity to respond at the initial hearing at which probation is summarily revoked. (Vickers, supra, 8 Cal.3d at pp. 456-457.)

Judge Iles also asserts that the commission should assess her conduct by the statutory standard set by Penal Code section 1203.2, subdivision (a). That code section authorizes a judge to summarily revoke probation upon the rearrest of the probationer where there is reason to believe that the person has violated any of the conditions of probation. However, the Supreme Court has made clear that section 1203.2 "provides for some but not all of the minimum due process requirements necessary to conform such proceedings to the Fourteenth Amendment proscription." (Vickers, supra, 8 Cal.3d at p. 458.) As stated by the Court of Appeal here, "[p]lacing [Mr. Wagner] in jail, denying him bail, and scheduling a hearing a month hence constituted a de facto revocation of his probation without satisfying any of the due process requirements demanded upon such revocation." (Wagner, supra, 127 Cal.App.4th at p. 145.)

Finally, Judge Iles has asserted during the commission investigation and in connection with her objections to the proposed discipline that she has committed only legal error, for which the commission may not discipline her because of the Supreme Court decision in Oberholzer v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1999) 20 Cal.4th 371 (Oberholzer). In that case, the court held that the commission lacks authority to sanction a judge for "mere legal error." (Id. at p. 398.) However, and as relevant here, the court was specific that, a judge who commits legal error that additionally reflects enumerated types of misconduct is subject to commission discipline. (Ibid.) When, as here, there is legal error and clear and convincing evidence of a "disregard for fundamental rights," the commission may impose discipline. (Ibid.)

Judges are required to be solicitous of the rights of persons who come before the court. (See Geiler v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1973) 10 Cal.3d 270, 286.) Judge Iles is an experienced jurist. No reasonable or reasonably competent judge would assume or conclude that he or she could summarily incarcerate an unrepresented defendant, in the manner Judge Iles did here, without implicating fundamental rights. (Cf. In the Matter Concerning Judge Stephen P. Gildner, Decision and Order Imposing Public Admonishment (2005), p. 4 [no reasonable or reasonably competent judge would assume or conclude that he or she could issue warrants for defendants' arrests for failure to appear, in the absence of any evidence the defendants had notice of hearing].) Judge Iles's actions in remanding Mr. Wagner to custody without notice or the opportunity to respond to the charges clearly and convincingly reflects a disregard for his fundamental rights.

Judge Iles's conduct also violates canon 2A, which requires judges to respect and comply with the law, and canon 3B(2), which requires judges to be faithful to the law and maintain professional competence in the law. At a minimum, Judge Iles committed improper action within the meaning of article VI, section 18, subdivision (d).

In determining that a public admonishment was appropriate, the commission noted that Judge Iles has been the subject of prior discipline.

In 1988, Judge Iles received an advisory letter for failing to strictly abide by statutory requirements in imposing sanctions on a litigant.

In 1997, Judge Iles received an advisory letter for her handling of a domestic violence case, which gave rise to the appearance of embroilment and abandonment of her role as a neutral judicial officer. Judge Iles told the defendant that his probation would be violated if the victim contacted him, denied bail pending appeal although the defendant was statutorily entitled to it, and participated in settling the record on appeal after having been disqualified.

In 2004, Judge Iles received a private admonishment for displaying embroilment and partiality in a criminal case, and for creating the appearance that she sought to use her judicial office to advance her personal interest in achieving a particular outcome. The judge personally contacted a prosecutor suggesting that he investigate an attorney for perjury, asked witnesses to prepare declarations for the district attorney's office, and repeatedly contacted prosecutors about their investigation while it was ongoing. In the private admonishment, the commission noted "with great concern that this is the third occasion on which the judge's inappropriate conduct has warranted commission action."

Commission members Mr. Marshall B. Grossman, Justice Judith D. McConnell, Ms. Patricia Miller, Mr. Jose Miramontes, Mrs. Penny Perez, and Mr. Lawrence Simi voted for a public admonishment. Commission members Mrs. Crystal Lui, Judge Risë Jones Pichon, and Ms. Barbara Schraeger voted for a private admonishment. Commission member Judge Frederick P. Horn was recused, and Commission member Mr. Michael A. Kahn did not participate.

Dated: August 16, 2006

/s/
Marshall B. Grossman
Chairperson

STATE OF CALIFORNIA

BEFORE THE COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

| | |
|---|---|
| IN THE MATTER CONCERNING JUDGE STEPHEN E. BENSON | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT |

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge Stephen E. Benson, a judge of the Butte County Superior Court since January 2001. Judge Benson was elected to office in 2000 in a contested election that is the subject of this decision, and began his current term in January 2001. Judge Benson and his attorney, James A. Murphy, Esq., appeared before the commission on October 17, 2006, pursuant to rule 116 of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance, to contest the imposition of a proposed public admonishment. The judge did not submit any substantive written objections or argument against the proposed discipline. Having considered the oral objections and argument presented by Judge Benson and his counsel during the appearance, and good cause appearing, the Commission on Judicial Performance issues this public admonishment pursuant to article VI, section 18, subdivision (d), of the California Constitution, based upon the Statement of Facts and Reasons that follows.

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

This public admonishment is based on violations of the Political Reform Act (the "Act") [1] by then-attorney Stephen E. Benson (hereafter Judge Benson) when he was a candidate for the Butte County Superior Court in 2000. The Act requires candidates to deposit all contributions and loans to a campaign into a separate bank account designated for the campaign committee (Gov. Code § 85201), and to disclose the source and amount of contributions or loans of $100 or more on campaign statements for the reporting period in which the loan or contribution was received (Gov. Code §§ 84211, 84216, 84216.5).

In September 2005, the Fair Political Practices Commission (FPPC) charged Judge Benson with four violations of the Act that occurred during his campaign for judicial office in 2000. The charges were based on information received during a routine tax audit of Judge Benson's campaign committee. The audit disclosed that on or about September 21, 2000, Judge Benson deposited a $71,000 loan he received from his father, Helmer G. Benson, into the judge's personal bank account. The judge later dispersed the loan in increments of $60,000 and $11,000 into his campaign account, listing himself as the source on each occasion. The FPPC charges were as follows:

I. Judge Benson received a $71,000 contribution to his judicial campaign in the form of a loan from his father, Helmer G. Benson. On or about September 21, 2000, Judge Benson deposited the loan from his father into his personal bank account and failed to disclose the loan on required campaign statements. When Judge Benson later deposited funds from the loan into his campaign account, he reported himself rather than his father as the source of the loan in violation of the Act. (Gov. Code § 85201 (c).)

[1] The Political Reform Act is contained in Government Code sections 81000 through 91014.

II. In a pre-election campaign statement filed on or about October 5, 2000, for the reporting period July 1, 2000 through September 30, 2000, Judge Benson failed to disclose the $71,000 campaign loan from his father in violation of the Act. (Gov. Code §§ 84211 (f) and 84216 (c).) [2]

III. In a pre-election campaign statement filed on or about October 25, 2000, for the reporting period October 1, 2000 through October 21, 2000, Judge Benson disclosed himself rather than his father as the source of the loan and improperly reported the amount of the loan as $60,000 in violation of the Act. (Gov. Code §§ 84211 (f) and 84216 (e).)

IV. In a semi-annual campaign statement filed on or about January 31, 2001, for the reporting period October 22, 2000 through December 31, 2000, Judge Benson disclosed himself rather than his father as the source of the loan and improperly reported the amount of the loan as $21,000 in violation of the Act. (Gov. Code § 84211(g).)

On September 21, 2005, Judge Benson signed a stipulation for consideration by the FPPC in which he admitted each of the above-mentioned violations. On October 13, 2005, the FPPC approved the stipulation, and entered a decision and order finding each of the above-mentioned allegations to be true and imposing a penalty of $7,000 on Judge Benson. The decision by the FPPC to impose less than the maximum penalty ($11,000) was based, in part, on its finding that Judge Benson was not trying to conceal that his father was a contributor to his campaign, as the judge had disclosed his father as the source of a previous loan during the campaign. The stipulation, decision and order subsequently were referred by the FPPC to the Commission on Judicial Performance in October 2005.

[2] These and subsequent citations to Government Code sections refer to the code sections as they existed in 2000; certain subdivisions were revised and re-lettered in January 2001.

During his appearance before the commission to contest the proposed discipline, Judge Benson repeatedly stated he did not dispute any of the factual allegations concerning his violations of the Act. He was asked twice by a commission member why he had disclosed a smaller loan from his father during the primary election, yet failed to disclose the $71,000 loan from his father during the general election. Judge Benson stated he was not trying to hide the fact his father had loaned him money, but he could not explain his failure to disclose the large loan. According to the judge, "It was a simple detail that just didn't even occur to me as – I can't tell you why."

An express purpose of the Political Reform Act, as set forth in Government Code section 81002, subdivision (a), is to ensure that "[r]eceipts and expenditures in election campaigns [] be fully and truthfully disclosed in order that the voters may be fully informed and improper practices may be inhibited." Judge Benson undermined this basic purpose of the Act by failing to disclose that his father in large part financed his campaign. The father's $71,000 loan represented over 40 percent of the total contributions received by Judge Benson during the reporting period. Judge Benson's failure to obey the requirements of the Act also constitute violations of canon 3B(2) which requires a judge to "be faithful to the law," and canon 2A which requires a judge to comply with the law and to act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity of the judiciary. At a minimum, the judge's misconduct constitutes improper action within the meaning of article VI, section 18, subdivision (d), of the California Constitution.

Commission members Mr. Marshall B. Grossman, Judge Frederick P. Horn, Mrs. Crystal Lui, Justice Judith D. McConnell, Mr. Jose C. Miramontes, Mrs. Penny Perez, Judge Risë Jones Pichon, Ms. Barbara Schraeger and Mr. Lawrence Simi voted for a public admonishment. Commission members Mr. Michael A. Kahn and Ms. Patricia Miller did not participate.

Dated: November 15, 2006

/s/
Marshall B. Grossman
Chairperson

PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE JAMES M. BROOKS

The Commission on Judicial Performance has ordered Judge James M. Brooks publicly admonished pursuant to Article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution and Commission Rule 115, as set forth in the following statement of facts and reasons found by the commission:

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

Judge Brooks has been a judge of the Orange County Superior Court since 1998. His current term began in January 2005. Previously, he was a judge of the Orange County Municipal Court from 1987 to 1998.

1. In 2004, Judge Brooks presided over the case of Palacio Del Mar Homeowners Association v. McMahon, case number 01CC14684.

On October 20, 2004, Judge Brooks presided over an order to show cause hearing regarding Elizabeth McMahon's alleged contempt for failure to appear for her deposition. During that hearing, Judge Brooks made statements to Arnold and Elizabeth McMahon that were sarcastic, demeaning, and intimidating. The following colloquy took place at the beginning of that hearing:

> ARNOLD MCMAHON: My deposition was set for October 15. I woke up about 3:30 on the morning of October 14, with a very intense pressure in my chest. I went over to my doctor and they did an EKG and found abnormalities in it. So he asked me to immediately go to the nearest hospital.
>
> THE COURT: Gee. I wonder what's going to happen when we put you in jail, Mr. McMahon. Your little ticker might stop, you think?

Then, after ordering Elizabeth McMahon to appear for her deposition on a new date, Judge Brooks stated the following to her counsel: "[T]ell her to bring a check for $5,000. That's the sanctions I'm imposing for her contempt and contemptuous conduct towards the court and Mr. Kim. First, $5,000 . . . she pays to him. If she doesn't show up on the 27th it will be [$]10,000 payable to the court. I'd mention jail but it might give her a heart attack." Judge Brooks's conduct violated canon 3B(4) of the California Code of Judicial Ethics, which requires that a judge be patient, dignified and courteous to litigants and others with whom the judge deals in an official capacity.

Judge Brooks issued a minute order embodying his oral ruling on contempt, which stated, in part: "IN THE EVENT THAT [ELIZABETH MCMAHON] DOES NOT APPEAR FOR DEPOSITION AS ORDERED[,] SANCTIONS WILL BE IMPOSED IN THE SUM OF $10,000.00 PAYABLE TO CLERK OF THE COURT."

On May 31, 2005, the Court of Appeal of the State of California, Fourth Appellate District, issued a nonpublished opinion, McMahon v. Superior Court, case number G034741, that, in part, affirmed Judge Brooks's order adjudging Elizabeth McMahon guilty of contempt and imposing $5,000 in sanctions. However, the Court of Appeal also found that Judge Brooks had improperly threatened to impose sanctions of $10,000 against Elizabeth McMahon, and issued an order directing Judge Brooks to vacate the portion of his October 20, 2004 order threatening to impose those sanctions. In its opinion, the Court of Appeal stated, with regard to Judge Brooks's conduct:

> On the other hand, no authority exists for the court to threaten sanctions of $10,000 should Elizabeth again fail to appear for deposition. The court plainly could not adjudicate Elizabeth in contempt for failure to appear in the future without first holding another contempt trial, pursuant to the procedures described above.
>
> . . . The Association's declarations in support of their sanctions requests do not itemize the attorney fees and costs incurred therein, which presumably do not total the entire $5,000 sanctions already imposed, let alone the threatened $10,000. Thus, the court lacked substantial evidence to threaten Elizabeth with sanctions of $10,000 for her contempt.

Judge Brooks's conduct violated canon 2A, which provides that a judge "shall respect and comply with the law and shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary." Judge Brooks's conduct also violated canon 3B(7), which provides that a judge shall accord every person who has a legal interest in a proceeding full right to be heard according to the law.

2. In 2005, Judge Brooks presided over the case of Vinci Investments Co., Inc. v. Joher, et al., case number 04CC04522, a contract action seeking specific performance and damages for the defendants' failure to transfer ownership of certain property. During a hearing after trial in the matter on June 15, 2005, while issuing his tentative ruling against the defendants, Judge Brooks stated:

> THE COURT: Mrs. Joher, the mother, Sosha or whatever her name is, she's the one that Joe, among others, has turned everything over to, put everything in her name; a lady that probably doesn't know where the restaurant is; a lady that, in her own country - I put a question mark; I know it's Syria, Iraq, Iran, Lebanon -probably a very nice lady, probably doesn't know how much she owns, I don't think.

(R.T. 16:21 – 17:1.)

In a supplement to his tentative ruling in that case, Judge Brooks stated that the defendant transferred "much of the business/property into the name of defendant 'Joe' Joher's wife, who, in her native Syria (?) probably wouldn't be allowed to own property."

Judge Brooks's comments in the Joher case violated canon 3B(5), which requires judges to refrain from speech that would reasonably be perceived as bias or prejudice. Judge Brooks's conduct also violated canon 2A, which requires judges to act in a manner that promotes public confidence in "the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary" as well as canon 3B(4) which requires judges to be "patient, dignified and courteous" toward those with whom they deal in an official capacity.

Judge Brooks's conduct described above was, at a minimum, improper action pursuant to article VI, section 18(d)(3) of the California Constitution.

In determining that a public admonishment was appropriate, the commission noted that Judge Brooks has previously been disciplined for conduct similar to that set forth above. In 1996,

Judge Brooks received an advisory letter addressing, in part, the judge's comments reflecting ethnic bias: referring to Hispanic defendants as "Pedro"; issuing a bench warrant for an Asian defendant for "ten thousand dollars or twenty thousand yen"; and stating to an undocumented Hispanic defendant, "[y]ou have more names than the Tijuana telephone book." In 1999, Judge Brooks received another advisory letter for remarks to a defendant at the conclusion of a preliminary hearing about how the judge would have handled an assault on a member of his own family: "I would go down and punch [the defendant's] lights out," and that instead of calling the police, it would be, "touch them, you die." In 2003, Judge Brooks received a private admonishment for conduct including referring to the parties in a case, the operators of a mobile home park, as "Nazis" and analogizing their actions to that of the Nazis during the Holocaust. In another matter also included as a basis for the private admonishment, in the course of denying plaintiff's motion to exclude reference to his status as an undocumented alien, Judge Brooks made remarks conveying his stereotypes of undocumented aliens, including that they place burdens on taxpayers by receiving benefits to which they are not entitled. The judge referred to the defendant as "this good doctor." The appellate court reversed Judge Brooks's ruling in that case, and based its reversal in part on the appearance of bias. Hernandez v. Paicius (2003) 109 Cal.App.4th 452.

Commission members Mr. Marshall Grossman, Mrs. Crystal Lui, Justice Judith D. McConnell, Ms. Patricia Miller, Mrs. Penny Perez, Judge Risë Jones Pichon, and Mr. Lawrence Simi voted to impose a public admonishment. Commission members Mr. Michael Kahn and Mr. Jose Miramontes concurred with the imposition of a public admonishment. Commission member Judge Frederick P. Horn was recused. Commission member Ms. Barbara Schraeger did not participate.

PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF FORMER JUDGE VINCENT P. DIFIGLIA

The Commission on Judicial Performance has ordered former Judge Vincent P. DiFiglia publicly admonished pursuant to Article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution and Commission Rule 115, as set forth in the following statement of facts and reasons found by the commission:

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

Judge DiFiglia was a judge of the San Diego Superior Court for sixteen years; he retired in November 2003. His last term began in 2001.

In 1999, the case of Border Business Park, Inc., v. City of San Diego was assigned to Judge DiFiglia. Lead counsel for the plaintiff filed an application requesting information about the judge's relationship with the Office of the San Diego City Attorney, where the judge had worked at one time. A conference was held, but no disclosures were placed on the record.

In April 2000, attorney Vincent Bartolotta became associated as co-counsel for the plaintiff, and he represented the plaintiff at the jury trial conducted before Judge DiFiglia in late 2000. Before the case went to the jury, Judge DiFiglia had decided a pivotal legal issue—inverse condemnation liability—in favor of the plaintiff. In January 2001, the jury returned a verdict of $94.5 million in favor of the plaintiff. Judge DiFiglia at no time disclosed on the record any relationship he had with attorney Bartolotta.

Judge DiFiglia had a long-term personal relationship with Mr. Bartolotta. In 1992, Judge DiFiglia was privately admonished by the Commission on Judicial Performance for conduct that included accepting gifts of golf tournament fees from Mr. Bartolotta and his partner in 1990 and 1991, and failing to disclose on the record his relationship with these attorneys or his participation in golf tournaments at their expense. After receiving the private admonishment in 1992, Judge DiFiglia maintained a friendly relationship with Mr. Bartolotta, which included playing golf with Mr. Bartolotta on four to six occasions at his own expense. The judge saw Mr. Bartolotta at bi-monthly dinner meetings of the American Board of Trial Advocates and at bench-bar mixers, and would sometimes have drinks with Mr. Bartolotta at a bar or restaurant. The judge also attended a Christmas Eve party at Mr. Bartolotta's home prior to 1993.

An article about Judge DiFiglia's prior commission discipline involving failure to disclose receipt of gifts from Mr. Bartolotta appeared in the press shortly after the jury verdict. After a hearing on a request filed by the City of San Diego for information about the judge's relationship with Mr. Bartolotta, Judge DiFiglia disqualified himself from the case.

Judge DiFiglia's failure to disclose on the record any information about his relationship with Mr. Bartolotta was contrary to canon 3E(2) of the California Code of Judicial Ethics, which provides that in all trial court proceedings, a judge "shall disclose on the record information that the judge believes the parties or their lawyers might consider relevant to the question of disqualification, even if the judge believes there is no actual basis for disqualification." Judge DiFiglia failed to make such disclosure despite the fact that he had been privately admonished by the commission in 1992 for failing to disclose on the record his relationship with Mr. Bartolotta and his partner, and his acceptance of golf tournament fees from them. This was considered a factor in aggravation by the commission.

Judge DiFiglia's failure to disclose on the record his past employment with the city attorney's office also was contrary to canon 3E(2).

In addition, while the Border case was in trial before him, Judge DiFiglia escorted a secretary then employed in Mr. Bartolotta's office to a Christmas party hosted by the American Board of Trial Advocates. This conduct was contrary to canon 2A, which requires judges to act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary.

Judge DiFiglia's conduct as described above was, at a minimum, improper action.

Judge DiFiglia's conduct occurred in 2001. Thereafter, an appeal in the Border case, in which the issue of whether Judge DiFiglia was disqualified as a matter of law due to his relationship with Mr. Bartolotta, and whether the judge's prior commission discipline arising out of the that relationship conclusively demonstrated an appearance of partiality, was pending until September 19, 2006, when the appeal was decided without reference to this issue. Because the central issue before the commission was raised in the appeal, the commission deferred action while the appeal was pending in order to avoid the risk of inconsistent adjudications and perceived interference in an ongoing case.

Although Judge DiFiglia retired in 2003 and is not sitting on assignment, he continues to perform adjudicative functions as a private judge. In light of his continued performance of judicial functions, and in order to preserve public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary, the commission determined to issue this public admonishment.

Commission members Judge Frederick P. Horn, Mrs. Crystal Lui, Mr. Jose Miramontes, Mrs. Penny Perez, Judge Risë Jones Pichon, Ms. Barbara Schraeger, and Mr. Lawrence Simi voted to impose a public admonishment. Commission members Mr. Marshall Grossman and Justice Judith D. McConnell were recused. Commission members Mr. Michael Kahn and Ms. Patricia Miller did not participate.

January 9, 2007

STATE OF CALIFORNIA

BEFORE THE COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

| | |
|---|---|
| IN THE MATTER CONCERNING JUDGE RONALD M. SOHIGIAN | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT |

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge Ronald M. Sohigian, a judge of the Los Angeles County Superior Court since 1988. His current term began in 2003. Judge Sohigian and his attorney, Edward P. George, Jr., appeared before the commission on March 29, 2007 to contest the imposition of a public admonishment, pursuant to Rule 116 of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance. Having considered the written and oral objections and argument submitted by Judge Sohigian and his counsel, and good cause appearing, the Commission on Judicial Performance issues this public admonishment pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution, based on the following statement of facts and reasons.

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

Based on the facts set forth below, the commission finds that Judge Sohigian has engaged in a practice of abusing his judicial authority in connection with the issuance of orders to show cause (OSC's) re sanctions, in violation of canons 1, 2A, and 3B(2) of the California Code of Judicial Ethics. The commission also finds that Judge Sohigian treated an attorney in a sarcastic and belittling manner in violation of canon 3B(4), which requires a judge to be patient, dignified, and courteous to lawyers with whom the judge deals in an official capacity.

I. IMPROPER ISSUANCE OF ORDERS TO SHOW CAUSE

A. Issuance of OSC's to plaintiffs for failure to appear at the initial status conference in cases where plaintiff's counsel did appear at the conference.

Judge Sohigian routinely issued OSC's to plaintiffs for failing to appear at the initial status conference in civil cases, even when the plaintiffs had appeared through counsel and there was no requirement that plaintiffs appear personally at the status conference. Judge Sohigian contends that these OSC's were not intended to have "a counterfactual meaning"; that is, he did not intend to mean that someone who was in attendance was alleged not to be in attendance. Instead, when there was an absence at a status conference or a failure to give notice of the status conference, he issued OSC's to require all parties to prove their lack of responsibility for the absence or failure to give notice. Issuance of an OSC and threatening sanctions against parties in the absence of any evidence of malfeasance on their part is an abuse of the sanctions power. Judge Sohigian attempts to minimize the burden and detriment to the parties by asserting that the hearings on the OSC's were scheduled on days when the parties were already scheduled to appear in court for other reasons. However, as a result of his practice, the parties were still required to expend resources to respond to OSC's that were unwarranted. Judge Sohigian's practice is exemplified by the following cases: E.H. Butland Development Corp. v. Century Veterinary Group, et al. (case No. BC284988) (Butland); Christine Avila v. David Cervantes, et al. (case No. BC289872) (Avila); Kamel Hur v. Kwi Jong Yang, et al. (case No. BC290771) (Hur); Izumi Yokozawa v. Alliant Food Service Corp., et al. (case No. BC290886) (Yokozawa); and Shahriar Yazdani, et al. v. Janis Burns, et al. (case No. BC305537) (Yadzani).

B. Issuance of OSC's to defendants for failing to give notice of the initial status conference when they had no duty to do so.

Judge Sohigian's practice of issuing unwarranted OSC's included issuing OSC's to defendants for failing to give notice of the initial status conference, even though only the plaintiffs were required to give notice and not the defendants. The issuance of OSC's under these circumstances was an obvious abuse of authority, as there was absolutely no factual or legal basis to sanction defendants for failing to do something they were not required to do. Judge Sohigian's practice required defendants to expend resources unnecessarily to respond to the unwarranted OSC's and is exemplified by the following cases: Butland; Avila; and Hur.

C. Leaving OSC's in place during the pendency of the action.

Judge Sohigian also engaged in a practice of repeatedly continuing hearings on certain OSC's, thereby postponing any decision on them, even though he had received a response from the party or parties threatened with sanctions that would have allowed him to decide whether to impose sanctions. The judge's practice of failing to resolve OSC's subjected the parties to the threat of sanctions for indeterminate periods and left them in an uncertain position. Judge Sohigian explained this practice by stating that it was proper for him to wait until further developments had occurred in the case to see whether he wanted to issue sanctions. While judges are permitted to consider a previous lack of compliance or previous sanctions in deciding whether to impose sanctions, fundamental principles of notice and due process preclude judges from imposing sanctions for future conduct upon which the issuance of the initial OSC was not based. Judge Sohigian's practice was a clear abuse of judicial authority.

Judge Sohigian's practice is illustrated by events in Yokozawa. At the initial status conference in Yokozawa on May 5, 2003, Judge Sohigian issued OSC's to each party for failure to file a status conference questionnaire and failure to appear at the status conference, although no defendant had made a formal appearance in the case. Defense counsel submitted a declaration on May 23, 2003, in response to the OSC, explaining that no responsive pleading was due from defendant as of the May 5, 2003, initial status conference. Despite that submission, Judge Sohigian continued the OSC's and kept them on calendar throughout the pendency of the case, until January 27, 2004, when the case and the OSC's were dismissed.

Additional examples of this practice occurred in New York Credit v. Unitex International, et al. (case No. BC286265); Stacey Snowden v. Advanced Video and Security Technologies, et al. (case No. BC292087); and Yazdani.

D. Issuance of OSC's threatening dismissal of the case at the initial status conference.

The OSC's Judge Sohigian routinely issued at initial status conferences (entitled "Order to Show Cause Re Dismissal/ Striking-And-Default And Why Plaintiff And Counsel Should Not Be Sanctioned For Failure to Give Notice of Hearing" and "OSC Re Dismissal/ Striking-and-Default And Why Parties and Counsel Should Not Be Sanctioned") threatened sanctions that would terminate a case or a party's defense at the outset of the case. Government Code section 68608(b) permits the dismissal of a case or striking of a pleading as a sanction only "if it appears that less severe sanctions would not be effective after taking into account the effect of previous sanctions or previous lack of compliance in the case." Calendar management by itself is not a sufficient basis for dismissal, and courts have no inherent power to dismiss solely for failures to comply with time standards for case disposition. (Weil and Brown, California Practice Guide: Civil Procedure Before Trial (Rutter 2006), §12:92-12:93, p. 12(1)-32.) Judge Sohigian issued one or both of his form OSC's at the initial status conference in each of the cases cited herein, even though there had been no previous sanctions or previous lack of compliance in any of the cases that he could have considered. That practice is a clear abuse of authority. Further, Judge Sohigian's issuance of OSC's threatening such severe sanctions at the outset of actions "suggests an abdication of his responsibility" to determine whether such sanctions were appropriate. (See Kloepfer v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1989) 49 Cal.3d 826, 851.)

E. Judge Sohigian's Objections to Public Admonishment.

In response to the commission's notice of intended public admonishment and pursuant to the commission's rules, Judge Sohigian prepared and submitted his written objection to public, as opposed to private discipline. (Rules of the Com. on Jud. Performance, Rule 116.) Judge Sohigian also appeared before the commission pursuant to the rules. (Id.) In both his written objections and at his appearance before the commission, Judge Sohigian requested consideration of his written response to the commission's preliminary investigation letter to explain his use of OSC's. The commission has considered Judge Sohigian's objections and responses, and briefly discusses them here. (Rules of the Com. on Jud. Performance, Rule 116(b).)

In support of his objection to public discipline and request for private discipline, Judge Sohigian expressed regret for the manner in which he used OSC's in case management. He admitted that the OSC practices described above were wrong. He advised the commission that he has changed those practices, and no longer employs the OSC forms that he used in the example cases. The commission acknowledges Judge Sohigian's expressions of regret, his admissions, and that he has taken remedial action. The commission has weighed those factors in arriving at its determination of this matter. However, the commission has determined that for the following reasons, public admonishment remains appropriate.

At his appearance before the commission, Judge Sohigian stated that he believes that the Judicial Council should define or promulgate a statewide form for OSC's, and that he would like the commission to defer or suspend action in this matter to allow him to seek a ruling from the Judicial Council on what an OSC form should contain. In support of that position, Judge Sohigian stated that several California counties are using OSC forms that are similar or the same as the ones he employed and has now abandoned, and he brought examples with him to his appearance. He suggested that the continued use of these forms threatens the same kind of misconduct and harm that he admits was involved in his OSC practices.

Moreover, in response to questions by commission members about why he issued OSC's to persons who had committed no wrongdoing, he said he "admit[ted]" that the text of his OSC forms was "too loose."

These responses suggest that Judge Sohigian believes that his abuses of the judicial power to issue OSC's occurred wholly or in part because his OSC forms were defective, and that other judges using similar forms may unknowingly commit the same abuses. However, the abusive aspects of Judge Sohigian's OSC practices are not the result of defects in form.

As discussed above, it is misconduct to issue OSC's to parties or counsel who have committed no wrongdoing, but who nonetheless must respond to the OSC's under threat of dismissal, default, or other severe sanction. (See Kloepfer v. Commission on Judicial Performance, supra, 49 Cal.3d at p. 857 [OSC to non-party to "find out the address of the defendant" and why the non-party posted bail for the defendant was a "serious misuse of the judicial office" where there was no factual basis for the judge's conclusion that the non-party had committed misconduct that would subject the non-party to the court's jurisdiction to order him to appear].) For that reason, it was at least improper action when Judge Sohigian issued OSC's threatening sanctions against innocent counsel and parties, not because he had some reasonable basis to believe they had done something that might warrant the sanctions, but only because he wanted to compel them to provide information about some other person's wrongdoing. The misconduct in that practice was not the accidental byproduct of a poorly drafted form. The misconduct was Judge Sohigian's determination to issue OSC's for the improper purpose of compelling innocent parties and counsel to provide testimony under threat of sanctions, when those sanctions could not have been lawfully imposed on them for the misconduct cited in the OSC's.

Similar considerations apply to Judge Sohigian's practice of repeatedly continuing the hearings on OSC's issued at the first status conferences in civil cases. Judge Sohigian continued the hearings on those OSC's for the stated purpose of holding potentially severe sanctions in abeyance throughout an action, so that he could consider the acts and omissions of the parties occurring after the OSC issued in setting any sanction he might impose for the wrongdoing the OSC charged. That purpose had nothing to do with the form of the OSC, and no modification to Judge Sohigian's OSC form or that of any other court would remedy the abuse of judicial power the practice embodied.

Judge Sohigian's focus on defects of form and his request for suspension of these proceedings so that he can seek a ruling from the Judicial Council on the propriety of OSC forms similar to his own indicates a fundamental misunderstanding of the reasons the commission has acted in this matter. Judge Sohigian has described the reasons for his OSC practices in his responses to the commission's notice and at his appearance before the commission. Those reasons establish that the practices were an abuse of judicial power and at least improper action, and were not the result of imprecise or faulty forms. The commission therefore rejects Judge Sohigian's objection to public admonishment and request for suspension of the proceedings.

II. IMPROPER TREATMENT OF ATTORNEY

In 2006, Judge Sohigian was presiding over Wasserman, Comden, Casselman & Pearson v. Harris, et al. (case No. BC340196), in which the plaintiff, a law firm, was seeking to recover attorney's fees from some of its former clients. Attorney Peter Q. Ezzell represented the plaintiff law firm. On February 9, 2006, Judge Sohigian set equitable causes of action (which could be decided by the judge and did not require a jury) for trial on April 17, 2006. On April 4, 2006, some of the defendants filed for bankruptcy, resulting in a stay (or suspension) of the proceedings before Judge Sohigian as to those defendants. When Mr. Ezzell appeared before Judge Sohigian on April 17, 2006, he expected to proceed with the trial on the equitable causes of action, despite the bankruptcy filings. Judge Sohigian treated him in a belittling, rude and sarcastic manner, as the transcript of the proceeding shows.

Judge Sohigian asked why trial should proceed against certain defendants given the state of the pleadings. Mr. Ezzell stated that he believed certain equitable issues were set for separate trial. The following exchange occurred:

> THE COURT: That's not exactly the answer to the question I want. ... I think my question is pretty clear on the record. You recognize your answer doesn't respond to it. If that's what you want to say, that's all right. I can't make you answer any question I've ask [sic]. I can just ask it, and then you can say whatever you want to.
>
> MR. EZZELL: I always seek to respond to the court.
>
> THE COURT: I'm not sure that's true, but in this case that didn't occur.

When Judge Sohigian asked Mr. Ezzell when the first amended complaint was filed, he initially told the judge that he did not have a copy of that pleading with him, but later in the proceeding told the judge that he wanted to check a box he had brought to court to see if it contained the pleading, after which the following exchange occurred:

> THE COURT: Wait a minute. Mr. Ezzell, you can do anything you want to do. I beg of you, sir, when I ask you a question and you give me an answer, make sure that you are telling the truth particularly about whether you have a piece of paper with you. When you tell me something and then by behavior you impeach yourself by starting to look in the briefcase put just about three and a half feet from you now – when you start to look for something that you tell me you do not have, it leaves me with a very uneasy feeling about matters having to do with credibility. I'll give you whatever period of time to look for your pleading you would like. Would you like me to sit here on the bench while you look for you [sic] or would you like me to go into recess? That's very courtly of you, but I think in view of these inconsistent statements by Mr. Ezzell, you better wait and find out whether he does or does not have his own pleading since he stated both he does have it and does not have it. I think you might want to either inforce [sic] his position or impeach his position with respect to one of those.
>
> MR. EZZELL: Your Honor, I think I said I need to look for it.

> THE COURT: You did say that just now but before you said you didn't have it so there would be no reason to look for it. For example, if someone were to ask me to look for a $10,000 bill in my pocket, I wouldn't say, just a second. I'll look for it. I pretty much would know.
>
> MR. EZZELL: I have a copy of it, Your Honor.
>
> THE COURT: That must be very comforting with respect to what you said the second time around. Go ahead and look at it. Then make whatever argument you wish regarding this topic that I raised except for the topics of credibility and accuracy.

When Mr. Ezzell indicated to the court that he was not a bankruptcy lawyer and could not tell the court whether he could dismiss certain defendants under federal bankruptcy law, Judge Sohigian stated:

> THE COURT: Mr. Ezzell, you've got to know the answer to that question. That was obvious. You knew that question was going to be asked. [¶] ... And so for anybody to show up in this courtroom again and say, I'm not a bankruptcy lawyer. I think. I don't know. It begins to sort of stretch the membrane.

After the foregoing remark, Judge Sohigian ordered Mr. Ezzell to go across the street to the law library to research the issue and return to court in twenty minutes. Mr. Ezzell left, called his office, and had portions of the cases read to him over the phone. When he returned to court, the following exchange occurred:

> THE COURT: Back on the record. Attorneys?
>
> MR. EZZELL: Thank you very much, Your Honor. In the 20 minutes I had an opportunity to have read to me portions of the cases and also –
>
> THE COURT: Would you like more time, Mr. Ezzell? These suggestion [sic] by you that you're in some way being rushed or you just haven't had the time to do something are really either meaningless or provocative or have some affirmative purpose that you intend. They're provocative in the sense that a perfectly obvious issue which all lawyers could have and should have > anticipated is an issue that you lawyers are saying you want time to research on or you don't know the law.

>
> If you want me to give you more time, I will give you more time. I told you to go across the street to the law library. If you didn't do that, if you had someone call you or you called somebody and had someone read something to you, that's obviously not what I ordered or proposed or suggested at all. But if what you're saying is look, Your Honor, notwithstanding your specific orders as to what I was supposed to do to prepare, I didn't do it. Give me a second chance, tell me that now and I'll consider giving you a second chance.
>
> Sooner or later you have to take a legal position without saying, I don't know what the law is or somebody read something to me. In other words, you have to be the attorney for your client and you've got to make whatever legal argument that is legally either proper – I hope it's proper. Certainly in your client's interest. I think we should dispense with the, I don't know what I'm talking about.
>
> MR. EZZELL: I'm sorry, Your Honor. I had not had an opportunity to finish. I was about to say that I understand the two cases I believe and am able to speak on them ... .

Later in the hearing, Judge Sohigian decided to stay the trial pending resolution of the bankruptcy stay, and remarked:

> THE COURT: I'm going to prepare a written order that will say substantially those things. The written order will be the order. I'll need some help from you in formulating it if you care to give it. Due to behaviors that have occurred in the past if the situation is you would rather not be of assistance and/or you just don't know the answers to these questions, I'll do the necessary work on that myself.

Judge Sohigian's comments during this hearing were inconsistent with the duty of judges to be patient, dignified and courteous to lawyers with whom the judge deals in an official capacity. Sarcastic, demeaning or belittling comments toward a litigant or counsel are not consistent with the conduct required by Canon 3B(4) of the California Code of Judicial Ethics. (See, e.g., Kennick v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1990) 50 Cal.3d 297, 323-327.) Judge Sohigian's conduct at the April 17, 2006 hearing was, at a minimum, improper action.

In determining that a public admonishment was appropriate in this matter, the commission has also considered that Judge Sohigian has been the subject of prior discipline. In 1991, Judge Sohigian received an advisory letter for abusing his authority in sanctioning attorneys. In that matter, Judge Sohigian sanctioned attorneys for exceeding the page limit on briefs submitted to the court and ordered the attorneys to display his order to all other judges before whom the attorneys might seek to file briefs exceeding the page limit in the future, an unauthorized action and clear abuse of the sanction power.

Commission members Hon. Frederick P. Horn, Mr. Michael A. Kahn, Hon. Judith D. McConnell, Ms. Patricia Miller, Mr. Jose C. Miramontes, and Ms. Barbara Schraeger voted for a public admonishment. Commission members Hon. Katherine Feinstein and Mr. Lawrence Simi voted against public admonishment, and would have imposed private discipline. Mr. Marshall Grossman was recused. Two public member positions were vacant.

Dated: April 26, 2007

/s/

Honorable Frederick P. Horn
Chairperson

PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE JAMES M. PETRUCELLI

The Commission on Judicial Performance has ordered Judge James M. Petrucelli publicly admonished pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution and commission rule 115, as set forth in the following statement of facts and reasons found by the commission:

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

Judge Petrucelli has been a judge of the Fresno County Superior Court since 1999. His current term began in January 2005.

Judge Petrucelli was the presiding judge of the Fresno Family Law Division from approximately 2000 through January 2006. In January 2006, he was assigned to the Coalinga courthouse, where he hears traffic matters on certain days of the week. While assigned to those courts, Judge Petrucelli engaged in a pattern of conduct that is inconsistent with canon 3B(4) of the California Code of Judicial Ethics, which requires a judge to be patient, dignified, and courteous with persons with whom the judge deals in an official capacity. The judge's conduct included making discourteous and sarcastic comments to attorneys and litigants appearing before him. This conduct is exemplified by the following:

A. Conduct in Family Law

1. Silva v. Berboa, case No. 556885-2

On September 26, 2005, attorneys Brian Tatarian and Paul Lerandeau appeared before Judge Petrucelli on a matter in which they wanted to put a stipulation on the record. On a form the clerk uses to locate files, Mr. Tatarian wrote the calendar line item number rather than the case number. The judge called "Tatarian and Lerandeau's cases," reminded them that they needed to write the case number, then called a case that was not theirs. When Mr. Tatarian said that the case called was not theirs, the judge responded, "That's because you didn't bother to write the case number on there. You'll go to the bottom of the line." The judge handled one other stipulation before calling Mr. Tatarian's case a few minutes later.

When Mr. Tatarian's case was called, he said that the "green sheet" should have listed their case as number 2, and that he "was sorry the court had a hard time finding out what the case number was." Judge Petrucelli responded angrily in an elevated tone of voice, as follows:

> Well, you know the circumstances. Mr. Tatarian, don't chastise the court, and then esteem that you can talk over the court. I have asked and I have requested many times from you and other attorneys, it says case number. It does not say number 2, Mr. Tatarian, it says case number. So don't think that you can stand there and chastise the court because you write a two on there. Okay? Yes, the court is very busy today. This is a hectic day, and your lack of cooperation is not assisting. And if you think you can > talk over me once you've chastised the court, you're wrong, Mr. Tatarian, fair enough? Now, if you'd like to proceed, fine; if not, you can take a break and cool off. What's your preference, Mr. Tatarian?

The tone and content of the judge's response did not comport with canon 3B(4).

2. Kaddomi v. Kaddomi, case No. 01CEFL03817

On June 9, 2005, Judge Petrucelli presided over a hearing regarding visitation. Attorney Linda Richardson represented the mother. The father, who lived out of the country, was seeking an unsupervised visit with the minor children. After Ms. Richardson took a position with which the judge disagreed, he stated words to the effect of, "If your client persists in this behavior, I will do everything in my power to see that custody is taken away from her."

This comment violated canon 3B(4) and reflects embroilment.

3. Jackson v. Jackson, case No. 00CEFL10657

On January 24, 2005, attorney Beth Best made an oral motion to disqualify Judge Petrucelli pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure section 170.6, which the judge denied as untimely. Ms. Best asserted that it was not untimely, and Judge Petrucelli told her that she could provide a written motion and then he would make a ruling, "since you believe that you are more correct than I am, Ms. Best." She responded that she would file it under Code of Civil Procedure section 170.1, "actual prejudice," and because of "non-disclosure to the parties of our history," by which she was referring to the fact that the judge was presiding over her divorce proceedings. The judge became embroiled and made a number of comments in violation of canon 3B(4), as follows:

> Judge: Ms. Best, you certainly -- you certainly don't want to go there. You are still a litigant in front of me, Ms. Best.
>
> Best: That's true, Your Honor.
>
> Judge: And you have previously waived any conflict. I have made a perfect record of this in the past, Ms. Best, that I have asked you if you wanted me to sit on your cases, because I knew this was going to be a problem. Your conduct is deplorable and I am insulted by it at this juncture. So you bring whatever motion you need to bring appropriately, but I have asked you previously if you wanted me to sit on your cases, because you said, and I quote, "that it would be prejudicial to my clients if I let my case come in the way of their rulings." Now, Ms. Best, that's what the record would reflect. If you want to bring a motion, you bring that, but you make sure you include a transcript of that hearing where I initially said > that the very first time you appeared in front of me, because I was more than willing to disqualify myself on all of your cases until your matter was resolved. Do you remember that, Ms. Best?

>
> Best: You actually were in the process of doing that and then began hearing my cases again.
>
> Judge: That is not correct, Ms. Best.
>
> Best: That is correct and I do have your transcripts. I also have several other transcripts that have you –
>
> Judge: Ms. Best, your conduct in court today is amazing to me. Your conduct with these two litigants in the settlement conference that I was part of is amazing to me. These two people are trying to get their life on track. These two people could do much better without you today. I will disqualify myself on this case. I certainly hope that these two people can talk in spite of you, and settle their minor differences because you have caused them a lot of grief today, Ms. Best. Yes, I will disqualify myself. I will disqualify myself pursuant to 170.1 and furthermore, I will disqualify myself on all of your cases, Ms. Best, because I think you are not an appropriate counsel for people in this situation. These people could have settled this case today. You were the party that caused this case not to be settled today even with my assistance. So, good luck to you, Ms. Best.

While making the comments set forth above, the judge intermittently used a loud, angry and abrasive tone of voice.

The comments regarding Ms. Best's representation improperly disparaged the attorney in front of her clients, and were demeaning and belittling. Those comments, and the comment that he would "disqualify myself on all of your cases … because I think you are not an appropriate counsel for people in this situation," were gratuitous and an improper response to an attempt to disqualify him. (See Pub. Adm. of Judge Howard Broadman, No. 19 (Feb. 26, 1999), p. 11.)

4. Woods v. Woods, case No. 497721-8

On September 13, 2004, Judge Petrucelli presided over a hearing regarding custody modification. Both parents were present and represented by counsel. At one point when the attorneys were arguing as to whether one attorney had prevented the father from communicating directly with the mother, the judge said, "I wonder how well these parents would do without their lawyers."

The comment improperly disparaged the attorneys in front of their clients, and was demeaning and belittling to the attorneys. It violated canon 3B(4), which requires a judge to treat those appearing before him with patience, dignity, and courtesy.

5. Tovsrud v. Tovsrud, case No. 03CEFL04171

On September 13, 2004, Judge Petrucelli presided over a hearing regarding spousal support. The wife was represented by counsel and the husband appeared in propria persona. The wife was seeking to have an agreement regarding spousal support set aside on grounds of duress. Her former husband, Mr. Tovsrud, was sworn in as a witness and questioned by the judge. The hearing lasted about 45 minutes. As set forth below, Judge Petrucelli made several comments that did not comport with his obligations of patience and courtesy under canon 3B(4).

Near the outset of the hearing, after questioning Mr. Tovsrud, the judge asked him to go ahead and say what he wanted to say. Mr. Tovsrud responded, "Sir?" Judge Petrucelli then said, "Is there a language problem here?" in a loud and angry tone of voice.

According to information presented at the hearing, the litigants had divorced after a long marriage following Mr. Tovsrud's affair with a translator while the Tovsruds were working as missionaries in Mongolia. At the time of the hearing, Mr. Tovsrud apparently was married to the Mongolian woman with whom he had had the affair, and had returned to his former occupation of selling cars. He testified that he was earning about $36,000 per year.

During the hearing, Mr. Tovsrud testified in a rambling fashion about various matters, including the affair. In expressing confusion as to what Mr. Tovsrud was saying was the cause of the affair, the judge referred to the possibility that "it was cold and so you needed someone to stay warm with." This comment was gratuitous and sarcastic.

Later, the judge asked Mr. Tovsrud whether he had anything to add specifically about the support issue. Before he had a chance to respond, Judge Petrucelli said, "You've got to be the lowest car salesman … maybe you ought to consider doing something else. I mean, I don't know of anybody that makes $40,000 selling cars." These comments were belittling.

Shortly thereafter, Mr. Tovsrud commented that he was "not that employable." The judge first reassured him that he was, and that he could be a great salesman. The judge then added, "You've got a new, young wife apparently. That's wonderful. Is it the Mongolian lady I hope …. Did she make it back? ... Okay … so she made it to America. I hope you're happy. That's wonderful. We should all be happy. So, anything else you want to tell me about the support issue?" The comments about Mr. Tovsrud's new wife appeared to be sarcastic.

6. Chambers argument

On July 25, 2002, Judge Petrucelli and attorney Rodney Rusca were discussing a family law matter in chambers during a break in the hearing. Another attorney was also present. The judge became involved in a heated argument with Mr. Rusca that lasted for approximately five minutes; the judge's voice was raised to such an extent that he was yelling. This conduct evidences a lack of decorum and a lack of patience and courtesy toward those appearing before the judge, contrary to the requirements of canon 3B(4).

B. Conduct in Traffic Court

1. Comments to CHP officers

On February 21, 2006, California Highway Patrol (CHP) Officer Trejo had been subpoenaed to testify in certain traffic matters, but was not present in court when called. The following exchange occurred:

> Court: Okay, let's get Officer Trejo up here. Officer Trejo?
>
> Unidentified Officer: Officer Trejo has a DUI trial in Fresno today.
>
> Court: He did? ... So I have a question. Does somebody in your office set priorities on these things? He's got a subpoena here, there's a subpoena there.
>
> Unidentified Officer: I don't know, Your Honor.
>
> Court: You don't know anything? Do you have a sergeant here? I'm having lunch with your commander. He wants to meet me. I've got a mouthful for him already here.

A CHP officer told Judge Petrucelli that Officer Trejo was now assigned to the Fresno office. The judge made the following remarks:

> Judge: ... So let me see if I understand this. Somebody gets transferred and just ignores the subpoena, that's it? How does that work, does anybody know? I'm asking, does anybody know?
>
> Officer: I was transferred, but I'm here. Your Honor. I think he thought a DUI was more important.
>
> Judge: Than speeding over 100?

The judge later told a defendant that he was going to dismiss her case because the officer wasn't there, stating: "You got lucky. You won the lottery. Officer Trejo doesn't think this is important, so you go ahead and go."

The judge also dismissed the speeding case of another defendant because Officer Trejo was not present and said to the waiting CHP officers, "This is another over 100, so you can let your supervisors know." When the defendant thanked the judge, the judge said, "Don't thank me, thank Officer Trejo."

Judge Petrucelli's remarks to the CHP officers about Officer Trejo's absence were disparaging to Officer Trejo and discourteous to the CHP officers who were there to testify, contrary to canon 3B(4). The judge's remarks also created the appearance of a lack of impartiality by publicly indicating that he was attempting to ensure the presence of officers to testify for the prosecution; this contravenes canon 2A, which requires a judge to act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the impartiality of the judiciary.

2. Tsang

On February 14, 2006, defendant Tsang appeared before Judge Petrucelli on a charge of speeding over 100 miles per hour. Ms. Tsang said that she wanted to "plead guilty with an explanation." At one point during the following discussion, Ms. Tsang said, "Well –" and the judge interrupted with, "What could you possibly explain, that you think the radar was wrong or what? The fine is going up by the minute, so you understand. I mean, just tell me what you think you could possibly say to make me lower the fine?" By threatening that the fine was "going up by the minute" if Ms. Tsang were to speak, the judge created the appearance that he was improperly trying to discourage the litigant from speaking before she was sentenced. The comment is also inconsistent with canon 3B(4).

3. Alvarenga

Judge Petrucelli presided over this trial for speeding on February 7, 2006. The CHP officer testified that Mr. Alvarenga was driving his tomato truck 74 miles per hour as determined by radar. The judge said to Mr. Alvarenga that he did not see how he was going to talk him out of going by the radar, then said to him, "If you want to try and embarrass yourself by telling me that you weren't going 74, I guess you are more than welcome to, but go ahead."

That comment created the appearance that Judge Petrucelli was improperly trying to discourage the litigant from arguing his case and is inconsistent with the judge's obligations under canon 3B(4).

4. Baracas

On February 7, 2006, defendant Baracas appeared before Judge Petrucelli for a trial on a charge of speeding over 100 miles per hour. After the CHP officer testified, the judge addressed Mr. Baracas. At one point Judge Petrucelli said to Mr. Baracas, referring to the CHP officer, "I have another question for you. How is it that you didn't notice him in your back window? They drive those really funny looking cars, you know, they're different colors. Usually they have lights on top – ." After the defendant responded, the judge asked, "Didn't you notice that his car was keeping up with you? See, that rear view mirror is for something besides fixing your hair and stuff, you know."

These comments were demeaning to the litigant and are contrary to canon 3B(4).

The commission found that Judge Petrucelli has engaged in a pattern of making comments that are discourteous, sarcastic or demeaning to those appearing before him. Such remarks toward a litigant or counsel are not consistent with the conduct required by canon 3B(4). (See, e.g., Kennick v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1990) 50 Cal.3d 297, 323-327 [demeaning, rude, impatient and abusive behavior toward counsel]; Cannon v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1975) 14 Cal.3d 678, 703 [deliberate ridiculing of attorneys].)

In determining that a public admonishment was appropriate, the commission noted that Judge Petrucelli received an advisory letter in 2001 and in 2002. The 2001 advisory concerned the judge's response to the filing of a peremptory challenge; the judge assigned the case to a series of family law commissioners rather than sending it back to the master calendar, and disparaged the attorney and his client for exercising the right to refuse to stipulate to a commissioner and peremptorily challenge a judge. The 2002 advisory concerned his practice regarding disqualification and disclosure as to an attorney employed by his former law firm, and an incident in which he raised his voice at county employees who had inadvertently deleted certain Internet folders while installing new software on his chambers computer, and accused them of calling him a "liar."

Commission members Mr. Marshall B. Grossman, Hon. Frederick P. Horn., Hon. Katherine Feinstein, Mr. Michael A. Kahn, Hon. Judith D. McConnell, Ms. Patricia Miller, Mr. Jose C. Miramontes, Ms. Barbara Schraeger and Mr. Lawrence Simi voted to impose a public admonishment. There are two vacancies on the commission.

Dated: May 22, 2007.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA

BEFORE THE COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

| IN THE MATTER CONCERNING JUDGE CLARENCE WESTRA, JR. | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT |
|---|---|

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge Clarence Westra, Jr., a judge of the Kern County Superior Court since 1983. His current term began in 2003. Judge Westra and his attorney, Reginald A. Vitek appeared before the commission on August 30, 2007 to contest the imposition of a public admonishment, pursuant to Rule 116 of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance. Having considered the written and oral objections and argument submitted by Judge Westra and his counsel, and good cause appearing, the Commission on Judicial Performance issues this public admonishment pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution, based on the following statement of facts and reasons.

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

Based on the facts set forth below, the commission determined that on two occasions Judge Westra failed to be dignified, patient and courteous with deputies from the Kern County Sheriff's Department, as required by canon 3B(4) of the Code of Judicial Ethics.

1. On April 11, 2006, Judge Westra was presiding over a criminal trial; the jury began deliberating that afternoon. The bailiff assigned to Judge Westra's courtroom had been sworn in as the bailiff responsible for taking charge of the jury. The bailiff was scheduled to attend mandatory firearms training the following afternoon. Firearms training is required on a quarterly basis if a bailiff or deputy is to carry a gun. The bailiff had previously informed the judge of this scheduled training. During the afternoon of April 12, 2006, the bailiff left to attend the mandatory firearms training. A replacement bailiff was available for the jury. Judge Westra was displeased that the bailiff who had already been sworn in had left his courtroom and insisted that the sworn bailiff return to his courtroom that afternoon, which the bailiff did without completing his mandatory firearms training. The same afternoon, Judge Westra left a voicemail message for the commander of court services, Kern County Sheriff's Department Division Commander Shelly Castaneda, stating that he wished to discuss the matter with her.

The following morning, April 13, 2006, Commander Castaneda and Senior Deputy Larry Lopez of the Kern County Sheriff's Department went to Judge Westra's chambers to discuss the matter with him in person. Commander Castaneda had recently been assigned as commander of court services and had not met Judge Westra before. Although Judge Westra had left her a voicemail the previous afternoon asking her to contact him, Judge Westra's first statement to Commander Castaneda was, "I don't know how you fit into this." Commander Castaneda began explaining that all deputies are required to take mandatory firearms training. Judge Westra responded that his bailiff's departure the previous afternoon was "unacceptable" under the circumstances and that he "would not tolerate it." It was the judge's belief that the sheriff's department did not have the authority to remove a deputy from his courtroom when a bailiff had been sworn to take charge of a jury. To clarify whether there was a court procedure requiring the same bailiff to remain in place and to ensure that the deputies under her supervision were not violating court procedures, Commander Castaneda asked Judge Westra if he had a written protocol in place regarding his courtroom procedures. Judge Westra's response was, "You are not going to tell me how to run my courtroom." Commander Castaneda again inquired about a written protocol regarding the judge's courtroom procedures. Raising his voice, he told her that she was not going to run his courtroom and that she should leave his chambers. When Commander Castaneda did not immediately leave, Judge Westra pointed at the door to his chambers and yelled "Get out!" at her more than one time.

2. In July of 2001, while an in-custody criminal defendant was testifying during his own jury trial, over which Judge Westra was presiding, a guard in Judge Westra's courtroom was relieved by another guard who was not familiar with Judge Westra's courtroom procedures to be followed when an in-custody defendant testifies during his own jury trial. The replacement guard had entered the courtroom, conferred with the bailiff, Deputy Jackie Mitchell, and then exited the courtroom during the defendant's testimony, contrary to the judge's required procedures. Judge Westra later spoke with Deputy Mitchell about the incident and said to her, "The Keystone Cops could have handled it better."

The commission found that Judge Westra's conduct in both instances was contrary to canon 3B(4), which requires judges to be patient, dignified and courteous toward those with whom they deal in an official capacity.

The conduct set forth above was improper action at a minimum.

In determining that a public admonishment was appropriate, the commission noted that Judge Westra has been the subject of extensive prior discipline, much of which is related to improper treatment of those with whom the judge deals in an official capacity.

In 2003, Judge Westra received an advisory letter for abusing his judicial authority in his treatment of workers involved in a courthouse renovation project that was generating noise at the courthouse. Although the court staff person responsible for coordinating the courthouse renovation work was brought before Judge Westra and was available to address his concerns about the impact of the noise on court proceedings, the judge instead directed a bailiff to bring the construction workers who were using power equipment before him. The judge ordered the workers to cease using power equipment at certain times and required each worker to state his name on the record, in open court, in the presence of litigants and others present for court proceedings. In its advisory letter, the commission noted with concern that it was Judge Westra's fifth advisory letter.

In 1992, Judge Westra received an advisory letter for making disparaging remarks about an absent attorney who was unable to be in court due to another trial and had sent another attorney to appear for him. Judge Westra's remarks about the absent attorney included, among other things, the following: "As far as I'm concerned, his license to practice law is laying on pretty cheap paper .... You might tell him you're being disadvantaged by his second rate tactics, ...." These comments were made in open court, on the record, in front of another attorney and the absent attorney's client.

In 1990, Judge Westra received an advisory letter for making denigrating remarks about a deputy district attorney who was not present in court because he was in a work-related training session out of town and had sent another deputy district attorney to court in his place. Among other demeaning remarks, Judge Westra said that the absent deputy district attorney practiced law "like a manure spreader" and that it was "downright amazing" that the district attorney's office kept him on the payroll. Judge Westra made the remarks in open court, on the record, in front of other deputy district attorneys, defense counsel, at least one defendant, and others present in the courtroom.

Judge Westra also was the subject of disciplinary action in the following matters:

In 2001, Judge Westra received an advisory letter for abusing his authority as presiding judge. During that time, the Kern County Municipal and Superior Courts were operating under a coordination plan pursuant to which municipal court judges were entitled to receive the salary of superior court judges for handling superior court assignments. Then-Presiding Judge Westra excluded two municipal court judges from certification for pay parity because he disagreed with their handling of certain cases, without giving the judges notice or an opportunity to explain. The judge's actions were contrary to the advisements from the Administrative Office of the Courts that all municipal judges participating in coordination plans were entitled to pay parity.

In 1988, while Judge Westra was a presiding judge, he received an advisory letter for failing to appropriately supervise a court commissioner who had delayed ruling on a dissolution matter and failing to respond to letters from the complainant inquiring about the delay.

Commission members Hon. Frederick P. Horn, Hon. Judith D. McConnell, Hon. Katherine Feinstein, Mr. Peter E. Flores, Jr., Mr. Marshall B. Grossman, Ms. Patricia Miller, Ms. Barbara Schraeger, Mr. Lawrence Simi and Ms. Maya Dillard Smith voted for a public admonishment. Commission member Samuel A. Hardage did not participate. There is currently one public member vacancy on the Commission.

Dated: September 5, 2007

/s/

Honorable Frederick P. Horn
Chairperson

PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE PAMELA LEE ILES

The Commission on Judicial Performance has ordered Judge Pamela Lee Iles publicly admonished pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution and commission rule 115, as set forth in the following statement of facts and reasons found by the commission:

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

Judge Iles was appointed to the Orange County Municipal Court in January 1983, and elevated to the Orange County Superior Court in August 1998 upon unification of the trial courts. Her current term began in January 2007.

Judge Iles engaged in conduct that violated canon 2A of the Code of Judicial Ethics, which requires that judges respect and comply with the law, and canon 3B(2), which requires that judges be faithful to the law.

In February 2002 in People v. Alhusainy, Orange County Superior Court case no. 02SF0130, Judge Iles accepted a plea agreement proposed by the defendant and his counsel whereby sentencing would be postponed and the defendant released on his own recognizance on condition he leave and remain outside of California. The defendant had been charged with making criminal threats, child abuse causing great bodily harm, and assault with a deadly weapon arising from a domestic violence incident. An essential term of the plea agreement was that the defendant would not be sentenced as long as he stayed outside of California. Although Judge Iles gave the defendant the option to appear for sentencing, she made it clear that he could avoid imposition of sentence if he did not appear. Judge Iles also agreed that when the defendant failed to appear for sentencing, the bench warrant issued would specify that it could be served only in California. The plea was taken on March 28, 2002, without objection from the District Attorney. At that hearing, Judge Iles ordered the defendant to cooperate with the public defender's investigator, who would transfer him to the airport in Los Angeles, where the defendant would take a flight directly to Detroit, where he had family who had offered to assist him. She then continued sentencing to May 1, 2002:

> The Court: Do you understand that I'm going to continue the sentencing in this case until May the 1st, 2002?
>
> Defendant: Yes.
>
> The Court: If you fail to appear for sentencing, the Court will issue a bench warrant, but it will only be able to be served within the State of California. It will not be served in Michigan or any other State in the United States.
>
> Defendant: Yes.

> The Court: Okay. But once you re-enter California by our agreement today you empower me to sentence you anywhere up to 6 years and 8 months in the State Prison.
>
> Defendant: I will not come back.
>
> The Court: It is up to you, but I'm telling you what's gonna happen if you do.

RT 6:13-7:3.

When the defendant failed to appear at the continued sentencing hearing, Judge Iles issued a bench warrant. Thereafter, Judge Iles continued sentencing from year to year through 2005. The defendant returned to California in 2006 and was arrested under the outstanding warrant. He thereafter filed a motion to withdraw his plea (which Judge Iles denied) and a motion to disqualify Judge Iles under Code of Civil Procedure section 170.1 (which she struck as untimely). He then filed a petition for a writ of mandate. The Court of Appeal granted the writ, holding among other things that the plea agreement was unconstitutional and void as overbroad, uncertain as to duration, and contrary to public policy. (Alhusainy v. Superior Court (2006) 143 Cal.App.4th 385, 392.)

When asked by the commission about her approval of the plea agreement that the Court of Appeal had found constitutionally invalid, Judge Iles explained that she approved the plea, in part, because of the immigration status of the defendant, who could have been subject to deportation to Iraq if she had sentenced him. Conviction of a crime of domestic violence is a basis for deportation. (8 U.S.C. § 1227(a)(2)(E).) Before a conviction exists for immigration purposes, a plea or finding of guilt must be made and some punishment imposed. (Id. at § 1102(a)(48)(A).) Judge Iles stated that she was advised that there was an outstanding death warrant for the defendant in Iraq, and she was assured by counsel that deportation would result in torture and likely execution, which was never subject to dispute as between the parties. It was the reason defendant's counsel proposed the plea bargain, and the reason that Judge Iles felt the plea bargain could be accepted. She stressed that the defendant voluntarily agreed to the plea bargain. Judge Iles stated that she was unwilling to leave the defendant's family in danger of further violence, or allow him to have assaulted them with impunity, but was unaware of any alternative that would have avoided the "very real specter of torture or death following deportation." She did not believe that his relocation to Michigan would subject citizens of that state to any risk because she believed the only people likely to be harmed by him were his wife and children. Since the maximum sentence she was entitled to impose for the crimes charged was six years and eight months, Judge Iles was unwilling to impose a sentence that would lead to torture and/or death. She believed the plea bargain was an appropriate solution under the circumstances.

Canon 2A of the Code of Judicial Ethics requires that judges respect and comply with the law. Canon 3B(2) requires that judges be faithful to the law. The case law makes clear that sending felons to other states is prohibited by public policy. (Alhusainy, 143 Cal.App.4th at p. 392; State v. Charlton (Ct.App. 1992) 115 N.M. 35, 846 P.2d 341, 344 ("Banishment 'would tend to incite dissension, provoke retaliation, and disturb that fundamental equality of political rights among the several states which is the basis of the Union itself.' [Citation.] 'To permit one state to dump its convict criminals into another is not in the interests of safety and welfare; therefore, the punishment by banishment to another state is prohibited by public policy.' [Citation.]. See also Commonwealth v. Pike (1998) 428 Mass. 393, 701 N.E.2d 951, 960 ("[i]t is against constitutional principles of interstate comity to 'make other states a dumping ground for our criminals,' [citation], [as it is] our solid waste. [Citation.];" State ex rel. Halverson v. Young, 278 Minn. 381, 154 N.W.2d 699 (1967); State v. Doughtie, 237 N.C. 368, 74 S.E. 2d 922 (1953); People v. Baum, 251 Mich. 187, 231 N.W. 95, 96 (1930); Rutherford v. Blankenship (W.D. Va. 1979) 468 F.Supp. 1357, 1360 (defendant's agreement in plea to leave the state unenforceable as against public policy).)

Judge Iles had the obligation to evaluate and determine the legality of the plea agreement. (Alhusainy, 143 Cal.App.4th at p. 394; People v. Andreotti (2001) 91 Cal.App.4th 1263, 1275.) The law is clear that sending felons out of state is contrary to public policy, and there is no legal support for the proposition that this policy can be abrogated on a case by case basis by a trial court based on the parties' agreement. As a consequence of the plea agreement, and pursuant to Judge Iles' order that defendant go to the airport under the supervision of the public defender's investigator, and fly to Detroit, the defendant went to Michigan. There is no evidence that Michigan agreed to take him. It is not clear how permitting the defendant to go to Michigan protected women living there, or that he was incapable of victimizing others there. The impropriety of approving a plea agreement whereby the defendant is transferred to another state in contravention of public policy is not subject to a reasonable difference of opinion. Accordingly, the commission finds that Judge Iles' approval of the plea agreement reflects a purpose other than the faithful discharge of judicial duty, and was at minimum improper action within the meaning of article VI, section 18, subd. (d)(3) of the California Constitution.

In issuing this Public Admonishment, the commission took into consideration Judge Iles' history of discipline by the commission. Judge Iles received an advisory letter in 1988 for failing to strictly abide by statutory requirements in imposing sanctions on a litigant. She received another advisory letter in 1997 for telling a defendant that his probation would be violated if the victim contacted him, denying him bail pending appeal although he was statutorily entitled to it, and participating in settling the record on appeal after having been disqualified, which gave rise to the appearance of embroilment and abandonment of her role as a neutral judicial officer. She received a private admonishment in 2004 for personally contacting a prosecutor and suggesting that he investigate an attorney for perjury, asking witnesses to prepare declarations for the district attorney's office, and repeatedly contacting prosecutors about their investigation while it was ongoing. She received a public admonishment in 2006 for summarily incarcerating an unrepresented defendant in disregard of his fundamental rights.

Commission members Hon. Judith D. McConnell, Mr. Marshall B. Grossman, Mr. Michael A. Kahn, Ms. Patricia Miller, Mr. Jose C. Miramontes, Ms. Barbara Schraeger, Mr. Lawrence Simi and Ms. Maya Dillard Smith voted to impose a public admonishment. Hon. Frederick P. Horn was recused. Hon. Katherine Feinstein did not participate. There is one vacancy on the commission.

Dated: November 15, 2007

PROOF OF SERVICE

I, the undersigned, am a citizen of the United States, over the age of 18 years, and not a party to or interested in the within action. My business address is 455 Golden Gate Avenue, Suite 14400, San Francisco, California 94102. I declare as follows:

On November 15, 2007, I served the attached:

DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT

on all interested parties in this matter, by delivering a true copy as follows:

Via U.S. Mail and Facsimile

Edith R. Matthai, Esq.
Robie & Matthai
500 South Grand Avenue, 15th Floor
Los Angeles, CA 90071-2609
FAX: (213) 624-2563

☒ (BY MAIL) I placed the original or a true copy thereof enclosed in a sealed envelope with postage thereon fully prepaid. I am readily familiar with our office's practice for collection and processing of correspondence for mailing with the United States Postal Service, that this mailing will be deposited with the United States Postal Service on this date in the ordinary course of business and that I sealed and placed each envelope for collection and mailing on this date following ordinary business practices.

☒ (BY FACSIMILE TRANSMISSION) I caused such document to be transmitted to the addressee's facsimile number noted. The facsimile machine I used complied with Rule 2003(3) and the transmission was reported as complete and without error. Pursuant to Rule 2003(6), I caused the machine to print a transmission record of the facsimile transmission, a copy of which is attached to this declaration as required by Rule 2008(e)(4).

I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the State of California that the foregoing is true and correct and that this declaration was executed by me on November 15, 2007 at San Francisco, California.

_____
Judith R. Starks

STATE OF CALIFORNIA

BEFORE THE COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

| | |
|---|---|
| IN THE MATTER CONCERNING JUDGE JAMES M. BROOKS | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT |

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge James M. Brooks, a judge of the Orange County Superior Court. Judge Brooks and his counsel, Edward P. George, Jr., have stipulated to issuance of this public admonishment, as set forth in a Stipulation for Imposition of Public Admonishment. Pursuant to stipulation, and good cause appearing, the Commission on Judicial Performance issues this public admonishment pursuant to article VI, section 18, subdivision (d) of the California Constitution, based on the following Statement of Facts and Reasons:

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

Judge Brooks was elected to the Orange County Municipal Court on November 4, 1986 and began serving on January 5, 1987. He served as assistant presiding judge of the municipal court in 1991 and as presiding judge in 1992. In 1998, he was elevated to the Orange County Superior Court by unification.

The matters which caused the Commission on Judicial Performance to issue its preliminary investigation letter on August 16, 2007 all concern Judge Brooks's conduct while presiding over the jury trial in the case of Haluck v. Ricoh Electronics, et al. (No. 03CC10166). The Haluck trial, which was held from January 3 to March 1, 2005, involved a claim by James Haluck and Michael Litton against Ricoh Electronics for employment discrimination. After the jury returned a verdict for the defense, the plaintiffs appealed on the grounds that Judge Brooks's misconduct so infected the proceedings they were deprived of a fair trial. The appellate court concluded that Judge Brooks's conduct was sufficiently egregious and pervasive that a reasonable person could doubt whether the trial was fair and impartial. Accordingly, the appellate court reversed the judgment and remanded the case with directions that it be assigned to a different trial judge for retrial. (Haluck v. Ricoh Electronics, Inc. (2007) 151 Cal.App.4th 994.)

Judge Brooks committed the following misconduct while presiding over the Haluck trial:

1. "Overruled" Signs

During the trial, Judge Brooks overruled one of plaintiffs' objections and held up a hand-lettered sign, prepared by him, stating "overruled." The next day, when the court overruled another of plaintiffs' objections, defense counsel Callahan presented the judge with a different sign, stating: "Your honor, I want to help you if I may. This is a much nicer version." The following exchange then occurred between Judge Brooks and plaintiffs' counsel Reinglass:

> The Court: Better than my homemade one.
>
> Ms. Reinglass: Plaintiffs object to Mr. Callahan presenting another 'overruled' sign to the court. The court's sign was adequate enough.
>
> The Court: The court will await receiving a 'sustained' sign from plaintiff[s] so we can split the benefits here.
>
> Ms. Reinglass: How many do I get?

(2/03 R.T. 3277:13-20.)

A week later, after Judge Brooks used Callahan's "overruled" sign, Reinglass objected, Judge Brooks responded, "It's lightening things up."

The appellate court found that the use of the sign "was a sideshow in the overall circus atmosphere mocking a serious proceeding important to the parties, and it 'cast the judicial system itself in a bad light in the eyes of the litigants and the public at large.'" (Haluck v. Ricoh, supra, 151 Cal.App.4th at p. 1004, citing Hernandez v. Paicus (2003) 109 Cal.App.4th 452, 455.)

The use of the sign and the adopting of defense counsel's sign for its acknowledged entertainment value, belittled plaintiffs' objections, and violated canons 1 (failing to observe high standards of conduct), 2A (failing to act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary), 3B (3) (failing to require order and decorum in the proceedings), and 3B (4) (failing to be patient, dignified and courteous).

2. The Twilight Zone

In testifying as to his emotional stress, plaintiff Litton said that he had felt like he was in a white room without doors or windows that had no boundaries. On cross-examination, the following exchange took place:

> By Mr. Callahan: Have you ever heard of The Twilight Zone?
>
> A. [by Mr. Litton]: Yes, sir.
>
> Q. Goes kind of like this, do do, do do.
>
> Ms. Reinglass: Your Honor, I would just object. This is argument.
>
> The Court: Your objection's on the record, ma'am.
>
> Ms. Reinglass: Also improper argument.
>
> Mr. Callahan: You're traveling through another dimension, a dimension not only of sight and sound, but of mind, a journey into a wondrous land, whose boundaries are that of imagination[;] that's a sign post up ahead, your next stop, The Twilight Zone. Do do, do do. Do do, do do.

The Court: That was terrible. Get to the question, please.

Ms. Reinglass: Noting for the record, counsel was singing The Twilight Zone theme song.

The Court: And how the jurors left it will be reflected on [the] same record.

By Mr. Callahan: Q. Endless white room with no doors or windows. [¶] Is that where you got your idea of this white room theory?...

[¶] ... [¶]

A. From where?

The Court: Twilight Zone. That's his question.

The Witness: No, sir.

Mr. Callahan: Do do, do do. Do do, do do.

Ms. Reinglass: I request that counsel stop singing. As entertaining as it is for the jury, it's mocking my client and mocking the trial.

By Mr. Callahan: Q. Ever heard of The Twilight Zone, the show?

A. Yes, sir.

The Court: For the record, he hit a few notes of The Twilight Zone theme song which I don't see as mocking. He was off color [sic].

Mr. Callahan: I go through life tone deaf and colorblind. This is tough.

(Vol. 16 R.T. 3168:14–3170:6.)

Although some of these comments were counsel's, the judge encouraged many of them; he gave defendants' lawyer free rein to deride and make snide remarks at will and at the expense of plaintiff Litton. This violates canon 3B(3) which provides that judges "shall require order and decorum in proceedings."

3. Comments During the Reading of Stevenson Deposition/Litton Examination

During defense counsel Callahan's cross-examination of plaintiff Litton, Judge Brooks allowed Callahan to read approximately 30 pages of the deposition of a former Ricoh employee (Rhonda Stevenson), over numerous objections from plaintiffs' counsel Reinglass. During this part of the trial, Judge Brooks made a number of inappropriate comments:

A. At one point, Reinglass asked to "have a running objection until I add anything new." Judge Brooks responded, "That would help. Same objection that's been going on all day will be deemed to be made to every question and every answer throughout time." Reinglass then stated, "There may be some I like." The judge's response was: "With the same ruling. Well, until I die. Same ruling. Okay." (R.T. Vol. 14 at 2900:11-18.)

B. The next day, as defense counsel continued to cross-examine Litton using the Stevenson deposition, Reinglass objected, and the following exchange occurred:

> The Court: Overruled. Objection, 187.
>
> Ms. Reinglass: Huh?
>
> The Court: I got a number for all of these things.
>
> Mr. Callahan: 187 in the Penal Code, what is that, Your Honor?
>
> The Court: Murder.

(Vol. 15 R.T. 2963:26–2964:5.)

C. In another instance, when Litton was testifying that he was discriminated against because of his race, Reinglass asked: "And did you feel that it was based upon your race because of comments by [defendant] Mr. Nomura?" The court sustained Callahan's objection (leading). Reinglass then rephrased, asking, "Was there any other reason why you felt that it was based upon your race?" When Litton answered, "And due to the comment by Nomura," Callahan stated, "What a surprise," and Judge Brooks remarked, "Aren't they clever." "(Laughter)." (Vol. 13 R.T. 2692:25–2693:8.)

D. After a question by Reinglass, Callahan stated, "Objection. Gosh, what is that?" The judge responded, "What is it?" Callahan responded, "Hearsay." The judge overruled the objection and Callahan said, "How about –[.]" Judge Brooks's reply was, "No. Go back to sleep." Callahan responded, "Wake me when it's break time." Judge Brooks told him it was very close. (Vol. 17 R.T. 3409:20–3410:2.) Later that day, when Callahan objected, Judge Brooks stated, "Don't wake him up," to which Callahan replied, "Hey, I don't get a lot of sleep." (Vol. 17 R.T. 3444:9-11.)

The comments "until I die," "murder" and "187" made it clear that the court had no use for the objections. While these comments may have been humorous to the judge and defense counsel, humor should not be used to belittle litigants or their counsel. The "Aren't they clever" comment disparaged Litton's testimony and implied he was not telling the truth and that his lawyer was trying to sneak in otherwise inadmissible evidence. A trial court must avoid comments that convey to the jury the message that the judge does not believe the testimony of the witness. The "No. Go back to sleep" and the "Don't wake him up" comments belittle the seriousness of the proceedings. Judge Brooks's comments violate canons 1 (failing to observe high standards of conduct), 2A (failing to act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary) and 3B(4) (failing to be patient, dignified and courteous) and constitute misconduct.

4. The Soccer Cards

During the trial, Judge Brooks advised his clerk, "Jeffrey, we're going to the soccer style method here. Red card, 50 bucks each. Okay. If I say, red card plaintiff, write it down, 50 bucks. Red card defense, 50 bucks. [¶] We'll keep a running tab. End of trial, we'll collect it from them and we may take you guys [the jury] to lunch at a very nice place...." (Vol. 17 R.T. 3358:15-21.) Further mention of red cards took place intermittently following objections by the defense over the course of 40 pages of transcript. At one point, when plaintiffs' counsel stated she was reading the last portion of a deposition, Callahan stated, "Very good.... I probably shouldn't say very good. No objection." The judge responded, "That's an orange card, not a red card." (Vol. 17 R.T. 3378:3-8.) The Court of Appeal found that the "soccer-style" red card procedure was "glaringly inappropriate" and violated the requirement of judicial decorum. The appellate court noted that a "trial is not a sporting event." (Haluck v. Ricoh, supra, 151 Cal.App.4th at 1005-06.) Judge Brooks's use of "soccer cards" violated canons 1 (failing to observe high standards of conduct), 2A (failing to act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary) and 3B(4) (failing to be patient, dignified and courteous).

Judge Brooks's comments and actions during the Haluck trial were prejudicial to the administration of justice and constituted misconduct within the meaning of California Constitution, article VI, section 18, subdivision (d).

In determining that a public admonishment was appropriate, the commission noted that Judge Brooks has previously been disciplined for conduct similar to that set forth above. In 1996, Judge Brooks received an advisory letter addressing, in part, the judge's comments reflecting ethnic bias: referring to Hispanic defendants as "Pedro"; issuing a bench warrant for an Asian defendant for "ten thousand dollars or twenty thousand yen"; and stating to an undocumented Hispanic defendant, "[y]ou have more names than the Tijuana telephone book." In 1999, Judge Brooks received another advisory letter for remarks to a defendant at the conclusion of a preliminary hearing about how the judge would have handled an assault on a member of his own family: "I would go down and punch [the defendant's] lights out," and that instead of calling the police, it would be, "touch them, you die." In 2003, Judge Brooks received a private admonishment for conduct including referring to the parties in a case, the operators of a mobile home park, as "Nazis" and analogizing their actions to that of the Nazis during the Holocaust. In another matter also included as a basis for the private admonishment, in the course of denying plaintiff's motion to exclude reference to his status as an undocumented alien, Judge Brooks made remarks conveying his stereotypes of undocumented aliens, including that they place burdens on taxpayers by receiving benefits to which they are not entitled. The judge referred to the defendant's physician as "this good doctor." The appellate court reversed Judge Brooks's ruling in that case, and based its reversal in part on the appearance of bias. (Hernandez v. Paicius (2003) 109 Cal.App.4th 452.) In 2006, Judge Brooks received a public admonishment for conduct including telling a litigant who claimed to have failed to appear for his deposition due to a heart condition, "I wonder what's going to happen when we put you in jail, Mr. McMahon. Your little ticker might stop, you think?" Later, after imposing a fine on Ms. McMahon, Judge Brooks stated, "I'd mention jail but it might give her a heart attack." (Palacio Del Mar Homeowners Assoc. v. McMahon, No. 01CC14684.) The 2006 public admonishment was also based on comments Judge Brooks made during a hearing in the case of Vinci Investments Co., Inc. v. Joher, et al., No. 04CC04522.) Defendant Joe Joher had allegedly transferred business property into his mother's and his wife's name instead of transferring it to plaintiff. Referring to the mother, Judge Brooks stated that, "... a lady that, in her own country – I put a question mark; I know it's Syria, Iraq, Iran, Lebanon – probably a very nice lady, probably doesn't know how much she owns, I don't think." Later, Judge Brooks stated that defendant Joher transferred, "much of the business/property into the name of defendant 'Joe' Joher's wife, who, in her native Syria (?) probably wouldn't be allowed to own property." The commission found that Judge Brooks's conduct in the Vinci and the Joher cases violated canons 2A, and 3B(4).

The commission's determination to resolve this matter with a public admonishment and to forego formal proceedings and the possible imposition of higher discipline was conditioned upon Judge Brooks's agreement to retire from the bench and not to seek or hold judicial office and not to seek or accept judicial assignment.[1] In the commission's view, this result adequately protects the public from any future misconduct.

Commission members Justice Judith D. McConnell, Honorable Katherine Feinstein, Mr. Peter E. Flores, Jr., Ms. Barbara Schraeger, Mr. Lawrence Simi, Ms. Maya Dillard Smith, Ms. Sandra Talcott and Mr. Nathaniel Trives voted for a public admonishment. Commission members Marshall B. Grossman and Mr. Samuel A. Hardage did not participate. Commission chairperson Honorable Frederick P. Horn is recused.

Dated: 4/4, 2008.

Judith McConnell

Honorable Judith D. McConnell,
Vice-Chairperson of the Commission on
Judicial Performance

[1] The commission has been apprised by the presiding judge of the Orange County Superior Court that Judge Brooks has 128 days of accrued vacation leave and that he is authorized to take that leave after his last day presiding on the bench.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA

BEFORE THE COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

| | |
|---|---|
| IN THE MATTER CONCERNING FORMER JUDGE ROBERT D. QUALL | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT |

This disciplinary matter concerns Robert D. Quall, formerly a judge of the Merced County Superior Court. Former Judge Quall, his counsel, James A. Murphy, Esq., and trial counsel for the commission, Jack Coyle, Esq., have stipulated to issuance of this public admonishment, as set forth separately in a Stipulation for Imposition of Public Admonishment. Pursuant to stipulation, and good cause appearing, the Commission on Judicial Performance issues this public admonishment pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution, based upon the following Statement of Facts and Reasons:

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

Judge Robert D. Quall was elected to the Merced County Municipal Court in 1979, was elevated to the Merced County Superior Court in August 1998 through court unification, and retired from judicial office on April 30, 2007. His disciplinary record consists of an advisory letter in 1994 and a private admonishment in 2006, neither of which involved conduct similar to the present subject matter.

Since at least 1994, Judge Quall and his wife have been leading volunteer medical relief "missions" every two years or so to towns in Kenya and Tanzania, under the name Masaai-Migori Africa Medical Mission, Inc. Judge Quall is the Mission director. "Teams" of about 30 people conduct medical clinics to treat diseases such as malaria, and distribute donated items such as eyeglasses and clothing. The trips also have an evangelical component; church services are conducted in various towns, Bibles are distributed, and travel arrangements are coordinated through a Christian pastor in Kenya. (Judge Quall is a member of the Merced Presbyterian Church.) Initially comprised of college students and others connected with Merced Christian organizations, the teams grew to include community members and on occasion people within the judicial system.

An auction is held to support the mission, in the spring before the trip. Auction attendance grew over the years to an estimated 400 people, and the event was moved from the Merced Presbyterian Church to a community center owned by the church. Donations are made by local businesses and individuals, with items ranging from hay to the use of vacation homes.

A. Solicitation of Auction Donations

Although canon 4C(d)(i) of the Code of Judicial Ethics provides that a judge may assist a non-profit organization of which he is a director in planning fund-raising, it prohibits personal participation in the solicitation of funds or other fund-raising activities (with the exception that a judge may publicly solicit funds for such an organization from other judges). Also, canon 4C(d)(iv) provides that a judge shall not permit the use of the prestige of his or her judicial office for fund-raising.

Judge Quall is the main organizer of the auction, and solicited auction donations in the following instances.

1. Judge Quall asked Commissioner Henry Jacobs generally if he could donate to the auction (either at a local gym or by phone at court, or both). Commissioner Jacobs, who became a commissioner in 2000, donated a gourmet picnic, and in one instance symphony tickets, for auctions in 2002-2006. While Commissioner Jacobs initiated the first donation, Judge Quall initiated conversations about subsequent donations by asking something like "Are you still good for it?" (While canon 4C(d)(i) permits judges to solicit funds from other judges as an exception to the prohibition on personal involvement in fund-raising, the exception does not permit judges to solicit funds from commissioners or other subordinate judicial officers.)

2. Judge Quall asked Sheriff Pazin and Undersheriff Blake to donate to the auction, and as a result they donated lunches and air patrol rides in 2002-2006. The judge contacted them about donations, either by calling or asking when he happened to run into them (or judicial secretary Tisa Hyder also contacted them at the judge's direction).

3. In 2005, Judge Quall telephoned Deputy Public Defender Marjaneh Maroufi at her office, and asked if her father would donate a room at a Berkeley hotel he owned. Ms. Maroufi's father had made the same donation the previous year after Ms. Maroufi had initiated the idea.

4. Judge Quall asked local businessman Larry Stefani to donate cases of wine over a period of years, including 2004-2006, which he did.

5. Judge Quall asked local businessman Richard Vierra to donate a deer hunt, which he did in 2006.

6. Attorney Debbie Bennett and her husband owned season tickets to San Francisco Giants baseball games. Ms. Bennett routinely appeared before Judge Quall in Merced. From approximately 2000 through 2005, the judge asked Ms. Bennett to donate Giants tickets to the auction, which she did at least once. One request occurred in the courtroom while Ms. Bennett was asking for a continuance; the judge called her up to the bench, alone, and asked her whether she was going to donate Giants tickets.

Ms. Bennett complained to then Presiding Judge Frank Dougherty about Judge Quall's conduct. Before Judge Quall was transferred to Los Banos in September 2005, Presiding Judge Dougherty spoke to him in chambers and told him not to solicit attorneys for auction donations. Thereafter, Judge Quall asked

Ms. Bennett to come into chambers. He told her that somebody had "snitched me off" about the auction, and asked if it was she. Ms. Bennett responded by asking the judge if he believed that she would do something like that. The judge said that it must have been another attorney, whose name he specified. The judge then again solicited Ms. Bennett for a donation of Giants tickets to the auction, stating, "Are you still going to get me those tickets?", or words to that effect.

7. From approximately 1996-2006, Judge Quall asked Merced attorney Logan McKechnie, who regularly appeared before him, to donate items to the Mission itself. Mr. McKechnie donated several thousand pairs of eyeglasses through the Lions Club with which Mr. McKechnie was involved. The judge also asked Mr. McKechnie to donate to the auction on a few occasions, which he declined to do.

8. Around 2003, Judge Quall had court interpreter Yolanda Garcia ask Deputy Sheriff John Strauss into chambers, then told Deputy Strauss that he wanted him to donate horses he owned for a ride for a group of people, and to transport the people to a specific place for the ride (Dinosaur Point) and provide them with a meal. When Deputy Strauss declined, saying that the horses were ranch horses not meant for casual riding, and that he did not have insurance, the judge persisted. When Deputy Strauss continued to decline, the judge asked him who else could do it, and Deputy Strauss gave him the names of two law enforcement officers who worked at the courthouse – Dan Gover and J.R. Antone. The judge then contacted both men and asked each of them to use horses they owned to donate rides, which they did.

9. Around 1999 or 2000, Judge Quall asked retired Marshal Earl Downey to see whether his sister, whom the judge knew had access to NFL memorabilia, could donate to the auction, which she agreed to do. For several years thereafter, the judge approached Marshal Downey and asked him to contact his sister and ask her to make a donation.

10. In connection with the 2006 auction, Judge Quall asked local farmer Bob McDonald (at a local "Sportsman's Club" dinner) whether he donated to good causes; when he said that he did, the judge told him that he was seeking donations for the auction. McDonald told the judge he would think about it, and then agreed to donate hay.

11. For two auctions held around 2000 and 2001, Judge Quall asked court administrator Lee Haugen to contact local golf courses and obtain donations of playing time.

B. Selling Auction Tickets/Having Others Sell Tickets

Judge Quall personally solicited attendance for the auction. The judge asked several people if they wanted to buy tickets, or if they knew anyone else who might want tickets. (Tickets cost a few dollars.) Judge Quall also directed others to sell auction tickets, including interpreter Yolanda Garcia, Undersheriff Blake and Marshal Downey.

C. Acting as Auctioneer

While the auctions were primarily conducted by a professional auctioneer, Judge Quall sometimes acted as auctioneer, at least in part, between approximately 1999 and 2005, auctioning off a few items himself. (See Cal. Judges Assoc., Judicial Ethics Update (1982) p. 1 [judge prohibited from participating as auctioneer on local public education television station for purpose of raising funds for operation of station], see Cal. Judges Assoc., Judicial Ethics Update (1989) p. 4 [if participation by judge is designed to increase donations, there is clearly implied indirect solicitation of funds by judge, which is inappropriate].)

D. Use of Judicial Secretary Tisa Hyder/Court Resources

Judge Quall used judicial secretary Tisa Hyder to create documents connected with the Africa trips and, in a few instances, pertaining to other personal interests (father-son competitive tennis, Rescue Men's chorus, the "Quall-ity Inn," a cabin owned by the judge that he allows others to use). Hyder prepared about 60 such personal documents between 2001 and 2006, including letters directly related to fund-raising; it is estimated that she spent about 16 hours on the judge's personal work over that period.

A "judge may not use his or her office, staff, or public property and/or resources under the judges' control for personal, nongovernmental purposes. This is an obvious part of the obligation of a judge to 'act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary.'" (Rothman, California Judicial Conduct Handbook (1999 2d ed.) §§ 3.33, 3.34-3.36.) The total amount of time spent during business hours was more than a de minimis nature that might be permissible (id., § 3.36).

Sometime between late 2003 and mid-2004, in a brief conversation that occurred in passing, Presiding Judge Dougherty told Judge Quall that he was not to use the judicial secretary or court resources for the Africa trips; Judge Quall indicated he understood. Thereafter, Judge Quall curtailed, but did not totally cease the use of the judicial secretary; Ms. Hyder prepared about six Africa-related documents after the summer of 2004.

E. Use of Judicial Letterhead

Eleven of the letters prepared by Ms. Hyder described in the previous section were on judicial letterhead – eight concerning Africa (a fax to hotel regarding room reservations, three donation thank you notes, letter to embassy re travel arrangements, letter to travel agent re travel arrangements, letter re transmittal of Mission's statement of purpose, letter to team members re distributing brochures) and three concerning other personal interests of Judge Quall (obtaining admission to the U.S. for children of pastor in Africa who coordinated trips, getting Wimbledon tickets for Mission members stopping in London on the way home, and obtaining time off for someone to participate in a concert by the Men's Rescue chorus, founded and directed by the judge). Most of the judicial letterhead documents were sent in 2001-2002.

The use of court stationery related to the Africa trips advanced a personal interest as prohibited by canon 2B(2) (judge shall not lend prestige of judicial office to advance personal interests of judge or others). The Africa trips at a minimum advanced the personal interests of others (medical relief), including that of the Presbyterian church. And, the letters directly related to fund-raising are a violation of canon 4C(d)(iv) (judge shall not permit the use of the prestige of office for fund-raising). (See Rothman, supra, §§ 8.31-8.33.)

Judge Quall's actions, as set forth above in sections A-E, violate the Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 2A, 2B, 4C(d)(i) and 4C(d)(iv), and constitute prejudicial misconduct.

Commission members Honorable Frederick P. Horn, Honorable Judith D. McConnell, Honorable Katherine Feinstein, Mr. Peter E. Flores, Jr., Mr. Marshall B. Grossman, Mr. Samuel A. Hardage, Ms. Barbara Schraeger, Mr. Lawrence Simi, Ms. Sandra Talcott and Mr. Nathaniel Trives voted to impose a public admonishment. Commission member Ms. Maya Dillard Smith did not participate.

Dated: 6/2/08

Honorable Frederick P. Horn,
Chairperson of the Commission on
Judicial Performance

PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE LISA GUY-SCHALL

The Commission on Judicial Performance has ordered Judge Lisa Guy-Schall publicly admonished pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution and commission rule 115, as set forth in the following statement of facts and reasons found by the commission:

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

Judge Lisa Guy-Schall has been a judge of the San Diego County Superior Court since 1989. Her current term began in January 2003.

On the night of September 12, 2007, around 9:00 p.m., Judge Guy-Schall drove a vehicle in a reckless manner while under the influence of alcohol, and with a blood alcohol level of approximately 0.09 percent. She drove on the wrong side of a divided highway in Escondido, San Diego County; specifically, she drove southbound in the northbound number one lane of Centre City Parkway, at Grand Avenue. She turned onto Grand Avenue and then rapidly accelerated into a left turn. She was stopped by an officer of the Escondido Police Department who observed her conduct. She failed the field sobriety test and was placed under arrest. A blood test was performed within approximately an hour and yielded a result of approximately 0.09 percent blood alcohol. On October 10, 2007, a complaint was filed charging her with driving under the influence of alcohol, a violation of section 23152(a) of the Vehicle Code, and driving while having a 0.08 percent or higher blood alcohol level, a violation of section 23152(b) of the Vehicle Code.

On March 14, 2008, Judge Guy-Schall entered a plea of guilty to alcohol related reckless driving, a violation of Vehicle Code section 23103(a), pursuant to section 23103.5. She was found guilty and convicted of that charge.

Judge Guy-Schall's unlawful action described above evidences a serious disregard of the principles of personal and official conduct embodied in the California Code of Judicial Ethics, including failure to observe high standards of conduct so that the integrity and independence of the judiciary will be preserved (canon 1), and failure to respect and comply with the law and act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary (canon 2). Judge Guy-Schall's conduct described above was, at a minimum, improper action pursuant to article VI, section 18(d)(3) of the California Constitution.

In determining that a public admonishment was appropriate, the commission noted that Judge Guy-Schall has been the subject of prior discipline. Specifically, Judge Guy-Schall received a private admonishment in 1995 and a public admonishment in 1999. The judge's 1995 private admonishment addressed her embroilment in a juvenile dependency case. The judge's 1999 public admonishment addressed her abuse of the contempt power.

Commission members Hon. Frederick P. Horn, Mr. Peter E. Flores, Ms. Barbara Schraeger, Ms. Maya Dillard Smith, Ms. Sandra Talcott and Mr. Nathaniel Trives voted to impose a public admonishment. Hon. Katherine Feinstein would have imposed a private admonishment. Commission members Hon. Judith D. McConnell and Mr. Marshall B. Grossman were recused. Mr. Samuel A. Hardage and Mr. Lawrence J. Simi did not participate.

Dated: September 5, 2008

PROOF OF SERVICE

I, the undersigned, am a citizen of the United States, over the age of 18 years, and not a party to or interested in the within action. My business address is 455 Golden Gate Avenue, Suite 14400, San Francisco, California 94102. I declare as follows:

On September 11, 2008, I served the attached:

PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE LISA GUY-SCHALL

on all interested parties in this matter, by delivering a true copy as follows:

Reginald A. Vitek, Esq.
Seltzer Caplan McMahon Vitek
3100 Symphony Towers
750 B Street
San Diego, CA 92101
FAX: (619) 685-3100

☒ (BY U.S. MAIL) I placed the original or a true copy thereof enclosed in a sealed envelope with postage thereon fully prepaid. I am readily familiar with our office's practice for collection and processing of correspondence for mailing with the United States Postal Service, that this mailing will be deposited with the United States Postal Service on this date in the ordinary course of business and that I sealed and placed each envelope for collection and mailing on this date following ordinary business practices.

☒ (BY FACSIMILE TRANSMISSION) I caused such document to be transmitted to the addressee's facsimile number noted. The facsimile machine I used complied with Rule 2.301(3) and the transmission was reported as complete and without error. Pursuant to Rule 2.301(6), I caused the machine to print a transmission record of the facsimile transmission, a copy of which is attached to this declaration as required by Rule 2.306(g)(4).

I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the State of California that the foregoing is true and correct and that this declaration was executed by me on September 11, 2008 at San Francisco, California.

_____
Judith R. Starks

STATE OF CALIFORNIA

BEFORE THE COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

| | |
|---|---|
| IN THE MATTER CONCERNING JUDGE PAUL M. BRYANT, JR. | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT |

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge Paul M. Bryant, Jr. (hereafter "Judge Bryant"), a retired judge of the San Bernardino County Superior Court. Judge Bryant and his counsel, Heather L. Rosing, have stipulated to issuance of this public admonishment, as set forth in a Stipulation for Imposition of Public Admonishment. Pursuant to stipulation, and good cause appearing, the Commission on Judicial Performance issues this public admonishment pursuant to article VI, section 18, subdivision (d) of the California Constitution, based on the following Statement of Facts and Reasons.

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

Judge Bryant was appointed to the San Bernardino County Municipal Court in 1988 and was elevated to the San Bernardino County Superior Court in 1989 by appointment. Judge Bryant retired on January 26, 2008.

The matters which caused the commission on Judicial Performance to issue its preliminary investigation letter on February 26, 2008 all concern improper demeanor. Judge Bryant has failed to be patient, dignified and courteous toward individuals with whom he dealt in an official capacity, contrary to canon 3B(4), as follows:

1. WFS Financial v. Dimas Ugalde

On or about July 14, 2005, attorney LaVonna Hayashi appeared before Judge Bryant in a civil case, WFS Financial v. Dimas Ugalde, No. RCV085110. The case was on calendar for a motion and for a case management conference. Judge Bryant granted Ms. Hayashi's motion and an attendant request for sanctions. Judge Bryant then began to call the next case on the calendar. Ms. Hayashi said, "It's also on for -- I'm sorry, Your Honor." Judge Bryant stated the name of the next case. Ms. Hayashi again said, "Your Honor, I'm sorry." In a harsh and threatening manner, Judge Bryant ordered Ms. Hayashi to sit down, "or we'll address it in another fashion." When Ms. Hayashi attempted to say that the case was also on for a case management conference, Judge Bryant yelled at her, "Will you have a seat." After hearing the next brief matter, Judge Bryant recalled Ms. Hayashi's case, vacated his prior orders granting Ms. Hayashi's motion and request for sanctions, and recused himself from the case. In open court, Judge Bryant told Ms. Hayashi that he had found her to be "rude and obnoxious" on this, and previous occasions.

In this matter, in addition to failing to be patient, dignified and courteous, Judge Bryant vacated orders he had issued in favor of Ms. Hayashi's client after becoming annoyed with Ms. Hayashi and immediately before recusing himself; this created the impression that the judge was not impartial and was vacating his orders out of pique.

Judge Bryant has acknowledged the impression created by his conduct in vacating his rulings after becoming annoyed with Ms. Hayashi and before recusing himself, and has expressed regret for his conduct.

2. People v. Devorah Echeverri

On or about July 11, 2007, attorney Rosa Sahagun appeared for an arraignment in People v. Devorah Echeverri, No. FMW700269, which had been added to the calendar. The defendant was present, and Ms. Sahagun and the prosecutor had agreed on a proposed disposition. Prior to calling Ms. Sahagun's case, Judge Bryant had been conducting video arraignments. Before Judge Bryant could call Ms. Sahagun's case, a recess had to be taken to allow the bailiff to remove the video equipment, the clerk to retrieve the file for Ms. Sahagun's case, and the reporter to set up. After Judge Bryant left the bench to take recess, but before he had left the courtroom, Ms. Sahagun requested that he call her case before the recess. Upon returning to the bench, Judge Bryant asked Ms. Sahagun if she had a matter that she wished to call, and then, in the presence of her client, called Ms. Sahagun "obnoxious."

3. People v. Anderson

In late 2006 or early 2007, in People v. Anderson, No. FWV037306, Judge Bryant stated, in refusing to accept a plea agreement reached by Deputy District Attorney Mary Hosseini and defense attorney Sean Tabibian, words to the effect that DDA Hosseini must have "rocks for brains" to agree to the proposed disposition.

Judge Bryant has said that he does not recall using these precise words and does not recall this exchange, but has apologized if he did use words to this effect, and has stated his understanding that a judge should not use words even similar to those with counsel at any time.

4. People v. Gatica

On or about February 8, 2007, Judge Bryant heard Deputy District Attorney Kent Williams tell the bailiff that Williams had spoken with Judge Bryant's clerk that morning about having the judge review a box of discovery documents that were dropped off by the public defender's office earlier that day in preparation for a proceeding later that day in People v. Gatica, No. FWV039167. During the Gatica proceeding, Judge Bryant stated in open court, in reference to DDA Williams, "I heard him, when I was talking to my bailiff earlier, say one of the dumbest things I ever heard a lawyer say, which is he thought sometime during the day when I was doing this other thing that I was actually going to go through that box." DDA Williams responded that the clerk had told him Judge Bryant would review the documents prior to the proceeding. Judge Bryant had overheard the earlier communication, but did not hear the clerk tell DDA Williams that the documents would be reviewed by the judge. Judge Bryant then responded: "With all do [sic] respect – no she didn't. I don't know about your command of the English language or the lack thereof, what you hear and what you don't want to hear, but I heard what the woman said. She didn't tell you I was going to go through that."

Judge Bryant has acknowledged that his comments on the record were harsh and sarcastic, and has stated that in retrospect, he would have handled the situation differently.

5. People v. Cano

On or about February 1, 2007, in People v. Cano, No. FWV039349, Judge Bryant, in explaining his unwillingness to sentence a defendant to prison and then continue the matter for two months, said, "I'm not going to sentence him to two years in state prison and have him come in 4-4 when there's no penalty if he doesn't show up other than the failure to appear, which the Government never seems to prosecute"; the judge later added that "the Government will undoubtedly wimp out and not go after the failure to appear because that's been my observation over the last 21 years…."

Judge Bryant has conceded that his words, such as "wimp out," were poorly chosen.

The commission determined that Judge Bryant's conduct in these matters was, at a minimum, improper action.

In determining that a public admonishment was appropriate, the commission took into consideration the fact that Judge Bryant received an advisory letter in 1991 for making disparaging statements about an attorney in front of a jury.

Commission members Hon. Frederick P. Horn, Hon. Judith D. McConnell, Hon. Katherine Feinstein, Mr. Peter E. Flores, Mr. Marshall B. Grossman, Ms. Barbara Schraeger, Mr. Lawrence Simi, Ms. Maya Dillard Smith, Ms. Sandra Talcott and Mr. Nathaniel Trives voted for a public admonishment. Commission member Mr. Samuel A. Hardage did not participate.

Dated: October 27, 2008.

/s/
Hon. Frederick P. Horn
Chairperson

STATE OF CALIFORNIA

BEFORE THE COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

| | |
|---|---|
| IN THE MATTER CONCERNING JUDGE JOHN M. WATSON | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT |

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge John M. Watson, a judge of the Orange County Superior Court. Judge Watson and his counsel, Edith R. Matthai, have stipulated to issuance of this public admonishment, as set forth in a Stipulation for Imposition of Public Admonishment. Pursuant to stipulation, and good cause appearing, the Commission on Judicial Performance issues this public admonishment pursuant to article VI, section 18, subdivision (d) of the California Constitution, based on the following Statement of Facts and Reasons:

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

I. PRIOR DISCIPLINE

In October 2006, Judge Watson was privately admonished for an e-mail sent to other judges that was perceived as biased or prejudiced. In February 2006, he was publicly admonished for using his courtroom clerk to help with secretarial tasks involved in the day-to-day management of two rental properties he owned, and using court resources and court facilities for his personal real estate business. In 2004, Judge Watson received an advisory letter expressing the commission's "strong disapproval" of conduct that included sarcastic, demeaning, and disparaging remarks and displaying impatience toward attorneys, in two cases. In 1995, he received an advisory letter for admitting a defendant to bail after a hearing, then revoking the defendant's bail status later that day, without notice or a hearing, based on an ex parte contact between the judge's clerk and the police.

II. PENDING MATTERS

1. Papadopoulos v. Hickok (No. 05CC04014)

Papadopoulos, involved a dispute between Michael Papadopoulos and his neighbor Patty Hickok. There had been a nuisance lawsuit, a settlement and reciprocal temporary restraining orders predating Judge Watson's involvement. Then, Mr. Papadopoulos requested a full adversary hearing, seeking a permanent injunction against Ms. Hickok and the matter was assigned to Judge Watson. Mr. Papadopoulos was represented by attorney Anthony Cosio. Ms. Hickok was represented by attorney Vincent L. Goodwin.

While presiding over the August 25 and 28, 2006 hearing in Papadopoulos, Judge Watson failed to be patient, dignified and courteous with the parties and lawyers and became embroiled in the matter in violation of the Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 2 and 3B(4), as exemplified by the following:

A.

While looking through the file, Judge Watson found a booklet on safe driving, and sarcastically commented, "You might need it. Who knows. Driving safely could become pivotal with this case." (R.T. 8:11-16.)

B.

Shortly thereafter, Judge Watson stated:

> The Court: You know, counsel, both of you, what I am leading up to, what I am intimating, what I am implying, is maybe this case is no big deal. [¶] The people obviously are willing to devote a lot of their psychic energy and some of their money to doing this, but the end result, and I don't intend to get to the bottom of it if I don't have to, I would love to spend the rest of the day listening to these people calling each other names, but if it is to stay away from each other, to not be rude or something to each > other, they have no reason to communicate, no surveillance, there is no reason for any of that. So far I haven't heard one thing that is out of line. [¶] Why don't we just draft an order that fits them both and I don't have to figure out who is doing what?

(R.T. 11:13 – 12:1.)

After Mr. Cosio stated that his client would not agree to any restraining order and wanted to proceed to prove that Ms. Hickok's claims of a surveillance camera and using his vehicle as a weapon were fabrications, Judge Watson engaged in the following exchange:

> The Court: It is clear to me you intend to spend a lot of money on this for some --
>
> Mr. Cosio: It is not the money. It is the principle.
>
> The Court: Could I finish my remarks. [¶] Intends to spend a lot of money on this to feel gratified, "I got her" or whatever. Like it proves something, and it doesn't prove anything. [¶] I don't feel like spending the afternoon listening to it. I probably will. When you two guys look me in the eye at the rates you are charging and say "we object to your ordering both parties to act with good manners and leave here," that that won't work for you. That is not good enough. We want to fight some more.
>
> Mr. Goodwin: Actually, I don't object.
>
> The Court: You said that already. I am focusing on him [Cosio], and I can see by looking at his jaw he is not going to change his mind. Everybody will get a chance to name call and behave in a somehow base manner because somebody feels righteous.
>
> Mr. Cosio: May I respond to that?
>
> The Court: You could have waited until I got done.
>
> Mr. Cosio: I wasn't sure when you were going to get done.

> The Court: I am irritated at this. I do not think this is good sense or good use of these resources that I govern. We have people that have real problems. People that get killed.

(R.T. 13:25 – 14:26.)

Judge Watson then asked Mr. Cosio to respond to this statement, and Mr. Cosio explained that the parties had attempted but failed to settle the case without the court's assistance, that they had been ordered back for an adversary hearing, and that Mr. Papadopoulos was concerned about the safety of his children. Judge Watson continued to press for a mutual stay away order (R.T. 15:13 – 16:6), and Mr. Cosio responded, "All I am saying … " before Judge Watson cut him off with the following:

> The Court: You can call every witness you want. I think this is a great way to spend time and money. This is an example where the lawyer does not help the client, in my opinion, by trying to resolve this on a rational basis. [¶] I don't like to be an accessory to it. I think it is a waste of time. These are the kind of lawsuits that make people mad when they get on jury service. Dumb cases in court.
>
> Mr. Cosio: If the court wants to pass the matter to hear these other matters, it is fine with me.
>
> The Court: The other matters are just as bad as this one. It is the same thing. The only thing I tell myself, the only reason I can sleep is that the only thing I accomplish is they probably don't kill each other in the street. [¶] Mr. Papadopoulos, are you having a good time?
>
> Mr. Papadopoulos: No.
>
> The Court: You look like it. You have a big smile on your face. [¶] Now we will get to call each other names. I wish I had a sandbox.

(R.T. 16:8 – 17:2.)

C.

Mr. Goodwin objected that Mr. Cosio was attempting to get a police officer to validate another witness's testimony. In response, Judge Watson sarcastically stated to Mr. Goodwin:

> The Court: My estimation of you has gone way up. He is trying to get the policeman to corroborate what the witnesses have said. That is an interesting tactic. Maybe some other lawyers will learn it some way.

(R.T. 18:25 – 19:3.)

D.

In response to an objection from Mr. Cosio, Judge Watson spoke for a page and a half of transcript about the evidence and referred to a neighbor of Mr. Papadopoulos who was "a self-professed but unproven dog killer," ending with the statement:

> The Court: This is good stuff. This will help me. But I am inclined to overrule the evidentiary objection. We are going to have a mud throwing contest. Throw the mud. If it is all this weighty and this important, I say we do it. I just wonder if anybody had any authority.

(R.T. 30:1-5.)

E.

When Mr. Cosio stated he would read from the deposition of a police officer, Judge Watson stated:

> The Court: … believe me, the last thing in the world I would look at unless somebody points a gun at my head is a deposition in this case. I don't even want to hear this case, let alone read depositions. [¶] This is just kid's day at the beach. People like to come to court and throw mud at each other.

(R.T. 32:13-19.)

F.

Mr. Goodwin suggested that the next witness might be a priest, to which Judge Watson commented apparently to Mr. Goodwin, "Oh, he is. He is maybe praying for your salvation." (R.T. 34:8-24.)

G.

After Mrs. Papadopoulos testified about an instance in which she drove past Ms. Hickok's house and observed her running up and down waving her arms, yelling, screaming, and running toward her car "barking and biting with her teeth," which caused her to fear for her physical safety (R.T. 40:3-6; 42:11), Judge Watson sarcastically characterized her testimony:

> The Court: Like this other stuff, like this near death experience driving by the house with the Seal Beach Police there, I have taken that into consideration to understand her frame of mind.

(R.T. 43:22-25.)

H.

Mrs. Papadopoulos testified about an instance in which she observed Ms. Hickok sitting in her idling car near the Papadopoulos's new house (they moved away from Ms. Hickok). Mrs. Papadopoulos observed Ms. Hickok from the window. On cross-examination, Mr. Goodwin asked her questions that might raise uncertainty about her observation, e.g., was it nighttime, how high is the house. Mr. Cosio objected on relevance grounds to the question about the height of the house. In response Judge Watson sarcastically stated:

> The Court: I assume it is going somewhere. If you are not interested in how high the house is, I certainly am. It is as important as anything else I have heard.

(R.T. 55:15-18.)

I.

After Mrs. Papadopoulos testified that Ms. Hickok had an extra large grille in the front of her car which she could use as a battering ram, and which she feared she would use to run over her children, Judge Watson commented, "For running children down? … I can see where they would provide that." (R.T. 58:8-15.) Judge Watson then stated:

> The Court: I mean, you were in a very dangerous situation when she tried to flag you down with the biting motion with the Seal Beach police officer and all that. You were in great fear. I was wondering why you would think of it for your children when she has some sort of child crushing thing in the front of her car and not think of it for yourself and your husband. Certainly you want him to live, don't you?

(R.T. 59:3-10.)

J.

After a witness testified about Mr. Papadopoulos's driving abilities and the fact that he had never observed him try to run someone off the road (one of Ms. Hickok's claims), Judge Watson told counsel that he thought the testimony was not probative of anything, and then stated:

> The Court: If you guys think it is worth my time, I am going to listen. Just because I don't see how that is real important, I think you are going to tie it all together for me. You can call me as a witness. I have never seen him drive badly. [¶] Overruled. Is there a statue of him in Seal Beach as being a good driver or anything?
>
> The Witness: No.
>
> The Court: It is coming. [¶] Next question sir.
>
> Mr. Cosio: Q. Have you ever seen a statue of Dr. Papadopoulos -- strike that question.
>
> Mr. Goodwin [Hickok's lawyer]: Object to the comedy.

> The Court: That is my fault. Don't blame him. If there is a statue, it is probably going to be filing a lawsuit at the counter. I need to stay alive and not have my brain turn to thick liquid to come out my ears.
>
> Mr. Goodwin: I want the record to show I don't consider this comical and I am not happy to be here.
>
> The Court: I don't consider it comical either. I consider the fact that we are doing it comedy. I think it is a serious misuse of public funds. It costs $10,000 a day to keep this courtroom going, and to devote it to this sort of egotism is a terrible thing. But we all try to stay sane in our own way, counsel.

(R.T. 64:4 – 65:3.)

K.

Judge Watson stated sarcastically to Mr. Cosio in response to an objection, "If I limited the evidence to that which was relevant, this hearing would have been over about three weeks ago." (R.T. 77:20-22.)

L.

While questioning a police officer witness, Judge Watson engaged in the following exchange:

> The Court: Sergeant Lavelle, did you say you thought this situation could be ended if they would both just agree to stay away from one another?
>
> The Witness: Yes, Your Honor.
>
> The Court: Holy cow. I wish I would have thought of that. [¶] U-turns are all life-threatening, as we know, especially in a neighborhood like this. [¶] Couldn't the doctor have pulled into his own driveway and then backed out again and go the other way?
>
> The Witness: That seemed feasible.

(R.T. 81:6-16.)

……..…….

> The Court: That is really interesting that this could all disappear if they would just agree to leave each other alone. I said that to them 100 times so far. Here it is, four o'clock, but, okay. Thank you, sir. You, unlike me, may leave.

(R.T. 82:2-6.)

M.

While Mr. Papadopoulos was answering a question, Mr. Goodwin stated an objection. Mr. Papadopoulos simultaneously continued his answer, when Judge Watson sarcastically interjected:

> The Court: Could I squeeze a ruling in here? Did you hear my question?
>
> The Witness [Papadopoulos]: Yes.
>
> The Court: Would you answer it?
>
> The Witness [Papadopoulos]: Can you squeeze in a ruling?
>
> The Court: Yes. There was an objection and you started talking. I like to feel useful to the community. One of the things I am supposed to do is rule on those. Don't you ever watch T.V.?

(R.T. 91:16-24.)

N.

During his testimony, Mr. Papadopoulos explained that he had driven the same way when leaving his house for twelve years because it was the safest route (which also took him past Ms. Hickok's house), and he was very concerned with safety. He also said that his wife, who regularly parked in the driveway, always drove that same route past Ms. Hickok's house, because the law required her to back out into the lane closest to the driveway, and prohibited her from crossing the midline of the road which would have been required to go the other way. As set forth above, Judge Watson had questioned the police officer about Mr. Papadopoulos's ability to go the other way, and gratuitously described such a U-turn as "life threatening." This time, in response to Mr. Papadopoulos's testimony about not crossing the midline when backing out, Judge Watson said, "Your adherence to the Vehicle Code is commendable. I didn't even know that." (R.T. 93:3-4.) Judge Watson later made the following statement to Mr. Papadopoulos:

> The Court: In the meantime, Doctor, I have great news. 22106 says no person shall start a vehicle, stop, standing or parked on a highway, nor shall any person back a vehicle on a highway until such movement can be made with reasonable safety. [¶] My further research reveals your street, that residential street is not a highway, but even if it was, you can do it if it is reasonably safe. [¶] So it is not like 12 years of caution is thrown out the window or anything, but you can kind of cut loose a little bit.

(R.T. 107:5-15.)

O.

In response to counsel's attempt to establish the dates of a sequence of events, Judge Watson made the following comment:

> The Court: I know when Santa delivers. There are very few things I bring to this job, but one of them is the knowledge of the date of Christmas. I am not bragging. I just know it.

(R.T. 101:14-17.)

P.

In response to an objection regarding the number of visits by Ms. Hickok's gardener, Judge Watson stated:

> The Court: I don't see its relevance, but I am hoping counsel is going to go somewhere with it. I am going to allow latitude which has colored this entire hearing to the point where the Evidence Code and logical relevance are but distant memories of mine.

(R.T. 105:17-21.)

Q.

In response to an objection from Mr. Goodwin concerning the scope of Mr. Cosio's examination, Judge Watson stated:

> The Court: No, I'm just entertaining in my mind the thought that nothing -- none of my opinions have any affect on these proceedings anyway. I might as well not even rule on the objections. All right. Go ahead. [¶] You know, counsel, I am going to say this one time, then I am going to stop: Do you know of a judge in the State of California that wouldn't suggest that these people stay away from one another after this hearing is over? Do you honestly know one? I don't. I know hundreds of judges, and I don't know a judge that wouldn't do that. [¶] And, you know, we have another five witnesses, and I don't know what the defense is going to be.

(R.T. 16:14-25, Vol. 2.)

……..……

> Mr. Cosio: Your Honor, I just want to point out, put on the record I am just trying to put on my case, and that I'm just trying to elicit testimony from my client, and I would ask the court to be patient, dignified, courteous to my client. That's all I'm asking.
>
> The Court: Well, let's talk about that. [¶] Do you think I've done something this morning that's been discourteous or impatient or unprofessional to your client?
>
> Mr. Cosio: Not this morning.
>
> The Court: Okay. I take it from that, you thought it was this -- yesterday -- last afternoon.
>
> Mr. Cosio: That's correct, Your Honor.
>
> The Court: I thought so. First of all, let me make an admission to you counsel: In addition to being a judge, I'm also > contemporaneously a human being. And as a result of that, I have certain feelings. And what I'm hearing now is what I consider to be a relatively minor dispute over barking puppies and gardeners who come before 7:00, and if you haven't experienced that, it's very irritating. And I have experienced it, and I know about barking puppies, as I think most of the general populous has. [¶] The reason that I got cross-ways with your client on Friday is he, in his mind, I believe, assumed some high status for some reason, because he has a Ferrari or he is a dentist or something. I don't know. But that status is either just in his mind or it -- wherever it is, it exists outside this courtroom. In this courtroom, he is just a person, and I don't think he appreciated that fact. [¶] He thought that I was going to be wow'ed or something, and I'm just listening to the facts, which while you may not believe it, I think I can probably recite almost verbatim. … [¶] And at one point, may I remind you, your client was yelling at the top of his lungs on Friday afternoon. Do you remember that? And it was like a preacher calling for hell and damnation. This was righteous indignation. He was mad, and he wanted people to know it. [It is not possible to discern from the transcript when or whether the alleged yelling by Mr. Papadopoulos occurred.] [¶] And I'm looking back at a Christmas puppy, and you can tell me about the five months if you want and the gardener that comes at 6:30 instead of 7:00. And the woman whose eyes bulged out and her teeth made an eating motion and her arms waved up and down. And maybe his wife said the grill, reinforced grill, was in order to run children down. [¶] I've heard all of the facts. I've heard this drive-around story until it's coming out my ears. And I don't treat it with the dignity that your client treats it. Your client treats it as [if] each one of these is a capital offense, and I don't view it that way. I view it the way I think most people in the world would view it. It is a personality dispute and of a relatively minor nature, but to the participants, very, very aggravating.

(R.T. 17:5 – 19:10, Vol. 2.)

Judge Watson's comments continued for several pages of transcript in which he critiqued the dispute, stating that nothing serious happened to the litigants ("in the sense of people injured or kidnapped or raped or burned houses, or I haven't even heard a flat tire even" [R.T. 19:11-13, Vol. 2]), and advised the litigants, "My personal advice to them is to pretend like the other party moved to New Jersey. They are just gone, and get on with it." (R.T. 20:9-11, Vol. 2.) At one point during Judge Watson's comments Mr. Cosio stated:

> Mr. Cosio: Your Honor, I'm just asking the court to reserve its comments until after the conclusion of this case, because the court's comments give an appearance that you are not giving any deference to the testimony, and it also appears that you're perhaps biased not against either one of the parties, but in general, over these kinds of cases.
>
> The Court: Well, you know, counsel, I'm not going to reserve my comments. I run this courtroom, in case you don't know it, and I am going to continue to run it. What I am going to reserve is judgment.
>
> Mr. Cosio: Okay.
>
> The Court: And that's all you're entitled to.

(R.T. 20:15-26, Vol. 2.)

Judge Watson continued his comments for another page of transcript, in which he discussed why he called Papadopoulos "Mr." instead of "Doctor," and stated to Mr. Cosio that:

> The Court: … You've made the record as well as you can make it. That I'm not being fair to you and if some appellate court reviews this transcript and says you didn't get a fair hearing, and, you know, this was World War III and Judge Watson failed to recognize it, it was one of those incidents where it was a hundred percent wrong on one side, zero on the other, and keeping them apart was not a good solution, by mutual court orders, not a good solution, then I get reversed. So what? That doesn't concern me. I'm calling balls and strikes up here, counsel, doing as well as I can.

(R.T. 21:22 – 22:6, Vol. 2.)

At the end of these comments, Mr. Cosio asked for a recess so he could confer with his client, but Judge Watson said, "No. Keep going. You said you wanted to keep going, and we're going to keep going." (R.T. 22:9-10, Vol. 2.)

2. Sea Environment Apartments Cases

Judge Watson presided over a bench trial in three consolidated cases on October 3, 5 and 10, 2006 (Sea Environment Apartments v. Elliot, No. 06WL02877; Sea Environment Apartments v. Potter, No. 06WL03291; Sea Environment Apartments v. Parrish, No. 06WL04530). These were unlawful detainer cases, in which the defendant tenants were not represented by counsel.

Judge Watson was the defendant in a lawsuit filed by tenants of his apartment units; warranty of habitability was an issue in both cases. Summary judgment was granted in favor of Judge Watson; the case was settled while on appeal on July 28, 2006; the dismissal was entered by the Court of Appeal on August 23, 2006. The appellate panel of the Orange County Superior Court concluded that the failure to disclose this information was an irregularity in the proceeding that prevented the defendants from having a fair trial.

Judge Watson's conduct violated the Code of Judicial Ethics, canons 2 and 3E(2).

Judge Watson's conduct in Papadopoulos and Sea Environment Apartments was, at a minimum, improper action. The conduct did not involve moral turpitude.

Judge Watson has previously tendered his resignation from judicial office for health reasons and has agreed not to seek or hold judicial office and not to seek or accept judicial assignment. In the commission's view, this result adequately protects the public from any future misconduct.

Commission members Hon. Judith D. McConnell, Hon. Katherine Feinstein, Mr. Peter E. Flores, Mr. Marshall B. Grossman, Ms. Barbara Schraeger, Mr. Lawrence Simi, Ms. Maya Dillard Smith, Ms. Sandra Talcott and Mr. Nathaniel Trives voted for a public admonishment. Commission chairperson Honorable Frederick P. Horn is recused. Commission member Mr. Samuel A. Hardage did not participate.

Dated: _11/6_, 2008.

_____/s/_____
Honorable Judith D. McConnell,
Vice-Chairperson of the Commission on
Judicial Performance

STATE OF CALIFORNIA

BEFORE THE COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

| IN THE MATTER CONCERNING JUDGE JAMES J. McBRIDE | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT |
|---|---|

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge James J. McBride, a judge of the San Francisco County Superior Court. Judge McBride and his attorney, James A. Murphy, appeared before the commission on October 21, 2008, to contest the imposition of a public admonishment, pursuant to Rule 116 of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance. Having considered the written and oral objections and argument submitted by Judge McBride and his counsel, and good cause appearing, the Commission on Judicial Performance issues this public admonishment pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution, based on the following statement of facts and reasons.

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

Judge James J. McBride was appointed to the San Francisco County Municipal Court in 1994, and elevated to the San Francisco County Superior Court in December 1998 upon unification of the trial courts. His current term began in 2003. Based on the facts set forth below, the commission finds that while presiding over the master criminal calendar in Department 22, Judge McBride improperly advanced a trial date without notice to, or the consent of, the attorney assigned to the case, thereby abusing his judicial authority in violation of canon 1 (a judge shall uphold the integrity of the judiciary), canon 2A (a judge shall respect and comply with the law), and canon 3B(2)

(a judge shall be faithful to the law). The commission also finds that Judge McBride improperly relieved the public defender and appointed new counsel for the defendant in several cases, in violation of canons 1, 2A and 3B(2). The commission further finds that Judge McBride made discourteous and disparaging remarks to attorneys appearing in court before him, contrary to canon 3B(4), which requires judges to be patient, dignified and courteous to lawyers with whom they deal in an official capacity.

I. Advancing the trial date without adequate notice or counsel's consent

At the defendant's arraignment in the misdemeanor case of People v. Dennis Ogg on November 27, 2006, the case was set for trial on December 22, 2006. Mr. Ogg had not waived his statutory right to a speedy trial, so the last day his trial could be held was December 27, 2006.

On December 20, 2006, while presiding over the master calendar in San Francisco County Superior Court, Judge McBride ordered the Ogg case assigned out to trial (two days before the originally scheduled trial date). Mr. Ogg's trial attorney, Deputy Public Defender (DPD) Michelle Tong, was not present in Judge McBride's court at the time. At his appearance before the commission, Judge McBride stated that there was no objection to the trial assignment. The transcript from the proceeding before Judge McBride on December 20, 2006, reflects that DPD Rebecca Young, the calendar DPD in Judge McBride's court, stated she "could not accept a trial assignment on behalf of Miss Tong." Nevertheless, Judge McBride instructed DPD Young to "get her [DPD Tong] up here" and assigned the matter to a trial department.

The matter appeared back before Judge McBride the following day, December 21, 2006, because the defense filed a peremptory challenge against the judge who was assigned the trial. Judge McBride assigned the case to another courtroom for trial over the objection of DPD Young who stated that DPD Tong would be ready to try the case the next day – the originally scheduled trial date. When Young objected to having the trial date advanced, Judge McBride told her that it was his prerogative to advance the case for trial.

Judge McBride contends that he advanced the trial date based upon his presumption that Mr. Ogg wanted a disposition of his case before Christmas, and the judge wanted to avoid the dismissal of the case for violating the defendant's right to a speedy trial if the case was not tried within the statutory timeframe.

In his response to the commission's investigation, Judge McBride acknowledged that while presiding over the master criminal calendar, he advanced the trial date in a few other criminal cases in which the defendants had not waived their right to a speedy trial and a courtroom became available before the originally set trial date. Judge McBride contends that he advanced the trial dates in those cases to avoid the possibility that the case would have to be dismissed if it had not been tried by the speedy trial deadline. Judge McBride also contends that, in his role as supervising judge of the criminal courts, he had the judicial authority to manage the criminal trial docket for the proper and orderly administration of justice, and that he therefore had the authority to advance a case to trial when a courtroom became available. Judge McBride cites no legal authority for this position.

The commission finds that Judge McBride's advancement of trial dates in disregard of the due process rights of the parties involved in the cases constituted an abuse of his judicial authority and warrants discipline. Advancing a trial date before the scheduled trial date – especially with notice of the new trial date being given that same day – is contrary to fundamental principles of fairness and due process. The attorney assigned to the Ogg case received notice that Judge McBride had advanced the trial date on the morning of the advanced trial date. Judge McBride expected the attorney to be available for trial and the defendant to be present to commence trial even though they had not been notified of the new trial date. Moreover, witnesses had not been subpoenaed for that date.

Judge McBride's actions violated canon 1 (a judge shall uphold the integrity of the judiciary), canon 2A (a judge shall respect and comply with the law), and canon 3B(2) (a judge shall be faithful to the law). Judge McBride's conduct was, at a minimum, improper action within the meaning of article VI, section 18, subdivision (d)(3), of the California Constitution.

II. Improperly relieving the public defender

On Friday, December 1, 2006, Judge McBride presided over the master criminal calendar in Department 22. He learned that Deputy Public Defender (DPD) Maria Lopez was not present in his courtroom that day for her assigned cases. DPD Lopez was in trial on another misdemeanor matter which was in recess that Friday, and DPD Lopez had been preparing for that trial in her office. Judge McBride contended that if DPD Lopez's trial was not actually in session on December 1, 2006, she should have been present in his courtroom. The deputy public defender appearing on DPD Lopez's behalf informed Judge McBride that DPD Lopez was to resume trial the following Monday, December 4, 2006, and she would not be available to start trial in new cases until that trial concluded.

One of DPD Lopez's matters that had been scheduled for Friday, December 1, 2006, was a motion to suppress in the matter of People v. Magno. The prosecutor in that case was present in court on Friday morning with a law enforcement officer witness and represented to the court that DPD Lopez had told him she would be available that morning for the hearing on the motion. Judge McBride was understandably displeased that DPD Lopez was not present in court for the hearing on the motion to suppress and that the motion had to be continued.

The following Monday, December 4, 2006, Judge McBride called the matter of People v. Maxwell, to which DPD Lopez was assigned. Mr. Maxwell had waived his speedy trial rights. DPD Nicole Solis appeared on behalf of the public defender's office and told the judge that the case was trailing for trial that day. Judge McBride responded as follows:

> THE COURT: The Court's custom is to relieve the Public Defender if the Public Defender's incapable of handling the Public Defender's obligations. On Maxwell, the Public Defender is relieved. As your last act, you will have your client in here so we can appoint new counsel and turn the file over. Thank you.

While he continued to preside over the master criminal calendar on December 4, 2006, Judge McBride called other cases to which DPD Lopez was assigned that were also trailing for trial until there was an available courtroom. DPD Solis told him that DPD Lopez was in trial in a different department that day but that she would stand by and the case could trail or, if no courtroom was available, other options were available, including continuing the trial date. Judge McBride responded by relieving the public defender over DPD Solis's objection and appointing new counsel for Mr. Maxwell. Judge McBride then relieved the public defender and appointed conflicts counsel or private counsel on four additional cases that had been assigned to DPD Lopez on which she had not appeared the preceding Friday, but on which another deputy public defender had appeared on her behalf (People v. Gaines, People v. Ramirez, People v. Ginn, and People v. Evans).

In another matter, People v. Black, Judge McBride relieved the public defender because the deputy public defender assigned to the case, DPD Stephanie Wargo, also had not been present in court the preceding Friday. When DPD Wargo appeared in court on the Monday, December 4, 2006 calendar, she informed the court that her absence the preceding Friday was due to what she described as a calendaring error by her office. DPD Wargo objected to Judge McBride's relieving the public defender in the Black case, and told the judge that she was present and ready to serve her client. Judge McBride responded:

> THE COURT: The Public Defender serves at the pleasure of the Court. If the Public Defender cannot serve the Court and the client on the day appointed, the Public Defender is relieved. Thank you.

Although a judge has the discretion to relieve counsel on the court's own motion over the objection of defense counsel, "this discretion has been severely limited by California decisions." People v. McKenzie (1983) 34 Cal.3d 616, 629, overruled in part on other grounds by People v. Crayton (2002) 28 Cal.4th 346, 365.

Courts should "exercise their power to remove defense counsel with great circumspection." (Id at p. 630.) See also People v. Daniels (1991) 52 Cal.3d 815, 846-847 [stating that strict rules limit a court's power to remove counsel]. A trial court may relieve counsel over the objection of defense counsel "to eliminate potential conflicts, ensure adequate representation, or prevent substantial impairment of court proceedings." People v. Cole (2004) 33 Cal.4th 1158, 1187. "The involuntary removal of any attorney is a severe limitation on a defendant's right to counsel and may be justified, if at all, only in the most flagrant circumstances of attorney misconduct or incompetence when all other judicial controls have failed." Cannon v. Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1975) 14 Cal.3d 678, 697-698 [conduct of the deputy public defenders was not so flagrant as to justify the court's abrupt substitution of counsel without the prior concurrence of the attorneys and defendants involved; the judge's conduct amounted to unlawful interference with the attorney-client relationship].

In these matters, the commission finds that there was no indication of any conflict or that the attorneys' representation was inadequate, or that the impairment of court proceedings caused by DPD Lopez's unavailability and DPD Wargo's absence the preceding Friday was substantial enough to warrant the removal of the public defender's office from their cases. The commission further finds that Judge McBride's action in relieving the public defender in all of these cases created the appearance that he was acting out of pique and for the purpose of punishing the deputy public defenders for not appearing in his court the preceding Friday, December 1, 2006. Judge McBride's relieving of the public defender in these cases violated canons 1, 2A and 3B(2) and constituted improper action at a minimum.

III. Improper demeanor

A. People v. Darryl Vaughn

Defendant Vaughn was in custody when he appeared in court on December 20, 2006, having been arrested for impersonating a police officer while in a drug treatment program. When the prosecutor said he was planning to file a motion to revoke probation, Judge McBride remarked in open court:

> THE COURT: So we have a misdemeanor running around as a cop holding people hostage, right? That's good. [¶] And somebody just woke up and decided to file a motion to revoke, huh?

Later in the proceeding, when a probation officer asked that a supplemental report be ordered for January 23, 2007, Judge McBride made the following remarks:

> THE COURT: That's a little difficult since he's got a right to have a jury [trial] on the new case before that. [¶] I'm going to suggest that the district attorney get their act together by two o'clock this afternoon. How about that? Is that too much to ask? You either decide what the basis of the motion is, or not file a motion, or don't or I'll send this back for trial to Department 16.
>
> [PUBLIC DEFENDER]: Mr. Vaughn indicates he wants it to go to trial with [DPD] Razzaq.
>
> THE COURT: That would be a great thing to do, but –
>
> [PUBLIC DEFENDER]: Is that right, sir?
>
> THE DEFENDANT: Yes.
>
> THE COURT: Now that the district attorney's had the benefit of everybody explaining everything to them, maybe they'll figure out what they want to do. Two o'clock?

[Italics added for emphasis.]

Judge McBride's sarcastic and denigrating comments violated canon 3B(4), which requires judges to be patient, dignified and courteous to those with whom they deal in an official capacity. Sarcastic, demeaning or belittling comments toward counsel are not consistent with the conduct required by canon 3B(4). (See, e.g., Kennick v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1990) 50 Cal.3d 297, 323-327.)

B. People v. Germaine Glenn and Winford Battle

Co-defendants Germaine Glenn and Winford Battle, husband and wife, were on probation for felony theft. Judge McBride called their cases together during the December 20, 2006 criminal calendar. Ms. Glenn's attorney asked that the two cases be severed and that Ms. Glenn be permitted to go to drug court. Although one of the prosecutors handling the case initially agreed to allow Ms. Glenn to go to drug court, a supervising prosecutor opposed severing the cases, which would have prohibited Ms. Glenn from going to drug court because of a guideline for drug court that the cases of both defendants must be resolved before either defendant can attend drug court. When Judge McBride granted the defense motion to sever, the following exchange occurred:

> THE COURT: Motion to sever is granted.
>
> [THE PEOPLE]: Your Honor, it's part and parcel of the same transaction, one's handing the other the money from the transaction.
>
> THE COURT: Then why are you agreeing that she should go to drug court?
>
> [THE PEOPLE]: Well, your Honor, I am not punitive in nature, but if that's the case, and the Court is intending to sever, maybe we won't send her to drug court because the purposes of the [Memorandum of Understanding regarding drug court] are frustrated.
>
> THE COURT: A little light on this subject always reveals the truth. Motion to continue is granted. I'm so glad the public has a district attorney who's not punitive and really sees the light here.

[Italics added for emphasis.]

Judge McBride's remark in open court was sarcastic and denigrating to the prosecutor in violation of canon 3B(4).

C. People v. Mark Speilman

On January 5, 2007, while Judge McBride was presiding over the master criminal calendar, People v. Speilman was called, and DPD Young advised the court that the defendant's assigned public defender was in trial. A discussion of whether the defendant wanted to keep his attorney and go to trial later ensued; the defendant told Judge McBride that he did not want a new lawyer. DPD Young told the court that three weeks remained before the deadline for the defendant to receive a speedy trial, and requested that the matter be continued for one week. The following exchange occurred in front of the defendant:

> THE COURT: I'm going to ask him now.
>
> [DPD] YOUNG: Well, he may not need to waive time. [The assigned public defender] Mr. Luce is in trial.
>
> THE COURT: He's not waiving time, Ms. Young, if you understand the doctrine.
>
> [DPD] YOUNG: I do you (sic) understand the doctrine.
>
> THE COURT: He is balancing his right to a statutory limit to a speedy trial against his right –
>
> [DPD] YOUNG: I understand.
>
> THE COURT: -- to the lawyer who has been appointed and works with him. [¶] I'm asking him now if he wants to find another lawyer or not?
>
> [DPD] YOUNG: I am merely saying I would like him not to waive his last day yet.
>
> THE COURT: I don't know if you have any business in it, but thank you for your – now I'm going to ask your clients. Do you want to come back and have me try and find you a lawyer, or Mr. Luce if possible –
>
> THE DEFENDANT: No, I don't want to waive no time.
>
> THE COURT: You don't want to waive time. [¶] Then we're back here on the 8th. We're going to look for a lawyer.
>
> [DPD] YOUNG: He said he doesn't want to look for a lawyer. If the court reporter can read it back.

THE COURT: If he's going to assert his time waiver he's going to be back here on the 8th.

[DPD] YOUNG: He's not asserting his time waiver. He's asserting and he also wants Mr. Luce as his lawyer.

THE COURT: January 8. [¶] Thank you.

[Italics added for emphasis.]

Judge McBride's remarks were rude and condescending, in violation of canon 3B(4).

The commission finds that Judge McBride's conduct constituted improper action at a minimum.

Commission members Hon. Frederick P. Horn, Hon. Judith D. McConnell, Mr. Peter E. Flores, Mr. Marshall B. Grossman, Ms. Barbara Schraeger, Ms. Maya Dillard Smith, Ms. Sandra Talcott and Mr. Nathaniel Trives voted for a public admonishment. Commission members Hon. Katherine Feinstein and Mr. Lawrence Simi were recused. Commission member Mr. Samuel A. Hardage did not participate.

Dated: November 18, 2008

/s/
Honorable Frederick P. Horn
Chairperson

PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT OF JUDGE CHRISTINE K. MORUZA

This disciplinary matter concerns Judge Christine K. Moruza, a judge of the Alameda County Superior Court. On October 15, 2008, pursuant to rule 116 of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance, Judge Moruza waived her right to formal proceedings under rule 118 and to review by the Supreme Court and demanded an appearance. On December 8, 2008, Judge Moruza withdrew her demand for an appearance before the commission and determined not to contest the issuance of this public admonishment. The Commission on Judicial Performance issues this public admonishment pursuant to article VI, section 18 (d) of the California Constitution, based on the following statement of facts and reasons.

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

Judge Moruza has been a judge of the Alameda County Superior Court since 1997. Her current term began in 2005.

The commission determined that Judge Moruza should be publicly admonished for the following conduct:

1. Comments concerning publicly-funded defense counsel

On or about February 1, 2007, Deputy Public Defender Samuel Greyson requested a continuance in People v. Finley, in which Deputy Public Defender Kristen McCannon represented the defendant, so that certain evidence could be retested; the prosecution had no objection. After some discussion, this exchange occurred:

> THE COURT: Okay. So we need to give him enough time to get the retest done. She hasn't submitted it yet.
>
> THE DEFENDANT: She promised me last time it would be submitted. This is the second time I've gone to court.
>
> THE COURT: Well, are you paying her?
>
> THE DEFENDANT: No.
>
> THE COURT: You get what you pay for. If you want really good service, then you pay an attorney $10,000 to do this.
>
> MS. THIESEN [DDA]: I'd suggest even six weeks.
>
> MR. GREYSON [DPD]: Thank you.
>
> THE COURT: Okay. March 15. In your case a retest is critical.
>
> THE DEFENDANT: Yes, it is.

> THE COURT: And Ms. McCannon has a zillion cases and she is an excellent attorney and you ain't paying a cent for it. Count yourself really really lucky.
>
> THE DEFENDANT: Okay.
>
> THE BAILIFF: What time, Your Honor?
>
> THE COURT: 8:30.

(R.T. 2:23 – 3:14, italics added.)

Four weeks later, during the morning calendar on February 28, 2007, Deputy Public Defender Elizabeth Campos asked Judge Moruza to call three matters in which she had "quick progress reports," but the judge declined to do so, asking instead if any other private counsel were ready. When Judge Moruza did begin calling public defender cases, this exchange occurred:

> THE COURT: Okay. Ms. Campos. Long last.
>
> MS. CAMPOS: Can we call Kyle Borton? He was here at 8:30.
>
> THE COURT: Right. I understand your clients were on time, but those who have attorneys that they're paying go first and those who you [sic] have a free attorney go second and it's just the way it works here.
>
> MS. CAMPOS: Right. Your Honor, I would respectfully object but I understand.
>
> THE COURT: Sure, you would. That's just the way it's run here. You get what you pay for. You're paying nothing here. [¶] Okay. Kyle Borton. [¶] Good. Okay. This is an okay report. So we'll have another diversion progress report on May 30th, this department, at 8:30. So we'll see you then.

(R.T. 1:14 – 2:1, italics added.)

Judge Moruza's remarks in these cases suggested that she believed that indigent defendants were entitled to receive, and consequently did receive, legal services and court access inferior to that provided to defendants who could afford to pay attorneys. The judge's comments conveyed the message that defendants who do not pay can expect to receive legal services inferior to those provided by private counsel, and that public defender clients get nothing because they pay nothing. The remarks could be expected to have a negative impact on the attorney-client relationship, and to undermine confidence in the criminal justice system. In addition, the comments reflected a lack of patience and courtesy, and conveyed bias. The comments were contrary to canons 2A, 3B(4) and 3B(5).

Judge Moruza has admitted that making the comments was wrong. She has explained that in Finley, she was attempting to impress upon a defendant who was somewhat irate and agitated that he should be grateful for the justice system and the representation of the public defender. The judge has denied that she was biased. She self-reported her conduct in Borton in May 2007.

2. Comments in People v. Rupple

On or about February 21, 2007, People v. Kenneth Rupple, a domestic violence case, was before Judge Moruza for a readiness conference. When the case was called, defense counsel said that the matter was being maintained for jury trial. Judge Moruza asked what the offer was, and DDA Eric Swalwell stated that it was to let the defendant plead guilty to simple battery, go on court (informal) probation for three years, receive credit for time served, attend 52 domestic violence classes and pay a fine of $335. Judge Moruza confirmed the case for trial, and the prosecutor requested that she order the victim, Ms. West, to return on the trial date. This exchange followed:

> THE COURT: All right. Ms. West, be sure to be back here on Monday. [¶] Is there a stay away?
>
> MS. WEST: I didn't get the decision in that. There shouldn't be any.
>
> THE DEFENDANT: That was done by [Judge] Walker.
>
> THE COURT: Do you want to proceed with this case?
>
> MS. WEST: No.
>
> MR. SWALWELL [DDA]: Your Honor, we have a statement from the defendant where he admits to hitting.
>
> THE COURT: So.
>
> MS. CAMPOS [DPD]: It's ambiguous.
>
> THE DEFENDANT: It's pointless.
>
> MS. WEST: He's defending me.
>
> THE BAILIFF: Ma'am.

MR. SWALWELL: Defendant admitting to hitting her is pretty good evidence.

THE COURT: So we're going to have a criminal prosecution. [¶] Does he have a record?

THE DEFENDANT: No.

MR. SWALWELL: Not in [sic] county.

THE COURT: No. Okay.

MR. SWALWELL: But we know we expect a victim of domestic violence to say it didn't happen. That happens a lot.

THE COURT: Well, I know. I was a D.A. too. [¶] How long have you been married?

MR. SWALWELL: How long --

THE DEFENDANT: We're actually engaged.

MS. CAMPOS: Mr. Rupple is her caretaker. She is disabled.

THE COURT: How many times has he hit you before?

MS. WEST: Never.

THE COURT: What led up to this?

MS. WEST: We were intoxicated. I was extremely intoxicated. There was a man on top of me and in the process of getting this man off of me, he inadvertently hit me. I was belligerently drunk. Once the guy was off of me, I was like 'Okay. Let's keep partying.' If you call Gallagher's bartender, he would testify --

THE COURT: Is this what we're going to call 60 people to hear?

MR. SWALWELL: Your Honor, I --

THE COURT: This is what we're going to waste court time with.

MR. SWALWELL: I don't believe it's a waste of court time.

THE COURT: I do.

MR. SWALWELL: For a person that has been hit --

THE COURT: I do.

MR. SWALWELL: With all due respect, our office --

THE COURT: With all due respect, I have lived about 30 years longer than you have. I know a lot more about relationships and life and the court system. [¶] To tell you the truth, this is a crazy waste of time.

MR. SWALWELL: I understand, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Okay. This will go on the back burner for Monday. But now you know my feelings about -- what can I say; painting on the numbers as far as prosecutorial discretion.

MR. SWALWELL: I would have to answer to my boss on Monday if I dismissed it and she was hit again.

THE COURT: Well, I have to answer to the People of this County and they're going to be asking me why 60 people have to come and sit here and listen to this kind of stupidity. Okay.

MR. SWALWELL: I understand, Your Honor.

THE COURT: I'm going to say the D.A., has the policy about domestic violence. We don't look at each case on its individual merits. We don't try to do what's best for the victim. What can we do best to prevent this kind of thing in the future? No, we have a policy that we're guided by. [¶] I know, I was a young D.A. once too. If you were caught with a concealable weapon in San Francisco, you did 90 days, period, period. That led to a lot of stupid prosecutions.

THE DEFENDANT: Judge, can I speak freely?

THE COURT: No, don't.

THE DEFENDANT: No.

THE COURT: I've said enough.

THE DEFENDANT: All right.

THE COURT: We'll have 60 people come in. That will be great. Then afterwards we'll have them tell you what they think of it.

(R.T. 1:20 – 4:16.)

Judge Moruza's statements that the Rupple case was a "crazy waste of time" and that pursuing it amounted to "stupidity" suggested abandonment of the judicial role and embroilment, and appeared impatient and discourteous, contrary to canons 1, 2A and 3B(4), and 3B(5). The judge's reference to having lived about 30 years longer than the prosecutor and knowing "a lot more about relationships and life and the court system" appeared inappropriately personal, undignified and demeaning, and contrary to canon 3B(4). In addition, the judge's comments, particularly when considered in conjunction with the comments described immediately below in sections 3 and 4, suggested a bias in domestic violence prosecutions.

Judge Moruza has admitted that the remarks she made were inappropriate, demonstrated a lack of patience, and could have led an observer to think she had prejudged the case, although she has denied that she has a bias against domestic violence cases in general.

3. Comments in People v. Dantes

On or about February 21, 2007, immediately after discussion of the Rupple case, the case of People v. Dantes, another domestic violence case scheduled for readiness conference, came before Judge Moruza. The transcript of the matter reads in its entirety:

MS. CAMPOS [DPD]: Mr. Jester Dantes.

THE COURT: Is this another case where we're going to ruin the relationship between the victim --

MS. CAMPOS: There is no relationship with the victim and Mr. Dantes. [¶] The victim, we haven't been able to locate her. She hasn't been subpoenaed for today. She's been subpoenaed for Monday. So we're going to maintain. If she doesn't come in, it's going to be a dismissal.

THE COURT: Okay.

MS. THEISEN [DDA]: That is true and correct.

THE COURT: All right.

(R.T. 1:4-15.)

Judge Moruza's comment suggested bias in domestic violence cases, and was contrary to canons 2A, 3B(4) and 3B(5). The judge has admitted that her comment should not have been made, although she has denied that she is generally biased in domestic violence cases.

4. Comment about personal experience of domestic violence

On or about February 22, 2007, Judge Moruza made a remark to counsel in chambers to the effect that she had tried to slap her husband once, that he had been quicker and slapped her back, and that she had never tried to slap him again. The context of her remark was her expression of the view that the prosecution should not be pursuing the Rupple case, described in section 2, above. On another occasion, the judge told counsel that she had once called the police on her husband for domestic violence. The judge's remarks appeared inappropriate and undignified, and suggested a lack of impartiality in domestic violence cases. The remarks were contrary to canons 2A, 3B(4) and 3B(5). Judge Moruza has stated her recognition that statements about her own life experience are not appropriate, and has assured the commission that she will not in the future share personal information in her role as a judge.

5. Comment in People v. Turner

In or about August 2007, in People v. Turner, a felony assault case in which the defendant stabbed a 17-year-old in the arm in response to crude comments the victim and others shouted at him from a car, Judge Moruza told the prosecutor that her son might have reacted in a similar way in that situation. The judge's comment was inappropriately personal and suggested bias and prejudgment, contrary to canons 2A, 3B(4) and 3B(5). Judge Moruza has denied bias, but has stated that she will not mention matters related to personal relationships when handling cases in the future.

6. Comments in People v. P.B.

In 1999, Judge Moruza heard the case of People v. P.B., in which the defendant was charged with felony assault with a deadly weapon, with an enhancement for great bodily injury. The victim in the case was a deputy sheriff who had been having an affair with a neighbor who was also employed by the sheriff's department. The deputy also had sex with this woman's 16-year-old daughter, and was prosecuted for statutory rape. The defendant was the husband of the woman and the father of the 16-year-old. The defendant beat the victim over the head with a baseball bat.

At the preliminary hearing, Judge Moruza exercised her discretion, under Penal Code section 17, to reduce the assault with a deadly weapon charge to a misdemeanor. The defendant pled guilty, and the judge sentenced him.

At sentencing, after counsel submitted the matter, Judge Moruza made the following remarks:

> THE COURT: All right. I would like to say one thing about the probation report which I, the Court, found daunting. On page five, the last sentence of the first incomplete paragraph, there it says, 'Be that as it may, there is no excuse for the defendant's behavior in the instant offense.' I think that sentence is 180 degrees wrong. That's why this Court reduced this case from a felony to a misdemeanor. [¶] The Court feels there was almost every excuse for the defendant's behavior in this offense. There was a day in this country not that long ago when if a man's young daughter was raped and his wife was seduced by a neighbor who he considered a good friend, that man would have been privileged to go ahead and take care of the matter and in a way similar to what Mr. [B] did, and it wouldn't have gone any further. There wouldn't have been felony convictions on either side. There wouldn't have been all kinds of expenditures of tax payers' money, but now the politically correct thing is to say when someone does what Mr. [B] did, that they've taken the law into their own hands. That's a cliché. It represents a lot have [sic] emoting and feeling about the issue rather than thinking. [¶] Mr. [B] did not take the law into his own hands. He knew what he was doing was illegal and he took responsibility immediately. He's done nothing to evade responsibility, as far as I can see, during the entire pendency of these proceedings. So Mr. [B] isn't taking the law into his own hands. And frankly, this Court understands perfectly well why he did what he did. Unfortunately we have the system of criminal justice that you're not allowed to do that anymore. Some people would say our system of criminal justice is immoral because of that. However, it is what it is and I must apply it.

(R.T. 11:14 – 12:20.)

Judge Moruza has said that she intended only to convey her understanding of the defendant's situation and her view that it was unfortunate for him that his conduct was now illegal. What she said, however, was that in the past, if someone did what the defendant did, the matter "wouldn't have gone any further," and there wouldn't have been felony convictions or "all kinds of expenditures of taxpayers' money." These remarks suggested the view that prosecution of such cases is an unwise expenditure of public funds. The judge went on to say, "Unfortunately, we have the system of criminal justice that you're not allowed to do that anymore. Some people would say our system of criminal justice is immoral because of that. However, it is what it is and I must apply it." Regardless of the judge's intent, this statement suggested that the judge holds the view that the criminal justice system is "immoral" insofar as it requires punishments for conduct such as the defendant's. Her statements appeared to reflect disdain for the legal system, as well as bias and prejudgment, and were contrary to canons 2A and 3B(5). The judge has admitted that her statements could be construed as disdainful of the fact that the law had to be applied in that particular situation.

7. Comments in People v. Spotorno

On or about February 27, 2007, the case of People v. Spotorno, in which the defendant was charged with killing a mountain lion, came before Judge Moruza. During a bench conference, the judge made a reference to killing unborn babies, which, according to the judge, was intended to put into perspective the crime with which the defendant was charged. The comment, in addition to being inappropriately personal, suggested the view that the offense with which the defendant was charged was minor by comparison with killing unborn babies, and thus conveyed bias. The comment was contrary to canons 2A, 3B(4) and 3B(5).

During discussion of the case, Judge Moruza made a statement to the effect that she knew someone who sounded a bit like the defendant, who was an elderly rancher, as her father was also an ornery old guy. The judge's comparison of the defendant to her own father carried the suggestion of bias in favor of the defendant, and was contrary to canons 2A, 3B(4) and 3B(5).

In further discussion of the case, after the prosecutor mentioned the suffering of the mountain lion, which had died of thirst after being caught in a trap that the defendant checked infrequently, Judge Moruza made comments to the effect that she was not sure that animals were conscious of, or had the ability to contemplate, their own pain the way that human beings do, but that putting animals out of their misery was appropriate; the judge then described an incident in which her husband shot a deer that had been hit by the car in which she and her family were traveling. The judge's statements about her own views of how animals might experience pain and her references to her personal experience were inappropriate and contrary to canons 2A, 3B(4) and 3B(5).

In setting the case for trial (further discussed in section 11, below), Judge Moruza said to the prosecutor on the record, "I want to deal -- you can win your case maybe, maybe not, but let's not take an old man and just rack [sic] him over the coals for something -- I don't know, maybe he didn't know it was not okay, you know." The statement, particularly the reference to the prosecution as raking the defendant "over the coals," appeared to reflect bias and was contrary to canons 2A, 3B(4) and 3B(5).

8. Comments to prosecutor in People v. Eubanks and Barfield

On August 13, 2007, the case of People v. Eubanks and Barfield was before Judge Moruza for a hearing on a motion to suppress. During the hearing, which was contentious, the judge questioned a police officer about his age, allergies, and smoking habits in order to gauge whether he had been able to smell from outside a vehicle a small amount of marijuana that had been found in a plastic bag in a closed area inside the vehicle. At sidebar, when DDA Eric Swalwell said that he could smell the marijuana from approximately 15 feet away, Judge Moruza responded, "How old are you? Eighteen?" In further discussions at sidebar, after DDA Swalwell expressed the view that the judge had taken an "amateurish" approach to making a factual determination in the case, the judge responded, "You're the amateur." The judge's remarks were demeaning, undignified and contrary to canon 3B(4).

9. Conduct toward spectator in People v. Rainwater

In September 2005, Judge Moruza presided over proceedings in People v. Rainwater, a homicide case in which the defendant was charged with the murder of a woman discovered bound and bludgeoned in her apartment. The defense requested and received a continuance to enter a plea, on the ground that more time was needed to review recently received discovery. At the hearing, a number of the victim's friends and family sat in the courtroom, wearing red T-shirts with a picture of the victim on the front. As they filed out of the courtroom at the end of the proceedings, one of them turned in the judge's direction and interjected, "Another wasted day." Judge Moruza ordered the woman to stand before the bench and asked, "Did you graduate from high school?" When the woman said that she had, the judge asked whether she had taken any civics classes. When she said that she had not, Judge Moruza responded, "That's why you're ignorant." The judge also said, "The public's safety has been ensured. This defendant is not getting out … if you want to go back to the days when we strung people up before a trial, you can go back there on your own." Judge Moruza ordered the woman to apologize to the court, which she did.

The judge's comments were unnecessarily harsh and demeaning, and were contrary to canon 3B(4). Judge Moruza has admitted making these statements, which were not recorded by the court reporter, and has expressed regret.

10. Setting distant trial date in People v. Burchers

On March 1, 2007, the domestic violence case of People v. Burchers, which was approximately ten months old and had been set for trial twice, came before Judge Moruza for pretrial conference. DPD Samuel Greyson asked that the pretrial conference be continued for two weeks so that he could consult an immigration specialist. Judge Morzua called counsel to the bench; during an unreported conference, the judge noted a concern that the victim could be using the criminal courts for advantage in a pending family law case involving the victim and the defendant. On the record, after a short discussion of the defendant's need for an order allowing her to retrieve her belongings from the family residence (a "civil standby"), the judge said, "This Court has November 19 [for trial]." DDA Ronda Theisen stated her desire to have the matter set for trial sooner:

> MS. THEISEN: Judge, I want a trial date. I'm not asking for anything this month or next month or even in May, but I think by June this case needs to be resolved.
>
> THE COURT: It will be November 19, readiness will be on November 14.
>
> MR. GREYSON: May we get a further pretrial or should -- well --
>
> THE COURT: Why?

(R.T. 2:16-23.)

After brief further discussion of the "civil standby" order, the proceedings concluded.

At least one other case on the judge's calendar on March 1, 2007 was set for trial May 7, 2007.

Under the circumstances, Judge Moruza's setting of the trial date in Burchers over eight months away, when the prosecutor asked that the trial date be set no later than June 2007, gave the appearance that the judge set the distant trial date because of her view that the case should not be tried. Such conduct constitutes an abuse of authority, is in disregard of the People's right to a speedy trial, and is contrary to canons 2A and 3B(5).

11. Setting trial date in People v. Spotorno

On February 27, 2007, after a pretrial conference in the case of People v. Spotorno, in which Judge Moruza made comments (set forth in section 7, above) suggesting a lack of impartiality, the judge set a trial date of November 5, 2007, over eight months away. The Spotorno case was at that time eleven months old and had been set for trial twice. In seeking a continuance of a prior trial date (February 13, 2007), defense attorney Timothy Rien had asserted, among other things, that it was lambing season, that the 80-year-old defendant and his 65-year-old wife were responsible for all the work on the ranch without help, that the defendant had recently had episodes of loss of consciousness that were being medically evaluated, and that time was needed to investigate and prepare. The prosecution did not oppose the motion, and the matter was continued to February 27, 2007, the date of the proceedings in question.

After discussion off the record on February 27, 2007, the following took place on the record:

THE COURT: Okay. Jury trial November 5.

MR. RIEN: And October 31.

THE COURT: And October 31 for readiness. [¶] The evidence isn't going to go away. It is not like you got [sic] witnesses. The worse [sic] thing that will happen, the defendant may become whatever.

MR. RIEN: I'm still going to meet with Mr. Spotorno next week. I'm still going to send a settlement over. He's a nervous wreck over the thing himself, but I haven't had any access to him.

MS. SANDBACH [DDA]: When you haven't even had access to a client, it just tells me that he's pushing this thing away and he's not going to deal with it.

THE COURT: I want to deal -- you can win your case maybe, maybe not, but let's not take an old man and just rack [sic] him over the coals for something -- I don't know, maybe he didn't know it was not okay, you know.

(Whereupon, the proceedings concluded.)

(R.T. 1:5-22.)

Although DDA Sandbach expressed her desire for an earlier resolution of the case, Judge Moruza set a trial date over eight months away, while making a comment concerning the prosecution's taking an "old man" and raking him "over the coals" for something he possibly "didn't know … was not okay." Under the circumstances, the judge's setting of the distant trial date appeared to reflect her view that the case should not be tried. Such conduct constitutes an abuse of authority, is in disregard of the People's right to a speedy trial, and is contrary to canons 2A and 3B(5).

Judge Moruza's conduct in the matters set forth above was, at a minimum, improper action.

Judge Moruza reported the Borton incident to the commission in May 2007. When the commission instituted a preliminary investigation concerning this incident and others and sent a preliminary investigation letter to Judge Moruza, the judge took immediate steps to address the problems brought to her attention. She enrolled in sixteen hours of group anger management counseling and found the sessions valuable.

Judge Moruza has not been the subject of prior discipline in her 11 years on the bench. She has supplied declarations from prosecutors and defense attorneys praising her judicial abilities and demeanor.

In view of the judge's forthrightness in reporting herself to the commission, her immediate efforts to address problems in her conduct that were brought to her attention, her willingness to concede the impropriety of certain of her actions, and her lack of prior discipline, the commission determined that institution of formal proceedings was not necessary for protection of the public, and that public admonishment was an appropriate resolution of this matter.

Commission members Hon. Frederick P. Horn, Hon. Judith D. McConnell, Mr. Peter E. Flores, Mr. Marshall B. Grossman, Ms. Barbara Schraeger, Mr. Lawrence J. Simi, Ms. Maya Dillard Smith, Ms. Sandra Talcott and Mr. Nathaniel Trives voted to impose a public admonishment. Hon. Katherine Feinstein and Mr. Samuel A. Hardage did not participate.

Dated: December 16, 2008

STATE OF CALIFORNIA

BEFORE THE COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE

| IN THE MATTER CONCERNING FORMER JUDGE ROBERT A. SCHNIDER | DECISION AND ORDER IMPOSING PUBLIC ADMONISHMENT |
|---|---|

This disciplinary matter concerns former Judge Robert A. Schnider, a retired judge of the Los Angeles County Superior Court. Judge Schnider and his attorney, James A. Murphy, appeared before the commission on August 19, 2009, to contest the imposition of a public admonishment, pursuant to rule 116 of the Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance. Having considered the written and oral objections and argument submitted by Judge Schnider and his counsel, and good cause appearing, the Commission on Judicial Performance issues this public admonishment pursuant to article VI, section 18(d) of the California Constitution, based on the following statement of facts and reasons.

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND REASONS

Judge Schnider was a commissioner of the Los Angeles County Superior Court from 1981 until 2002. He was a judge with the Los Angeles County Superior Court from 2002 until his retirement on December 15, 2008.

Between January 1, 2005, and December 31, 2007, Judge Schnider was the Family Law Supervising Judge for the Los Angeles County Superior Court. His duties included the supervision of then-Commissioner Ann Dobbs, a commissioner in the Family Law Department from March 2001 until October 31, 2007, when she retired. As the Family Law Supervising Judge, Judge Schnider was aware that Commissioner Dobbs was not deciding all of her cases in a timely manner, but failed to take sufficient action to ensure that she did so. When Commissioner Dobbs retired in 2007, 15 cases over which she had presided had been under submission for over 90 days without her having decided them, and another 14 cases that she had under submission for less than 90 days had not been decided. Commissioner Dobbs never decided any of these cases. Prior to Commissioner Dobbs's retirement, Judge Schnider was aware of Commissioner Dobbs's failure to timely decide many of these cases. The commission determined that Judge Schnider violated California Rules of Court, rule 10.603, by failing to adequately supervise Commissioner Dobbs. The commission also determined that Judge Schnider violated California Rules of Court, rule 10.703, by failing to promptly respond to at least three complaints about Commissioner Dobbs's delay, as was required of him as her supervising judge. Judge Schnider's conduct violated canon 3C(3) of the California Code of Judicial Ethics, which requires judges with supervisory authority for the judicial performance of other judges and commissioners to take reasonable measures to ensure the prompt disposition of matters before them; canon 3D(1), which requires judges to take appropriate corrective action when they have reliable information that another judge has violated a provision of the Code of Judicial Ethics; canon 2A, which requires judges to comply with the law and act in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity of the judiciary; and canon 1, which requires judges to uphold the integrity of the judiciary.

Under California law, judges are expected to decide matters submitted to them within 90 days of submission, and are prohibited from receiving a salary while any cause remains "pending and undetermined for 90 days after it has been submitted for decision." (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 19; Mardikian v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1985) 40 Cal.3d 473, 477, fn. 4.) While the 90-day period is not absolute, it has been used by the commission as a benchmark for determining delay in submitted cases. (See Inquiry Concerning Judge Robert B. Freedman, No. 179, Decision and Order Imposing Public Censure (2007) and Inquiry Concerning Judge Robert G. Spitzer, No 182, Decision and Order Removing Judge Spitzer from Office (2007).) Canon 3B(8) of the California Code of Judicial Ethics requires judges, including commissioners, to dispose of all judicial matters "fairly, promptly, and efficiently." The Advisory Committee commentary to canon 3B(8) states that a judge "should monitor and supervise cases so as to reduce or eliminate dilatory practices, avoidable delays, and unnecessary costs," and requires judges to be "expeditious in determining matters under submission." The commission has stated that inordinate delay in deciding cases is unacceptable in all cases, but a judge's failure to decide family law matters can be particularly egregious in light of the harm to the parties caused thereby. (Public Reproval of Judge Thomas P. Breen (1995).)

As Family Law Supervising Judge for the Los Angeles County Superior Court, Judge Schnider had been delegated the duty of the presiding judge under California Rules of Court, rule 10.603(c)(3), to supervise and monitor the number of cases under submission before Commissioner Dobbs and to ensure that no case under submission remained undecided and pending for longer than 90 days. When Commissioner Dobbs was hired in 2001, the Los Angeles County Superior Court had a tracking system in place whereby reports were generated at the end of each month showing the cases each bench officer had under submission between 30 and 60 days, between 60 and 90 days, and for more than 90 days. These reports were, and still are, given to all bench officers of the Los Angeles County Superior Court each month. If Commissioner Dobbs had any cases under submission for 30 to 60 days, Judge Schnider was required by rule 10.603(c)(3)(D) to contact and alert her, and to discuss ways to ensure that cases in that category were timely decided. Between 2005 and 2007, the Cases Under Submission reports identified 34 of Commissioner Dobbs's cases as being in the 30-60-day category. Judge Schnider did not contact and alert Commissioner Dobbs and discuss ways to ensure that these cases were timely decided.

If Commissioner Dobbs had cases under submission from 60 to 90 days, rule 10.603(c)(3)(E) required Judge Schnider to consider providing assistance to her. Between 2005 and 2007, the court's monthly Cases Under Submission reports identified 33 of Commissioner Dobbs's cases as being in the 60-90-day category. Of these, 16 had been under submission for more than 90 days at the time the report was issued. Judge Schnider informed the commission that when he contacted Commissioner Dobbs about cases appearing on the Cases Under Submission reports, she told him that the cases had been decided or that the submission dates were erroneous or had been vacated. Judge Schnider did not verify her representations. Judge Schnider also took no action to determine whether Commissioner Dobbs was in compliance with the law governing the vacating of submission dates, which she often was not. In 2006, Judge Schnider reduced the number of cases assigned to Commissioner Dobbs. In 2006 and 2007, he transferred 354 of her cases to another judge. Commissioner Dobbs still did not complete all of her submitted cases on time. On two occasions in 2007, Judge Schnider also gave Commissioner Dobbs one week off during which she was to complete her submitted cases. During that time off, Commissioner Dobbs did not decide any submitted cases, and Judge Schnider took no action to determine whether she had decided any cases.

In 2007, in addition to the information regarding Commissioner Dobbs's cases that was contained in the court's Cases Under Submission reports, Judge Schnider was aware of several cases that had not been decided by Commissioner Dobbs within 90 days of submission but were not listed on those reports. Judge Schnider took no action to determine why these cases were not being reported on the court's monthly reports. Had he done so, he likely would have learned that Commissioner Dobbs was preparing the case status information for those reports herself, rather than allowing her courtroom clerk to do so in accordance with the standard court practice. Also, he likely would have discovered that her reporting did not accurately reflect the status of the cases she had under submission.

Judge Schnider also failed to promptly respond to at least three complaints from family law litigants about Commissioner Dobbs's delays, as required by rule 10.703. Tracy Harris complained to the court on June 11, 2007, about Commissioner Dobbs's delay of nearly five years in ruling on her case. Judge Schnider did not respond to the allegations in Ms. Harris's complaint until January 4, 2008, when he acknowledged the delay. Suzanne Lynch complained to the court on August 13, 2007, about a delay by Commissioner Dobbs of eleven months in ruling on her case. Judge Schnider never responded to the allegations in Ms. Lynch's complaint. Julia (Bandrapalli) Stokes complained on September 28, 2007, about Commissioner Dobbs's delay of six months in entering judgment on her case. Judge Schnider never responded to the allegations in Ms. Stokes's complaint.

In addition, Judge Schnider received letters dated January 9, 2007, and April 19, 2007, from attorney Margalo Ashley-Farrand complaining about Commissioner Dobbs's delays in two of her cases. In those letters, Ms. Ashley-Farrand reported that Commissioner Dobbs had not decided certain issues that were submitted in February 2003 and other issues that were submitted in 2005, and that this was causing serious problems for her client, who had continued to pay child support to a noncustodial parent. Ms. Ashley-Farrand also informed Judge Schnider that Commissioner Dobbs had initially set a trial date of March 14, 2005, in one of her cases but had continued the trial several times until February 17, 2006, that the trial had been continued several times thereafter, and that Ms. Ashley-Farrand was unable to receive a new trial date to complete the case. She also informed Judge Schnider that she had told Commissioner Dobbs in late 2005 that she would be moving to Oregon in the spring of 2006, but that the commissioner still did not set a date to complete the trial. In the meantime, Ms. Ashley-Farrand wrote that she had to pay for several trips to Los Angeles herself, including airfare, rental car and motel, pending Commissioner Dobbs's completion of her cases. Judge Schnider never responded to Ms. Ashley-Farrand's letters.

At his appearance before the commission and in his written objections, Judge Schnider maintained that he discharged his duty with respect to these complaints by repeatedly asking Commissioner Dobbs for her response to the complaints and taking her at her word when she assured him that she would respond to him within a short amount of time. In Judge Schnider's view, the commissioner's failure to provide a response to him relieved him of his obligation to investigate the complaints himself or to respond to the complainants. The rules do not require the presiding judge or designee to wait indefinitely for a response from the subordinate judicial officer before responding to a complainant. To the contrary, rule 10.703(d) requires that complaints against subordinate judicial officers be processed promptly, and "to the extent reasonably possible," that the court "complete action on each complaint within 90 days after the complaint is submitted."

Further, Judge Schnider argued that he was justified in relying on the representations of a well-respected subordinate judicial officer. However, when Judge Schnider began his duties as supervising judge, he was informed that Commissioner Dobbs had problems with delay. Time after time, Commissioner Dobbs assured Judge Schnider that she would promptly decide her delayed cases and provide him with her responses to complaints from litigants. Yet, she repeatedly and consistently failed to follow through on these assurances. Under these circumstances, Judge Schnider's continued reliance on her promises was unreasonable. In the commission's view, Judge Schnider should have proceeded with an investigation of each complaint when Commissioner Dobbs failed to respond to him within a reasonable amount of time. Instead, Judge Schnider waited over six months to respond to the complaint from Ms. Harris, and never responded to or conducted an investigation into the complaints from Ms. Lynch, Ms. Stokes, or Ms. Ashley-Ferrand.

When Commissioner Dobbs retired in October 2007, Judge Schnider agreed to allow her to complete work on undecided cases at home. Commissioner Dobbs took approximately 30 undecided cases home with her. Judge Schnider was aware of some, but not all, of these cases. Of the cases Commissioner Dobbs took home with her, the following 15 had been under submission for over 90 days:

1. Allain (case no. BD 371793) submitted on March 1, 2006;
2. Bannan (case no. BD310701) submitted on June 26, 2005;
3. Beuerman (case no. BD055815) submitted on July 16, 2007;
4. Blackburn (case no. BD116967) submitted in February 2003 and September 2005;
5. Dvorin (case no. YD048141) submission date unclear; date vacated by minute order dated September 22, 2006 but no new submission date set;
6. Ellis (case no. BD319194) submitted on July 13, 2005;

7. Goldman (case no. BD407997) submitted on November 17, 2006;
8. Harris (case no. BD322099) submitted on March 23, 2005 and August 29, 2007;
9. Lynch (case no. BD364093) submitted on November 2, 2006;
10. Mullins (case no. BD383098) submitted on July 23, 2007;
11. Needleman (case no. BD393615) submitted on July 20, 2007;
12. Perez (case no. BD379993) submitted on March 27, 2007;
13. Polo (case no. BD391297) submitted on February 7, 2007;
14. Stott (case no. YD046723) date of submission unclear, probably soon after May 1, 2007;
15. Striff (case no. PD037298) submitted on January 22, 2007.

Of the cases Commissioner Dobbs took home with her, the following 14 had been under submission for less than 90 days:

1. Adger (case no. BD391595) submitted on October 17, 2007;
2. Allen (case no. BD448597) submitted on August 16, 2007;
3. Aronson (case no. BD420664) submitted on October 23, 2007;
4. Birdwell (case no. BF017596) submitted on September 14, 2007;
5. Cooper (case no. BF026368) submitted on August 2, 2007;
6. Di Paola (case no. BD377295) submitted on August 29, 2007;
